[1] Liberatus makes mention of this Mamas, in his Breviary, chap. 19: whoſe words we have quoted at note (d) in this chapter, therefore the two Ring-leaders of the Dioſcorites [or, Dioſcorians,] by whom Severus had been inſtructed, are Romanus and Mamas, Abbots of that Monaſtery which was between Majuma and Gaza. Indeed, Theophanes, in his Chronicon, terms that a Monaſtery ἡ τῶν σχιζῶν μονα χῶν, of Schiſmaticall Monks. Valeſ.

[m] Ὑφ' ὧν ὁ αὐτὸς κατήχθη, by whom Severus himſelf had been lodged. I had rather write κατηχήθη, had been catechized, or, inſtructed. For the Abbots Mamas and Romanus had inſtructed Severus; as we have ſaid before, out of Liberatus. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXXIV.

Concerning the [Libell of] Depoſition ſent to the ſame Severus by Coſmas and Severianus.

But, in regard the forecited Letters do atteſt, that [a] thoſe Prelates under [the Juriſdiction of the Church of] Apamia receded from [the Communion] of Severus; come on, let us add a certain paſſage, * which we have been told by our Fathers, although it be not as yet recorded in any Hiſtory. Coſmas Biſhop of our Epiphania, † in the Vicinage whereof runs the [River] Orontes, and Severianus [Biſhop] of Arethuſa a neighbouring City, being diſturbed at Severus's Synodick Letters, ſevered themſelves from his Communion, and ſent a Libell of Depoſition to him whilſt he ſate Biſhop of the City Antioch. They deliver the Libell to one Aurelianus * Arch-Deacon of the Church of Epiphania. who, in regard he feared Severus, and [dreaded] the Grandeur of ſo great a Biſhoprick, after his arrivall at Antioch, cloathed himſelf in the habit of a woman, and comes to Severus, † jeſting and playing the wanton, and by all ways imaginable feigning himſelf to be a woman. [In fine,] having let down the Vail wherewith his head was covered, as far as his breaſts he lamented, and by fetching deep ſighs beſought aſſiſtance; and under the pretence of a Supplicatory Libell, delivers a Depoſition to Severus then going forth. And without being taken notice of by any perſon, withdraws out of the croud which followed [Severus;] and by flying purchaſes his own ſafety, before Severus knew what the Contents of the Libell were. But Severus, notwithſtanding he had received the Libell, and underſtood what was contained therein, nevertheleſs continued poſſeſt of his own See, untill the death of Anaſtaſius. Further, when Anaſtaſius was informed of what had hapned to Severus, (for, we muſt not omit the mentioning of an Act of Anaſtaſius's, which was wholly made up of Clemency and Humanity:) he orders Aſiaticus [b] who bore the command of the Militia in Phœnice Libanenſis, to eject Coſmas and Severianus out of their own Sees, becauſe they had ſent a Libell of Depoſition to Severus. After Aſiaticus was arrived in the Eaſtern parts, and found many perſons defending the opinions of Coſmas and Severianus, and that their Cities made a ſtout reſiſtance in favour of their own Biſhops; He gave Anaſtaſius an account, that thoſe Biſhops were not to be driven out of their own Sees without bloudſhed. So much of Clemency and Humanity therefore was there in Anaſtaſius, that he wrote expreſly to Aſiaticus, that he would in no wiſe [c] effect any thing, though never ſo great and ſplendid, if but a drop of bloud were to be ſpilt. In this poſture therefore were the affairs of the Churches over the whole world, * during the Empire of Anaſtaſius. Whom ſome perſons judged to be an Enemy to the Chalcedon Synod, and have expunged his name out of the Sacred Tables. But at Jeruſalem, even whilſt living, he was Anathematized.

[a] Apamia was the Metropolis of Syria Cœle, or Syria Secunda, to which Epiphania and Arethuſa were ſubject, as the Old Notitiæ inform us. Valeſ.

* Or, Which hath paſſed to us from our Fathers.

† Or, Which has Orontes its neighbour.

* Or, The firſt of the Deacons.

† Ἀκκιζόμενός τε καὶ σκυπτόμενος. Valeſius renders theſe words thus: jocans ac laſciviens, jeſting [or, drolling,] and playing the wanton. The primary ſignification of the term ἀκκίζομαι is, feignedly to refuſe; it imports alſo to diſſemble, or, to play the fool, to behave ones ſelf as that moſt petulant woman Acco did; from whoſe carriage this word had its originall.

[b] Τὴν ἀσιατικὴν ἀρχὴν. We have reſtored this place from the excellent Florentine and Tellerian MSS; wherein 'tis thus written, τὴν στρατιωτικὴν ἀρχὴν τῆς ἐν φοινίκη λιβανησίας, the Command of the Militia in Phœnice Libanenſis. There were two Phœnice's, as I have remarked above; the one termed Maritima, the other Libanenſis. Over this province was ſet the Dux of Phœnice, concerning whom ſee the Notitia Imp. Rom. Valeſ.

[c] Inſtead of παρελθεῖν, attempt; it would, if I miſtake not, be better written thus, περιελθεῖν, effect. Valeſ.

* Or, Until.

CHAP. XXXV.

Concerning the deſtruction of the Iſaurian Tyrants.

But, it will not be diſagreeable to the promiſe we have made * before, if to this Hiſtory we annex ſome other [Tranſactions] worthy to be recorded, [a] which have hapned during the times of Anaſtaſius. Longinus Zeno's kinſman, being arrived in that [Country] wherein he had been born, as hath been ſhown * before, † ingages in an open War againſt the Emperour. And great Forces having been raiſed on the one ſide and on the other, amongſt which was Conon, heretofore Biſhop at Apamia [a City] of the Province of the Syrians, who, in regard he was an Iſaurian, bore Arms under the Iſaurians; at length the War was terminated [in this manner.] The Iſaurians who fought under Longinus were all cut off to one man. But the heads of Longinus and [b] Theodorus were ſent to the Imperiall City by Johannes Scytha. Which heads the Emperour [ordered to be] fixt upon Poles, [carried about,] and hung up in that [Suburb] termed Sycæ ſituate over againſt Conſtantinople: a gratefull ſpectacle to the Byzantines, becauſe of thoſe miſchiefes they had ſuffered from Zeno and the Iſaurians. Moreover, the other Longinus, ſurnamed Selinuntius, the chief ſupporter of that Tyrannick Faction, and together with him Indes, are [taken and] ſent alive to Anaſtaſius, by Johannes ſurnamed Gibbus. Wherewith the Emperour

* At book 1. chap. 1.

[a] Χρόνοις ἡμετέροις. I agree with Sr Henry Savil, who at the margin of his copy hath mended it thus, ἡμῶν, which hapned. The ſame perſon corrects the beginning of this chapter thus, ἐκ δὲ τούτου δὲ, &c. But 'twill not be inconvenient, &c. it may alſo be made, ἐκ δὲ τόπου δὲ, But it will not be diſagreeable, or miſplac't; and perhaps 'tis better ſo. For 'tis the ſame, as if you ſhould ſay, ἐκ ἄτοπον, 'twill not be abſurd. Inſtead of ἡμετέροις, hapned, the Tellerian Manuſcript has it written γενομένοις, have hapned. Valeſ.

* Chap. 29.

† Or, Puts on.

[b] Marcellinus Comes in his Chronicon (at Anaſtaſius's being Conſul alone;) calls this perſon Athenodorus and ſo does Theophanes in his Chronicon, pag. 118. Valeſ.

Emperour and the Byzantines were highly pleaſed, in regard Longinus and Indes were in the manner of a Triumph lead through the ſtreets of the City, and thorow the Cirque, [carrying] Chains made of Iron, which were put round their necks and about their hands. From that time thoſe [Donatives] heretofore termed [c] The Iſaurica began to be paid into the Imperial Treaſury. Now, that was [a ſum] of Gold, paid every year to the Barbarians, amounting to the weight of Fifty thouſand pounds.

[c] He means The Donative, which the Tyrant Hillus had allowed to the Iſaurians, and which the Emperour Zeno, though againſt his will, had beſtowed upon them to procure a Reconciliation. Which Donative the Emperour Anaſtaſius having refuſed to pay to the Iſaurians, they made War againſt the Romans, as Jordanes relates in his book de ſucceſſione Regnorum. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXXVI.

Concerning the * Saracens, that they made a Peace with the Romans.

* Or, Barbarians termed Scenitæ; that is, who dwelt in Tents.

THoſe Barbarians alſo [termed] Scenitæ, not without damage to themſelves, became petulant, and inſulted over the Roman Empire; and ruined the * Province Meſopotamia, [a] both the Phœnice's, and Paleſtine. But, having received a ſevere overthrow from the Military Commanders in each Province, at laſt they were quiet, and by a generall conſent that whole Nation made a Peace with the Romans.

* Or, The affairs of Meſopotamia, &c.

[a] Φοινίκεως ἑκαλέσας. It muſt be φοινίκης; as the reading is in Nicephorus, book 17, chap. 35. Further, we have remarked already, that there were two Phœnice's; the one termed Libanenſis, the other Maritima. Nor muſt this be omitted, that, that Province is by the Latines ſometimes termed Phœnicem, from the Nominative Caſe Phœnix. 'Tis certain, in the Itinerary Table of the Putingeri, it is called Syria Phœnix; as alſo in the Notitia Imperii Romani. In the Manuſcript Copies, 'tis written Dux Phœnicis. Nor found I it written otherwiſe in Ægeſippus, book 3. chap. 20. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXXVII.

Concerning the Siege of Amida, and the building of [the City] Daras.

MOreover, the Perſians, then ſubject to their King Cavades, broke the League [with the Romans;] and having left their native ſoyle, in the firſt place invaded Armenia, and took the ſmall Town named Theodoſiopolis; after which they marched to [a] Amida a well-fortified City of Meſopotamia; which they laid Siege to and took. But the Roman Emperour by vaſt Labour rebuilt it. But, if any one be deſirous of having a particular knowledge of theſe matters, and would read an Accurate Narrative of all theſe Tranſactions; [let him conſult] Euſtathius, who with much acuteneſs, great Labour, and a ſingular Elegancy, hath written an Hiſtory [of theſe affairs.] Which Hiſtorian having brought down his Hiſtory to theſe very times, departed this life, and left off writing at the twelfth year of Anaſtaſius's Empire. After this war was ended, Anaſtaſius makes Daras (a place of Meſopotamia, ſituate in the utmoſt confines of the Roman * pale, and being The Boundarie as it were of the Roman and Perſian Empire;) a City, from its being a Field: which he fortified with a ſtrong wall, and adorned with various and thoſe ſplended Buildings, to wit, Churches and other ſacred Houſes, and with Royall Porticus's, publick Baths, and other [Works,] of which the moſt eminent Cities do [uſually] boaſt. 'Tis ſaid by ſome perſons, that this place got the name of Daras, becauſe Alexander the Macedonian ſon to Phillip, had totally vanquiſhed Darius there.

[a] Marcellinus Comes, in his Chronicon, ſays this City was taken by the Perſians on the tenth Indiction, in the Conſulate of Probus and Avienus; that is, on the year of Chriſt 502, and on the eleventh year of Anaſtaſius's Empire. See Procopius in Book 1. Perſic. Valeſ.

* Or, Empire.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

Concerning the Long Wall.

THe ſame Emperour perfected a vaſt Work, worthy to be recorded, [a] which is uſually termed The Long Wall, ſituate in a very convenient place of Thracia. This Wall is diſtant from Conſtantinople about Two hundred and eighty furlongs: it embraces both the Seas, [and runs out] like a Streight to the length of Four hundred and twenty furlongs: it makes the [Imperiall] City from being a * Peninſula, almoſt an Iſland, and affords a moſt convenient and ſafe paſſage to thoſe who have a mind to ſail from that place termed Pontus to Propontis and the Thracian Sea. It repells alſo thoſe Barbarians, who make Excurſions out of that termed the Euxine Sea, out of Colchis, from the Lake Mæotis, and from the places about Caucaſus; and likewiſe them, who are uſually poured in, out of Europe.

* Almoſt an Iſland.

[a] Καὶ τὸ μακρὸν καλούμενον τεῖχος. The particle καὶ muſt be expunged, being uſeleſs and ſuperfluous. Further, this Wall was from its Builders name called Anaſtaſianus: it was built in Anaſtaſius Auguſtus's third Conſulate, on the year of Chriſt 507; as the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle Writes. Concerning this Wall Suidas gives this Relation, in the word τεῖχος; ἀνασάσιος ὁ βασιλεὺς κτίζει, &c. The Emperour Anaſtaſius builds the Long Wall, Sixty miles from the City Conſtantinople. It is extended from the Sea at the North, to that at the South. Its length contains fourty miles, and its breadth is twenty foot. See more in Petrus Gillius's firſt book de Topographia Urbis Conſtantinopol. Cap. 21. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXXIX.

Concerning that [Tax] termed the Chryſargyrum, and how Anaſtaſius aboliſhed it.

MOreover, the ſame Emperour performed an eximious and plainly divine Action, to wit, the Perfect and intire * Abolition of that [Tax] termed † The Chryſargyrum. Concerning which thing we are now to ſpeak, although it wants the Tongue of a Thucydides, or rather one of more Eminency and Eloquence, [to give a Narrative of it.] However, I will declare the matter, not induced thereto by my eloquence, but confiding in [the greatneſs of] that Action. Upon the Dominions of the Romans, which were ſo great and ſo far diffuſed, was impoſed a miſerable Tax, deteſtable to God, and misbecoming even the Barbarians themſelves, much leſs [agreeable] to the moſt Chriſtian Empire of the Romans. This Tax, on what account neglected and tolerated I know not, continued till the times of Anaſtaſius, who by his Imperial magnificence aboliſh't it. It was impoſed both upon many others who got their maintenance from a Charitable Contribution, and alſo upon thoſe women who ſold the beauty of their Bodies, upon * common Whores likewiſe who proſtituted themſelves in Baudy-houſes [which

* Or, Inhibition.

† That is, A Tax of Gold and Silver.

* Τὴν πορνείας, Whores that made no diſtinction in their admiſſion of cuſtomers.

which ſtood in the hidden and obſcure places of the City; moreover, upon * Catamites, who affected not only Nature it ſelf, but the Republick alſo, with Ignominy. In ſo much that, this Tax, inſtead of a Law, made loud proclamation, that thoſe who had a mind, might ſecurely and with impunity commit ſuch abominable Leachery. Further, that impious and deteſtable † profit ariſing from this Tax, was every fourth year paid in to the [a] First and Chiefeſt of the Præfectures, by the Collectours who gathered it in all places; ſo that, it was not the ſmalleſt part of this Præfecture, to have both its [b] Proper * Scrinia (as they term them,) and alſo [c] ſuch Officers as managed the Accounts of this Nature; [and theſe were] not perſons mean and obſcure, who lookt upon this employ to be a † Militia as well as the reſt. Which when Anaſtaſius underſtood, and had [d] referred it to the Senate, and had likewiſe deſervedly pronounced this thing to be a deteſtable impiety and a wickedneſs new and unheard-of; he made a Law wherein 'twas declared that it ſhould be wholly aboliſhed, and he burnt thoſe papers || which contained a Summary of this Exaction. And, being reſolved to make a perfect Holocauſt [as it were] of This Tax to God, to the end that no one of his Succeſſours in the Empire might in future again renew the old Infamy [of this Exaction;] he feignes himſelf grieved and vexed; [e] and accuſed himſelf of imprudence, and of the higheſt degree of madneſs, ſaying, that by attributing too much to Vain-glory, he had neglected the utility of the Republick, and had raſhly and inconſiderately aboliſhed ſo great a Tax, which had been found out by his Anceſtours, and confirmed by ſo long a duration of Time; before he had duely weighed in his mind the imminent dangers, or the expence of the Milice, (which is the living Wall of the Government,) or [Laſtly] thoſe [charges which are neceſſary] to the Service of God. Without declaring therefore any of the thoughts of his mind, he ſignifies, that it was his intent to reſtore the forementioned Tax. And having ſent for thoſe Officers who had been employed in Collecting that Tax, he confeſt that he repented indeed of what he had done; but knew not what courſe he could now take, or how he might correct his own miſtake, in regard all the papers were burnt, which could have ſet forth a * Notitia of this Tax. Theſe perſons having, not feignedly, but in reality, lamented [the Abolition of] this Tax on account of that unjuſt gain which accrued to themſelves therefrom, and pretending the like difficulty [that the Emperour did, in getting it reſtored:] Anaſtaſius perſwaded and entreated them, that they would proceed in all imaginable methods of making a ſearch, whether or no the way of Aſſeſſing and Collecting this whole Tax might be found out from thoſe Tables which lay in every place; And having aſſigned a Salary to each of them, he diſpatcht them away to make a Collection of thoſe Papers, giving order, that whatever Paper might be of uſe in ſetting forth the Notitia of this Tax, whereever it were found, ſhould be brought to himſelf; to the end that, after much circumſpection and the moſt exquiſite accuracy imaginable, a Notitia of this whole Tax might be again compoſed. When therefore thoſe perſons, who were employed in this affair, had ſome time after made their return, Anaſtaſius ſeemed very chearfull and full of joy. And he did [f] really rejoyce, becauſe he had obtained what he deſired. He inquired therefore the manner, how, and with whom [theſe papers] had been found, and whether or no any one of this ſort [of Monuments] were left behind. But, when they had affirmed poſitively, that great pains had been taken

* Such as hired out themſelves to be abuſed contrary to Nature.

† Or, Gain.

[a] Ἐπὶ τῶν πρώτην καὶ χορυφαίαν ἁπάσῃ ἀρχῶν. By theſe words Evagrius ſeems to mean the Pretorian Præfecture. For that (to uſe Amm. Marcellinus's Expreſſion) Vertex erat omnium dignitatum, was the Crown [or Top] of all dignities. To this Præfecture therefore the Tribute Chryſargyrum was every fourth year brought in. Indeed, the Tributes were wont to be brought in to the Cheſt of the Prætorian Præfecture. Hence 'tis, that in the thirteenth book of the Theodoſian Code, in the Title de Luſtrali Collatione, the greateſt part of the Laws are directed to the Præfecti Prætorio. For the Luſtralis Collatio was nothing elſe but the Chryſargyrum: to wit, Gold and Silver impoſed upon Merchants, or the Luſtralis auri Collatio, and the Auraria Functio. For ſo 'tis called in the ſame Title. Further, whether it ought to be called a Tribute, or rather a Toll [or Tax,] 'tis uncertain. Evagrius terms it τέλος, which is Vectigal, a Toll, or Tax. 'Tis termed alſo Vectigal in the laſt Law ſave one de Luſtrali Collatione. The old Author of the Queſtions on the Old and New Teſtament tells us, this was uſually termed Aurum pœnoſum, the puniſhing Gold; ſee him, in Quæſt. 75. There is an Elegant paſſage concerning this Tribute, in Libanius's Oration againſt Florentius, pag. 427. which I will tranſcribe here. Λεχέσθω τοίνυν καὶ τὸ τ' ἄλλα πάντα γενικῶς· τοῦτο δὲ ἐστὶν ὁ ἀφόρητος φόρος, ἀργυρος καὶ χρυσὸς, φείδεσθαι ποιήσας τοὺς δεινὰς πενίσειδας· ὄνομα μὲν γὰρ εὑρεταὶ ἀπὸ τῆς ἐμπόρων τοῦ πόρου τούτου τῆ θαλάττη δὲ ἐκείνων εἰς διάδοσιν χρωμένων, οἷς μόλις ἄρτια προσφέρουσιν αἱ χεῖρες, ἀπόλωται· διαφύλει δὲ ὅδε νομοφύλαξ· ὃς ἐγὼ πολλάκις εἶδον τοὺς σμίλην εἰς ἐρανὸν ἀιρομένους, ὀμνύντας, μὴ ἐν αὐτῇ τὰ πάντα ἔχειν σφίσιν· ἃ μὴ τοῦτό γε αὐτοὺς ἀπαλλάττει τῆς ἐσκομμένων, καὶ ὑλακλόντων, καὶ μόνον οὐ δακνόντων ἀτὸς ὁ καιρὸς ὦ βασιλεῦ, πλείω τοὺς δουλείαν καθίστησιν, ἐκβάλλων ἐλευθερίας τοὺ ὑπὸ τῆς γονέων πωλουμένους, ἐχ ἵνα αὐτοῖς δέξηται τοὺ τιμὴν τὸ κέρδος, ἀλλ' ἵνα αὐτοὺ ἴδωσιν εἰς τοὺ τὸ κατεπείγοντος δεξιὰν ἐρχομένην. Which words I render thus. Let us alſo now relate that [Miſchief] which has far ſurpaſſed all the reſt. This is that intolerable Tribute, The Chryſargyrum, which renders the approaching Luſtra [or, every fifth year,] dreadfull and horrid. The name [impoſed] upon this Tribute is in indeed ſpecious, [taken] from Merchants. But whilſt they make uſe of the Sea in order to the vending their Wares, thoſe whoſe hands do ſcarce afford them bread, are utterly ruined. Not ſo much as a Cobler eſcapes [paying this Tribute.] Whom I my ſelf have frequently ſeen lifting their knife wherewith they cut their Leather, up to heaven, and ſwearing that in that knife their All was placed. Nevertheleſs, this frees them not from [the vexation of] thoſe who are urgent and preſſing upon them, and who bark, and do only not bite. This time (O Emperour!) increaſes the number of ſervants; depriving of Liberty thoſe who are ſold by their Parents, not that their own Coffer may receive the price [for which their children are ſold,] but that they [the Parents] may ſee it coming into the hand of the Exactor. In the Greek Text of Libanius, inſtead of διάδοσιν, I have mended it thus, διάδοσιν and in place of the word ἐσκομένων, I have ſubſtituted ἐσκειμένων. Valeſ.

[b] Amongſt the Officials of the Præfectus Prætorio, four Numerarii are reckoned in the Notitia Imperii Romani; the firſt of whom was the Numerarius of the Gold, that is, of the Aurum Luſtrale, or Chryſargyrum. There was alſo amongſt the Officials of the Comes Sacrarum Largitionum, a Primicerius of the Scrinium of the Golden Maſſe, and a Primicerius of the Scrinium of Gold; on this account perhaps, becauſe a certain part of this Tax was brought in to the Cheſt of the Sacred Largiſſes. Indeed in the Title de Luſtrali Collatione, there is extant a Law of Valentinianus's, directed to Florentius the Comes Sacrarum Largitionum [that is, of the Sacred Largiſſes.] Whence it appears, that ſome part of this Golden Function belonged to the Largitional Titles. Valeſ.

[c] Καὶ ἦν τὰ τοιαῦτα διαψηφιζόντων. He means the Numerarii [that is, Officers who managed the Accounts] of the Aurum Luſtrale, who were in the Office of the Præfecti Prætorio, as I have ſaid in the foregoing note. For διαψηφισαὶ are the Numerarii, (as I have long ſince remarked at Amm. Marcellinus,) who by another name were termed alſo Rationarii. Valeſ.

* Offices, Cabinets, or Rooms.

† See Euſeb. Eccleſ. Hiſt. book 10. chap. 8. note (b.)

[d] Ἐπὶ τῶν γερουσίαν ἀγαγεῖς. At my pen will write ἀγαγεῖς. For ἀγαγεῖν has the ſame import with Referre, proponere, to referre, to propoſe. The Tellerian Manuſcript confirms our Emendation, wherein I found it plainly written ἀχθεὶς, as I had conjectured. Valeſ.

|| Or, Which ſet forth this Exaction.

[e] Ἀβελίας δὲ. I had rather write, ἀβελίας τε ἑαυτῷ καὶ τηρόσει, and accuſed himſelf of imprudence. Some few words after this, inſtead of [εἰκῆ τε ἀπερισκέπτως ἀνήγησεν, and had raſhly, inconſiderately ſuſpended;] it muſt be written thus, εἰκῆ τε καὶ ἀπερισκέπτως ἀνήγκεν, and had raſhly and inconſiderately aboliſhed. Valeſ.

* Or, Summary, or, Rationary, containing an account how this Tax was to be aſſeſſed and Collected.

[f] Καὶ ταῖς ἀληθείας. Every body ſees it muſt be made ταῖς ἀληθείαις. Which is the ſame as if he ſhould have ſaid, ὡς ἀληθῶς really. Further, this adverb is referred to the verb Rejoyce. Which being moſt certain, 'tis nevertheleſs ſtrange, that both Tranſlatours ſhould have referred this adverb to the following word πεπυσμένως, thus, And he did rejoyce, becauſe he had really and truly obtained what he deſired. Valeſ.

taken by them in the Collecting of theſe papers, and had ſworn by the Emperour himſelf, that no other paper could be found in the whole Roman Empire, which might ſet forth The Notitia of this Tax: [the Emperour ordered] a great fire to be again made of thoſe papers which had been brought, the aſhes whereof he [cauſed to be] put into water; it being his intent wholly to aboliſh this Exaction: that ſo, neither the duſt, nor the aſhes, nor any the leaſt remain of this thing, or of the burnt papers, might be left appearing. But, leaſt whilſt we ſo much extoll the * abolition of this Tax, we ſhould ſeem not to know, what, and how great matters have with partiality enough been related by the more ancient Writers concerning this [Exaction;] come on, I will now produce even thoſe paſſages alſo, and will demonſtrate them to be falſe, and moſt eſpecially, from thoſe very things which they themſelves have related.

* Or, Inhibition.

CHAP. XL.

Concerning what Zoſimus hath written in relation to The Chryſargyrum, and about the Emperour Conſtantine.

Zoſimus (one of their number [who have followed] the execrable and abominable Superſtition of the † Heathens,) being highly incenſed againſt Conſtantine [on this account,] becauſe he was the firſt Emperour that embraced the Chriſtian Religion, and relinquiſhed the abominable Superſtition of the * Græcians; relates, that he was the firſt [Emperour,] who invented that termed The Chryſargyrum, and made a Law, that ſuch a Tax as that ſhould be brought in [to the Treaſury] every fourth year. [The ſame Zoſimus] has || loaded that Pious and Magnificent Emperour with infinite other [Calumnies.] For, he ſays, that he contrived ſeverall other altogether intollerable [miſchiefs] againſt [perſons of] all qualities and conditions, and, that he cruelly murdered his Son Criſpus, and likewiſe killed his own Wife Fauſta, whom he ſhut up [and ſtifled] in a Bath which had been over-much heated. And, that when he had ſought amongſt his own Prieſts for an expiation of ſuch horrid and nefarious Murders as theſe, and had found none: (for they openly declared, that ſuch black crimes as theſe could not be purged by ſacrifice) [he adds] that he accidentally met with an Egyptian who had come out of Iberia: and, that having received information from him, that the Faith of the Chriſtians aboliſhed all manner of ſin, he embraced thoſe things which the Egyptian had imparted to him. And, that from that time he relinquiſhed * the Religion of his Anceſtours, and made a Beginning of Impiety, † as he terms it. Now, that theſe things are notoriouſly falſe, I will demonſtrate immediately: But, in the firſt place I muſt give a Relation concerning The Chryſargyrum.

† Or, Gentiles, or, Græcians.

* Or, Gentiles.

|| Or, Blaſphemed.

* Or, His Paternall Religion.

† Or, As he ſays.

CHAP. XLI.

An Invective againſt Zoſimus, on account of the Reproaches and Calumnies he has caſt upon Conſtantine and the Chriſtians.

THou ſayſt therefore, (O deſtructive and impure * Dæmon!) that Conſtantine reſolving to build a City equall to Rome, at firſt attempted the erecting of ſuch a great City in the mid way between Troas and Ilium; and having laid the Foundations and raiſed the wall to an heighth, afterwards he found Byzantium to be a place more Commodious, and ſo incompaſſed that with walls; which old City he enlarged to ſuch a degree, and adorned it with ſuch † ſplendid Buildings, that it ſeemed not much inferiour to Rome which in ſo many years had by little and little arrived at that Greatneſs. Thou ſayſt further, that he diſtributed amongſt the Byzantine people || The Annona out of the publick ſtock, and gave a vaſt ſum of Gold to thoſe who had removed together with him to Byzantium, for the building of their own private houſes. Again, thou writeſt word for word thus; After Conſtantine's death, [the ſupream management of] Affairs devolved only to his Son Conſtantius, [to wit] after the death of his two Brothers. And when Magnentius and Vetranio had ſet up for Tyrants, he attacked Vetranio by perſwaſives. For, both their Armies being come together, [a] Conſtantius in the firſt place made a Speech to the Souldiers, and put them in mind of his Fathers Liberality, with whom they had waged many Wars, and [by whom] they had been honoured with the greateſt Gratuities. Which when the Souldiers had heard, they diveſted Vetranio of his purple, and drew him out of the Tribunal [clothed] in a private habit. Notwithſtanding, [thou doeſt affirm,] that he underwent nothing of moleſtation from Conſtantius, who together with his Father hath by Thee been loaded with ſo many Calumnies. How therefore Thou canſt judge it agreeable [to affirm] the ſame perſon to have been ſo Liberall, and ſo Bountifull; and yet ſo tenacious and ſordid, as to have impoſed ſuch an execrable Tax; I am [I muſt confeſs] wholly ignorant. Further, that he neither ſlew Fauſta nor Criſpus, nor, for that reaſon, received our Myſteries from any Egyptian; hear the words of Euſebius Pamphilus, who flouriſhed in the ſame times with Conſtantine and Criſpus, and was frequently converſant with them. (For, thou writeſt not even what thou haſt received by Report, much leſs the Truth: in regard thou livedſt a long time after, [to wit,] in the Reign of Arcadius and Honorius (to [b] whoſe Times thou haſt brought down thine Hiſtory,) or rather, after them.)

* Or, Devill.

† Or, Beauties of Buildings.

|| Or, Bread, or, Bread-corn.

[a] Πρῶτος ὁ κωνσταντῖνος. It muſt be made Conſtantius, as the reading is in the Tellerian M. S. and in Nicephorus book 16, chap 41. And a little after this, inſtead of πολεμίους, Enemies; it muſt be πολέμους, Wars; as the reading is in the ſame Nicephorus. Valeſ.

[b] Μέχρι σοῦ γέγραφας. Doubtleſs it muſt be μέχρις οὗ, in two words; and accordingly we have rendred it, to whoſe times. And ſo Nicephorus read, who has expreſt theſe words of Evagrius thus; οἷς καὶ τὸν συγγραφὴν ἔσησας; which place of Nicephorus, Langus underſtood not, as 'tis apparent from his Verſion of it. It muſt be rendred thus, Quibus hiſtoriam tuam terminaſti, wherein thou haſt cloſed thine Hiſtory. For Zoſimus brought down his Work to the taking of Rome effected by Alaricus, as 'tis manifeſt from Photius's Bibliotheca. Further, from this paſſage in Nicephorus and Evagrius, Voſſius (in his book de Hiſtoricis Græcis) affirms, that Zoſimus lived in the times of Theodoſius Junior. Yet, neither of thoſe two Authors hath ſaid that of Zoſimus. They only ſay, that he lived under Honorius and Arcadius, with which [Emperours] he terminated nated his History, or rather long after them. Indeed, I am of opinion, that this Zosimus lived about the times of Anastasius. For he cites Olympiodorus Thebæus, who wrote his History under Theodosius Junior, as Photius attests; and he names Syrianus Philosophus, who was the master of Proclus Diadochus. Now, Proclus lived in the Times of Anastasius. Lastly, Suidas writes, that Zosimus the Sophist lived in the Reign of Anastasius; whom I think to be the same with Zosimus the Historiographer. For many Rhetoricians and Sophists betook themselves to writing History, as 'tis manifest both from Dionysius Halicarnasseus, and also from many others. And the dignity of Advocate of the Fiscus [or, Treasury,] wherewith Zosimus was adorned, disagrees not much from the Sophistick dignity. Vales.

c This passage of Eusebius occurs at book 8, chap. 13, Eccles. Histor. from which place our Evagrius is to be corrected. Vales.

In the c Eight Book of his Ecclesiastick History [Eusebius] writes word for word thus: Within some small Intervall of time, the Emperour Constantius (a person of extraordinary mildness throughout his whole life, most favourable to his Subjects, and one that had a singular affection for the divine Doctrine [of our Religion,]) ended his life according to the common Sanction of Nature, leaving his own Son Constantine, Emperour and Augustus in his stead. And, after some other words. Constantine, Son to this man, being immediately from that very time [of his Fathers death,] Proclaimed Supream Emperour and Augustus by the Souldiers, (but long before that, by the Supream God) exhibited himself an emulatour of his Fathers Piety towards our Religion. And, at the * close of his History, he expresses himself in these very words. But Constantine the mighty Conquerour, gloriously adorned with all the Virtues of Religion, (together with his Son Crispus, a Prince highly beloved of God, and in all things like his Father,) recovered his own East. Doubtless Eusebius (who survived Constantine,) would never have so highly extolled Crispus, if he had been murdered by his Father. Moreover, Theodoret relates in † his History, that Constantine at the very close of his life, was made partaker of Salutary Baptism at Nicomedia; and, that he defer'd it till that time, because he was desirous of being baptized in the River Jordan. Thou sayst moreover, (most execrable and impurest of Mortalls!) that the || Roman Empire, from such time as the Christian Religion shewed it self, hath decayed, and been utterly destroyed; [which thou affirmest,] either because thou hast read nothing of what hath hapned in ancient times, or else with a designed malice to attack the Truth. For, the contrary is manifestly apparent, to wit, that the Roman Empire hath increased together with our Faith. Consider therefore, how about the very [time of the] Advent of Christ our God amongst men, d most of [the Cities of] the Macedonians were ruined by the Romans: Albania also and Iberia, the Colchi and Arabians, were made Subjects to the Romans. [Consider likewise,] how Caius Cæsar, on the Hundredth e eighty second Olympiad, in great fights subdued the Galli, Germani, and Britanni, (which Nations inhabited Five hundred Cities,) and annexed them to the Roman Empire; as it has been recorded by Historians. This is the Cæsar, who after the Consuls, was the first Monarch of the Roman Empire; who made a way out of * Polytheism and † Democracy, and introduced a prævious Veneration of a Monarchy, on account of that just ready to come, The Monarchy of Christ. Immediately, all Judæa, and the Neighbouring Countries, were annext [to the Roman Empire:] in so much that, The * First Inrollment was then made, in which Christ also together with others was Enrolled, to the end that Bethlehem might publickly declare the completion of that Prophecie [which had been uttered] concerning it self. For it hath been predicted by the Prophet Micah concerning it in this manner: || And Thou Bethlehem in the Land of Juda, art not the least amongst the Princes of Juda: for out of thee shall come forth to me a Governour, who shall * rule my people Israel. And † after the Nativity of Christ our God, Egypt was added to the Roman Empire, Augustus Cæsar, under whom Christ was born, having totally subdued Antonius and Cleopatra who killed themselves. After which persons, Cornelius Gallus is constituted Præfect of Egypt by Augustus Cæsar; and he was the First who Governed Egypt after The Ptolemies, as it has been recorded by Historiographers. Further, how many [Countries] have been taken away from the Persians, by Ventidius, and by Corbulo, Nero's * Dux; by g Trajan also, Severus, and Carus; by Cassius likewise, Odænathus of Palmyra, h Apollonius, and others: how often have [the Cities] Seleucia and Ctesiphon been taken; as likewise Nisibis, (which sometimes passed into the hands of the Romans, at others, into those of the Persians;) [lastly,] that Armenia, and the adjacent Nations, have been annexed to the Roman Empire, Thou thy self, together with other Writers, dost Relate. But I had almost omitted those things which Thou writest were done by Constantine, who together with his professing of our Religion, valiantly and with great Courage Governed the Roman Empire: and what Thy Julian suffered, a partaker of the same Mysteries with thy self, who left such deep wounds upon the Roman State. But, whether any thing of what hath been predicted concerning the end of the world, hath either received a * prelude, or shall obtain an end, is of an higher dispensation than Thou canst conceive. But, if Thou pleasest, let us make inquiry, in what manner those Emperours who asserted the Superstition of the Gentiles, and how they who had a value for the Christian Religion, concluded their [lives and] Reigns. Was not Caius Julius Cæsar, the First Monarch of the Roman Empire, murdered by Treachery, and so ended his life? did not some Souldiers with their swords kill the other Caius who was * Nephew to Tiberius? was not Nero murdered by one of his Domesticks? Did not Galba undergoe the same Fate? Otho, and Vitellius also; which three Emperours Reigned only sixteen months. Did not Domitian (who was his brother,) destroy the Emperour Titus by poison? Was not Domitian himself in a miserable man-

* To wit, pag. 198 of our Version.

† See Theodoret's Eccles. Hist. book 1. chap. 32.

|| Or, Affairs of the Romans.

d Long before Christ's Advent Macedonia had been subdued by the Romans. Moreover, the Albani, Iberi, and Colchi had been conquered by the same Romans long before Christ's birth. Therefore, what Evagrius says here, is nothing to the purpose. But, concerning this whole Invective of Evagrius's against Zosimus, see Johannes Leunclavius's Apology, which he has prefixt before his Edition of Zosimus. Vales.

e Κατὰ τὴν τείτην καὶ εἰκοστὴν καὶ ἑκατοστὴν ὀλυμπιάδα, on the Hundred twenty third Olympiad. The same is the reading in the Greek copies of Nicephorus; but it must be made Δευτέραν καὶ ὀγδοηκοστὴν, &c, on the Hundredth eighty second Olympiad, from Eusebius, and the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle, pag. 437. Vales.

* Or, The worship of many Gods.

† Or, A turbulent Dominion managed by the people.

* See Euseb. Eccles. Hist. book 1. chap. 5. note (a, b, c.)

|| See Mic. 5. 2.

* Or, Feed.

f Evagrius mistakes. For about twenty years before our Saviour's Nativity, Egypt was reduced into the form of a Province. Vales.

* Or, Commander.

g Τραϊανὸς τε Σεβῆρος, &c. It would be better written thus, Trajan also, Severus and Carus. For this is required by the order of time. Instead of Severus, it might be written Verus. For he got a great Victory over the Persians, as we are informed from the Writers of the Historia Augusta. Vales.

h Concerning this Apollonius I have read nothing in any place. Vales.

* Or, Proem, or, Beginning.

* Germanicus C. Cæsaris pater, Drusi & Minoris Antoniæ filius, à Tiberio patruo adoptatus, &c. So Suetonius in the Life of Caius Caligula.

ner removed out of this world by Stephanus? What wilt thou ſay concerning Commodus, did not he end his life by [the violent hands of] Narciſſus? Pertinax alſo, and Julian, underwent they not the ſame Fate? did not Antoninus Son to Severus, murther his Brother Geta, and was not he himſelf afterwards taken off in the ſame manner by Martialis? what [of] Macrinus alſo, was not he carried up and down like a Captive about Byzantium, and nefariouſly murdered by his own Souldiers? Aurelius Antoninus likewiſe, born at the City Emeſa, was not he ſlain together with his mother? and Alexander his Succeſſour in the Empire, fell not he together with his mother by * the like fact? What ſhall we ſay concerning Maximinus, was not he deſtroyed by his own Souldiers? What concerning Gordianus, who by Philippus's Treacheries [was murdered] by his own Souldiers, and ended his days? Now, doe Thou tell me, was not Philippus and his Succeſſour Decius ſlain by their Enemies? Gallus and likewiſe Voluſianus, were they not thruſt out of their lives by their own Forces? Æmilianus alſo, fell not he in the ſame manner? Valerianus, was not he taken priſoner, and carried up and down by the Perſians? [In fine,] after Gallienus had been treacherouſly murdered, and Carinus ſlain, the [ſupream management of] affairs came to Diocletianus, and thoſe whom he took in to be Colleagues in the Empire with himſelf. Of whom, Maximianus Herculius, and his Son Maxentius, as likewiſe Licinius, were utterly deſtroyed. But, from ſuch time as the moſt celebrated Conſtantine entred upon the Empire, and dedicated to Chriſt a City built by himſelf, which bore his own name; look about earneſtly [and ſee,] whether any of thoſe who Reigned in that City, excepting only Julian thy Pontif and Emperour, have been ſlain either by their own Citizens, or by their Enemies; or whether any Tyrant hath ever vanquiſhed an Emperour, [i] ſave only Baſiliſcus who drove out Zeno: notwithſtanding, he was afterwards routed by the ſame Zeno, and ended his life. I aſſent alſo to what thou writeſt concerning Valens; [becauſe] he was the Occaſioner of ſuch and ſo vexatious miſchiefs againſt the Chriſtians. For, concerning any other Emperour [beſides theſe,] even Thou thy ſelf canſt not ſay it. Let no perſon account theſe things to be forreign to our Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory; but rather [look upon them as] moſt uſefull and †accommodate; in regard the Hiſtoriographers amongſt the Heathens do deſignedly attempt to cloud the accurate knowledge of tranſactions. But let us return to the remaining Actions of Anaſtaſius.

* Or, The ſame.

† Or, Coherent.

[i] Ἢ μόνον βασιλίσκε. In the Tellerian M.S. I found it written, ἢ μονε βασιλίσκε: but I would rather expreſs it thus, πλὴν μόνε, ſave only, &c. Valeſ.

CHAP. XLII.

Concerning * The Chryſotelia.

* Or, Golden Tax.

THE Actions we have already mentioned, were egregiouſly performed by Anaſtaſius in a manner befitting the Imperial Majeſty. But the ſame Emperour did ſome things in no wiſe anſwerable to thoſe [we have related.] For he invented that termed [a] The Chryſotelia, and [b] rated the expence of the Militia at a very high value, to the great dammage [c] of the Provincials. Beſides, [d] he took away the Exaction of the Tributes, in regard our Evagrius, contenting himſelf in ſetting down the bare name, has omitted to explain the thing it ſelf; nor has any other of the Ancient Writers, that I know of, made mention of this thing. But, as much as I am able to attain by conjecture, I do think the Chryſotelia to have been nothing elſe, but a paying of Gold, which Anaſtaſius firſt ordered to be exacted from the Provincialls in ſtead of the Tributary Function. For the old Romans were wont to bring in the Tributes in the very Species themſelves, to wit, in Wheat, Barley, Wine, and Oyl: out of which, being carried together into the publick Granaries, the Military and Civil Annona was diſtributed. Moreover, by the Sanctions of the Emperours it had been forbidden, that the Collectors ſhould exact Gold of the Provincials inſtead of The Species [to wit, Wheat, Barley, &c.] as may be ſeen in the fourth and fifth Law of the Theodoſian Code, Tit. Tributa in ipſis ſpeciebus inferri. But Anaſtaſius was the firſt who gave order, that inſtead of The Species, money ſhould be exacted of the Provincialls. Now, I gather this, partly from the word Chryſotelia it ſelf, whereby is ſignified a paying of Gold inſtead of Tribute; and partly from that which Evagrius ſpeaks in this whole chapter concerning The Tributary Function, as we ſhall ſee afterwards. Valeſ.

[a] What The Chryſotelia ſhould be, is hard to gueſs, in

[b] Ἀπεμπολήσας τὴν στρατιωτικὴν δαπάνην. Johannes Langus has rendred this place very well, in this manner: Et populos ſuos Veſtigales bellicis impenſis per nundinationem divenditis ſupra modum gravavit, And he over-much burthened his people that payed Tribute, the Military Expences being by a Market made Sale of. Muſculus tranſlates it thus: Et Militares ſumptus onerioſiſſimè contra conſuetas contributiones divendidit, and in a moſt burdenſome manner made ſale of the Military Expences contrary to the uſuall contributions. But, Chriſtophorſon renders it worſt of all, in this manner: Et Stipendia Militaria, und cum exactionibus, non ſine graviſſimo reipublicæ detrimento divendidit, And ſold the Military Stipends, together with the exactions, not without the heavieſt detriment to the Re-publick. But, to the end we may fully underſtand the thing it ſelf, we will diligently weigh each word. Evagrius therefore ſays, ᾧ ἀπεμπολήσας. That word ſignifies in Latine, eum qui vendidit, him that hath ſold. Suidas alſo obſerves, that a fraudulent ſelling, or ſale, is underſtood by this word. Now, the ſelling of the Military Expence may be meant in a twofold manner. For, either Anaſtaſius Farmed out the Military Expence to Publicans, in ſuch manner as our Kings are wont to do, who uſually let out the allowance of the Military Annona, [that is, the Souldiers Proviſions,] of Cloths, and other things of that nature, to Publicans and Farmers. Or elſe, that Sale was no other thing than an Adæration, [or, ſetting a money-value upon theſe Expences:] in ſuch a manner as if Anaſtaſius ſhould have Rated at a moſt burthenſome value the Military Expence, to wit, the Cloathes, Arms, Forrage, &c; which were wont to be brought in by the Provincialls: which thing redounded to the loſs of the Provincialls, who inſtead of The Species themſelves were forced to pay a price. And this latter ſenſe I have followed in my Rendition. Now, by theſe words, στρατιωτικὴν δαπάνην, Evagrius means not only the Military Stipends, [or, Souldiers pay,] as Chriſtophorſon thought; but, all manner of charge belonging to the Militia, to wit, Cloathes, Arms, and Proviſions. Juſtinian makes frequent uſe of this word in his thirteenth Edict, where he diſtinguiſhes alſo between δαπάνας and σπάσεις. And he informs us, that the σπάσεις were the Annonæ, and the Capita [or, Forrage for the Beaſts] which were paid to the Magiſtrates in Gold: but, of what ſort the δαπάναι were, he explains not; only he intimates, that the values of them alſo were exacted from the Provincialls; where he ſpeaks concerning The Dux of Libya. Valeſ.

[c] Κατὰ τὰς σωληλατῶν. What σωληλατεῖς were, Muſculus and Chriſtophorſon underſtood not. The provincialls who paid Tribute, are ſo termed. The Old Gloſſes explain σωληλατεῖς, thus, Tributarius, a perſon obnoxious to the paying of Tribute; σωληλατεία, τὸ ἐπίταγμα, Tributum, Tribute. So Evagrius (book 5. chap. 13,) calls the Tributaries τοὺς σωληλατοῦντας. Valeſ.

[d] Περιεῖλε τὴν τῶν φόρων εἴσπραξιν ἐκ τῶν βουλευτηρίων. Amongſt the Burthens of the Decuriones, the Exactione [or, Collection] of the Tributes was not the leaſt. For they out of their own body made Suſceptores [Takers, or Receivers,] of The Annonæ, and Præpoſiti [or, Overſeers] of The Manſions and Granaries, as 'tis evident from the Theodoſian Code, in The Title de Decurionibus, and in The Titles de Suſceptoribus. Which yet is not ſo to be underſtood, as if only the Decurions might Collect the Fiſcall Tributes. For, both the Officialls of the Præfecti Prætorio, and likewiſe the Officialls of the Preſidents, were wont to Collect the Tributes from the Provincials; as Amm. Marcellinus informs us, book. 17, in theſe words. Denique inuſitato exemplo, id petendo Cæſar Impetraverat a Præſello, &c. In fine by an unuſuall Example, Cæſar by entreaty had obtained that of the Præfect, that the diſpoſe of the ſecond Belgica, which was oppreſſed with manifold miſchiefes, might be committed to him; to wit, on that condition, that neither the Official of a Prefect, nor of a Preſident, ſhould urge any one to pay. [In Valeſius's Edition of Amm. Marcellinus, pag. 90, where this paſſage occurs; it is printed thus: ..... inique.

iniquè. Inusitato Exemplo, &c; which imperfection in Marcellinus's Copy he does, I suppose, supply here by altering the punctation, and making it, Denique inusitato, &c.] The Emperour Anastasius wholly took away from the Decurions the exaction of the Tributes, which they in part took care of. Hence 'tis, that in Justinian's thirteenth Edict, where he treats concerning the Exaction of the Tributes of Egypt, he makes no mention of the Decurions; but only names the Scriniarii and the Tractatores of the Prætorian Præfecture, who Collected the Fiscall Tributes from the Payers, and brought them to the Double Table, or Cheſt, of the Prætorian Præfecture, the one Private, the other Generall. Which thing was, I suppose, instituted by Anastasius, who had Decreed, that the Tributes should be brought in, not in their very Species, but in Gold, as I have remarked above. Now, why Anastasius should institute that, this reason may be assigned. The Emperour Anastasius, in regard he was most provident in mannaging the publick affairs, (as Procopius attests,) was willing rather to buy Peace of the Barbarians with Gold, than to engage with them in a doubtfull War. Which when he had succeeded in according to his desire, he lessened the number of the Milice, in regard he had no need of them, because the Barbarians, appeased with Gold, would keep the Peace. Therefore Suidas in the word ἀναστάσιος, says that the Provinces of the Roman Empire, were in his Times almost empty of Souldiers. Whereas therefore the Roman Legions had been reduced to so small a number, there was no necessity of carrying so many Species Annonariæ [that is, Wheat, Barly, &c.] into the publick Granaries. Wherefore Anastasius judged it to be better, to exact money from the Provincialls, wherewith he might redeem Peace from the Barbarians. Vales.

[c] Τὰς καλουμένας Βινδικας. There is mention of these Vindices in Justinians Novells, and in the thirteenth Edict. The words of the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle pag. 785, are these: ἐν οἷς ἐφάνη ἀντίπατρος ὁ βίνδηξ ἀντιοχείας: which his translator hath rendred thus: inter quos Antipater Antiochiæ Vindex seu Judex occubuit, amongst whom was slain Antipater the Vindex or Judge of Antioch. But the Vindices were not Judges, but persons set over the Collection of the Tributes, as Justinian informs us, in Novell 124, and 125. Where he joyns them with the Curiales, Officiales, Canonicarii, and Exactours of the Tributes. And the same is confirmed by this place of Evagrius. For he says, that the Emperour Anastasius took the Exaction of the Tributes from the Curiales, and translated it to those Vindices which himself had instituted. The Vindices therefore exacted the Tributes from the Provincialls. The same Justinian in his thirteenth Edict says, that one Potamon, in the times of Anastasius, under pretence of Vindex of Alexandria, was set over the exaction of the Tributes. For so I render these words; ποταμωνος τινος ὑπὸ πρόφασιν δημοσίων τῆς ἀλεξανδρέων πραγματος τὸ τῆς βίνδικος χρῆμα. Whence also we learn, that the Vindex of Alexandria was set over the exaction τῆς ἐξαγωγίου; that was a Tax for the Exportation of Tyles and other wares which were exported out of the City Alexandria. Further, out of this money which the Vindex had Collected, he was compelled to allow wood to heat the publick Baths, and to fulfill other solemn duties, as the same Justinian informs us in the above mentioned Edict. From which passages therein, some persons might be able to Collect, that there was only one Vindex in every City. 'Tis further to be noted, that that Constitution of Anastasius, wherein the Exaction of the Tributes is said to have been taken from the Curiales, was in no wise observed by the succeeding Emperours. 'Tis certain, Justinian, in the forementioned Novells, does expresly name the Curiales amongst those who at their own peril exacted and undertook the Tributes. Vales.

[f] Ἐσπούδασε φασὶ μαίνα τὸν σύεα. The Emperour Justinian calls this person Marianus, in his thirteenth Edict, in these words: ἣ σὴ ἐνδιξότης εὗρεν, &c. Your glorious Magnificence hath found in a certain paper in the times of the Emperour Anastasius of pious memory, then when Marianus of glorious memory administred the publick affairs under him But Marcellinus in his Chronicon terms him Marinus; Indictione V. [says he,] Paulo & Musciano Coss. die dominico, dum jubente Anastasio Cæsare, per Marinum perq; Platonem in Ecclesiæ pulpito consistentes, in Hymnum Trinitatis Deipassianorum quaternitas additur, &c. Plato was indeed Præfect of the City Constantinople, as Victor Thunonensis informs us in His Chronicon: but Marinus was Præfectus prætorio; wherefore he is set before Plato by Marcellinus. Further, Cedrenus and Zonaras, whilst they tell the same thing with Marcellinus and Victor, mention not the names of Marinus and Plato, but do expres the dignity of each of them, stiling the one of them λογοθέτης, the other ὕπαρχον. Where, by the term λογοθέτης they mean the Præfectus Prætorio, because the Præfectus Prætorio manna-ged the accounts of the Tributes. But, we must not omit what Zonaras relates, to wit, that by this Marianus the Præfect (for so he calls him) Vitalianus the Tyrant was vanquished in a Sea-fight, by the help of certain Burning-glasses, which had been framed by Proclus the Philosopher. From which words some might conjecture, that this was the Marinus Syrus Schollar to Proclus the Philosoper. Indeed, Nicephorus also, in the last Chapter of his fifteenth Book, calls this Marinus, a Syrian. But, I am of opinion, that that Marinus Syrus, who was Præfectus Prætorio in Anastasius's times, must be distinguished from Marinus Syrus the Philosopher, who wrote Proclus's Life. For this Marinus last mentioned was by Religion a Pagan, as we learn from an old Epigram which occurs in the Anthologia. But, the former Marinus was a Christian, as 'tis manifest from Marcellinus. Vales.

CHAP. XLIII.

Concerning the Tyranny of Vitalianus.

[Further,] Vitalianus by Extract a Thracian, makes an insurrection against Anastasius. Having laid waste Thracia and * Mysia [a] as far as [the Cities] Odessus and Anchialus, he hastned to the Imperial City, at the head of a [vast, but] inconsiderate multitude of the Nations of the Hunni. Against whom the Emperour sent Hypatius. Who having been betrayed by his own [Forces,] and taken alive by the Enemy, was afterwards redeemed with a vast Ransome; and Cyrillus undertakes the mannagement of that whole War. And in the first place, a doubtfull Engagement hapned. Then, after [the fight] had received many * Turns, as well in pursuits, as Retreats, and Cyrillus had had the better; [on a sudden] [b] the Enemy began to fall on again, the [Roman] Souldiers having voluntarily given ground and turned their backs. And, in this manner Vitalianus took Cyrillus † in the [City] Odessus: and after he had ruined all places with fire and sword, he made his march as far as that place called Sycæ; having no other thoughts in his mind, than of taking the Imperial City it self, and of being put into possession of the Empire. But when Vitalianus had encamped in Sycæ, Marinus the Syrian, of whom we have made mention before, is sent by the Emperour, to engage him with a * Marine Army. Both † Fleets therefore stood opposed to each other, the one having Sycæ a Stern, the other Constantinople. And at first [by compact as 'twere] they forbore engaging. Then, after some excursions of the Ships, and ‖ Skirmishes on both sides, a sharp Sea-fight was begun between the two Fleets, about those places termed Bytharia; and Vitalianus having Tack't about, flies with all the Sail he could make, after he had lost most of his Forces. They also who were about him, Sailed off with all imaginable hast; in so much that on the day following, not one of the Enemy was to be found about [c] Anaplus, or at the Imperial City it self.

[a] Μέχρις ὀδυσσοῦ, as far as Odyssus. It must be written, ὀδησσοῦ, Odessus. For so 'tis termed by Diodorus Siculus by Strabo, and by Stephanus. The ancient Coyns also have it thus written, as I have long since observed at the twenty seventh Book of Amm. Marcellinus, pag. 334 of my notes. Nevertheless, most Writers, as well Greek as Latine, call it Odyssus as if it had had its name from Ulysses. Indeed, Johannes Langus has rendred that Ulyssopolim, which Nicephorus had termed ὀδυσσὸν in chap. 38, book 16. Vales.

* Or, Mæsia.

* Or, Alterations.

[b] Ἐπιστροφὰν πάλιν ἔλαβον. I judge it must be written in one word thus, παλινδίωξις. There is the same mistake in Nicephorus, Chap. 38, Book 16. what the import of ὀπισροφάδην is, Suidas tells us incomparably well, in that word. In the Tellerian M.S. I found it plainly written παλινδίωξις. Vales.

† Or, Out of Odessus.

* Or, Naval Forces.

† Or, Armies.

‖ Or, Throwing of Missile weapons.

[c] There was a place so called, as Marcellinus attests in his Chronicon, whose words we have quoted at chap. 25, note (c.) Stephanus has made mention of the same place in the word γυναικόπολις. Vales.

'Tis moreover ſaid, that [after this,] Vitalianus ſpent ſome time at Anchialus, and kept himſelf quiet. Further, another Nation of the Hunni [d] having paſt the Caſpian Streights, made an Incurſion [into the Roman Provinces.] At thoſe very ſame times alſo, Rhodus * was ſhaken by a moſt Violent Earthquake, in the dead of the night; which was the third calamity it had ſuffered of that Nature.

[d] Περαιωθὲν τὰς κασπίους πύλας. The Hunni having paſſed the Caſpian Streights [or, narrow paſſes,] made an irruption into Armenia, Cappadocia, and Pontus, in the Conſulate of Anthemius and Florentius, on the year of Chriſt 515, as Marcellinus and Victor Thunonenſis relate in their Chronicons. They were alſo termed Sabiri, or Saber, as Cedrenus atteſts: for ſo 'tis to be read in Theophanes. From which Authours it muſt be made here περαιωθὲν τὰς κασπίας πύλας, having paſt the Caſpian, Streights. 'Tis certain, Nicephorus has thus expreſt this place of Evagrius, at book 16. chap. 38. Through theſe Caſpian Narrow Paſſes, the Hunni were wont to break into the Roman Pale, as Procopius tells us Book 1. Perſic. Where he gives an excellent deſcription of theſe Narrow Paſſes, and atteſts that they had been heretofore fortified by Alexander the Macedonian. Whence, that paſſage of Saint Jerome, in his Epitaph of Fabiola, receives light; which runs thus: Ecce ſubito diſcurrentibus Nuntiis, Oriens totus intremuit, ab ultimâ Mæotide inter Glacialem Tanaim, & Maſſagetarum immanes populos, ubi Caucaſi rupibus feras Gentes Alexandri Clauſtra cohibent, erupiſſe Hunnorum examina. Valeſ.

* Or, Suffered a moſt violent, &c.

CHAP. XLIV.

That Anaſtaſius being deſirous to add theſe words, Who haſt been Crucified on our account, to the Hymn [termed] * The Triſagium, a Sedition and diſturbance hapned amongſt the people. Which [Anaſtaſius] fearing, † made uſe of diſſimulation, and ſoon altered the minds of the people. And concerning the death of Anaſtaſius.

* See Meurſius's Gloſſary, in the word τεισάγιον. † Or, Feigned an humiliation.

But at Conſtantinople, when the Emperour was deſirous of making an addition of theſe words, Who haſt been Crucified on our account, to [The Hymn termed] The Triſagium; a moſt violent Sedition hapned, as if the Chriſtian Religion had been totally * Subverted. Macedonius and the Conſtantinopolitane Clergy were the Authours and Abettours of this Sedition, as Severus affirms in his Epiſtle to [a] Soterichus.

* Or, Abrogated.

[a] This Soſherichus [or, Soterichus,] had been ordained Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia by Macedonius Biſhop of Conſtantinople. Who going over afterwards to the Eutychian party, joyned himſelf to the impious Xenaïas, as Theophanes relates in his Chronicon. 'Tis no wonder therefore, that Severus, a Ringleader of the Eutychians, ſhould have written Letters to Soterichus, a perſon like himſelf, and ſhould in them have accuſed Macedonius a Catholick Biſhop, as being the Authour of the Sedition. Severus himſelf was rather the Occaſioner of this Sedition, who had perſwaded the Emperour Anaſtaſius, that to The Hymn [termed] The Triſagium he ſhould add this Clauſe, Who haſt been Crucified for us, have mercy upon us; as Cedrenus relates in his Chronicon. Further, Proclus Biſhop of Conſtantinople had been taught this Hymn [termed] The Triſagium, by Angells. Which, as ſoon as the Prieſt had approacht the altar, the Chaunter out of the Pulpit began to ſing, in this manner, ἅγιος ὁ θεὸς. ἅγιος ἰσχυρὸς. ἅγιος ἀθάνατος, Holy God; Holy Mighty: Holy Immortall; as Jovius Monachus writes Book 6, in Photius's Bibliotheca. On account of this Hymn moſt violent Tumults aroſe afterwards in the Church, when the Eaſterns would add this Clauſe to it, ὁ σταυρωθεὶς δι' ἡμᾶς, Who haſt been Crucified for us, referring it to Jeſus Chriſt. But the Conſtantinopolitanes and Weſterns rejected that addition, leaſt any paſſion ſhould be attributed to the Conſubſtantiall Trinity: and in place thereof ſang theſe words, ἁγία τριὰς ἐλέησον ἡμᾶς, Holy Trinity have mercy upon us; as Ephræmius Patriarch of Antioch informs us in Photius his Bibliotheca. Macedonius did right therefore, who retaining the uſage delivered by Proclus, refuſed that addition. Valeſ.

Which [Epiſtle] he wrote before he had obtained the Epiſcopall Throne, whilſt he reſided [b] at the Imperial City, to wit, at that time [c] when he, together with others, had been ejected out of his own Monaſtery, as I have * related already. On account of theſe Calumnies, beſides other reaſons † already mentioned, I am of opinion that Macedonius was ejected [out of his See.] From this occaſion the populacy was enraged, and in regard they were not any longer to be withheld, many perſonages of the Nobility were reduced to the greateſt of dangers, and ſeverall of the eminenteſt places [of the City] were burnt down. And when the people had found a certain Country-fellow (who lead a Monaſtick courſe of life,) in the houſe of Marinus the Syrian, they cut off his head; affirming that by this mans motives and perſwaſions that Expreſſion had been added [to The Hymn.] They alſo put his head upon a pole, [carried it about,] and in a deriding manner exclaimed, that he was the Enemy of the Trinity. [Further,] the Sedition increaſed ſo vaſtly, ruining all things, and being ſuperiour to all * Oppoſition, that the Emperour, † compelled by neceſſity, went to the Cirque without his Crown, and ſent the Criers to the people, to make Proclama ion, that with all imaginable readineſs he would reſigne his Empire: but, that it was a perfect impoſſibility for all of them to obtain the Empire, which cannot endure many Colleagues; and, that there was of neceſſity to be one, who might Govern the Empire after him. Which when the people perceived, by a certain Divine impulſe as it were they altered their mindes, and beſought Anaſtaſius to put his Crown upon his head, and promiſed to be calm and quiet [in future.] When Anaſtaſius had ſurvived theſe diſturbances [d] ſome ſmall intervall of time, he departed to another life, having Governed the Empire of the Romans, ſeven and twenty years, three months, and as many days.

* See Chap. 33. † Chap. 32.

* Or, Strength. † Or, Out of neceſſity forced to a compaſſion.

[b] Ἐπὶ δὲ τῆς βασιλείας. Chriſtophorſon has rendred this place ill, thus, Vitam in aulâ Imperatoriâ degebat, Lead his life in the Imperial Pallace, Nicephorus alſo committed the ſame miſtake, who has expounded theſe words of Evagrius thus: ἐπὶ δὲ τοῖς ἀναλόγοις ἐνδιατρίβων, but as yet reſided in the Imperial Pallace. But, in Evagrius it muſt be written, ἐπὶ δὲ τῆς βασιλείας, that is, at the Imperial City. For ſo Evagrius is wont to call Conſtantinople, as I have noted above. Beſides, in the foregoing chapter he terms it ſo. Valeſ.

[c] Οὗτε τῶ καθ' ἑαυτὸν. Doubtleſs it muſt be, ὅτε τῶ καθ' ἑαυτὸν, and we have rendred it accordingly. So alſo Nicephorus read: for he has expreſt Evagrius's words thus: καθ' ἐκεῖνο καιρὸν, ὁπηνίκα τῶ καθ' ἑαυτὸν ἀπηλάθη μοναστηρίω, at that time, when he was driven from his own Monaſtery. Yet I wonder, that this was not perceived by the Tranſlatours, to wit, Muſculus and Chriſtophorſon. Valeſ.

[d] Nay; Anaſtaſius lived ſeven years compleat after this Sedition. Valeſ.

The End of the Third Book of Evagrius's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory.

THE

THE FOURTH BOOK OF THE Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory OF EVAGRIUS SCHOLASTICUS Epiphanienſis, And [one] of the EX-PRÆFECTS.

CHAP. I.

Concerning the Empire of * Juſtinus Senior.

* Or, Juſtinus the Firſt.

Anaſtaſius therefore being (as I have ſaid,) tranſlated to a better allotment, Juſtinus, by Extract a Thracian, veſts himſelf with the purple Robe, on the ninth day of the month Panemus, which amongſt the Romans is termed July, in the Five hundredth ſixty ſixth year of Antioch's being ſtyled a free City: he was declared [Emperour] by the Imperial Guards, of whom alſo he was Commander, having been made [a] Maſter of the Offices at Court. He obtained the Imperial Dignity beyond all expectation, in regard there were many of Anaſtaſius's relations, who were eminent perſonages, had arrived at the greateſt fortunateneſs imaginable, and who had procured to themſelves all that power which might have inveſted them * with the Imperial Dignity.

[a] Ἡγεμὼν ἦν ἐν τῇ αὐλῇ τάξεων. That is, Magiſter Officiorum, Maſter of the Offices. For ſo the Greeks do uſually explain that dignity.

* Or, With ſo great a dignity.

Nevertheleſs, Jordanes in his Book de Succeſſione Regnorum, relates, that Juſtinus was by the Senate elected Emperour, not from his being Maſter of the Offices, but Comes of the Guards. To whom agrees the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle, and the Old Chronographer whom I long ſince publiſhed at the end of Amm. Marcellinus's Hiſtory. Procopius (in his Anecdota, pag. 28,) ſpeaking of the Emperour Juſtinus as yet a private perſon, writes thus; Ἄρχοντα δὲ αὐτὸν Ἀναστάσιος βασιλεὺς κατεστήσατο ἦν ἐν παλατίῳ φυλάκων, For the Emperour Anaſtaſius had made him Comes of the Guards in the Pallace. The ſame Procopius makes Juſtinus, not a Thracian, (as Evagrius, Cedrenus, and Zonaras do,) but an Illyrian, born at the Town Bederiana. Theophanes alſo ſays Juſtinus was an Illyrian. But, I cannot enough admire at the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle, who although he makes him a Bederianite, yet terms him a Thracian. Valeſ.

CHAP. II.

Concerning the Eunuch Amantius, and Theocritus; and in what manner Juſtinus put theſe perſons to death.

MOreover, there was [at that time] one Amantius the chief perſon of the Imperial Bed-Chamber, a man of great power [and intereſt.] Who, in regard 'twas unlawfull for a man deprived of his Genitalls [as he was,] to be poſſeſt of the Roman Empire, was deſirous of encircling Theocritus, a great Confident of his, with the Imperial Crown. Having therefore cauſed Juſtinus to be ſent for, he gave him vaſt quantities of money, ordering him to diſtribute it amongſt thoſe who were moſt fit to effect this thing, and who might be able to inveſt Theocritus with the purple Robe. But Juſtinus having with this money purchaſed, either [the ſuffrages of] the people, or elſe the Benevolence of thoſe termed The Guards, (For 'tis reported both ways;) inveſted himſelf with the Imperial Dignity. Forthwith therefore he * takes off Amantius and Theocritus, together with ſome other perſons.

* Or, Deſtroyes from amongſt men.

CHAP. III.

In what manner Juſtinus ſlew Vitalianus by treachery.

BUt, he calls Vitalianus [then] [a] making [his Reſidence] in Thracia, (who had attempted to diveſt Anaſtaſius of the Empire,) to Conſtantinople: being afraid of his power, of his ſkill in relation to Military affairs, of the greatneſs of his Fame then [ſpread] amongſt all men, and of the deſire he had to obtain the Empire. But perceiving by a ſagacious foreſight, that he could on no other terms bring Vitalianus within his own power, unleſs he ſhould feign himſelf his friend; and having [for that reaſon] mask't his face with a fraud not to be detected, he conſtitutes him Maſter of [b] one [of thoſe Armies] termed The Preſent Militia.

[a] Ἐπὶ τῆς θράκης ποιούμενον. Nicephorus (book 17. chap. 1.) inſtead of the word ποιούμενον, making, ſubſtituted διάγοντα, living. But I am of opinion, that Evagrius wrote, τὴν διατριβὴν ποιούμενον, making his Reſidence; and, that the two former words were omitted by Tranſcribers. The reading may alſo be σκηνοποιούμενον, pitching his Tent, or, dwelling. Valeſ.

[b] Ἑνὸς ἦν κωλιμδίων περιστείλεων. There were two Armies in the Court of the Roman Emperour, who were called Præſentes, in Greek, τὸ περίστειλον. Theſe were commanded by two Magiſtri Militum, who were termed in Præſenti, or Præſentales. And in the Eaſtern Empire, one of theſe Commanders was a Magiſter of Foot, the other of Horſe. But in the Weſtern Empire, each of them was was a Magiſter of Horſe and Foot. Concerning theſe two Magiſtri of the preſent Milice, or, Milice in waiting, Malchus ſpeaks in his Excerpta Legationum pag. 93. Moreover, Jordanes in his Book de Succeſſione Regnorum agrees with our Evagrius, where he ſpeaks theſe words concerning the Emperour Juſtinus; Fœduſque cum Vitaliano percuſſit, &c. And he made a League with Vitalianus, and after he had ſent for him, made him preſent Maſter of the Milice and ordinary Conſul. See Meurſius's Gloſſary in the word περίστυλον. In the Fifth Action of the Conſtantinopolitane Synod under Menas, pag. 751, theſe words occur, ἐν τοῖς σπληνοῖς τῶν θείων περιστύλων ἑκατέρας δυνάμεως. Valeſ.

*Or, Place. After this, he gave a greater *occaſion of perſwaſion, whereby Vitalianus might more deeply be impoſed upon, and promotes him to the Conſulate.

c Οὗτος τῆς ὑπατείας ἐχόμενος. c Vitalianus therefore being made Conſul, after he was arrived at the Imperial Pallace, ended his life by being treacherouſly murdered d at one of the inner Gates; e paying this puniſhment for thoſe high contumelies wherewith he had affected the Roman Empire. But theſe things happened afterwards.

In the Tellerian M. S. this place is written thus, ἔτος δὲ εἰς ὑπάτους ἐχόμενος. Valeſ.

d Ἐν πυλῃ μεταυλείῳ θύρᾳ. Muſculus renders this place thus, in obſcuriore quâdam Palatii januâ, in a certain more obſcure gate of the Pallace. Chriſtophorſon tranſlates it in this manner; in portâ quâdam poſt Aulam poſitâ, in a certain gate placed after [or, behind] the Pallace. Johannes Langus, who rendred Nicephorus into Latine, has tranſlated it thus; ad quandam in mediâ Aulâ Januam, at a certain Gate in the middle of the Pallace. He was minded belike to expreſs that word which Nicephorus made uſe of, to wit, μεσαυλείῳ. The Greeks had two Gates in their Edifices which had no Cellars, or, Vaults. The firſt of theſe, which lookt towards the Street, was termed αὐλειος θύρα, the Porch-Gate, as Harpocration informs us in the word αὐλειος: the ſecond Gate was called μέσαυλος, or, μεσαύλειος, becauſe it was in the midſt between the Porch and the Atrium [or, Court;] or elſe becauſe it was in the middle between The ἀνδρωνῖτις, men's Apartment, and The γυναικωνῖτις, womens Apartment; as the Authour of the Etymologicon affirms. Lyſias mentions both theſe Gates in his Oration pro Eratoſthene de Cæde, in theſe words; ἀναμνησθεὶς δὲ ὅτι ἐκείνη τῇ νυκτὶ ἐῴφει ὁ μέσαυλος θύρα καὶ ἡ αὐλειος, but having remembred that in that night the Gate between the Porch and Atrium and the Porch-Gate creak't. I think it muſt be written thus, ὁ μέσαυλος καὶ ἡ αὐλειος θύρα. Heliodorus (in the cloſe of his third book,) alludes to this place of Lyſias, when he ſays, ἐῴφει τε ἡ μέσαυλος. Which paſſage the Tranſlatour renders thus, Perſtrepebat Oſtium Atrii, the Gate of the Atrium creak't. Ælius Dionyſius (in his Lexicon in Euſtathius on Ἰλιάδ. λ'. pag. 862.) ſays theſe words; ἁπλοῦν μὲν τὸν μέσην θύραν μέσαυλον φασὶ. μᾶλλον μὲν τὸν μέσων δυοῖν αὐλαῖν ὡς φησὶν Αἴλιος Διονύσιος· ἣν καὶ μέσαυλον αὐτὸς φησι; The Greeks term the midd e Gate μέσαυλος, eſpecially the middle of the two Gates, as Ælius Dionyſius affirms. Which [Gate] alſo the ſame perſon ſtiles μέσαυλος. The ſame is affirmed by The Scholiaſt of Apollonius at his third book. Let thus much be noted concerning the propriety of this word, in the Expoſition whereof Harpocration is miſtaken, (ſee him in the word μέσαυλος;) who from Lyſias thought the import of it was, ἡ ῥυπαρὰ λεγομένη αὐλή, that termed the ſordid Court [or, Yard] were the fowls were. But, we muſt now come neaer to the matter. The words of Victor Thunonenſis in his Chronicon are theſe: Maximo V. C. Coſſ. Vitalianus, &c. In the Conſulate of the moſt famous Maximus, Vitalianus is ſaid to have been killed at Conſtantinople within the Pallace, (in a place which by a Greek word they term The Delphicum,) by the faction of Juſtinianus the Patricius. Further, The Delphicum was an Houſe in the Pallace of Conſtantinople, wherein were the Stibadia [ſee book 5. chap. 13. note (a.)] of the Emperour; it was ſo termed from The Delphick Table; whereon drinking Cups were wont to be placed, as Procopius informs us in the firſt book of his Vandalicks, pag. 116. The Delphicum therefore was The Houſe of the nineteen places to lye down on and banquet, near to which was a ſpacious Atrium, or Area, as we will declare hereafter at our Annotations on book 5. chap. 13. In this Area, therefore or ſpatious Court, Vitalianus was ſlain in his own Conſulate, on the year of Chriſt 520, as Marcellinus informs us in his Chronicon. For μέσαυλος, or μεσαύλειος imports Curtis, a large and ſpacious Court, which was betwixt the mens Apartment and the womens Apartment, as we have ſeen from the Authour of The Etymologicon, &c. But, if we would rather take μέσαυλος to ſignifie a Gate, we muſt mean the Gate of The Delphicum. Thus the Conſtantinopolitan Synod under Menas is ſaid to have been held ἐν τῷ μεσαύλῳ τῷ δώπκῷ; that is, in the Weſtern Atrium of the Venerable Church of the Bleſſed Virgin Mary. Cedrenus in Juſtinian's thirty ſeventh year ſays that the μεσαύλιον of the greater Church was burnt; which is termed The Garſonaſtaſium. The old Gloſſes de Habitatione, interpret μεσαύλιον, compluvium, a pent-houſe. Theophanes in his Chronicon, pag. 158, relates that Juſtinian built a great Ciſtern of The Meſaulium or Atrium of Illus's Baſilica. The Old Gloſſes expound μεσαύλιον, Atrium, a Court. But when we read that the Councill was held in the Meſaulium, it is not to be underſtood of an open Court, but of the Porticus's of the Court. For the Councills of Biſhops were not held abroad in the open Air. Valeſ.

c Ταύτην καλαδῶν. I had rather make it καταβαλῶν, if I miſtake not. But, 'tis righter thus, καταβαλεῖν, which the Latines term pœnas ſolvere, to undergo puniſhment. Thus Evagrius expreſſes himſelf in chap. 32. of this book. Valeſ.

CHAP. IV.

How [Juſtinus] having Ejected Severus, put Paulus into his place: and, that ſome little time after, Euphraſius obtained the See of Antioch.

BUt Severus, who had been Ordained Biſhop of Antioch, agreeable to what we have *already related, (in regard he ceaſed not a daily to Anathematize the Synod at Chalcedon, eſpecially in thoſe they term b The Inſtalling Letters, and in the Anſwers thereto, which he ſent to the Patriarchs in all places; (but they were embraced and admitted of at Alexandria only, by Johannes Succeſſour to the former Johannes, and by Dioſcorus and alſo c Timotheus, which Letters are preſerved till theſe Times of Ours;) and becauſe many contentions in the Church aroſe therefrom, and the moſt faithfull people were divided into Factions; this Severus [I ſay]) is by Juſtinus's order Seized in the d Firſt year of his Empire, and underwent the puniſhment of having his Tongue cut out, as it has been reported by ſome perſons.

* Book 3. Chap. 33.

a Ἐφ' ἑκάστης. It muſt be made ἐφ' ἑκάστης, daily, as the reading is in the Tellerian Manuſcript, and in Nicephorus. Evagrius took this paſſage out of the Libell of the Monks, which is recorded in the Fifth Action of the Conſtantinopolitane Synod under Menas, pag. 712: πῶς δὲ ἐν χαλκηδόνι ἅπαξ σύνοδον ἐφ' ἑκάστης ὡς εἰπεῖν ἀναθεματίζειν πλῆθος ὁμοιώνει παύτῃ, πολλὰς φησὶ συμφιδιασάμενον ἐν αὐτῇ καὶ χαλκηδόνα ἅπαξ συνόδῳ φησὶ ὑπ' αὐτὸν ὑποκόπων ἐν τοῖς ἱεροῖς ἔχων δυπτύχοις; for daring daily (as we may ſay,) to Anathematize the Holy Synod at Chalcedon, he hath held Communion thus far, [or, in this manner,] he has in the ſacred Diptycks many of the Biſhops under himſelf who had ſate in that Holy Synod at Chalcedon. For ſo it muſt be read agreeable to the Old Tranſlatour: and this, Liberatus confirms in his Breviarium, chap. 19; where his words concerning Severus are theſe: Sed vexabatur in Epiſcopatu, tanquam Anathematizaret quidem Synodum, nominaret autem Epiſcopos Synodi; But he was vexed in his Biſhoprick, as if he ſhould Anathematize the Synod, but would name the Biſhops of the Synod. Valeſ.

b Ἐν ταῖς καλουμέναις ἐνθρονιστικαῖς συλλαβαῖς. Chriſtophorſon underſtood not this term, as 'tis apparent from his Verſion. For he rendred it thus: Et maximè in Litteris quæ ἐνθρονιστικαὶ, id eſt, quæ de Epiſcopis in ſede Epiſcopali collocandis ſcriptæ ſunt, &c; and eſpecially in the Letters which [are termed] ἐνθρονιστικαὶ, that is, which are written concerning the Biſhops to be placed in the Epiſcopall Chair. Johannes Langus (in chap. 2, book 17, of Nicephorus,) tranſlates it truer, thus: Potiſſimùm verò in eis quæ Enthroniſticæ, ſive Synodales dicuntur, Epiſtolis, &c; but moſt eſpecially in thoſe Letters, which are termed Enthroniſtick or Synodicall Letters, &c. So the Letters were termed, which the Patriarchs ſent one to another, at their Inſtallment, that is, in the beginning of their Epiſcopate. There were alſo Enthroniſtick Homilies, or Sermons, which the Biſhops Preacht to the people at their entrance upon their Epiſcopate. Concerning theſe, Liberatus (chap. 19.) writes thus, treating of our Severus, concerning whom Evagrius ſpeaks here: Fertur autem Expoſitio ejus, quæ ab eo dicta eſt in Enthroniſmo, &c; But his Expoſition is extant, which was ſpoken by him at his Inſtallment, wherein he does both embrace Zeno's Uniting Edict, and alſo Anathematizes the Chalcedon Synod, and likewiſe confeſſes himſelf to hold Communion with the Alexandrian and Conſtantinopolitane Prelates. Valeſ.

c He means Timotheus Biſhop of Alexandria, who had ſucceeded Dioſcorus Junior in that Biſhoprick, as Liberatus relates chap. 19. For Timotheus Biſhop of Conſtantinople cannot be meant here, in regard Evagrius has ſaid juſt before, that Severus's Synodick Letters were embraced and admitted of only at Alexandria. Valeſ.

d Nay; Severus was ejected in the ſecond year of the Emperour Juſtinus, on the year of Chriſt 517, as Baronius has remarked truly. Valeſ.

The

The executing of which puniſhment was committed to Irenæus, [c] who being then Comes of the Eaſt, reſided at Antioch. 'Tis certain, Severus himſelf (in his Letter to ſome of the Antiochians, wherein he relates the manner of his own Flight;) does aver, that Irenæus had been ordered to apprehend * him. In which Letters, he loads Irenæus with the greateſt Calumnies, [f] becauſe he had placed the watchfulleſt Guard imaginable about him, that he might not make his eſcape out of Antioch. There are thoſe who affirm, that Vitalianus, who as yet ſeemed to hold the chiefeſt place of favour and authority with Juſtinus, requeſted Severus's tongue, becauſe Severus in his own Sermons had been injurious towards him. Severus therefore flies from his own See [the Chair of Antioch,] in the month Gorpiæus, which in the Roman Tongue is termed September, on the Five hundredth ſixty ſeventh year of Antioch's being ſtyled a free City. After whom Paulus aſcends that [Epiſcopal] Chair, and [g] is ordered publickly to commend and aſſert the Chalcedon Synod. Moreover, Paulus having [h] voluntarily withdrawn himſelf from Antioch, finiſhed his life, and goes the [common] way of all men. After him, Euphraſius, who [came] from Jeruſalem, is preferred to his Chair.

* Severus.

[c] Ὃς ἐφειστήκει τῇ ἑῴᾳ ἀρχῶν. By theſe words I am of opinion the Comes of the Eaſt is meant; which was a Civill dignity, as I have long ſince remarqued at Amm. Marcellinus, pag. 5. of my notes. Nevertheleſs, Nicephorus thought that this Irenæus was the Dux of the Militia. For he has interpolated this paſſage of Evagrius in this manner: ὃς ἦρχε τῶν ἀνατολικῶν στρατιωτικῶν ἡγεῖτο τάγματος, who commanded the Military Companies at Antioch. But there is a fault in theſe words of Evagrius, ἦρχε ἐρχῶν, which in my judgment are to be expunged; or elſe to be corrected in this manner ἄρχων ἀνὰ τὴν ἀνατολήν. Valeſ.

[f] Καὶ πᾶσαν αὐτῷ, &c. Without doubt it muſt be, ὡς πᾶσαν αὐτῷ φυλακὴν ἀκριβῆ περιθέντα, becauſe he had placed the watchfulleſt Guard imaginable about him, &c. I have noted already, that in theſe Books of Evagrius, ᾗ is moſt frequently put inſtead of ὡς. Valeſ.

[g] The Emperour Juſtinus, at the beginning of his Empire, made an eſtabliſhment by a Law, that all the Biſhops ſhould embrace the Chalcedon Synod: but if any would not embrace it, they ſhould be driven from their Sees. Liberatus has mentioned this Law in his nineteenth chapter, in theſe words: Mortuo Anaſtaſio, & Juſtino facto Imperatore, &c; Anaſtaſius being dead, and Juſtinus being made Emperour, Severus is accuſed by Vitalianus the Magiſter Militum, a Religious and Orthodox perſon, becauſe he deſpiſed the Emperours Command, and would not embrace the Synod. See Baronius at the year of Chriſt 519, Number 145. Further, this place of Evagrius ſeems to have given occaſion of a miſtake to Nicephorus. For, becauſe our Evagrius had ſaid, that Paulus, Severus's ſucceſſour had been ordered to aſſert the Chalcedon Synod at his Inſtallment, Nicephorus thought that this Paulus was in ſecret an Eutychian: Nevertheleſs, that this was falſe, Liberatus informs us in his Breviarium chap. 19; as alſo the Legates of the Apoſtolick See in their Relation to Pope Hormiſda, which Baronius records at the year of Chriſt 519. Valeſ.

[h] Paulus Biſhop of Antioch was accuſed by his own Clergy, and by ſome others of the people of Antioch, before the Legates of the Apoſtolick See, who as yet reſided at Conſtantinople; and after their departure, before the Emperour Juſtinus; who not able to clear himſelf of the Crimes objected againſt him, being vanquiſhed by the teſtimony of his own Conſcience preſented Recuſatory Libells, requeſting that he might have leave to retire from the Epiſcopal Office which he had undertaken. Which when he had been permitted to do, he ſpontaneouſly removed himſelf from the Sacerdotall Function, as the Emperour Juſtinus relates in his Letter to Pope Hormiſda, which Baronius records at the year of Chriſt 521. But although it is not expreſly ſaid in the foreſaid Letter, to whom Paulus preſented thoſe Libells: yet it ſeemeth to me, that he preſented thoſe Libells to the Emperour Juſtinus. For, that is declared by Epiphanius Biſhop of Conſtantinople, in the Letter which he wrote to Pope Hormiſda concerning the ſame affair. Valeſ.

CHAP. V.

Concerning the Fires which hapned at Antioch, and the Earthquakes; wherein Euphraſius was buried, and ended his life.

ABout theſe ſame Times of Juſtinus, frequent and dreadfull Fires hapned at Antioch, which lead the way as 'twere to thoſe moſt terrible Earthquakes that followed afterwards, and gave beginning to the enſuing Calamities. For, after ſome ſhort time, in the ſeventh year of Juſtinus's Reign, [a] on [his] Tenth month, in the month Artemiſius, or May, on the Twenty ninth day thereof, at the very hotteſt time of Noon-day, on the ſixth day of that termed The Week, a ſhaking and quaking of the Earth invaded the City, which almoſt wholly overturned and ruined it. After theſe [trembling and quakings of the Earth] followed a Fire, ſharing as it were the Calamity with them. For, thoſe places which theſe [ſhakings and quakings of the Earth] afflicted not, the fire ſpreading it ſelf all about, reduced to Embers and Aſhes Further, what places of the City were ruined, how many perſons periſhed in the Fire and by the Earthquakes, (as 'tis probably ſuppoſed;) alſo, what wonderfull and [almoſt] inexpreſſible accidents hapned; Johannes the Rhetorician has moſt pathetically related, with the Narrative whereof he hath cloſed his Hiſtory. Laſtly, Euphraſius himſelf alſo, having been incloſed within thoſe ruines, [b] ended his life; [which accident brought] another Calamity upon that City, in regard no perſon was left alive, who might provide ſuch things as were neceſſary.

[a] Μηνὶ δεκάτῳ. Chriſtophorſon underſtood not this paſſage, as 'tis apparent from his Verſion. For he renders it thus: Anno Septimo Regni ejuſdem Juſtini, menſe decimo, Artemiſio videlicet, id eſt, Maio, &c; In the ſeventh year of the ſame Juſtinus's Reign, on the tenth month, to wit Artemiſius, that is, May, &c. Chriſtophorſon thought, that the tenth month was here termed Artemiſius. But 'tis not ſo. For Artemiſius was not the tenth month of the Macedonians. Evagrius therefore ſays this only here, that that Earthquake hapned at Antioch in the ſeventh year, on the tenth month of Juſtinus's Empire. Concerning the year we ſhall ſee afterwards, whether it be truly reckoned the ſeventh. But the tenth month is rightly put by Evagrius. For, that Earthquake hapned in the month May, as Evagrius, and likewiſe Theophanes do atteſt. Now, this was the tenth Month of Juſtinus's Empire. For Juſtinus began his Reign on the ninth day of the month July, as the Author of the Alexandrian Chroniele obſerves. Therefore, the month May of the following year was the tenth month of Juſtinus's Reign. Theſe things concerning the month admit of no doubt. As to the year, our Evagrius has done ill to place this Earthquake on the ſeventh year of Juſtinus's Empire, in regard he ought rather to have ſaid the eighth. For this Earthquake hapned on the fourth Indiction, when Olybrius was Conſul alone; as Marcellinus Comes and Theophanes do atteſt in their Chronicon's: which was the year of Chriſt 526. On which year the eighth year of the ſame Emperours Reign was current till the month July. Baronius therefore has not rightly placed this Earthquake on the year of Chriſt 525; who was lead into a miſtake by Evagrius. Further, in the Florentine Manuſcript, at theſe words of Evagrius, this Scholion was ſet in the Margin; ὅτι ὁ μαΐος δεκάτος μὴν λέγεται, [Note] that May is termed the tenth month. But this Scholiaſt, whoſoever he was, is miſtaken here. For May is not ſimply and abſolutely termed the tenth month by Evagrius here, but only the tenth month of Juſtinus's Empire, as I have ſaid above. Valeſ.

[b] Τελευτᾷον δὲ οὖν, in fine therefore. In the Florent. M. S. the reading is truer, thus, τελευτᾷ δὲ, ended his life. Further, concerning this Earthquake wherewith Antioch was ruined in the times of the Emperour Juſtinus; beſides Theophanes and Cedrenus, Procopius ſpeaks in the firſt book of his Perſica, pag. 67, and 68; where he relates that three hundred thouſand perſons periſhed in that Earthquake. Valeſ.

CHAP. VI.

Concerning Ephræmius who ſucceeded Euphraſius.

BUt the Salutary providence of God over men, which [uſually] provides the Remedy before the Blow, and ſharpens the Sword of its Anger with Clemency, which in the very interim that affairs are in a deplorable and deſperate poſture, diſplays its own compaſſion, excited excited Ephræmius [a] then Comes of the Eaſt, to take all poſſible Care, that the City might want nothing of thoſe things that were neceſſary. Which perſon the Inhabitants of Antioch admired on this very account, and choſe him their Biſhop. Ephræmius therefore obtains the Apoſtolick Chair, which was allotted to him as the Reward and Recompence as 'twere of ſuch his providence [towards that City.] Thirty months after this, Antioch was again afflicted with Earthquakes: [b] at which time alſo it [changed its name, and] was called Theopolis; and the Emperour made proviſion for it by all other care and diligence whatever.

[a] Τῆς ἑῴας ἀρχῆς ἡνίας διέπον-τα, who held the Raines of Government of the Eaſt. That is, was then Comes of the Eaſt, under whoſe diſpoſe were all the Provinces of the Eaſt; as the Notitia of the Roman Empire informs us. That Ephræmius was adorned with this dignity, we are told by Johannes Moſchus in chap. 37. of his Limonarium; where his words are theſe: Eo tempore vir clemens, & miſericordiæ operibus deditus Ephræmius Comes Orientis erat, &c; At that time Ephræmius, a perſon of great clemency, and addicted to works of compaſſion, was Comes of the Eaſt, and by him the publick Buildings were repaired: for the City had been ruined by an Earthquake. Photius alſo atteſts the ſame, in his Bibliotheca, chapter 228. Valeſ.

[b] Τότε καὶ Θεόπολις; and then alſo, &c. I would rather read, ὅτε καὶ Θεόπολις, at which time alſo, &c. Which is the reading in the Tellerian Manuſcript, and in Nicephorus, who writes, that in Juſtinian's Reign Antioch had that name given it. The ſame is atteſted by Stephanus Byſantius in the word Θεόπολις, and by Theophanes in his Chronicon. This Latter Earthquake hapned on the twenty ninth day of November, in the ſeventh Indiction, two years after the former Earthquake, as Theophanes relates pag. 151; or rather thirty months after the former Earthquake, as Evagrius ſays truly. For, ſo many months are reckoned from the twenty ninth of May in the year of Chriſt 526, to the twenty ninth of November in the year of Chriſt 528. In which year the ſeventh Indiction began to be reckoned from the month September. Whence, that appears to be moſt true which I have remarked before, viz. that that former Earthquake hapned at Antioch on the year of Chriſt 526; and not on the year 525, as Baronius thought. And yet Baronius has rightly placed the latter Earthquake on the year of Chriſt 528; which is true. For, whereas he follows Evagrius's Calculation, he ought to have placed that Earthquake on the year 527: in regard the former Earthquake had hapned at Antioch on the year 525 of Our Lord's Nativity. Valeſ.

CHAP. VII.

Concerning Zoſimas and Johannes who were Workers of Miracles.

BUt, in regard we have mentioned the foreſaid Calamities, come on, we will alſo inſert ſome other paſſages, worthy to be remembred, into this our preſent Work; which paſſages were brought to our knowledge by thoſe who ſaw them. There [was] one Zoſimas, a perſon who exerciſed himſelf in a Monaſtick life, by Extract a Phœnician, of that Phœnice termed Maritima; the place of his Nativity was Sinde, a Village diſtant from Tyre not full out twenty furlongs. This man, by his abſtinence from and uſe of meats, and by other virtues of his life, had in ſuch a manner * poſſeſt himſelf of God, that he could not only foreſee things future, but had alſo received [from God] the Gift of †being free from all manner of perturbation of mind. Being therefore [one time] in the City Cæſarea, which is the Metropolis of one of the Paleſtines, at the houſe of [a] a perſonage of eminency; (his name was Arceſilaus, a perſon Nobly deſcended and Learned, and one who had arrived at Honours and thoſe other [accompliſhments] which adorn the life of a man:) at that very inſtant of time wherein Antioch was ruined [by the Earthquake,] this Zoſimas all on a ſudden grew ſad, mourned and ſighed deeply, and ſhed ſo great a quantity of tears that he wetted the earth. He alſo asked for a Cenſer, and having burnt Incenſe all over that place where they ſtood, he proſtrates himſelf on the ground, in order to his appeaſing God with Prayers and Supplications. Then Arceſilaus asking him, what that was which troubled him ſo much, he anſwered in expreſs words, that the Noiſe of the Ruine of Antioch juſt then rang in his ears. In ſo much that Arceſilaus and thoſe then preſent, being ſtricken with an amazement, wrote down the hour, and found afterwards, that it had ſo hapned as Zoſimas had declared. Severall other wonders were wrought by this perſon; the multitude whereof I will omit, in regard they are even more in number than can be told; and will mention only ſome of them. There flouriſhed at the ſame time with this Zoſimas, a man by name Johannes, for virtues like to him; who had exerciſed a Monaſtick and * immateriall life in the Laura [b] Chuziba, (which is ſcituate in the extremity of the valley, at the Northern part of the highway that leads paſſengers from Jeruſalem to the City Jericho;) [c] but had been made Biſhop of the foremention'd City Cæſarea. This Johannes the Chuzibite, in regard he had heard that the wife of the foremention'd Arceſilaus had beat out one of her eyes with a Weavers Shuttle, ran to her in great haſt, to make an inſpection into the wound. But when he had ſeen it, and [perceived] that the pupill was faln out, and the whole eye perfectly run out, he orders one of the Phiſitians who had * come thither, to bring a Sponge, and to put the eye which was faln out into its place again as well as he could, and to put the Sponge about it and bind it with † Swathells of Linnen. Arceſilaus, was not then preſent. For he hapned to be at that time with Zoſimas, in his Monaſtery, which was ſcituate in the Village of the Sindeni, diſtant from Cæſarea about five hundred furlongs. Meſſengers therefore ran in great haſt to Arceſilaus, to acquaint him with what had hapned. Arceſilaus was ſitting near to Zoſimas holding a Conference with him. As ſoon as he underſtood [the misfortune that had befaln his wife,] he wept bitterly, pluckt off and tore his hair, and threw it into the air. When Zoſimas enquired the reaſon hereof, Arceſilaus gave him an account of what had hapned, but made frequent interruptions in his Relation by ſighs and tears. Zoſimas therefore having left him, retired alone by himſelf into a certain little * Room, where he was wont to converſe with God, as 'tis the uſage of ſuch perſons. After ſome

* Or, Brought God home within himſelf.

† Πάσης ἀπαθείας, of all manner of undiſturbedneſs in relation to the paſſions.

[a] Σωσῶν αὖ πνὶ ὀπισήμων ἄνα πῶ καίσαρ☉ πόλιν. Muſculus has referred theſe laſt words, to the word ὀπισήμων. For he renders it thus: Hic junctus erat nobili cuidam Cæſarienſi, He was joyned to a certain Noble man of Cæſarea. But Nicephorus and Chriſtophorſon conſtrued theſe words otherwiſe, and referred them to the verb σωσῶν which precedes, thus; Being therefore, &c, as we have rendred it. Which opinion I do rather approve of. Yet, that which follows in Evagrius raiſes a doubt, to wit, that Zoſimas asked the ſtanders by for a Cenſer. For, if Zoſimas was in the houſe of Arceſilaus a Laick, how could he ſeek for a Cenſer there, in regard 'tis not uſuall to have Cenſers in the houſe of a Laick? Valeſ.

* Αὔλον, a life void of matter.

[b] Χαζιχᾷ, Chuzica. So alſo the reading is in Nicephorus, and Ortelius has retained the ſame reading in his Theſaurus Geographicus. But in the excellent Florentine Manuſcript it is χαζίβᾳ, Chuziba; which is doubleſs truer. For ſo Johannes Moſchus terms that Laura in chap. 24; cùm autem veniſſet in Eremum, & moraretur in Cellis Cuſibas, &c; But when he was come into the Deſert, and abode in the Cells at Cuſiba, he performed the ſame works of mercy. For he went through the high way which leads from Jordan to the Holy City. Where 'tis obſervable, that thoſe are termed Cells by Moſchus, which Evagrius calls a Laura. Indeed, a Laura was nothing elſe but Cells of Monks diſperſed here and there, as I have remarkt above, at book 1. chap. 21. note (b.) yet Moſchus (chap. 24.) calls it The Monaſtery Chuziba. —— Valeſ.

[c] This Johannes was firſt Abbot and Presbyter of the Monaſtery Chuziba; whence he had the ſurname of Chuzibite. But afterwards he was made Biſhop of Cæſarea, as (beſides Evagrius) Johannes Moſchus informs us, chap. 24. Valeſ.

† Or, Rollers.

* Or, Houſe.

ſome

some little time he came out, lookt chearfully, and with a modeſt and grave ſmile † ſtroakt Arceſilaus's hand ſoftly, Go, ſays he, go away with joy: Grace is given to the Chuzibite. Your wife is cured; ſhe has both her eyes; that accident could deprive her of nothing, in regard it ſo pleaſed the Chuzibite. And ſo it hapned, theſe two righteous perſons having at one and the ſame time wrought a Miracle. This ſame Zoſimas going one time to Cæſarea, and leading an Aſs after him whereon he had laid ſome things that were needfull to him, meets a Lyon, who having ſeized upon the Aſs, went his way. Zoſimas followed the Lyon over the wood, till ſuch time as he had filled his belly with the Aſſe's fleſh. After which Zoſimas laugh't, and ſpeaks [theſe words] to the Lyon; But Friend [ſays he] my journey is ſtopt, for I am a man [d] groſs and fat, and of a very great age; nor am I able to carry that burthen on my back which was laid upon the Aſs. If therefore you have a mind that Zoſimas ſhould remove from hence, you muſt neceſſarily carry my Burthen, [though this be a thing] contrary to the Law of your Nature; and [after that] you ſhall be a wild Beaſt again. The Lyon wholly forgetting his Rage, began to fawn, in a moſt gentle manner [e] ran immediately to Zoſimas, and by his geſture * ſhewed his obedience. Zoſimas therefore having laid the Aſſes burden on him, lead him as far as the Gates of Cæſarea; demonſtrating hereby the power of God, and how all things ſerve and obey us men, when we live to God, and do not adulterate that Grace which is given to us. But, leaſt I ſhould lengthen my Hiſtory by [relating] more [ſuch paſſages as theſe,] I will return to that place from whence I have made a digreſſion.

† Τὴν χεῖρα κατέψυξεν, cooled his hand. In Robert Stephens the reading is, πλὴν χεῖρα κατέψυξεν.

[d] Παχὺς τε ὢν τὸ σῶμα. Muſculus omitted theſe words in his Verſion. But Chriſtophorſon has rendred them thus; quippe cùm annis pluriminis onuſtus ſim, in regard I am loaden with many years. Which rendition is not to be born with; for his following words are, & ætate admodùm provectus, and very aged. By this Verſion therefore Evagrius would be made to ſay the ſame thing in both places. The Greeks term Groſs, thick, and fat men παχεῖς. Which ſort of perſons are tender and delicate, and unfit to carry a burden. See Suidas in the word παχεῖς. Nicephorus alſo underſtood not this word. For inſtead thereof he has ſubſtituted theſe, καὶ δι' ἔνδειαν ἐκλελυσμένῳ, and by reaſon of my want of neceſſaries am macerated, [or, melted.] Valeſ.

* Or, Roared out.

[e] Ὡς ἔτρεχε. Doubtleſs it muſt be written, προσέτρεχε, ran to. In Nicephorus the reading is ὑπέτρεχε, ran under. But our Emendation ſeems better. Valeſ.

CHAP. VIII.

Concerning the Univerſall Calamities.

DUring the ſame Juſtinus's Governing the [Roman] Empire, that [City] now named Dyrrachium (which was anciently called Epidamnus,) was ruined by an Earthquake. As was likewiſe Corinthus, ſcituate in Achaia. Anazarbus alſo, the Metropolis of the Second Cilicia, [ſuffered] a fourth Calamity of this ſort. Which Cities Juſtinus rebuilt by the expence of a vaſt ſum of money. In theſe very ſame times alſo, Edeſſa a City of the Oſroeni, which was vaſtly great and rich, was drowned by the waters of the torrent of The Scirtus which runs hard by it; in ſo much that moſt of the houſes were beaten down, and an innumerable multitude of men deſtroyed, whom the water carried away. Edeſſa and Anazarbus had their [ancient] names changed by Juſtinus; for both thoſe Cities were adorned with * his own name.

* That is, he gave each of them the name of Juſtinopolis.

CHAP. IX.

How Juſtinus whilſt he was yet living, took Juſtinianus to be his Colleague in the Empire.

THe ſame Juſtinus having paſſed the eighth year of his Empire, [a] and alſo nine months and three days [of his ninth year,] Juſtinianus his Siſters Son is made his Colleague in the Empire, being proclaimed on the firſt [day of the month] Xanthicus, or Aprill, in the Five hundredth ſeventy fifth year of Antioch's being ſtiled a Free City. And when theſe affairs had proceeded in this manner, Juſtinus removes from his Empire here [on earth,] * having ended his life on the firſt day of Lous, or the month Auguſt, when he had reigned four months with Juſtinianus, and had [b] held the Empire [as well alone, as with a Colleague] nine compleat years [[c] one month,] and three days. [Further,] when Juſtinianus was inveſted with the ſole Government of the whole Roman Empire, and the Synod at Chalcedon had been aſſerted over all the moſt Holy Churches, by the order of Juſtinus, as I have related; the affairs of the Eccleſiaſtick conſtitution were as yet diſturbed in ſome Provinces; and eſpecially at the Imperial City, and at Alexandria: Anthimus then Governing the Biſhoprick of Conſtantinople, and Theodoſius preſiding over the Church at Alexandria. For both [theſe Prelates] aſſerted one Nature [in Chriſt.]

* Or, Having undergone his perfect day.

[a] The Authour of the Alexandrian Chronicle, inſtead of, three days, has made it, five. For he writes, that Juſtinianus was made Auguſtus by Juſtinus, after eight years nine months and five days of Juſtinus's Empire, on the Calends of Aprill, in the Conſulate of Mavortius; which was the year of Chriſt 527. But the Authour of that Chronicle diſagrees from himſelf: for he relates, that Juſtinus entred on the Empire on the ninth day of the month July, in the year of our Lords Nativity 518. From which time to the Calends of Aprill in the year 527, there are eight years, and as many months, together with one and twenty days. But if we follow Cedrenus, who relates that Juſtinianus was made Auguſtus by Juſtinus on the fourteenth of Aprill, then the Computation of the Alexandrian Chronicle will be moſt certain. Valeſ.

[b] Τὴν αὐτοκρατορείαν διανύσας ἀρχήν. In the Tellerian Manuſcript, I found it written, πλὴν αὐτοκρατορικὴν διανύσας ἀρχήν, and had held the Imperiall Government, or, the Empire: which reading pleaſes me beſt. Valeſ.

[c] From Evagrius's own Computation 'tis apparent, that theſe words [one month] muſt be added here. For in regard he has ſaid a little before this, that on the Calends of Aprill of this year, the eighth year of Juſtinus's Reign was compleated, and that he had reigned over and above, nine months and three days; the Conſequence is, that on the Calends of Auguſt of the ſame year, nine years were paſſed together with one month and three days. Whence 'tis Collected, that Juſtinus's Reign is to be begun from the twenty eighth day of June, according to Evagrius's Sentiment. Valeſ.

CHAP. X.

That Juſtinianus favoured thoſe who embraced the Chalcedon Synod. But [his Wife] Theodora was a Lover of the Contrary party.

JUſtinianus indeed couragiouſly defended the [Fathers] which had been convened at Chalcedon, and the Expoſitions they had made. But his Wife Theodora [favoured] them who aſſerted one Nature: [a] whether it were becauſe they themſelves really thought ſo:

[a] Εἴτε καὶ ἀληθῶς ὅπως ἐχόντων. I think it ſhould be worded thus; εἴτε καὶ αὐτῶν ἀληθῶς ὅπως ἐχόντων, whether it were becauſe they themſelves really thought ſo. For the ſenſe requires this reading. Nicephorus in no wiſe underſtood the meaning of this paſſage. But Muſculus has explained it excellently well in this manner: Sive autem ſic verè ſentiebant, ſive ſic diſpenſatione quâdam inter ipſos convenerat; But whether they really thought ſo, or whether it had been ſo agreed amongſt themſelves by a certain diſpenſation. Chriſtophorſon has followed Muſculus, and began a new period from theſe words, in this manner, Sive igitur ita revera ſentiebant, &c. Whether therefore they really thought ſo, &c. But we have joyned them with the foregoing words. Valeſ.

(For

(For when the Subject of the debate is concerning the Faith, Fathers differ from their Children, and Children from their Parents, the Wife [diſagrees] with her own Husband, and again the Husband with his own Wife:) or whether it had been ſo agreed upon between themſelves [b] out of a politick deſign, that the Emperour ſhould defend thoſe who aſſerted two Natures in Chriſt our God after the Union: but the Empreſs, them who maintained [there was but] one Nature. Nevertheleſs, neither of them yielded to the other. But Juſtinian pertinaciouſly adhered to what had been agreed on at Chalcedon: and Theodora, addicted to the Contrary party, made all imaginable proviſion for thoſe who aſſerted one Nature. And ſhe every way cheriſhed [c] our Country-men; but ſhe favoured Forreigners with vaſt preſents of money. [In fine,] ſhe perſwades Juſtinian to cauſe Severus to be ſent for [to Conſtantinople.]

[b] Κατ' εὐκονομίαν. Muſculus renders it, diſpenſatione quâdam, by a certain diſpenſation. Which Verſion I do not approve off. Johannes Langus tranſlates it, ex compoſito, by agreement, or, appointment. Chriſtophorſon, deditâ operâ, on ſet purpoſe. I would rather render it, per ſimulationem, through pretence, or, out of a politick deſign. For, 'tis oppoſed τῇ ἀληθείᾳ, to truth. Some therefore were of opinion, that by fraud and under a Colour it had been agreed on between Juſtinian and Theodora, that the one ſhould adhere to the Catholicks, the other to the Acephali. In French we ſhould term it, Par Politique. Valeſ.

[c] Ἡμεδαπές. By this word Chriſtophorſon underſtood The Acephali. For he has explained this place thus: Et ejus opinionis Homines, ſi Noſtrates eſſent, benevolè & amicè complexa eſt: Sin externi, præmiis benignè remunerata: And the men of that opinion, if they were our Country-men, ſhe entertained kindly and friendly: but if Forreigners, ſhe rewarded them liberally with gifts. But Niccephorus renders ἡμεδαπὲς, the Catholicks and the Orthodox; which I can by no means approve of. For, by ἡμεδαπὲς our Evagrius means The Orientalls. But, by ἀλλοδαπὲς Forreigners, he means The Weſterns, Valeſ.

CHAP. XI.

How Severus perverted Anthimus [Biſhop] of Conſtantinople, and Theodoſius [Biſhop] of Alexandria: which Prelates the Emperour ejected, and put others [into their Sees.]

Severus's Letters, both to Juſtinianus, and alſo to Theodora, are ſtill extant: from which it may be Collected, that Severus, after his relinquiſhing the Chair of Antioch, at firſt deferred his journey to the Imperial City; but, that afterwards he went thither. He writes alſo [in the ſame Letters,] that when he was come to Conſtantinople, he diſcourſed with Anthimus, and finding that he embraced the ſame Sentiments with himſelf, and [maintained the ſame] opinion in relation to God; he perſwaded him to relinquiſh his [Epiſcopal Chair.] He wrote alſo concerning the ſame matters to Theodoſius who was Biſhop of the City Alexandria: in which [Letters] he boaſts, that he had perſwaded Anthimus himſelf, as hath been ſaid, to give ſuch Opinions as theſe the preference before earthly Glory, and his own [Epiſcopal] Chair. Anthimus's Letters to Theodoſius concerning theſe matters are alſo extant, as likewiſe Theodoſius's to Severus and Anthimus; which Letters I omit, (leaving them to thoſe who are deſirous of reading them,) leaſt I ſhould heap together an immenſe multitude [of tranſactions] [a] within this preſent book. But, both theſe [* Prelates,] in regard they proceeded contrary to the Emperour's Commands, and would not embrace what had been agreed on at Chalcedon, were expelled from their own Sees. And [b] Zoilus ſucceeds in the Chair of Alexandria: but in that of the Imperial City, [c] Epiphanius: [d] ſo that, in all the Churches from hence forward, the Chalcedon Synod was publickly [e] preacht up and aſſerted, and no body dared to Anathematize it: but thoſe perſons who would not embrace theſe Sentiments, ſubſtituted. Who being ſoon ejected, Zoilus was put into his See, as Liberatus informs us in his Breviary, chap. 23; and likewiſe Victor Thunonenſis in his Chronicon, and Theophanes pag. 188. Liberatus atteſts, that this Paulus was Orthodox. But Victor Thunonenſis and Theophanes affirm him to have been an Heretick, and to have celebrated Dioſcorus's name in the Sacred Diptycks. For Victor's words are theſe: Baſilio V. C. Coſ. Alexandrinæ Eccleſiæ, &c; in the Conſulate of the moſt famous Baſilius, Theodoſius and Gaianus being baniſhed from the Alexandrian Church, inſtead of them Paulus the firſt of the Tabennefiotæ [is made Biſhop,] who celebrating the depoſition of his predeceſſour the Heretick Dioſcorus, is depoſed by the Paleſtine Councill, and Zoilus is ordained Biſhop in his room. But Theophanes writes thus concerning Paulus: Ὅτῳ πλὴν μνήμην σεβόμενοι τὸν ἀνίερον ποιήσας, &c; This perſon having celebrated the memory of the profane Severus, was ejected out of his Biſhoprick by the Emperours diſpleaſure. He had better have ſaid, of the profane Dioſcorus; for Severus, if I miſtake not, was as yet living, at ſuch time as Paulus was ejected out of his Biſhoprick, that is, on the year of Chriſt 537. I have made theſe remarkes for this reaſon, becauſe Baronius, in his Annalls, ſays nothing elſe concerning this Paulus, ſave what had been related by Liberatus. Valeſ.

[a] Τῷ παρόντι βιβλίῳ. I agree with the Learned, who have already mended this place thus; τῷ παρόντι βιβλίῳ, within this preſent book. Valeſ.

* To wit, Anthimus, and Theodoſius.

[b] In the place of Theodoſius Biſhop of Alexandria, Paulus was

[c] Evagrius miſtakes, and puts Epiphanius inſtead of Menas. For Anthimus had ſucceeded Epiphanius. After Anthimus was ejected, in his place Menas was ordained Biſhop of Conſtantinople by Pope Agapetus; after Beliſarius's Conſulate, on the year of Chriſt 536; as Marcellinus relates in his Chronicon. Valeſ.

[d] Concerning this Peace and Union of the Churches which hapned after the Ordination of Paulus Biſhop of Alexandria, Liberatus (in his Breviarie, chap. 23.) ſpeakes theſe words: Hoc ergo modo unitas facta eſt Eccleſiarum anno decimo imperii Glorioſi Juſtiniani Auguſti, On this manner therefore an Union was made of the Churches in the tenth year of the Empire of the Glorious Juſtinianus Auguſtus. For all the Patriarchs at that time embraced and admitted of the Chalcedon Synod; that is, in the year of Chriſt 537. To wit, the Biſhop of Rome, whoſe Apocriſiarius [or, Legate,] Pelagius was at Conſtantinople: Paulus Biſhop of Alexandria: Ephræmius of Antioch, and Petrus of Jeruſalem. Of which Prelates, Paulus, when at the beginning he had pretended to aſſert the true Faith, afterwards revolted to the Eutychian Hereſie, as I have remarked at note (b,) from Victor and Theophanes their Chronicles. Valeſ.

[e] Some perſon ſtudious of Eccleſiaſtick Antiquity, will perhaps make enquiry here, in what manner or order this Preaching [Publiſhing, or Aſſerting,] of the Chalcedon Synod was wont to be performed. I anſwer, that this preaching was uſually made in the Ambo, or Pulpit of the Church, by the Biſhop, or another perſon deputed by him, whilſt the Solemn [or, Publick] Prayers were performed. We have this information from the Letter, or Libell of the Orthodox Biſhops preſented at Conſtantinople to Pope Agapetus, which Libell is recorded in the Firſt Action of the Conſtantinopolitan Synod under Menas, where they ſpeak thus concerning the Emperour Juſtinian: Καὶ διὰ τοῦτο κεκελεύσθαι τὰς ἱερὰς καὶ ἁγίας πανταχοῦ συνόδους ἐν ταῖς ὁπουδήποτε γινομέναις θείαις μυσταγωγίαις μεγαλοφώνως ὑπὸ τῶν ἱερῶν κηρύκων κηρύττεσθαι, And on this account he made a Conſtitution that the four Sacred and Holy Synods ſhould be Preached by the divine Preachers in the divine Prayers whereſoever performed. The Old Tranſlatour renders theſe words thus: & propter hoc Statuit quatuor Sanctas Synodos in divinis & ſacris initiationibus, a ſacris prædicatoribus prædicari, And on this account he ordered, that the four Holy Synods ſhould be Preach't by the Sacred Preachers, in the divine and Sacred Initiations. This Tranſlatour thought, that μυσταγωγία was taken in this place for Initiation, or Baptiſm, as it is wont uſually to be taken. But at this place, θεία μυσταγωγία is taken for The Publick Prayers, and has the ſame import with θεία λειτουργία, The Divine Liturgie. Indeed, the Chalcedon-Synod was firſt Preach't [or, Aſſerted] in the Publick Prayers at Conſtantinople, in the Reign of Juſtinus Senior, as may be ſeen in the Fifth Action of the Conſtantinopolitane Synod under Menas, pag. 725, &c. Edit. Colon. But the Studious of Eccleſiaſtick Antiquity muſt be cautioned, that they ſuffer not themſelves to be led into an errour by the Latine Tranſlatour, who writes that this publication was made after the prayers were ended. When as nevertheleſs, the Greek Text there has a far different import; the words whereof are theſe: ΧΤ πλὴν παρελθοῦσιν κυριακὴν τε καὶ δευτέραν, λειτουργίας ὁπωσοῦν ἐν τῇ ἁγίᾳ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐκκλησίᾳ, &c: when Sunday and Munday come, the Liturgie being to be performed [or, celebrated,] in the Holy Church of God. The ſame errour is committed by the Tranſlatour, at pag. 733; where the Greek runs thus: καὶ μετὰ τὸ ἀνάγνωσιν τοῦ ἁγίου εὐαγγελίου, ὡς ἔθος τῆς θείας λειτουργίας ὁπωσοῦν καὶ τῶν θυρῶν κλεισθεισῶν, καὶ τοῦ ἁγίου μακαρισμοῦ ΧΤ τὸ σύμβολον λεχθέντος, &c. which words are to be rendred thus: And after the reading of the Holy Goſpell, when the Divine Liturgie, as uſually, is to be celebrated, and the doors are ſhut, and the Holy Creed, according to Cuſtome, read, &c. Which paſſages the ſtudious Reader may peruſe there, if he has a mind to underſtand the whole order [or faſhion,] wherein whereIn the Four Oecumenicall Synods were Preach't [or proclaimed,] and read in the Sacred Diptycks. Valef.

[f] He means Juſtinian's fourty ſecond Novell, which is alſo recorded in the Fifth Action of the Conſtantinopolitan Synod under Menas. In the Edition of Henry Stephens, who publiſht Juſtinian's Novells in Greek, this Conſtitution is indeed ſaid to have been dated on the ſeventeenth of the Calends of Auguſt, in the Conſulate of the moſt famous Beliſarius. But, in the Edition of the Conſtantinopolitane Councill under Menas, 'tis ſaid to be dated on the eighth of the Ides of Auguſt, after the Conſulate of the moſt famous Beliſarius; which is doubtleſs truer. For, in regard Juſtinian promulged that Conſtitution againſt Anthimus and Severus, after the ſentence of the Conſtantinopolitan Synod pronounc't againſt thoſe Prelates, (as the Emperour himſelf atteſts in the Preface of that Conſtitution:) and whereas the Conſtantinopolitan Synod pronounced a Sentence of Condemnation againſt the foreſaid Anthimus and Severus on the twelfth of the Calends of June, after Beliſarius's Conſulate: it is altogether neceſſary, that that Conſtitution of Juſtinian's ſhould have been promulged on the year after Beliſarius's Conſulate. Valeſ.

were by innumerable ways compelled to give their conſent thereto. A [f] Conſtitution therefore was written by Juſtinianus, wherein he hath Anathematized Severus and Anthimus with others, and has made obnoxious to moſt ſore puniſhments thoſe who aſſert their Opinions. From that time therefore, nothing of diſſention remained in the Churches over the whole world: but the Patriarchs of each Diœceſis agreed one with another, and the Biſhops of the Cities followed their own [g] Exarchs: and the Four Synods were Preach't up in the Churches; the Firſt whereof was that at Nicæa, then, that at Conſtantinople, the Third [was] the Former Synod at Epheſus, and the Fourth that at Chalcedon. Moreover, there was a Fifth Synod convened by the Order of Juſtinianus: concerning which I ſhall ſpeak what is fit and accommodate in its due place. In the interim, I will interweave into this preſent Hiſtory thoſe affairs which were tranſacted one after the other in theſe very times, and which deſerved to be recorded.

[g] Exarchs at this place are the Primates, or Patriarchs of each Diœceſis, as Evagrius has ſaid a little before: in the ſame manner as Jacobus Syrmondus has explained it in the Second Book of his Propempticon, Chap. 5, where he diſcourſes excellently and moſt Learnedly concerning Exarchs. To whoſe exact diligence there remains nothing to be added by us. Nor has Chriſtophorſon done ill in rendring Ἐξάρχους here, Arch-Biſhops. For Primates were heretofore termed Arch-Biſhops, as Iſidorus informs us in the Seventh Book of his Origines, in theſe words: Ordo Epiſcoporum quadripartitus eſt, &c; The order of Biſhops is divided into four parts, into Patriarchs, Arch-Biſhops, Metropolitanes, and Biſhops. A Patriarch in the Greek tongue imports the higheſt Father, becauſe he holds the firſt, that is, the Apoſtolick place: As the Roman, the Antiochian, the Alexandrian. Arch-Biſhop in Greek is termed the higheſt of Biſhops. For he holds the Apoſtolick place, and preſides as well over Metropolitanes, as Biſhops. Valeſ.

CHAP. XII.

Out of the Hiſtory of Procopius Cæſarienſis, concerning Cavades King of the Perſians, and his Son Choſröes.

PRocopius the Rhetorician has written the affairs tranſacted by Beliſarius: [and he declares,] that Cavades King of the Perſians, deſirous to inveſt Choſröes being the younger of his other Sons, with the Kingdom, [a] conſidered how he might procure his Son Choſröes to be adopted by the Emperour of the Romans; to the end that by this means the Kingdom might be moſt firmly ſecured to him. In regard therefore * he miſt of this his deſign; by the inducement of Proclus who ſate Quæſtor to [the Emperour] Juſtinian, the Feud againſt the Romans was increaſed. Further, the ſame Procopius with much exquiſiteneſs and great elegance hath ſet forth the Actions of Beliſarius Maſter of the Eaſtern Milice, at ſuch time as the Romans and Perſians were at War one with another. He relates the firſt Victory therefore of the Romans about the places Daras and Niſibis, when Beliſarius and Hermogenes commanded the Roman Army. To which he ſubjoyns alſo what hapned in the Country of the Armenians, and with how great [miſchiefs] Alamundarus Commander of thoſe Barbarians [termed] * Scenitæ, infeſted the Roman Provinces. Which Alamundarus took Timoſtratus, Brother to Ruſinus, alive, together with the Souldiers † under his Command; and afterwards delivered him up [when Ranſomed] with a vaſt ſum of money.

[a] Βέλεται ὥστε. The conjecture of Learned men diſpleaſes me; who (inſtead of βέλεται, deſires,) have mended it thus, Βεβούλευται ὥστε, conſulted how &c. Nicephorus (book 17. chap. 10,) inſtead of theſe two words uſes this, διενοεῖτο, thought, or, caſt in his mind: which pleaſes me beſt. Valeſ.

* Cavades.

* Or, Who dwelt in Tents: He means the Saracens.

† Or, About him.

CHAP. XIII.

Concerning Alamundarus and Azarethus; and concerning that Sedition at Conſtantinople, which had the name Nica given it.

[THe ſame Authour] * moſt paſſionately deſcribes the Incurſion of the fore mentioned Alamundarus and Azarethus into the † Roman Pale; and how Beliſarius, forced thereto by his own Army, made an attaque upon thoſe Barbarians in their return to their own Country, near the Banks of The Euphrates, the Feſtivall of Eaſter then approaching; and how the Roman Army was ruined, by their refuſing to obey the advices of Beliſarius: and laſtly, how Ruſinus and Hermogenes made that Peace with the Perſians called * The Interminate Peace. To which † he ſubjoyns the popular Sedition that hapned at Byzantium, whereto The || Word of the people gave a name. For they gave it the Appellation of Nica, [becauſe] the populacy being aſſembled together had given one another this † Word, in order to their diſtinguiſhing one another. In that [Sedition,] Hypatius and Pompeius were by the populacy forced to ſet up for Tyrants. But the Heads of them both by Juſtinian's Command were cut off by the Souldiers, and drowned in the Sea; the people having been ſoon quelled. Moreover, Procopius affirms, that Thirty thouſand men periſhed * in this Tumult.

* Or, With a Vehemency of affection.

† Or, Land of the Romans.

* Or, Endleſs, or, boundleſs.

† Procopius.

|| Or, Watch-word.

† Or, Watch-word.

* Ἐν τῷ πόνῳ τούτῳ, in this miſchief, or, harm.

CHAP. XIV.

Concerning * Hunericus King of the Vandalls, and concerning thoſe Chriſtians whoſe tongues were cut out by him.

* Or, Onerichus.

THe ſame Procopius, in his Book wherein he has related the Affairs of the Vandalls, gives a Narrative of † ſtrange things, and which deſerve for ever to be kept in memory by men; which matters I come now to relate. Hunericus who ſucceded Giſericus in the Kingdom, in regard he embraced [the Tenets] of Arius, behaved himſelf moſt barbarouſly towards thoſe Chriſtians in Africa; forcing them who aſſerted the Orthodox Opinions to [retract and] turn to the Opinion of the Arians. And if any refuſed to obey his Commands, he deſtroyed them by fire, and infinite other ſorts of death. But he ordered the tongues of ſome of them to be cut out. Procopius affirms, that he himſelf

† Or, The Greateſt.

[a] Τῇ Θείᾳ ἀγχιβαλεῖν. It muſt be μεγαλαβεῖν, as others before us have already obſerved. Further, concerning theſe African Confeſſours (whoſe tongues Hunericus King of the Vandalls had ſelf [a] ſaw theſe perſons when they were at Conſtantinople, to which City they had fled; and that he conferred with them [and heard them] ſpeak in ſuch a manner as if they had ſuffered no ſuch thing: and [he ſays,] that their tongues indeed were cut out from the very root: but, that they had an articulate voice, and ſpake diſtinctly: [which thing was] a wonder new and unuſuall. The Conſtitution of * Juſtinian mentions theſe perſons alſo. Two of whom Lapſed, as the ſame Procopius relates. For in regard they would † converſe with women, they were deprived of their voice, and the grace of Martyrdom continued not any longer with them.

* In the Greek Text here, and in Robert Stephens's Edit. 'tis Juſtinus: See note (a) in this chapter.

† Or, Have to do with.

commanded to be cut out, and who afterwards deſiſted not from ſpeaking though their tongues were cut out,) Marcellinus Comes ſpeaks in his Chronicon, at the Conſulate of Theodoricus and Venantius; where he alſo atteſts that ſome of them were ſeen by him. Victor Thunonenſis records the ſame in his Chronicon, at Zeno Auguſtus's third Conſulate. And Victor Vitenſis in his book De Perſecutione Vandalorum; and laſtly the Emperour Juſtinian in his Firſt Law de Officio Præfecti Prætorio Africæ. Which Conſtitution of Juſtinian's our Evagrius quotes a little lower in this chapter; although in the Greek Text the name of Juſtinus is erroneouſly written inſtead of Juſtinianus. See more in Baronius, at the year of Chriſt 484. Valeſ.

CHAP. XV.

Concerning Cabaones the Moor.

[a] Ἀναδέδει, produces. I had rather make it, ἀναδέδωκε, relates: as Evagrius expreſſes himſelf at the beginning of the next chapter. Valeſ.

MOreover, [Procopius] [a] relates another admirable paſſage, which was wonderfully effected by God [our] Saviour, amongſt men who were ſtrangers indeed to our Religion, but who behaved themſelves piouſly and holily at that time. He ſays, that Cabaones was King of thoſe Moors about Tripoly. This Cabaones, ſays he, (for I think fit to make uſe of Procopius's own words, who has elegantly related theſe matters, as well as others;) Having received information, that the Vandalls would undertake an Expedition againſt him, behaved himſelf in this manner. In the firſt place he ordered his Subjects, to abſtain from all manner of injuſtice, and * from dainty and delicious diſhes, but moſt eſpecially from the † company of women. Then, he pitcht two Camps, in the one he himſelf Encamped, together with all the men: but within the other he ſhut up the women; and threatned he would inflict a puniſhment of death upon any one that ſhould go into the womens Entrenchment. After this, he ſent || Spies to Carthage, to whom he gave theſe Orders: that if the Vandalls, when on their expedition, ſhould * defile any Oratory † wherein the Chriſtians worſhipped, they ſhould make an Inſpection into what was done. But, when the Vandalls were removed from that place, [he enjoyned them] to do all things that were the quite contrary, to that Church out of † which the Vandalls had made their Removall, and were gone. 'Tis reported that || he ſaid this alſo, that he was indeed ignorant of that God whom the Chriſtians worſhipped: but 'tis probable, ſays he, if he be a ſtrong and powerfull [God,] as he is ſaid to be, that he will be revenged on thoſe who injure [his Deity,] and will defend his worſhippers. The Spies therefore, when they were arrived at Carthage, continued there, and * veiwed the preparation of the Vandalls. But when their Army had begun their Expedition towards Tripoly, † they put themſelves into a mean garb, and followed them. The Vandalls on the very firſt day [of their march] made Stables of the Chriſtians Oratories, into which they brought their Horſes, and their other Beaſts; omitting the performing no ſort of Contumely whatever: alſo they themſelves practiſed * their uſuall unrulineſs, cuff't thoſe Chriſtian || Miniſters whom they could take, tore their backs with many ſtripes, and commanded them to wait on them. But, Cabaones's Spies, as ſoon as ever the Vandalls had removed from thoſe places, performed what they had been ordered to do. For they cleanſed the Churches immediately, with great care carried away the dung and whatever elſe had been irreligiouſly put therein, lighted all the Candles, paid the higheſt Reverence imaginable to the * Miniſters, and were indulgent to them in all other inſtances of kindneſs and beneficence. Then, they diſtributed money amongſt the indigent, who ſate about thoſe ſacred Houſes; in this manner they followed the Army of the Vandalls. And the Vandalls from this very time throughout their whole Expedition committed ſuch impious facts as theſe: but the Spies made it their buſineſs to apply remedies thereto. But when the Vandalls drew near [towards the Moors] the Spies haſtned and told Cabaones, as well what the Vandalls, as what they themſelves had done to the Churches of the Chriſtians, and [informed him] that the Enemy approacht. Cabaones hearing this, put his Army into a poſture fit to ingage. Moſt of the Vandalls, as 'tis ſaid, were deſtroyed: many of them were taken by the Moors, and very few of that Army returned to their own homes. This overthrow Thraſamundus ſuffered from the Moors: and not long after this he ended his life, when he had Reigned ſeven and twenty years over the Vandalls.

* Or, From food which brought nouriſhment.

† Or, Copulation with.

|| Or, Scouts.

* Or, Be injurious to.

† Or, Which.

|| Cabaones.

* Or, Beheld.

† The Scouts, or, Spies.

* Or, Their own Intemperance.

|| Or, Prieſts.

* Or, Prieſts.

CHAP. XVI.

Concerning Beliſarius's Expedition againſt the Vandalls, and their totall overthrow.

THe ſame Procopius relates, that Juſtinian (in compaſſion to thoſe Chriſtians who ſuffered grievouſly there,) declared [he would undertake] an Expedition [into Africa;] but by the ſuggeſtions of Johannes the Præfectus Prætorio, he was diverted from that deſign. Yet, he was afterwards admoniſhed in a [a] Dream, not to deſiſt from that Invaſion.

[a] Concerning this Viſion which appeared to Juſtinian in his ſleep, Victor Thunonenſis writes thus: Juſtiniano Aug. IV. Coſ. Juſtinianus Imp. Viſitatione Lætj; &c; Juſtinianus Auguſtus being the fourth time Conſul. The Emperour Juſtinianus, by a Viſitation of Lætus the Biſhop who was made a Martyr by Hunericus King of the Vandalls, ſends an Army into Africk againſt the Vandalls, under the Command of Beliſarius Maſter of the Militia. Victor Vitenſis has made mention of this Lætus the Biſhop, in his firſt book De Perſecutione Vandalorum. Further, concerning this Expedition of Juſtinian into Africk againſt the Vandalls, Marcellinus Comes ſpeaks alſo in his Chronicon, and places it on the Fourth Conſulate of the ſame Juſtinianus, that is on the year of Chriſt 534. Marius Aventicenſis relates the ſame in his Chronicon. But Baronius in his Annalls reproves Marcellinus, and maintains that that Expedition was undertaken by Juſtinianus in his Third Conſulate, on the year of Chriſt 533. Juſtinian's Conſtitution de Confirmatione Digeſtorum (which is prefixt before the work of the Pandects,) confirms Baronius's opinion. But, by Baronius's favour, I think the opinion of Marcellinus and Victor to be truer. Nor do I doubt, but a fault has crept into Juſtinian's Conſtitution, (on the authority whereof Baronius relies,) and that the Third Conſulate of the Emperour Juſtinian has been written by Tranſcribers of Books inſtead of The Fourth. And this Juſtinian himſelf does ſo manifeſtly ſhew in the foreſaid Conſtitution, that I admire it was not perceived by Baronius. For thus Juſtinian ſpeaks: Leges autem noſtras, quas in his Codicibus, id eſt, Inſtitutionum & Digeſtorum poſuimus, posuimus, &c; But our Laws which we have put in these Codes, that is, of the Institutions and Digests, [shall] obtain their strength from [our] third most happy Consulate of the present twelfth Indiction, on the third of the Calends of January, and *shall be of force for ever. For on the twelfth Indiction Justinian bore his Fourth Consulate, as Marcellinus Comes attests. But, some one will object, that the twelfth Indiction was begun from the Calends of September, in Justinians Third Consulate. Therefore, we must have recourse to another Argument, to prove what I have said above; viz. that the Vandalick Expedition was begun on Justinians Fourth Consulate, and that that Constitution whereon Baronius's opinion is founded, was written in Justinians Fourth Consulate. Now, this may be proved thus. In the end of the foresaid Constitution, as well in the Greek as Latine, Justinian makes mention of a Præfectus Prætorio of Africa. But, a Præfectus Prætorio of Africa was first created by Justinian in his Fourth Consulate, a little before the Calends of the September of the thirteenth Indiction, as the First Law of the Code de Præfecto Prætorio Africæ informs us. For Justinian speaks in this manner: Hæc igitur Magnitudo tua cognoscens, ex Calendis Septembribus futuræ decimæ tertiæ Indictionis effectui mancipari procuret. Vales.

For [he was told,] that in case he would give the Christians assistance, he should ruine * the Kingdom of the Vandalls. Incouraged by this Dream, [b] having passed the seventh year of his Reign, he sends Belisarius to the Carthaginian War, about the Summer Solstice: after the * Prætorian Ship had been brought to that Shore which is before the Pallace, and Epiphanius Bishop of the [Imperial] City had made such Prayers as were fit and agreeable, and had put aboard the Prætorian Ship some of those Souldiers, whom he had baptized a little before. The same Authour likewise has given a Narrative of some passages concerning The Martyr Cyprianus, which deserve [to be inserted into this] History: his expres words are these. All the Carthaginians have an high veneration for that holy person Cyprianus, and [in honour] of him have erected a most magnificent Church * without that City, near the Sea-Shore, and besides other Religious respects [by them paid to him,] they also celebrate an Anniversary Festivall, which they term Cypriana; and hence the Mariners are wont to call that Storm (which I have even now mentioned,) by the same name with this Festivall, because it usually rages at that very time, whereon the Africans are accustomed perpetually to celebrate that Festivall. In the Reign of Hunericus, the Vandalls took this Church from the Christians by force, drove the Priests out thence with great Ignominy, and afterwards * altered it, in regard it was come into the possession of the Arians. The Africans being vexed and highly displeased on account hereof, they say that Cyprianus appeared and visited [them] frequently in [their] sleep, [and said to some of them,] that the Christians ought in no wise to be sollicitous about him: for, that he himself in process of time would be his own Revenger. Which prediction was compleated in the Times of Belisarius; when Carthage by the Commander Belisarius was reduced to a Subjection to the Romans, [c] after the Ninty fifth year of its being lost: when also the Vandalls were totally vanquished, the Heresie of the Arians was presently driven out of Africk, and the Christians recovered their own Churches, according to the Martyr Cyprianus's prediction.

* Or, Affairs.

[b] Ἕβδομον τῆς βασιλείας ἐνιαυτὸν ἔτρεφε. Procopius's words out of the First Book of his Vandalicks pag. 107, are these: ἕβδομον ἤδη ἔτος τῷ αὐτοκράτορι ἄρχειν ἔχων Ἰουστινιανός, &c. Which words import, that his seventh year was already past. Now, if we should say that the Vandalick Expedition was undertaken in Justinians third Consulate, as Justinians words do wholly seem to perswade; (when, about the Summer Solstice, the Roman Navy came up to the Byzantine Port, and soon after set Sail from thence (as Procopius relates,) that is about the end of the month June:) Justinian was then in the seventh year and third month of his Empire. For the first day of Justinians Reign is brought from the Calends of April. But, if we should place the Vandalick Expedition on Justinians Fourth Consulate, it will be the eighth year of his Empire; and not the seventh, as Procopius writes: wherefore Baronius's opinion is truer; which is confirmed both by the Emperour Justinians authority, and also by the testimony of Procopius. Vales.

* Or, Admirall Ship.

* Or, Before.

* Reformed, or, repaired.

[c] The Emperour Justinian agrees; whose words in the First Law of the Code De Officio Præfecti Prætorio Africæ, are these: Ut Africa per nos tam brevi tempore reciperet Libertatem, ante nonaginta quinque annos a Vandalis captivata; that Africk should by Us receive its Liberty in so short a time, having been captivated by the Vandalls ninty five years before. Marcellinus Comes in his Chronicon relates, that Carthage was taken by the Romans on the ninty sixth year of its being lost. But Victor Thunonensis affirms that Africk was recovered by the Romans under the Command of Belisarius, on the ninty seventh year of the Vandalls entrance into it. Vales.

CHAP. XVII.

Concerning the Spoyls which were brought out of Africa.

THe same Procopius hath recorded this passage. When Belisarius (says he) having vanquished the Vandalls, was returned to Constantinople, bringing along with him the Spoyls, the Prisoners of War, and Gelimeres himself King of the Vandalls; a Triumph was granted him, [at which time] he lead through the Cirque all things that were worthy of admiration. Amongst which there was a vast Treasure; for Gizerichus had heretofore plundered the Pallace at Rome, (as has before been related by me;) at such time as Eudoxia Wife to Valentinian Emperour of the Western Romans, (having both lost her Husband by Maximus's means, and also been injured as to her Chastity,) had sent for Gizerichus, promising she would betray the City to him. At which time [Gizerichus] burnt Rome, and carried away Eudoxia with her two Daughters into the Country of the Vandalls. When also, together with other Treasures, he made plunder of what ever Titus Son to Vespasian had brought to Rome, after his Conquest of Jerusalem; to wit, Solomon's Gifts, which he had dedicated to God. Which Gifts Justinian sent to Jerusalem again, in honour to Christ our God; whereby he exhibited a due honour to God, to whom they had been before dedicated. Procopius says also, that Gelimeres, lying then prostrate on the ground in the Cirque, over against the Emperours Throne whereon Justinian sate and beheld what was done, uttered this divine Oracle in his own Country Language, Vanity of Vanities, all is Vanity.

CHAP. XVIII.

Concerning those Phœnicians who fled from the face of Jesus the Son of Nave.

MOreover, [the same Procopius] relates another thing, never mentioned by any Authour before him, which is most admirable, * and transcends almost all belief. He relates therefore, that The Moors, a Nation of the Africans, removed out of Palestine, and took up their habitation in Africa: and, that they are those [people] whom the sacred Scriptures do mention [by the names of] Gergeshites and Jebusites, and those other Nations who were vanquished by Jesus the Son of Nave. And he supposes this thing to be || unquestionably true, from a certain Inscription cut in Phœnician Letters, which he affirms that he himself read. This [Inscription he says,] is to be seen near a Fountain, where two Columns of white Marble are erected, on which theſe words are cut: WE ARE THEY WHO FLIE FROM THE FACE OF THAT THIEF JESUS THE SON OF NAVE. And this was the concluſion of theſe tranſactions; Africa was again reduced to a ſubjection to the Romans, and paid in the Annuall Tributes, as it had uſually done before. 'Tis moreover reported, that Juſtinian repaired an Hundred and fifty Cities in Africa, (ſome whereof were wholly ruined, and others, as to their greateſt part) and, that he made them moſt tranſcendently more magnificent than they had been before, [beautifying them] with an eximious ſplendidneſs, with Ornaments, and with Structures as well private as publick; with the Incloſures of walls alſo, and with other vaſt Edifices, wherewith Cities are both uſually adorned, and alſo [wherein] the Deity is appeaſed; with plenty of waters likewiſe, as well for uſe, as ornament; ſome of which waters were firſt brought into them by him, the Cities having not had them before; and others he reduced to their ancient courſe and order.

* Or, And transcends the Hyperbole [excess, or, superlativeness.] of every wonder.

|| Or, Every way.

CHAP. XIX.

Concerning * Theodoricus the Goth and what hapned at Rome under him till the times of Juſtinian, and, that Rome was again reduced to a Subjection to the Romans, after Vitiges had fled out of that City.

* Or, Theuderichus.

I come now to declare the affairs which were tranſacted in Italy, and theſe Procopius the Rhetorician has with great accuracy ralated till his own times. After Theodoricus, as it has * already been declared by me, had taken Rome, (having wholly vanquiſhed Odoacer who tyrannized therein;) and had Governed the Roman Empire as long as he lived; Amalaſuntha, who had been his Wife, undertook the † Tutelage of || Atalarichus Son to them both, and Governed the Empire; ſhe * was a woman of a Maſculine Spirit, and in this manner ſhe managed affairs. This woman firſt incited Juſtinian to a deſire of a Gothick War, having ſent Embaſſadours to him, in regard a Plot was framed againſt her. Further, when Atalarichus had ended his life, which he did whilſt very young, * Theodatus kinſman to Theodoricus takes upon himſelf the adminiſtration of the Weſtern Empire. Who, when Juſtinian had ſent Beliſarius into the Weſtern parts, relinquiſhed his Government; (for being a perſon addicted rather to Books and Study, he was wholly unexperienced in Military affairs;) Vitiges a moſt warlike perſon being in the interim Commander in chief of the Weſtern Forces. From the Hiſtory of the ſame Procopius we may extract this alſo, that when Beliſarius arrived in Italy, Vitiges left Rome; and, that Beliſarius with his Army about him made his approach to Rome. Whom the Romans received moſt willingly, and opened their Gates to him; that having been chiefly effected by Silverius then Pontif of that City; who on this account had ſent Fidelis a perſon that had been Aſſeſſour to Atalarichus. Thus the City was delivered up to Beliſarius without an Engagement: and Rome was again brought to a ſubjection to the Romans, after [the ſpace of] Sixty years, on the ninth of the month Apellæus which the Latines term December, when Juſtinian was in the eleventh year of his Empire. The ſame Procopius relates alſo, that when the Goths beſieged Rome, Beliſarius having a ſuſpicion that Silverius Pontif of that City would betray it, † condemned him to a Deportation into Achaia; and made Vigilius Pontif in his ſtead.

* Book 3. Chap. 27.

† Gardianſhip.

|| Athalaricus.

* Or, She inclined rather to a maſculine gravity.

* Or, Theudatus.

† Or, Carried him away into Greece.

CHAP. XX.

How thoſe [people] termed The Eruli turned Chriſtians in the times of Juſtinian.

ABout theſe very times, as the ſame Procopius relates, The [a] Eruli (who long before had paſſed the River Danube, at ſuch time as Anaſtaſius Governed the Roman Empire;) having been kindly received by Juſtinian who enriched them with great wealth, by a generall conſent turned all Chriſtians, and changed their Priſtine way of living for a more civilized and quieter courſe of life.

[a] Concerning the converſion of theſe people to the Faith of Chriſt, Procopius ſpeaks in book 1. of his Gothicks, and Theophanes in his Chronicon, pag. 149. Theſe people, in regard they lived near the Lake Mæotis, in Fenny places, were from thence firſt termed Eluri. For ἕλη in Greek ſignifies Fens, or Fenniſh places. Jordanes in his book de Rebus Geticis, writes thus concerning The Heruli: Nam prædicta Gens, Ablabio Hiſtorico referente, &c; For the foreſaid Nation, as Ablabius the Hiſtorian relates, dwelling near the Lakes of Mæotis, in Fenniſh places, which the Greeks term Ele, were named Eluri. The Author of the Etymologicon ſays the ſame in the word ἕλος. Helmoldus in his Chronicon of the Slavi, chap. 2, affirms that theſe Heruli were a Slavick Nation, who dwelt between Albia and Odora, and reach't a great way out to the South in a long Bay; who alſo, as he writes, were by another name termed Heveldi. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXI.

That Beliſarius recovered [the City] Rome, which had been again taken by the Goths.

AFter this, Procopius ſets forth Beliſarius's Return to Conſtantinople, and how he carried Vitiges along with him, together with the Spoyls taken out of Rome; alſo, Totila's ſeizure of the Roman Empire, and how Rome was again reduced under the Goths Dominion; and, that Beliſarius arriving the ſecond time in Italy, recovered Rome again. And how, when the Perſian War broke out, Beliſarius was again ſent for to Conſtantinople by the Emperour.

CHAP. XXII.

That the Abaſgi turned Chriſtians alſo in thoſe times.

THe ſame [Writer] Relates, that about theſe very times the Abaſgi became more civilized, and embraced the Chriſtian Religion; and, that the Emperour Juſtinian ſent one of the Eunuchs belonging to his Court, by deſcent an Abaſgian, his name Euphrata, amongſt the Abaſgians, to declare to them, that no one in that Nation ſhould in future have his Genitalls cut off with an Iron, nor, that a force ſhould be put upon Nature. For, out of theſe the Servants of the Imperial Bed-Chamber were for the moſt part choſen, whom they uſually term Eunuchs. Then alſo Juſtinian built a Church [in honour] of The Theotocos amongſt the Abaſgi, and conſtituted Prieſts amongſt them. And from thence forward [The Abaſgi] learned

* Or, The Opinions. ned * The Dogmata of the Christians with the greateſt accuracy imaginable.

CHAP. XXIII.

That the Inhabitants of Tanais alſo at that time embraced the Chriſtian Religion; and concerning the Earthquakes which hapned in Greece and Achaia.

IT is related by the ſame Writer, that the Inhabitants of Tanais (thoſe who dwell in this Region, term that Stream [which runs] out of the Lake Mæotis, untill [it falls] into the Euxine Sea, Tanais;) earneſtly entreated Juſtinian to ſend a Biſhop to them; and, that Juſtinian [a] brought their Petition to effect, and moſt willingly ſent a Prelate amongſt them. The ſame Authour with much elegancy records, that in the times of Juſtinian, the Goths made an irruption out of Mæotis into the * Roman Pale; [he declares] alſo, that there hapned dreadfull Earthquakes in Greece, Bœotia, and Achaia, and, that the places about The Criſæan Bay were ſhaken, and, that innumerable other Towns and Cities were totally ruined. That there hapned likewiſe Chaſms of the Earth in many places: and, that in ſome places the Ground cloſed and came together again: but, that in others, [thoſe Chaſms] continued.

[a] Ἐπιμελῶς τε τῶν δήπουθεν. I doubt not but Evagrius wrote ὁπτελῶς τε τῶν δήπουθεν ἐυστοχῶν ἀπερξάσθαι, and that Juſtinian brought their petition to effect. For thus Nicephorus words it, book 17, chap. 13. Valeſ.

* Or, Land of the Romans.

CHAP. XXIV.

Concerning Narſes a Maſter of the Milice, and his Piety.

* Procopius. † Or, Command of the Army.

HE relates likewiſe Narſes's † Expedition, who was ſent into Italy by Juſtinian; and in what manner he Conquered Totila, and after him Teia; and how Rome was taken the Fifth time. Further, thoſe perſons who had an intimacy with Narſes do report, || that he appeaſed the Deity with ſupplications and other [offices of] Piety [in ſuch a manner,] paying ſo due a veneration thereto, that even The Virgin and Theotocos her ſelf manifeſtly declared to him the time when he ought to Engage: and that he ſhould not give the Onſet, before he had received the Signall from † thence. Many other actions, which deſerve great commendation, were performed by Narſes; for he vanquiſhed Buſelinus and Sindvaldus, and reduced many [Regions,] as far as the Ocean, [to the Roman Empire.] Which [Actions] Agathias the Rhetorician has recorded, but as yet they are not come to our hands.

|| We have rendred this Clauſe, as far as the next full point, according as we found it pointed in Robert Stephens's Edition; the punctation in Valeſius's Edition (as the Learned Reader will eaſily obſerve,) puts a ſenſe upon theſe words far different from that we have expreſſed in our Verſion.

† Ἐκεῖθεν; that is, Cœlitus, from Heaven, as Grynæus and Curterius have rendred it. Valeſius tranſlates it, ab illâ, from her, to wit, The Virgin Mary.

CHAP. XXV.

That Choſroes, Stimulated with Envy at the proſperous ſucceſſes of Juſtinian, broke out into a War againſt the Romans, and ruined many Roman Cities, amongſt which [he deſtroyed] Antioch The Great alſo.

THe ſame Procopius has related theſe matters alſo, how Choſroes, after he had received information that affairs both in Africa and Italy had ſucceeded ſo fortunately to the Roman Empire, was exceſſively inflamed with envy: and objected ſome things againſt the Roman Empire, affirming that the League was violated [by them,] and that they had broken the Peace which had been agreed on [between the two Empires.] And, that in the firſt place Juſtinian diſpatch't away Embaſſadours to Choſroes, who might perſwade him not to break that Interminate Peace [which had been made] between them, nor to violate the Articles of agreement, but rather that the matters in controverſie might be inquired into, and compoſed in an amicable manner. But he ſays, that Choſroes, corroded by envy which ſtimulated him within, would accept of none of thoſe rationall propoſalls; but with a numerous Army made an Invaſion into the Roman Territories, in the Thirteenth year of Juſtinian's Governing the Roman Empire. [The ſame Procopius] relates likewiſe, how Choſroes laid Siege to and deſtroyed * Sura a City ſcituate on the Banks of The Euphrates, [with the Inhabitants whereof] he ſeemingly made ſome Articles of agreement, but dealt with them far otherwiſe, [perpetrating] all the moſt Impious and Nefarious Facts [amongſt them,] having not in the leaſt heeded the Articles of agreement; and was made Maſter of that City by Treachery rather than his * Arms. Alſo, how he burnt Berœa; and after that [made] an Attack upon Antioch, Ephræmius being then Biſhop of that City, who had left it, [a] in regard nothing of what he did, ſucceeded according to his deſign. Which [Prelate] is reported to have preſerved the Church and all [the Edifices] about it, having adorned [the Church] with ſacred Gifts, [on this deſign,] that they might be the price of its Redemption. Moreover, [the ſame Writer] alſo gives a moſt patheticall and lively deſcription of the Siege of Antioch, laid to it by Choſroes, and how Choſroes [becoming maſter of it] ruined and deſtroyed all things with Fire and Sword. Alſo, how * he went to Seleucia a neighbouring City [to Antioch,] then to the Suburb Daphne; and after that to Apamea, Thomas then Governing the Chair of that Church, a perſon [admirable and] moſt powerfull both in words and deeds. This Prelate wiſely refuſed not to be a Spectatour, together with Choſroes, of † The Cirque-Sports in the Hippodrome, (though that was a thing contrary to the uſage of the Church;) [it being his deſire] by all imaginable ways to gratifie Choſroes, and

* Σεσῆνα.

* Or, War.

[a] Μηδενὸς αὐτῷ ἧσσον κατασκοπῶν φερίοντος. I have corrected this place from the Tellerian Manuſcript, and from Nicephorus, in which Authour 'tis written thus: Μηδενὸς αὐτῷ ἧσσον κατασκοπῶν φερίοντος, in regard nothing of what he did ſucceeded according to his deſign, or, deſire. See Procopius Book 2. Perſic. where he ſays, that Ephræmius the Biſhop was falſely accuſed for having a deſign to deliver up Antioch to the Perſians; and, that ſoon after he fled into Cilicia, being afraid of the Irruption of the Perſians. But concerning the Ornaments given by Ephræmius to the Church of the Antiochians, there is not a word extant in Procopius. Valeſ.

* Choſroes.

† Or, Equeſtrian Games.

to mitigate his mind. Whom Choſroes asked, whether he ſhould be willing to ſee him at his own City. And they ſay, that Thomas anſwered really and according to the true Sentiment of his own mind, that he would not willingly ſee Choſroes in his own City. Which anſwer, as 'tis reported, Choſroes wondred at, and deſervedly admired this man [for the love he bore] to Truth.

CHAP. XXVI.

Concerning the Miracle of the Pretious and Vivifick wood of the Croſs, which hapned at Apamia.

BUt, in regard I am fallen upon this relation, I will alſo declare a Miracle that hapned * there, which deſerves to be inſerted into our preſent Hiſtory. When the Inhabitants of Apamia were informed that Antioch had been burnt [by Choſroes,] they earneſtly beſought the forementioned Thomas, to bring forth and expoſe to view (though contrary to the uſuall cuſtome,) the Salutary and Vivifick wood of the Croſs, to the end they might have the laſt ſight of, and kiſs the only Salvation of men, and might take the †Viaticum of another life, the pretious Croſs being their Convoy to a better allotment. Which thing Thomas performed, and brought forth the Vivifick wood, having appointed ſome ſet days for its being expoſed to view, to the end that all the neighbourhood might come together thither, and enjoy the ſafety [ariſing] from thence. Together therefore with others, || my Parents alſo went thither, leading me along with them who then * went to [the School of] a Grammar maſter. Wherefore at ſuch time as we were vouchſafed to reverence and kiſs the pretious Croſs, Thomas lifting up both his hands, ſhewed the wood of the Croſs [which was] the abolition of the Old Curſe, and went all about the ſacred Church, as 'twas the uſage on ſolemn and ſet days of † veneration. But, as Thomas moved up and down, there followed him a vaſt flame of a ſhining, not of a burning fire, in ſo much that every place, where he ſtood to ſhew the pretious Croſs, ſeemed to be all on a flame. And this hapned not once, or twice, but oftner, whilſt the Biſhop went round all that place, and whilſt the people there aſſembled earneſtly entreated Thomas that that might be done. Which thing predicted that ſafety which hapned to the Apamenſians. A picture therefore was hung up at the Roof of the Church, which [a] by its repreſentation might declare theſe things to thoſe who know them not.

* At Apamia.

† Or, Voyage-proviſion.

|| Or, Thoſe who brought me to the Light.

* Or, Frequented an inferiour Schoolmaſter.

† Or, Adorations.

[a] Τῇ γεγραφῇ διασαφῆλλε σα. 'Tis doubtfull, what γεγραφὴ ſhould ſignifie here, whether a picture, and an image of that flame which had followed the wood of the Croſs; or, a Writing. Muſculus took it for a Writing, or, an Inſcription; as did alſo Chriſtophorſon, who renders it thus: Ob quam cauſam imago in teſtudine Sanctuarii ſtatuta fuit, quæ Inſcriptione in Baſi inciſâ, hoc miraculum illis qui ejuſdem ignari erant, commonſtravit; For which reaſon an image was ſet up in the Roof of the Sanctuary, which by an Inſcription cut upon its Baſis, might ſhow this Miracle to thoſe who were ignorant of it. But this Rendition is intollerable. For firſt, a Baſis is not a term properly uſed about a Painted Picture, but concerning a Statue only. Beſides, if the Image were in the Roof, where, I pray, was the Baſis ſet. My Sentiment is, that the Image [or, repreſentation] of this Miracle was Painted in the Arched Roof of the Church, whereon perhaps ſome Verſes were inſcribed, which might record this Miracle. Such like Inſcriptions are extant in Gruther's Theſaurus, and in Paulinus's Epiſtles. Valeſ.

Which [picture] was preſerved intire untill the incurſion of [b] Adaarmanes and the Perſians. At which time it was burnt, together with Gods holy Church and that whole City. And theſe things hapned thus. But Choſroes at his going away violated his Articles of agreement, (for he had agreed to ſome things then alſo;) and did the quite contrary; which [behaviour] was agreeable indeed to his unſtable and inconſtant humour, but does in no wiſe befit a man of ſenſe and reaſon, much leſs a King, * who has a value for his Articles of agreement.

[b] In Nicephorus and the Tellerian Manuſcript the reading is Ἀδδαρμάνε, Ardaarmanes. Concerning this Adaarmanes Captain of the Perſians, and his irruption into Syria, our Evagrius ſpeaks in his ſixth book. In Robert Stephens he is called Adearmanes. Valeſ.

* Or, Who makes an account of his &c.

CHAP. XXVII.

Concerning Choſroes's Expedition againſt Edeſſa.

THe ſame Procopius records what has been related by the Ancients concerning Edeſſa and Agbarus, and how Chriſt [a] wrote to Agbarus.

[a] Πεμψὶς ἀσσάριον ἀπέστειλε. I agree with Chriſtophorſon and Sr Henry Savill, who inſtead of ἀπέστειλε, ſent away, have mended it thus, ἐπέστειλε, wrote. Moreover, the words which immediately follow, (to wit, theſe, εἴτε καὶ ἐς ἑτέραν ἔφοδον, &c,) are corrupted alſo. In the Florentine Manuſcript 'tis thus worded, εἴτε καὶ ὡς ἐς ἑτέραν ἔφοδον, &c. But the place as yet is not without fault. I write thus therefore: εἴτε καὶ ὡς καθ' ἑτέραν ἔφοδον ἐς πολιορκίαν σφῶν ἐβεσιωῶν καθίστη ὁ χοσρόης, Further alſo, how in [or, at] another incurſion Choſroes reſolved upon a Siege of the Edeſſens. Valeſ.

Further alſo, how in another Incurſion Choſroes reſolved upon a Siege of the Edeſſens, ſuppoſing he ſhould * enervate what had been divulged by the Faithfull, [to wit,] that Edeſſa ſhould never be ſubdued by † an Enemy. Which thing is not indeed extant in that Letter ſent from Chriſt our God to Agbarus, [b] as may be gathered by the ſtudious from what has been related by Euſebius Pamphilus, who has inſerted that Letter word for word [into his || Hiſtory.] Nevertheleſs, 'tis both divulged and believed amongſt the Faithfull, [c] and the Event it ſelf declared the Truth, Faith bringing the Prediction to effect. For, after Choſroes had made an Attack againſt the City, and had ſeverall ways attempted to break into it, and had raiſed ſo vaſt a Rampire, that in heighth it ſurmounted the City-walls; and had made uſe of infinite other Engines; [after all this, I ſay] he retreated without effecting his deſign. But I will give a particular Narrative of what was done. Choſroes ordered the Forces he had about him, to bring together a vaſt quantity of wood of any ſort of Trees they could light on, in order to a Siege. This [wood] having no ſooner been ordered to be brought together than 'twas effected, he laid it round in the form of a circle, caſt Earth into the midſt of it, and advanced it directly towards the City. Building in this manner

* Or, prove falſe.

† Or, Enemies.

[b] Ὡς ἐσὶ πού φιλοπόνως ἐλεῖν. I had rather write, πῶς φιλοπόνοις, by the ſtudious. Valeſ.

|| Book 1. Chap. 13.

[c] Καὶ τὸ πέρας ἐδείξαλο. This whole place is corrupted, as 'tis apparent to the Readers. Sr Henry Savill at the margin of his Copy hath noted, that perhaps it ſhould be ἐδεείξαλο, demonſtrated, or, declared: which emendation Nicephorus confirms, in chap. 16, book 17. where he writes out this place of Evagrius thus; ἔδειξε δὲ καὶ τὸ ἔργον πῶς τῆς πίσεως ἐφάρμοσον, ὡς μάλισ' ἀληδὴ εἶναι καὶ σύμφωνον: that is, as Langus renders it, Res ipſa quoque prædictionis ejus fidem, quòd vera maximè ſit & ſibi ipſi conſentiens, confirmavit; the thing it ſelf alſo confirmed the authority [or, faith] of that prediction, that it might be very true and agreeable to it ſelf. My Sentiment therefore is, that this whole clauſe of Evagrius muſt be written thus: καὶ τὸ πέρας ἔδειξε τὸ ἀληδὲς, τῆς πίσεως ἐς ἔργον πῶ ἐφάρμοσιν ἀσασάσης, and the event it ſelf declared the Truth, Faith bringing the prediction to effect. Valeſ.

ner * by degrees upon the wood and on the earth, and making nearer approaches to the City, he raised it to so vast a height, and made it surmount the City-wall so far, that from an higher place he could throw darts against those who in defence of the City endangered themselves on the wall. The Besieged therefore, when they saw the Rampire (like a Mountain) coming near and approaching the City, and were in expectation that the Enemy would set foot into the City; very early in the morning attempted to work a Mine directly opposite to the Rampire which by the Romans is termed an [d] Aggesta; and put fire therein, to the end that, the wood being consumed by the flame, the Rampire of Earth might fall to the Ground. And that work was brought to perfection. But, after they had kindled the fire, * their project proved unsuccesfull, in regard the fire had not a passage, whereby the air being let in, it might † catch hold of the heap of wood. Being reduced therefore || to the greatest Non-plus imaginable, they bring forth [e] that Image framed by God, which the hands of men had not made; but Christ [our] God had sent it to Agbarus, in regard [Agbarus] desired to see him. Having carried this most holy Image therefore into the Mine which they had made, and † sprinkled it with water, they cast [some] of the same [water] upon the pile of fire and on the wood: and immediately (the Divine power giving assistance to their Faith who had done this,) what had before been impossible to them, was brought to effect. For the wood forthwith received the flame, and being in the twinkling of an eye reduced to coals, transmitted it to the wood which lay above, the fire preying all about upon all things. Now the Besieged, when they saw the smoak breaking out above, made use of this device. They brought forth little † Stone-bottles, and having stuft them with Brimstone, Tow, and other matter which would readily take fire, they threw them upon that termed The Aggesta: which Bottles, (the fire kindling within them by the force of their being thrown,) raised a smoak, and thereby effected this, [to wit,] that it was not perceived that a smoak broke out of the Rampire. For all persons who were ignorant hereof, supposed, that the smoak came out of the Bottles rather than from any other place. On the third day after this therefore, * the small Tongues of Fire appeared coming forth out of the earth, and then those of the Persians who fought † upon the Rampire, were sensible what imminent danger they were in. But Chosroes, as if he resolved to make a resistance against the Divine power, turned the Aquæducts which were before the City, upon the pile of fire, and attempted to extinguish it. But the fiery pile received the water as if it had been rather Oyle, or Brimstone, or some such matter as is † combustible, and was much more increased, till such time as it had destroyed the whole Rampire, and perfectly reduced the Aggesta to ashes. Then therefore Chosroes, disappointed of all his hopes, and being experimentally sensible, that he had gotten great disgrace by supposing he could vanquish that God worshipped by us; made an inglorious return into his own Territories.

* Or, By little and little.

[d] See Procopius (out of whom Evagrius borrowed this,) book 2. Persic. pag. 83. In what manner these Aggesta were built by the Romans, Apollodorus informs us incomparably well in his Mechanicks. Which Book, being lately done into Latine by me, by Gods assistance I will e're long publish, together with some other Writers of the same subject. Vales.

* Or, They mist of their design.

† Or, Embrace the matter.

|| Or, To the greatest difficulty, or, highest pitch of desperation.

[e] This place of Evagrius is cited in the Seventh Occumenicall Synod, pag. 613; and likewise by Barlaam in his book Contra Latinos. Further, concerning this Image not-made-with-hands, which Christ is said to have sent to Agbarus, see Greiser in his book De Imaginibus non Manufactis. But, it is to be noted, that no mention is made of this Image transmitted by Christ to King Agbarus, either by Eusebius in the First Book of his Ecclesiastick History, or by Procopius in his Siege of the City Edessa. For these Authours relate, that a Letter only was sent by Christ to Agbarus, by the Apostle Thaddæus. Vales.

† Or, Overwhelmed.

† Λαγυνίδας. In Robert Stephens's Edition 'tis λαγυνίδας. Lexicographers have no such word. I meet with the term λάγηνος, which signifies Lagenam a Flagon, or Stone-bottle.

* Αἱ γλωσσίδες τῶν πυρὸς.

† Or, From.

† Or, Wont to catch, or, nourish a flame

† Or, There was a conference on both sides about, &c.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Concerning the Miracle which was performed at Sergiopolis.

MOreover, I will relate another thing, which was done by [the same] Chosroes at the City Sergiopolis; in regard 'tis [a passage] worthy to be recorded, and in reality deserves to be consigned to eternall memory. For Chosroes came to this City also, and attempted to take it by a Siege. After therefore he had made an Attacque against its walls, † the Inhabitants came to a Parley with him about a preservation of the City. And it is agreed [at length on both sides,] that the sacred Treasure and Gifts [which had been dedicated to the Church] should be the Ransome of the City; amongst which [gifts] was that [a] Cross also which had been sent thither by Justinianus and Theodora. After these things had been brought to Chosroes, he asked the Priest and those Persians who had been sent with him [into the City on that account,] whether there were any thing remaining. Then a certain person of those not accustomed to speak the truth, returned answer to Chosroes, that there were other sacred Gifts of great value, which were concealed by the Citizens who were very few in number. Now, of [the sacred Treasure] which was brought out [of the City to Chosroes,] nothing of value had been left behind consisting either of Gold or Silver, but of another sort of matter more pretious, and which was wholly dedicated to God; to wit, the most holy Reliques of the Victorious Martyr Sergius, which lay in a certain oblong Chest covered over with Silver. When Chosroes, perswaded hereby, had sent his whole Army to the City, on a sudden, round the whole Circuit [of the City walls] there appeared an innumerable multitude of Souldiers, who with Bucklers defended the City. Which [Apparition] those sent by Chosroes having beheld, returned, and with admiration declared both their number, and their kind of Armour. But Chosroes, after on a second enquiry he understood that very few persons were left in the City, and those either very aged or very young, the men of strength and vigour being all cut off and destroyed; found that the Martyr was the Authour of this Miracle. And being [on this account] put into a fear, and having admired the Faith of the Christians, he returned into his own Kingdom. [b] They ſay alſo, that at the cloſe of his Life he was vouchſafed [the Laver of] Divine Regeneration.

[a] Concerning this Golden Cross which Chosroes had taken out of the Church of the Sergiopolites for the price of its Redemption, Theophylactus Simocatta speaks in the Fifth Book of his History, Chap. 13. Where also Chosroes, Grandchild [or, Nephew] to this Chosroes here mentioned by Evagrius, does in expres words attest, that that Cross, in honour of the Martyr Sergius had been sent by the Emperour Justinian to Sergiopolis, and was placed in the Church of St Sergius. Vales.

[b] In the excellent Florentine. Manuſcript theſe words are written in the margin here: ὅτι φησὶ περὶ Χοσρόου, ὅπερ ἀλλὸς τις περὶ ἱστορικῶν οὐκ εἶπεν; that is, [Note that Evagrius] ſpeaks that concerning Choſroes, which no other Hiſtorian has mentioned: to wit, that about the cloſe of his Life he received the Sacrament of Baptiſm. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXIX.

Concerning the Peſtilentiall Diſtemper.

MOreover, I will give a Narrative of that [Peſtilentiall] Diſtemper which brake out [in theſe times,] and which has raged now theſe Two and fifty years, ([a] a thing which is never related to have hapned before,) and has in a manner deſtroyed the whole Earth.

[a] Μὴ πρότερον ἰσχηκὸς. A Poſtpoſitive Article ſeems neceſſary to be added, in this manner; ὅ μὴ πρότερον ἰσχηκὸς, a thing which is never related to have hapned before. Which Emendation Nicephorus confirms book 17. chap. 17; who hath worded this place of Evagrius thus; ὅπερ ὅπου ἦλθεν εἰς ἀκοὴν, δεύτερον καὶ πεντηκοστὸν ἔτος διάσης τὴν γῆν, which thing never was heard of, that it [a Plague] ſhould invade the earth for the ſpace of two and fifty years. Indeed, no Plague is recorded to have raged ſo long. This Peſtilence is ſaid to have begun on the year after Baſilius's Conſulate, which was the year of Chriſt 543, as 'tis atteſted by Victor Thunonenſis in his Chronicon, and by the Continuer of Marcellinus Comes's Chronicon. Victor Thunonenſis writes thus concerning this Plague: Horum exordia malorum generalis orbis Terrarum mortalitas ſequitur, &c. A generall Mortality of the world follows the beginnings of theſe miſchiefs, and the greater part of the people is killed by a Perſecution of their Groynes. The words of Marcellinus's Continuer run thus: Indictione 6. Anno Secundo poſt Conſulatum Baſilii, &c; in the ſixth Indiction, on the Second year after Baſilius's Conſulate, a great Mortality deſtroys Italy, the Eaſt and Illyricum having in the ſame manner been already conſumed. Victor does indeed ſeem to agree with Marcellinus, relating that that Plague began on the ſecond year after Baſilius's Conſulate, as Marcellinus, records. But, in reality he diſſents in the ſpace of one year. For, the ſecond year after Baſilius's Conſulate, in Victor Tunonenſis is the ſame with the firſt year after Baſilius's Conſulate, to wit, the year of Chriſt 542. For, Victor Thunonenſis does always term that year immediately following the Conſulate of any Conſul, the ſecond year, not the firſt; as may be proved by many inſtances. Further, our Evagrius ſeems to follow Victor Thunonenſis's opinion. For Evagrius ſays, that that Peſtilence began two years after Antioch had been taken by the Perſians. Now, Antioch was won by the Perſians when Juſtinus Junior was Conſul, on the year of our Lords Nativity 540, as Marcellinus and Marius relate in their Chronicles. But Baronius will have this Plague to have begun on the year of Chriſt 544. Valeſ.

For, two years after Antioch had been taken by the Perſians, a Peſtilentiall diſeaſe began to rage, in ſome things like to that recorded by * Thucydides, in others far different. And it took its beginning from Æthiopia, as 'twas then reported: but by turns it has overrun the whole world; this Diſtemper having, I think, left no Mortalls untouch't. Some Cities were ſo ſorely oppreſſed [with this Calamity,] that they became wholly empty of Inhabitants: but in other places where the Diſtemper arrived, its chaſtiſement was more light. Nor did [this Peſtilence] rage at any certain and ſet ſeaſon [of the year;] nor, after it had raged, did it in a like manner recede. But, it ſeized ſome places at the beginning of Winter, others in the Spring time, [b] others in Summer; again, otherſome during the procedure of the Autumn. And, in ſome Cities, when it had touched ſome parts, it abſtained [from infecting] the other parts thereof. And you might frequently ſee in a City not infected, ſome Families utterly deſtroyed: But in other places, one or two Families having been conſumed, the reſt of the City in future continued untouch't by the Diſtemper. But, after a more accurate inſpection into the matter, we found, that thoſe Families which had continued untouch't, were on the year following the only ones which ſuffered [by this Diſtemper.] But, that which was the moſt wonderfull thing of all, was this, that if it hapned that the Inhabitants of thoſe Cities infected, removed to any other place where this Diſtemper raged nor, they were the only perſons ſeized with theſe Diſeaſes, who [coming] out of infected Cities, made their Reſidence in Cities uninfected. And theſe things hapned frequently, both in Cities and in other places, at the periods of thoſe Cycles termed the Indictions. But, moſt eſpecially [c] on the 2d year *of each Indiction, almoſt a totall deſtruction befell men. In ſo much that I my ſelf who write theſe things; (For I thought good to interweave into this Hiſtory what has a relation to my ſelf, by a fit inſertion of what is Congruous at places opportune and convenient: [I my ſelf, I ſay,]) who [d] as yet frequented [the School of] a Grammer-Maſter, was ſeiſed with thoſe termed the † Bubo's, about the beginning of this [Peſtilentiall] Diſtemper. And in thoſe Sickneſſes which raged at ſeverall times, I loſt many of my Children, my Wife, and ſeverall others of my Relations, [e] my Servants alſo, and very many of thoſe who lookt after and tilled my Grounds: the Circles of the Indictions dividing as 'twere the Calamities that befell me amongſt themſelves. At what time therefore I did write theſe things, being in the [f] fifty eighth year of mine age, [g] within theſe two laſt years, when this Diſtemper had raged at Antioch now the fourth time, Anno Chriſti 539, on the year of Chriſt 539. Sr Henry Savill thought indeed, that by theſe words Evagrius meant, that that Plague had raged chiefly on the ſecond Indiction. But Evagrius ſays not that; nor, had that Plague begun to rage on the year of Chriſt 539. Evagrius therefore ſays this only; viz. that on the ſecond year of each Indiction that Plague raged more ſorely than 'twas wont to do at other times. Valeſ.

* See Thucydides's Hiſt. book 2. pag. 129, &c. Edit. Francofurt. 1594.

[b] Ἄλλας δὲ ἐπὶ πλεῖον. I think it ſhould be worded thus, ἄλλας δὲ περὶ θέρος ἐπὶ, others in Summer, as the reading is in Nicephorus book 17. chap. 18. Valeſ.

* Or, Of the Cycle of fifteen years.

† Or, ſwellings in the Groyn.

[c] Ἐν ᾧ δὲ δεύτερον ἔτει. I am of the ſame opinion with Learned men, who have mended it ἐν τῷ δευτέρῳ ἔτει, in [or, on] the ſecond year; as the reading is in Nicephorus. So, 'tis certain, Sr Henry Savill hath mended it in the margin of his Copy, and hath added this note, [d] In the excellent Florent. and Tellerian M.S. I found it written, ἐς γραμματιστικὰς ἔτι φοιτῶντα, as yet frequented [the School of] a Grammar-Maſter; which is more elegant. And thus Evagrius ſpeaks above, at chap. 26; where he writes, that he frequented the School of the Grammarians, at ſuch time as Antioch was taken by Choſroes, that is, on the year of Chriſt 540. Valeſ. In Robert Stephens the reading is, ἐς γραμματιστικὰς ἔτι φοιτῶντα, as yet frequenting the Grammer-Maſters.

[e] Οἰκέτας τε καὶ χωρίτας: That is, Servos & Colonos, my Servants and Husband-men. For χωρίται are Ruſticks, or Tillers of Ground, who are likewiſe termed χωρικοὶ, as I have remarked at book 6. of Euſeb. Eccleſ. Hiſt. chap. 40. note (e.) So Theophanes in his Chronicon pag. 139, ſpeaking of Dioſcorus Junior's Election; ἀνεχώρησε, ſays he, τὴν πλείστην τῶν χωρικῶν. Where Anaſtaſius Bibliothecarius renders it well, thus, Multitudinem Ruſticorum, the multitude of the Ruſticks. Valeſ.

[f] From this place, Evagrius's Birth may eaſily be found out. For, whereas he has ſaid in the beginning of this chapter, that at ſuch time as he wrote theſe things, it was the fifty ſecond year of that Plague; and does now aſſert, that whilſt he wrote the ſame things, he was in the fifty eight year of his age; it neceſſarily follows, that he had been born ſix years before the beginning of this Plague. Further, that Plague began on the year after Baſilius's Conſulate, or, two years after the deſtruction of Antioch, as Evagrius has ſaid above. Evagrius therefore was born on the year of Chriſt 536, or 537. Valeſ.

[g] Οὐ πρὸ τῶν δύο χρόνων. That is, duobus his poſtremis annis nondum elapſis, theſe two laſt years being not yet overpaſt. Which I ſhould not have remarked, had not I perceived, that both Tranſlatours have been out in the Verſion of this place. For Muſculus renders it thus; Cùm autem iſta ſcriberem, & annum ætatis quinquageſimum octavum agerem, & duo iſta temporis ſpatia nondum elapſa eſſent, &c; But whenas I wrote theſe things, and was in the fifty eighth year of my age, and thoſe two ſpaces of time were not yet overpaſt, &c. But Chriſtophorſon tranſlates it thus: Cùm autem iſta ſcriberem, quinquageſimo octavo anno ſcilicet ætatis, non biennio antè, &c; But when as I wrote theſe things, to wit, in the fifty eighth year of my age, not two years before, &c. He had better have ſaid, intra hoc poſtremum Biennium, within theſe two laſt years. Valeſ.

(For

(For the [h] fourth Cycle [of the Indictions] hath passed from the beginning [of this calamitous Disease:]) besides the persons forementioned, I lost my Daughter, and my Grandchild born of her. Further, this Distemper *consisted of a complication of Diseases. For, in some it began from the head, and having made the eyes bloudy, and tumified the face, it descended into the throat, and sent the person seized with it from among men. In others there hapned a † looseness of the Belly. In others some arose Bubo's, and thence [hapned] very high Fevers: and within two or three days they died, being as firm and sound in body and mind as those who had been afflicted with no Distemper. Others became distracted and mad, and so ended their lives. Carbuncles also breaking out [of the body,] destroyed many men. Some persons having once, twice, and thrice been seized [with this Distemper,] and escaped with their lives; afterwards were infected [with it] again, and died. The ways likwise of contracting this Distemper were different and manifold, and such as were *unaccountable. For some died, meerly by conversing and living together [in the same house:] others, by a touch only: otherwhile, by entring into an house: again, others [contracted the Infection] in the Forum. Some having fled out of infected Cities, continued uninfected themselves, but imparted the Disease to those who were not infected. Others contracted no Distemper at all, although they had lived with many infected persons, and had touched not only persons Distempered, but those likewise who were dead. Otherwhile (although they made it their business to destroy themselves, because of the loss of their Children or Families; and on this account especially were continually conversant with the infected; nevertheless, as if the Disease made a resistance against their will,) were in no wise seized with it. This Pestilentiall Distemper therefore has raged Two and fifty years, as I have said, till this present time; having out-done all [Plagues] which [ever hapned] before. [i] But Philostratus admires, because in his time a Plague raged Fifteen years. Now, the Events after this yet to come, are uncertain, in regard they proceed thither, whither it shall seem well pleasing to God, who certainly knows both the Causes [of things,] and also whither they tend. But I will return to that place, from whence I have digressed, and will give a Narrative of the rest of Justinian's Transactions.

[h] These words are not to be understood so, as if four entire Indictions had passed from the beginning of this Plague, to that year whereon Evagrius wrote these things. For four entire Indictions make sixty years. But, Evagrius has said above, that at such time as he wrote these things, it was the fifty second year of that Pestilence. These words therefore are not meant concerning entire Indictions. For the Pestilence began to rage in the East, in the fifth Indiction, on the year after Basilius's Consulate, which was the year of Christ 542. From which if you count two and fifty years in order, it will be made the year of Christ 594. Vales.

† Flix, or, Lask.

* Or, Surpassing [all] account.

[i] Φιλόστρατος δὲ θαυμάζει. In the Florentine and Tellerian Manuscripts, 'tis written, φιλόστρατος δὲ θαυμάζει, For Philostratus admires; which reading nevertheless I approve not of. But, who this Philostratus should be concerning whom Evagrius speaks, and where he should have written this, 'tis uncertain. Philostratus an Athenian Historian is mentioned by Georgius Syncellus in his Chronicon, on the first year of the Emperour Aurelian. Vales.

CHAP. XXX.

Concerning * Justinian's insatiable Avarice.

* Or, Justinian's love of money, and insatiableness.

† Or, unseemly.

|| Or, Desirous.

* Or, Having coloured over inexcusable Pretexts.

† Or, Forged any familiarity or mixture; that is, an act of uncleanness.

* Or, Absurd.

JUstinian was indeed [a person] of an insatiable Avarice, and so † extravagant a lover of what was another's, that for Gold he sold his whole Empire, to those who governed the Provinces, to the Collectors of the Tributes, and to any persons else who for no cause at all are || wont to frame Plots against men. Besides, * by patching Calumnies together, he punished many and [almost] innumerable persons, whose possessions were great, with the loss of their whole Estates. Further, if a woman who got her livelyhood by the prostitution of her body, had † falsely objected a familiarity or mixture against any one, out of her desire to procure what he had; immediately all the Laws were abolished and made null, and, provided she had made Justinian partaker of her * filthy gain, she might remove all the riches of the person calumniated to her own house. Nevertheless, the same Emperour was profuse in his expending money: in so much that he erected many holy [a] and magnificent Churches every where; and other pious Houses for the taking care of men and women, as well young as old, and of those disquieted with Various diseases: and he allotted vast Revenues, out of the Income whereof these things might be done. He likewise did infinite other pious [Acts,] and such as are well pleasing to God, provided the doers thereof perform [those works] with such Goods as are their own, and offer their pure Actions, as a sacrifice, unto God.

[a] Καὶ ἐκκλησίας ναὸς μεγαλοπρεπεῖς. Sr Henry Savel has expunged the particle καὶ out of his Copy. But I am of opinion it is to be retained here, provided the words be only transposed, in this manner; ὥστε καὶ πολλὰς ἁγίας καὶ μεγαλοπρεπεῖς ἐκκλησίας ναὸς ἀνεστήσατο, in so much that he erected many holy and magnificent Churches every where. Vales.

CHAP. XXXI.

Concerning the Great Church of Saint Sophia, and [that] of The holy Apostles.

FUrther, [the same Emperour] erected not only many other Churches at Constantinople of a gracefull composure, [in honour] to God and [his] Saints: but he also built that great and incomparable Work, [the like whereto] is not to be found any where on record, [to wit,] * that most spacious Church of Saint Sophia, [a Structure] beautifull and eminent, and which exceeds the possibilty of a description. Nevertheless, as far as I am able, I will attempt to describe this Church. † The fabrick of the Sanctuary is a || Tholus, erected upon four Arches, raised to so vast an heighth, that 'tis very difficult for those who look steadfastly from below, to see the Top of the * Hemisphære: but such as stand above, though they be persons very bold and daring, will in no wise attempt to look down, and cast their eyes downwards to the Pavement. The Arches are raised [a] empty from the Pavement to the very Covering [or, Top] of the Roof. On

* Τὸν μέγιστον τῆς ἐκκλησίας νηὸν, that most spatious Temple of the Church.

† Ὁ περὶ ἀνακτόρων νηὸς, the Temple of the Sanctuaries.

|| See Evagrius, Book 2. Chap. 3. note (b.)

* Or, Arch.

[a] Αἱ κεναὶ καμάραι. Some one will perhaps ask, what this word κεναὶ, empty, means. For Evagrius ſays that the Arches or Vaults aroſe empty from the Pavement to the top. In this place therefore we are to underſtand, that [the Arches] were open, upheld by no Columns. Procopius in his firſt Book De Ædificiis, atteſts this concerning two of the Arches only: ἡ δὲ ἀψίδων αἱ μὲν δύο αὐτῶν κεναὶ τῶν ἐς ἠέρα ἐπανεσχήκασι πρὸς ἀνίσχοντά τε καὶ δύοντά που τὸν ἥλιον; but two of the Arches were raiſed up into the empty Air, at the riſing and at the ſetting Sun. Valeſ.

b Αὐλοῖς ὑποδεδεγμένοις. Tranſlatours have rendred this place very badly. Muſculus turns it thus: In dextro Latere ad Siniſtram ordinatæ ſunt in illis Columnæ; In the right ſide on the left hand Columns are placed in them. Chriſtophorſon interprets it in this manner: In dextro latere, ſunt homini ingredienti ad Lævam Columnæ ordine locatæ &c; In the right ſide, on the left hand to a man going in, Pillars are placed in order, &c. They were led into a miſtake by the omiſſion of one Conjunction, [to wit, καὶ, and, which is wanting in Robert Stephens's Edition;] which we have put in from the Florentine M. S. in this manner; ἐν δεξιᾷ δὲ καὶ κατὰ τὸ εὐώνυμον, &c; On the right hand and on the left, &c. It remaines now that we explain what thoſe words mean which follow next, viz. ὑποδεδεγμένοις αὐλοῖς κίονες. Evagrius himſelf therefore ſhall be his own Interpreter; who (in his firſt Book, chap. 14,) deſcribing the ſacred Church of Symeones the Stylite, ſays it conſiſted of four Portico's. [But, by Valeſius's favour, Evagrius's words in that Chapter are theſe; ἐν ᾧ τετράστοον πανταχῇ στοαῖς κεκοσμῆσθαι, beautified with Portico's of [or, at the] four ſides.] And then he adds theſe words: ὑποδεδεγμένοις δὲ ταῖς στοαῖς, κίονες, &c. That is, oppoſite to [or, near to] thoſe Portico's are placed Pillars; wherefore at this place, inſtead of αὐλοῖς, I would more willingly read αὐλαῖς; to wit, by underſtanding the term ϑαλίσι, Arches. Valeſ.

c Theſe Hyperœa [Galleries, or, Upper Rooms] were deſigned for the women, that being therein placed apart by themſelves, they might behold the ſolemn performances of the Divine Service, as Paulus Silentiarius relates in his deſcription of Saint Sophia; which Authour ſays, that thoſe upper rooms or Galleries, were upheld by ſix Columns of Theſſalick Marble; whereas nevertheleſs, there were only two Columns below, which upheld the Galleries, pag. 110. Paulus terms them γυναικήϊα ὑπερῶια the womens Hyperœa; in like manner as our Evagrius does here, and alſo Procopius in his firſt Book; where he deſcribes this Church of Saint Sophia: although Procopius rather terms them Porticus's. Valeſ.

d By theſe words Evagrius ſets forth the difference which was between the Columns of the Church of Saint Sophia. For he ſays, that the Columns which were at the right and left ſide of the Church, that is, at the North and South, had Galleries or Chambers laid upon them, out of which the Faithfull might behold the Sacred Myſteries which were celebrated at the Altar. But the Columns which were placed at the Eaſt and Weſt, upheld no Gallerie; but were left naked. It was my ſentiment that theſe things were to be more largely explained, for this reaſon; becauſe I perceived Tranſlatours, eſpecially Chriſtophorſon, ſaw nothing here. Valeſ.

e Ἐκ τῆς καταντικρὺ θύρας τῆς ἱερᾶς κόγχης. He means, I ſuppoſe, the moſt Eaſterly part of the Church; which, becauſe the whole Structure was a Tholus, muſt be almoſt Semi-circular, or, made in the form of a Shell.

f In Robert Stephens's Edition, as likewiſe in this of Valeſius's, there is an imperfection in the Greek Text here. Curterius, Grynæus, Chriſtophorſon, and D^r Hanmer, in their Verſions have inſerted this number, Sixty ſix; from what authority I know not. Muſculus and Valeſius leave a Blank here in their Verſions; the latter of whom ſays nothing concerning this imperfection, in his Notes.

On the right hand and on the left, [b] oppoſite to the [Arches] are placed Pillars, framed of Theſſalick Stone: and they bear up [c] Hyperœa, which being underpropt by other ſuch like Columns, give a liberty to thoſe that are deſirous of looking down from on high upon the Myſteries. To which place alſo the Empreſs comes on Holidays when She is preſent at the Sacred performance of the Myſteries. But the [Columns placed] at the Eaſt and Weſt, [d] are ſo left, that there ſhould be nothing which might hinder the admiration of ſo vaſt a greatneſs. The Porticus's of the forementioned Hyperœa, finiſh ſo great a Work with Pillars and ſmall Arches. Further, that the Miracle of this Structure may be plainer and more manifeſt, I have reſolved to inſert here the [number of] Feet, both of its Length, Breadth, and Heighth; as likewiſe the empty ſpaces, and heighth alſo of the Arches. The meaſure therefore is this. The length from that † Door oppoſite to the Sacred [e] Concha, where the unbloudy Sacrifice is offered, unto the [Concha] it ſelf, is an Hundred and ninty Feet: the breadth from North to South, One hundred and fifteen Feet: the * heighth from the Center of the Hemiſphære to the Pavement, is an Hundred and eighty Feet. The breadth of each of the Arches is [f] ..... Feet. The length from † Or, gate.

* Or, depth.

East to Weſt [contains] Two hundred and ſixty Feet. [g] The breadth of their Light is Seventy five Feet. There are beſides at the Weſt two other Porticus's very ſplendid, and open Courts on all ſides of an admirable Beauty and Gracefullneſs. The ſame Juſtinian built the Church of The Divine Apoſtles, which will not readily give precedency to any other Temple. In which Church the Emperours [h] and the Prelates are cuſtomarily interred. But, concerning theſe and ſuch things as theſe, let thus much every way [ſuffice] to have been ſaid.

g See, if you pleaſe, the deſcription of Saint Sophia's Church, which Franciſcus Combefiſius, (a perſon that deſerves well of Learning) has lately publiſhed, page 254. Paulus Silentiarius deſcribes theſe Windows, in his Ecphraſis, (which the moſt Learned perſon Carolus de Fraxino hath newly publiſhed;) and Procopius, in his firſt Book De Ædificiis. Valeſ.

h Sozomen ſays the ſame in the cloſe of his ſecond Book of Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory. But (which is to be taken notice of,) neither of them (neither Evagrius nor Sozomen,) do affirm it was peculiar to the Conſtantinopolitane Biſhops, that they, in like manner as were the Emperours, ſhould be buried in the Church of the Apoſtles; but they ſpeak in generall concerning the Biſhops. Indeed Nicephorus (book 8. chapter the laſt,) does expreſsly atteſt, that not only the Conſtantinopolitane, but other Biſhops alſo, who for ſanctity of life had excelled others, were interred there. For it often hapned, that Biſhops, either ſent for by the Emperours, or making a journey to the Imperial City on account of Eccleſiaſtick affairs, ended their lives there. Thus in the times of Anaſtaſius, Alciſſus and Gajanus died at Byzantium, and by Marcellinus in his Chronicon are recorded to have been buried in one Sepulcher. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXXII.

Concerning the Emperour [Juſtinian's] madneſs rather than kindneſs ſhown * towards [the Faction] of the Venetiani.

* Or, Towards [the Faction in] the blew colour.

[a] THere was alſo another thing in Juſtinian, that exceeded the utmoſt ferity of Savage Beaſts: (which whether [it proceeded] from a fault of Nature, or from ſloth and fear, I cannot ſay; but, it took its beginning from that popular Sedition [termed] * Nica.) For he ſeemed ſo † highly to favour the one of the Factions, I mean that || of the Venetiani, that they committed murders upon perſons of the contrary Faction at noon day, and in the midſt of the City; and not only feared not puniſhments, but alſo obtained rewards: in ſo much that hence it hapned, that many were made Murderers. Moreover, a liberty was indulged them of entring even into houſes, of plundring the riches laid up therein, and of ſelling [miſerable] men their own ſafety. And if any one of the Magiſtrates had attempted to puniſh them, he endangered his own ſafety. 'Tis certain, a perſonage who was Comes of the Eaſt, becauſe he had ordered ſome Seditious perſons to be beaten with † Bow-ſtrings, he himſelf was lead through the midſt of the City and ſcourged with Bow-ſtrings. Callinicus likewiſe Governour of Cilicia, becauſe according to the preſcript of the Laws he had inflicted a capitall puniſhment upon two Cilician Murderers, Paulus and Fauſtinus, who fell upon him and would have murdered him; was Crucified, undergoing this puniſhment on account of his great prudence in paſſing judge-a Ἐπὶ δὲ δεινῷ τινὶ τερατεύσατο. In Robert Stephens's Edition the verb δεῖ is wanting, which the Geneva Printers have inſerted unhappily from the conjecture of Chriſtophorſon and others. But from the Tellerian and Florentine Manuſcripts I have mended this place thus, ὑπεῖν δὲ καὶ ἕτερον, &c, There was alſo another thing, &c: Which emendation Nicephorus confirms. For inſtead of theſe words of Evagrius, he ſubſtitutes theſe, ἐν δὲ τι πρᾶσσειν αὖτε. Valeſ.

* See Chap. 13.

† Manifeſtly, or, openly.

‖ Τῶν κυανέων, thoſe of the Blew.

† Νεύροις; the term ſignifies originally a Nerve, or, Sinew; it imports alſo a Bow-ſtring, or, Rope.

ment

ment, and of [his obſerving] the Laws. Hence it hapned, that * thoſe of the other Faction, having fled out of their own Country, and finding reception amongſt no men what ever, but being driven from all places as perſons moſt deteſtable; beſet Travellers, and committed Rapines and Murders: and all places were filled with untimely deaths, Robberies, and ſuch like horrid and impious Crimes. But ſometimes † he turned to the contrary opinion, and ſlew the Venetiani themſelves; ſubjecting them to the Laws, to whom he had given permiſſion of perpetrating nefarious Facts, in a Barbarick manner, throughout every City. But, to give a particular Narrative of theſe matters, is a thing above Relation or [any compaſs of] time: nevertheleſs, theſe things [I have mentioned] are ſufficient for the making a conjecture concerning the reſt.

* Οἱ δαὶ τὰ μέρη. Valeſius renders theſe words: Praſiniani, the green-coloured-faction.

† Juſtinian.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Concerning Barſanuphius the Aſceta.

AT the ſame time, Divine perſons, and ſuch as were Workers of great Miracles, lived in various parts of the world: but ſuch of them, whoſe Glory ſhone every where, [were thus termed.] Barſanuphius by extract an Egyptian: This perſon lead an unfleſhly life in the fleſh, in a certain Monaſtery near the Town Gaza: inſomuch that he performed many Miracles and ſuch as are ſuperiour to [any] Relation. Moreover, 'tis believed that he lives at this preſent, ſhut up in his Cell; although Fifty years and upwards are now paſt, ſince he hath been ſeen by any perſon, or has pertaken of any thing that is upon the Earth. Which things Euſtochius Prelate of Jeruſalem [a] disbelieving, when he had ordered the Cell, wherein this man of God had incloſed himſelf, to be dug open, a fire brake out thence, which burnt almoſt all perſons that were there preſent.

[a] Δυσαπιστῶν εὐσεβίῳ. Inſtead of the Verb [δυσαπιστῶν, eaſily believing,] which undoubtedly is corrupted, Nicephorus makes uſe of δυσπιστῶν, disbelieving. And, inſtead of Euſtochius Biſhop of Jeruſalem, the ſame Nicephorus has Salluſtius. Salluſtius was indeed Biſhop of Jeruſalem in the Reign of Anaſtaſius Auguſtus. But Euſtochius governed the ſame Biſhoprick about the beginning of Juſtinus Junior's Empire, as Theophanes atteſts in his Chronicon. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXXIV.

Concerning the Monk Symeon, who for Chriſt's ſake [feigned himſelf] a Fool.

MOreover, at [the City] Emiſa there was one Symeones: this perſon had in ſuch a manner diveſted himſelf of the Garment of Vain-glory, that amongſt all perſons who knew him not, he was accounted an Idiot, although he abounded with all manner of wiſdom and divine Grace. Further, this Symeones for the moſt part lived alone by himſelf, allowing no perſon what ever a Liberty of knowing, either when or in what manner he † prayed to God; nor [permitting them to know] at what time he abſtained from, or partook of nouriſhment at home. At ſome times being abroad in the ſtreets, he ſeemed [a] to be a perſon diſtracted, and to have nothing of prudence or wiſdom in him.

† Or, Rendred the Deity Propitious.

[a] Ἐκτετραφθαι τῷ καθεσθῶτι. Doubtleſs it muſt be made καθεκότι, as the reading is in Nicephorus, book. 17. chap. 22. Valeſ.

At other times he would go into a Victualling-houſe, and eat of what ever food or proviſion he met with, when he was hungry. But, if any perſon [b] bowed his head and reverenced him, he would immediately run from that place in anger, being afraid that his own Virtue ſhould be found out by the Vulgar. And in this manner Symeones behaved himſelf in the Forum. But there were ſome perſons that held a familiarity with him, with whom he uſually converſed without any thing at all of diſſimulation. Amongſt thoſe of his acquaintance therefore, one had a maid, who having been debauch't and got with child by ſome perſon, when ſhe was forced by her Maſters to declare the man who had done this, ſhe affirmed that Symeones had had to do with her in private, and that ſhe was with child by him, and that ſhe would ſwear that the matter was ſo, and (if need ſhould require,) could manifeſtly prove the thing. Which when Symeones had heard, he aſſented, ſaying that he carryed fleſh about him, which was a frail and mutable thing. But when this matter came to be divulged amongſt all perſons, and Symeones (as it ſeemed) was obnoxious to a great ignominy, he withdrew himſelf, and feigned that he was aſhamed. When therefore the woman's time of delivery was come, and ſhe ſate in the uſuall poſture of women in Travail; her Labour cauſed moſt acute, many, and intollerable pangs, and brought the woman into the imminenteſt danger of her life. But the Birth * fell not in the leaſt. Symeones therefore being deſignedly come thither, when he was requeſted [by thoſe preſent] to go to Prayers, he declared before them all, that the woman ſhould not be delivered, untill ſhe would confeſs who was the Father of the child in her womb. Which when ſhe had done, and had named the true Father, the Infant leap't forth immediately, Truth it ſelf doing [as 'twere] the office of a Mid-wife. The ſame perſon was one time obſerved to go into the houſe of a Strumpet, and having ſhut to the door, he and ſhe continued alone for ſome time: after this he opened the door again, and ran away in great haſt, looking round leaſt any one ſhould ſee him, whereby he much increaſed the ſuſpicion. In ſo much that the perſons who had ſeen him, brought forth the woman, and enquired of her, both what the meaning of Symeones's coming into her was, and why he made ſo long a ſtay. The woman ſwore, that for three days before that, becauſe of her want of neceſſaries, ſhe had taſted of nothing but water only: but, that Symeones had brought victualls and meat and a veſſell of Wine along with him, and having ſhut the door, had ſpread the Table, and bad her go to ſupper, and fill her ſelf with proviſions, becauſe ſhe had been ſufficiently afflicted with want of nouriſhment; and ſhe fetcht out the Remains of the victualls [which Symeones] had brought to her. Further, ſome ſmall time before that Earthquake hapned which ſhook Phœnice Maritima, wherein [c] Berytus, Byblus, and Tripolis ſuffered more [than other Cities, the ſame Symeones] holding a whip on high in his hand, ſcourged moſt of the Columns in the Forum, and cryed out, Stand, You muſt dance. Becauſe therefore nothing was done unadviſedly and without deſign by this man, ſome

[b] The Laicks were wont to bow their heads, not only before the Biſhops and Presbyters, but before the Monks alſo, to receive their Bleſſing. An illuſtrious inſtance of which is extant in Sozomen, book 8. chap. 13. Valeſ.

* Or, Was not in the leaſt forwarded.

[c] Concerning this Earthquake, the Author of Antoninus Martyr's Itinerarium ſpeaks in t'eſe words: Inde Venimus in partes Syriæ, ubi requieſcit ſanctus Leontius, &c; Thence we came into the parts of Syria, where Saint Leontius reſts, which City, together with other Cities, was ruined by an Earthquake in the time of the Emperour Juſtinian. From thence we came to Byblus, which City alſo, with all things that were therein, was deſtroyed. From thence we came into the City Triari, which was likewiſe ruined. Thence we came into the moſt ſplendid City Beryto, wherein there was lately a ſtudy of Learning; which was alſo ruined, as we were told by the Biſhop of the City, to whom the perſons were known, except the ſtrangers who periſhed there. Further, that City wherein Saint Leontius reſts, is Tripoly, as I have remarked before, book 3. chap. 33. note (c.) This Earthquake hapned on the twenty fourth year of Juſtinian's Reign, as Cedrenus writes in his Chronicon, and Theophanes pag. 192. What thoſe Authors relate concerning Botry a City of Phœnice, is memorable, viz. that in that City there was an Haven made by that Earthquake, (there having been no Port there before,) the Promontory which was called Litho-proſopon being removed. But in Theophanes 'tis written βόστρυθρ, inſtead of βότρυθρ. By which fault in the writing the Tranſlatour was induced to render it Boſtra; which is a very groſs miſtake; in regard Boſtra is a Mid-Land-City of Arabia. The name of this City is in my judgment to be reſtored in Antoninus Martyr's Itinerary, at that place which I have quoted above. For, inſtead of the City Triari, it muſt be written Botry. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXXV.

Concerning the Monk Thomas, who in like manner feigned himſelf a Fool.

THere was alſo at the ſame time one Thomas, who followed the ſame courſe of life in Syria Cœle. This perſon went [one time] to Antioch, to receive the annuall ſtipend [allotted for the maintenance] of his own Monaſtery. [a] For [this annuall ſtipend] was ordered [to be paid] out of the [Revenues of the] Antiochian Church. Anaſtaſius * Oeconomus of the ſame Church, (in regard the ſaid Thomas troubled him frequently,) gave him [one day] a box on the ear with his hand. Whereat when the perſons preſent with them were much offended, Thomas ſaid, that neither he himſelf would receive any thing more [of the annuall ſtipend,] nor ſhould Anaſtaſius † pay any more. Both which things came to paſs: Anaſtaſius ending his life on the day following; and Thomas being tranſlated to [b] Hoſpitall of the Suburb, whilſt he was on his Return home. They laid his dead Body in the Monuments of the Strangers. But, in regard when one or two had been buried after him, Thomas's Body was ſtill above them, (God ſhowing a great Miracle, even after his death: for [the other Bodies] were removed and thruſt down;) [the Inhabitants] admire this holy perſon, and declare [the thing] to [c] Ephræmius. Then his * Holy dead Body is removed to Antioch with a publick Feſtivity and [a ſolemn] pomp, and is honourably buried in the Cœmitary; having at its tranſlation cauſed the Peſtilentiall diſtemper, which then raged at Antioch, to ceaſe. And the Inhabitants of Antioch do magnificently celebrate an anniverſary Feaſt [in honour] of this [Thomas] till theſe our times. But let us † return to the * propoſed Series of our Hiſtory.

[a] Ἐτέτακτο δὲ ἐκ τῆς αὐτόσε ἐκκλησίας. Who would not admire, that three Learned men ſhould have been miſtaken in the Rendition of this place? Johannes Langus tranſlates it thus: illius enim Eccleſiæ cenſebatur, for he was reckoned of that Church. And Muſculus renders it almoſt in the ſame manner. But Chriſtophorſon has tranſlated it worſt of all, thus: ab eâ ſiquidem Eccleſiâ Presbyter fuerat ordinatus, for he had been ordained Presbyter by that Church. Theſe perſons thought that theſe words [ὁ Θωμᾶς, this Thomas] were here to be underſtood; whereas we are to underſtand ἡ ἐπέτειος χορηγία, this annuall ſtipend, or, Alms, which was wont yearly to be diſtributed out of the Revenues of the Church of Antioch to the Monaſtery of the Abbot Thomas. Valeſ.

[b] Johannes Moſchus, in his Limonarium Chap. 88, ſays this Thomas dyed in the Church of Saint Euphemia which was in the Daphnenſian Suburb. Therefore the Church of the Bleſſed Euphemia was near the Hoſpitall, wherein ſtrangers were entertained: in ſuch manner as we now adays ſee Churches joyned to Hoſpitalls and Spittles. Further, Johannes Moſchus ſays, that this Thomas was the Apocryſarius, that is, the Procurator, of his own Monaſtery. For, thoſe were termed Apocryſarii, who managed the affairs of Monaſteries and Churches, as Juſtinian informs us in his ſixth Novell. Valeſ.

* Or, Steward.

† Or, Give.

[c] Moſchus in the forecited chapter, calls the Biſhop of Antioch, (not Ephræmius, but) Domninus, who ſucceeded Ephræmius. Nicephorus Patriarch of Conſtantinople terms this perſon Domnus. Valeſ.

* Or, Moſt holy.

† Or, Turn our courſe.

* Preſent, or, oppoſite.

CHAP. XXXVI.

Concerning the Patriarch Menas, and concerning the Miracle which hapned then to the Boy of a certain Hebrew.

ANthimus having been ejected (as I have * ſaid,) out of the Chair of the Imperial City, [a] Epiphanius ſucceeded in that Epiſcopate: and after Epiphanius, Menas; in whoſe times hapned a Miracle highly worthy to be recorded. There is an [b] ancient uſage at Conſtantinople, that when a great quantity of the Holy parts of the immaculate Body of Chriſt our God are left remaining, [ſome] young Boyes of their number who frequent the Grammar-Schools are ſent for, that they may eat them. Which thing having hapned at that time, the Son of a * Glaſs-maker (as to his opinion a Jew,) was † called amongſt the other Boyes. This child told his Parents, who enquired the reaſon of his ſtay, what had hapned, and what he together with other boyes had taſted of. His Father, highly incenſed and enraged, ſnatcht up the boy immediately, and threw him into the Furnace of coals, wherein he uſually formed Glaſs. But his mother ſought for her ſon, and when ſhe could not find him, ſhe went all about the City mourning and * making great lamentation. And on the third day after ſtanding at the door of her husband's work-houſe, ſhe called her Son by his name, † weeping and tearing herſelf. The Boy knowing his mother's voice, anſwered her out of the Furnace. Shee breaks open the doors, goes in, and ſees her Son ſtanding in the midſt of the coals, the fire having not touch't him in the leaſt. The child, when afterwards asked in what manner he had continued un-hurt, ſaid, that a woman cloathed in a purple garment came to him frequently, gave him water, quenched the coals that were near him, and fed him as often as he was hungry. Which paſſage having been brought to [the hearing of] Juſtinian, he [ordered] the boy and his mother to be ‖ Baptiſed in the Laver of

* Book 4. Chap. 11.

[a] We have taken notice of this miſtake of Evagrius's above, at chap. 11, note (c;) which Nicephorus has alſo corrected. But Nicephorus himſelf, whilſt he amends Evagrius's errour, has committed another. For he relates, that Menas was ordained by Pope Agatho; whereas he was ordained by Agapetus in the place of Anthimus, as 'tis agreed amongſt all perſons. Valeſ.

[b] Nicephorus Calliſtus (Book 17. Chap. 25.) atteſts, that this Cuſtome, (viz. that the Particles of the Sacred Euchariſt which remained, were at Conſtantinople diſtributed amongſt the Boyes to be eaten;) continued even in his age; and he writes, that he himſelf, whilſt he was a Boy and was frequently converſant in the Churches, partook of thoſe parts. Valeſ.

* Glaſs-maker (as to his opinion a Jew,) was † called amongſt the other Boyes. This child told his Parents, who enquired the reaſon of his ſtay, what had hapned, and what he together with other boyes had taſted of. His Father, highly incenſed and enraged, ſnatcht up the boy immediately, and threw him into the Furnace of coals, wherein he uſually formed Glaſs. But his mother ſought for her ſon, and when ſhe could not find him, ſhe went all about the City mourning and * making great lamentation. And on the third day after ſtanding at the door of her husband's work-houſe, ſhe called her Son by his name, † weeping and tearing herſelf. The Boy knowing his mother's voice, anſwered her out of the Furnace. Shee breaks open the doors, goes in, and ſees her Son ſtanding in the midſt of the coals, the fire having not touch't him in the leaſt. The child, when afterwards asked in what manner he had continued un-hurt, ſaid, that a woman cloathed in a purple garment came to him frequently, gave him water, quenched the coals that were near him, and fed him as often as he was hungry. Which paſſage having been brought to [the hearing of] Juſtinian, he [ordered] the boy and his mother to be ‖ Baptiſed in the Laver of

Or, Glaſs-worker.

† Or, Taken.

* Λύγον κακύσασα.

† Or, Tearing herſelf with weepings.

‖ Φωτισθέντας, enlightned.

of Regeneration, and [c] enrolled them amongst the Clergy: but his father, because he would not embrace the profession of Christianity, was [by the Emperour's order] crucified in [the Suburb] [d] Sycæ, as designing to have murdered his own son. These things hapned in this manner.

[c] Ἐκλήρωσε. Johannes Langus renders this place thus: Puerum cum matre divino Regenerationis Lavacro adhibuit, deoque dicavit; He admitted the Boy with his mother to the divine Laver of Regeneration, and Dedicated [them] to God. But Musculus and Christophorson have translated it far worse. For Musculus terms it, servavit, he kept, or, preserved. But Christophorson has rendred it thus: pueram cum matre Lavacro Regenerationis tingendos decrevit, He Decreed the boy with his mother to be Baptized in the Laver of Regeneration. I doubt not but the place is thus to be rendred: Puerum simul ac matrem Regenerationis Lavacro initiatos Clero adscripsit, He enrolled the boy and his mother, having been initiated in the Laver of Regeneration, amongst the Clergy. Which must be understood in this manner, that the Emperour ordered that Boy to be reckoned amongst the Readers of the Church; but, commanded his mother to be ordained a Deaconness. Valesius.

[d] In this Suburb of the City Constantinople, punishments were heretofore usually inflicted on Criminalls, as I have already intimated in my Notes on Book 28. Amm. Marcell. pag. 362. Whereto add a passage of Saint Jerome out of his Commentaries on Matt. 26th, which runs thus: Extra urbem enim & foras portam loca sunt in quibus truncantur capita damnatorum, & Calvariæ, id est, Decollatorum sumpsere nomen. Valesius.

CHAP. XXXVII.

Who were Bishops of the Greater Cities at that time.

AFter Menas, Eutychius ascends the [Episcopall] Throne [at Constantinople.] But at Jerusalem, after Martyrius, Salustius succeeds in that See, and after him, Helias. After Helias, Petrus; and after Petrus, Macarius; [whose Election] the Emperour approved *not of; so that he was [afterwards] Ejected out of his own Chair: [a] For they affirmed that he asserted Origen's opinions. After this [Macarius] therefore, Eustochius succeeded in that Bishoprick. After the Ejection of Theodosius, as has been related † above, Zoilus is declared Bishop of Alexandria. And when he was added [b] to [the Alexandrian Bishops] his predecessours, Apollinaris undertakes [the Government of] that Chair. After Ephræmius, Domninus is entrusted with the [Episcopall] Throne of Antioch.

* Or, Not as yet.

[a] Indeed, many Monks severed themselves from his communion, because he was thought to assert Origen's opinions.

† Chap. 11.

One of their number was the Abbot Elias, who was also called Βοσκᾶς, as Johannes Moschus relates in the nineteenth Chapter of his Limonarium. And yet Theophanes, in his Chronicon pag. 205, says Macarius was ejected out of his See χῃ συκοφαντίᾳ, that is, by subornation, fraud, and calumny. But Theophanes relates that in a place wholly unfit and incongruous, to wit, in the Empire of Justinus Junior. Now, Macarius was ordained Bishop of Jerusalem on the year of Christ 546; and having after two years been expelled out of his See, Eustochius was substituted in his room on the year of Christ 548, as Baronius relates. Nevertheless, Victor Thunonensis differs herefrom, in his Chronicon. For he attributes eight years of Episcopate to Macarius, and says that Eustochius, was ordained whilst he survived, on the year before the Fifth Synod, that is on the year of Christ 552: and my Sentiment is, that this is truer. Valesius.

[b] Τοῖς αὐτὸν ἡγησαμένοις. The same is the reading in Nicephorus also, book. 17. chap. 26. But I do not think it can be said in Greek, αὐτὸν ἡγησαμένοις. I write therefore, ἢ ᾗ τοῖς αὐτῶν ἡγησαμένοις, &c. For, ἢ τῶν ἀλεξανδρέων is understood. Valesius.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

Concerning the Fifth Holy Oecumenicall Synod, and on what account it was convened.

DUring therefore Vigilius's presidency over the Elder Rome; whilst in the first place Menas, and then Eutychius [was Patriarch] of Constantinople; and whilst Apollinaris [was Bishop] of Alexandria, Domninus of Antioch, and Eustochius of Jerusalem; Justinian convenes the Fifth Synod, on this account. The Assertours of Origen's opinions abounding and growing powerfull [in the Monasteries of Palestine,] and especially [a] in that termed The new Laura; Eustochius made it his whole business to eject them. And going to The new Laura, he drove them all out, and pursued them to a great distance, as being the common pest [of mankind.] They, dispersed into severall places, associated many persons to their own party.

[a] This New Laura is mentioned in the Life of Saint Euthymius. Concerning this matter Theophanes (though in an unfit place, to wit, in the Affairs of Justinus Junior,) writes thus: ἐυσεβῶν δὲ ἀπελθὼν εἰς ἱεροσόλυμα, &c; But Eustochius removing to Jerusalem, out of that hatred he bore to Apollinaris, Agatho and Macarius, ejected those Monks of the New Laura, as Origenists: And on this account he himself was also [afterwards] ejected, and Macarius was again restored to his own Chair. Baronius thinks indeed, that Macarius was restored to his own See, a little before Eustochius's ordination; and then, that Eustochius had obtained the See of Jerusalem again, because by his Legates he was present at the Fifth Constantinopolitane Synod on the year of Christ 553; as 'tis sufficiently manifest from our Evagrius, and from the Acts of the foresaid Synod. But Baronius was widely mistaken. For Macarius (Eustochius being ejected,) was restored to his own See long after the Fifth Synod, in Justinian's Thirty seventh year; on the Twenty fourth year after Basilius's Consulate; as Victor Thunonensis relates in his Chronicon, who lived in those very times, and could not be ignorant of that. Valesius.

Theodorus surnamed Ascidas (Bishop of Cæsarea the Head-City of the Province Cappadocia; [a Prelate] resident with Justinian, faithfull to him, and of whom the Emperour made great use;) undertook the Patronage of these [Monks.] Upon * his making a disturbance therefore at the [Imperial] Pallace, and terming [Eustochius's] Fact the † highest impiety and wickedness; Ruphus Abbot of Theodosius's Monastery, and [b] Conon [Abbot] of the [Monastery] of Saba (persons of the chiefest note * amongst the Monasticks, both for their own worth, and on account of the Monasteries over which they presided;) are sent to the Imperial City by Eustochius. They were accompanied with others also, not much inferiour to them in dignity. And these men resolved to debate concerning Origen primarily, and concerning Evagrius and Didymus. But Theodorus the Cappadocian, desirous of diverting them to another matter, [c] proposes to be debated the Cause of Theodorus [Bishop] of Mopsuestia, and that

* Theodorus's

† Or, All impiety.

[b] Cyrillus Scythopolitanus has composed an illustrous Elogy of this Conon, in the Life of Saint Saba, about the end, in these words. Qui Cassianus cum decimum mensem implesset in administrationis one, &c. Which Cassianus, when he had compleated his tenth month in his Administration, departed out of this life; after which the Monks commit the Præfecture to Conon. They command, but God, I suppose, moved the minds of the Monks to this. Now, he was a person highly eminent for true Sentiments, all manner of Virtue, and good Actions: who also made use of great care and diligence in his Prefecture. For he both recollected those Fathers which had departed from thence, being ejected by the Origenists; and likewise erected and as it were renewed the Laura, which by those frequent Tumults and Wars of Hereticks, was now brought to its knees. Johannes Moschus speaks of the same Conon Governour of Saint Saba's Laura, in chap. 42; where he intimates, that he was an acquaintance of Eustochius's Bishop of Jerusalem. Valesius.

* Or, [amongst those] of the Solitude.

[c] Ἐπεισάξει τὸ κατὰ Θεόδωρον, superinduces the Cause of Theodorus. Liberatus relates the same in his Breviary, chap. 24. Yet Liberatus says nothing concerning Rufus and Conon the Abbots sent by Eustochius to Constantinople. On the other hand Evagrius makes no mention of that condemnation of Origen, which had been made by the Emperour Justinian by the endeavour of Pelagius Apochrysiarius of the Roman See; to which condemnation all the Patriarchs had subscribed, to wit, Zoilus of Alexandria, Ephræmius of Antioch, Petrus of Jerusalem; as Liberatus writes in the foregoing chapter: now, that hapned on the year of Christ 538, as Baronius relates. But that Embassie of Conon, Rufus, and the other Palestine Monks, was sent by Eustochius to Constantinople on the year of Christ 551. For on that year Apollinaris was put into the place of Zoilus Bishop of Alexandria, as Baronius affirms. But Eustochius, out of his hatred chiefly to Apollinaris Bishop of Alexandria, ejected the Monks of the New Laura out of their Monasterie, as being Origenists; agreeable to what we have related above out of Theophanes. Valesius.

of Theodoret and Ibas: the All-good God having excellently well diſpoſed the whole matter ſo, that whatever was profane both on the one and on the other ſide might be wholly expelled. The firſt Queſtion therefore having been propoſed, whether it were lawfull to Anathematize the dead; Eutychius who was then preſent, (a perſon incomparably well verſed in the Sacred Scriptures, who during Menas's Life was not very eminent; for he was then but [d] Apocriſiarius to the Biſhop of Amaſia;) being not only wiſer, but alſo looking with contempt upon thoſe convened, ſaid in expreſs words, that that queſtion need not be debated: in regard King Joſias did not only heretofore ſlay the living Prieſts of Dæmons, but alſo dug open the Sepulchers of thoſe who had been dead long before. All perſons that were preſent look't upon theſe [words of Eutychius's] to be moſt appoſitely ſpoken. Which [ſaying of his] when Juſtinian was acquainted with, he preferred * him to the Chair of the Imperial City, on the death of Menas which hapned ſoon after. Further, Vigilius [e] gave his conſent by his Letters, but refuſed to be preſent at the Synod. The Synod therefore being convened, when [the Emperour] Juſtinian asked, what their Sentiment was concerning Theodorus, and in relation to thoſe things which Theodoret had written againſt Cyrillus and his Twelve † Heads; alſo [what they thought] of that Letter ſaid to be Ibas's, [written by him] to Maris the Perſian: after many paſſages had been recited [out of the Books] of Theodorus and Theodoret, and after it had been made apparent, that Theodorus had long ſince been condemned, and [his name] expunged out of the Sacred Diptycks; and, that Hereticks ought to be condemned even after their death: with all ſuffrages (as the uſuall ſaying is,) they Anathematize Theodorus, and what had been written by Theodoret againſt Cyrillus's Twelve Heads, and againſt the true Faith; Ibas's Letter alſo, which he wrote to Maris the Perſian; [their condemnation of the foreſaid perſons and writings] being conceived in theſe expreſs words.

[d] Τῶν δὲ ἀποκειστῶν τὸν ἀμασείας ὄντα ἀποκρίσιαρον διακονεῖτο. That is, was Apocriſiarius to the Biſhop of Amaſia. For as well the Patriarchs, as the Biſhops of the greater Churches, had their Apocriſiarii or Reſponſales, who managed Eccleſiaſtick affairs in the Emperour's Pallace. Which thing had been in uſe from the times of Conſtantine the Great, as Hincmarus tells us in Epiſt. 14. Ad Proceres Regni. Monaſteries had likewiſe their Apocriſiarii in the Imperial City, who performed the ſame Office; as I have obſerved above. There is mention of theſe Apocriſiarii in Juſtinian's Sixth Novell. See more in Pithœus's Gloſſary ad Novellas Juliani Anteceſſoris, and in Reſvecydus's Onomaſticon ad Vitas Patrum. Valeſ.

* Eutychius.

† Or, Chapters.

[e] Ἐγγράφως συνθέμενος. Johannes Langus underſtood theſe words concerning Eutychius's Ordination. For he has rendred them thus: [ſee Niceph. book 17, chap. 27.] Porro Vigilius etiamſi ei Scripto interveniente, cum Eutychio conveniret; aſſidere tamen illi noluit; Further, although Vigilius agreed with Eutychius, approaching [or, interceding with] him by a Letter; yet he would not ſit together with him. But this Rendition is contrary to the meaning of Evagrius, and of Nicephorus himſelf. For Evagrius ſays only this; that Vigilius gave his conſent indeed to thoſe matters which were tranſacted in the Synod; but would not be preſent at it. And the ſame thing is confirmed by the Acts of the Fifth Conſtantinopolitan Synod, pag. 112. From which Acts we are informed, that Pope Vigilius who was then at Conſtantinople (although he had been frequently asked, both by the Emperour Juſtinian, and alſo by all the Biſhops convened in that City, that he would come to the Councill, and had himſelf promiſed that by his Letter; yet) would never come to the Synod. Further, that writing, whereby Evagrius ſays Vgilius had conſented to the determination of the Synod, is nothing elſe but Vigilius's Conſtitution, which Baronius has publiſhed at the year of Chriſt 553; or elſe, the Letter of Pope Vigilius, which Petrus de Marca firſt ſet forth in Greek, together with a moſt Learned diſſertation, which it would be worth while to read. Valeſ.

[f] Whereas the Great God and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt according to the Parable in the Goſpells, &c. And after ſome other words. Beſides all thoſe other Hereticks which are condemned and Anathematized by the four foremen- tioned holy Synods, and by the holy Catholick and Apoſtolick Church; We alſo condemn and Anathematize Theodorus who is ſtyled Biſhop of Mopſueſtia, and his impious writings; alſo, what hath been impiouſly written by Theodoret, both againſt the true Faith, and againſt the Twelve Heads of Cyrillus of Bleſſed memory, and againſt the Firſt Holy Synod at Epheſus; in fine, whatever has been written by the ſame [Theodoret] in defence of Theodorus and Neſtorius. Moreover, we alſo Anathematize that impious Letter ſaid to have been written by Ibas to Maris the Perſian. And after ſome few words, they expounded Fourteen [g] Heads concerning the right and † ſincere Faith.

[f] This ſentence is extant in the Eighth Collation of the Fifth Synod, pag. 112. Valeſ.

† Or, Unblameable.

[g] Theſe fourteen Capitula, or Expoſitions of the true Faith, are extant pag. 1155, and 1166, Synod. Conſtantinop. Valeſ.

And theſe things proceeded in this manner. But, [h] when Libells were delivered in by the Monks Eulogius, Conon, Cyriacus, and Pancratius, againſt the opinions of Origen Adamantius, and againſt the followers of his impiety and errour; Juſtinian conſulted the then convened Synod about theſe matters, having ſubjoyned [to his own Letter] a Copy of the Libell, as alſo what he had written to Vigilius concerning theſe things. From all which it may be gathered, that Origen had made it his buſineſs, to fill the * Purity of the Apoſtolick † Dogmata with [i] Paganiſh and Manichæan Tares. A Relation therefore was tranſmitted to Juſtinian from the Synod, after the Exclamations which they [had heaped together] againſt Origen and thoſe involved in the ſame erroneous Tenets with him. Part of which [Relation] runs thus.

[h] In the Acts of the Fifth Conſtantinopolitane Synod which have come to our hands in the Latine tongue, there is nothing of thoſe things extant which Evagrius ſubjoyns here, to wit, concerning the condemnation of Origen, Evagrius and Didymus. Therefore Baronius with good cauſe thought that thoſe Acts were maimed and imperfect. Nicephorus affirms theſe things to have been done againſt Origen and his followers in the Second Convention: but Theophanes and the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle relate, that the Fifth Synod was principally and moſt eſpecially convened againſt the errours of Origen, Evagrius, and Didymus; but in the ſecond place againſt the Tria Capitula. Valeſ.

* Or, Simplicity.

† Or, Opinions.

[i] Theſe words are taken out of the Emperour Juſtinian's Letter to the Fifth Conſtantinopolitane Synod; part of which Letter is recorded by Cedrenus in his Chronicon. Ἐπεὶ τοίνυν διέγνωσται ἡμῖν ὡς τινὲς ἐν ἱεροσολύμοις εἰσὶ μοναχοὶ ἀπόπυθεν πυθαγόρα καὶ πλατῶνι καὶ ὠριγένει κατακολουθήσαντες, δεῖν ὠήθημεν φρενίδα καὶ ζήτησιν ποιήσασθαι περὶ τούτων, ἵνα μὴ τέλεον διὰ τῆς ἑλληνικῆς καὶ μανιχαϊκῆς ἀπάτης αὐτῶν πολλὰς ἀπολέσωσι. That is, In regard therefore it has been told us, that there are certain Monks at Jeruſalem who were followers of Pythagoras, Plato, and Origen; We were of opinion, that care ought [to be taken] and enquiry made about theſe perſons, leaſt by their Paganiſh [or, Græcian,] and Manichæan errour they ſhould perfectly ruine many perſons. The ſame occurs in the Emperour Juſtinian's Letter to Menas, concerning the Errours of Origen. Valeſ.

You who poſſeſs a mind partaker [k] of a Celeſtiall Nobility, Moſt Chriſtian Emperour! And after ſome other words. We have avoided therefore, we have avoided that [Doctrine.] For we knew not the voice of Strangers. And having ſecurely bound this perſon, as a Thief, and like a Robber, with the Ropes of an Anathema, we have caſt him out of the Sacred Rails. And after ſome few words. But you will know the power and efficacy of the matters which have been tranſacted by us, by the reading thereof.

[k] Τῆς ἀνωθὲν εὐγενείας. I cannot approve of Chriſtophorſon's tranſlation, who turns theſe words thus: Qui animum nobilitatis antiquæ participem tenes, who poſſeſs a mind partaker of Ancient Nobility. Johannes Langus and Muſculus have rendred it better. Langus, in this manner; Qui animum obtines cæleſtis participem gencroſitatis, who have a mind partaker of a celeſtial generoſity. And Muſculus, thus; Animum ſupernæ nobilitatis ſortite Chriſtianiſſime Imperator! You who have gotten a mind of Supernall Nobility, Moſt Chriſtian Emperour! Valeſ.

Hereto

Hereto they also annexed whatever * Heads Origen's followers had [from their Masters] learned to assert; which [Heads] manifested both their agreements, as also their disagreements, and likewise their [l] manifold errour. Amongst these there was a Fifth Head [which contained] the Blasphemies broach't by some private persons of that termed The New Laura; the Contents of which Head run thus. [m] Theodorus Ascidas the Cappadocian said: If the Apostles and the Martyrs doe now work Miracles, and are in so great honour; unless in the Resurrection they shall be made equall to Christ, what manner of Resurrection shall they have? my best remembrance I have noted the same fault some where before this. But the place comes not at present into my mind. Vales.

* Or, Chapters.

[l] Τὴν πολυχρόνιον τῶν πλάνην. In Nicephorus 'tis written truer, thus, πολυχρονίδιον; nor am I of opinion that πολυχρόνιος is a Greek word. To

[m] As far as may be gathered from these words of Evagrius, this Theodorus the Cappadocian was one of the Monks of the New Laura, which was near the City Jerusalem. This therefore is the Theodorus, follower of Nonnus the Origenist, who being afterward made Bishop of Cæsarea in Cappadocia, openly undertook the patronage of the Origenists, as Cyrillus Scythopolitanus relates in the Life of Saint Saba. Further, whereas this Theodorus Bishop of Cæsarea in Cappadocia acted the chief parts, as I may say, in the Fifth Constantinopolitane Synod, as may be seen from its Acts, how is he now accused in the same Synod as an Origenist? We may therefore not without Cause conjecture, that these things which Evagrius, Theophanes, and Cedrenus say were done in the Fifth Synod against Origen, were long after that Synod added to it, on account of the likeness of their Subject: but, were not done in that Synod. So also, the Acts of the Fifth Constantinopolitane Synod under Menas, against Anthimus and Zoaras, were wont to be joyned to this Fifth Oecumenicall Synod, as Photius attests in his Bibliotheca. The same thing may also be proved by what Evagrius subjoyns. For he says, that many impious expressions gathered out of the Books of Evagrius, Didymus, and Theodorus Mopsuestenus, were related to that Synod. Now, if these things had been done in the Fifth Constantinopolitane Synod, as Evagrius says, it would have been altogether superfluous and unusefull, to repeat those expressions of Theodorus, which had so often been rekoned up and condemned in the aboveſaid Synod. My Sentiment therefore is, that these things were acted against Origen in another Constantinopolitane Synod on the year of Christ 538; then, when certain Monks of Jerusalem, who were favoured by Pelagius a Deacon of the Roman Church, and by Menas Bishop of Constantinople, presented a Libell to Justinian, containing certain Heads collected out of Origen's Books; and requesting of the Emperour, that those Heads might be condemned; as Liberatus tells us chap. 23. of his Breviary. See Baronius at the year of Christ 538. Moreover, our conjecture is fully confirmed by what Evagrius writes a little before this; viz. that into those things done against Origen was inserted the Emperour Justinian's Letter to Pope Vigilius concerning the errours of Origen. These matters therefore were not transacted in the Fifth Constantinopolitane Synod on the year of Christ 553. For on that year Vigilius was at Constantinople; nor was there any need that Justinian should treat with him by Letters. Wherefore these things were done against Origen long before, to wit, then when Justinian, having received the Libell of those Palestine Monks, wrote a Letter to Menas Bishop of Constantinople concerning the errours of Origen; giving him order, that when he had assembled the Bishops that were present in the Imperial City, and the Abbots of Monasteries, he should condemn those errours. This Letter of Justinian's is extant in Greek and Latine, published at the end of the Fifth Constantinopolitane Synod. In a place altogether forreign and unfit. For it belongs not to the Fifth Constantinopolitane Synod which was celebrated on the year of Christ 553, but to another Constantinopolitane Synod, which by the Emperour Justinian's order had been convened on the year of Christ 538. Therefore Baronius has rightly placed that Letter of Justinian at that year I have mentioned. Now at the close of his Letter Justinian affirms in expres words, that he had also written a Letter to Vigilius Bishop of Rome upon the same Subject. For thus he says. Hæc porro eadem Scripsimus non modo ad Sanctitatem tuam, &c; Moreover, we have written the very same things not only to your Sanctity, but to the most Holy and most Blessed Vigilius also Pope and Patriarch of the Seniour Rome, and to all the other most Holy Bishops and Patriarchs, of Alexandria, Theopolis, and Jerusalem, that they might both take care of this matter, and also that these things may come to an end. Lastly, those Anathematisms which Nicephorus says were thrown against Origen's opinions in the Fifth Constantinopolitane Synod, occur in the self same words in Justinian's Letter to Menas, which was written long before the Fifth Synod, on the year of Christ 538; as Baronius informs us from Liberatus. The same also may be proved from the Letter which Gregory the Great wrote to the Four Patriarchs in the beginning of his Episcopate. For, although he does expresly profess in that Letter, that with Veneration he gives Reception to the Fifth Constantinopolitane Synod, in which Letter some writings of Ibas, Theodorus, and Theodoret are condemned; yet he says not one word concerning Origen's condemnation. Which certainly he would not have omitted, if Origen had been condemned in that Synod. Vales.

The same Fathers related severall other Blasphemies of Didymus, Evagrius, and Theodorus, which with great diligence they had collected out of their Books. Further, some intervall of time after this Synod, [n] Eutychius is ejected, and [o] Johannes is placed in the Chair of the Constantinopolitane Church in his room. This Johannes was born at [p] Sirimis, which is a Village scituate in the Cynegick Region, in the Antiochian Territory.

[n] These things are written carelesly enough by Evagrius, who has disguised the Cause of Eutychius's deposition, least he should in any wise offend the Memory of the Emperour Justinian. If any one be desirous of reading a compleat Narrative of this matter, 'tis extant in Surius in the Life of the Blessed Patriarch Eutychius, elegantly written by his disciple Eustathius, and in Nicephorus Book 17, Chap. 29. Baronius says that was done on the year of Christ 564, which was the Emperour Justinian's last year. Vales.

[o] This is Johannes Scholasticus who has a Collection of Canons Extant. Victor Thunonensis in his Chronicon, gives us this account of his ordination: Anno 39. Imperii sui Justinianus Eutychium Constantinopolitanum Episcopum, &c. In the 39th year of his Empire Justinian sends into Exile Eutychius Bishop of Constantinople, a Condemner of the three Heads, and of Evagrius the Hermite a Leucon, and of Didymus the Monk an Alexandrian Confessour, whose praises we have produced above from the authority of illustrious men; and in his room makes Johannes Bishop a like [assertour] of the same Errour. Vales.

[p] Ἐκ τῆς σιρίμου. In the excellent Florentine Manuscript I found it written σιρήμου, both here and in the following Chapter. Theophanes makes mention of this Mannour or Village, in his Chronicon pag. 151; where he writes concerning Alamundarus's irruption into Syria; κἀκαυσε (says he,) τὰ ἔξω καλχηδόνος καὶ τὸ σιρήμιον κτῆμα καὶ πᾶν κωμύριον χάραν: that is, And he burnt the outward parts of Chalcis, and [ruined] the Mannour [or, Possession] Sirmium, and the Cynegick Region. In the Greek, instead of καλχηδόνος, Chalcedon, I have mended it thus, χαλκίδος, Chalcis. Vales.

CHAP. XXXIX.

That Justinian * having forsaken the right Faith, asserted the Body of [our] Lord to be incorruptible.

* Or, Being perverted from the right opinion.

AT the same time Justinian † deflected from the right High-way of [Orthodox] Sentiments, and having entred a path untrodden by the Appostles and Fathers, fell into Thorns and Brambles. Wherewith being desirous to fill the Church, he mist of his design; the Lord having securely fenced * the High-way [a] with hedges not to be broken, that Murderers [and Thieves] might not break in, as if the wall had been faln and the Fence broken down: [and thus] he fulfilled the Prophets Prediction. Johannes therefore, who was also termed Catelinus, having [b] succeeded Vigilius in the Bishoprick of the Elder Rome, and Johannes born at Sirimis Governing the Constantinopolitane Church, and Apolinaris that of Alexandria, Anastasius successour to Domninus presiding over the Antiochian Church, and over that at Jerusalem [c] Macarius, who was again restored to his own Chair:

† Or, Turned aside.

* Or, The King's way.

[a] Ἀρρήτοις θείκοις, with unspeakable Hedges. In Nicephorus 'tis truer written, thus, ἀῤῥήκτοις θείκοις, with Hedges not to be broken. Which writing the Tellerian Manuscript confirms. Vales.

[b] Evagrius mistakes. For Johannes succeeded not Vigilius, but Pelagius was his successour. After whose death, Johannes Junior undertook the Episcopate of the Church of Rome, on the year of Christ 560. Vales.

[c] This place is chiefly to be taken notice of against the Sentiment of Baronius, who believed Macarius was restored to his own See before the Fifth Constantinopolitane Synod. But this passage of Evagrius refutes Baronius's opinion; Evagrius informing us here, that Macarius's Restitution was made long before that Synod. To Evagrius agrees Victor Trunonensis in his Chronicon, in these words: Anno 37. Imperii Justiniani, &c. On the 37th year of Justinian's Empire, Eustochius Bishop of Jerusalem who had been ordained whilst Macarius was alive, is ejected: and Macarius is again put into his own See. But Theophanes, in his Chronicon, places Macarius's Restitution on the times of Justinus Junior, as I have observed above. Vales.

* Juſtinian. when * he had Anathematized Origen, Didymus, and Evagrius, after Euſtochius's depoſition; Juſtinian writes that which amongſt the Romans is called an Edict, wherein he has termed the Body of [our] Lord incorruptible; and incapable of Naturall and irreprehenſible † paſſions; affirming that [our] Lord ate in the ſame manner before his Paſſion, as he did eat after his Reſurrection, his moſt holy Body having received no change or alteration from its very Formation in the Womb, neither in the Voluntary and Naturall Paſſions, nor yet after [his] Reſurrection. To which [Aſſertions] Juſtinian [reſolved] to force the Prelates in all places to give their aſſent. But when all of them affirmed, that they earneſtly expected [the opinion of] Anaſtaſius Biſhop of Antioch, they [thereby] repreſt the [Emperour's] firſt Attempt.

† Or, Affections.

CHAP. XL.

Concerning Anaſtaſius Arch-Biſhop of Antioch.

MOreover, This Anaſtaſius [was a perſon] both incomparably well skilled in the Sacred Scriptures, and alſo accurate in his Moralls and way of living: in ſo much that he would * take conſideration about the moſt triviall matters, nor would he † deflect at any time from a conſtancy and firmneſs, much leſs in things momentous, and which had a relation to the Deity it ſelf. And he had * tempered his diſpoſition ſo, that neither an eaſineſs of acceſs to and conference with him, might render him expoſed to what was unmeet and inconvenient; nor ſhould an Auſterity and Rigour make him inacceſſible in relation to what was fit and rationall. In [conferences that were] weighty and Serious, he was of a ready ear, and fluent Tongue: But in [diſcourſes that were] impertinent and ſuperfluous, he had his ears perfectly ſhut. A bridle repreſt his tongue in ſuch a manner, that he † meaſured his diſcourſe with reaſon, and rendred Silence far better than talke. This perſon therefore Juſtinian makes an Attack againſt, as againſt ſome inexpugnable Tower, and ſets upon him with all manner of Engines; conſidering with himſelf, that if he could ruine [a] this [Tower,] he ſhould afterwards become Maſter of the City with eaſe, enſlave the Doctrine of the true Faith, and lead captive the Sheep of Chriſt.

* Or, Obſerve.
† Or, Make an excurſion.
* Or, Mixt.
† Or, Directed his diſcourſe by reaſon.

[a] Ἐι τοῦτο καθαιρεθείη. In Nicephorus and the Tellerian Manuſcript it is truer written, thus, εἰ τοῦτον καθαιρεθείη, if he could ruine this [Tower.] For ſo the Rules of Grammer require it ſhould be 'Tis a Metaphor drawn from Machines uſed in Sieges, wherewith Cities are wont to be aſſaulted. Further, concerning the conſtancy of this Anaſtaſius Sinaïta in defending the true Faith againſt the Hereſie of the Aphthartodocitæ, Euſtathius writes alſo in the Life of the Bleſſed Eutychius Patriarch of Conſtantinople. Valeſ.

But Anaſtaſius by a divine heighth of mind raiſed himſelf ſo far [above the Emperour,] (for he ſtood upon a Rock of Faith not to be broken;) that by his own Relation ſent to Juſtinian, he openly contradicted him, and in the ſame [Relation] demonſtrated [to him] moſt perſpicuouſly and with great eloquence, that the Body of [our] Lord was corruptible in paſſions naturall and irreprehenſible, and that the Divine Apoſtles and * Holy Fathers both thought and taught ſo. The ſame anſwer he returned to the Monks of the Firſt and Second Syria, who had conſulted him: and he confirmed the minds of all perſons, and † prepared for the Conflict, reciting daily in the Church that ſaying of that Veſſell of Election; * If any one preach any other Goſpell unto you, than that you have received, though he be an Angell from Heaven, let him be accurſed. Which [words] when all perſons had || weighed in their minds, a very ſmall number only excepted, they imitated him. The ſame Anaſtaſius wrote a [b] Valedictory Oration to the Antiochians, after he had received information, that Juſtinian was reſolved to ſend him into Baniſhment. Which Oration is deſervedly delightfull and admirable, for the elegancy of its words, the abundance of its * ſententious expreſſions, the frequent quotations of Sacred Scripture, [c] and for the Accommodateneſs of the Hiſtory.

* Or, Divine.
† Ἐπαλειφων, anointed himſelf.
* Galat. 1. 8, 9.
|| Or, Looks on.
[b] Σωτηριωδεις πρὸς τὸν ἀντιοχέων λόγος. 'Tis ſtrange that three Tranſlatours, Langus, Muſculus, and Chriſtophorſon, ſhould all miſtake in the Rendition of one word. The Grecians termed σωτηριακὸς and σωτηριώδεις λόγους, Valedictory, or, Farwell Orations, and have handed down to us the peculiar method of Thoſe Orations, as I have remarked in My Notes upon Euſebius's Life of Conſtantine, book 3. chap. 21, note (a.) Valeſ.
* Or, Sentences.

[c] Καὶ τὸ περίφορον τῆς ἱστορίας. Sr Henry Savil at the margin of his copy has mended it, καὶ τὸ περιφόρως. For ſo the Rules of Grammar require it ſhould be. But I have obſerved that the Rules of Grammar are ſometimes deſpiſed by our Evagrius. Nicephorus, when he wrote out this paſſage of Evagrius, inſtead of the Conjunctive Particle, ſubſtituted a Præpoſition, in this manner, πρὸς τὸ περίφορον τῆς ἱστορίας. Valeſ.

CHAP. XLI.

Concerning the death of Juſtinian.

BUt this Oration was not publiſhed, God having provided ſome better thing for us. For Juſtinian, whilſt he dictated a ſentence of Deportation againſt Anaſtaſius and the Prelates about him, was inviſibly wounded, and ended his life, after he had Reigned in all Thirty eight years and eight months.

The End of the Fourth Book of Evagrius's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory.

THE

THE FIFTH BOOK OF THE Ecclesiastical History OF EVAGRIUS SCHOLASTICUS Epiphaniensis, And [one] of the EX-PRÆFECTS.

CHAP. I.

Concerning the Election of [the Emperour] Justinus, and concerning his Moralls.

WHen therefore Justinian in this manner had fill'd all places with Disquietude and Tumults, and at the close of his Life had received the condign reward of such [Actings,] he departed to the infernall * punishments: but Justinus his Sister's Son, who was intrusted with the custody of the [Imperial] Pallace, which [Grand Officer] the Roman Tongue terms [a] Curopalates, is invested with the purple after his [death:] neither Justinian's departure, nor the Election of Justinus having been made known to any person, save to those that were his Confidents, till such time as he appeared at the * Ludi Circenses, † in order to his performing and undertaking what usually belongs to an Emperour.

* Or, Judicatories.

[a] Concerning the Office of the Curopalates, much hath been already said by many persons, to repeat which here is superfluous; we will remark this only, that the Curopalates always went before with a Golden Rod, as often as the Emperour would appear in publick. Cassiodorus tells us this, in his Formula Curæ palatii, in these words: Considera quâ Gratificatione tractéris, &c. Consider with what Gratification you are treated, how being adorned with a Golden Rod, amongst numerous obeysances, you seem to go first before the Royall feet. So also Corippus in Book 2. Chap. 7. De Laudibus Justini Minoris; where he describes Justinus's procession to the Cirque [in these words,]

* Or, Running of Horses in the Cirque.

† Or, About to doe and submit himself to the usages of an Empire.

——————Tunc ordine longo
Incedunt summi proceres, fulgensque Senatus,
Ipse inter primos vultu præclarus honoro,
Fratris in obsequium gaudens Marcellus abibat.
Dispositorque novus sacræ Baduarius Aulæ,
Successor Soceri, fastus mox Curopalates.

Concerning this Golden Rod which was wont to be carried before the Roman Emperours, Paulus Silentiarius speaks, in his description of the Church of Saint Sophia, not far from the beginning.

——————Ὀρνύμενον δὲ
Ὡς δέμις, ἠὲ ἀνέμιμνε σωέμποροι ἀσπιδιώτην,
Οὐ χρυσῆν πνα ῥάβδον, ἀεὶ περικάλλιθεν ἀνάκλων.

For I assent not to that Learned man, who hath rendred it, Aureas Secures, Golden Axes. And at first this dignity was small, for it was under the dispose of the Castrensis [See Dr Howells History, Second part, pag 64.] of the Sacred Pallace. But afterwards it began to be accounted the chiefest dignity of the Pallace, from such time as Justinus Nephew to Justinian bore it. It was a Civil, not a Military dignity, as Alemannus thought, who (in his Notes on Procopius's Historia Arcana,) confounds the Curopalates with the Comes Excubitorum. Vales.

After these [Solemnities] therefore were over, when nothing of an * opposition had in any wise been attempted [against him,] he returned to the Pallace. [By] the first Edict he promulged, the [b] Prelates who had been convened in all places, were sent home to their own Sees, in order to their worshipping God in the usuall and received manner, no Innovation being made in relation to the Faith. And this Action done by him was highly commendable. But, as to his Life, he was dissolute, and * altogether a slave to Luxuries and † obscene pleasures: so ardent a lover also of other mens money, that he sold all things for illegall gain, and revered not the Deity even in the Ecclesiastick preferments, which he made his markets of to any persons he could meet with, and publickly proposed even these to sale. Moreover, being possest [c] with [two most contrary] Vices, Boldness and Sloth, in the first place he caused his [d] kinsman Justinus to be sent for, a personage of an universall honour and esteem, both for his skill in Military affairs, and for those other dignities [which he had born:] he at that time made his residence about the Danube, and hindred the Abari from passing that River.

* Or, Innovation.

[b] Τὰς ἀπαυλαχῆ συναγωγὰς ἱερέας. Nicephorus (book 17. chap. 33.) took these words of Evagrius as meant of the Bishops, who had been banished by Justinian into various places for their defence of the true Faith. But that word συναγωγὰς can not bear this interpretation. Therefore Christophorson chose to interpret this place concerning the Bishops, who from all places had been assembled together at Constantinople. But neither can I approve of this Rendition; in regard Evagrius says those Bishops were not convened at Constantinople, but ἀπαυταχῆ, that is, in all places. Vales.

* Or, openly involved in.

† Or, Immense.

[c] Ταῖς κακίαις. Some word seems to be wanting, which may be supplied in this manner; ταῖς ἐναντιωτάταις κακίαις, most contrary Vices. And so Christophorson seems to have read. Vales. See chap. 19. note (d.)

[d] This Justinus was Son to Germanus Patritius, and Cousin-germane to the Emperour Justinus, as Johannes Biclarensis informs us in his Chronicon. Indeed, Germanus and Justinus Junior were akin. For Germanus was Justinian's Nephew by his Brother. But the Emperour Justinus was the Son of Vigilantia Justinian's Sister. Further, this Justinus Son to Germanus had born the Consulate in the year of Christ 540. The Emperour Justinian had created the same person

Maſter of the Milice throughout Colchis and Armenia, in place of Martinus, as Agathias writes in his Fourth Book; but afterwards he made the ſame perſon Maſter of the Milice throughout the Thracia's; as Menander Protector declares in the Firſt Book of his Hiſtory, pag. 99. Valeſ.

The Abari are a Scythick Nation who live in Waggons, and inhabit the * Regions ſcituate beyond Caucaſus. Which people, in regard they had been ſorely afflicted by the [c] Turks their Neighbours, [left their habitation, and] with their whole Families fled from them, and came to the Boſphorus. Then leaving the Shore of that termed the Euxine Sea, (where many barbarous Nations who had left their own dwellings, inhabited; moreover, Cities, * Caſtra, and [f] ſome Stations had been built [there] by the Romans, when either † Veterane Souldiers, or Colonies had been ſent thither by the Emperours:) they continued on their journey, engaging all the Barbarians they met with, till ſuch time as they were arrived at the Banks of the Danube, and [g] had ſent Embaſſadours to Juſtinian. From thence therefore Juſtinus was ſent for, on pretence as if he were to enjoy [the advantage of] that Compact which had been made betwixt him and the Emperour Juſtinus. For, in regard both of them were equall as to their Secular Grandeur and Power, and whereas the Empire * hung as it were betwixt them; after many debates they had come to this agreement, that he who was arrived at the Empire, ſhould give the other the Second place; that ſo, by being Second in the Empire, he might be Firſt in reſpect of all other perſons.

* Or, Fields.

[c] In what manner theſe Abari, or Abares, having been vanquiſhed by the Turks, betook themſelves into Europe, Theophilactus Simocatta relates, Book 7. Chap. 7. Valeſ.

* Or, Camps.

[f] Καὶ τινες πρεσβυτικὰς ὁρμήσεις. In Nicephorus Book 17. Chap. 34, and in the Tellerian Manuſcript, 'tis written in one word, thus, πρεσβυτικήσεις, Stations, or Landing places; which I rather approve of. But I think this whole place muſt be thus written, ἔνθα συχνὰ μὲν ἔθνη βαρβαρικὰ ὠκίδισαν· ὠκίδισαν δὲ καὶ τοῦ ῥωμαίων πόλεις τε καὶ στρατόπεδα, &c, where many Barbarous Nations, &c, according as we have rendred it. Valeſ.

† Or, Diſabled.

[g] In Juſtiniani Auguſtus's times, the Abares having paſſed into Europe, became firſt known to the Romans, as Theophilactus Simocatta relates in Book 7. Chap. 8: for when they had come to the places of Scythia and Mæſia, they ſent Embaſſadours to Juſtinian, on the thirty firſt year of Juſtinian's Empire, as Theophanes relates in his Chronicon, and Anaſtaſius Bibliothecarius. But Victor Thunonenſis mentions this Embaſſy a little later. Poſt Conſulatum, &c. After the Conſulate of the moſt famous perſonage Baſilius on the twenty third year; the Emperour Juſtinian makes the Embaſſadours of the Nation of the Abari whence they had come, &c. This was the thirty ſixth year of Juſtinian's Empire. Concerning the ſame Embaſſy of the Abares to Juſtinian, Menander Protector is to be conſulted in the Firſt Book of his Hiſtory, pag. 99 of the King's Edition, where he excellently well deſcribes that Embaſſy, and confirms Victor Thunonenſis's opinion. For he ſays, that Juſtinian died not long after. Valeſ.

* Or, Enclined to both of them.

CHAP. II.

Concerning the Murder of Juſtinus Kinſman to the Emperour Juſtinus.

[THe Emperour] Juſtinus therefore received Juſtinus with great appearances of kindneſs and friendſhip; but ſoon after he framed [various] cauſes and pretences, and [by degrees] deprived him of his * Satellites, his Domeſticks, and the Protectors of his Body, and [a] forbids him Acceſs to himſelf: [b] for he ſate at home.

* Guards, or, Partiſans.

[a] Τοὺς τε παρ' αὐτῷ πρεσβύτας. Nicephorus took away the Præpoſition here. For he has expreſt this place of Evagrius thus: καὶ τοὺς αὐτῷ πρεσβύτας ἀνείργε, and hindred him from going abroad. But I had rather write with Evagrius, τούς τε παρ' αὐτὸν πρεσβύτας εἶργεν. Which reading I have followed in my Verſion. Valeſ.

[b] Καθῆστο γὰρ ἔνδον. Nicephorus and Chriſtophorſon underſtood theſe words of Evagrius concerning Juſtinus kinſman to the Emperour Juſtinus. But I had rather take them as meant of the Emperour Juſtinus himſelf. For he being ſickly, for the moſt part ſate at home, and forbad his kinſman Juſtinus acceſs to himſelf. Indeed, Cedrenus and Zonaras do atteſt what I have ſaid concerning Juſtinus; For Cedrenus's words are theſe: ἦν δὲ ὁ Ἰωάννης σωματικῶς νοσηλεύόμενος καὶ σκυθρωπάζων, καὶ μὴ δυνάμενος περέρχεσθαι, This Juſtinus was continually ſick, and diſmal-ſighted, and unable to come abroad. Valeſ.

[At length] by Juſtinus's order [c] he is removed to the Great City Alexandria; where he is moſt inhumanely murdered in the dead of the night, whilſt he lay in his bed; this being the reward he received for his kindneſs to the Republick, and for thoſe eminent Services he had performed in the Wars. Nor would the Emperour Juſtinus and his wife Sophia abate of their rage, or could they ſatiate their burning fury [conceived againſt Juſtinus,] till ſuch time as they had ſeen his head after 'twas cut off, and had trampled it under their feet.

[c] Ἐξωρίσθη, is brought home. I had rather read ἐξωρίζεται, is removed. So in the foregoing chapter, where the reading is ἐσωκίσθη δὲ, &c; Nicephorus reads, ἐξωκίσθη, and underſtands that place of Evagrius concerning the Barbarians who had been carried thither by the Romans. Further, this Juſtinus was made Auguſtalis and Dux of Alexandria, by the Emperour Juſtinus in the ſixth year of his Empire, as Theophanes and Cedrenus do relate. Cedrenus's words are theſe: ἀκούσας δὲ Ἰωάννης, ὅτι ὁ ἀνεψιὸς αὐτοῦ Ἰουστῖνος, ὃς ἦν δοὺξ ἀλεξανδρείας συσκευὴν μελετᾷ κατὰ τοῦ βασιλέως, πέμψας αὐτὸν ἀπεφάλισε, But Juſtinus having heard that his kinſman, who was Auguſtalis and Dux of Alexandria, meditated treachery againſt the Emperour, he ſent and beheaded him. Write thus, ὃς ἦν αὐγουσταλιὸς καὶ δοὺξ ἀλεξανδρείας, according as the reading is in Theophanes. For theſe two dignities, Auguſtalis and Dux, although they were diſtinct, yet were now and then given to one and the ſame perſon by the Emperours, as may be proved by many inſtances. Further, this dignity was beſtowed on Juſtinus by the Emperour, not in honour to him, but rather that he might ſend him far off from the Imperial City. Therefore the City Alexandria was to Juſtinus inſtead of a priſon. Hence 'tis, that Theophanes in his Chronicon relates, that Juſtinus Auguſtus detained his Coſin-German Juſtinus priſoner as 'twere at Alexandria. Moreover, Johannes Biclarienſis, in his Chronicon, places the murder of this Juſtinus on the ſecond year of Juſtinus Junior's Empire; to wit on the ſame year whereon Ætherius and Addæus had a capitall puniſhment inflicted on them. And this is more agreeable to the account given here by Evagrius. Valeſ.

CHAP. III.

Concerning thoſe Miſcreants Addæus and Ætherius.

MOreover, [a] not long after, the Emperour delivered up Ætherius and Addæus, (perſons of the [b] Senatorian Order, who had been great Favourites of the Emperour Juſtinian's,) to a judiciary proceſs, they being charged with an accuſation of High-Treaſon. Of theſe two, Ætherius confeſſed that he deſigned to kill the Emperour by Poyſon, and ſaid that he had Addæus his Accomplice in this attempt, and his Aſſiſtant in all [his other deſignes.] But Addæus with horrid Oaths affirmed, that he was wholly ignorant of theſe [Treaſons.] Nevertheleſs, both of them were beheaded. Addæus at ſuch time as his head was cut off, affirmed, that in this matter he had been falſely accuſed, but that he was deſervedly puniſhed by [divine] Juſtice, which inſpects all affairs wherever tranſacted: for [he ſaid] that by Magick he had murdered Theodotus the Præfectus Prætorio.

[a] Οὐ μετὰ πολὺ δὲ καὶ. The former negative particle muſt be expunged, as being altogether ſuperfluous. Valeſ.

[b] The words of Johannes Biclarienſis in his Chronicon are theſe: Anno Secundo mense principis, &c. On the ſecond year of the mentioned Emperour, in the Imperial City, Ætherius and Addæus Patritii, being detected whilſt by Phyſitians they attempted to kill Juſtinus by Poyſon rather than ſword, are ordered to be puniſhed with a capitall ſentence: the former was devoured by wild Beaſts, the ſecond was burnt to death. I know not whether Johannes Biclarienſis termed theſe men Patritii inſtead of Senators; but there is a great difference between the Patritian and Senatorian dignity. Concerning the ſame Ætherius and Addæus, Euſtathius in the Life of Eutychius Patriarch of Conſtantinople, writes thus: Quâ quidem die, id eſt, tertiâ Octobris, &c; On which day, that is the third of October, thoſe perſons alſo who had framed Plots againſt the holy man and had caſt him into Exile, [I mean] Ætherius and Addæus, the latter of whom was Præfect of the City, and the former was Curator of [the houſe of] Antiochus, died, &c. Valeſ.

But

But I cannot positively affirm whither or no these things were so: however, they were both most flagitious wretches. Addæus was a Notorious * Sodomite. And Ætherius omitted no sort of Calumny, but preyed upon the Estates as well of the living, as of the dead, in the name of that Imperial [c] House, of which he was Curator [or, Governour,] during the Empire of Justinian. And such was the conclusion of these matters.

* Or, Buggerer.

[c] He means the house of Antiochus, of which Ætherius was Curator, as Eustathius attests in the place just now cited: ille autem Antiochiæ Curator. Eustathius's words in Greek, if I mistake not, are these; ὁ δὲ ἐπίτροπος τῆς ἀντιόχου, that is, But Ætherius Curator of the House of Antiochus. The same Eustathius makes mention of this house, where he describes in what manner Eutychius was ejected out of the Imperial City: Dicebant enim quidam graves viri, &c. For some grave men said, if he should go out of the Sacred Temple, he would be killed. For some Armed men, who were placed in the Mannour-House of Antiochus, stayed for him without, for that purpose. Theophilactus mentions the same Imperial House in his third Book, Chapter 3. There were many such houses at Constantinople, as the House of Placidia, the House of Flaccilla, the House of Hormisda, and severall others belonging to the Emperour: each of which Houses had its Curator, who look't after that House or Pallace, and all its Revenues. These Officers are termed Curæ Palatiorum in the Notitia of the Roman Empire, under the disposse of the Castrensis of the Sacred Pallace. But then, the dignity of these Curators was the chiefest, and their Title was Most Glorious and Most Magnificent; as Tiberius Augustus's Constitution de Domibus Imperialibus informs us. Vales.

CHAP. IV.

Concerning the Edict of our Faith, which Justinus wrote to the Christians in all places.

MOreover, the same Justinus wrote an Edict to the Christians in all places, [the Contents] whereof [ran] in these expres words. IN THE NAME OF THE LORD JESUS CHRIST OUR GOD, EMPEROUR CÆSAR FLAVIUS JUSTINUS, FAITHFULL IN CHRIST, MILD, THE GREATEST, BENEFICENT, ALEMANICUS, GOTTHICUS, GERMANICUS, ANTICUS, FRANCICUS, ERULICUS, GEPÆDICUS, PIOUS, HAPPY, GLORIOUS, VICTOR, TRIUMPHATOR, ALWAYS ADORABLE, AUGUSTUS. * My peace I give unto you, says the Lord Christ, our true God. My peace I leave with you, declares the same [Christ] to all men. The purport of which [expressions] is nothing else, but that those who believe in him should † unite in one and the same Church: being of the same mind in relation to the true ‖ Faith of the Christians, and having an aversion for them who affirm or think the contrary. For, the * Primary safety [which] has been appointed to all men, [is] the Confession of the true Faith. Wherefore, We also following the Evangelick Admonitions, and the Holy Symboll, or Creed of the Holy Fathers, do exhort all men to betake themselves to one and the same Church and Opinion: believing in the Father, in the Son, and in the Holy Spirit, in the Consubstantiall Trinity, in the One Deity, or Nature and † Essence, both in word and deed, and ‖ asserting One Might and Power and Operation, in the three Hypostasis*'s or Persons, into which we have been baptized, in which we have believed, and to which we have been conjoyned. For we adore the Unity in the Trinity, and the Trinity in the Unity, which hath an admirable both Division, and* * Unition: an Unity in respect of the † Essence or Deity: but a Trinity in respect of the proprieties or Hypostasis*'s or Persons. For, that we may so speak, it is indivisibly divided, and divisibly conjoyned. For* [there is] One in Three, [to wit,] the Deity, and Three [are] One, in whom [namely] is the Deity, or, to speak more accurately, which [are] the Deity it self: God the Father, God the Son, God the Holy Ghost, when as each Person is considered by himself; the mind [to wit] dividing those things which are inseperable: the Three [Persons being one] God, understood together, on account of the same Motion and the same Nature. For we ought both to confess one God, and also to assert Three * Hypostasis*'s or Proprieties. But we Confess him, the only Begotten Son of God, God the Word, who was begotten of the Father before Ages and without time, not made; in the last days to have descended from Heaven on our account and for our Salvation, and to have been incarnate by the Holy Ghost, and of our Lady the Holy Glorious* Theotocos and Ever-Virgin Mary, and to have been born of her: [a] who is our Lord Jesus Christ, one of the Holy Trinity, Glorified together with the Father and the Holy Spirit. who is to the Father and to the Holy Ghost. In Nicephorus, Book 17. Chap. 35, where this Edict of the Emperour Justinus concerning the Faith is recorded, this place is read thus: ὃς ἐστὶ τῷ πατρὶ καὶ τῷ ἁγίῳ πνεύματι ἴσος, who is equall to the Father and to the Holy Spirit. Which reading Christophorson hath followed. For he renders it thus; Qui est equalis Patri & Spiritui Sancto, who is equall to the Father and to the Holy Spirit. But in this place the equality of the Father and Son is not treated of: but, whether Christ be one of the Trinity. I have therefore supplyed this place righter from the excellent Florentine Manuscript, in this manner; ὃς ἐστιν ὁ κύριος ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς ὁ εἷς τῆς ἁγίας τριάδος, συνδοξούμενος τῷ πατρὶ καὶ τῷ ἁγίῳ πνεύματι, who is our Lord Jesus Christ, &c. The Tellerian M. S. has it written thus: ὃς ἐστιν ἐν τῷ πατρὶ καὶ τῷ ἁγίῳ πνεύματι, who is in the Father and in the Holy Spirit. Vales. In Robert Stephens the reading is the same with that set at the beginning of this note.

* John 14. 27.

† Or, Run together into.

‖ Or, Opinion.

* Or, First Salvation.

† Or, Substance.

‖ Or, Glorifying.

* Or, Joyning together.

† Or, Substance.

* Or, Subsistences.

[a] Ὃς ἐστὶ τῷ πατρὶ καὶ τῷ ἁγίῳ πνεύματι,

For the holy Trinity hath not received an addition of a Fourth Person, although one of the holy Trinity God the Word hath been incarnate: but he is One and the same our Lord Jesus Christ, Consubstantiall to God and the Father according to the Deity, and the same [Person is] of the same substance with us in respect of the Humanity: passible in the flesh, and the same [Person] impassible in the Deity. For we acknowledge not One God the Word who wrought Miracles, and another who suffered: but we confess One and the same our Lord Jesus Christ God the Word, to have been incarnate and perfectly made man, and that the Miracles † belong both to One and the same, as likewise the sufferings, which he Voluntarily underwent in the flesh on account of our Salvation. For * a man gave not himself for us; but God the Word himself, made man without [any] Conversion, ‖ underwent both a Spontaneous Passion, and a death in the Flesh for us. Although therefore we confess him to be God, yet we deny not that the same person is also Man: and by our confessing him to be man, we deny not the same Person to be also God. Whence, whilst we profess one and the same [Person] our Lord Jesus Christ to be * compounded of both Natures, the Deity and the Humanity, [b] we introduce not a Confusion into the Unition.

† Or, Are of.

* Or, a certain, or, some one man.

‖ Or, Received.

* Or, Made up.

[b] Σύγχυσιν τῇ ἑνώσει οὐκ εἰσαγόμεν. Christophorson has rendred this place ill, in this manner: Non Confusionem in Unitatem introducimus, We introduce not a confusion into the Unity. Nor has Musculus done righter; who translates it thus: Unitatem non confundimus, We confound not the Unity. I do not wonder at Musculus, who in this Edict of Justinus always renders ἕνωσιν Unitatem, Unity, very erroneously. That Learned man hath committed the same mistake, who has done into Latine the Fragments of Ephræmius Bishop of Antioch, which are extant in Photius's Bibliotheca. But why Christophorson, who every where renders ἕνωσιν, Copulationem, Copulation, should at this place tranſlate it otherwiſe, I know not. Johannes Langus Nicephorus's Tranſlatour renders it thus: In Unione confuſionem non inducimus, We induce not a confuſion in the Union. Exactly right, if you add a Syllable, in this manner, in Unitione, in the Unition. For the term Unio, though it be now a days frequently uſed in the Schools of Philoſophers and Divines, is a barbarous word, when 'tis taken for Unition. For Unio in Latine ſignifies Unitatem, Unity; as may be proved from Tertullian, Jerome, Prudentius, Pope Simplicius, and others. Let therefore thoſe Zoili [Carpers, or, Cenſurers] ceaſe reproving of us, becauſe in the Letter of Alexander Biſhop of Alexandria, which is recorded by Socrates book 1. chap. 6, we have tranſlated μοναδα, Union. For we did that from the uſe and propriety of the Latine Tongue: which they being wholly ignorant of, thought that Unio, Union, was nothing elſe but Unitionem, Unition. But, betwixt Unio and Unitio, there is as much difference, as between μονας and ἑνωσις. In Union or Unity, there is nothing but what is ſimple or ſingle. But, in Unition ſomething compounded of two is neceſſarily underſtood. 'Tis certain, the Old Tranſlatour of the Chalcedon Synod always renders ἑνωσις, Unition, or adunation. Valeſ.

* Or, Shall not. † Or, So as we are. ‖ Sublimity, or Eminency. * Or, Being both at the ſame time.

For he * will not ceaſe to be God, becauſe † agreeably to us he was made man: nor again, becauſe by Nature he is God, and cannot receive a likeneſs to us, will he refuſe to be man. For, as he hath continued God in the Humanity, ſo alſo [though] exiſting in the ‖ Majeſty of the Deity, he nevertheleſs [continues] Man: * exiſting Both in the ſame, and [is] One God and alſo Man, The Emmanuel. [Further, whereas] we confeſs him perfect in the Deity, and perfect in the Humanity, of which [two] he is alſo made up, [yet] † we bring not in a particular Diviſion or Section upon his one compounded Hypoſtaſis: but we ſhow the difference of the Natures, which is not deſtroyed [or, taken away] by the Unition. For, neither has the Divine Nature been changed into the Humane, nor hath the Humane Nature been converted into the Divine. But both [Natures] [c] being underſtood, or rather exiſting in the definition and ‖ manner of the proper Nature, we affirm that the Unition was made according to the perſon: now, the Unition according to the perſon imports, that God the Word, that is one Perſon of the Three perſons of the Deity, was united not to a præ-exiſting Man, but in the Womb of our Lady the Holy-Glorious Theotocos and Ever-Virgin Mary; that from her he framed to himſelf in a proper Perſon Fleſh of the ſame ſubſtance with us and ſubject to like paſſions in all things, ſin only excepted, and that it was enlivened with a rationall and intelligent Soul. [d] For he had a Perſon in himſelf, and was made Man, and is One and the ſame our Lord Jeſus Chriſt Glorified together with the Father and the Holy Ghoſt. [Moreover,] weighing in our minds his ineffable Unition, we rightly confeſs one Nature incarnate of God the Word, which in the Fleſh is enlivened with a rationall and intelligent Soul. And again, taking into conſideration the difference of the Natures, we aſſert them to be two, introducing no manner of Diviſion. For each Nature is in him. Wherefore, we confeſs One and the ſame Chriſt, One Son, One Perſon, One Hypoſtaſis, [to be] God and alſo Man.

† Διαίρεσιν μὲν οὐ τοιαύτην ἀναπλάττομεν, ἢ τοιοῦν ἐκ διαφέρουσῶν τῶν μιᾶς αὐτοῦ συνθέτου ὑποστάσεως.

[c] Νοουμένης δὲ μᾶλλον καὶ ὑπαρχούσης. In Nicephorus 'tis truer written, thus; νοουμένης δὲ καὶ ὑπαρχούσης μᾶλλον, &c. But, I had rather read thus; νοουμένης δὲ, μᾶλλον δὲ καὶ ὑπαρχούσης, being underſtood, or rather exiſting, &c. Nor do I doubt but the Emperour Juſtinus wrote ſo as I have ſaid: For he reproves himſelf, becauſe he had ſaid, νοουμένης, being underſtood; as if the difference of the two Natures in Chriſt were in the underſtanding only, and did not really exiſt. Valeſ.

‖ Λόγῳ, Form, fashion, ſtate.

[d] Ἐν αὐτῷ ὃ ἔχε πλὴν ὑποστάσιν. In Nicephorus the reading is ἐν αὐτῇ, underſtand τῇ σαρκὶ, in the very Fleſh. Which reading is not tollerable. For Chriſt had not a proper ſubſiſtency in the Fleſh, but before he aſſumed Fleſh, he had a proper ſubſiſtency, in regard he was the ſecond perſon of the Sacred Trinity. Nevertheleſs, if any one be minded to defend Nicephorus's reading, I ſhall not much gainſay it For it more fitly coheres with the words preceding. The ſenſe therefore is this, that the Son of God, who had a proper ſubſiſtency from all Eternity, having aſſumed Fleſh, ſubſiſted therein perſonally. Valeſ.

But all thoſe, who have thought or do think contrary hereto, we Anathematize, and judge them eſtranged from the Holy Catholick and Apoſtolick Church of God. Whereas therefore the true * Dogmata, which have been delivered to us by the Holy Fathers, are aſſerted; We exhort you all to Concur in one and the ſame Catholick and Apoſtolick Church; yea rather, we beſeech you. For we are not aſhamed, though placed in the ſublimity of Royalty, to make uſe of ſuch expreſſions [e] for the Conſent and Union of all Chriſtians, to the end one Glorification may be † attributed to the Great God and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; and that in future no perſon might pretend to quarrell [f] about the Perſons or the Syllables. For the Syllables tend to one and the ſame right Faith and meaning: that Uſage and ‖ Form, which hitherto hath obtained in God's Holy Catholick and Apoſtolick Church, [remaining] in all things firm and without Innovation, and continuing [ſo] to all Futurity.

* Points, or Opinions

† Sent forth.

‖ Scheme, or, State.

To this Edict all perſons gave their conſent, and affirmed [that the Faith and Doctrine] was [therein] Orthodoxly promulged: but yet it reduced not ſo much as one [of the Churche's members,] which had been rent inſunder, to an Unity, becauſe [the Emperour] in expreſs words had declared, that [the State of] the Churches had been preſerved firm and without Innovation, and for the time yet to come [ſhould ſo continue.]

[e] Ὑπὲρ τῆς, &c. I am of the ſame mind with the Learned, who have long ſince mended it, ὑπὲ τῆς, for the, &c. Although Nicephorus has retained the vulgar reading. Valeſ.

[f] Περὶ προσώπων καὶ συλλαβῶν. The firſt word προσώπων, perſons, is uſed on account of Neſtorius's Hereſie, who aſſerted two perſons in Chriſt, the one of man, the other of the Word. But the word συλλαβὰς Syllables was annext on account of the Eutychians and Accephali, who affirmed that Chriſt conſiſted of two Natures before the Unition; but after the Unition, they aſſerted but one Nature in him. On the other hand, the Catholicks adored Chriſt in two Natures. Thoſe Syllables therefore are ἐν and ἐκ. Which though they are different, yet if they be rightly underſtood, do both aim at one and the ſame Faith and Opinion, as Juſtinus adds. See Evagrius above, at book 1. chap. 1 note (c.) Further, this Edict was promulged by Juſtinus Junior on the firſt year of his Empire, to wit the year of Chriſt 566, as Baronius remarks: than which Edict Juſtinus conferred nothing more upon the Catholick Church: but, ſatisfying himſelf in having only expounded the Orthodox Faith, he in future prohibited diſputes about the Neſtorian and Eutychian Opinion, and permitted every one to think of theſe matters according to his own arbitrement. From this Edict therefore followed no advantage, as Evagrius obſerves truly. Wherefore Johannes Biclarienſis [ſaid] amiſs in his Chronicon, whoſe words concerning Juſtinus Junior are theſe: Qui Juſtinus anno primo Regni ſui, &c; Which Juſtinus in the firſt year of his Reign, deſtroyed thoſe things which had been deviſed againſt the Chalcedon Synod. And ſuffered the Creed of the Holy Fathers of the Church convened at Conſtantinople, (which Creed had been laudably received in the Chalcedon Synod,) to have entrance, and to be ſung by the people in every Catholick Church, before the Lords Prayer was to be repeated. Biclarienſis attributes thoſe things to Juſtinus Junior, which rather befitted Juſtinus Senior. Valeſ.

CHAP. V.

Concerning the Ejection of Anaſtaſius Biſhop of * Theopolis.

* Or, Antioch.

MOreover, Juſtinus ejected Anaſtaſius out of the Chair of Theopolis; objecting againſt him, both the profuſe expence of the ſacred Revenue which had been made, ſaying it was immoderate, and not according to what was meet and neceſſary; and alſo [charging him] with † reflecting abuſively on himſelf. For when Anaſtaſius was asked, why he would fling away the ſacred money in ſo laviſh a manner, he replyed openly, that it might not be taken away by Juſtinus that common Peſt. But 'twas ſaid that [Juſtinus] had therefore conceived an old Grudge againſt Anaſtaſius, becauſe when he † Or, Blaſphemy againſt himſelf.

[a] Τὴν ὀπισκοπὴν ἐγ-
χειρωθέν-
τι. Nicephorus, in regard he underſtood not theſe words, omitted them, as may be ſeen in book 17. chap. 36. For he has expreſt this place of Evagrius thus: Πεφήνιτο δὲ μᾶλλον τὸν ἄνδρα ἐκεῖνον, ὅτι παρὰ ζημίαν χρήματα, ἃ παρῄτησο δοῦναι, But 'twas ſaid that Juſtinus was angry with him, becauſe he refuſed to give him money when he demanded it. But 'twas eaſie to have mended the place of Evagrius, in this manner; ὅτι μὲ ζημίαν ἦν χρήματα τὸν ὀπισκοπὴν ἐγχειρωθεὶς ἂν εἴλετο δοῦναι, becauſe having been promoted to the Biſhoprick he refuſed to give [Juſtinus] money who demanded it. And ſo Chriſtophorſon and Muſculus ſeem to have read. For thus Muſculus renders it; Dicitur autem Anaſtaſio ſuccenſuiſe, quòd quum pecuniam pro Epiſcopatûs collatione exigeret, dare illam noluerit; But 'tis ſaid that he had been angry with Anaſtaſius, becauſe when he exacted money for his Collation to the Biſhoprick, he refuſed to give it. This occaſion of hatred therefore againſt Anaſtaſius was of a long ſtanding, before Juſtinus had arrived at the Empire. Wherefore Evagrius uſes the word μωισας, which ſignifies an ancient and concealed Anger. 'Tis certain, whilſt Juſtinian ſurvived, Anaſtaſius had been elected Biſhop of Antioch. Now, the Grandees at Court, and thoſe whoſe intereſt was great with the Emperour, were wont to exact money of them who were elected Patriarchs, as may be proved by the Example of Chryſaphius the Eunuch, who demanded money of Flavianus Biſhop of Conſtantinople; as Evagrius has related above, ſee book 2. chap. 2. Nevertheleſs, this was forbidden by the Novell Conſtitutions of Juſtinian. Valeſ.

[b] Indeed, Theophanes in his Chronicon, brings another reaſon, on account whereof Anaſtaſius Sinaita was depoſed from the See of Antioch. But, becauſe Tranſlatours have in no wiſe hit the meaning of Theophanes, I will annex his words here: Τῷ δὲ αὐτῷ ἔτει ἀνασάσιος ὁ ἐπισκοπῶν ἀντιοχείας ὁ μέλας, κατεκρίθη ἐν τοῖς ἀντιγεγραφοις ἢ συνοδικῶν, ἰωάννου τὸ κωνσταντινοπόλεως τῷ χειροτονήσαντι ἰωάννην τὸν ἀλεξανδρείας ἢ ὅτι αὐτὸν χειροτονηθέντα, ἐξελήλυθη τῆς ἰδίας ἐπισκοπῆς καὶ ἀσανακλητον ἐστιν: That is, as I render it. On the ſame year Anaſtaſius the Great, Biſhop of Antioch, in regard in his anſwer to the Synodick Letters, he had reprehended John Biſhop of Conſtantinople who had ordained John Biſhop of Alexandria, and had [at the ſame time reproved him] who had been ordained by him, was ejected out of his Biſhoprick by reaſon of Juſtinus's indignation. I reade therefore in Theophanes, ἢ τῷ χειροτονηθέντι, which emendation is moſt certain. John Biſhop of Alexandria had been ordained at Conſtantinople by Johannes Scholaſticus, on the fifth year of Juſtinus's Empire, in the year of Chriſt 570, as Baronius alſo relates. After his ordination, when (as 'twas uſuall) he had written Synodick Letters to Anaſtaſius Biſhop of Antioch, Anaſtaſius in his anſwer to thoſe Letters, had ſeverely reproved his Ordainer Johannes; in regard, contrary to the Eccleſiaſtick Rules, he had been thruſt into the place of Eutychius as then living. He had alſo reprehended him, who having been ordained by him, had drawn upon himſelf the fault and blot of his own Ordainer. The Emperour Juſtinus (who loved Johannes Scholaſticus, as being the perſon by whom he had been Crowned,) taking offence at this thing, ejected Anaſtaſius out of his See. Theophanes's Latine Tranſlatour thought, that thoſe Synodick Letters which Anaſtaſius had given anſwer to, had been written by Johannes Biſhop of Conſtantinople; which is a miſtake. For they were written by Johannes Biſhop of Alexandria in the beginning of his Epiſcopate. Therefore, after the word συνοδικῶν a Comma muſt be put, as Anaſtaſius Bibliothecarius has done. Further, Baronius places this Depoſition of Anaſtaſius on the year of Chriſt 573; which is the eighth year of Juſtinus's Empire. But I had rather, with Theophanes, place it on the Fifth or Sixth year of the ſame Juſtinus, in regard it hapned a little after the ordination of Johannes Biſhop of Alexandria, which was performed on the year of Chriſt 570, as Baronius himſelf does atteſt. Valeſ.

he demanded money of him at his promotion to the Biſhoprick, Anaſtaſius would not give it him. Moreover, other matters were objected againſt Anaſtaſius, by ſome perſons who, I ſuppoſe, were deſirous of ſerving and promoting the Emperour's deſign.

CHAP. VI.

That, after Anaſtaſius, Gregorius was made Biſhop, and concerning his diſpoſition.

But after Anaſtaſius, Gregorius is preferred to the Epiſcopall Throne, [a] whoſe Glory, that I may uſe the Poet's expreſſion, is far ſpread.

[a] Muſculus and Chriſtophorſon have rendred this place very ill, as if by theſe words Evagrius would have ſhown, that Gregorius Biſhop of Antioch had been eminent for Poetry. But Langus has turned theſe words righter, thus: Cujus lata eſt Gloria, ut Poetæ verbis utar, whoſe Glory is far ſpread, that I may uſe the Poets words. Valeſ. Evagrius makes uſe of the ſame expreſſion at chap. 15, book 13 where he ſpeaks of Iſidorus Peluſiota.

[This perſon] from his younger years had been exerciſed in the Monaſtick Conflicts, and had ſtriven with ſo much courage and conſtancy of mind, that in a very ſhort time, || even during his youthfull age, he arrived at the higheſt degrees; and Governed the Monaſtery of the [b] Byzantii, where he embraced a † Monaſtick life. [Afterwards,] by the * order of Juſtinus [he preſided over the Monks] of mount Sinai alſo; in which place he fell into the greateſt of dangers, by undergoing a Siege from thoſe Arabians [termed] Scenitæ. Nevertheleſs, when he had procured that place a profound Peace, he was called from thence to the † Patriarchate. For underſtanding and virtue of mind, [c] and in all other things he was the eminenteſt perſon of all men, and the moſt active in [effecting] whatever he had propoſed to himſelf; || of an undaunted ſpirit, and a man not to be induced to yield, or to be afraid of the Secular power. He made ſuch magnificent † diſtributions of money, and uſed ſuch a bountifullneſs and liberality towards all men, that whenever he went abroad, numerous crowds of people, beſides thoſe that were his uſuall attendants, followed him. And whatever perſons could either ſee, or hear he was [d] going forth, flock't together. [e] The honour given to the ſupreameſt Powers [of this world] was inferiour to that [paid] to this man; for people were for the moſt part deſirous, both of ſeeing him as near as poſſibly they could, and coveted to hear him diſcourſe. For he was moſt excellently qualified to excite a deſire of himſelf in all perſons, who upon what ever account came to and converſed with him. For, his aſpect was admirable, and his diſcourſe, by reaſon of his pleaſantneſs of ſpeech, moſt delightfull; as ready as ever was any man, in the preſent apprehending of a thing, and moſt quick in action: in || chooſing the beſt advice, and in paſſing a judgement, as well of his own, as the affairs of others, he was † moſt prudent. On which account he performed ſo many and ſuch great things, never deferring any buſineſs till the morrow. He was the admiration not only of the Roman Emperours, but of them of Perſia alſo, in regard he ſo demeaned himſelf in all affairs, as either neceſſity required,

* Or, Perſwaſion.

† Or, Arch-Biſhoprick.

|| Or, Not to be wounded by fear.

† Or, Contributions.

|| Or, Giving.

† Or, Moſt ſufficient.

[a] Τὴν ὀπισκοπὴν ἐγχειρωθέντι. Nicephorus read it ἐγχειρισθέντα, committed. Valeſ.

[b] Τῆς τῶν βυζαντίων μονῆς. Johannes Langus renders theſe words thus: Primùm verò Byzantii Monaſterio præfuit, But in the firſt place he preſided over the Monaſtery of Byzantium. But Evagrius does not ſay, that Gregorius was a Monk or Abbot of Byzantium, but that he was Abbot of the Monaſtery of the Byzantii. This ſeems to have been a Monaſtery in Syria, wherein Gregorius, whilſt he was yet young, had received the Rudiments of a Monaſtick life. Theophanes in his Chronicon, pag. 206, ſays Gregorius had been Apocriſiarius (that is, procurator, or, Agent) of the Monaſtery of the Byzantii. Valeſ.

[c] Πάντα ἐν πᾶσι κρείττω. I conjecture we ſhould read here, πάντα τε ἐν πᾶσι κρείττω, and in all things he was the eminenteſt perſon of all men. For ſo Evagrius expreſſes himſelf hereafter, at chap. 19. of this book; where his words concerning Mauricius are theſe; ἢ πάντα ἐν πᾶσιν ἀκριβῆ τε ἢ ἀδόνητον, and every way accurate and immovable. Valeſ.

[d] Πεζεύοντα. I had rather make it πεζεύοντα, going forth. In Nicephorus the reading is ἰόντα, going. Valeſ.

[e] Καὶ ἦν τὰ γε εἰς τὸν τοσαύτην ἀρχὴν δεύτερα τῆς εἰς τὸν ἄνδρα τιμῆς. Nicephorus read this place otherwiſe. For, inſtead of the word τοσαύτην he has κοσμικὴν, Mundane, or, Secular. Which in my judgment is far righter. Johannes Langus has tranſlated Nicephorus's words thus: Et honorem mundanis dignitatibus debitum, præ viri hujus obſervantiâ ſecundo loco habebant, And they placed [or, had] the honour due to Secular dignities, in the ſecond place, in reſpect of the obſervancy of this man. Valeſ.

or

or occaſion would bear; [f] [to which he was] never wanting, as I ſhall manifeſt particularly in due place. There was in him much of vehemency, and alſo ſometimes paſſion. But on the other hand, his Lenity and Manſuetude was not little, but rather † abundant and extraordinary. So that, that ſaying which with great wiſedom hath been uttered by Gregorius the Divine, might incomparably well befit him; an Auſterity ſo well tempered with || Modeſty, that the one is not injured by the other; but both are an ornament and commendation to each other.

[f] Οὐχ ὕστερον. In my own judgement, I have reſtored this place very happily, in this manner, ἐχ ὑστερῶν; that is, when time, or neceſſity required, he would be always at hand. Valeſ.

† Περιέσσον.

|| Or, Baſhfullneſs.

CHAP. VII.

How thoſe termed the Perſarmenii ſurrendred themſelves † to the Romans: on which account a War broke out || between the Romans and Perſians.

† Or, To the Chriſtians.

|| Or, With the Perſians.

DUring the firſt year of this [Gregorius's] Governing his Biſhoprick, the [Inhabitants] of that [Country] anciently termed Armenia the Great (which afterwards was named Perſarmenia; this [Region] had heretofore been ſubject to the Romans; but, after Philippus ſucceſſour to Gordianus, had betrayed it to Sapor, that termed Armenia the Leſs remained in ſubjection to the Romans, though all the reſt was in the power of the Perſians:) being profeſſours of the Chriſtian Religion, in regard they had * ſuffered grievouſly from the Perſians, and eſpecially || in thoſe matters which related to their Religion, ſent an Embaſſy ſecretly to Juſtinus, entreating they † might be received as ſubjects to the Romans; to the end they might with freedome and ſecurity perform [the Rites] of the Divine worſhip and honour, and that nothing might obſtruct them [in thoſe performances.] [Which Embaſſy] Juſtinus having admitted of, and ſome [Conditions ſet forth] in writing having been agreed to by the Emperour, and confirmed with great and ſolemn [b] Oaths;

[a] The ſame reaſon of the deſection of the Armenii is aſſigned by Theophanes Byzantius in Photius, and by Johannes Biclarienſis in his Chronicon; whoſe words are theſe: Armeniorum & Iberorum Gens qui a prædicatione Apoſtolorum Chriſti fidem ſuſceperant, &c; The Nation of the Armenii and Iberi who from the Preaching of the Apoſtles had embraced the Faith of Chriſt, whilſt by Choſdroa Emperour of the Perſians they were compelled to the worſhip of Idolls, refuſed Obedience to that impious Command, and ſurrendred themſelves with their Provinces to the Romans. Which thing broke the League of Peace between the Romans and Perſians. But the Abbot of Biclaire is miſtaken in this, to wit, his placing the defection of the Armenii on Juſtinus Junior's Firſt year. For the Peace between the Romans and Perſians was broken on the Seventh year of the Emperour Juſtinus, as Theophilactus relates in the Third Book of his Hiſtory, Chap. 9; and likewiſe Theophanes, and his Tranſlatour Anaſtaſius Bibliothecarius, and Cedrenus. Beſides, even Johannes Biclarienſis himſelf diſagrees from himſelf in his Narrative of this affair. For he ſubjoyns theſe words a little after: Anno quinto Juſtinus Imperator, &c; On [his] Fifth year the Emperour Juſtinus, having repelled the Perſians, makes Armenia and Iberia Roman Provinces. Valeſ.

|| Or, Intreſation to their own Sentiment, or, Opinion.

† Or, Might be made.

[b] Concerning this Oath, wherein the Emperour Juſtinus had bound himſelf, that he would never deliver up the Armenii and Iberi (who had Surrendred themſelves to the Romans,) to the Perſians, Menander Protector ſpeaks in his Excerpt. Legationum, pag. 121 of the King's Edition: Λόγον δὲ ἐχ' ἵκιστα ἐπιεῖτο πολὺν ὁ καίσαρ ἧς ὀμωμοσμένων τοῦ ἰουστιανοῦ τὰ βασιλέως τοῖς περσαρμενίοις καὶ τοῖς μεταχωρήσασιν ἰβήρων. ὀμωμόκει γὰρ ὁ βασιλεὺς, &c. Which words the Tranſlatour underſtood not. In the firſt place therefore, inſtead of τοῦ ἰουστιανοῦ by Juſtinianus, it muſt be mended thus, τοῦ ἰουστίνου by Juſtinus. And then, the whole place is to be rendred in this manner. For Tiberius Cæſar deſervedly made the greateſt account of thoſe Oathes, which by the Emperour Juſtinus had been given to the Perſarmenii and Iberi, who had revolted to the Romans. For the Emperour had ſworn, that he would uſe his utmoſt endeavour, to reduce that Land, which had nouriſhed them, to a ſubjection to himſelf. But, if he ſhould not be able to effect that thing, and could not put an end to the War; yet, that he would never Surrender up to the Perſians the Authours of that defection, and their Relations, and in generall thoſe who ſhould have a mind to be Subjects [or, partakers] of the Roman Republick. Valeſ.

the Armenii kill their own [c] Governours, and * in one intire Body joyn themſelves to the Roman Empire, together with their Neighbours whom they had taken into an Aſſociation with themſelves, as well thoſe of the ſame, as of other Nations; Vardanes [being their Leader,] a perſon eminent amongſt them for deſcent, dignity, and skill in Military affairs. When therefore Choſroes complained of theſe things, Juſtinus diſmiſſed [his Embaſſadours] with theſe words, that the peace [which had been made between them] was terminated, and that 'twas not poſſible for Chriſtians to reject Chriſtians when they made them their refuge in a time of War. This was Juſtinus's anſwer. Nevertheleſs, he made no preparations for a War; but yielded up himſelf to his uſuall Voluptuouſneſs, and || Poſtponed all affairs to his own pleaſures.

* Or, By a generall conſent.

[c] To wit, Surenas. For he had been made χιλιαταρχὴς, or, Rector of Armenia by the King of the Perſians; after he was ſlain, the Perſarmenii delivered up themſelves to the Romans, as Theophilactus tells us in his third book, chap. 9; and Theophanes Byzantius in his Excerpta in Photium. Laſtly, Menander ſays the ſame, in his Excerpta Legationum, pag. 115. Valeſ.

|| Or, Put all affairs in the Second place to, &c.

CHAP. VIII.

Concerning Marcianus the † Magiſter Militum, and concerning the Siege of Niſibis.

† Or, Maſter of the Militce, or, Souldiers.

[FUrther,] he ſends [a] Marcianus, who was his kinſman, Magiſter of the Orientall [Milice,] but allows him neither an Army fit for an engagement, nor any other ſufficient proviſion for the [carrying on a] War. Marcianus arrives in Meſopotamia, to the manifeſt hazard and Subverſion of all affairs, drawing along with him ſome few Souldiers, and thoſe unarmed; having alſo with him ſome Trench-makers and [b] Oxe-drivers, whom he had by force taken from among the [c] Provincialls. He comes to an Engagement therefore with the Perſians in a ſmall Fight about Niſibis, (the Perſians themſelves being as yet unprovided for a War;) and having got the better, lays Siege to the City: the Perſians [in the interim] thought not fit to ſhut the Gates, but moſt ſcornfully reproach't and derided the Army of the Romans. Many other Prodigies were ſeen, which foreſhewed the future misfortunes; but at the beginning of this War, we our ſelves ſaw a Calf newly calv'd, out of whoſe neek grew forth two heads.

[a] Theophanes in his Chronicon calls this perſon Martinus, as does likewiſe his Tranſlatour Anaſtaſius Bibliothecarius. But Theophanes Byzantius, whoſe Excerpta are extant in Photius's Bibliotheca, terms him Marcianus, and calls him the Empeiour Juſtinus's ἐξάδελφον, Brother's Son. [Valeſius in his note here, renders that Greek word, thus, Conſobrinum, Siſter's Son.] And ſays, he was ſent Magiſter Militum into the Eaſt by Juſtinus on the Eight year of his Empire. Valeſ.

[b] Βοηλατῶν. From the Florentine and Tellerian M.SS, I have mended it thus, βοηλάτας, Drivers of Oxen; and ſo Nicephorus read. But Nicephorus inſerts two words here. For he expreſſes this paſſage thus, σφεῖς δὲ σκαπανεῖς καὶ ῥαφεῖς καὶ βοηλάτας: that is, as Langus renders it, as alſo Ditchers, and Taylors, and Drivers of Oxen. Which word [Taylours] Nicephorus ſeems to have read in his Copy. For I ſee not whence he could have gotten it. Further, there was uſe of theſe Taylours in the Camps, to mend the Souldiers clothes, or elſe to ſow Skins together for Tents or Tabernacles. Valeſ.

[c] Σωτελῶν. Tranſlatours have rendred this place ill. For Muſculus tranſlates it thus: Et foſſores quoſdam ac bubulcos ex municipiis acceptos ſecum habens, And having with him ſome Ditchers and Oxe-drivers taken out of the Towns. But Chriſtophorſon renders it in this manner: Inter quos habuit foſſores & Bubulcos ex numero veſtigalium exemptos, amongſt whom he had Ditchers and Oxe-drivers excmpted [or, taken] out of their number who payed Tribute. They knew not what the the word σωστελεῖς signified. Evagrius has made uſe of this word above, at chap. 42, book 3. At which place we have remarked, that by that word, are meant the Provinciall Tributaries, who are alſo termed Collatores in the Code. From thoſe therefore Martinus the Magiſter Militum had by force drawn Ditchers and Oxe-drivers, and Taylours, that he might make uſe of their Labour in his Army: for he reckoned them not amongſt the Souldiers, as Chriſtophorſon ſeems to have thought. Valeſ.

CHAP. IX.

How Choſroes (after he had ſent his Generall Adaarmanes againſt the Romans, who afflicted them with many and thoſe ſevere Loſſes;) went himſelf in perſon to Niſibis.

BUt Choſroes, after he had made ſufficient proviſion of all things neceſſary for a War, went to a certain [place,] and having paſt the Euphrates in his own Country, ſends Adaarmanes into the Roman Territories, by a [place] termed Circeſium. This Circeſium is a Town moſt commodious to the Romans, ſcituate in the utmoſt confines of the Empire. Which [Town] is fortified not only with walls raiſed to a vaſt heighth; but the Rivers Euphrates and Aboras do likewiſe encompaſs it, and make the City as 'twere an Iſland. But [Choſroes] himſelf having, together with thoſe [Forces] about him, paſſed the River Tigris, marched directly to Niſibis. [Though] theſe things had been done, [yet] the Romans were a long while ignorant of them: in ſo much that Juſtinus, giving overmuch credit to report, (which ſaid that Choſroes was either already dead, or drawing his very laſt breath,) became highly incenſed, becauſe the Siege of Niſibis was protracted ſo long; and ſent ſome perſons who might haſten Marcianus forward, and might forthwith bring him the Keys of the Gates: But when this affair was not in the leaſt forwarded, but rather he himſelf procured great ignominy and diſgrace, in regard he would attempt thoſe things which could not be done againſt ſuch and ſo vaſt a City, and with ſo pittifull and deſpicable an Army; in the firſt place a meſſage is brought to Gregorius Biſhop of Theopolis. For whereas the Biſhop of Niſibis was an intimate friend to Gregorius, in regard he had received great preſents from him; and moreover being one that was highly diſpleaſed at the Perſians contumelious uſage of the Chriſtians, which the Chriſtians had continually ſuffered from them, being alſo deſirous that his own City might become ſubject [to the Empire] of the Romans; he gave Gregorius an account of whatever was done in the Enemie's Country, and in due time made known [to him] all things. Of which [matters Gregorius] forthwith ſent Juſtinus a Relation, declaring to him Choſroes's ſudden irruption. But Juſtinus, involved in his uſuall pleaſures, heeded not what had been written [to him by Gregorius;] nor would he give credit thereto, but only ſuppoſed [that true,] which he himſelf deſired. For *'tis uſuall with perſons who are diſſolute, that they ſhould be both [a] ſlothfull and confident againſt the Events [of affairs;] and if any thing happens contrary to their wills, they disbelieve it. He wrote therefore to Gregorius, [in which Letters] he perfectly rejected thoſe things [told him by Gregorius,] as being wholly falſe: or if they were true, yet, that the Perſians could never prevent the Siege; but, that if they did prevent it, they would retire [from thence] with great loſs. [At the ſame time] he ſends one Acacius (a wicked and ſpitefull perſon,) to Marcianus, giving him order, that although Marcianus ſhould have ſet one of his feet into the City, he ſhould nevertheleſs * turn him out of Commiſſion. Which thing [Acacius] performed exactly, obeying the Emperour's Commands though to the diſadvantage of the Republick. For being arrived in the [Roman] Camp, he diveſts Marcianus of his Command, in the Enemies Country, without having acquainted the Army therewith. But the Centurions and Leaders of the Ranks, having underſtood at their coming off the Watch, that their Commander in chief was turn'd out of Commiſſion, [b] would not appear in publick any more, but left [the Service,] were diſperſed here and there, and brake up the ridiculous Siege. In the interim Adaarmanes having an Army of Perſians and barbarous Scenitæ fit to engage, paſſed by Circeſium, and ruined the Roman Territories with all manner of depopulations, burning and killing, deſigning in his mind or performing nothing that was mean and triviall. He alſo takes Caſtles and many Villages, no body making a reſiſtance againſt him: Firſt, becauſe [at that time] there was no Commander [of the Romans:] and then, in regard the [Roman] Souldiers were by Choſroes ſhut up in Daras; as well Excurſions to fetch in forrage, as irruptions, were made without impediment. He made an attack alſo upon the † Theopolites by the Souldiers he had with him; (for he went not thither in perſon.) Nevertheleſs, thoſe [Souldiers of his] received a repulſe beyond all expectation, although no body, excepting only a very ſmall number, continued in the City; and though the Biſhop was fled, and had carried a long with him the ſacred Treaſure, becauſe, both moſt part of the wall was fallen down, and the people alſo had raiſed a Sedition, being deſirous of beginning an Innovation, as it uſually happens, and moſt eſpecially at ſuch times as thoſe. Moreover, [the Seditious] themſelves betook themſelves to their heels, and had left the City empty; nothing at all being to be found out, * that might either annoy the Enemy, or on the other hand keep them off.

* Or, It follows.

[a] Τό τε ἀφρὲς. In Nicephorus 'tis ἀφρὲς, with a double ρ. So a little before, where the reading is ἀχάλεν; Nicephorus has it written ἀχάλλειν, which is more uſuall. Yet, that word may be written with a double λ, as Heſychius tells us. Valeſ.

* Or, Remove him from his Command.

[b] Οὐ παρῆσε τὸ πλῆθος. I think it muſt be made ἐς τὸ πλῆθος. And ſo Muſculus ſeems to have read. For he renders it thus: Exercitui porro adeſſe noluit, would not be any more preſent with the Army. Chriſtophorſon tranſlates it in this manner, Copias non ulterius ducunt, lead not the Forces any more. But the Greek will not bear this ſenſe Valeſ.

† Antiochians.

* Εἰς ὁπότε χυσιν, ἢ ἀντεπεχείρησιν; words which I have not yet met with, uſed in ſuch a ſenſe, as by all the Tranſlatours they are taken here.

CHAP. X.

Concerning the taking of Apamia and Daras.

WHen therefore [a] Adaarmanes had been fruſtrated in this attempt, having burnt that City anciently termed Heraclea, but afterwards named Gagalice, he took Apamia, which had been built by [b] Seleucus Nicator, [a City] heretofore

[a] Ἀδαρμάνης. This name is found variouſly written in ancient Authours. In Theophanes's Chronicon, he is called Artabanes, and Ardamanes in the Palatine Manuſcript Copy. Anaſtaſius Bibliothecarius terms him Dux Adermanus. In Nicephorus 'tis Ἀδαρμάνης, Vadarmanes. In Theophanes Byzantius, Baraamanes. Hereafter in the thirteenth chapter he is termed Ardamanes. Theophylactus, Book 3, calls him Adormaanes. Valeſ.

[b] Σελεύκῳ τῷ νικήτορι. Undoubtedly it muſt be made νικάτορι, Nicatoris. For Seleucus the firſt King of Syria, becauſe of his famous Victories, had the ſurname of Nicator, as we learn from the Old Coyns, which aſcribe this Title or Surname to him. Valeſ. See Valeſius's notes on Amm. Marcel. pag. 41.

heretofore rich and populous, but in [proceſs of] time it was become extreamly ruinous. Having poſſeſt himſelf of this City on ſome Articles of agreement, (for [the Inhabitants] were in no wiſe in a capacity to make a reſiſtance, the wall by reaſon of its age being faln to the ground;) he utterly deſtroyed it by fire; and when he had made plunder of all things, contrary to the conditions agreed to by him, he went away, and lead away Captive all the Citizens, and [the Inhabitants of] the adjacent Villages. Amongſt which [Priſoners] he carried away alive the Biſhop of the City, and that perſon who was entruſted with the Government [of the Province.] Moreover, he committed all manner of * outrages at his departure, there being no body that might reſtrain or give him any the leſt reſiſtance, excepting a very few Souldiers ſent by Juſtinus, under the Command of one Magnus, who was heretofore Preſident of the † Argentarii at the Imperiall City, but had afterwards by Juſtinus been made Curator of one of the Imperial Houſes. And theſe [Souldiers] alſo ran away with all the haſt imaginable, there having wanted but little of their being all taken by the Enemy. When therefore Adaarmanes had performed theſe Exploits, he came to Choſroes, who had not yet taken the City [Daras.] His joyning Forces with Choſroes was of great importance to [their] affairs, both becauſe it gave incouragement to their own men, and alſo ſtruck a terrour into the Enemy. Further, [Choſroes] found that City encompaſſed with a wall, and a vaſt Rampire of earth caſt up hard by the wall, alſo thoſe Engines [termed] * Helepoles ſtanding ready; and eſpecially the Catapultæ wherewith ſtones are thrown from an Eminence, which [Machines] they uſually term † Petrariæ. || In this manner Choſroes became Maſter of that City by force, in the Winter time, Johannes the Son of Timoſtratus being its Governour, who was very little ſollicitous about it, or rather betrayed it. For both are reported. Now, Choſroes had laid Siege to that City five months and more, no body appearing in its defence. Having therefore brought all perſons out of the City, (which were a vaſt multitude,) and in a cruell manner killed ſome of them there, and preſerved others, which were the moſt in number, alive; he fortified the City with a Garriſon, becauſe its ſite was commodious: but he himſelf returned into his own Countrey.

* Or, Cruelties.

† Bankers.

* Machines uſed in Sieges, to batter down the walls.

† Or, Engines to caſt ſtones.

|| Or, With which.

CHAP. XI.

That the Emperour Juſtinus was ſeized with a * Frenſie: but Tiberius undertook the care of the Republick.

* Or, Frantick diſtemper.

WHich [proceedings] when Juſtinus was made acquainted with, having in his mind not ſo much as one thought that was ſound and prudent, nor bearing his [a] misfortune ſo as it becomes a man to doe; from ſuch an heighth of pride and haughtineſs he falls into a Frantick diſtemper and madneſs, and in future became inſenſible of what was tranſacted. From thence forward therefore Tiberius had the management of the Republick, a perſon by deſcent a Thracian, but one who bore the chiefeſt place of truſt, [and was the greateſt favourite] with Juſtinus.

[a] Τὸ συγχὸν. It muſt be made σωφρονοῦν; as I found it written in the Tellerian M. S. Valeſ.

[b] This perſon had heretofore been ſent [by Juſtinus] againſt the * Abari, [accompanied with] a vaſt Army of Souldiers which had been raiſed. But, the Souldiers not enduring ſo much as the ſight of the Barbarians, Tiberius wanted but little of being taken, had not the Divine providence in a wonderfull manner protected him, and reſerved him for the Roman Empire; which had been reduced to ſuch danger by Juſtinus's abſurd and raſh attempts, that ['twas feared leaſt] together with the whole State it ſhould be utterly ruined, and might yield to the * prevalent power and dominion of the Barbarians.

* Or, Abares, or, Avares.

[b] The Emperour Juſtinus ſent Tiberius the Comes of his Guards, againſt the Avares, with an Army ſufficiently ſtrong, on the ninth year of his Empire, as Theophanes relates in his Chronicon. But Johannes Biclarienſis ſays that was done on the fourth year of Juſtinus's Empire: where he relates, that from this Battel Tiberius returned a Conquerour to Conſtantinople. Which yet is declared to be falſe by Evagrius and Theophanes. Valeſ.

* Or, So great.

CHAP. XII.

That Trajanus having been ſent Embaſſadour to Choſroes, * repaired the affairs of the Romans.

* Corrected, or, reſtored.

TIberius therefore reſolves upon a † Courſe very ſeaſonable, and accommodate to the [preſent juncture of] affairs; which repaired the whole misfortune. For [a] Trajanus, a wiſe perſon of the Senatorian Order, a man highly valued by all men for his gray-hairs and underſtanding, is diſpatcht away to Choſroes: He was not to perform that Embaſſy in the name of || the Emperour, nor of the State, but was to ſpeak in behalf only of [the Empreſs] Sophia. Moreover, She wrote to Choſroes, [in which Letter] She lamented both the calamities of her Husband, and alſo the State's being deprived of an Emperour; adding with all, that 'twas misbecoming [a Prince] to inſult over a woman that was a widow, over a || dead Emperour, and over a deſerted State: For, that * he himſelf, when he had faln ſick ſometime ſince, had not only experienced the like [humanity and kind uſage,] but had likewiſe had the beſt Phyſitians ſent him by the Roman State, who alſo freed him from his diſtemper. [Hereby] therefore Choſroes is prevailed upon. And although he was juſt ready to make an Invaſion || upon the Territories of the Romans, yet he concludes a Truce for the ſpace of three years, in the Eaſtern parts. But, 'twas thought good, that Armenia [b] ſhould not be included in the like [conditions of a Truce;] ſo that, he might wage War there, provided no body diſturbed the Eaſtern parts.

† Councill, or, advice.

[a] This Trajanus was Patritius and Quæſtor of the Sacred Pallace; concerning his Embaſſie to the Perſians, Menander Protector ſpeaks in the Sixth Book of his Hiſtories, pag. 157. and 165. This, as I think, is the Trajanus Patritius who had written a ſhort Chronicle, an admirable work, as Suidas atteſts. Theophanes mentions him in his Chronicon, pag. 56. Suidas writes indeed, that he had lived in the times of Juſtinianus Rhinotmetus. But I am of opinion that Suidas is out, in regard no perſon of this name is mentioned in the Empire of Juſtinianus Rhinotmetus. But in the Reign of Juſtinus junior, Trajanus Patritius is commended by Menander Protector in his Sixth Book, and by our Evagrius here. Valeſ.

|| Τῆς βασιλείας, of the Empire.

|| Or, Deſected.

* Choſroes.

|| Τοῖς ῥωμαϊκοῖς πεδίοις. In Nicephorus the reading is truer, τοῖς ῥωμαίων πεδίοις, upon the Territories [or, affairs] of the Romans. Valeſ.

[b] Ἐν τοῖς Ῥωμαϊκοῖς μείνας. In my own judgment I have reſtored this place very happily, ſo, that inſtead of the word μείνας, it muſt be written, μὴ εἴᾳ. For in the Truce which was made between the Romans and Perſians, it had been expreſsly cautioned, that there ſhould be a Ceſſation of Armes throughout the Eaſt only: but in Armenia and Iberia it ſhould be lawfull to wage War. See Menander Protector in the Sixth Book of his Hiſtories, pag. 157; which authour does fully confirm this our Emendation. And ſo does Theophylactus, Book 3. Chap. 12. Valeſ.

During

During the transaction of these affairs in the East, Sirmium was taken by the [c] Abares: which [City] the Gepidæ had possest themselves of before, but had afterwards Surrendred it to [the Emperour] Justinus.

[c] Πρὸς τῶν βαρβάρων, by the Barbarians. The reading in Nicephorus is the same. Nevertheless, I doubt not but it should be written πρὸς τῶν Ἀβάρων, by the Abares. For the Abares took the City Sirmium, as Menander Protector attests in his Excerpta Legationum, pag. 117. Which City having before been in the hands of the Gepidæ, the Abares who had destroyed the Kingdom of the Gepidæ, asserted, that that City, with the rest of the riches of the Gepidæ, had passed into their power and dominion, as the same Menander relates, pag. 114 and 130. See Theophylactus, Book 1. Chap. 3. Vales.

CHAP. XIII.

Concerning the Election of Tiberius to the Empire, and concerning his disposition.

ABout the same time, Justinus by the advice of Sophia, proclaims Tiberius, Cæsar. At which Election [Justinus] made such a speech, as transcends all History, as well ancient as modern; the most Commpassionate God allowing Justinus this opportunity, both for a confession of his own sins, and also that he might be the Authour of wholesome advice for the advantage and benefit of the State. For, at a convention [a] in the Atrium of the [Imperial] Pallace (where [b] ancient custome says such Solemnities were performed,) both of [c] Johannes the Patriarch, whom we mentioned before, together with his Clergy, of the Magistracy and Honorati, and of all the Grand Officers about the Court; Justinus, when he had invested Tiberius with the Imperial Coat, and had cloathed him in the [Purple] * Robe, with a loud voice spake publickly [these following words.]

[a] Ἐν τῇ ὑπαίθρῳ αὐλῇ, in the open Court [of the Pallace.] Nicephorus adds a word here, in this manner, ἐν τῇ ὑπαίθρῳ αὐλῇ τῆς ἀνακτόρων, in the open Court of the Imperial Pallace. Theophylactus makes mention of this place, Book 1, Chap. 1; and relates, that the Emperours were usually proclaimed there; φοβεῖται γὰρ ἀχθεὶς ὁ πλέων [says he,] ἐπὶ τῶν ὑπαίθρων βασιλείων αὐλὴν, ἥτις παρήνωται τῇ πολυτελείᾳ τῆς ἀνακτόρων οἰκίας, &c. Which place the Latine Translatour has expresst in a long circuit of words, in this manner: Tiberius namque in atrium palatii juxta domum, in quâ multi ex herbis, seu frondibus, ad cænandum, dormiendumve tori, sive Lectisternia, vestibulum illustre, visendumque proscenium. Huc, inquam, gestatus, &c. Whence it appears, that he understood not what was meant by these words. Likewise Nicephorus Callistus, when he wrote out this place of Theophilactus omitted the latter words. But my Sentiment is, that by these words, πολυτελείᾳ οἰκίας, Theophilactus means that House which in Greek was termed δεκαεννέα ἀκκούβιτα, Because in it there were nineteen Accubita, or Stibadia, whereon the Emperour with his Nobles lay down and banquetted at Christmas, and on the more solemn Festival days, as Theophanes and Anastasius Bibliothecarius do relate in the one and thirtieth year of Justinian; and likewise Luitprandus in Book 6 Rerum per Europam Gestarum, Chap. 3; where his words are these: Est domus quæ Decaennea accubita dicitur, &c. There is an House which is termed the Decennea accubita. It is so called for this reason, because nineteen Tables are spread there in the Nativity of our Lord. Whereon the Emperour and likewise his Guests do banquet, not in a sitting posture, as on other days, but by lying down. Near this House was the Tribunal, or Throne, in which the Emperours and Empresses were crowned. Nicephorus Constantinopolitanus, pag 176, speaking of Isaurus Leo; ἐν τῷ τειβουναλίῳ (says he) λεγομένῳ δεκαεννέα ἀκκούβιτον θέσει τὸν υἱὸν κωνσταντῖνον εἰς βασιλέα, in the Throne termed the Decaennea Accubita he Crowned his Son Constantine Emperour. Anastasius relates the same, as does likewise the Author Historiæ Miscellæ, Book 21. The same Writer, book 22, speaking of Constantinus Copronymus: Anno 28 Imperii sui coronavit, &c; On the 28th year of his own Empire, the Emperour Crowned his Wife Eudoxia, after he had been thrice married, in the Tribunal of the nineteen Accubita. Hence 'tis, that Codinus (in his Origines Constantinopolitanæ,) places τὸ σέψιμον, The Stepsimon, near the House of the nineteen Accubita: by which term [The Stepsimon] he means the throne whereon the Emperours were Crowned. Now, this House was, in the Third Region [of the City,] near the Hippodrome, as Luitprandus attests. Indeed, the Old Description informs us, that in that Region was the Great Cirque, and the Semicircular [or, half-round] Porticus, which was called The Sigma, and lastly the Tribunal of the Forum of Constantine. And 'tis very likely, that of that Porticus was made the House of the nineteen Accubita; for a Sigma is the same with a Stibadium or an Accubitum. Moreover, the Church of Saint Stephen is by Codinus placed near the Tribunal of the nineteen Accubita, which Petrus Gyllius (book 2, chap. 15,) relates, from an Old Authour, to have been near the Sigma. Further, this House of the nineteen Accubita, was also termed The Delphica, or, The Delphicum, as Procopius attests book 1. of his Vandalicks, pag. 116; and Victor Thunonensis in his Chronicon. Vales.

* Or, Cloake.

[b] I can't tell why Evagrius should say this was an old custome, that the Emperours of Constantinople should be proclaimed in the Atrium of the Imperial Pallace. For the old custome was, that the Augusti should be proclaimed in the Seventh Milliarium, or, mil, from the City, in the presence of the Army, in the Campus, or field without the City. And Valens, [was] the first that had been stiled Emperour in that Suburb, by his Brother Valentinian. After whom, the following emperours of the East were proclaimed in the same place, as I have long since observed in my Notes on Amm. Marcellinus's 26th book pag 111, 116. The Emperour Zeno also was Crowned in the Seventh Milliarium by his own Son Leo, as Victor Thunonensis relates in his Chronicon. Likewise Basiliscus was a little after stiled Emperour in the Campus, as Theophanes informs us. Now, the Campus was in the Seventh Milliarium, as Theophylactus attests, book 8, chap. 12. But who was first saluted Augustus in the Atrium of the Imperial Pallace, at Constantinople, I have not yet plainly found. Indeed, Justinus Junior seems to have been proclaimed Emperour there, as may be gathered from the first chapter of this book. Vales.

[c] Theophanes in his Chronicon attests, that (not Johannes Scholasticus, but) Eutychius was then Patriarch of Constantinople. For Johannes Scholasticus died on the Tenth Indiction, in the month August, the day before the Calends of September. And Eutychius was restored to his own See on the same year, in the month October, on the Eleventh Indiction, as Theophanes attests. On the year following (which was the year of Christ 578, in the Twelfth Indiction, on the 25th of September,) this Eutychius Crowned Tiberius Augustus, as Theophanes and the Authour of the Alexandrian Chronicle inform us. But, on a more attentive examination of the thing, I have perceived nothing is to be found fault with here: for Evagrius speaks not here concerning Tiberius's being proclaimed Augustus, but of the Appellation of Cæsar granted to him. Further, Tiberius was made Cæsar on the Eighth Indiction, as the Authour of the Alexandrian Chronicle informs us: at which time Johannes was Patriarch of Constantinople. Vales.

*Let not the Magnificence of Your Attire deceive You, nor the Scene of those things which are seen: by which I have been imposed upon, and have rendred my self obnoxious to the Extreamest of Punishments. Do You correct my mistakes, and withall * Lenity and Mansuetude Govern the State.* Then pointing to the † Magistrates; You ought not, said he, in any wise to be perswaded by them; and further added, For they have reduced me to those Circumstances wherein You now behold me. [He uttered] severall other such like [expressions,] which put all persons into an amaze, and drew from them plenty of Tears. Now, Tiberius was very tall of Body, and besides his Stature, the Comeliest person, not only of Emperours, but of all other men, [d] as far as any one may conjecture; [e] in so much that, in the first place, even his very shape deserved an Empire. His temper of mind was Sweet and Curteous, [a person] that received all men kindly even at the first sight. He esteemed it [the greatest] Riches to be liberall to all men in reference to bountifull Contributions, not only as far as a necessity, but even to an affluence.

* Ἐυπαθείας, delight of mind.

† Or, Governours.

[d] Ἥπερ τις εἰκάσειν. I think it must be written, εἰπεῖν τις εἰκάσειν, as far as any one, &c.

Nor do I doubt but Evagrius left it thus written. Our conjecture is confirmed by the Tellerian Manuscript, wherein I found it plainly written in this manner. Away therefore with the rendition of Musculus, who translates it thus: Insignis magis, quàm ut quisquam illi conferri possit, more eminent, than that any one might be compared to him. But Christophorson turns it in this manner; Pulchritudinis excellentiâ omnium opinione major, for the excellency of beauty, greater than the opinion of all men. Vales.

[e] Καὶ πρῶτον μὲν τὸ εἶδος ἄξιον. The reading in the Florentine Manuscript is truer, thus, ὡς πρῶτον μὲν, &c, in so much that, in the first place, &c. Evagrius alludes to that known verse of the Tragœdian; πρῶτον μὲν εἶδος ἄξιον τυραννίδος. Vales.

f 'Ου γὰρ ὅπη λαβεῖν. I had rather write, ὅ γὰρ π λαβεῖν ὤφελον οἱ δεόμενοι, &c. For he conſidered not, what Petitioners ought to receive, as the reading is in Nicephorus, book 18, chap. 1. In the Florentine and Tellerian Manuſcripts, inſtead of ὤφελον, 'tis written ὄφειλον. Valeſ.

f For he conſidered not, what Petitioners ought to receive, but what it became an Emperour of the Romans to give. 'Twas his ſentiment, that that Gold was adulterate || which was Collected with the Tears [of the Provincials.] Hence ('tis certain) it was, that he remitted the Collection of g one whole years Tribute, to the Tributaries. And thoſe poſſeſſions which Adarmanes had ruined, he freed from the Tributary Function, not only in proportion to the damage they had ſuffered, but alſo much above [the loſs.] Moreover, h thoſe illegall Preſents were remitted to the Magiſtrates, for which [Bribes] the Emperours had heretofore ſold their Subjects [to them.] He alſo wrote Conſtitutions concerning theſe matters, making thereby proviſion for the ſecurity of poſterity.

|| Or, Which came from Tears.

g There is extant a Conſtitution of Juſtinus Junior, wherein he has remitted to the Provincialls the Remains of the Tributes of the paſt year, untill the Eighth Indiction of the Cycle current. Which Juſtinus ſeems to have done by the perſwaſion of Tiberius, whom a little before he had Created Cæſar, at the beginning of the Eighth Indiction, as the Authour of the Alexandrian Chronicle informs us. Into this firſt Conſtitution therefore of the Emperour Juſtinus junior, the name of Tiberius the Cæſar ought alſo to have been inſerted. Valeſ.

h At this preſent there is extant a Conſtitution of the Emperour Juſtinus junior, concerning the promoting Rectours of Provinces without reward. Which amongſt the Novell Conſtitutions of Juſtinus junior is the Fifth in number. In that Conſtitution Juſtinus gives permiſſion to the Provincialls, that they may make known to the Emperour thoſe perſons whom they ſhould judge fit to Govern their own Province; and the Emperour promiſes, that he will give forth the Codicills and the Inſignia [Marks, Tokens] of Magiſtracy freely, without any preſent or gift. Which Law, in regard it bears date on the eighth year of Juſtinus Junior's Empire, was, we doubt not, ſet forth alſo by the perſwaſion and ſuggeſtion of Tiberius the Cæſar. Valeſ.

CHAP. XIV.

That the Emperour Tiberius raiſed a vaſt Army [to be imployed] againſt Choſroes; [at the head whereof] he ſent Juſtinianus the Dux, and drove [Choſroes] out of * the Roman Pale.

* Or, Land of the Romans.

HAving therefore imployed the ill gotten Treaſure to a good uſe, he made proviſion for a War. And raiſes ſo vaſt an Army * of valiant men, by liſting the choyceſt Souldiers, both of the || Tranſalpine Nations who [inhabit] about the Rhine, and alſo of the † Ciſalpines, of the Maſſagetæ likewiſe, and other Scythick nations; of thoſe alſo about * Pannonia and Mœſia, of the Illyrii and Iſauri: that he intermixt near an Hundred and fifty thouſand men with his incomparable i Troops of Horſe, and Routed Choſroes: who after his taking of Daras, immediately in the Summer had made an irruption into Armenia, and from thence reſolved upon an Invaſion of Cæſarea, (which is the Metropolis of Cappadocia,) and of the Cities in that Region. He contemned the Roman Empire in ſuch a manner, that when Cæſar diſpatch't away an Embaſſy to him, he would not vouchſafe the Ambaſſadours acceſs to himſelf: but ordered them to follow him to Cæſarea: for there, he ſaid, he would * give them audience. But when he ſaw the Roman Army fronting him, (Commanded by b Juſtinianus c Brother to that Juſtinus who had been barbarouſly murdered by [the Emperour] Juſtinus,) accurately well Armed, the Trumpets ſounding an Alarm, the Colours raiſed in order to an Engagement, the Souldier greedy of ſlaughter, and with a moſt incomparable decency breathing forth rage and fury, [laſtly] ſuch and ſo great a number of Horſe, as none of the Emperours had ever conceived in their mind; he was ſtricken with a great amazement, ſighed deeply at ſo unhop't-for and unexpected a thing, and would not begin a Fight. When therefore he deferred an Engagement, made delayes, ſpent the time, and only feigned a Fight; d Curs the Scythian, a perſon that Commanded the Right Wing, makes an Attack upon him. The Perſians were not able to bear the † Shock of his Charge, but apparently deſerted their || Ranks; whereupon [Curs] made a great ſlaughter amongſt the Enemy. Then he Attacks the Rere [of the Perſian,] where Choſroes and the whole Army had their Baggage: and he takes all the Kings Treaſure, and moreover the whole Baggage, in the very ſight of Choſroes, who bore it with patience, and e thought his own trouble might with more eaſe be indured, than the Attack of Curs. In this manner therefore Curs, together with his Souldiers, poſſeſſes himſelf of great Riches and Plunder, and drives away the Beaſts of burthen together with their Burthens, amongſt which hapned to be Choſroes's Sacred Fire, adored by him as a God: [after this] he marches round the Perſian Army ſinging a Victorious Song, and about Candle-lighting returns to * the Roman Army, which † had now left its Station; neither Choſroes nor the Romans having begun a Fight: only ſome Skirmiſhes had hapned, and (as it uſually hap-b Menander Protector has mentioned this Juſtinian Magiſter Militum throughout the Eaſt, in the Sixth Book of his Hiſtories, pag. 159. As alſo Theophylactus, Book 3. Chap. 12. And likewiſe Johannes Biclarienſis in his Chronicon: anno 9. Juſtini Coſdroes Perſarum Imperator, &c; On Juſtinus's ninth year Coſdroes Emperour of the Perſians, with too numerous an Army, advances to ruine the Roman Confines: againſt whom Juſtinianus Commander of the Roman Milice and Magiſter Militum of the Eaſt being ſent by Tiberius, makes ready for a War, and in the Fields which lie between Daras and Niſibis engages in a brave Fight, having with him thoſe moſt valiant Nations, which in the Language of the Barbarians are termed Hermani; where he vanquiſhes the forementioned Emperour. Valeſ.

|| Or, Beyond the Alpes.

† Or, On this ſide the Alpes.

* Or, Paonia.

i Εἴλας ἱππέων. Without doubt it muſt be made ἴλας, Troops. 'Tis a wonder to me, that this was not taken notice of, either by Nicephorus, or the Tranſlatours. Valeſ.

* Or, Conſider of their Embaſſy.

* Or, His own [forces.]

† Or, Had now broke their own Ranks.

c Τ' ἀδελφῷ ἰυςίνε δεικαίως ἀνηρημμένῳ. From the Florentine and Tellerian Manuſcripts I have made this place thus; τ' ἀδελφῷ ἰυςίνε τῷ πρὸς ἰυςινε δεικαίως ἀνηρημμένῳ, Brother to that Juſtinus who had been barbarouſly murdered by [the Emperour] Juſtinus. This Juſtinian therefore was Son to Germanus, (which Theophylactus does alſo atteſt in his Third Book,) Brother of that Juſtinus who had been ſlain by the Emperour, as Evagrius relates in the beginning of this book. Valeſ.

d Theophylactus mentions this perſon, in book 3. chap. 16; and in book 1. chap. 9. In which places the Latine Tranſlatour terms him Curſius. But, he had better have tranſlated it Curſus. For ſo Menander Protector calls him, in the ſixth book of his Hiſtories, pag. 159 of the King's Edition. In Theophanes's Chronicon, pag. 214, he is corruptly termed κρὰς, Crous. Valeſ.

e Ἀνεκλοτέρειαν δὲ τῆς ἑαυτῶ ὀπιςροφῆς τῶ κὰρς ἠξιωμένε. I rather approve of Nicephorus's reading, (book 18. chap. 2.) which runs thus; ἀνεκλοτέρειαν δὲ πῶ ἑαυτῶ ὀπιςροφὴν τῶ κὰρς ἠξιωμένε: only, I would adde an Article, in this manner, τῆς τῶ κὰρς ἠξιωμένε. That is, as Johannes Langus renders it, Quòd facilius is impreſſionem ſuam, quàm ipſius Cours ſuſtineri poſſe exiſtimaret, becauſe he thought his own impreſſion might with more eaſe be endured, than the Attack of Cours. Further, Theophanes in his Chronicon relates this Flight of the Perſians and Victory of the Romans, after the death of the Emperour Juſtinus junior, when Tiberius had obtained the Empire alone. But Theophylactus, from whom Theophanes ſeems to have taken his Relation, atteſts that that hapned whilſt Juſtinus was yet alive, when Tiberius bore the Title and Dignity of Cæſar only, and governed the State; as may be ſeen in Theophylactus's third book, chap. 14. To whom agrees our Evagrius; for he relates the Death of Juſtinus Junior hereafter, in the nineteenth chapter of this book, where he ſays in expreſs words, that after Juſtinus's death, Tiberius deprived Juſtinian of the Dignity of Magiſter Militum. Valeſ.

pens,)

pens,) ſometimes one man [came out] of each Army and engaged in a ſingle Combat. On the night following Choſroes kindled many Fires, and prepared for a Night-Fight: and whereas the Roman Army was divided into two Camps, in the dead of the Night he falls upon thoſe who were Encamped to the Northward. After he had routed them by his ſudden and unexpected Attack, he invades Melitina a City that lay near, which was then without a Garriſon and deſtitute of Inhabitants. And after he had burnt down this whole City, he made preparations for his paſſing over the River Euphrates. But when the Roman Army was got together into one Body, and followed him, being put into a fear in relation to his own ſafety, he himſelf got upon an Elephant, and ſo paſt the River. But a vaſt number of the [Forces] about him were buried in the Torrent of the Euphrates. After he had received information of their being drowned, he marched away from thence. Choſroes therefore having undergone this laſt puniſhment for his ſo great † inſolence towards the Romans, in company of thoſe [of his Forces] who had made their eſcape, went into the Eaſt, where he had a Truce, to the end no one might make an Attack upon him. But Juſtinianus with the whole Roman Army entred the Perſian Empire, where he paſſed the Winter ſeaſon, no body giving him any the leaſt moleſtation. About the Summer Solſtice he returned, without the loſs of any part of his Forces, and with great felicity and much glory ſpent the Summer about the Confines of both Empires.

† Petulancy, or, Contumelie.

CHAP. XV.

That Choſroes being heavily diſquieted at his own overthrow, ended his life: but his Son Hormiſda undertook the Government of the Perſians.

But, an immenſe [deluge of] ſadneſs being poured in upon [a] Choſroes, (who was now ſorely diſtreſſed, reduced to a deſperation, and overwhelmed with a reciprocall Torrent of Grief,) in a miſerable manner took him out of this life; after he had erected an immortall Monument of his own Flight, [to wit] the Law he wrote, that no Emperour of the Perſians ſhould in future lead forth an Army againſt the Romans. His Son Hormiſda ſucceeds him in the Empire. [b] Of whom I muſt at preſent omit to ſpeak, in regard the ſequel [of Tranſactions] calls me to themſelves, and doth expect the * thread of my Diſcourſe.

[a] The death of Choſdroes King of the Perſians is related too ſoon here. For he died after Tiberius had gotten the Empire, as Theophylactus atteſts, book 3. chap. 16. which is alſo confirmed by Menander Protector in his Excerpt. Legat. Wherefore Theophanes is miſtaken in his Chronicon, who relates Choſdroes's death, and the Inauguration of his Son Hormiſda, in the Empire of Juſtinus Junior. Valeſ.

* Line, or, Procedure.

[b] Ὁ νῦν ἐατέον. In the Tellerian Manuſcript I found it written, ὃν νῦν ἐατέον, of whom I muſt at preſent omit to ſpeak: which reading I prefer far before the Vulgar one. Valeſ.

CHAP. XVI.

Who at that time were Biſhops of the Greater Churches.

After the departure of Johannes, called alſo Catelinus, out of this life, [a] Bonoſus undertakes the Government of the Biſhoprick of Rome; he was ſucceeded by another Johannes, whoſe ſucceſſour was Pelagius. The Conſtantinopolitane Chair, when Johannes was dead, was reſtored to Eutychius, who had been Biſhop before Johannes. After Apollinaris, Johannes ſucceeds in the Throne of Alexandria, who was ſucceeded by Eulogius. After Macarius, Johannes is promoted to the Epiſcopate of Jeruſalem, a perſon who had been exerciſed in the Conflicts of an unfurniſhed life, in that termed the Monaſterie of the Acœmeti; [b] nothing of an Innovation having been attempted in relation to the Eccleſiaſtick conſtitution.

[a] In Nicephorus, book 17, chapt. 35, he is called Bonoſus. This is he, whom Anaſtaſius Bibliothecarius and the other Authours who have written concerning the Lives of the Biſhops of Rome, do term Benedictus. Baronius thinks he had the Surname of Bonoſus. Valeſ.

[b] Chriſtophorſon underſtood theſe words ſo, as if Evagrius would have ſaid, that in the times of Johannes Biſhop of Jeruſalem, no tumult had been raiſed in the Church. But to me Evagrius ſeems to mean another thing; to wit, that during that whole time, wherein thoſe Prelates here named by Evagrius, ſate; there had been no tumult in the Church. Valeſ.

CHAP. XVII.

Concerning the Earthquake which hapned at Antioch in the times of Tiberius.

But, [a] in the third year of Tiberius the Cæſar's Governing the Roman Empire, there hapned at Antioch and the Suburb Daphne which is near it, a moſt diſmall ſhaking of the Earth, [b] at the very hotteſt time of Noon-day. At which time all Daphne was totally demoliſhed by this Earthquake, and the Edifices at Antioch, as well the publick as the private ones, were rent in ſunder to the very earth, but fell not to the very ground. Some other accidents hapned likewiſe, highly worthy to be recorded, both at Theopolis it ſelf, and at the Imperial City alſo: which diſquieted both thoſe Cities, and incited them to the greateſt Tumults. [These Accidents] took their * beginning from a divine Zeal, and obtained a concluſion befitting God. Which [matters] [c] I come [now] to give a Narrative of.

[a] Τῇ τρίτῃ καίσαρος Θεοδοσίου τοῦ νέου τῆς βασιλείας διαδοχῇ. Nicephorus (book 18, chap. 3,) thought that by theſe words was meant the third year of Tiberius Auguſtus's Empire. The ſame was the Sentiment alſo of Chriſtophorſon and Muſculus, as may be gathered from their Renditions. But in my judgment, Evagrius ſeems to mean here the year of Tiberius's Cæſarean Dignity. For, in the firſt place the words themſelves do ſufficiently ſhow that. Then ſecondly, Evagrius has not yet related Juſtinus Junior's death, nor the Coronation of Tiberius. For he ſpeaks of theſe hereafter, in the nineteenth chapter of this book. Wherefore, thoſe things related in this chapter, hapned whilſt Juſtinus Junior was yet alive. Valeſ.

* Occaſion.

[b] Ἐς τ' αὐτὸ τῆς μεσημβρίας τὸ σφοδρότατον. It muſt be made ἐς αὐτό, at the very; as 'tis in the Tellerian M. S; or, κατ' αὐτό, as it is in Nicephorus. Valeſ.

[c] Λέξων ἔρχομαι. I begin to relate. I had rather write, ἔρχομαι, I come: for ſo Græcians are wont to ſpeak. In the Tellerian M. S. I found it plainly written, λέξων ἔρχομαι, I come to give a relation of. Valeſ.

CHAP. XVIII.

Concerning the Inſurrection againſt the Execrable Anatolius.

ONe Anatolius (a perſon at firſt [a] of the ordinary rank, and one of the Sedentary Mechanicks, but afterwards in what manner I know not, he had thruſt himſelf into the Magiſtracy, and into other Offices;) lived in the City Antioch: where alſo he followed thoſe affairs which he then had in hand. On which account likewiſe it hapned that he contracted an intimate familiarity with Gregorius the Prelate of that City: and made frequent viſits to him, [b] partly that he might confer with him, and partly to render his own power and authority greater by often converſing with him.

This [Anatolius] was afterwards diſcovered to have ſacrificed [to the Gods;] and having on that account been called to Examination, was detected to be a moſt execrable wretch, a Conjurer, and a perſon involved in innumerable impieties. But he †corrupted the Comes of the Eaſt with money; and wanted but little of gaining his diſmiſſion, together with his Accomplices; (For he had ſeverall others of the ſame Moralls with himſelf, who had been apprehended at the ſame time that he was:) had not the populacy made an Inſurrection, and by raiſing a great diſturbance, ſpoyled that deſign. Moreover, they exclaimed againſt the Patriarch himſelf, and ſaid that he *was a party in that Conſult. Alſo, ſome turbulent and deſtructive Dæmon [c] had perſwaded ſome perſons, that he was ‖ preſent together with Anatolius at the [deteſtable] ſacrifices. For this reaſon Gregorius was reduced to the imminenteſt of dangers, moſt violent incurſions being made againſt him by the populacy. And this ſuſpicion was raiſed to ſuch an heighth, that the Emperour Tiberius himſelf became deſirous of knowing the truth from Anatolius's own mouth. He gives order therefore, that Anatolius and his Accomplices ſhould forthwith be conveyed to the Imperial City. Which when Anatolius underſtood, he ran to an Image of the Theotocos hung up by a rope in the Priſon, and having folded his hands behind his back, ſhewed himſelf in the poſture of an humble Suppliant and Petitioner. But ſhe, abominating [the man,] and reproving [the Wretch] as impious and hatefull to God, [d] turned [her face] quite backward; an horred ſight, and worthy to be forever remembred: which thing having been ſeen, both by all the Priſoners, and alſo by thoſe who were entruſted with the cuſtody of Anatolius and his Accomplices; was declared to all perſons. Moreover, ſhe was ſeen by ſome of the Faithfull, inciting them againſt that Peſt Anatolius, and ſaying that he had been injurious to her Son. But after he was brought to the Imperial City, and having been *expoſed to the acuteſt of Tortures, had not any thing in the leaſt to ſay againſt the Prelate [Gregorius;] he, together with his Aſſociates, became the Occaſioner of greater Tumults there, and [was the Authour] of a popular Sedition in that City. For, when ſome of † them had received a ſentence of Baniſhment, but were not to be taken off by *a capitall puniſhment; the populacy, incenſed by a kind of Divine zeal, put all things into a diſturbance, by being exaſperated, and highly enraged. And having ſeized the perſons that had been condemned to Exile, they put them into a Boat, and burnt them alive; which ſentence the people pronounc't againſt them. They likewiſe exclaimed againſt the Emperour, and againſt Eutychius their own Patriarch, as being betrayers of the Faith: And they were about to have murdered Eutychius, and thoſe perſons to whom the Cognizance of this Cauſe had been committed, going up and down to all places in queſt of them; had not providence, the preſerver of all things, delivered them out of their hands who ſought after them, and by degrees appeaſed the Rage of ſo numerous a multitude, in ſuch a manner, that no miſchievous Action was committed by their hands. Further, Anatolius himſelf in the firſt place was caſt to the wild Beaſts in the Amphitheatre, and his Body having been torn by them, was afterwards fixt to a Croſs. But neither in this manner found he an end of his puniſhment in this life. For the Wolves having drag'd his impure Body down from the Croſs, (a thing never before ſeen,) divided it for a prey amongſt themſelves. There was alſo a certain perſon amongſt us, who (before theſe things hapned,) affirmed, that he ſaw in his ſleep, in what manner the Sentence againſt Anatolius and his Accomplices ſhould be *pronounced by the people. And an Illuſtrious [e] Curator of the Imperial Houſes, who was a vigorous defender of Anatolius, affirmed that he ſaw the Theotocos, who ſaid, how long would he defend Anatolius, who had caſt ſuch great contumelies, both on her ſelf, and on her ſon. And in this manner were theſe affairs concluded.

For the Houſes of the Emperours, as well thoſe in the Imperial City, as them in the Suburbs, had their Curatores, who look't after their Revenue. And this dignity was not the meaneſt, for the perſons who bore it had the Titles of Moſt Glorious and Moſt Magnificent, as I have remarked before at the third chapter of this book. They ſeem alſo to have had a Juriſdiction, as Agathias ſhews in his Fifth Book, ſpeaking concerning one Anatolius an Ex-conſul; ἄνωθεν τῶν τῆδε ὑπάτων ἀξίᾳ τεπιμηθον, &c. A perſon that had both been honoured with the Dignity of the Conſuls, and beſides had obtained an Office, [which was,] to take care of and to look after the Houſes and poſſeſſions

[a] Πολλῶν τε ὀπηδοφείων. In the excellent Flotine Manuſcript I found it plainly written, ἐξ πυλαίων τε καὶ ὀπηδοφείων, of the ordinary rank, and one of the Sedentary Mechanicks. The ſame is the reading in Nicephorus. Further, 'tis ſtrange that three Tranſlatours ſhould have been miſtaken in the rendition of one word. For Johannes Langus renders it thus: Erat Theopoli Anatolius quidam, ex plebeis ille quidem & ignavis unus, There was at Theopolis one Anatolius, a perſon of the ordinary rank and one of the ſlothfull. Muſculus tranſlates it in this manner; Unus ex multis illis qui vitam delicate inſtituunt, One of thoſe many who lead a delicate life. Chriſtophorſon's Verſion runs thus; Anatolius vir quidam plebeius primùm & mollis. Anatolius a man at firſt a plebeian and effeminate, or, ſoft. Which interpretation they ſeem to have drawn from Suidas and the Authour of the Etymologicon; who expounded ὀπηδοφελῶ in this manner, ἀεργὸς καὶ γυναικώδης, idle and effeminate. But, this term ſignifies ſomething elſe here, as is concluded from the preceding term. Wherefore I doubt not, but by this word Evagrius means the Artifices Sellularii, Sedentary Mechanicks, which the Greeks alſo term ἑδραίους, for the ſame reaſon, to wit becauſe they do their work ſitting. So Julius Pollux book 7, chap. 1; and the Authour of the Etymologicon in the word βάναυσος. Valeſ.

[b] Τὰ μὲν καὶ πράγματα διαλεξάμενος. I write, τὰ μὲν ὡς διαλεξάμενος, partly that he might conſer with him; the word πράγματα muſt be expunged, which crept in here from the foregoing line. Valeſ.

† Or, Bought off.

* Or, Was a partaker of that deſign.

[c] Ἐνέπεισεν ἑνίους. Doubtleſs it muſt be made, ἀνέπεισεν, had perſwaded; as the reading is in Nicephorus. Valeſ.

‖ Or, Intermixt.

[d] Ἐπὶ τὰ ὀπίσω. Without doubt it muſt be written, ἐς τὰ ὀπίσω μετεστράφη, turned [her face] quite backward. And ſo Nicephorus read, who has expreſt this place of Evagrius thus, εἰς τὸ ὀπίσθεν παντάπασιν ἀπεστράφη, turned her ſelfe quite away from him. Whence it appears, that Nicephorus put a Comma before the word τέλειον, after the term διελέγχθη: which punctation I do rather approve of. Valeſ. In Robert Stephens's Edition, this paſſage is worded and pointed thus; ἡ δὲ, μυσαχθεῖσα καὶ τὸν ἐναγῆ καὶ δεινὰ διελέγχθη τέλειον, ὃν τὸ πάλιν μίσος ἐφίη; But ſhe, both abominating this impious perſon and perfectly reproving [the Wretch] hateſull to God, turned backward.

* Or, Subjected.

† Viz. Anatolius's Accomplices.

* Given-out, or, executed.

[e] Τῶν Καισαριανῶν προεστώς; that is, Curator of the Imperial Houſes.

ſions of the Emperour. Thoſe Officers are by the Romans termed Curatores. The term ἀρχὴν, Office, in this paſſage of Agathias (though Vulcanius has omitted it in his Verſion,) is in no wiſe ſuperfluous; but it imports an Office of a Magiſtrate, or a Juriſdiction. Beſides, that purple Ribband [or Garland,] and the Tables which the ſame Anatolius was wont to affixe to the Houſes of private perſons, that he might challenge them for the Treaſury, (as Agathias ſubjoyns in his following words,) do manifeſtly enough declare, that Anatolius had a Juriſdiction as Curator of the Imperial Houſes. 'Tis certain, the Conſtitution of the Emperour Tiberius concerning the Divine Houſes, doth plainly atteſt, that thoſe Curatores had Juriſdiction. For in that Conſtitution, Tiberius does make an expreſs eſtabliſhment, that an Actor, who ſhall prefer a Plaint [or, Sue Proceſs] againſt a Cartularius or a Conductor or a Colonus of an Imperial Houſe, concerning any matter belonging to an Houſe of the Emperour, may, if he will, come to an hearing before the Moſt Glorious and Moſt Magnificent Curator. But if he ſuſpects him, he may proſecute his Cauſe before any other Judge who ſhall have been put into Commiſſion by the Emperour. But the Emperour Tiberius in that Law prohibites the Curatores from fixing Tables or Fiſcall Titles on the Houſes of private perſons, and from Sealing them. For the Curatores were wont to ſell ſuch Titles as theſe to the meaner ſort, and to exact ſomething of them for their Patronage and Protection, as Tiberius does there ſhew. Moreover, theſe Houſes, and the Conductores [Hirers] of them enjoyed many priviledges and immunities, as may be ſeen in the Theodoſian Code, Tit. de privilegiis domus Auguſtæ, and in the fore-mentioned Conſtitution of Tiberius. Valeſ.

CHAP. XIX.

Concerning Mauricius's Generalſhip, and concerning his Vertues.

BUt, Tiberius being now, after the death of Juſtinus, encircled with the [Imperial] Crown, turns Juſtinianus out of Commiſſion, in regard he managed not [the War] againſt the Barbarians with the ſame fortunate ſucceſs as formerly. And [a] he Creates Mauricius Magiſter of the Eaſtern Milice, a perſon that derived his Deſcent and Name from the ſeniour Rome; but from his immediate Parents he acknowledged himſelf a Native of [b] Arabiſſus, a City of Cappadocia. He was a perſonage of great prudence and perſpicacity, every way accurate and immoveable. As to his Diet and Moralls, he was conſtant and moſt exact, a perfect Maſter over his appetite, making uſe of thoſe [proviſions] only that were neceſſary and eaſily procured; but [avoiding] all other things, † wherewith diſſolute and intemperate men are wont to pleaſe themſelves. He was not eaſie of Acceſs as to Conferences with * the Many, nor gave attention [promiſcuouſly to all perſons;] being ſenſible, that the firſt produced contempt, and the ſecond opened the way to flattery. He permitted very few Viſits to be made to himſelf, [c] nor thoſe except concerning affairs of conſequence. But to matters ſuperfluous he ſtopt his ears, not with wax, according to the Poet, but with reaſon rather: that ſo, reaſon might be the beſt key of his Ears, which ſhould opportunely both open and ſhut them in Diſcourſes. He had in ſuch a manner, ‖ clear'd himſelf of ignorance, the Mother of Raſhneſs; and of Sloth, which [d] dwelleth with her, and is her [e] Comrade: that his being in danger was [to be aſcribed]. to Wiſedome, and his ſlowneſs of Action, to ſecurity. For, Courage and Prudence rode on Opportunities as 'twere on an Horſe, and governed the Raines acccording to what the Utility [of the Republick] might order. And, the Remiſſneſs and * Intenſneſs of his very Aſſaults were performed in a certain Meaſure, Order, and Proportion. But concerning this matter we ſhall ſpeak more accurately in the Sequel. For, what and how eminent a perſon he was, muſt be reſerved to his own Empire; which hath made a more manifeſt diſcovery of this man, and, by having allowed him an uncontroulable power of doing any thing, has diſplaid his very inmoſt Receſſes. This Mauricius therefore having at the head of the Roman Army made an Expedition into the Perſian Territories, takes from the Perſians their Cities and moſt convenient Caſtles: and poſſeſſed himſelf of ſo great a Spoil, that the * Captives he had brought away [out of Perſia] [f] peopled whole

[a] Yea, Tiberius, whilſt Juſtinus as yet ſurvived, created Mauricius Magiſter of the Oriental Milice, after he had turned out Juſtinian; as Theophylactus atteſts, book 3, chap. 15. Valeſ.

[b] Arabiſſus, or Arabiſſum, was heretofore a Town of Armenia Secunda, as Hierocles informs us in his Notitia of the Provinces of the Eaſtern Empire. Indeed, in the Firſt Conſtantinopolitane Synod, a Biſhop of Arabiſſus in Armenia the leſs is mentioned. Moreover, Philoſtorgius aſcribes this Town to Armenia the Leſs, as may be ſeen in Suidas, in the word εὐδόξιος. But afterwards it was attributed to Cappadocia, if we may believe Evagrius. I know not whether it be the ſame with Arabiſſon, whereof Menander Protector makes mention in his Excerpta Legationum, (pag. 159 of the Kings Edition,) which Town was near Theodoſiopolis. Valeſ.

† Or, Wherewith a diſſolute life is delighted.

* Or, The Vulgar.

[c] Καὶ τοῦτο ἐπωιδασμῶν. Muſculus renders this place thus; acceſſus ad ſe raros permittebat, eoſque elaboratos, he permitted very few Acceſſes to himſelf, and thoſe [procured] with a great deal of difficulty. Nor has Chriſtophorſon tranſlated it better, in this manner; Raro ad ſe adeundi conceſſit poteſtatem, eamque niſi vehementer oratus, largitus eſt; He rarely granted a power of acceſs to himſelf; and he beſtowed that, not without very earneſt intreaty. Neither of theſe Tranſlatours have hit the ſenſe of this place. But the Florentine Manuſcript hath ſhown us the true reading of this paſſage. For, inſtead of ἐπωιδασμῶν, it is there written ἐπωιδυσμῶν. I doubt not therefore but this whole place is thus to be read; τὰς μὲν ἐν ἐς αὐλὸν ἐσόδους ἀπανίας παρεῖχεν, καὶ τούτοις ἐπωιδυσμῶν. τοῖς δὲ ἄλλοις τοῖς ἀδείποις ἀπέρρηγεν, He permitted very few Viſits, &c, as we have rendred it. Further, in the Florent. Manuſcript theſe words are ſet in the Margin: οἷα λέγει περὶ μανεικίου θαυμαστὰ πλήρη καὶ ἐπαίνων ἄξια, Thoſe things which he ſpeaks concerning Mauricius are full of admiration and worthy of praiſe. There occurs another Elogie of Mauricius, elegant enough, in Suidas in the word μανεικιος, taken out of Menander Protector's Hiſtory: to compare that with this here, would not be unuſeful. Valeſ.

[d] Τὴν ἀπωκισμὸνην. I am not of the ſame opinion with Chriſtophorſon and Sir Henry Savil, who at this place read ἐπωκισμὸνην. For there is no ſuch Greek word as ἀπωκισμὸνη, as I think. Muſculus alſo ſeems to have read in the ſame manner. For he renders it thus; Inſcitiam verò matrem temeritatis, & ignaviam illius domeſticam ac ſociam ſic a ſe repellebat, &c. for he ſo drove from himſelf Ignorance the Mother of Raſhneſs, and Sloth her Domeſtick and Companion, &c. In the ſame manner Evagrius, in the beginning of this book, hath ſpoken concerning Juſtinus Junior; θράσει δὲ καὶ δειλίαις ταῖς κακίαις κρατέμενος, &c. being poſſeſt with —— Vices, Boldneſs and Sloth: where (as it ſeems from this place) we ſhould read ταῖς συνδυοῖν κακίαις, with two Vices that were Comrades or Chamberfellowes. But if any one had rather read ἐπωκισμὸνην, as Sir Henry Savil does, then the paſſage is to be rendred thus; Et inquilinam ejus, ac contubernalem ignaviam, And Sloth which dwelleth with her, and is her Comrade. For, there is as much difference between the word ἀπωκισμὸν and ἐπωκισμὸνη, as between ἄποικος and ἔποικος. Now, ἄποικος imports Colonus, but ἔποικος ſignifies Inquilinus; as Suidas informs us in the word ἔποικος. They who were carried out of their own Country into any Colonie, were termed ἄποικοι or Coloni. But, he who voluntarily left his own Country and removed into a Colonie or into any other City, was termed ἔποικος, or μέτοικος. Chriſtophorſon is miſtaken therefore, who hath rendred this place thus: Inſcitiam autem Matrem Audaciæ, & Timiditatem quæ ei vicina ac finitima eſt, ſic ab ſe depulit, But he in ſuch a manner thruſt from himſelf ignorance the Mother of Boldneſs, and Timidity which is her Neighbour and Borderer. Ἐπωκισμὸνη does not ſignifie Finitimam a Borderer, but inquilinam, as I have ſaid. And the Latine word inquilina does exactly agree with the Greek-term. For 'tis called inquilinus ab incolatu, from habitation or dwelling. Beſides, the words σύνδυος does not ſignifie Vicinam, a Neighbour; (for that would be ἀσχύνος;) but Contubernalem, a Comrade or Chamber-fellow, who lives under the ſame Roof. But, after a more diligent inſpection into the Matter, I ſhould rather read at this place ἐπωκισμὸνην. Valeſ.

[e] Σύνδυον αὐτῇ. I think it muſt be αὐτῷ, underſtand, τῷ θράσει, Raſhneſs. The reaſon of which emendation I have given a little before. Nicephorus (book 18, chap. 8,) writing out this paſſage of Evagrius, has expreſt it thus; δειλίαν τὴν ἐπωκισμὸνην καὶ σύνδρομον αὐτῇ, Sloth which dwelleth with her and is her Aſſeſſour: which is the worſt way of all. Valeſ.

[f] Ἐξοικίσαι. In the Florentine Manuſcript I found it written ἐξοικῆσαι. Nicephorus has made uſe of the ſimple verb οἰκίσαι. I doubt not but Evagrius wrote ἐσοικίσαι, Peopled. Evagrius has uſed the ſame term in the firſt and ſecond chapter of this book. Valeſ.

‖ Or, Thruſt from himſelf.

* Σαγηνευθέντα ἀχμαλώτα, the enſnared Captives.

Iſlands, Cities, and Countreys, which in proceſs of time had been deſerted; and land that before had been wholly untilled, was by them rendred fertile; and out of them were raiſed numerous Armies, which with great Courage and Valour waged wars againſt other [barbarous] Nations: [in fine,] every family was filled with thoſe that might perform Servile Offices, in regard Slaves could be procured at a moſt cheap rate.

CHAP. XX.

How Mauricius vanquiſhed Tamchoſroes and Adaarmanes Generalls of the Perſians.

MOreover, He engaged with the Eminenteſt of the Perſian Commanders, to wit, Tamchoſroes and Adaarmanes, who had made an irruption [into the Roman Pale] with a Conſiderable Army. In what manner, when, and where this Action was performed, let others relate; or perhaps we will give a Narrative thereof in another work: for our preſent Subject promiſes an account of far different affairs. Nevertheleſs, [a] Tamchoſroes fell in that Engagement, not by the Valour of the Roman Army, but by the piety only of their Commander in chief [Mauricius,] and by his Faith in God. * Moreover, Adaarmanes flies with all imaginable haſt, having been ſeverely worſted in that Fight, and loſt many of his own Forces: and that, notwithſtanding Alamundarus, who Commanded the † Saracens, had acted perfidiouſly, and refuſed to paſs the River Euphrates, and to give aſſiſtance to Mauricius againſt thoſe Saracens who were in the Perſian Army. For the Saracens are not to be vanquiſhed by others, becauſe of the fleetneſs of their Horſes: nor can they be taken, if at any time they be * ſtopt, and they prevent the Enemy in their Retreats. Notwithſtanding alſo, [b] Theodorichus, who was Commander of the Scythian Nations, ſtood not even the firſt Charge, but fled together with the Forces about him.

[a] Ὁ ταμοσχέης, Tamoſchroes. It muſt doubtleſs be written ταμχοσρόης, Tamchoſroes. For ſo Evagrius calls him a little before. Menander Protector mentions this Commander, in his Excerpta Legationum, and Theophylactus in his Third Book. The ſame Theophylactus relates alſo (book 3, chap. 18,) how he was killed in a Battell againſt Mauricius. And atteſts, that that was done after the death of the Emperour Juſtinus, at ſuch time as Tiberius was promoted to be Auguſtus. In the Tellerian Manuſcript it is written χοσρόης, Choſroës. Valeſ.

* Φεύγει δὲ καὶ ὁ ἀδααρμάνης καταπεφόβ, &c. In Robert Stephens the reading here is, φεύγει δὲ καὶ ὁ ἀδααρμάνης καπαφοβ. ἐν τῇ, &c.

† Or, Barbarous Scenitæ.

* Or, Incloſed, or ſurrounded.

[b] Theophylactus has made mention of this Commander Theodorichus, in his third book, chap. 17. He was by Nation a Goth, as may be concluded from his name. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXI.

† Or, Declared Empire to Mauricius.

Concerning thoſe Signes which † preſignified Mauricius's being made Emperour.

FUrther, there hapned Signes alſo ſhown from Heaven, which foretold, that Mauricius ſhould be Emperour. For, as he offered incenſe late at night, within the Sanctuary of the Sacred Houſe of the holy and moſt undefiled Virgin and Theotocos Mary, (which by the Antiochians is termed Juſtinian's Church,) the Veil about the Sacred Table ſeemed to be all on fire; in ſo much that Mauricius was ſtruck with Terrour and Amazement, and very much dreaded that ſight. Gregorius Patriarch of that City, ſtanding by Mauricius, told him, that that thing proceeded * from God, and portended the greateſt and moſt eximious events to him. Chriſt our God appeared likewiſe to him [a] in the Eaſt, requeſting of him that he would avenge him. Which [Viſion] apparently declared that he ſhould be Emperour. For, from whom elſe could [our Saviour] have requeſted ſuch things, ſave from an Emperour, and from one who was ſo pious an Adorer of himſelf? Moreover, his Parents related to me ſeverall other memorable paſſages, and ſuch as are worthy to be recorded, when I my ſelf made enquiry of them concerning theſe matters. For his Father affirmed to me, that in his ſleep he ſaw a vaſt Vine, which ſprang out of his Bed at the very time of * his conception, and that a great many and thoſe the faireſt ſort of Grapes appeared hanging on it. And his Mother declared, that [b] at the very time of her delivery, the Earth ſent forth a ſtrange and unuſuall ſweet ſmell. Alſo, that ſhe termed [c] The Empuſa had often carried away the Infant, as if ſhe would have devoured it: but was unable to do it any miſchief. Symeones, likewiſe who kept his Station upon a Pillar near Antioch, a man of extraordinary prudence in the management of affairs, and one adorned with all the Divine Virtues, ſpoke and performed many things, which declared that Mauricius ſhould be Emperour. Concerning which perſon we ſhall ſpeak more opportunely in the following book of our Hiſtory.

* Or, From a certain Divine inſtinct.

[a] That is when Mauricius was in the Eaſt. So Nicephorus expounds this place of Evagrius, in the ninth chapter of his 18th book. A little after, from the ſame Nicephorus, and from the Tellerian M. S. I have mended it, ὕπερ τῆ ἐνδείκνυσιν ζητήσ, and petitioned him in relation to a revenge; whereas before it was one word, thus, ὑπερενδείκνυσιν, &c. Valeſ.

* Mauricius's.

[b] Ἡ δὲ μήτηρ αὐτῷ, &c. I am of the ſame mind with Sir Henry Savil, who hath noted in his Copy, that perhaps it ſhould be written, καθ' αὐτὸν ἔφασκε τὸν ὑποτεξιν, &c. declared, that at the very time of her delivery, &c. And ſo the reading is in Nicephorus. In the Tellerian Manuſcripts I found it written, περὶ αὐτῷ τῷ ὑποτεξιν, at her very delivery. Valeſ.

[c] See, if you pleaſe, what I have remarked concerning The Empuſa, at the eighth book of Sozomen's Hiſtory, chap. 6. Nicephorus, who deſervedly derides ſuch Old-wives-fables as theſe, affirms (chap. 9. book 18.) that in his age this [Shee-devill] was called Gillo. Thoſe termed Strigæ by the Romans, were like to theſe Empuſæ; concerning theſe Strigæ ſee Feſtus. The old Gloſſes, Striga, λαμυγὼν γυνὴ φαρμακὶς, Læſtrygon, a Witch. Concerning this Gillo or Gello, which heretofore was believed to ſnatch away Children, Leo Allatius has remarked much, in his Letter to Paulus Zachias. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXII.

Concerning the Proclaiming of Mauricius and Auguſta.

FUrther, Mauricius is promoted to the Empire, at ſuch time as Tiberius was drawing his laſt breath, and had delivered to him his Daughter Auguſta, and the Empire inſtead of a portion, * He ſurvived his being made Emperour but a very ſhort time; but left an immortall Memory for the good Actions he performed. Nor, are they eaſily to be confined within the bounds of a Narrative. Moreover, Tiberius left an incomparable Inheritance to the Republick, to wit, his proclaiming of Mauricius Emperour. To whom he diſtributed his Names alſo: for he ſtyled Mauricius, Tiberius; and to Auguſta [he gave the name of] Conſtantina. What was performed by them, the following book, divine ſtrength affording me its aſſiſtance, ſhall ſet forth.

* Or, He lived in the Empire but, &c.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXIII.

† Or, Concerning a ſummary of, &c.

† A Computation of the Times from Juſtinus Junior, to Mauricius.

MOreover, that the Times may be * diſtinguiſhed with all imaginable accuracy, you are to know, that Juſtinus Junior reigned [a] by himſelf twelve years ten months and a half; [b] with Tiberius [his Colleague,] three years and eleven months. All which time put together, [make up] ſixteen years nine months and an half. Tiberius reigned alone four years. So that, from Romulus untill the proclaiming of Mauricius Tiberius Emperour, there are concluded to be ....., as both the former, and preſent [deſcription of] the years hath manifeſted.

* Or, recounted.

[a] This place gave occaſion of a miſtake to Baronius, who, in his Eccleſiaſtick Annalls, following Evagrius as his Authour, attributes ſixteen years and nine months Reign to Juſtinus Junior. But, the other Chronologers aſſign fewer years to Juſtinus. For, Johannes Biclarienſis attributes but eleven years to him; Cedrenus, thirteen years and ſome few months. The Authour of the Alexandrian Chronicle affirms, that he Reigned twelve years and eight months. Laſtly, Dionyſius Petavius, a moſt diligent Writer of Times, gives Juſtinus thirteen years of Empire, lacking one month. Which years he begins from the year of Chriſt 565, on the month November, in the fourteenth Indiction, whereon he judges, (with Theophanes and Baronius,) that Juſtinian died. To the opinion of which perſon I do moſt willingly ſubſcribe. Indeed, that the firſt year of Juſtinus Junior was current with the fourteenth Indiction, we are informed from the ſame Juſtinus's Firſt Novel to Julianus Præfect of the City, which has this Subſcription: Data 18. Kalendas Octobres Chalcedone, Imp. D. N. Juſtino P. P. Auguſt. Anno Primo, Indictione quintâ decimâ, Dated on the eighteenth of the Calends of October, at Chalcedon, Emperour our Lord Juſtinus Father of his Country Auguſtus, on his firſt year, in the fifteenth Indiction. For, the firſt year of Juſtinus's Empire began from the month November, as 'tis agreed amongſt all writers. It muſt therefore neceſſarily have then been the fourteenth Indiction: in regard, on the month September of the year following, the fifteenth Indiction is reckoned. For, if Juſtinus had begun his Empire on the fifteenth Indiction, (as Victor Thunonenſis, Johannes Biclarienſis, and the Authour of the Alexandrian Chronicle, have left it recorded;) and in the month November; 'tis certain, the firſt Indiction would have begun in the month September of the year following. Further, of theſe twelve years and eleven months, (during which compleat ſpace of time we affirm that Juſtinus Reigned,) he Reigned alone and without a Colleague eight years nine months and an half: with Tiberius the Cæſar, he Reigned four years, and almoſt one month. Valeſ.

[b] Tiberius Conſtantinus was made Cæſar by Juſtinus, in the eighth Indiction, on the ſeventh day of the month September, as 'tis recorded in the Alexandrian Chronicle. But he began his Empire in the twelfth Indiction, on the fifth day of the month October. Hence there are four years and twenty eight days of Tiberius's Cæſarean power. But, if we had rather follow Theophylactus, who writes, that Tiberius was made Cæſar by Juſtinus on the ſeventh day of December, on the ſixth Feria; there will be three years and almoſt ten months, which is, from the year of Chriſt 574, to the year 578. Further, 'tis to be obſerved, that Tiberius Conſtantinus, after the death of Juſtinus Junior, reckoned the years of his own Empire from the beginning of his Cæſarean power, as we are informed by the Subſcription of the ſame Tiberius's Sacra Pragmatica, concerning the Confirmation of the Emperour Juſtinus's Conſtitutions; which runs thus: Data tertio Idûs Auguſti, &c. Dated on the third of the Ides of Auguſt, at Conſtantinople, on the eighth year of the Emperour our Lord Tiberius Conſtantinus Auguſtus, and on the third year after his own Conſulate, and on the firſt year of the moſt noble Flavius Tiberius Mauricius the moſt happy Cæſar. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXIV.

Concerning the Series of Hiſtory, which is preſerved till our Times.

BY God's aſſiſtance, the Hiſtory of the Church is * handed down to us, digeſted into one body, by [the induſtry of the beſt] Writers. Till the times of Conſtantine, by Euſebius Pamphilus. From Conſtantine's Reign, to [the Empire of] Theodoſius Junior, by Theodoret, Sozomen, and Socrates: and [Laſtly,] [a] by thoſe Collections, we have made in this our preſent Work. The Ancient Hiſtory, as well Sacred as Profane, is extant, continued in a Series by the Induſtrious. For Moſes, who was the firſt that began to write an Hiſtory, (as 'tis moſt evidently demonſtrated by thoſe who have made Collections in reference to theſe matters;) compiled a true and moſt exact account of affairs from the beginning of the world, according to the information he had from God himſelf, with whom he converſed in the Mount Sina. Others who followed him, preparing a way for our Religion, have in the Sacred Volumes ſet forth what hapned in ſucceeding Ages. Moreover, Joſephus wrote a large Hiſtory, which is every way uſefull and profitable. Whatever occurrences, whether fabulous or reall, have hapned amongſt the Greeks and ancient Barbarians, whilſt the Greeks waged Wars amongſt themſelves, or againſt the Barbarians; or whatever elſe has been tranſacted from ſuch time as they had an account that men firſt exiſted; have been Recorded by [b] Charax, Theopompus, and Ephorus, and by innumerable other Writers. The Actions of the Romans, wherein is contained the Hiſtory [almoſt] of the whole world, or whatever elſe hapned, whilſt they were involved in Civill and inteſtine Broyls, or acted againſt others; have been ſet forth in writing by Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus, who began his Hiſtory from thoſe people termed the Aborigines, and continued it to Pyrrhus * King of the Epirotes. From that time, Polybius the Megalopolite hath brought down [his Hiſtory] to the deſtruction of Carthage. All which Apianus has † with great perſpicuity diſtinguiſhed, and hath gathered together each Action into one Body, although they were performed at different times. In like manner, the Affairs tranſacted after the Times of thoſe Hiſtorians I have mentioned, have been committed to writing by Diodorus Siculus, [who wrote] till [the Times of] Julius Cæſar; and by Dion Caſſius who brought down his Hiſtory to the Empire of Antoninus born at Emeſa. Herodian alſo, a Writer of the ſame Times, has given us a Record of Tranſactions till the death of Maximus. [c] Nicoſtratus the Sophiſt of Trapezus has compiled an Hiſtory, wherein he ſets forth an account of affairs from Philippus who ſucceeded Gordianus in the Empire, untill Odænathus of Palmyra, and Valerian's diſgraceſull Expedition againſt the Perſians. Dexippus alſo has written at large concerning the ſame matters, who begins from the [d] Scythick Wars, and ends at the Empire of Claudius ſucceſſour to Gallienus. The ſame Dexippus hath compiled an Hiſtory of the Actions of the Carpi and other Barbarous Nations, which they performed in their Wars within Achaia, Thracia, and Ionia. Euſebius begins from Octavianus, Trajanus, and Marcus, and has brought down his Hiſtory as far as the death of Carus. Moreover, [e] Arrianus and Aſinius Quadratus have written ſome

* Or, Preſerved.

[a] Καὶ ὧν ὁ πρὸ ἡμῶν ἐξήνεγκε πόνος. Doubtleſs it muſt be written, καὶ ὧν ὁ παρ' ἡμῶν, &c. And [Laſtly] by thoſe, &c. For 'tis referred to the foregoing words διὰ ἱστορικῶν; which the Tranſlatours perceived not. Valeſ.

[b] Concerning Charax Pergamenus a Writer of Greek Hiſtories, ſee what Voſſius has written in his book de Hiſtoricis Græcis. Valeſ.

* Or, The Epirote.

† Or, judiciouſly.

[c] This ſeems to be the ſame perſon, who by Vopiſcus in the Life of Aurelianus, is termed Nicomachus; he had written an Hiſtory of thoſe times, as Vopiſcus atteſts there. This Nicoſtratus here was a different perſon from Nicoſtratus the Sophiſt, who flouriſht in the Empire of Marcus; as Suidas affirms, and alſo Georgius Scyncellus in his Chronicon. Valeſ.

[d] Ἀπὸ μυθικῶν ἀρξαμένῳ. In my Annotations on the Excerpta Legationum out of Dexippus, I have long ſince remarked, that at this place the reading muſt be, ἀπὸ σκυθικῶν, from the Scythick Wars. For Dexippus wrote the σκυθικά, that is, the Wars which the Romans waged againſt the Scythians, as Photius atteſts in his Bibliotheca. Valeſ.

[e] Arrianus wrote the Parthica and Alanica, in which books he related the Actions performed by the Romans againſt the Parthians and Alans. Evagrius therefore means theſe books here. Valeſ.

things concerning the ſame times. The Hiſtory of the following Times is given us by Zoſimus, untill the Emperours Honorius and Arcadius. After which Emperours, Affairs have been Recorded by Priſcus Rhetor, and others. All theſe Tranſactions are excellently well reduced into an Epitome by [f] Euſtathius Epiphanienſis, in two Volumes; the firſt whereof [comprizes matters tranſacted] untill the taking of Troy, and the ſecond, unto the twelfth year of Anaſtaſius's Empire. From whence, untill the times of Juſtinian, Procopius the Rhetorician hath Recorded affairs. The Hiſtory of thoſe Times next immediately following, untill the flight of Choſroes Junior to the Romans, and his Reſtauration to his own Kingdom by Mauricius, (who made not any the leaſt delay at that affair, but gave [the Fugitive] a Royall Reception, and with the Expence of a vaſt ſum of money, and accompanied with great forces, conveyed him back into his own Kingdom, [g] with all poſſible expedition;) hath been written in a continued Series by Agathias the Rhetorician, and [h] Johannes my Fellow-Citizen and Kinſman; although as yet they have not made their Hiſtories publick. Concerning which affairs, we our ſelves alſo, the Divine † Clemency giving us permiſſion, will in the Sequel give ſuch a Narrative as is accommodate and agreeable.

[f] This is the Euſtathius Syrus, whoſe Teſtimony our Evagrius has made frequent uſe of, in the foregoing books.

Concerning this Authour Suidas writes thus: ἐυσέβιος ὁ ἐπιφανεὺς χρονικὴν ἐπιτομὴν ἀπὸ Αἰνείου μέχρις ἀναστασίου βασιλέως ἐν τόμοις, Euſtathius Epiphanienſis [wrote] a Chronologicall Compendium of affairs from Æneas till the Emperour Anaſtaſius in Tomes. At my perill write, ἐν τόμοις C, in two Volumes, or Tomes. I have Evagrius's authority here, for this Emendation. Valeſ.

[g] Μάλιστα πάντως. I think it muſt be, μάλα πάντως, with all poſſible expedition; in order to the avoiding the ill ſounding of the words. Valeſ.

† Or, Benevolence.

[h] This Johannes was an Epiphanienſian. For, whereas Evagrius calls him his own Fellow-Citizen, he muſt needs have been an Epiphanienſian, in regard Epiphania a City of Syria, was Evagrius's native place. Wherefore Voſſius is miſtaken in his book de Hiſtor. Græcis, who thought that this Johannes was by birth an Antiochian. Valeſ.

The End of the Fifth Book of Evagrius's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory.

THE

THE SIXTH BOOK OF THE Ecclesiastical History OF EVAGRIUS SCHOLASTICUS Epiphaniensis, And [one] of the EX-PRÆFECTS.

CHAP. I.

Concerning the Marriage of Mauricius and Augusta.

MAURICIUS, After he had obtained the Empire, in the first place made provision for his Marriage. And, agreeable to the solemn usage of Emperours, he takes to Wife Augusta, who was also called Constantina. The pomp of those Nuptialls was most magnificently performed, and Banquets and * Jolity [celebrated and observed] in every place of the City. At this Wedding were present Piety and Imperial Dignity, which [two] guarded [Mauricius and Constantina] in the gracefullest manner imaginable, and presented them with the richest Gifts. For, the † Firſt ‖ produced the Father and the Mother [of Mauricius,] (a thing never known to have hapned to any Emperour before,) who consecrated the Wedding with their Comely Gray-hairs and Venerable Wrincles; his Brethren also, eminent for their Shape, Stature, and Comelineſs, who adorned the Nuptiall Pomp. The * Second [presented] a Robe interwoven with Gold, adorned with Purple and Indian Stones; Crowns also of the highest value, enrich't with much Gold and the various brightnesses of Gems; all those personages likewise, which bore Offices in the Imperial Pallace, and were enrolled in the Militia; who carried Nuptiall Tapers in their hands, were [a] most magnificently clad to the end they might be known, and with Songs celebrated that Nuptiall solemnity. In so much that, never was there amongst men any thing more Splendid or, * Richer than that ‖ Show. [b] Demophilus, writing concerning Rome, does indeed relate, that Plutarchus Chæronensis uttered a [c] wise saying, viz. that for the sake of that one only † City, Virtue and Fortune had entred into a mutuall League. But I may say, that Piety and Felicity in such a like manner had come together in one Mauricius; for Piety had vanquished Felicity, and would in no wise permit her to make an escape. After this, Mauricius made it his business to invest and adorn, not his Body only, but his mind also, with the Imperial Purple and Crown. For, of all the Emperours that were his Predecessours, he alone Reigned over himself. And being in reality made an Emperour, he expelled out of his own mind that † Democraticall dominion of the passions. And having Constituted an * Aristocracy within his own mind, he shewed himself a living Image of Virtue, instructing his Subjects to an imitation of himself. All this is not spoken by me out of flattery. For, why should I utter these words with such a design, since † he is wholly ignorant of what I write? But, that what I have said is really so, will be made evident, both by those Gifts conferred on him by God, and also from the successfull Accidents which have hapned at severall times; all here mentioned was

* Ἁβρωσύνας, pride, or, voluptuousnes.

† Viz. Piety.

‖ Shewed, or, brought.

* Viz. Imperial Dignity.

[a] Μεγαλοπρεπῶς τε ἐσταλμένους. In Nicephorus (book 18. chap. 8.) the reading is, ἐστεμμένους, Crowned; which I don't approve of. For 'twas not the custom amongst the Ancients, at least so far as I know, that those who were invited to weddings, should wear Crowns in like manner as did the Bridegrooms. Besides, the words next following do confute this reading. For Evagrius adds, that they were magnificently clothed for this reason, because they might more easily be distinguished, or known. But, that can have no relation to Crowns. For, they could not be known or distinguished by the Crowns which they wore. Vales.

* More prosperous, or, fortunate.

‖ Or, Pomp.

[b] Concerning this Demophilus, Suidas writes in his Lexicon; in transcribing of whom Vossius (in his book de Historicis Græcis,) was satisfied, and has added nothing further. But, in regard I have had an account of his Country, and way of writing; in favour to the Studious, I will here annex it. That Damophilus therefore (or, Demophilus,) a Native of Bithynia, who wrote severall usefull stories and passages out of the books of the Ancients, as Julian informs us in his Μίσοπωγ: Δαμοφίλῳ τῷ βιθυνῷ ποικίλα συγγράμματα τετιῦχται, &c. Such writings were composed by Damophilus the Bithynian, of which he made a Collection out of various Authours, and composed Relations that were very pleasing both to the Younger and the Elder Student. I am sure Julian at that place produces a certain passage, which that Damophilus had Collected out of Plutarchus Chæronensis, in like manner as our Evagrius does here. Vales.

[c] Σαφῶς εἰπεῖν, uttered a plain saying. I had rather read, σοφῶς εἰπεῖν, uttered a wise saying; as Christophorson seems to have read. Further, the place of Plutarch, which Evagrius means here, is extant in his book de Fortunâ Romanorum, not far from the beginning. Vales.

† Rome.

† Popular, or, Plebeian.

* Ἀριστοκρατείαν: the originall import of this term is, a government managed by many and those of the noblest Rank: but 'tis taken metaphorically here, for a company of thoughts of the best sort.

† Mauricius.

which

which muſt * without controverſie be by us aſcribed to God.

* Or, Confeſſedly.

CHAP. II.

Concerning Alamundarus the Saracen, and his Son Naamanes.

BEſides all his other [Virtues,] this was the chiefeſt of his Care, that the bloud of none of thoſe who had been guilty of High-Treaſon, ſhould in any wiſe be ſhed. Therefore, he did not put to death even Alamundarus Chief of the Saracens, who had betrayed both the Republick and Mauricius himſelf, as I have * already related: but only puniſhed him with Deportation to an Iſland, together with his Wife and ſome of his Children, [ordering him] to dwell in Sicily. But Naamanes Son to this man, (who had involved the State in innumerable miſchiefs, and by the aſſiſtance of thoſe Barbarians he had about him, had ruined and enſlaved both the Phœnice's, and the Paleſtine's, at ſuch time as [his Father] Alamundarus was ſeized;) although all [the Judges] were of opinion that he deſerved a capitall puniſhment, was only detained by him under a * Cuſtody at large; and he inflicted no further puniſhment on him. He uſed the ſame [Clemency] towards innumerable other perſons, as ſhall be particularly related in due place.

* Book 5. Chap. 20.

* Or, A free Cuſtody.

CHAP. III.

Concerning Johannes and Philippicus Maſters of the Milice, and the Actions done by them.

FUrther, Mauricius in the firſt place ſent Johannes, (a Native of Thracia,) Commander of the Eaſtern Milice. Who having been worſted in ſome Engagements, and got the better in others, did nothing worthy of a Narrative. After him [he ſent] Philippicus, who was related to him; for he had married the one of Mauricius's two Siſters. He entred the Enemies Country, ruined all things he met with, and poſſeſt himſelf of a vaſt quantity of Plunder. He likewiſe ſlew many [Inhabitants] of the City Niſibis, who were of Noble Birth and well deſcended, and of other Cities alſo which ſtood beyond the River Tigris. Moreover, he engaged with the Perſians: whereupon a great Fight hapned, in which fell ſeverall Perſians of the greateſt Note, and he took many * Priſoners; he likewiſe ſent away a † Body of Perſians unhurt, who had fled to a certain * Eminence conveniently enough ſcituated, when 'twas in his power to have taken them; after they had made him a promiſe, to perſwade their own King, forthwith to diſpatch away [an Embaſſy] to Treat about a Peace. He alſo behaved himſelf very well in relation to ſeverall other matters, during his command of the Roman Forces; for he freed the Army from all things that were ſuperfluous, and which opened a way to Luxury; and the Souldiers were by him reduced to Modeſty, tractablen ſs, and obedience. But theſe matters muſt be left to thoſe who have written, or do now write, according as they may either receive information from Report, or are lead by opinion: whoſe Relation, in regard it either ſtumbles and is lamed by ignorance, or is ſoftned by Affection and Partiality, or [Laſtly] is blinded by * Hatred, does [uſually] wander from the Truth.

* Or, Alive.
† Or, Troop.
* Or, Hill.

* Or, Antipathy.

CHAP. IV.

Concerning Priſcus's Maſterſhip of the Milice, and what he ſuffered from the Army who raiſed a Mutiny againſt him.

AFter this Philippicus, Priſcus is preferred to the Maſterſhip of the Milice; a perſon to whom acceſs was not eaſily obtained, and one who came not abroad but upon affairs † of conſequence. For, it was his Sentiment, that he could tranſact every thing better and with more eaſe, if for the moſt part he continued retired: as if the Souldiery, induced by fear this way rather, would yield a more ready obedience to his Commands. At the time therefore of his firſt arrivall in the Roman Camp, his looks were ſupercilious and haughty, and his garb too gorgeous; when he [a] publiſhed ſome [Edicts] alſo, concerning the Souldiers * perſeverance in undergoing hardſhips in the Wars, in reference to their being compleatly Armed, and in relation to the Annona which they were to receive out of the publick Treaſury. They having had ſome intimation of theſe matters before hand, at that time broke forth into an open rage; and by a joynt conſent made an Attack upon that place where Priſcus's Tent was pitch't, and in a barbarous manner make plunder of his magnificent Furniture, and of his richeſt and moſt valuable Treaſure. Moreover, they miſt but little of killing him; had he not mounted one of his [b] Led-Horſes, and made his eſcape to Edeſſa. To which City the Souldiers ſent a Detachment of their own Body, and laid Siege to it, demanding Priſcus to be Surrendred up to them.

† Or, Neceſſary.

[a] Πρωτίθει πνὰ. Theſe words are to be underſtood concerning the Edicts publiſhed by Priſcus. For the word προτίθενται ſhows that; which term has that import and ſignification I have mentioned. Theophylactus confirms our Expoſition, book 3, chap. 1; whom by all means conſult. Valeſ.

* Or, Patient ſufferance.

[b] Τινὶ τῶν παρόχων ἵππων. Muſculus renders it, equum Vehicularem, an Horſe belonging to the Carriages. Chriſtophorſon tranſlates it, Veſtarium, a Chariot-horſe. Theſe Horſes the Latines termed Veredos, becauſe they conveyed the Redæ, as Feſtus tells us. Evagrius uſes this word again, at the fifteenth chapter of this book. Where ſee what I have obſerved at note (a.) Valeſ.

CHAP. V.

Concerning Germanus's being forced againſt his will to undertake the Imperial dignity.

BUt when the Inhabitants of Edeſſa refuſed to do that; they left Priſcus there, and by force lay hands upon Germanus Commander of the Militia [a] in Phœnice Libanenſis, whom they create their Leader, and, [b] as much as they were able to do it, their Emperour.

[a] Ἐν φοινίκῃ λιβανησίας. In Nicephorus (chap. 11. book 18.) the reading is, ἐν λιβανησίᾳ τῆς φοινίκης, with a miſtake on the other hand. For, it muſt be written, ἐν φοινίκῃ λιβανησίᾳ. For, there were two Phœnice's that were Provinces, the one termed Libanenſis, the other Maritima. Valeſ.

[b] Τὸν γε ἐπ' αὐτῷ. I doubt not but it ſhould be written, τὸ γε ἐπ' αὐτοῖς, that is, quantum in ipſis erat, as much as they were able to do it. Nicephorus confirms our Emendation, who inſtead of the foreſaid words of Evagrius, hath ſubſtituted theſe; τὸ γε εἰς αὐτὸν ἧκον, as much as in them lay. In the Tellerian M. S, I found it plainly written, τὸ γε ἐπ' αὐτοῖς, &c. Valeſ.

But,

But, upon Germanus's refusall of that, and their urging it with a greater degree of heat and fierceness, a contention was raised on both sides; he [striving] that he might not be compelled, and they [contending] to bring about [what they desired:] and when the Souldiers * threatned him with death, unless he would voluntarily undertake [that dignity they conferred on him;] and Germanus with a willing mind embraced death: at length, after they saw he could not be terrified, nor was to be abashed, they betook themselves to scourging him, and maimed the members of his body, supposing he would in no wise indure those Tortures: for they judged him not more hardy than Nature and his age would bear. Having therefore set about this matter, they made tryall of him with a kind of Reverence and Compassion, and in fine forced him, though unwilling, to consent, and to swear [in a set form of words,] that in future he would † continue faithfull unto them. In this manner therefore they compelled him their Subject to become their Ruler, him whom they governed to turn their Governour, and him a Captive to be their Sovereign. Then they displaced all other Officers in the Army, the Præfects of the Troops, the Tribunes, the * Centurions, and Decurions; and put whom they pleased into their places, casting forth reproaches in publick upon the Empire. And, for the most part they behaved themselves towards the Provincialls, with more of †Modesty indeed, than Barbarians usually do: but were far from being [c] Fellow-Souldiers and Servants of the State. For, they neither received the Annonæ by appointed Measures or weights, nor were they contented with the [d] Mansions or Quarters assigned them. But every one's Sentiment was his Law, and his will his set Measure.

* Or, Pretended they would kill him.

† Or, Preserve a fidelity to them.

* Or, Those who commanded an hundred, or ten.

† Or, Moderation.

[c] The Translatours understood not this place. For Musculus renders it thus: Et erga Municipes quidem multò moderatius quàm Barbari faciebant; Erga socios verò belli & Reipublicæ Ministros, admodùm alieno erant animo; And towards free-denizons [or, those of the same Country,] they behaved themselves with much more of Moderation than the Barbarians did; but towards their Companions of War, and Ministers of the State, they were of a mind quite different. Christophorson has also rendred it in the same manner. But Johannes Langus, who turned into Latine Nicephorus Evagrius's Compilator, has expounded this place far better, thus; Et mitiores quidem illi in vectigales, &c; and they were indeed more mild towards the people who paid Taxes and Tributes, than the Barbarians are wont to be. But they were very far from being Maintainers, or Defenders of the Republick, or what ever else I may stile them. Nicephorus, instead of these words συμμάχων δὲ ἢ πολιτείας δούλων Fellow-Souldiers and Servants of the State, had substituted these, φρουράχων δὲ πολιτείας ἢ συμμάχων, ἢ πῶς ἂν ἄλλως εἴποιμι, παντάπασιν ἀλλοτρίως διέκειντο, But they were very far from being Maintainers, &c. Whence it appears, that Nicephorus understood not the meaning of these words of Evagrius, πολιτείας δούλων, Servants of the State. The Militia amongst the Romans, from the times of Augustus, was a kind of temporary servitude. Whence also the Souldiers were marked with brands on their skin, in manner of Servants, as Vegetius informs us. Moreover, the Missio Militaris, or, Military discharge, does plainly answer the Manumission, or, making free of Servants. Suidas (or rather a certain old Writer in Suidas,) in the word βεξιλλάριοι, tells us, that Souldiers were under Servitude, as long as they were in Pay. So also Petrus Chrysologus in his fifteenth Sermon de Centurione. Valesius.

[d] Οὐ δὲ μόναις πᾶς ἀπενεμημοίραις. I agree with Musculus and Christophorson, who have mended it thus, μοναῖαις. For Musculus renders it in this manner; nec deputatis Mansionibus contenti erant, nor were they contented with the appointed Mansions. As often as the Roman Army was about making a long march, an Edict was published long before, wherein all the Mansions, in which the Souldiers were to stay, were set forth; as Lampridius informs us, in Alexander Severus: Itinerum dies publicè proponebantur, &c; The daies of the Marches were publickly set forth, in such a manner that an Edict was hung up two months before, wherein 'twas written: on such a day, at such an hour I shall go out of the City, and, if the Gods please, shall stay in the first Mansion. Then, at the Mansions in order, then at the Fortified or standing Camps, then when the Annona is to be received, and that also. Till such time as we are arrived at the Borders of the Barbarians. The Inns also, or Houses, wherein the Souldiers, either going to or returning from an Expedition, were to stay, were set out by the Mensores, or Quarter-masters; as Vegetius informs us in book 2. chap. 7; and the Emperours likewise in the Theodosian Code, Tit. de Metatis. Valesius.

CHAP. VI.

How the Emperour sent Philippicus again, but the Army refused to receive him.

IN Order to the Composure of these [disturbances,] the Emperour sends Philippicus. Whom the Souldiers not only received not; but if they suspected [a] any one to have an inclination towards him, he was in great danger of his life.

[a] Τινὰ ἐκείνῳ προσηκειν, any one to be a friend to him. The same likewise is the reading in Nicephorus; save that he, for perspecuitie's sake, hath added these words, ἢ φίλει, ἢ διαθέσει either by descent, or affection. Yet Musculus and Christophorson have rendred it, favere, to favour him; though the word προσήκειν has not that signification. Therefore, I had rather read, προσέχειν, to have an inclination towards him. Valesius.

CHAP. VII.

Concerning Gregorius [Bishop] of Antioch, and the Calumny framed against him; and in what manner he evinced it to be false.

WHilst affairs were in this posture, Gregorius Bishop of * Antioch makes his return from the Imperial City, having now been Conquerour in a certain Conflict, which I will here give a Narrative of. Whilst Asterius was Comes of the East, a difference had risen between him and Gregorius, wherein all the eminentest Citizens of † Antioch had betaken themselves to Asterius's || side. The Commonalty also and Artificers of the City sided with Asterius. For all of them affirmed, that they had received some injury or other from Gregorius. At length, even the Populacy were likewise permitted to cast reproaches upon the Bishop. [a] Both parties therefore, [as well the eminenter Citizens, as the Artificers,] agreed in one and the same opinion with the Populacy; and both in the Streets, and in the Theatre, exclaimed against the Patriarch in a reproachfull manner: nor did the Players abstain from [loading him with] such contumelies. In the interim, Asterius is deprived of his Government, and Johannes undertakes it; who was ordered by the Emperour to make an enquiry into that disturbance. This Johannes was a person unfit to manage the most triviall affairs, much less [to compose] a matter of such consequence. Having therefore filled the City with Tumults and Disturbances, and by a publication of his Edicts declared, that any one that would, might accuse the Patriarch; He receives

* Or, Theopolis.

† Or, That City.

|| Or, Part.

[a] Ἄμφω τοιγαροῦν τὼ δήμω. Christophorson has explained this place thus; Ambo igitur, & Optimates & Populares, &c; Both parties therefore, as well the Eminenter Citizens as the Ordinary sort, agreed in the same Opinion with the Commonalty. But Musculus expunged these words, τὼ δήμω, as appears from his Verse. For thus he renders it: Utrique igitur in eandem sententiam conspirarunt, Both parties therefore agreed in the same Opinion: that is, as well the eminenter Citizens as the Plebeians; or rather, as well the Citizens as the Artificers. For so Evagrius has distinguished both Parties a little before. Valesius.

a Libell againſt him, preſented by a certain perſon who was Preſident of a money-Table; wherein 'twas ſet forth, that Gregorius had had to do with his own Siſter, who was given in marriage to another man. He receives likewiſe [Accuſations] from other men of the ſame kidney, [b] which related to the peace and repoſe of the City [Antioch,] as if that had been frequently diſturbed by Gregorius. As to [the Crime he ſtood charged with for diſturbing] the Repoſe of the City, Gregorius's anſwer was, that his defence was ready. But, in relation to other matters objected againſt him, he appealed to the Emperour and a Synod. [c] Having me therefore his Aſſeſſour Councellour and Companion, he went to the Imperial [City, Conſtantinople,] in order to the making his defence againſt theſe [Accuſations.] And, the Patriarchs in all places, partly in perſon and partly by their Legates, having been preſent at the Examination hereof, as likewiſe the Sacred Senate, and many of the moſt pious Metropolitans; when the matter had been thorowly ſifted; at length, after many * Actions, Gregorius carried the Cauſe: in ſo much that, his Accuſer was ſcourged with Nerves, lead about the City, and puniſhed with Exile. From thence therefore Gregorius returns to his own ſee, at ſuch time as the Roman Army in the Eaſt was in a Mutiny; Philippicus then making his Reſidence about the Cities Beræa and Chalcis.

[b] Περὶ τῆς εὐϛηνείας πόλεως. Muſculus renders it, the abundance and plenty of the Annona. Langus and Chriſtophorſon tranſlate it, the peace and ſelicity. The word εὐϛήνεια ſignifies both, as Suidas atteſts. Valeſ.

[c] What is now a days uſually done amongſt us in Criminal Suits and Proſecutions, that Councill ſhould by the Judges be aſſigned to the Party accuſed; the ſame was heretofore in uſe in Eccleſiaſtick Courts of Judicature alſo, as this place of Evagrius informs us. For Gregorius Biſhop of Antioch, when he went to the Imperial City, to make his defence concerning his Accuſation of Inceſt before a Synod of Biſhops and before the Senatours, carried Evagrius Scholaſticus along with him, who might be his Councellour and Aſſeſſour, and might give him advice where there was need. For that is the import of the word παρεδρεύον[τα] at this place. Further, in this Relation of Evagrius's, many things are obſervable. Firſt, his ſaying that Gregorius Biſhop of Antioch, when accuſed of Inceſt by a Lick before a Secular Judge, appealed to the Emperour and a Synod. (Concerning an appeal to the Emperour, the Letter of the Roman Councill to Gratianus Auguſtus is to be conſulted, which was firſt publiſhed by Jacobus Syrmondus.) Secondly, it is to be obſerved that Evagrius ſays, that Gregorius's Cauſe was tried before the Patriarchs and Metropolitanes, and before the Senatours. So in the Chalcedon Synod, after the Biſhops and Secular Judges were met together, the Cauſe of Dioſcorus Biſhop of Alexandria was diſcuſſed and determined. In which Synod the moſt glorious Judges and Senatours are always named before the Biſhops who were preſent at that Synod: in like manner as in this place of Evagrius, the Senatours are named before the Metropolitanes; but they are mentioned after the Patriarchs. Valeſ.

* Or, Conflicts.

CHAP. VIII.

That Antioch ſuffered again by Earth-quakes.

FOur months after *his return, [a] on the Six hundredth thirty ſeventh year of Antioch's being ſtyled a Free City, Sixty one years after the former Earthquake, on the laſt day of the month Hyperberetæus, whereon I had married a young Virgin, and the whole City kept Holiday, and celebrated a publick Feſtivity, both as to Pomp, and alſo round my Marriage-Bed; † about the third hour of the night, hapned an Earthquake accompanied with a dreadfull noyſe, which ſhook the whole City: it overturned very many Edifices, *and tore up their very foundations. In ſo much that, all [the Buildings which ſtood] about the moſt holy Church were totally ruined, only the Hemiſphære thereof was preſerved, which Ephræmius had built of Timber fell'd in the Daphnenſian Grove, when it had ſuffered by an Earthquake in Juſtinus's Empire. In the Earthquakes which hapned afterwards, the ſame Hemiſphære had been ſo bowed towards the Northern-ſide, that [b] it had Timber-Props wherewith 'twas ſupported. Which Props having been thrown down by the violent concuſſion of the Earth, the Hemiſphære returned to the other ſide, and being directed by a certain rule as 'twere, was reſtored to its proper place. Moreover, there fell many Buildings of that [Region] termed the Oſtracine, the Pſephium alſo, of which we have made mention || before, and all thoſe places called the [c] Bryſia, the Edifices likewiſe about the moſt venerable Church of the Theotocos, only its middle Porticus was miraculouſly preſerved. Further, all the [d] Towers in the Campus were ruined, but the reſt of the Building continued entire, excepting only the Battlements of the Walls. For ſome Stones of thoſe Battlements were * driven backward, but they fell not. Severall other Churches ſuffered likewiſe, as did alſo the one of the publick Baths, to wit, [e] one of them which was divided according to the Severall ſeaſons of the year.

[a] This was the year of Chriſt 589. For the years of the Antiochians p ecede the Nativity of Chriſt eight and fourty years, as I have obſerved above. Now, that which Evagrius adds, (viz. that this Earthquake happned at Antioch Sixty one years after the former Earthquakes which had afflicted Antioch,) agrees exactly with our accounts. For, that former Earthquake, in Juſtinus's Reign, had hapned on the year of Chriſt 528, as I have remarked at the Fourth Book of Evagrius, Chap. 6, note (b.) Further, from hence may be gathered the year of the Conſtantinopolitane Synod, which was convened in the Cauſe of Gregorius Biſhop of Antioch. This Synod Baronius places on the year of Chriſt 587. But, from Evagrius's authority, I doubt not of its having been aſſembled two years after. For, whereas this Synod was celebrated four months after that Earthquake whereby Antioch was ſhaken, and whereas that Earthquake hapned on the Sixth hundredth thirty ſeventh year of the Antiochians, as Evagrius atteſts; what I have affirmed is neceſſarily made out, viz. that the Conſtantinopolitane Synod was convened on the year of Chriſt 589. Valeſ.

† Ἀμφὶ τρίτην τῆς νυκτὸς ὥραν.

* Or, Made their very foundations boyl.

[b] Ἀμϕιϐεϐλῆσθαι ξύλα βαλεῖν. I think it muſt be written, λαϐεῖν, received, or, had. Our Emendation is confirmed by the Tellerian Manuſcript, and by Nicephorus, who has worded this place of Evagrius thus: ἀνὰ μέσον ἀντεῖδοντα ἔχε τὰ ξύλα, &c; that is, as Langus renders it, eâque de cauſâ, tigna quæ id ſuſtinebant, habuerat, and on that account it had Props which bore it up. The Greeks call theſe Props ἀνϑηρίδας, in one word, as Heſychius atteſts. Which term I lately found Philo Mechanicus to have made uſe of, when I turned his books de Machinis into Latine. In French we call them, Des étais. In Latine they are termed Fulturas, Props, or Shoars. Which term Fultura is made uſe of by Livy, in his deſcription of the Siege of Ambracia. Valeſ.

|| Book 1. Chap. 18.

[c] Τὰ καλούμενα βρυσία. In the Tellerian manuſcript, and in Nicephorus, 'tis Θρυσία, Bryſia, which I rather approve of. Certain pleaſant and flouriſhing places ſeem to have been ſo termed, ἀπὸ τοῦ θρύπτειν, which ſignifies, florere, to flouriſh; as Suidas atteſts, and the Authour of the Etymologicon in the word Θρίσσα. Valeſ.

[d] Οἱ πύργοι τοῦ πεδίου. The Tranſlatours, Langus, Muſculus, and Chriſtophorſon, underſtood not this place, as 'tis apparent from their Verſions. For they have rendred it thus: Omnes quoque turres in plano Conſtitutæ, disjectæ ſunt; Alſo all the Towers, placed in the Plain, were thrown down. I think πεδίον to be the Campus, which was without the Gates of the City Antioch, wherein the Souldiers were wont to be exerciſed. Athanaſius makes mention of this place, in a Supplicatory addreſs, which the Arians had preſented againſt him to the Emperour Jovian then reſiding at Antioch: πρώτη ἐνλυχία ἦν ἐποιήσαλο ἀπερχομένῳ τὸ Βασιλέως εἰς κάμπον ἐν τῇ ῥωμαϊσιᾷ πύλῃ, that is, the firſt Congreſs they had with the Emperour [was] in the Gate Romanenſis, when the Emperour went forth into the Campus. Valeſ. See Athanaſ. Works, Tom. 2. pag. 27. Edit. Paris. 1627.

[e] Ἐκάτερον τὸ πρὸς τὰς ὥρας διηρημένον. Nicephorus adds ſome few words here, in this manner: πρὸς τὰς ἐν διαμέτρῳ ὥρας, &c. The whole place is thus rendred by Langus: Et utrumque publicum Lavacrum, ex pulcherrimo ſtatu ad eam quæ ex diametro eſt deformitatem, collapſum; And each publick Bath, fala from a moſt beautifull condition to that deformity which is Diametrically oppoſite. Which rendition is by no means to be born with. Nor is Muſculus's tranſlation much better, who renders it thus: Et ex publicis Balneis alterum iiſdem

iisdem horis dirutum est, And the one of the publick Baths is ruined in the very same hours. Christophorson has expounded this place thus: Et utrumque publicum Balneum, quod duobus distinctis temporibus inservit, eadem oppressit Calamitas; And the same Calamity ruined each of the publick Baths, which served for two distinct times. But my Sentiment is, that the meaning of these words is this. There were at Antioch two publick Baths, divided according to the Seasons of the year. The one a Summer-Bath, the other a Winter-one. Of these Baths, says Evagrius, the one was ruined by that Earthquake. Vales.

An innumerable company of people perished also in this Earthquake; and, as some have made a [f] Conjecture from the publick Annona, this Calamity destroyed about Sixty thousand persons. But, the Bishop was beyond all expectation preserved, although the house wherein he sate fell, and no person escaped, save only those who stood about him. Which persons, when another shaking of the Earth had rent that place, [g] took [up the Bishop] on their shoulders, and let him down by a rope, and so made their escape from danger. There hapned another thing also, which was Salutary to the City, in regard our Compassionate God sharpned his Menaces with Lenity, and chastized the Sin [of the people] with the Rod of commiseration and mercy. For, no part of the City hapned to be burnt, notwithstanding there was so vast a quantity of flame every where in the City, [which arose] from the Hearths, from the publick and private Candles, from Kitchins, Furnaces, and Baths, and from innumerable other places. Further, many persons of great note and eminency perished in this Earthquake; amongst which number was Asterius. And the Emperour administred comfort to this Calamity of the City, by [a supply of] money [out of his Exchequer.]

[f] Τῷ ἄξονι πεκμαιρόμενοι. Christophorson has explained this place thus: Et ut quidam conjecturam ex pane, qui in totâ civitate consumi solet, faciunt, hæc lues Sexaginta hominum millia extinxit; And as some make a conjecture from the bread, which is wont to be spent in the whole City, this common destruction destroyed Sixty thousand persons. But, I am not pleased with this Rendition. For 'tis my Sentiment, that the number of the dead could not be made out that way. Wherefore, I had rather explain this place thus. As at Rome, Constantinople, and Alexandria, the Annona was distributed to the Citizens, out of the publick stock; so in my opinion, the practise was at Antioch. For Antioch was one of the four greatest Cities of the Roman Empire. From this bread therefore, which they were wont to distribute daily, 'twas easie to collect the number of the dead. Nevertheless, if any one had rather follow Christophorson's Exposition, I shall not much resist him. Especially, in regard there is extant no evidence of any Ancient Writer, concerning the publick Annona of the City Antioch. Vales.

[g] Φορέμλω ἀνελόμενοι. Nicephorus has added some few words here, in this manner, φορέμλω σὺν τῷ σκίμποδι ἀνελόμενοι, took up [the Bishop] together with his Bed, or, Couch, on their Shoulders. I know not whether he added this by conjecture, or found it so written in his own Copy. Vales.

CHAP. IX.

That the Barbarians taking Courage from the Defection of the Army from the Emperour, set upon them, and were worsted by Germanus.

But the Army * persisted in their Defection: in so much that the Barbarians made an irruption into the Roman Territories, being fully perswaded that no person would hinder them from doing such actions as are usually perpetrated by Barbarians. But, [a] Germanus marches out against them at the head of the Roman Army, and gave them such a totall Rout and overthrow, that not so much as a Messenger was left remaining, to carry the Persian news of their Calamitous Defeat.

* Or, Continued in the same posture they were in.

[a] Concerning this Victory of Germanus's, Theophylactus speaks briefly, as his usage is, in book 3, chap. 3. Vales.

CHAP. X.

Concerning the Emperour's Clemency towards the Mutineers.

Moreover, the Emperour rewarded the Army with money. But, he recalled Germanus with some other persons from thence, and brought them to Tryall. And though all of them were condemned to undergo a capital punishment, yet the Emperour would not permit them to suffer any thing of trouble or inconveniency; yea he bestowed honours and rewards upon them. Whilst these affairs proceeded in this manner, the Abares made two Excursions as far as that termed the Long Wall, [possest themselves of] Singidunum, Anchialus, and all Achaia, and took severall other Cities and Castles, and reduced [the persons they found there] to slavery, destroying all places with Fire and Sword; [no resistance being made against them,] in regard the greatest part of the Roman Army made their residence in the East. The Emperour therefore sends [a] Andreas, a personage of eminentest note amongst the Imperial Satellites*, who might perswade the Army to receive their former Leaders, and the rest [of their Commanders.]

* Or, Guards.

[a] Theophylactus seems to call this person Aristobulus, in his third book and third Chapter. He says also, that he was Curator of the House Antiochus. Vales.

CHAP. XI.

That Gregorius [Bishop] of *Antioch was sent to pacifie the Army.

* Or, Theopolis.

But when the Souldiers would not endure so much as to hear this order, the management of that whole affair is † committed to Gregorius; not only because he was a person fit to negotiate matters of the greatest importance, but also in regard the Army gave him a deserved deference, and paid him the highest respect and honour. For some of the Souldiers had had money bestowed on them by him: and [he had supplied] others of them with Clothes, Provisions, and other Necessaries, [a] at such time as, when registred in the Muster-Roll, they had marched thorow his [Grounds.]

† Or, Cast upon.

[a] This place is not a little difficult and obscure. Musculus renders it thus: Quando ad Militiam conscripti ex Catalogo, per ipsum sunt admissi, when having been enrolled to the Militia by Catalogue, they were admitted by him. Christophorson translates it almost in the same manner; thus: Alii vestitu, cibo, & aliis rebus adjuti tum cùm in album militum adscripti & per eum admissi fuerant; Others were assisted with Clothes, Provision, and other things, then when they were registred in the Muster-Roll, and had been admitted by him. Nicephorus also seems to have followed the same sense, who has expressed this place of Evagrius thus: Ἄλλως τε καὶ ὅσοι ἐκ καταλόγου στρατολογηθέντες ἦσαν, δι' ἐκείνου παρήεσαν. Which words Langus renders thus: tum autem quicunque delectu habito per sacramentum Militare in Catalogum adscripti erant, per ipsum id consecuti fuerant; then also whoever, when an Election was made, by the Military Oath had been registred in the Muster-Roll, had obtained that by his means. But this rendition does not please me. For the Roman Militia was not at that time so desirable a thing, that there should be need of any persons favour and assistance for this matter to procure any one to be enrolled amongst the number of the Souldiers. Wherefore, I rather think that these words, ὅτε στρατολογηθέντες ἐκ καταλόγου δι' αὐτοῦ παρήεσαν, are to be expounded thus, Tunc cum Militaribus numeris adscripti, per ipsius agros transirent, at such time as, when registred amongst the Military Companies, they had passed, or, marched through his Grounds. Evagrius at this place sets forth the Munificence of Gregorius Bishop of Antioch, who had not only given entertainment to the Souldiers passing thorow his grounds, but had also bestowed on them Clothes, Provisions for eating, and money. Indeed, Justinian uses the term παρέναι in this sense, in his 130th Novell, Novell, concerning the passage of Souldiers; ὥστε τοὺς τῆς ἡμετέρας στρατεύματος ἐν ἁπάσῃ ἐπαρχίᾳ παιδούλως ἀμέμπτως διαφέροντας, in so much that without making complaints [or, without fault] he nourished those of our Army in their passage in every Province. In the Tellerian Manuscript I found this place thus written; ὅτε στρατολογοῦντες ἐν χαλκηδόνι δι' ἀυτῆς παρήεσαν. Vales.

Having therefore sent Messengers all about, he calls together those who were accounted the principall persons of the Army, to a place termed [b] Litarba, distant from Theopolis about Three hundred Furlongs. To whom, after he was come amongst them, notwithstanding he lay on his Bed, he spake these words.

[b] Ἐν Λιτάρβοις. 'Tis a Village in the Territory of Chalcis a City of Syria, whereof the Emperour Julian makes mention in his 27th Epistle. Near this Village were the Winter-Quarters of King Antiochus, the remains whereof were visible in his age, as Julian does there attest, in these words: μεχρὶ μὲν Λιτάρβων ἦλθον· ἔστι δὲ ἡ κώμη χαλκίδος, κἀ ἐνέτυχον ὁδῷ λείψανα ἔχουσι χειμαδίων ἀντιοχικῶν. Which place Martinius renders thus; Ad Litarbos veni, quod oppidum est in Chalcide: & casu incidi in viam quandam quæ reliquias adhuc Antiochensium Hibernorum habebat, I came to Litarbi, which is a Town in Chalcis; and by chance I light upon a certain way which as yet had the remains of the Antiochian Winter-Quarters. But I translate it thus; Litarba adveni, qui vicus est in agro Chalcidico. Et viam offendi quæ reliquias habebat, Hibernorum Regis Antiochi; I came to Litarba, which is a Village in the Territory of Chalcis. And I found a way which had the Remains of the Winter-Quarters of King Antiochus. Theophanes mentions the same Village, in his Chronicon, pag. 151; where he says, that Alamundarus depopulated Syria prima, as far as the Borders of Antioch, and unto Litarga, and Scaphata. But in my judgment, it must be written thus in Theophanes, τῶν λεσομβῶν λιτάρβων καὶ σκαφάτων κλημάτων, those possessions termed Litarba and Scaphata. Which emendation is confirmed by his following words. For he adds, καὶ ἔκαυσε τὰ ἔξω τῆς καλχίδος, and he burnt the places without Chalcis. Vales.

CHAP. XII.

Gregorius's Speech to the Army.

I Was indeed of Opinion, (Ye Men truly Romans, as well by Name, as for Your Actions!) that You would have long since come to Me, both to * Conser with Me about the present Juncture, and to take that Advice also, which My Benevolence towards You doth abundantly promise. Which [kindness of mine] has indubitably been confirmed by former Good Offices, at such time as, by sending You supplies of Necessaries, I Asswaged [a] Your Navall Tumult, and the Storm which arose from thence. But, in regard That has been neglected till now, (an inducement thereto having peradventure not hapned from above,) both that the Persians, vanquished by persons without a Leader, might perfectly understand the Valour of Romans; and also, that Your sincere kindness [towards the State,] having been accurately tried by opportunity, and attested by Actions themselves, might every way receive confirmation: (For You have evidently demonstrated, that although You have had Cause of Trouble and Offence against your Leaders given you, yet nothing is more of value to You than the State:) Come on therefore, Let us now consider what is to be done. The Emperour invites you, and has promised an * Amnesty of all that is past, having received your Benevolence toward the State, and your fortitude in Battell, in † place of the Boughs and Olive-Branches of Suppliants; and having given you these securest pledges imaginable of his Pardon, in regard he says thus: if God hath given ‖ Victory to your Benevolence [towards the State,] and (your Offences being dispelled,) your Courage has shined forth, which is a most certain argument of Pardon granted;

* Or, Communicate.

[a] Τὸν νηΐτων ὑφ' ἡμῶν κλόνον. Christophorson dream't I know not what here, concerning a Navall Fight of the Romans. A Navall Fight had not been begun at that time by the Romans, but they had engaged with the Persians in a Land-Fight. Our Evagrius therefore has made use of a Metaphor at this place; and compares the Roman Camp to a Ship: and the Mutiny they had raised, he compares to a Tempest. Vales.

* Oblivion.

† Or, Instead of a Supplication and Olive-Branches.

[b] How shall not I follow the Divine Judgment? The heart of a King is in the Hand of God, and he inclines it which way he pleases. Obey me therefore, ye Romans! with all imaginable speed. And let us not * loose the present opportunity, nor frustrate it by letting it slip: for it hates to be taken after it has escaped, and, vex't as 'twere because it was [c] neglected, never suffers it self to be taken twice. Be ye Heirs of your Ancestours obedience, as you have been Inheritours of their Valour; that you may every way show your selves Romans, and that no infamous brand may be fixt upon your name, or demonstrate you to be a spurious Issue. Your Ancestours, when under the Government of Consuls and Emperours, by Obedience and Valour possest themselves of the whole World. Manlius Torquatus † Crowned his own Son by beheading him; who though he had behaved himself valiantly, had notwithstanding disobeyed Command. For, by the prudent conduct of Commanders, and the Obedience of the Malice, great ‖ things are wont to be performed. But if the one of these two be * separated from the other, it Halts, Staggers, and Stumbles; in regard these most excellent pair of Virtues are disjoyned. Make no longer delays therefore: but † be perswaded by Me, (the Sacerdotall Function does now mediate between the Emperour and his Army:) and give a demonstration, that what you do is not ‖ Rebellion, but a just indignation [entertained] for some short time against those your Commanders by whom you had been injured. For if you will not flie [to the Emperour] with all imaginable speed, I indeed shall have * done what is requisite, both in discharge of that Benevolence I owe the State, and of my friendship also towards you: but I would have you consider, what the † Exits of Tyrants are. For, in what manner will you terminate the present State of affairs? 'Tis altogether impossible that you should continue together in a Body. For whence shall the fruits of the Earth be brought into you, or those conveniences which the Sea affords the * Continent for a supply; unless you wage War with Christians, and on the other hand be involved in Wars brought upon you by them, whereby you will commit and suffer the horridest Mischiefs, Villanies, and Reproaches imaginable? And what will be the end hereof? Being dispersed into all places, you will spend the residue of your lives. Revenge will forthwith overtake you, and not suffer any Pardon to be granted you in future. Give therefore your right hands, and let us consider what is advantagious, both to Our Selves and to the Government; in regard we have the Festivall Days of the Salutary Passion, and of the most Holy Resurrection of Christ our God, to give us assistance in that affair.

[b] Πῶς ἐχ' ἕλωμαι τῆ θείᾳ ἀν δίκη. At this place, there was this whole line wanting, λείπει· καρδία βασιλέως ἐν χειρὶ Θεοῦ καὶ ὅ, judgment? The heart of a King is in the Hand of God, &c; which I have supplied from the Incomparable Florentine Manuscript. There seems to have been the same imperfection also in that Copy which Nicephorus made use of. For he would never have omitted that brave Sentence which Mauricius had made use of, The heart of a King is in the hand of God; had he found it in his own Copy. Vales.

[c] Παρεώθη ῥᾳδίως. In the excellent Florentine Manuscript, this whole place is read thus; καὶ ὥσπερ ἀγαναικῶς ὅτι γε παρεώφθη, δυσλήπτου εἴ τι καὶ τοιοῦτον ἀνέχεται. Incomparably well, provided we read δυσλήπτως, in two words, as the reading is in Nicephorus, book 18, chap. 15. and we have rendred it accordingly. Away therefore with Christophorson's and Sr Henry Savil's conjecture; who at this place have made it, εὐλήπτως, easily taken. Vales.

‖ Τὸ πλέον, or, the Better.

† Στεφανώσας ἀνεῖλεν; see the story at large in Livy, Book 8. pag. 377, Edit. Paris.

‖ Or, Goods.

* Or, Bereaved of.

† Or, Obey me.

‖ Or, Tyranny.

* Expited, or, made satisfaction.

† Ends, or, conclusions.

* Or, Land.

CHAP.

CHAP. XIII.

That, after Gregorius's Speech, the Souldiers changed their minds, and received their Generall Philippicus again.

HAving uttered these words, and shed many Tears, by a certain Divine impulse as 'twere he altered all their minds in a moment. And they forthwith requested, that they might go out of the * Convention, and consult apart by themselves concerning what was to be done. Not long after which they returned, and surrendred themselves to [the arbitrement and will of] the Bishop. Who having nominated Philippicus to them, that they should request him for their Leader; their answer was, that as to that matter they and the whole Army were oblieged by great Oaths. Whereto Gregorius made this return without any the least hesitancy or delay, that by divine permission he was a Priest, and had power to loose and bind, upon earth and in heaven; and he put them in mind of the Divine † Oracle. When therefore they had acquiesced in this matter also, he appeased God with [a] Prayers and Supplications. And having distributed to them the immaculate Body [of Christ;] (For it was [b] a most solemn day, the Second Feria, which is near the Holy passion:) He entertained them all at a supper, in number about two thousand persons, ordering Beds, whereon they might eat, forthwith to be laid for them on the Grass; and on the morrow returned home. But, 'twas thought good that the Souldiers should meet together at what place they pleased. Gregorius therefore sends for Philippicus, who made his residence at Tarsus in Cilicia, [c] and was preparing for his journey to Constantinople. Further, he dispatcht away a Relation to the Emperour concerning these affairs, wherewith he likewise sent the Petition of the Army, in which they requested Philippicus might be their Commander. Wherefore, when Philippicus was arrived at Antioch, the Army met him there; and having taken out those persons who had been vouchsafed Divine Regeneration, to make an Address in their behalf, they fall prostrate before him. And when they had received his right hand, in confirmation of an * Amnesty of what was past, they made an † Expedition under his Command. In this manner proceeded these affairs.

* Or, Assembly.

† See Matt. 16. 19.

[a] These Prayers and Supplications may be referred, either to the reconciliation of the penitents, and to the absolution from that Oath wherein the Souldiers had bound themselves; or else to the solemn Prayers, which Gregorius then celebrated before the Tribunes and Centurions of the Roman Army, to whom also he distributed the sacred Communion, as Evagrius attests. So indeed Nicephorus expounds this place: λιταῖς, says he, ἐξωσιῶτο τὸ θεῖον· καὶ πᾶν θείαν τελέσας μυσταγωγίαν, τὰ ἀκίνητα σώμασι θεοῦ ἅπασι μεταδιδοὺς; He appeased the Deity with Supplications. And having performed the divine Prayers, He imparted the immaculate Body to them all. Vales.

[b] Ἡ πανσπέρου ἡμέρα. In the excellent Florentine and Tellerian Manuscripts, the word δευτέρα is added; that is, the Second Feria [or, Monday] of the Great Week, or Passion Week. I found the same Emendation also written in the margin of The Vulcobian Copy. Vales.

[c] Ἐπεισόδιόν τε καὶ πρὸς βασιλέως. I assent to Christophorson and Sr Henry Savill, who have put a point after these words. For 'tis wholly necessary. Moreover, before them, Nicephorus had distinguished this place thus. But the reading in Nicephorus is better, thus, πρὸς πόλιν βασιλέως, to the Emperour's City, or, Constantinople. Vales.

* Oblivion. † Or, Expeditions with him.

CHAP. XIV.

Concerning the taking of Martyropolis.

[IN the interim,] one Sittas a [a] Decanus in Martyropolis, vext at an injury he had received from one of the Military Commanders there, betrays the City [to the Enemy,] observing the time when the Garrison [b] lodged in that City was marched out of it: and having brought in a Persian [c] Cohort, as if it had been a Roman one, he possest himself of that City, which was a * place of great consequence to the Romans. He kept most of the younger women within the City; but turned out all other persons, except some few servants. Immediately therefore Philippicus made his march thither, and having invested the City, besieged it, although he had none of those provisions necessary for a Siege. Nevertheless, he made use of what came next to hand in his Attacks, and having wrought some Mines, ruined one of the Towers: but was not able to make himself Master of the City, in regard the Persians sate up all night, and * repaired what had been beaten down. When therefore the Romans had made frequent Attacks against the wall, they were as often beat off. For, the Darts thrown upon them from an higher place, very seldome mist the Mark they were designed against; in so much that, they were more damnified, than they could do hurt to the Enemy within; and therefore brake up the Siege. And having marched off at some small distance, Encamped; but took particular care of this, that no other supplies of Forces should be † let in to those Persians Besieged. But by the order of Mauricius, Gregorius makes a journey to the Camp, and perswades them to return to the Siege. Nevertheless, they were unable to effect any thing more than what they had done before, in regard they were wholly destitute of warlike Engines commonly made use of in the Siege of Cities. On which account the Army was sent into their Winter-Quarters. But in the adjacent Castles, several Garrisons were left, that the Persians might not by stealth get into the City. And on the Summer following, when the Roman Army was got into a body, and the Persians had made an Expedition against the Romans, there hapned a great Fight about Martyropolis. In which Engagement Philippicus got the better, and many of the Persians fell, amongst whom was * slain one † valiant Prince; but no small number of Persians got into Martyropolis, which was the chief thing they designed to effect. From thence forward the Romans resolved not to lay Siege to that City: for it was impossible for them to take it by Force. But they built another City at seven furlongs distance [from Martyropolis,] upon mountainous and ‖ more inaccessible places; that from thence they

[a] Τῶν ἐν μαρτυρόπολει δεκαδάρχων; as also Vulcobius and Sr Henry Savil had mended it in their Copies. Nicephorus (book 18. chap. 17.) has expounded this place of Evagrius thus; δεκάδος ἄρχων στρατιωτικῆς τάγματος καθεστηκώς, having been made Commander of Ten Souldiers amongst the Military Forces. These Officers were by the Latines termed Decani, not Decuriones, as Musculus and Christophorson do render it. Vegetius attests this book 2. chap. 8. speaking concerning the Centuriones or Ordinarii; Erant, says he, Decani denis militibus præpositi qui nunc Caput Contubernii vocantur, The Decani were Commanders of ten Souldiers, which Officers are now called the head of a File. Vales.

[b] Τῶν ἐγκαθημένων αὐτῇ. Without doubt it must be αὐτῇ, in that City. For so the Rule of Grammar requires. Vales.

[c] Λόχον περσικόν. Four hundred armed men, as Theophylactus relates, book 3. chap. 5. Vales.

* Fortified, or, secured.

† Or, Advised.

* Or, Vanquished. † Or, Hero.

‖ Or, Better fortified.

they might infeſt it with Stratagems and *Excurſions. And theſe things [the Romans] performed during the Summer ; but in the Winter the Army was diſmiſt.

* Or, Contrary Attacks.

CHAP. XV.

Concerning Comentiolus's Maſterſhip of the Milice, and the taking [the Caſtle] Ocbas.

AFter this, Comentiolus, by deſcent a Thracian, is ſent ſucceſſour [to Philippicus] in the Maſterſhip of the Milice. He Engaged the Perſians in a moſt couragious manner, and wanted but little of looſing his life, (having been beaten down together with his horſe,) had not one of his Guards mounted him on [a] one of his Led-Horſes, and conveyed him out of the Fight. Nevertheleſs, [b] the Perſians were vanquiſhed and fled, having loſt all their Commanders ; and made their eſcape to Niſibis. And being afraid to return to their own King ; (For he had threatned them with death, unleſs they brought back their Commanders ſafe and unhurt :) they enter into a conſpiracy there againſt * Hormiſda, the Chief Authour whereof was Varamus Maſter of the Perſian Milice, who not long before had made his return together with the Forces about him, from an Engagement with the Turks. In the interim Comentiolus inveſted Martyropolis, and leaves the greater part of his Forces there : but he himſelf, together with ſome choice Souldiers which he had choſen out man by man, makes an Excurſion to [c] Ocbas, a Caſtle almoſt inexpugnable, ſcituate over againſt Martyropolis, on the oppoſite Bank [of the River Nymphius,] and placed upon a ſteep and craggy Rock ; from whence the whole City was eaſily to be ſeen. And having laid Siege thereto, and left nothing unattempted, and beaten down ſome part of the wall with * Catapults, he brake in that way, and takes the Caſtle by force. Therefore, the Perſians in future wholly deſpaired of holding Martyropolis.

[a] Τινὶ ἵππῳ παρόχῳ ἵππων. Evagrius has made uſe of this word above, at chap. 4. of this book ; where, as alſo here, the Tranſlatours render it Vehiculārem and Vectarium equum. But Nicephorus (book 18, chap. 18,) writing out this place of Evagrius, explains the term παρόχων thus ; ἐνὶ γὰρ ὑποζυγίῳ ἵππων ἐπιβιβάσας, τῆς μάχης ἐξῆγε, that is, having mounted him on one of the Horſes lead after him, carried him out of the Fight. For Generalls when they went to an Engagement, were wont to lead with them ſeverall horſe, that if that whereon they rode were by chance killed, they might mount another. Valeſ.

[b] Οἱ σεσωσμένοι Ῥωμαῖοι. In my judgment, I have reſtored this place very happily, thus ; οἱ πέρσαι ἐνικηθέντες Ῥωμαίων, &c. the Perſians were vanquiſhed and fled, &c. 'Tis certain, the word σεσωσμένοι being preſerved, is in no wiſe agreeable here. For, they that are preſerved or ſaved, flie no more. Nor could the Perſians be termed σεσωσμένοι, preſerved, or, ſaved, till they were come to Niſibis. Therefore Evagrius adds, χὰ τὴν νίσιβιν διασώσαι, made their eſcape to Niſibis. Inſtead of the word Ῥωμαίων, Nicephorus has put σωθεῖσι Ῥωμαίων, which is a more common word. Valeſ.

* Or, Hormiſdes.

[c] Κατὰ τὸ ὄκβας. It ſeems to be the ſame which by Theophylactus is termed Acbas, a Caſtle very ſtrongly fortified. Theophylactus deſcribes the ſite hereof, book 1. chap. 12, altogether in the ſame manner, wherein Evagrius deſcribes the ſite of the Caſtle Ocbas. Therefore, as well from the likeneſs of the name, as from the ſite, it appears, that Ocbas and Acbas were one and the ſame Caſtle ; ſcituate near the River Nymphius and the City Martyropolis. Our conjecture is fully confirmed by Theophylactus, in book 4. chap. 13 where that Caſtle Ocbas, which our Evagrius ſays was taken by Comentiolus, is by Theophylactus himſelf termed Acbas. Valeſ.

* Engins for Battery.

CHAP. XVI.

Concerning the Murder of Hormiſda.

WHilſt theſe Actions were performed in this manner, the Perſians Murdered Hormiſda, who was the unjuſteſt of all Kings, not only becauſe he had oppreſſed his Subjects with exactions of money, but alſo for [his inflicting on them] various ſorts of deaths.

CHAP. XVII.

Concerning the Flight of Choſroes Junior to * us.

* Or, The Romans.

[a] THen, in his room they Conſtitute his Son Choſroes their King, againſt whom Varamus undertakes an Expedition together with thoſe Forces he had about him. Choſroes marches out to meet him accompanied with an Army not very numerous, and flies, becauſe he perceived his own Forces were engaged in a treacherous deſign againſt himſelf. And at length he arrives at Circeſium, having firſt called upon the God of the Chriſtians, (as he himſelf affirmed,) that his Horſe might go to that place, whither he ſhould be lead by * him. Being come † thither, together with his Wives, two children newly born, and ſome Perſian Nobles who voluntarily followed him ; from thence he diſpatches away an Embaſſy to the Emperour Mauricius. Mauricius, as in other affairs, ſo in this alſo conſulted for the beſt ; and being convinc't, by taking his meaſures even from this inſtance, of the inconſtancy and mutability of this life, and of the ſudden Turns ebbings and flowings || of Humane affairs ; readily admits of Choſroes's humble addreſs, and inſtead of an Exile [entertains him as] his Gueſt, [b] and in place of a Fugitive makes him his Son ; having

[a] Ἐγκαθιστῶσι μετ' αὐτὸν βασιλέα χοσρόην. From the Florentine and Tellerian M. SS. we have made good this place thus, ἐγκαθεζῶσι δὲ μετ' αὐτὸν, &c. Then, in his room they Conſtitute, &c. Further, Choſroes was made King of the Perſians in the year of Chriſt 592, as Baronius writes in his Annals. Which was the tenth year of Mauricius's Empire, not the ſeventh, as Baronius relates. For the years of Mauricius's Empire proceed almoſt in an equall pace with the years of the Indiction, as do likewiſe the years of Juſtinus Junior's Empire. Wherefore, whereas on the year of Chriſt 592 it was the tenth Indiction, as Baronius himſelf atteſts, it muſt then alſo neceſſarily have been the tenth year of the ſame Mauricius's Empire. Yet, the Authour of the Alexandrian Chronicle places the Inauguration of Choſroes, and his flight to the Romans, one year before this account. For thus he writes ; In the ninth Indiction, on the ninth year of Mauricius's Empire, on the ſeventh year after the Conſulate of the ſame Mauricius Tiberius : τότῳ τῷ ἐναυτῷ, &c, On this year Choſroes Emperour of the Perſians came to the Romans, having had a Rebellion raiſed againſt him by Baram [or, Varamus] his kinſman ; and by the aſſiſtance of the Romans he was reſtored to his own Kingdome. But Johannes Biclarienſis in his Chronicon, relates this to have been done a year ſooner. For theſe are his words at the Eighth year of the Emperour Mauricius, wherewith he cloſed his Chronicle. A vigeſimo ergo Conſtantini Imperatoris anno, &c. From the twentieth year therefore of the Emperour Conſtantine, at which time the Arian Hereſie took its beginning, untill the eighth year of Mauricius Emperour of the Romans, there are two hundred ſixty ſix years. In theſe times therefore, wherein the omnipotent God (the venome of poyſonous Hereſie being deſtroyed,) has reſtored Peace to his Church, the Emperour of the Perſians embraced the Faith of Chriſt, and made [or, confirmed] a Peace with the Emperour Mauricius. Where, that is to be taken notice of, which Biclarienſis ſays, viz. that the King of Perſia, having thrown off the worſhip of Idolls, came over to the Faith of Chriſt. Indeed, Theophylactus atteſts the ſame, book 4. chap. 10, and book 5, chap. 2. Valeſ.

[b] Theophylactus (book 5. chap. 3.) ſays Choſdroes was only termed Son by the Emperour Mauricius. But Theophanes in his Chronicon, pag. 224, affirms in expreſs words, that Choſdroes was a Son adopted by the Emperour Mauricius : τότῳ τῷ ἔτει τεκνοποιηθεὶς μαυρικίῳ ὁ βασιλεὺς χοσρόην τὸν βασιλέα περσῶν, &c. On this year the Emperour Mauricius having adopted Choſroes the Emperour of the Perſians, &c. Valeſ.

given

given him a Reception [whereat he was presented] with Imperial Gifts. By which [presents] not only the Emperour himself declared his own kindness to Chosroes, to whom he sent them in a manner befitting an Emperour; but the Empress also did the same towards Chosroes's Wives, and the Emperour's Children to those of Chosroes.

CHAP. XVIII.

How the Emperour sent Gregorius and Dometianus to meet Chosroes.

MOreover, he sent all his Imperial Guards, and the whole Roman Army together with their Commander in Chief, who were to follow Chosroes even whither he would. And, to show him greater honour, [he sent to him] Dometianus Bishop of Melitina his own kinsman, a person Prudent and Sagacious, most compleatly accomplish't both for Action and Discourse, and every way fit for the management of affairs of the greatest consequence. He sent likewise Gregorius, who in all things struck Chosroes with amazement, by his discourses, with his presents, and with the advices he gave him, seasonable and accommodate to his affairs.

CHAP. XIX.

That Chosroes recovered the Empire of the Persians, by that assistance given him by the Romans.

FUrther, when Chosroes was come as far as Hierapolis, which is the Metropolis of the [Province] Euphratensis, he went back again, in regard Mauricius also lookt upon that as expedient, who contributed more to the [advantage of the] Suppliant, than to his own glory. Moreover, he pleasured Chosroes with a vast sum of money, a thing never recorded [to have been done] before. And when he had raised an Army of Persians, the whole charge whereof he paid out of his own Treasury, he sends Chosroes with a double Army, one of Romans, another of Persians, out of the confines of the Roman Empire; Martyropolis having before that been Surrendred to * him, together with Sittas. Which person was [a] Stoned by the Martyropolites, and afterwards crucified. Daras also was surrendred [to the Romans,] the Persians having been drawn out thence. After this, when Varamus had been vanquished in a single Engagement by the Romans only, and had ingloriously fled away alone, Chosroes was brought back to his own Pallace.

* To Mauricius.

[a] Theophylactus, book 4. chap. 15, says, that Sittas was burnt to death by the Command of Comentiolus the Magister Militiæ. Vales.

CHAP. XX.

* Or, Was. That the holy Mother Golanduch * lived in those Times.

IN those Times also lived the Martyr Golanduch, and was conversant amongst us. Which woman, after many conflicts, was crowned with Martyrdome, (the Persian Magi being her Tormentours,) and became a Worker of great Miracles. Stephanus the Former, Bishop of Hierapolis, hath written her Life.

CHAP. XXI.

Concerning those Sacred Presents, which Chosroes sent to the Holy Martyr Sergius.

MOreover, Chosroes being repossest of his own Kingdome, sends to Gregorius a Cross, adorned with much Gold and pretious Stones, in honour of the Victorious Martyr Sergius. Which [Cross] Theodora Wife to Justinian had Dedicated: but * Chosroes had made plunder of it, together with other Sacred Treasures and Gifts, as has † already been related by me. Further, the same Chosroes sent another Cross of Gold, whereon he set this Inscription in Greek Letters. I Chosroes King of Kings, Son of Hormisda, [sent] this Cross, at such time as by the Diabolick Force and Malice of the most unlucky Varamus and the Horsemen with him, We betook Our Self to the Empire of the Romans: and in regard the Wretched Zadespram came * with an Army to Nisibis, in a treacherous manner to Sollicite the Nisibene Horse to [b] Revolt from and oppose Us; We also sent [a Body of] Horse with a Commander to [the Town] Charchas. And because we had heard, that the Venerable and Illustrious Sergius was a Giver of those things requested from him; in the first year of Our Reign, on the seventh day of the month January, We made a request by the Genius of the said Saint, [promising] that if Our Horsemen should kill Zadespram, or could take him alive, We would send a Cross of Gold set with Gems to his * Church, in honour of his Venerable Name. And on the ninth of the month February, they brought Us the head of Zadespram. Having therefore obtained our desire; that we might put every thing out of doubt, we have sent to the house of the Venerable Saint Sergius, this Cross made by Us in honour of his Venerable Name, together with that Cross sent to his house by Justinian Emperour of the Romans, which in the Times of War between the two Empires, was brought hither by Chosroes King of Kings Son of Cavades, our † Father, and was found amongst our Treasures. Gregorius having with the consent of the Emperour Mauricius received these [Crosses,] with great pomp Dedicated them to, and deposited them in, the Sacred house of the Martyr. Not long after, the said Chosroes sent other presents also to the same Sacred Church, and on a Bason made of Gold, ordered this Inscription to be set in the Greek Tongue. I Chosroes King of Kings, the Son of Hormisda, [have ordered] this Inscription to be set upon this Bason, not that it might be seen by men, nor that by my words the Greatness of Your Venerable Name might be made known; but, on account of the truth of what is inscribed, and by reason of those many Favours and Benefits which I have received from You. For, 'tis my happiness, that my Name is extant on Your Sacred Vessells. When I was at a place [called] Beramais, I requested of You (Holy Man!) that You would come to my assistance, and that Sira might conceive. And in regard Sira is a

* He was Grandfather to this Chosroes. † Book 4. chap. 28, where see note (a.)

[a] Μετὰ στρατῶ. In Theophylactus Simocatta, book 5, chap. 13, the reading is, διὰ τὸ ἐξαίφνης ἐν δυσχερεῖ ζαδέσπρην ἐν τῷ στρατῷ, &c. in regard the Wretched Zadespranes came out of the Army, &c; which reading I like best. Vales.

[b] Καταῤῥάξαι. In Theophylactus the reading is, καταταράξαι, to disturb. Vales.

* Or, House.

† Or, Grandfather. See book 4. chap. 28. note (a.)

Christian, and I a ‖ Gentile, Our Law allows Us not to have a Christian Wife. On account therefore of my Benevolence towards You, I disregarded this Law, and have had a kindness for this Woman above my other Wives, and doe Love her every day more and more. Wherefore, I have taken a resolution, at present to desire of Your Goodness, (Holy Man!) that She might conceive. I have requested therefore, and solemnly vowed, that if Sira shall conceive, I will send the Cross worn by her to Your Venerable house. And on this account, I and Sira have this design, that we will retain this Cross in Memory of Your Name, Holy Man! And we have resolved instead thereof (in regard its value exceeds not Four thousand four hundred [c] Miliaresian Staters,) to transmit Five thousand Staters. And from such time as I conceived this Request within [d] my self, and entertained these thoughts, untill we came to [e] Rosumchosrum, ten days had not fully past. And Thou (Holy Man!) not that I deserved it, but because of Thine own goodness, appearedst to me in a dream by night, and didst affirm thrice to me, that Sira should be with child. And in the same Vision I answered Thee thrice, saying, 'tis well. And because Thou art a Giver of what is requested of Thee, from that day Sira was not sensible of the Custome of Women. But I might perhaps have doubted in relation to this matter, had I not given credit to thy words, (because thou art an holy person, and a Granter of requests,) that [Sira] should not in future be sensible of the Custome of Women. From hence I understood the * Virtue of the Vision, and the truth of what was predicted by thee. I have therefore forthwith transmitted the Cross it self, and its value, to your Venerable house, with order, that of its price one Bason and one Cup be made, to be used at the holy Mysteries: moreover, that a Cross be made, which is to be fixed upon the † Sacred Table, and a Censor; all of Gold: and Further, [f] an Hunnick Veyle adorned with Gold. And, [our order is,] that the remaining Miliaresians of the price shall belong to thine holy house; that by thy Genius (Holy Man!) thou wouldest give assistance in all things to me and Sira, but especially in relation to this Request; and, that what hath hapned to us from thine intercession, by the mercy of thy Goodness may arrive at perfection, agreeable to the will of Me and Sira. To the end that I, and Sira, and all persons in the world, may place our hope in thy power, and in future believe in Thee. These are the expressions [contained] in the Sacred Presents [transmitted] by Chosroes, which disagree in nothing from Balaam's Prophecy; the compassionate God having wisely disposed [all things in such a manner,] that the tongues of Gentiles should [some times] utter salutary words.

‖ Or, Pagan.

[c] Στατήρων μιλιαρησίων.

[d] Ἑαυτῷ. In Nicephorus 'tis ἐν ἑαυτῷ: but in Theophylactus the reading is ἐν ἐμαυτῷ, within my self; which reading I do rather approve of. Valesius.

[e] Τὸ ῥόσην χόσρεην. In Theophylactus and Nicephorus, 'tis read in one word, ῥοσωχοσρεών. So also I found it written in the Tellerian Manuscript. Valesius.

* Or, Power.

† Or, Pretious.

[f] Ἀμφίθυρον ὑνικὸν. The Translatours understood not this place, as 'tis apparent from their Version. For they both render it in this manner; Et unicum utrinque apertum. So also *Rader*us translated it, who rendred Theophylactus into Latine, save only that he has made it Hunnicum, agreeable to the reading in the Greek Text of Theophylactus. But Langus, Nicephorus's Translatour, has retained the Greek word, thus, & Amphithyrum Hunnicum. And, by adding a Scholion, has explained this term thus: Judicio meo carceres, sive cancelli sunt, &c; In my judgement, they are the Bars or Rails, either surrounding the more Sacred Table of the Altar, or keeping the people from it; in each part whereof there is a door, and a passage leading to it, of Hunnick Work. But, by the favour of that Learned man, he has not hit the signification of this word. The Greeks termed Veyles or Curtains which hung before doors, ἀμφίθυρα. So Chrysostome in his 84th Homily on St Matthew, speaking concerning Zacheus, who entertained our Lord at a Banquet: ὅτε ἔμελλεν εἰς αὐτὸν εἰσέρχεσθαι ὁ χριστὸς, πῶς αὐτὸν ἐκόσμησε ἐκεῖνος. οὐ γὰρ ἔδραμε πρὸς τοὺς γείτονας, ἀμφίθυρα αὐτῶν καθάρσας, &c; [Consider,] when Christ was about to enter into his house, how he adorned it: for he ran not to his neighbours, [to borrow] their Curtains and Chairs, &c. So, in the Churches of the Christians, there were Curtains before the doors, as Epiphanius attests in an Epistle which Saint Jerome has done into Latine. And, that we may come nearer to the business, at the very Altar there were Curtains, where with the doors of the Altar or Choire were covered. And when the Priest was about to celebrate the Eucharist, those Curtains were wont to be drawn, that the people might behold the Mysteries a far off. This is attested by St Chrysostome, in his third Homily on the Epistle to the Ephesians, in these words: ὅταν δὲ ἡ ἐκπαιδα ἐκφερομένη τῆς θυσίας καὶ τὸ χερουβικὸν τεθυμιάθῃ, ὅταν ἀκούσῃς, ἐνταῦθα πάντες κοινῶς, ὅταν ἴδῃς ἀνελκόμενα τὰ ἀμφίθυρα, &c; so also here, when the sacrifice is offered, and Christ is sacrificed, when you shall hear [these words] Let us all pray together, when you see the Curtains drawn, then think that heaven is opened from above, &c. Where you see, that the word ἀμφίθυρα is taken for the Curtains which were placed at the doors of the Altar. There is also mention of these Veyles or Curtaines, in an old paper of the Donation of the Cornutianensian Church, which was first published by Johannes Suaresius. Et pro aræ ora vela Tramoserica Alba auroclava 2, vela blattea auroclava paragaudata 2, &c: and afterwards, vela linea paragaudata perfectâ clavaturâ collomelina prasina 2, vela Linea paragaudata perfectâ clavaturâ leucorhodina duo. And again afterwards. Item ante Regias Basilicæ vela tinea plumata majora fissa numero tria. Item vela linea pura tria, ante consistorium velum lincum purum unum. In pronao velum lineum purum unum; & intra Basilicam pro porticibus vela linea rosulata sex. Et ante secretarium vel curricula vela linea rosulata pensilia habentia arcus 2. Which place I have transcribed entire, for this reason, that the studious Reader may understand, how manifold the use of Curtains was heretofore in the Church; and that we might know, what was the Hunnick veyle or Curtain in this place of Evagrius. For, as this paper of Donation informs us, that the Persian Curtains were heretofore highly valued, so the Hunnick Curtains were also chiefly commended. Further, the Persian Curtains are mentioned by Aristophanes's Scholiast ad Ranas: ὡραιοτάσματα τοῖς σκηναῖς τοῖς περσικοῖς βήλοις, ἢ βηλοθύραις. For these Curtains were termed ἐηλόθυρα, because they were hung before doors, as I have said. Gulielmus Bibliothecarius in the life of Stephanus Sextus has this passage. Contulit in eadem Basilica Apostolorum cortinam lineam unam, velothyra serica tria in circuitu altaris. Whence it appears, that ἐηλόθυρον and ἀμφίθυρον signifie the same thing. Valesius.

CHAP. XXII.

Concerning Naamanes the Saracen.

AT the same time, Naamanes also, the Chief of a Tribe of those Saracens that were Enemies, a Pagan so wicked and abominable, that with his own hand he sacrificed men to his Dæmons, came to Holy Baptisme; and having melted down a [Statue of] Venus, which was nothing else but a reall Mass of Gold, he distributed it amongst the poor, and brought over all those persons about him to [the worship of] God. But Gregorius, after Chosroes's Crosses had been presented, by the Emperour's order went a Circuit to the Solitudes of those termed The Limits, wherein Severus's Tenets [a] were highly prevalent; [in which places] he set forth the Ecclesiastick Dogmata, and brought over to the Church of God many Castles, Villages, Monasteries, and whole Tribes.

[a] In the Greek Text of Valesius's Edition, at this place we found these words wanting, κατεκράτει, τὰ ἐκκλησιαστικὰ περιέθει δόγματα, were highly prevalent; [in which places] he set forth the Ecclesiastick Dogmata, or, Opinions: which we have inserted from Robert Stephens's Edition. Valesius has expreſt them in his Latine Version, and so have all the other Translatours.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXIII.

Concerning the Death of Saint Symeon Junior the Stylite.

BUt in the interim, Saint Symeones fell sick of a diſtemper whereof he died; and, upon my giving Gregorius notice thereof, he made all the haſt he could to him, to pay him his laſt Salutes. But Gregorius obtained not what he deſired. Further, this Symeones for Virtue far excelled all perſons of his own time; having from his tender years lead an auſtere Courſe of Life upon a Pillar: [a] in ſo much that his teeth were changed in that Station upon the Pillar. He went up upon a Column, on this account. Whilſt he was yet very young, he wandred up and down over the Tops of the Mountain, * playing and leaping. And by chance hapned upon a wild Beaſt [termed] a Libard, about whoſe neck he caſt his girdle, and as with the rein of a bridle as 'twere, lead the Beaſt who † forgat his naturall ferity, and brought him to his own Monaſtery. Which when Symeones's Inſtructer, (a perſon who kept his Station upon a Pillar,) beheld, he asked the Boy what that was. Symeones made anſwer, that it was an Ælurus, which they uſually term a Cat. From hence [his Inſtructer] conjectured how eminent a perſon Symeones would prove [in the Study of] Virtue, and therefore carried him up into a Pillar. In which Pillar, and in another that ſtood upon the very top of the Mountain, he ſpent Sixty eight years, being vouchſafed all manner of Grace; both as to the caſting out of Devills, as to the curing every diſeaſe and all manner of languiſhing diſtempers, and in relation to the foreſeeing things future as if they had been preſent. He foretold Gregorius, that he ſhould not ſee him die; but [ſaid,] that he was ignorant of what would happen after his own death. And when I my ſelf was ‖ troubled with various thoughts at the loſs of my children, and doubted within my own mind, why the ſame [troubles] befell not the Pagans who had many children; although I had not opened my mind to any perſon whatever, yet he wrote to me, to abſtain from ſuch thoughts as thoſe, [b] in regard they were diſpleaſing to God. Moreover, when the wife of * one of my Amanuenſes had her milk ſtopt after her delivery, [by reaſon whereof] the Infant was in imminent danger; [the ſame Symeones] put his hand upon her husbands right hand, and ordered him to lay it upon the breaſts of his wife: which when he had done, immediately the milk ſprang out as 'twere from a fountain, in ſuch a manner that it † wetted the garment of the woman. Further, a child having been left upon the Road in the dead of the night, through the forgetfullneſs of thoſe who travelled with him, a Lyon laid it on his back, and brought it to [Symeon's] Monaſtery, and by Symeones's order, thoſe who miniſtred to him went out, and brought in the child, which had been ‖ preſerved by the Lyon. The ſame perſon performed many other things *highly memorable, which require an eloquent tongue, much time, and a peculiar Treatiſe; [all which actions of his] are celebrated by the tongues of men. For, perſons of almoſt all Nations of the Earth, not only Romans, but Barbarians, came frequently to him, and obtained their requeſts of him. Certain branches of a ſhrub which grew on that mountain, * were made uſe of by him in ſtead of all ſorts of meat and drink.

[a] Ὡς ϗ τοὺ ὀδόντας αὐτοῦ διήλλαξεν. Nicephorus has explained this place incomparably well, by inſerting one word, thus; λέγεται μὲν ἔχειν τότον ϗ τοὺ πρώτους ὀδόντας διαλλάξαι ἐν τῇ τάσει τῦ κίονος. That is, as Langus renders it, perhibetur ſane primos dentes in columnæ ſtatione mutaſſe, 'tis indeed reported, that he changed his firſt teeth in his Station on the Pillar. In the excellent Florentine and Tellerian Manuſcripts, 'tis written ὠυτῦ, not αὐτοῦ. where the word αὐτῦ is uſed inſtead of ἐκεῖ, there. Valeſ.

* Κωϊζων, behaving himſelf like a child.

† Or, Forgat his Nature.

‖ Or, Diſtracted into.

[b] Ὡς ϗκ ἀρέσκον τῷ Θεῷ. The Rules of Grammar require, that we ſhould write ἀρεσκόντων. For ἐυρῆναι τότων precedes. Valeſ.

* Or, One of thoſe who wrote under me.

* Or, Filled.

‖ Or, Guarded.

* Or, Above mention.

* Or, Were to him.

CHAP. XXIV.

Concerning the Death of Gregorius Biſhop of Antioch, and the Reſtauration of Anaſtaſius.

NOt long after [a] dyed Gregorius alſo, after he had been ſeized with a *Gouti*ſ diſtemper, wherewith he was much troubled, and had drank a potion [made of the herb] termed [b] Hermodactylus, which was adminiſtred to him by a Phyſitian. He ended his life, at ſuch time as Gregorius was Biſhop of the Elder Rome, who had ſucceeded Pelagius; Anaſtaſius Sinaita on the year of Chriſt 594. But Baronius doubts at the ſame place, whether it ought not to be placed on the year following; eſpecially in regard Gregorius Magnus, in the Regiſter of the Letters of the thirteenth Indiction, congratulates Anaſtaſius, becauſe he had been reſtored to the See of Antioch. But the Authour of the Alexandrian Chronicle, (who lived almoſt in the ſame times with Gregorius,) places Gregorius's death in the tenth year of the Empire of Mauricius, on the tenth Indiction; his words are theſe: ἰνδ. ι'. τότῳ τῷ ἔτει ἀναστάσι Θ, &c; In the tenth Indiction; on this year Anaſtaſius Patriarch of Antioch returned to Antioch, after the death of Gregorius who had been Patriarch, who had alſo before ſucceeded the ſame Anaſtaſius. Where you may note that Anaſtaſius is called Patriarch even before his Reſtoration; becauſe, having been depoſed illegally and by force, he had always retained the title of Patriarch. 'Tis certain Pope Gregorius, in the three Letters he wrote to him at the beginning of his Epiſcopate, does always acknowledge Anaſtaſius to be a Patriarch. But, he is never found to have accounted Gregorius (who had illegally taken poſſeſſion of Anaſtaſius's Chair whilſt he was yet alive,) amongſt the number of Patriarchs. Valeſ.

[a] Baronius does indeed place the death of Gregorius Biſhop of Antioch and the Reſtauration of Anaſtaſius Sinaita on the year of Chriſt 594. But Baronius doubts at the ſame place, whether it ought not to be placed on the year following; eſpecially in regard Gregorius Magnus, in the Regiſter of the Letters of the thirteenth Indiction, congratulates Anaſtaſius, becauſe he had been reſtored to the See of Antioch. But the Authour of the Alexandrian Chronicle, (who lived almoſt in the ſame times with Gregorius,) places Gregorius's death in the tenth year of the Empire of Mauricius, on the tenth Indiction; his words are theſe: ἰνδ. ι'. τότῳ τῷ ἔτει ἀναστάσι Θ, &c; In the tenth Indiction; on this year Anaſtaſius Patriarch of Antioch returned to Antioch, after the death of Gregorius who had been Patriarch, who had alſo before ſucceeded the ſame Anaſtaſius. Where you may note that Anaſtaſius is called Patriarch even before his Reſtoration; becauſe, having been depoſed illegally and by force, he had always retained the title of Patriarch. 'Tis certain Pope Gregorius, in the three Letters he wrote to him at the beginning of his Epiſcopate, does always acknowledge Anaſtaſius to be a Patriarch. But, he is never found to have accounted Gregorius (who had illegally taken poſſeſſion of Anaſtaſius's Chair whilſt he was yet alive,) amongſt the number of Patriarchs. Valeſ.

[b] Hermodactylus was a plant unknown to the Ancients, 'Tis certain, neither Dioſcorides, nor Galen have made any mention of it. But, the Arabians after Serapion, confounded it with Colchicum and Ephemeron. Whom our Apothecaries have followed, and in their Shops ſubſtitute Colchicum inſtead of Hermodactylus. But Andreas Matthiolus (in his comments on the fourth book of Dioſcorides,) hath long ſince taken notice of this miſtake; and after him others, who have written concerning plants. When Matthiolus publiſhed the Former Edition of his Comments, he himſelf did not then fully know what Hermodactylus was. But afterwards, when he had procured that plant from the Illuſtrious perſonage Augerius Busbequius, who had brought it him at his return from an Embaſſy at Conſtantinopole; he gave us the Type or Cut of that plant at pag. 1109 of his Latter Edition. The Roots of this plant repreſent the likeneſs of fingers, with the addition of nails alſo. Whence the plant had its name. For Hermodactylus ſignifies the finger of Mercury. Further, the root hereof was heretofore given to thoſe that were troubled with the Gout in the joynts or fingers, at ſuch time as the humours iſſued out: for, of it ſelf, and by a decoction of it, it has a purgative quality, as Paulus Ægineta relates in his ſeventh book. But now a days Hermodactylus is given to thoſe troubled with the Gout in their feet, not at that time when the humours iſſue forth, but rather when the diſeaſe is grown ſtrong and come to its height. For, when Modern Phyſitians had found by the uſe of this medicine, that it was noxious in the approach or augmentation of the diſeaſe, they corrected the practiſe of the Ancient Phyſitians in this particular; as the moſt famous and moſt Learned Toſſinus de Fontaine Doctor of Phyſick and Regius Profeſſor in the Univerſity of Paris informed me, a perſon to whom I profeſs my ſelf highly obliged, for his ſingular kindneſs towards me, and for his care and diligence in curing my diſtemper. Valeſ.

and

and whilſt Johannes [preſided over the Church of] * Conſtantinople, and Eulogius over that of Alexandria, (perſons whom I have mentioned before ;) and during Anaſtaſius's preſidency over the Antiochian Church, [c] who had been reſtored to his own Chair [d] after three and twenty years. Johannes [was then Biſhop] of Jeruſalem ; who died ſoon after, and as yet no body has undertaken the Government of that Church. And here ſhall my Hiſtory be cloſed, namely, [e] on the twelfth year of Mauricius Tiberius's Government of the Roman Empire ; the following [affairs of the Church] being left to be collected and written by ſuch as are deſirous [of employing themſelves that way.] If any thing be either omitted, or not accurately ſet forth by us ; let no perſon aſcribe it to us as a fault ; but let him conſider with himſelf, that we have Collected into one Body * a diſperſed and ſcattered Hiſtory, and have made it our buſineſs [to conſult] the advantage of men, in favour of whom we have † undertaken ſo many and ſuch vaſt Labours. Another Volume has likewiſe been compoſed by us, which contains Relations, Letters, Decrees, Orations, Diſputations, and ſome other things. The foreſaid Relations contained in that Volume were all written in the Name of Gregorius Biſhop of Antioch. By reaſon whereof we have obtained two dignities ; [the one] from Tiberius Conſtantinus, [f] who inveſted us with the [Dignity] of Quæſtorius, [the other] from Mauricius Tiberius who ſent us the Codicills of a Præfecture, [g] on account of that [Oration] we had compoſed, at ſuch time as (having wiped away the reproach of the Empire,) he brought into the light [his Son] [h] Theodoſius, who gave a beginning of all manner of felicity, both to [Mauricius] himſelf, and to the State.

* Or, The Junior Rome

[c] Τῷ ὁικείῳ ἐπισκοπείῳ θρόνῳ. From theſe words 'tis evidently concluded, that Anaſtaſius was reſtored to the See of Antioch a little before Gregorius's death. For Evagrius ſays, that Gregorius Biſhop of Antioch dyed, after Anaſtaſius had been reſtored to his own Chair. Yet, Nicephorus thought, that nothing elſe was meant by theſe words, but that Anaſtaſius had been reſtored to his own See after Gregorius's death. Valeſ.

[d] Anaſtaſius had been depoſed on the year of Chriſt 570, as I have obſerved above, in my notes on book 5. chap. 5. From this year to the tenth of Mauricius's Empire, (whereon he was reſtored to his See, as the Authour of the Alexandrian Chronicle informs us,) that is to the year of Chriſt 592, there are three and twenty years. Valeſ.

[e] From theſe words ſome one might prehaps conjecture that which Baronius has alſo ſuppoſed, that Gregorius Biſhop of Antioch dyed on the twelfth year of the Emperour Mauricius. For why ſhould Evagrius ſay, that he had cloſed his Hiſtory on the twelfth year of Mauricius's Empire, unleſs he had related ſome thing before, which had been done on the twelfth year of the ſame Mauricius ? Notwithſtanding, after a more diligent inſpection into the thing, Evagrius ſeems not in my judgment, to have deſigned to mean that by theſe words. for Evagrius ſays, that Gregorius Biſhop of Antioch had ended his life, at ſuch time as Gregorius Governed the Roman, and Eulogius the Alexandrian Church ; and whilſt Johannes preſided over the Church at Jeruſalem. Which Johannes having ended his life not long after, Evagrius ſaith no body was as yet put into his place. Evagrius therefore cloſed not his Hiſtory with the death of Gregorius, in regard he relates, that after Gregorius's death, Johannes Biſhop of Jeruſalem dyed ; and that after his death no perſon was yet put into his See, at that time when he wrote theſe things. Wherefore Evagrius by theſe words means only this, that he wrote theſe things on the twelfth year of Mauricius's Empire. Valeſ.

* Or, A wandring Hiſtory.

† Or, Suſtained.

[f] Τῇ τῆς κοιαισωρίας θειαλόγῳ. I like not the Rendition of Chriſtophorſon and Muſculus, who think that the honour of the Quæſture was conferred upon our Evagrius by Tiberius. But Evagrius does not ſay, that he had the dignity τῆς κοιαίσωρος of Quæſtor given him, but only τῆς κοιαισωρίας of Quæſtorius. Now, there is a great difference between Quæſtor and Quæſtorius. For he is Quæſtor, who bears the Office of Quæſtor. But, Quæſtorius is he who has already born that Office. In regard therefore Evagrius ſays, that he had the honour Ex-Quæſtore given him, he means that the Codicills Ex-Quæſtore were conferred on him by the Emperour : altogether in the ſame manner, wherein (as he adds immediately,) the Codicills Ex-Præfectis Prætorio were beſtowed on him by the Emperour Mauricius. Further, ſuch perſons as by their deſerts had procured theſe Codicills, enjoyed all thoſe priviledges, which belonged to the Honorati who had born thoſe dignities, to wit, of the Quæſture and of the Præfecture. But, in my opinion the reading at this place ought to be, τὸ τῆς κοιαισωρίας (the term ἀξίωμα being underſtood,) the [dignity] of Quæſtorius. Valeſ.

[g] Ἐφ' ᾧ σωσθεὶς ἀνέφηνε. Tranſlatours underſtood not this place. For Muſculus renders it thus ; unde iſta compoſuimus, cum ille imperii ignominiam ablaturus, Theodoſium in lucem produxit, whence we compoſed thoſe things, when he about to take away the ignominie of the Empire, brought Theodoſius into the light. Chriſtophorſon tranſlates it in this manner : Quo regnante eas Relationes Compoſuimus ; idque eo ipſo tempore quo Theodoſium in Lucem edidit, during whoſe Reign we compoſed thoſe Relations ; and that at that very time wherein he brought to light Theodoſius. Chriſtophorſon was of opinion, that the reading here ought to be, ἐφ' ἅ. But this emendation is not to be endured. For Evagrius had not compoſed that Work of Relations during the Reign of Mauricius, but whilſt Tiberius Conſtantinus was Emperour, as he himſelf affirms a little above. Therefore, I had rather retain the common reading here, by underſtanding the word ἀναφορᾷ Relation, or διαλέξει Diſcourſe. For when the Emperour Mauricius's Son Theodoſius was born, Evagrius wrote an Oration to the Emperour Mauricius, wherein he congratulated with him on account of the Birth of his Son, and foretold the higheſt felicity both to Mauricius and the Roman State, becauſe Mauricius had aboliſhed the old Reproach of the Roman Empire, and had at length begotten a Male-child. For, none of the Roman Emperours, who had Reigned in the Eaſtern parts ; even from the times of Theodoſius Junior, had begotten Male-children. Evagrius therefore ſays, that on acconnt of this Oration, he had been rewarded by Mauricius with the Codicills of a moſt ample Præfecture. Valeſ.

[h] The moſt noble Theodoſius was born in purple on the third year of Mauricius's Empire on the twenty ſixth of the month September, and therefore on the fourth Indiction, which had begun from the Calends of the September of this year. The ſame Theodoſius was afterwards Crowned Auguſtus by his Father Mauricius, in the eighth Indiction, on the twenty ſixth of the month March, when he was four years and an half old, as Theophanes relates in his Chronicon, pag. 225. Valeſ.

Six Books of Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of Evagrius Scholaſticus Epiphanienſis and [one] of the Ex-Præfects.

THE END.

THE

THE

LIFE

OF

CONSTANTINE,

IN FOUR BOOKS.

Written in GREEK, by Euſebius Pamphilus Biſhop of Cæſarea in Paleſtine; done into ENGLISH from that Edition ſet forth by Valeſius and Printed at PARIS in the Year 1659.

Together with

VALESIUS's Annotations on the ſaid LIFE, which are made ENGLISH, and ſet at their proper places in the Margin.

Hereto is alſo annext the Emperour CONSTANTINE's ORATION to the CONVENTION OF THE SAINTS, and EUSEBIUS PAMPHILUS's SPEECH CONCERNING THE PRAISES OF CONSTANTINE, Spoken AT HIS TRICENNALIA.

CAMBRIDGE,
Printed by John Hayes, Printer to the Univerſity. 1682.

VALESIUS's Advertiſement to the READER.

IN My Annotations on Euſebius's Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory, I have remarked, that the Titles or Contents of the Chapters, which are prefixt before each Book, were compoſed by Euſebius himſelf. And this, in my judgment, I have proved by moſt evident Arguments. But, in theſe Books concerning the Life of Conſtantine, the matter is otherwiſe. For the Contents of theſe Books were not made by Euſebius himſelf, but by ſome other more modern Authour. Now, I make this conjecture from hence, both becauſe the Contents of theſe Chapters, are for the moſt part uncooth, inſipid, and barbarous; and alſo in regard they always ſpeak of Euſebius in the third perſon; whereas, in the Contents of the Chapters of his Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory, Euſebius always names himſelf in the firſt perſon. Beſides, the diſtinctions of the Chapters are two thick, and occur too often; and one Letter and Conſtitution of the Emperour, is divided, and torn aſunder as 'twere, into many Chapters. Which thing is wont often to beget a loathing and nauſeouſneſs in the Reader. I forbear mentioning the barbarous words and terms, which occur frequently in theſe Contents. For, in them you diverſe times meet with παλάτιον, κόμιτες, νοτάριον, and ἀυγούστος. All which conſiderations make me of this opininon, that I ſhould believe any one elſe, rather than Euſebius, to have been the Authour of theſe Contents. Nevertheleſs, whoever the perſon was, he was ancient, and lived not at any great diſtance from the Age of Our Euſebius. And this is chiefly Collected from the Contents of the Fourth Book; wherein you may read ſome paſſages, which could not have been known, but by a Writer Contemporary with thoſe times, of which ſort is that concerning Marianus the Tribune and Notary, in the Contents of Chapter 44. Book 4; the name of which Notary we might at this day have been ignorant of, had not that Authour of the Contents, and after him Sozomen, given us information thereof. I have ſometimes conjectured, that Acacius, (he, who ſucceeded Our Euſebius in the Chair of the Church of Cæſarea, in regard he publiſht theſe Books of his Maſter after his death,) Compoſed theſe Contents. But, this is but a meer conjecture, which any one that will, may follow. Laſtly, the Reader is to be Advertiſed, that in all our Manuſcript Copies, the Titles of theſe Chapters are written without the * Numerall Notes. And in The Old Sheets belonging to the Kings Library, they occur præfixt before each Book. But in the Fuketian Manuſcript, they are not only ſet before each Book; but are alſo added to every Chapter, in the Body of each Book.

* That is, Without ſetting forth what Chapter it is, viz. the 20th, 30th, &c.

THE FIRST BOOK OF EUSEBIUS PAMPHILUS [a] CONCERNING THE LIFE OF THE BLESSED EMPEROUR CONSTANTINE[b].

[a] Εἰς τὸν βίον τῦ μακαρίτ κωνσταντίνυ. So Græcians are wont to inscribe their Books written concerning any one's Life: Philostratus gave his Books concerning the Life of Apollonius Tyaneus this Title, φιλοστράτυ εἰς τὸν Ἀπολλωνίυ τῦ τυανέως βίον λόγοι ἡ, Philostratus's eight Books concerning the Life of Apollonius Tyaneus. So also Marcus Antoninus entitled the Books concerning his own Life, βιβλία εἰς ἑαυτὸν βιβλία ιϛ', twelve Books of [Remarks] upon himself. 'Tis further to be noted, that although these Books have this Title, concerning the Life of the Emperour Constantine, yet all things are not contained therein, which were performed by that Emperour, but those matters only are described, which relate to true piety, and the Glory of the Christian Religion. Whereof Eusebius gives an express advertisement in the beginning of this book, chap. 11. Vales.

[b] At this place Robert Stephens has added these words, λόγοι πέντε, five Books; what Copies he followed, I know not. For these words occur not, either in the King's Copy, or in the Old Sheets. Neither are these words to be found in the Fuketian Manuscript. 'Tis certain, this Work concerning the Life of the Emperour Constantine consists only of four Books; which is also attested by Photius. But, because Eusebius had added three small Pieces, to wit, the Emperour Constantine's Oration to the Convention of the Saints, the description of the Church at Jerusalem together with the Sacred Presents there Dedicated by Constantine, and a Panegyrick spoken at Constantine's Tricennalia; hence it came to pass, that this Appendix was by some taken for a Fifth Book. Indeed, the Index of the Chapters which is prefixt before Constantine's Oration to the Saints, in the Fuketian Manuscript has this Title, κεφάλαια τῦ πέμπτυ λόγυ, the Chapters of the Fifth Book. But in the Kings Copy, the Indices of the Chapters are omitted, and this Title is written at the side, though in a more modern hand, ἀρχὴ τῦ ἐ βιβλίυ, the beginning of the Fifth Book. Vales.

The Preface.

Concerning the Death of Constantine.

ALL Mankind have not long since celebrated the recurring periods of our great Emperour's compleated * Vicennalia and Tricennalia, with Festivities and publick Banquets. We our selves also, [a] by a Panegyrick spoken in his Vicennalia, have lately venerated the same Glorious Conquerour environed with a Synod of God's Sacred Ministers. Moreover, [b] we have platted him Crowns of Tricennalian Orations, wherewith we lately encircled his Sacred Head within his own Imperial pallace.

* Δεκαέτηρον δὶς καὶ τρὶς τὸ τελεσθὲν, Second and Third Decade of years.

[a] Εἰκοσαέτηρικοῖς ὕμνοις, with Vicennalian Hymns. This Oration spoken by Eusebius in Constantine's Vicennalia is not now extant. We can only affirm this of it, that it was spoken in the Nicene Synod, in the presence of the Emperour Constantine, as Eusebius attests in the following words: but he tells us this very thing much more plainly in book 3, chap. 11. Vales.

[b] Τειαχοντατρικηρικὰς αὐτῷ λόγων πλέξαντες στεφάνυς, we have platted him Tricennalian Crowns of Orations. He means The Tricennalian Oration concerning the praises of Constantine, which Eusebius had annexed at the close of his books concerning the Life of Constantine, as he himself attests book 4. chap. 46. Nevertheless, in the Fuketian Manuscripts this Oration is prefixt before Eusebius's Books of the Life of the Emperour Constantine. Which is very right indeed, if we respect the time wherein this Oration was spoken; but 'tis Contrary to the opinion of the Writer himself, who ordered that Oration to be placed at the close of these books. Vales.

But now * I am doubtfull and at a ſtand, deſirous indeed to utter ſomething according to the uſuall manner, but ignorant which way to turn my ſelf, and amazed at this only miracle of a new and ſurprizing † ſpectacle. For, which way ſoever I look with a fixt and ſteady eye, whether to the Eaſt or Weſt, upon the whole Earth or to Heaven it ſelf, I behold the bleſſed [Emperour] preſent || every where and in all places, [c] converſing with Imperiall Majeſty her ſelf. And I ſee his Sons, like ſome new Luminaries, filling the whole Earth with their Father's Rays, and [I behold] himſelf as yet living in Power and Authority, and managing the whole affairs of the world better and more potently than before; in regard he is diffuſed and enlarged by the ſucceſſion of his Sons. Who before had * been inveſted with the Cæſarian Dignity: but having now clothed themſelves with their whole Father, on account of their eximious † Virtue and Religion are proclaimed Supream Soveraigns, Auguſti, Adorable, Emperours, being illuſtrated with [all] their Fathers Ornaments.

* Or, Our Oration is, &c. See chap. 2. note (c.)

† Aſpect, or, Sight.

|| Πάντη καὶ παντα χοῦ. [c] αὐτῇ σωόντα βασιλέα θεωρεῖ. Sr Henry Savil hath noted at the margin of his Copy, that perhaps the reading ſhould be αὐτῷ, underſtand τῷ λόγῳ, with our Oration it ſelf. The ſame thing came alſo into my mind, before I had procured Sr Henry Savils Copy 'Tis the ſame with what Euſebius ſays in the following chapter, ἀνθοῖς θ' ἡμῖν σωόντα, φιλαδόξοτατα; and converſt with us, our ſelves, in a moſt admirable manner. But, after a more diligent inſpection into the thing, I am now of another opinion. Nor do I doubt but Euſebius wrote thus, αὐτῇ σωόντα Ϛαπλεία, accompanied, or, converſing with Imperial Majeſty her Self: which is a moſt elegant expreſſion. For he makes Imperial Majeſty a kind of Goddeſs as 'twere, whoſe inſeparable Companion, he ſays, Conſtantine was after his death: in regard he converſed above with God the ſupreameſt of Kings; but reigned on the earth in his Sons. Queſtionleſs, whoſoever ſhall read the following words with attention, will never doubt of this Emendation. Valeſ.

* Or, Partook of the honour of Cæſars.

† Or, Virtue of Religion.

CHAP. II.

The Preface yet.

AND when I behold him (who a little before was ſeen [a] in a Mortall Body, and [b] converſt with us our ſelves,) in a moſt admirable manner enjoying the ſame Imperial Pallaces, honours, and commendations, even after the end of this life, when Nature rejects as forreign whatever is ſuperfluous; I am ſtricken with an incredible amazement.

[a] Καὶ ἢ ἐν σώμαπι δὲ ὄντῳ. The reading in the Old Sheets is truer, thus, καὶ ἐν σώμαπι δὲ ὄντῳ; and we have rendred it accordingly. In the Fuketian Manuſcript the four former words are wanting, and there is a blank ſpace left, capable of one or two words only. Valeſ.

[b] Ἀυτοῖς θ' ἡμῖν σωόντα φιλαδόξοτατα. In the Fuketian Manuſcript this place is written thus, αὐτοῖς θ' ἡμῖν ..... ὠδόξότατα, &c. But I had rather retain the ordinary reading, only I would alter the punctation. For, I am of opinion, that a Comma is not to be placed after the word φιλαδόξοτατα in a moſt admirable manner, (as Muſculus and Chriſtophorſon have done,) but after the word σωόντα, thus, converſt with us our ſelves, as we have pointed it. For Euſebius ſays this was the greateſt Miracle and φιλαδόξοτάτον moſt admirable; that although Conſtantine was dead, yet he had the ſame honours and obedience paid him as when alive. Valeſ.

But now, when with an acuteneſs of mind I reach up to the very Arches of Heaven it ſelf, and there Contemplate his thrice-happy Soul converſing with God; wholly diveſted of its Mortall and Terreſtriall Garment, and beautified with a moſt * Splendid Stole of Light: and when I perceive it not any more involved in the ſhort periods of Time, within theſe † fading Habitations; but honoured with an ever-flouriſhing Diadem, and [endowed] † with an endleſs life and a bleſſed immortality: [c] I am dumb, and wholly deprived of the uſe of my Tongue and Reaſon. And being unable to utter one word, but paſſing ſentence my ſelf upon mine own weakneſs, and decreeing ſilence againſt my ſelf, I give place to one more potent, who may declare his * praiſes in a manner correſpondent to his deſerts; to him namely, who being † Immortall and God The Word, is only able to confirm and ratifie his own expreſſions.

* Or, Reſplendent.

† Or, Reſidencies of Mortalls.

† Or, With an Immortality of an endleſs, &c.

[c] Ἀχανὴς ἔσηκεν οἷα ϰὴ ὁ λόϛος. from the Fuketian Manuſcript and Sr Henry Savil's Copy I have mended this place thus, ἀχανὴς ἔσηκεν οἷα ϰὴ ἄλοϛος, I am dumb, &c. Λόϛος ἄλοϛος is an elegant expreſſion, as perſons ſkillfull in the Greek Tongue do very well know. Further, whereas all theſe expreſſions in this and the foregoing chapter, are ſpoken by Euſebius in the third perſon, concerning his Speech or Oration, we choſe rather to change the perſon, and put it in the firſt, becauſe the propriety of the Latine Tongue ſeemed wholly to require that. Valeſ. For the ſame reaſon here given by Valeſius in relation to the Latine Tongue, we have likewiſe altered the perſon in our Engliſh Verſion.

* Or, The dignity of his equall praiſes.

† Or, The Immortall God and The Word.

CHAP. III.

Concerning God who honoured the Pious Emperours and deſtroyed the Tyrants.

FOr whereas he has predicted, that they who glorifie and honour him, ſhall by him be * compenſated with reciprocall Gifts and Rewards; but, that thoſe who have † profeſt themſelves his Enemies and Adverſaries, ſhall procure to themſelves a deſtruction of their ſouls; long ſince [even from this life] he hath aſcertained || the Truth of theſe his own words and promiſes. For he hath evidently ſet before our eyes the deteſtable * Exits of impious and God-oppoſing Tyrants; but hath demonſtrated not only the Life of his Servant, but his death alſo to be deſirable and worthy of the higheſt commendations: [a] in ſo much that, even † this deſerves a commemoration, and is egregiouſly worthy not of Mortall but immortall Sepulchrall Monuments. The || wit of men hath indeed found out a comfort and preſervative againſt a Mortall and frail End, and by Conſecrations of Statues, as 'twere by immortall honours, have thought good to Reverence the Memories of their Anceſtours. And ſome have framed Repreſentations of men with the ſhadowed Colours of [b] Encauſtick Painting; others, with the Sculptures of inanimate matter;

* Or, Subjected to.

† Made, or, conſtituted.

|| Or, The true promiſes of theſe his words.

* Concluſions of Life.

† His Death.

|| Or, The Nature of Mortalls.

* Καὶ τῆτόν τε σηλῶν. I am not pleaſed with the reading in the Fuketian Manuſcript and in Gruter's Copy which reading I found ſet at the margin in Moreus's Copy alſo; it is this, ϰὴ τῆτόν γε, &c. By a tranſpoſition of one particle I mend the place thus, ὡς ἀξιομνημόνευλον ϰὴ τῆτον, σηλῶν τε ἐ ὄντῳ, in ſo much that, &c. as we have rendred it. And I dare lay any wager, that Euſebius wrote ſo. Further, σῆλαι imports here Titles or Sepulchrall Monuments, as I have at large remarked on Euſebius's Eccleſ. Hiſtory. Valeſ.

[b] Κηρωτὴ γεγραῆς. He means Paint of Encauſtum, or, Ceruſs, which was made by wax melted in the fire. This was the moſt ancient ſort of Painting, as Pliny tells us, book 35, chap. 11. Ceris pingere ac picturam inurere quis primus excogitaverit, non conſtat; 'tis not known who firſt found out Painting with wax and burning the Paint. The ſame Pliny reckons up three ſorts of this Painting; to wit, with wax, with the Ceſtrum [a kind of Peircer to bore with] in Ivory, and with the Pencill in wooden Tables: Encauſto pingendi duo fuiſſe antiquitùs genera conſtat, cera, & in ebore ceſtro, donec claſſes pingi cœpere. Hoc tertium acceſſit, reſoluris igni ceris penicillo utendi. By which words 'tis very obſcure what Pliny means, in regard he ſays, that the firſt ſort of Painting with Encauſtum was with wax. For 'tis not to be underſtood, that there was no wax in the other ſorts of Encauſtick

Encauſtick Painting. The meaning therefore is this, that that firſt ſort of Encauſtick Painting was performed with wax only, no other inſtrument beſides wax being made uſe of to Paint. Procopius (in his firſt book de Ædificiis Juſtiniani,) ſpeaking concerning the Roof of a Church, deſcribes this ſort of Painting thus; ἐναβρύνεται δὲ ταῖς γεγραφαῖς ἡ ὀροφὴ πᾶσα, ὅ τῷ κηρῷ ἐντακέντι τε καὶ διαχυθέντι, the whole Roof was adorned with Paintings, not with wax made liquid [or, burnt,] and diffuſed. 'Tis apparent, that by theſe words Procopius means κηρόχυτον γεγραφὴν, Encauſtick Painting. 'Tis certain, κηρόχυτος γεγραφὴ occurs in John Chryſoſtome alſo, as 'tis recorded in the ſecond Nicene Councill, pag. 542. And in Pope Gregorie's Letter to Germanus Biſhop of Conſtantinople, at page 535 of the ſame Nicene Councill; where Anaſtaſius Bibliothecarius renders it, imaginem cerâ perfuſam, a Picture beſmeared with wax. The ſame term occurs hereafter in our Euſebius, at book 3. chap. 3, and in the Hiſtory of Nicephorus Patriarch of Conſtantinople, about the end. Concerning this Painting Apuleius ſpeaks, in defenſione ſuâ, in theſe words: Enim verò quod luto ſictum, vel ære infuſum, vel lapide inciſum, vel cerâ inuſtum, vel pigmento illitum. And Nazarius in the Panegyrick he ſpoke to Conſtantine, ſpeaking concerning his Images thrown down by Maxentius, writes thus; Aboleri hic vultus non poteſt: univerſorum pectoribus infixus eſt, nec commendatione ceræ aut pigmentorum fuci renitet: ſed deſiderio efflorescit animorum. Paulinus likewiſe, in his eighth Epiſtle to Sulpicius Severus; at which place ſee Fronto Ducæus's notes. There is alſo an eminent paſſage of Boethius's concerning this matter, in his Preface to his Books of Arithmetick, which he Dedicated to Symmachus the Patricius. At Picturæ, manibus tabulæ commiſſæ fabrorum; ceræ ruſticâ obſervatione decerptæ; colorum ſuci mercatorum ſolertia perquiſiti; Lineæ operoſis elaborata textrinis, multiplicem materiam præſtant. For ſo that place is to be corrected from an old Manuſcript of Thuanus's Library. Laſtly, Anaſtaſius in his Sermon de Sabbato, which is recorded in the Seventh Synod, τῆς εἰκόνος ὕδεν ἕτερον ὕσης, ἢ ξύλον καὶ χρώματα κηρῷ μεμιγμένα καὶ κεκραμένα, the Image being nothing elſe but wood, and colours mixt and tempered with wax. Valeſ.

[c] Μνήμας ὑπέβαλον διωνύσους. I think it ſhould be written, ἐπέλαβον, have taken occaſion: and ſo the reading is in the Old Sheets of the King's Library. Sr Henry Savil had likewiſe remarked at the margin of his Copy, that in his judgment the reading was to be thus. But in Moræus's Copy at the margin 'tis mended thus, ὑπέβαλον; with which reading I am beſt pleaſed. Valeſ.

otherſome have cut deep Letters on wooden or ſtone Tablets, wherewith they have [c] taken occaſion of conſigning to Eternall Memory the Virtues of thoſe whom they honour. But all theſe things were mortall, and conſumed by length of time; in regard they expreſt the proportions of mortall bodies, not the * Idea's of an immortall † mind. However, theſe things ſeemed to content thoſe perſons, who, after the concluſion of this mortall life, had conceived in their minds an hope of no other thing that was good. But God, God [I ſay] the Common Saviour of all things, who hath treaſured up with himſelf greater Goods than Man can have a conception of, for the Lovers of Piety; gives as a foregoing pledge even in this life, the Firſt fruits of future Rewards, and in a manner repreſents and confirms immortall hopes to mortall eyes. The ancient Oracles of the Prophets, which are committed to writing, do plainly foretell theſe things. The Lives of perſons dear to God, who heretofore have ſhined with all manner of Virtues, whoſe [Lives] are as yet celebrated by poſterity, do give atteſtation hereto. The ſame is clearly evinced to be true by the Teſtimony of this our preſent Age, wherein Conſtantine, the only perſon of all thoſe who ever yet Governed the Roman Empire, having been made the friend of God the ſupream King, is propoſed to all men as a powerfull and illuſtrious inſtance of a Religious life.

* Forms, or, figures.

† Or, Soul.

CHAP. IV.

That God honoured Conſtantine.

LAſtly, God himſelf, whom Conſtantine worſhipped, confirmed this with effectuall ſuffrages, [a] by affording him his favourable and benigne preſence and aſſiſtance, at the beginning, procedure, and end of his Reign: which perſon God propoſed to mankind as an † Exemplar for their information in relation to the divine worſhip. Indeed, of all the Emperours, whom we ever yet heard of, he was the only one, whom God, by thoſe Bleſſings of all ſorts which he conferred on him, demonſtrated to be the greateſt Luminary and Loudeſt Proclaimer of ſteady Piety and true Religion.

[a] Αὐτῷ δεξιῶς ὑφηγεῖτο. I read αὐτῷ δεξιὸς ὑφηγητὴς. And a little after, inſtead of διδασκαλίαν, it muſt be written, εἰς διδασκαλίαν, for their information. Valeſ.

† Pattern, or, Inſtance.

CHAP. V.

That he Reigned upwards of Thirty years, and lived above Sixty.

* HE honoured the Time of his Reign with three compleated periods of Ten years, and [a] ſomething more; but he circumſcribed the whole Life he lead amongſt men, with a ſpace of time double as much. Further, becauſe † He would propoſe him as the portraicture of his own Monarchicall power, [b] He made him the Conquerour of the whole Tyrannick Brood, and the Deſtroyer of the * Impious Giants: who, [inſtigated] by a deſperation and madneſs of mind, took up Arms of Impiety againſt God himſelf the ſupream King. But, having made their appearance [c] even during a ſhorter time than is required to ſpeak, they were extinguiſhed. But God, who is one and the ſole God, when he had fortified his Servant, one oppoſed to many, with divine Armour [d], and by his means had cleared the world of the multitude of impious perſons, conſtituted him the Teacher of his own Worſhip to all Nations: who in the [e] hearing of all men atteſted with a loud voice, that he acknowleged the True God, but abominated the Errour of falſe Deities.

* God.

[a] Καὶ ὡσεὶπερ λῶον. A new and unuſuall expreſſion; λῶον, inſtead of that which others would term πλέον. Euſebius ſays, that Conſtantine reigned thirty compleat years and ſomething more. Which is true. For, beſides thirty years, he reigned almoſt ten months. Further, at the beginning of this period, the reading muſt be, χρόνον μὲν βασιλείας, the time of his Reign; not as the common reading is, χρόνων. Valeſ.

† God.

* Or, God-oppoſing.

[b] Νοητὴν ἀπέδειξε. Write τυχὴν ἀπέδειξε, He made him the Conquerour; as I found it mended in the margin of the Moræan Copy. which reading Chriſtophorſon has followed. The ſame reading occurs in the old Sheets, in the Savilian, and in the Fuketian Manuſcripts. Valeſ.

[c] Ὅσον εἰπεῖν. Chriſtophorſon renders it prope dixerim, I had almoſt ſaid; as if it had been written ὡς εἰπεῖν. I doubt not but Euſebius meant another thing. For, being deſirous to ſhow how ſhort a time the Tyrants flouriſhed, he ſays they were viſible a ſhorter time than is required to ſpeak. 'Tis the ſame which Gracians term λόγου σᾶσσον, in the twinkling of an eye; a ſort of Hyperbole familiar with Gracians. Valeſ.

[d] Παναοπλία παντελῆ. The one of theſe words is redundant, and therefore we have left it out in our Verſion. The former of them ſeems to me to be a Scholion! in the Fuket. Manuſcript, the latter is wanting. A little after, inſtead of δ' αὐτοῦ τ' ὄντων, &c, the reading muſt be δι' αὐτοῦ, &c, by his means, &c; as 'tis in the Kings Sheets, and in the Savil. and Fuket. Manuſcripts. Further, in the Fuketian Manuſcript 'tis τ' ὄντως. Valeſ.

[e] Ταῖς πάντων ἀκοῖς, in the virtues of all. It muſt be made ἀκοαῖς, in the hearing, &c; which Chriſtophorſon perceived not. In the old Sheets 'tis over written ἀκοαῖς in the ſame hand. Alſo, Inſtead of μαρτυρόμενον, I write μαρτυρόμενον, as 'tis in the Fuketian Manuſcripts. Valeſ.

CHAP. VI.

That he was the Servant of God, and a Vanquisher of Nations.

AND, like a faithfull and good servant, he practised and asserted this; openly styling himself a servant, and owning himself a worshipper of the supream King. But God rewarded him forthwith, by making him Lord and Master, and the only Conquerour of all the Emperours that ever were, alwaies invincible and insuperable: [a] and [he advanced him to be] so great an Emperour on account of his Victories and Trophies, as no one is ever recorded to have been in former ages: so happy and dear to God; so pious and every way fortunate, that with all facility imaginable he reduced more Nations to a Subjection under himself, than the former [Emperours had vanquished;] and continued possest of his Empire, free from disturbance and disquietude, to the very moment of his Expiration.

[a] Νικῶντα τροπαίοις. I read, νικῶν τε τροπαίοις βασιλέα τοσοῦτον, and [He advanced him to be] so great an Emperour, &c. In the Kings Sheets this place is supplied at the margin in this manner, εἰσαεὶ νικῶντα, τροπαίοις τε τοῖς κατ' ἐχθρῶν διὰ παντὸς φαιδρυνόμενον, always vanquishing, and continually made joyfull with Trophies against his enemies. The Fuket. Manuscript has no variation, only adds a conjunction in this manner, καὶ εἰσαεὶ νικῶντα, and always vanquishing. Vales.

He march't on through bloud and slaughter, being a person that may be compared to thunder, and incompassionately enslaved Nations and whole Cities without any respect had to Age. But when he was scarce arrived at [c] the flower of his Age, and whilst he bemoaned his Catamite, Death approach't him * on a sudden, and took him off Childless, without any Stock or Kindred, before he had raised a family, and in an Enemies Country far remote; that he might not any longer be the Ruine of Mankind. His Kingdom was immediately rent insunder, each of his Servants [striving to] pull and tare off some part for themselves. And yet this person is extolled for such mischiefs as these.

* Or, Cruelly.

Reigned twelve years and above, which make up something more than the third part of two and thirty years, if we go to an accurate computation. But Oratours, whose businesses it is to amplifie things, don't usually speak so exactly. Therefore Eusebius says well, ὁ πλέον, not much more. Vales.

[c] Ἀνθούσης αὐτῆς τῆς ὥρας. Every body sees it should be ἄνθῳ τῆς ὥρας, the flower of his Age, as 'tis also remarked in Moræus's Copy. In the old Sheets the reading is ἀνθῷ; but in the Fuketian Manuscript 'tis ἄνθῳ. Further, a little after this it must be δεξαπόντων ἐκάστῳ, not ἑκάστῳ. And at the close of the chapter I read, ἐπὶ τοιούτοις ἀνυμνεῖται κακοῖς, is extolled for such mischiefs as these; although the Manuscript Copies varie not. In the Fuketian Manuscript I found it written, μοιρῶν τινα παρασπῶν\Θ, which is truer than ἀσπῶν\Θ, as 'tis in the common Editions. Vales.

CHAP. VII.

[Constantine] compared with Cyrus King of the Persians, and with Alexander the Macedonian.

ANcient History relates Cyrus [King] of the Persians to have been more renowned and glorious, than all [the Princes] that ever were. [a] But, the conclusion of his life, 'tis said, was in no wise fortunate, but reproachfull rather, and ignominious; in regard he was slain by a woman.

[a] Ἀλλ' ἐπεὶ μὴ ταῦτα τέλ\Θ δ' ἐχεῖν μακρῷ. Learned men have attempted to restore this place several ways, as 'tis apparent from their Emendations, which are set at the margin of the Geneva Edition, and written in the Moræan Copy. For some have conjectured it should be written thus; ἐπεὶ μὴ ταῦτα, τέλ\Θ δὲ χρὴ σκοπεῖν μακρεῖν, φασὶν αὐτὸν, &c, others have mended it thus; ἀλλὰ τὰ τελευταῖα τῆς βίου εἶχε μὴ ταῦτα κοσμοῦντα. τέλ\Θ γὰρ ἔχ ὡς ἐχεῖν, ἐδὲ ἐπὶ μακρὸν, ἀμφὶν δ' αἴσιον φασὶν αὐτὸν, ἀισχεῖν δὲ, &c. Which reading Christophorson has followed, as appears from his Rendition. But in the Moræan Copy this place is mended something otherwise, in this manner: ἀλλ' ἐπεὶ μὴ ταῦτα εἶχε κοσμοῦντα, τέλ\Θ γὰρ ὡς.....δ' ἐπὶ μακρὸν, ἀμφὶν δ' αἴσιον αὐτὸν φάσκει.....κέναι. ἀισχεῖν δὲ, &c. From which imperfections any one would conjecture that this is a reading of some Manuscript Copy. The latter imperfection is easily supplied, in this manner, αὐτὸν φασὶν ἐχηκέναι. But in regard all these readings abound with faults, nor can any thing that is good be extracted out of them, I had rather expunge these words. Indeed, if these words be razed out, the sense is most plain, thus, ἀλλὰ φασὶν αὐτὸν οὐκ αἴσιον, &c; which I have followed in my Version. The same was done before us, by Johannes Portesius, who first rendred these Books of Eusebius concerning the Life of Constantine into Latine. In the Kings Sheets, after those words τέλ\Θ δ' ἐχεῖν μακρῷ, at the margin these words are added, βίᾳ σκοπεῖν. The Fuketian Manuscript represents this place in the same manner with the Copy of Moræus and Turnebus. Vales.

The Greeks tell us, that Alexander [King] of the Macedonians vanquished * innumerable Nations: but before he had perfectly arrived at man's estate, he ended his life by an untimely death, and was taken off by † Debauchery and Drunkenness. He finished the whole course of his Life within the space of two and thirty years; [b] not much more than a third part of which years determined the time of his Reign.

* Or, Infinite sorts of all manner of Nations.

† Or, Riotous banquetting.

[b] Οὐ πλέον. I think it must be ἢ πλέον, not much more, which reading Portesius has followed. But Christophorson rendred it so, as if the reading were ἢ μακρῷ πλέον, or something more. 'Tis certain, Alexander the Great Reigned twelve years and above, which make up something more than the third part of two and thirty years, if we go to an accurate computation. But Oratours, whose businesses it is to amplifie things, don't usually speak so exactly. Therefore Eusebius says well, ὁ πλέον, not much more. Vales.

CHAP. VIII.

That he subdued almost the whole World.

BUt Our Emperour began to Reign from that year of his Age, whereon the Macedonian ended his life: and he lived twice as long as Alexander did; but trebled the length of his Reign. Further, having * cultivated his Army with the mild and modest Precepts of Piety, he march't into Britannia, and to those who dwell in the very Ocean which is diffused far and wide [a] at the setting of the Sun. He likewise subdued all Scythia, [which lyes] under the North it self, and is divided into innumerable Nations of Barbarians, differing both in name and manners. Moreover, having extended his Empire to the utmost confines of the South, to the Blemmyæ namely and Æthiopians; he look't upon a dominion over them who dwell at the rising Sun, not to be forreign and inconvenient. In fine, [b] having with the brightest rayes of Piety enlightned all mortalls inhabiting within the circumference of the whole Element of the

* Or, Fortified.

[a] Τῷ καλαδύοντα ἥλιον. In the King's and Fuketian Manuscripts, 'tis written in two words, πρὸ χθὶ δύοντα ἥλιον, righter without question.

So he expresses himself hereafter, at chap. 41. In the King's Copy the reading also is βρεττανῶν, righter than in the common Editions, where 'tis ϐρεταννῶν. Nor is it otherwise in the Fuketian Manuscript. But on the contrary, a little after this, where the common Editions make it Blemmyæ, the same Fuketian Manuscript has it Blewyæ; not ill, as I have remarqued at Amm. Marcellinus, pag. 13. Vales.

[b] Τῶν ϑειοκύκλῳ. It must be written thus; ἅπ κύκλῳ ϑειοίκων τῆ παυλὸς τῆς γῆς στοιχεῖα, τῷ βίῳ, φοβὸς εὐσεϐείας ἀκτῖσιν ἐκλάμπων. Portesius referred these words, ἅπ κύκλῳ ϑειοίκων, &c, to the Indians: for he has rendred it thus; Indos extremos usque terræ undique circumjectos. But I don't suppose this to be Eusebius's meaning. For the Old Geographers never affirmed that the Indians inhabited round the Circuit of the World. The Spaniards indeed, in the memory of our Grandfathers, have named a part of the Earth newly known to them and found out, West-India: but they did this according to their own arbitrement. Therefore, in this place of our Eusebius, I think it must be written ἅπ τε κύκλῳ ϑειοίκων, &c; or rather, no alteration to be made. For the meaning is, that Constantine Preached Christ every where to all men, from South to North, and from West to East. Vales.

Earth,

Earth, even to the utmoſt bounds of the * Continent, that is, as far as the Outermoſt Indians, and the Nations inhabiting round on every ſide; he brought all the Reguli, Ethnarchs, ° and Satrapæ of the Barbarous Nations under a ſubjection to himſelf; all which gave him voluntary and joyfull Salutes, ſent him Embaſſies and ᵈ Preſents, and put an high value upon his knowledge and friendſhip. So that, each perſon within his own Province paid him honour, partly by Pictures, and partly with Statues publickly dedicated to him: and Conſtantine, the only perſon of the Emperours, was known and famous over the whole World. Even as far as theſe Nations therefore he Proclaimed his own God by his Imperial Acclamations, with all the freedome and liberty Imaginable.

* Or, Whole World.

° Σαλεύπας καὶ Σατράπας. Many faults are made in theſe books by the tranſpoſition of words, as we have formerly ſhown. At this place ſuch a fault occurs. Write therefore, καὶ σατράπας, &c. Valeſ.

ᵈ Τοῖς τε παρ' αὐτῶν δώρεις. In the old Sheets this place is thus ſupplied at the margin, τοῖς τε παρ' αὐτῶν ξενίοις τε καὶ δώρεις, &c, and ſent him Embaſſies and Preſents and Gifts. And a little after this, in the ſame Sheets, the reading is, παρ' αὐτοῖς πᾶσι κωρταῖσιον γνωελίεδς, Conſtantine was known amongſt them all. Valeſ.

CHAP. IX.

That [he was] the Son of a Pious Emperour, and left his Empire to his Sons who were Emperours.

NOr ᵃ performed he this by words only, and was * diſappointed in the thing it ſelf: but, proceeding on in all manner of Virtue, he † abounded with the various fruits of Piety; || oblieging his Friends with Magnificent Benefactions; Governing by the Laws of Clemency; and making his Empire eaſie and deſirable to all his Subjects. Till at length, after long periods of years, that God whom he worſhipped, Crowned him (when wearied out by various Conflicts and Exerciſes,) with the Divine Rewards of an Immortality, and from a mortall Kingdome tranſlated him to an endleſs life, which he hath treaſured up with himſelf for holy Souls; after * he had raiſed him up † three children, who might ſucceed him in his Empire. In this manner therefore, the || Imperiall Dignity deſcended to him from his Father; and by the Law of Nature is reſerved for his Children, and for their deſcendants; and, like ſome paternall Inheritance, ſhall henceforward be forever propagated and prolonged. And indeed God himſelf, who hath exalted this moſt bleſſed Emperour (as yet * converſant amongſt us,) to divine Honours, and hath adorned his Death with ſingular advantages [proceeding] from himſelf, can only be a fit Writer of his Life; in regard he has ᵇ Recorded his Glorious Actions and Conflicts on Celeſtiall Tables and Monuments.

ᵃ The Kings Copy begins a Chapter at theſe words, which we have readily followed. The Fuketian Manuſcript alſo, which uſually prefixes the Titles or Contents before each Chapter, begins the Chapter from theſe words. And I found the ſame diviſion in the old Sheets of the King's Library. Valeſ.

* Or, Defrauded.

† Or, Was adorned.

‖ Enſlaving.

* God.

† Or, An iſſue of three children.

‖ Or, Throne of the Empire.

* Viz. In his Sons; ſee chap. 1.

ᵇ Κατορθωμάτων ἆθλους. The word ἀναπθείς, recorded, is wanting, which I found written at the margin of the Moræan Copy. But in the Kings Sheets, after the word ἆθλους Conflicts, theſe words are added in the margin, εἰς μακρὰς ἐγχαράξαν αἰῶνας, inſcribing them to laſting Ages. Which words, whether added by conjecture, or taken out of ſome other Copy, ſeem to me in no wiſe to be rejected. The Fuketian Copy has the word ἀναπθείς. Valeſ.

CHAP. X.

That this Hiſtory is neceſſary, and advantagious to the Souls and Mindes [of Men.]

BUt, though I am convinc't of the difficulty of ſaying any thing * befitting the Bleſſedneſs of ſo great a Perſon, and, that to be ſilent is ſafe and without danger: nevertheleſs [I count it] neceſſary to conſecrate to eternall Memory the Portraicture of a moſt pious [Emperour,] drawn [in the Colours of] words, in imitation of † mortall Paint; to the end I may ª clear my ſelf of the imputation of ſloth and negligence. For, ᵇ I ſhould be aſhamed of my ſelf, ſhould I not confer the utmoſt of my abilities, though they are ſlender and mean, on him who with a tranſcendency of piety honoured God. Further, 'tis my Sentiment, that this work will prove both advantagious to the life of man, and neceſſary to my ſelf alſo; wherein are contained the Actions of a Great-minded Emperour, which are highly acceptable to God the Supream King. For, how can it be otherwiſe than diſgracefull, that the Memory of a Nero, and of ſome other Impious and Atheiſticall Tyrants far worſe than he, ſhould not have wanted indefatigable Writers, who have adorned their Subjects, which were ill Actions, with a politeneſs and elegancy of Style, and made them up into voluminous Hiſtories: but, that we ſhould be ſilent, for whom God himſelf hath vouchſafed to procure ſuch an Emperour as no ᶜ Age hath ſeen, and to whom he has allowed a liberty of coming into his preſence, to His knowledge, and converſe?

* Or, Writhy of.

† Or, A mortall Picture.

ª Ἀφωσιωμένους. In the Kings, Savilian and Fuketian Copy, 'tis written ἀφοσιωμένους. But this expreſſion ſeems to be a Solœciſme. For he ought to have ſaid ἀφοσιωμένος, if he would have ſpoken correctly. In the old Sheets the reading is ἀφωσιωμένος and νω is written over it. Valeſ.

ᵇ Αἰσχυνοίμην ἂν ἐμαυτόν. The word ἐμαυτὸν ſeems to be tranſpoſed, and muſt be placed lower, in this manner; αἰσχυνοίμην ἂν, εἰ μὴ τὰ κατὰ τὴν ἐμαυτοῦ δύναμιν, &c. For I ſhould be aſhamed, ſhould I not conſer the utmoſt of mine own abilities, &c. A little after this, in the Fuketian Manuſcript the reading is, τῷ ὑπερβολῇ εὐλαβείας θεὸν τεπμηκότι, or, if you had rather have it ſo, τῷ δι' ὑπερβολὴν, on him who with a Tranſcendency, &c. In the old Sheets of the Kings Library, this place is thus ſupplied in the margin, τῷ πάντας ἡμᾶς δι' ὑπερβολὴν εὐλαβείας Θεοῦ, τεπμηκότι, on him who hath honoured us all, in reſpect of his Tranſcendency of piety towards God. Which reading I approve of highly. Valeſ.

ᶜ Οὐχ ἱστόρησεν αἰών. In the Kings Copy the reading is, οὐχ ἱστόρησε χρόνος, no time hath ſeen. Valeſ.

CHAP. XI.

That he will at preſent relate only the Pious Actions of Conſtantine.

ª WHerefore, * 'tis certainly incumbent on us, rather than on any other perſon, to give a full Narrative of all the good things we have heard, to thoſe whoſe minds, by an example of good works, are raiſed to a Love and deſire of God. Now, ᵇ thoſe Authors (who have put into writing the lives of men in no wiſe grave and ſober, and [have Recorded] Affairs wholly unuſefull for the improvement of manners, either out of favour or hatred to ſome perſons, or elſe to make a ſhow of their own Learning;) † with a magnifick furniture of words have, otherwiſe than was fitting, ª The King's and Fuketian Manuſcripts, and the King's Sheets begin the Eleventh chapter at theſe words. Valeſ.

* Or, If to any other perſons, it certainly belongs to us.

ᵇ He means thoſe Writers who had Recorded the Affairs of Nero and other Tyrants; concerning whom he had ſpoken a little before. Chriſtophorſon therefore renders it well, Nam illi, &c. For thoſe, &c. But, Porteſius tranſlates it, Nam alii quidem, &c. For others, &c; which is inſufferable. Valeſ.

† Or, With a pride of elegancy of words.

ting, enlarged the Relations of most reproachfull Villanies, and thereby have rendred themselves the Teachers of vile Actions, and such as deserved to be buried in perpetuall oblivion and darkness, to those who by Gods favour and impulse have had no hand in mischief. But, our Style, though it is weak and altogether unfit * for the greatness and significancy of what we are to set forth, seems nevertheless to be polish't and illustrated even by the bare [c] Relation of good Actions. Nor, is the commemoration of Works acceptable to God, unusefull, but it affords a very advantagious * Lesson to those who shall have a mind rightly fitted and prepared. [Not to mention] therefore very many of this Thrice-blessed person's [d] Imperiall Actions, his Battells and Military Engagements, his deeds of Valour, Victories, and Trophies [raised] against his Enemies, and what ever Triumphs he Lead; moreover, the Constitutions made by him, conducive to the utility of every person; the Laws also he composed for the profit and advantage † of his Subjects and the Government; in fine, many other of his Labours and Imperial Conflicts, which are kept in memory by all persons; [all these particulars, I say] I think fit to omit; in regard the Scope and Design of the Work under my hand admonishes me to declare and write those matters only which bear a reference to a Pious and Blessed course of life. Further, whereas even these particulars are almost infinite, out of those matters which have come to my knowledge I will choose such passages only as are most sutable and seasonable, and worthiest of being consigned to the Memory of Posterity, and will give a Narrative of them with all possible brevity. In regard the time it self doth henceforward allow us this Liberty, that we may extoll this Thrice-blessed Emperour with all manner of Commendatory Expressions. For, a power of doing this was not permitted before now, because it has been advised, that [e] we should not pronounce any person blessed before his Death, by reason of the uncertain Turns and Changes of Life. Wherefore, I call God to be my Assistant, and his Celestiall Word to co-operate with, and inspire me: and, [taking my beginning] from this Emperour's tender years, I will enter upon my Relation in this manner.

* Or, For the greatness of the Emphasis of what, &c.

[c] Ἐπαγγελία. The other reading, which I found in the old Sheets, pleases me better, namely ἀπαγγελία, Relation. And so the reading is in the Fuketian and Savilian Manuscripts. Vales.

* Or, Reading.

[d] Βασιλικὰ ἀνυγήματα. In the old Sheets 'twas interlired στρατηγήματα, Stratagems, which I like not. For Eusebius does here oppose Constantine's βασιλικὰ ἀνυγήματα, Imperial Actions, τοῖς θεοφιλέσι ἀνυήμασι, to his works that were pious and acceptable to God. And he says, that he does designedly omit his Imperial Actions: which he divides into two sorts, namely his warlike ones, and those of peace. But, he proposes to himself to set forth only those Actions of his, which bear a relation to Religion. Further, in the Kings Sheets, after those words, and whatever Triumphs he lead, these are added in the margin, πάντε κατ' εἰρήνην αὐτῷ πρὸς τὸν θεὸν κοινῶν διορθωσιν, πρός τε συμφέρον, &c. Moreover, the constitutions made by him, in the times of peace, for the regulation of the publick, and conducive, &c. which words seem to me to be of good note. Vales.

† Or, Of the Government of his Subjects.

[e] He means that passage which occurs at Ecclesiasticus 11. 28. Judge none blessed before his death: for a man shall be known in his children. Vales.

CHAP. XII.

That Constantine, like Moses, was educated in the Houses of Tyrants.

[a] ANcient History relates, that a Cruell Brood of Tyrants did heretofore oppress the people of the Hebrews: but, that God, shewing himself propitious to the oppressed, made provision, that the Prophet Moses, who at that time was but an infant, should be educated in the very Houses and Bosomes of the Tyrants, and should be instructed in all the wisdom amongst them. But afterwards, when in process of time he arrived at Man's Estate, and Divine Justice, the usuall Defender of the injured, had taken a resolution to prosecute the Oppressours: then this Prophet of God departed out of the Tyrants Houses, and exhibited himself a Minister of the Divine Will. He † abominated, as well in reality as words, the Tyrants by whom he had been educated: but those, who in very deed were his own Brethren and Relatives, he declared to be his Friends and Familiars. After this, God constituted him the Leader of that whole Nation, and freed the Hebrews indeed from that Servitude [they were oppress with] by their Enemies; but by his means was revenged on that Tyrannick Brood, by inflicting on them punishments sent from Heaven. This Ancient Story [I say,] which hath been delivered to many persons under the notion of a Fable, has filled the ears of all Mortalls. But now, the same God, who is also our God, hath granted us a power of viewing with our own eyes such Miracles as far surpass all Fables; which manner of Sight is accounted by those who of late have beheld it, to be truer than all sorts of Report or Hear-say. For the Tyrants in our Age, resolving upon waging a War against the supream God, have sorely oppressed his Church. But Constantine, a person that not long after became the Tyrant slayer, whilst he was a child, youthfull, and beautified with the Juvenile Down upon his Chin, was in the midst of them, like that Servant of God [Moses,] and made his Residence within the very Houses of the Tyrants. Nevertheless, though very young, he communicated not with the impious in the same Moralls and way of living. For, [b] at that very Age, a good disposition [improved] by the Divine Spirit, incited him to a Life that was pious and highly acceptable to God. Moreover, a studious Emulation of his Father added strength thereto, and invited the Son to an imitation of Virtues and good Actions. For, he had for his Father Constantius, (whose Memory 'tis fit we should at this opportunity give a Resurrection to,) the Noblest of the Emperours in our Age. [c] Concerning whom 'tis necessary to relate some passages briefly, which bear a reference to the commendation of his Son.

[a] Ἡ παλαιὰ, &c; the King's and Fuketian Manuscripts write it without an Article, παλαιὰ κατέχει φήμη, Ancient History relates; and so it is in the old Sheets: which favours more of Eusebius's Style. A little after, I read δεινὰ μὲν ἡμῖν, not δεινά τε ἡμῖν. Sr Henry Savil has done well to set this note at the beginning of this chapter, Hucusque proœmium, Thus far the Preface. Vales.

† Or, Estranged himself from.

[b] Christophorson and Portesius have rendred these words ἐξ ἐκείνε, as if τῆς τρόπης were to be understood; thus, from that sort of life. But my Sentiment is, that ἐξ ἐκείνε has the same import with jam tum, even then, ab eo Tempore, from that very time. And so Musculus renders it. Vales.

[c] Αὖ περὶ. Doubtless it must be written, ἃ περὶ, which has the same import with περὶ ἅ, concerning whom. And so the reading is in the Kings Sheets and in the Savilian Manuscript. In the Fuketian Manuscript 'tis ἅπερ, which is no ill reading. Vales.

CHAP.

CHAP. XIII.

Concerning his Father Constantius, who refused to persecute the Christians, in such manner as Diocletianus, Maximianus, and Maxentius did.

* Or, Whilst four persons partook of the Imperial Power over the Romans. † Constantius.

* WHilst the Roman Empire was Governed by Four Augusti, † He was the only person who embraced a course of Life different from his Colleagues, and entred into a friendship with the supream God. For they, by a Siege as 'twere, ruined the Churches of God, and demolished them to the ground, and utterly destroyed the Oratories to their very foundations. But he kept his hands undefiled and clean from their nefarious impiety, nor would he in any wise render himself like to them. They defiled the Provinces Subject to them with the intestine Murders of men and women who were worshippers of God. He preserved his own mind from being polluted with [a] such detestable wickedness. They, by a confusion of the mischiefs of a [b] detestable Idolatry, in the first place enslaved themselves, and then all their Subjects, in the frauds and errours of most impious Dæmons. He being the Authour and Preserver of a most profound Peace * within the Limits of his own Empire, permitted his Subjects to prosecute their Worship and Service to God without any the least trouble or molestation. [Lastly,] they imposed the heaviest sorts of exactions upon all men, and thereby made Life comfortless to them, and far more unpleasant than [any sort of] Death. But Constantius was the only person, who rendred his Government inoffensive, calm, and easie to his Subjects, and gave them an assistance from himself in nothing inferiour to a paternall care and sollicitude. Further, because innumerable other Virtues of this person are celebrated amongst all men, I will only commemorate one or two of his brave Actions, from which a conjecture may be made of those that are left unmentioned, and so pass to the proposed scope and design of my Writing.

* Or, To those Governed by him.

[a] Ὁ δὲ τῶν μίσους ἀμέμπτων. I think the reading should be, ὁ δὲ τούτων τῶν μύσους. The Donatists used almost the very same words, in the Supplicatory Libell which they presented to the Emperour Constantine: a Copy whereof is recorded by Optatus, in his first book. Rogamus te Constantine Imp. quoniam de genere impio es; cujus pater inter Cæteros Imperatores persecutionem non exercuit: & ab hoc scelere immunis est Gallia. Vales.

[b] Ἐνθέσμους φωνάς. The term θεοσεβεῖς is wanting, or some other such like word. Nor is the conjecture of that Learned man to be omitted, which I found written at the margin of the Moræan Copy; to wit, that in his judgment the reading ought to be, διὰ τὰς τῆς εἰδωλολατρείας ἐνθέσμους φωνάς. But Turnebus at the margin of his Copy hath mended it ἐνθέσμοις φωναῖς, as hath likewise Sr Henry Savil. In the Kings Sheets, over the word φωνὰς 'tis mended σφᾶς: which emendation I prefer before the rest. I write thus therefore, καὶ οἱ μὲν συγχώσει κακῶν εἰδωλολατρείας ἐνθέσμοις, σφᾶς αὐτοὺς, &c; and have rendred it accordingly. In the Fuketian Manuscripts the reading is ἐνθέσμοις φωναῖς. Vales.

CHAP. XIV.

How Constantius Father [to Constantine] being reproach't with poverty by Diocletian, filled his Treasuries, and afterwards restored the money to [the owners thereof] who had brought it in.

WHen a great Report was spread abroad concerning this Emperour, that he was mild and calm, that he was a most excellent personage, that he was a superlative lover of God, and that, by reason of his transcendent clemency and indulgence towards his Subjects, he had hoarded up no money in his Treasuries: that * Emperour who then filled the highest Station in the Empire, sent to him, and blamed his negligence in managing the publick affairs: and he reproach't him with poverty, alleadging this as an argument in confirmation of what he said, that he was possest of nothing laid up in his Treasuries. But Constantius entreated those persons who came to him from the Emperour, to stay some little time with him: then he call'd together those men that were possest of the greatest quantity of riches, who lived within all those Provinces under his Empire, and signified to them, that he wanted money, and that this was a fit opportunity wherein every one of them ought voluntarily to give a demonstration of their kindness and benevolence towards their Emperour. When they heard that, [a] as if they had long since made this their desire, that an occasion might be offered them of shewing him their readiness of affection, ['tis said,] that with all imaginable haste and diligence they filled his Treasuries with Gold, Silver, and other Riches; contending earnestly amongst themselves, that in giving they might out-vie one another: and this they performed with countenances full of joy and pleasantness. When this was done, Constantius gave order, that those persons sent from the [b] Senior Augustus should be Eye-witnesses of his Treasures. Then [c] he commanded them [at their return] to give attestation to what they had seen; [and added,] that at present he had drawn together this Treasure and taken it into his own custody; but, that it had long before been kept for him by the owners of the money, deposited as 'twere with such [d] Guards as are usually appointed to have the custody of Treasure. The Messengers were surprized with the strangeness of this thing: but Report says, that the most Benign Emperour, after their departure, sent for the owners of the money; and having highly commended them for their obedience and good affection towards him, ordered them to take back all their money, and return home. This is one Act of the forementioned Emperour's,

* He means Diocletian.

[a] Ὥσπερ ἐν καιρῷ τοῦτο ἐκ μακρᾶς ἐπιθυμίας. Christophorson understood not this place; for he has rendred ἐπιθυμίας, statuentes, resolving. ἐν καιρῷ θεῖναι has the same import with vota suscipere, to pray, or, desire earnestly. Which term Eusebius uses in another place, as shall be noted hereafter. Portesius therefore has rendred this place righter, in this manner: His auditis, ac si de illâ ipsâ re vota jamdiu suscepissent ut id eveniret, quo se probare possent, &c. Further, after the word θεοσεβείαν, readiness of affection, the verb φασὶν, it's said, must be inserted. Vales.

[b] Παρ' ἅπαντα βασιλέως. I reade ἅπαντα τὸν μεγάλου βασιλέως, as I found it mended in the Copy of Moræus, Turnebus, Sr Henry Savil, and Fuketius. Further, I have rendred μεγάλου βασιλέως the Senior Augustus. For so Diocletian is called in the Old Panegyricks and in Inscriptions. Vales.

[c] Τῶν μαρτυρίαν προσέταξε. In the Kings Sheets these words are added in the margin; προσέταξεν διακονήσασθαι τὴν πᾶσαν αὐτῷ κατάμεμψαμένων. ὑπιδέντας τὸν λόγον, τὰ μὴ ἀπ' ἀρχῶν μὴ δ' ἐξ ἀδίκου πλεονεξίας εἰσφερόμενα. Which words some Learned man hath added by conjecture, as 'tis sufficiently apparent. I think there is only one word wanting here, παρέχειν, to give. I word it thus therefore, εἶτ' ὧν ὅ γε παρέλαβον, παρέχειν τῶν μαρτυρίαν προσέταξε, Then he commanded, &c. Which sort of expression is usuall with Eusebius. Vales.

[d] Οἷα δ' ὑπασπισὰς ἐθεράπευσε φυλακῇ. At the margin of Moræus's Copy 'tis mended thus, οἷον δὴ πιστοῖς. But this emendation is needless. For, amongst the Ancients, money was deposited in Temples, on account of securing it, and there kept by Guards or Watches of Souldiers, as Juvenal's Old Scholiast remarks, and Lipsius in his book de Magnitudine Romanâ. To these Souldiers therefore Eusebius alludes. By the term ὑπασπισὰς, the Palatini may also be meant here, who guarded the sacred Treasure. In the Kings Sheets, 'tis over written in the same hand, ὑπὸ πιστοῖς, by Faithfull; which displeases not. In the Fuketian Manuscripts 'tis οἷα δὴ πιστοῖς. Vales.

which

which gives a demonstration of his Humanity and good Nature. This other Action of his [which followes,] contains an evident Testimony of [c] his piety towards God.

[c] Τῆς πρὸς τὸ θεῖον εὐσεβείας. Doubtless the reading must be ὁσίας, piety, as I found it mended in the margin of Turnebus's Copy. Vales.

CHAP. XV.

Concerning the Persecution [raised] by the other [Emperours.]

BY the Command of the Emperours, the Governours of Provinces in all places persecuted the worshippers of God. And such as were the first of all the pious Martyrs, came out of the very Imperial Pallaces themselves, underwent Conflicts in defence of their Religion, and with all imaginable alacrity endured Fire, Sword, the Depths of the Sea, and all sorts of death whatever. In so much that, within a very short space of time, the [a] Imperial Pallaces in all places were emptied of God's Worshippers. From whence chiefly it came to pass, that the Authours of this wickedness remained deprived of the divine inspection and assistance. For whilst they persecuted the Worshippers of God, by the same means they banished those supplications usually put up for themselves.

[a] Τὰ παντα χῆ βασίλεια. The Adverb παντα χῆ not without reason troubled both the Translatours, as may be gathered from their Renditions. But they ought to have considered, that Palatium, a Pallace, is taken in a twofold sense. For, sometimes it imports the Court of a Prince. In which sense there were at that time only Four Pallaces, to wit answerable to the number of the Emperours. But sometimes every House wherein an Emperour does usually dwell, is termed a Pallace. And in this sense there were very many Pallaces in the Roman Empire. For there was scarce a City which had not a Pallace. Such Pallaces, or Imperial Houses, as these, were under the dispose of certain Officers, who were termed Curæ Palatiorum; concerning whom there is mention in the Notitia Imperii Romani. Eusebius therefore means these Pallaces. I am of opinion, that the Publick or Royall Villæ are likewise meant, which the Cæsariani look't after. Vales.

CHAP. XVI.

How Constantius Father [to Constantine,] pretending himself a worshipper of Idolls, turned out those who were willing to offer Sacrifice; but retained within his own Pallace such as chose to profess themselves Christians.

* Or, Only into Constantius entred a wisedome of thought.

* ONly Constantius entred upon a [a] Prudent and Pious Course. And the thing he performed was wonderfull to be heard, but much more admirable as to its performance. For, having given all the [b] Palatines that belonged to his Court, even as far as the Judges that were invested with the supreamest powers, a free Liberty of Choice; he proposed this Condition to them, that if they would Sacrifice to Dæmons, they might stay at Court with him, and enjoy their usuall Places and Honours; but if they would not do that, they should be excluded from accesse to him, thrust out, and removed from his knowledge and familiarity. After [His Courtiers] therefore had been hereupon divided into two parties, and some had betaken themselves to this, others to that side, and the Sentiment and purpose of every one of them was laid open: then this admirable Prince discovered his own design, which hitherto he had concealed, and condemned their timiditie and self-love: and to these he gave a kind Reception, on account of their Conscience devoted to God: but then he pronounced those, in regard they were betrayers of God, to be unworthy of their Prince's favour. [c] For how [said he] will it be possible they should preserve a fidelity towards their Emperour, who have been detected of perfidiousnes towards God? Wherefore he made an Establishment by a Law, that such persons should be removed far from the Imperial Houses. But he declared openly, that those men who by the Testimony of Truth it self were manifested to be * acceptable to God, would render themselves like-minded towards their Emperour, and therefore he made them the Protectours of his Body, and the Guards of his Empire: and affirmed, that such persons as these ought to be made use of and accounted [d] as the chiefest and neerest of friends, and most intimate Relatives; and, that they were far more highly to be esteemed, than hoards of the most valuable Riches and Treasures.

[a] After this word, in the King's Sheets, the term Εὐσεβὴς, Pious, is elegantly added in the margin, thus, σοφίᾳ τις εὐσεβὴς ὑπεισῆει λογισμῷ. Vales.

[b] Τοῖς γὸ ὑπ' αὐτὸ βασιλικοῖς. I reade ὑπ' αὐτῷ, as 'tis in the Fuketian, and in Moræus's Copy. That is, to all the Palatines who bore Office under him, and also to the Judges themselves who were placed in power. Power is a term properly attributed to the Greater Judges, of which sort were the Præfecti Prætorio. So Eusebius expresses himself hereafter; and Socrates, book 2. chap. 16; where he speaks concerning Philippus Præfectus Prætorio. Moreover, in the Gesta purgationis Cæciliani, Agefilaus Official to the Proconsul Ælian says thus, Potestas tua, &c. Your power, &c. See what I have remarked above, at book 5. chap. 1. of Eusch. Eccles. Histor. note (c.) Vales.

* Or, Worthy of.

[c] In the King's Copy, at the side of these words, is set such a mark as this, ωρ. we have taken notice of such a mark as this some where before: but, that Letter which is set before the ϱ, is not open on the top here, but closed on all sides. Whence I am rather induced to believe, that this mark is φ and ϱ, and that it signifies φερόπτον, that is, attend, consider. For this mark is added at places which have something of difficulty. For instance, the newness of this expression, πῶς γὸ ἂν φυλάξαι, may put the Reader to a stand here, unless he knows that these words, δίωατὸν εἶη, are to be understood. Vales.

[d] Ἐν πρώτοις χῆ. In the King's Copy the reading is ἐν πρώτοις τε ἀναγκαίοις, &c. amongst the chiefest and neerest, &c. Those words χῆναι δεῖν, ought to be made use of, are a redundancy of expression frequent with Eusebius. For so he has expresst himself in his books of History, as I well remember. Vales.

CHAP. XVII.

Concerning the same [Constantius's] Love and affection towards Christ.

[a] WHat manner of person the Father of Constantine is recorded to have been, we have in short manifested. Now, what a Conclusion of Life befell him, who had demonstrated himself such a person towards God, and how great a difference was shown between him and his Colleagues in the Empire, by that God whom he honoured, any one will easily discern, who with attention shall apply his mind to consider † the thing it self. For, after he had for a long time given illustrious and approved instances of his Royall Virtue, by [avowing] [b] one only supream God, and by condemning * their Impiety who pay a worship to more Gods than one, and had on all sides fortified his

[a] We have made a division of a new chapter here, from the Authority of the Kings Manuscript; whereto agrees the Fuketian Copy, and the old Sheets. Vales.

† Or, The Nature of affairs.

[b] Μόνον μὲν θεὸν τὸν ὅλων πάντων ὁμολογῶν, ἀσε-

* Or, The Polytheisme of the Atheists.

his own house with the prayers of holy men; [c] he compleated the remainder of his Life without any thing of Trouble or disquietude: being made Master of that [d] Felicity, which, as 'tis said, consists in this, neither to be molested by others, nor to give others trouble. After this manner therefore [he rendred] the whole time of his Reign even, undisturbed, and pacate; and consecrated his whole Family, his wife namely, and children, and all his servants, to one God the supream King. In so much that, that Company which conversed together within the walls of his Pallace, differed in nothing from a Church of God. Amongst whom were Ministers of God also, who performed uninterrupted Acts of worship to the Deity, in behalf of the Emperour's safety; [c] when as commonly amongst the rest, not so much as the bare name of those sort of men that were Religious, was permitted to be mentioned.

knowledging, or some such like word is wanting. In the Kings Sheets, after these words, μόνον μὲν θεὸν ὁπιγνὺς confessing, or, avowing, is added in the margin. Turnebus and Sr Henry Savill add εἰδὼς knowing, after the words ἐπὶ πάντων. But, that reading which I have produced out of the Kings Sheets, is better. For the term ὁπιγνὺς is elegantly opposed to that which follows immediately, to wit, καταγνοὺς, condemning. In the Fuketian Manuscript 'tis written εἰδὼς. Vales.

[c] Τῆς ζωῆς διαπρέψαι. Sr H. Savil has noted at the margin of his Copy, that perhaps the Verb λέγει 'tis said is to be added. But, that emendation is far better, which I found written in the Kings Sheets, at the margin; it is this, εὐσταλῆ λοιπὸν καὶ ἀτυφέκτον τῆς ζωῆς διεξήνυε βίον, which reading we have expreſt in our Version. The reading in the Fuketian Manuscript is, εὐσταλῆ λοιπὸν καὶ ἀτυφέκτον πᾶν ζωὴν διαπρέψαι. Vales.

[d] He alludes to that saying of Epicurus concerning God, τὸ μακάριον, ὅτε πράγματα ἔχει αὐτὸ, ὅτε ἄλλῳ παρέχει; as Nemesius relates it, chap. 44; Cicero, in his first book de Naturâ Deorum; and Laertius, pag. 795. Vales.

[c] Ὅτε ὤφθη τοῖς πολλοῖς. In the Kings Sheets, the last word is undermarked with points, and λοιποῖς is written over, which I like better. Further, in the same Sheets, before these words, these are added in the margin, καὶ παῦτα ὤφθη μόνῳ τῷδε συνέλειτο, and these [Acts of worship] were performed with him only. They that will, may follow this conjecture of the Learned Antiquary. To me these words seem not necessary. Vales.

CHAP. XVIII.

That after the Resignation of Diocletian and Maximian, Constantius was the first Augustus, and was adorned with a Numerous Issue.

FUrther, in recompense of these things, a reward from God attended him not long after; in so much that he obtained the first and chiefest place of the * Empire. For those † Augusti who were His Seniours, by what means I know not, divested themselves of their Imperial Dignity: which sudden Change befell them [a] on the first year after the * demolishment of the Churches; from whence forward, only Constantius was declared the first and † Chiefest Augustus. Who at first was adorned with the Diadem of the Cæsars [together with * Galerius,] and had obtained precedency: but after [he had given] an Egregious † Specimen of his own worth in that dignity of Cæsar, he was invested with the highest honour amongst the Romans, and was styled the First Augustus of those [b] Four afterwards proclaimed. Moreover, he was the only person that excelled all the other Emperours in a numerous issue, being surrounded with a great Quire of Children, as well Males as Females. Lastly, after he had attained to a mature old Age, and, being ready to pay * the Common debt of Nature, was at the point of making his departure out of this life: then did God again demonstrate himself to him the performer of wonderfull Works, and by his providence took care, that Constantine the eldest of his Sons should be present with him at his Death, in order to his taking possession of the Empire.

* Or. Imperial power.
† Viz. Diocletian, and Maximian.
[a] This place is highly remarkable. For, from it this conclusion may be made, that the Persecution began on Diocletian's eighth, and Maximian's seventh Consulate; and not on the foregoing year, as Baronius will have it. Concerning which matter I have spent many words in my notes on Euseb. Eccles. History; see book 8. chap. 2. note (c.) For, whereas Eusebius affirms, that the Emperours Diocletian and Maximian divested themselves of their purple on the year after the Persecution was begun; and whereas 'tis manifest, that they did that on the year of Christ 304; what I have said does necessarily follow, to wit, that Diocletian's Persecution was begun on the year of Christ 303. Vales.
* Or, Siege.
† Or, Adorable.
* See Eusebius's Ecclesiastical History book 9. chap. 9. note (i;) and the Excerpta of that unknown Author published by Valesius at the close of his Amm. Marcellinus, pag. 471.
† Proof, or, tryall.
* Or, The debt to common Nature.
[b] Sr Henry Savil has noted at the margin of his Copy, that these four were, Galerius Maximianus, Severus, and Maximinus, but the fourth Maxentius. As to the three former, I assent to Sr Henry Savil. But, I do affirm, that the fourth was not Maxentius, but Constantius himself. For Maxentius seized not the Empire, till after Constantius's death. Vales.

CHAP. XIX.

Concerning his Son Constantine, who when a young man, came into Palestine together with Diocletian.

FOr he conversed with the Emperours [who were his Father's] Colleagues; and made his Residence amongst them, agreeable to that ancient Prophet of the Lord Moses, as we have already said. [a] And having newly past over his years of childhood, and arrived at those of his youth, he was vouchsafed the highest honour and esteem amongst the foresaid Emperours. At which Age of his we Our Selves saw him, when he past through the Province of Palestine, in Company with the Senior Augustus. At whose right hand he stood, and appeared a most excellent and glorious person to those who were desirous of seeing him, and such a one as even then gave indications of an Imperial height of mind. For, as to the beautifull shape of his body, and his tallness of Stature, there was no other person that might be compared to him. Moreover, he so far excelled his equalls in strength and courage, that he was a terrour to them. But he was far more illustrious and eminent for the Virtues of his mind, than for his bodily endowments and accomplishments. And in the first place he beautified his mind with modesty; after that, with Polite Literature; and as well an innate prudence, as a wisdome infused from above, [b] adorned him in a most transcendent manner.

[a] Ἦδη ἄχει καὶ παιδὸς. I think the reading should be, ἤδη δὲ ἀρτ ἐκ παιδὸς, &c; which we have expreſt in our Version. Indeed, in Moræus's Copy the particle δὲ is written at the margin. Turnebus, at the margin of his Copy, had mended it, καὶ ἀπὸ παιδὸς. In the Fuketian Manuscript the reading is, ἤδη δ' ἄχει καὶ παιδὸς. Vales.
[b] Διαφερόντως ἐκπρέπων. I read ὑπερέπων, adorned, as Eusebius does usually speak. And so 'tis mended in the old Sheets, at the margin. In the Fuketian Manuscript 'tis written thus, ᾧ πασδότῳ σοφίᾳ διαφερόντως ἐμπρέπων. Vales.

CHAP.

CHAP. XX.

The departure of Constantine to his Father, because of Diocletian's treacherous designes [against him.]

FUrther, when the then Emperours perceived, that the Young man was Couragious, strong, and Great, and * endewed with an height and vigour of mind, they were wounded with [a] fear and envy. They watch't therefore in expectation of a fit opportunity, wherein, agreeable to their desire, they might involve him in ignominy and disgrace. Which the young man being sensible of, (for the treacherous designes which had been once and twice framed against him, by the consent and appointment of God were discovered;) He opened a way to his own safety by flying; and herein likewise he * imitated the great Prophet Moses. Further, God gave him his assistance in all things, and by his Divine providence disposed affairs in such a manner, that he should be present with his Father, [b] in order to his succeeding him [in the Empire.]

* Or, Filled.

[a] After these words an Asterisk ought to be placed. For there are some words wanting, which Christophorson hath not rightly supplied. For the Emperours Diocletian and Galerius studied not only to disgrace Constantine, but to destroy him utterly. See the Excerpta de Gestis Constantini, which are published at the end of Amm. Marcellinus, and what we have remarked there. I was indeed of opinion formerly, that those Greek words which are written at the margin of the Geneva Edition, were not taken out of any Manuscript Copy, but were made from Christophorson's Latine Version. But after I had procured the Fuketian Manuscript I evidently perceived, that those readings were taken out of Manuscript Copies. 'Tis certain, the Fuketian Manuscript has this place written in this manner; φθόνῳ καὶ φόβῳ ἐβάλλοντο· ἐπεὶ οὖν ἐπὶ καιροῦ τινα μόνιμα αὐτῷ διελόμενοι ἐφυλάττοντο, καιρὸν ἔυθετον ἀναμένοντες· ὁ δὲ, &c; which reading we have expresst in our Version. So I found it written also in the Copies of Turnebus and Sr Henry Savil. But this reading, though confirmed by the authority of Manuscript Copies, nevertheless seems not genuine to me; both for that reason I have produced above, and on account also of the inelegancy of the words. Vales.

* Or, Preserved the imitation of, &c.

[b] Τῇ τῆ παλεῖς διαθήκῃ. I had rather write διαθήκη, Will, or, Testament. For Constantius made his Will at that very time when his Son Constantine came to him, as Nicephorus relates book 7. chap. 18. A little before the reading should be παρεῖναι, present, not σωεῖναι. Vales.

CHAP. XXI.

The Death of Constantius, who left his Son Constantine Emperour.

WHen therefore he had avoided these * Treacherous contrivances, he made all imaginable hast to his Father, into whose presence he came, after a long space of time. At that instant of his arrivall, his Father was at the very point of dying. When therefore Constantius beheld his Son present with him, whom he did not in the least expect, he leapt from his Bed, and cast his arms about him; and affirming that that only Grief which troubled him now ready to conclude his life, to wit, the absence of his Son, was wholly removed out of his mind, he put up a prayer of thanks to God; and said, that now he accounted Death to be better for him than Immortality. Further, when he had disposed of his affairs in a manner agreeable to his own mind, and [a] had taken leave of his Sons and Daughters, who like a Quire surrounded him on every side: He ended his life in his Pallace, lying on his Royall Bed, after he had surrendred the * Administration of his Empire, agreeable to the Law of Nature, into the hands of [b] his eldest Son.

* Or, Engines of Treachery.

* Or, His allotment of the Empire.

[a] Τοῖς θ' ἅμα καὶ συγκλεισι σωτακτέα μαι. Christophorson rendred this place thus, in medio filiorum & filiarum se statuens, placing himself in the midst of his Sons and Daughters. Portesius has translated it in this manner, Simul Liberis ex commentario distribuit Hereditatem, And also distributed his Inheritance to his children out of a Commentary, or Book of Notes. Neither of these translatours have hit the sense of this word. Eusebius uses the same term at book 3. chap. 20; at which place we will at large declare what σωτακτὰς means, as also the import of σωτακτικὸς λόγος. Sr Henry Savil has expounded this word excellently well at the margin of his Copy, thus, Valedicens, taking leave, or, bidding farewell. And so Athanasius expresses himself in the Life of St Antonius, about the end, σωτακτάμενος τοῖς ἐν τῷ ἔξω ὄρει μοναχοῖς, having taken leave of those Monks in the mountain without. Vales.

[b] Τῷ τῶ ἡλικίαν προέσοντι. I write τῷ τῇ ἡλικίᾳ, &c. So Eusebius has expresst himself above, at chapter 18, speaking concerning Diocletian and Maximian, ὁι μὲν γὰ τῷ χείρονι προέσοντες. Vales.

CHAP. XXII.

How * after the Death of Constantius, the Army † saluted Constantine Augustus.

* Or, When Constantius had been carried out to Buriall.

† Or, Styled.

NOr did the State continue deprived of an Emperour. But Constantine was adorned with his Fathers Purple; and proceeding forth of his Father's * House, gave all men a demonstration, that, by a resurrection as 'twere, the Father continued as yet to Reign in him his Son. Then he lead out his Father's Funerall, accompanied with the Friends of his Father [a], some of whom went before, others followed; and with all the splendour imaginable celebrated the Obsequies of that Pious Prince. All persons honoured the Thrice-blessed Emperour with Acclamations and Praises, and agreed in an unanimous consent, that the succession of the Son in the Empire was a Resurrection of the dead Father. And forthwith, even at the first word, they * Saluted the young Prince Emperour and Augustus, with fortunate Acclamations. Which expressions uttered in praise of the Son, were an ornament indeed to the dead Emperour; but they loudly proclaimed the Son Blessed, who was declared the Successour to so great a Father. Moreover, all the Provinces subject to his Empire, were filled with gladness and a joy that was inexpressible, because they had not, during the smallest moment of time, been deprived of the assistance of an Imperiall † Providence and inspection. Thus in the Emperour Constantius, God gave a demonstration to all persons of our Age, that such as this is the conclusion of a Pious and Religious life and conversation.

* Or, Houses.

[a] After this clause, in the King's Sheets these words are added in the margin; ἢ πατέρα πρὸ πομπῆ. δήμων τε πλήθει μυρίων, σεμνῶ τε δορυφορίᾳ, brought forth his Father; and with an infinite multitude of people, and a Guard of Souldiers. Which words (though Sr Henry Savil and Christophorson found them in their Copies, nevertheless) seem to me very little necessary. Yet they occur in the Fuketian Manuscripts. Vales.

* Or, Styled.

† Or, Decency.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXIII.

A brief Rehearsall of the Death of the Tyrants.

* Or, Conclusions of life.

† Or, a composition of the contrary.

|| Or, Experience of the works.

BUt what the * Exits of those other persons were, who by an open War as 'twere made attacks against the Churches of God, I judge in no wise fit to insert into this present Narrative, nor to defile the Memories of the Good by † annexing a mention of the mischievous. Indeed, the || matters themselves are sufficient to repress and keep within the bounds of duty those persons, who by their own eyes and ears have received an account of that [whole Scene of Calamities] which befell each of them.

CHAP. XXIV.

That Constantine obtained the Empire by the will of God.

* Or, By himself.

[a] Προσαγωγὴν, accession. It ought, as I think, to be made προάγωγὴν, that is, promotion, or προκοπὴν, advancement. And thus Turnebus hath mended it at the margin of his Copy, as I afterwards found. Vales.

IN this manner, the supream God himself, who is the Governour of the whole World, * by his own arbitrement designed and constituted Constantine, begotten of such a Father, Prince and Emperour: in so much that, whereas the rest [of the Emperours] obtained this honour by the approbation and votes of others, he was the only person, of whose [a] promotion no Mortall might boast.

CHAP. XXV.

The Victories of Constantine over the Barbarians and Britanni.

* Or, For his Father's allotment.

[a] Ἐπισκοπῶν ἔθνη. So Eusebius is wont to term the Provinces of the Romans, as might easily be proved from many places. Eusebius says therefore, that Constantine, as soon as his Empire was settled, took a progress round all those Provinces that had been under the Empire of his Father. Which Christophorson understood not. Vales.

[b] Ταῦτα κατὰ λόγον ἔκειτο. At this place κατὰ λόγον seems to have the same import with κατὰ νοῦν, according to his own mind. Which Portesius perceived also. But Christophorson has rendred this place, and the whole chapter, very unhappily. Vales.

WHen therefore he was firmly setled in the Empire, in the first place he began to make provision * for those parts of the Empire which had been transferred to him from his Father, and with much humanity and tenderness [a] visited all those Provinces that had heretofore been under his Father's Administration. And, having reduced all those barbarous Nations, (whose habitations were about the River Rhine and the Western Ocean, who had taken the boldness to raise Commotions,) to an obedience to his own Government; from being intractable, he brought them over to a mild and more civilized Temper. But he was satisfied in repressing others, whom like Savage Beasts he frighted from the confines of his Empire; to wit, those whose minds he perceived were incurable, and despaired of bringing them to a peaceable and quiet course of life. When [b] these things had been performed according to his own mind, he set before his eyes the other parts of the world; then he made a [c] Voyage over to the Brittish Nations, situate within the Ocean it self. Whom when he had subdued, he lookt towards other parts of the world, that he might apply remedies to those [Nations] who wanted his assistance.

[c] Concerning this Voyage of Constantine into Britaine, none of the Ancients have written any thing. Therefore, the memory of this matter we owe to Eusebius only; who at this place does not obscurely intimate the time also; to wit, a little before Constantine undertook his Expedition against Maxentius. Wherefore, this Voyage of Constantine's into Britaine hapned on Maximianus's eighth Consulate, in the year of Christ 311, as Sigonius has rightly remarked in his Second Book de Occidentali Imperio. But Sr Henry Savil thought Eusebius was mistaken here: For this is his remark at this place; Eusebius ignorasse videtur, &c. Eusebius seems to have been ignorant, that the Father of Constantine dyed at York in Britaine. Vales.

CHAP. XXVI.

How he took a Resolution of freeing Rome [from the Tyranny] of Maxentius.

* Or, Element of the world.

† Or, Imperial.

[a] He means Galerius Maximianus, and Maximinus. For those he terms τοὺς πρὸ ἐμοῦ χρόνῳ πρεσβύτερους, his seniours in time, that is, Senior Emperours. For although Maximinus was scarce declared Augustus as yet, nevertheless, because he had been made Cæsar some years before Constantine, therefore he may be accounted amongst the Emperours that were Seniours to Constantine. Vales.

[b] Αἰσχρὸν ὑπόμεινεν τέλος. A twofold sense may be brought of these words. For you may either render them with Portesius and Christophorson, fœdum rei eventum nacti sunt, had procured a shamefull event of the affair; or else, as I have translated them, turpi exitu perierunt, had perished by an ignominious death. The former has relation to Galerius Maximianus. The Latter interpretation is to be understood of Severus Cæsar: who being sent by Galerius with an Army against Maxentius, when he would have made preparations to lay Siege to Rome, he was deserted by his own Forces, (whom Maxentius had brought off to his own side by the hope of rewards,) and fled to Ravenna: in which City he was besieged by Maxentius; and being soon imposed upon by the fraud and perjuries of Maximianus Herculius, and carried to Rome in the habit of a captive, he was quickly after killed; as 'tis related in the Gesta Constantini. See the following chapter, where Eusebius relates this matter more at large. Vales.

* * *

CHAP. XXVI.

How he took a Resolution of freeing Rome [from the Tyranny] of Maxentius.

AFter this he took into his consideration the whole * world, as twere some vast Body; and perceiving that the Head of the whole Earth, the † Chief City of the Roman Empire, was oppressed with a Tyrannick servitude; in the first place he gave place to [a] them to free it, who had obtained the other portions of the Roman Empire; in regard they were his Seniours in time. Now, when none of them could give it assistance; but those who had resolved upon making tryall, [b] had perished by an ignominious death; he profest his Life would be uncomfortable, if he should neglect the Imperial City when so sorely afflicted, and therefore made preparations to suppress the Tyranny.

CHAP. XXVII.

That [Constantine] weighing in his mind the deaths of those who had worshipped Idols, chose rather the [profession of] Christianity.

BUt having well considered with himself, that he wanted some better assistance than his Military Forces, because of the evill Arts and Magick Impostures studiously followed by the Tyrant; he sought for a God to be his Assistant; and accounted his furniture of Arms and Military Companies † as secondary helps only; but [perſwaded himſelf,] that the aſſiſtance of a Deity was invincible and inexpugnable. He began therefore to conſider with himſelf, what God he ſhould take to be his aſſiſtant. Which whilſt he ſollicitouſly inquired into, * theſe thoughts aroſe in his mind: that of thoſe many who had arrived at the Empire before him, they that had placed their hopes in a multitude of Gods, and had worſhipped them [a] with Sacrifices and conſecrated Gifts; at firſt had been deluded by Prophecies made to pleaſe and flatter them, and by Oracles which promiſed them all things that were proſperous and fortunate; but had at length found an unlucky and diſaſtrous end: nor was any of their Gods ready at hand with them, to † free them from that deſtruction inflicted on them by Heaven. That his Father was the only perſon, who had taken a courſe contrary [to thoſe former Emperours;] and had condemned their errour; who throughout his whole life had heretofore worſhipped one ſupream God, whom he had found to be the Saviour and Keeper of his Empire, and the Beſtower of all good. When he had weighed theſe things with himſelf, and well conſidered, that thoſe who had put their confidence in a multitude of Gods, had likewiſe faln into a multitude of deſtructions; in ſo much that, not the leaſt footſtep either of their Stock, * Iſſue, † Kindred, Name, or Memory was left remaining amongſt men: but [on the contrary,] that the God of his Father had given many and thoſe effectuall demonſtrations of his own power to his Father. And when he had further conſidered, that thoſe who before had lead out their forces againſt the Tyrant, becauſe they had made their Expedition with a multitude of Gods, had undergone a diſgracefull end. For the one of them had retreated ignominiouſly with all his Forces, without effecting any thing. And the other was killed in the midſt of his Army, and ſo became [b] a cheap and eaſie ſacrifice of death. Having, I ſay, muſtered up all theſe thoughts within his own mind, and conſidered them well, he judged it the higheſt pitch of † madneſs to trifle about [the worſhip of] thoſe Gods which are nothing, and, after ſo clear a conviction, ſtill to run on in blind errour: but his Sentiment was, that he ought only to worſhip the God of his Father.

† Or, In the ſecond place.

* Or, This thought.

[a] In the Kings Sheets the word λοιβαῖς, Libations, is added here. Valeſ.

† Or, Give them warning of.

* Or, Nature. † Or, Root.

[b] πάρεργον ἐθύσατο θανάτῳ. 'Tis very hard to tell what Euſebius means by this expreſſion. Chriſtophorſon renders it thus; Tanquam ſupervacanea mortis acceſſio factus eſt, was made as 'twere the ſuperfluous acceſſion of death. And Porteſius, before him, had rendred it fati acceſſionem, the acceſſion, or, vantage of Fate. But I underſtand not, why Severus ſhoud be ſtiled the vantage of death, when he only of all his Army periſhed. I had therefore rather render πάρεργον, vilem victimam, a cheap and eaſie Sacrifice. For vile perſons are rightly termed θανάτῳ πάρεργον. Alſo, what ever happens without Labour and amidſt ſport as 'twere, is rightly termed πάρεργον. So the death of Severus Cæſar may rightly be ſtiled πάρεργον, in regard he was taken, and ſlain ſo eaſily, as if he had had no Souldiers about him. And perhaps it ſhould be written πάρεργον ἐθύσατο πολέμῳ. Indeed, Gelaſius Cyzicenus's words (book 1. chap. 3,) are theſe; εἶλε δὲ καὶ τὸν κρατοῦντα ἤδη ὅπλων τὰ αὐτοῦ βάρβαρα φῦλα, πυρέσσοντα τῆς μάχης πρὸς τὸ ἔργον συγκεκροτημένης; where the Tranſlator has rendred it the Acceſſion of the War, which I like not. I had rather tranſlate it in Gelaſius thus, his velut belli proludiis ad bellum ipſum uſus, having uſed theſe preludes of war as 'twere in order to the war it ſelf. So alſo Euſebius expreſſes himſelf hereafter at book 2. chap. 52. Further, at this place there is a figure which Græcians term ὕστερον πρότερον. For the overthrow of Severus Cæſar preceded that ignominious flight of Galerius. Valeſ.

† Or, Folly.

CHAP. XXVIII.

*That whilſt he was praying to God, He ſhewed him a Viſion; to wit, a Croſs of Light in the * Heavens, (it being then mid-day,) and an Inſcription thereon, which admoniſhed him, that by* That he ſhould Conquer.

* Or, Heaven.

HE called upon this God therefore in his prayers, entreating and beſeeching him, that, who ever he was, he would manifeſt himſelf to him, and reach out his right hand [to his aſſiſtance] in his preſent affairs. Whilſt the Emperour was putting up theſe Prayers and earneſt Supplications, a moſt wonderfull ſign ſent from God appeared. Which [ſign,] had any other perſon given a Relation of it, would not eaſily have been [a] received as true. But ſince the † Victorious Emperour himſelf told it to us who write this Hiſtory, a long while after, namely at ſuch time as we were vouchſafed his knowledge and converſe; and confirmed his Relation with an ‖ oath; who will hereafter doubt of giving credit to his Narrative? Eſpecially, when the ſucceeding * Times gave an evident atteſtation to this Relation. [b] About the Meridian hours of the Sun when the day was declining, he ſaid he ſaw with his own eyes the Trophy of the Croſs in the † heavens, placed over the Sun, made up of Light, and an Inſcription annexed to it containing theſe words, BY THIS CONQUER. And, that at the ſight thereof, an amazement ſeized both him, and all his Military Forces, which followed him as he was making a Journey ſome whither, and were ſpectatours of the Miracle.

[a] Ἀποδεικνύμενος, demonſtrated. I think the reading ſhould be ἀποδεξάμενος, received, or, admitted as true; and ſo Nicephorus ſeems to have read, book 7. chap. 29. So alſo I found it written in the King's Sheets. In the Fuk. and Savilian Manuſcripts, the reading is ἀποδεξάμενος, approved, or, entertained. Valeſ.

† Or, Victor Auguſtus.

‖ Or, Oaths.

* Or, Time.

† Or, Heaven.

[b] Ἀμφὶ μεσημβρινὰς ἤδη ὥρας ἤδη τῆς ἡμέρας ἀποκλινούσης. Nicephorus (book 7. chap. 29.) has expounded this place thus; περὶ τὸ μεσημβρίαν ὁδεύοντι σωάμα τῇ περὶ αὐτὸν στρατιᾷ, τὸ ἥλιος πρὸς δυσμὰς κλίνοντος, For being about noon on the march with his Army about him, the Sun verging towards the Weſt, &c. So alſo Porteſius has rendred Euſebius's words: Sub meridiem (ſays he) inclinante jam die, about noon, the day now declining. But perhaps the whole clauſe is to be continued in one breath, and the words of Euſebius to be conſtrued in this manner, τῆς ἡμέρας ἀποκλινούσης ἀμφὶ μεσημβρινὰς ὥρας, when the day was now verging towards noon. Which interpretation is favoured by Zonaras, who giving an account of this Viſion in the Geſta of Conſtantine, ſays it appeared μεσούσης ἡμέρας, at mid-day. Indeed, in the King's and Fuketian Manuſcripts, there is no Comma after the word ὥρας, but only after the word ἀποκλινούσης a Comma is ſet. And yet in Socrates, (book 1. chap. 2.) who wrote out theſe words of Euſebius, after the word ὥρας, is ſet a Comma. Therefore Chriſtophorſon at both places renders it thus circiter meridiem, die jam in pomeridianum tempus aliquantulum inclinante, about noon, the day now declining ſomewhat towards the afternoon. Which to me ſeems fooliſh. For ἀποκλίνουσα ἡμέρα cannot be ſaid, but when the day declines towards the evening, that is, after the ninth hour of the day, as Nicephorus rightly took it. But how can that agree with the preceding words ἀμφὶ τὰς μεσημβρινὰς, &c? For 'tis the ſame as if you ſhould ſay, about noon towards the evening. Some one will perhaps ſay, that by theſe laſt words ἀποκλινούσης ἡμέρας Euſebius would mean, that that Viſion was ſhown to Conſtantine a little after noon. For the Sun going from the Meridian Point, afterwards by degrees verges into the Weſt. But if Euſebius thought ſo, what need was there of ſo many words? For he might have expreſt himſelf with more of brevity, thus μεσούσης ἤδη τῆς ἡμέρας, it being now mid-day. Beſides, Euſebius has ſaid in the plurall number, ἀμφὶ τὰς μεσημβρινὰς ὥρας, that it might appear, that he meant not the ſixth hour, but that whole ſpace of hours which is aſcribed to noon, to wit from the fifth hour to the ninth. Wherefore, I am induced to be of this opinion, that that Viſion was preſented to Conſtantine about the ninth hour of the day, whilſt he was making a journey in company with his Army. And this is plainly confirmed by the following words. For Euſebius adds that Conſtantine being amazed after the Viſion, whilſt he was muſing of many things within his own mind, night came on. Whence it appears, that that Viſion appeared to Conſtantine and his Souldiers not not long before night. In the Eleventh Book of the Hiſtoria Miſcella. where this paſſage of Euſebius is produced, this rendition of it occurs, circa meridiem, declinante jam ſole, about noon, the Sun now declining. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXIX.

That God's Chriſt appeared to him in his ſleep, and ordered him to make uſe of a Standard made in the form of a Croſs, in his Wars.

MOreover, he began to doubt with himſelf, as he ſaid, what the meaning of this Apparition ſhould be. But whilſt he was revolving it in his mind, and very intent in his thoughts upon it, on a ſudden night came on. At which time [as he ſaid,] the Chriſt of God appeared to him when aſleep, with that ſign which had been ſhown him in the Heavens; and ordered him to get a Standard made in imitation of that he had ſeen in the heaven, which he ſhould uſe as a ſalutary defence in his Engagements with his Enemies.

CHAP. XXX.

The making of that Standard framed in the faſhion of a Croſs.

AS ſoon as it was day he aroſe, and declared the whole ſecret to his friends. Then he called together the Workers in Gold and pretious Stones, in the midſt of whom he himſelf ſate, and by diſcourſe gave them a deſcription of that * Standard, and ordered them to expreſs its likeneſs in Gold and pretious Stones. Which [Standard] we our ſelves alſo [a] hapned ſometime to have a ſight of.

* Or, Sign.

[a] Ὀφθαλμοῖς ποτὲ παρελαβεῖν. The verb σωθεὶς hapned is to be added, which I found written at the margin of Moræus's Copy. In the Kings ſheets this place is ſupplied at the margin in this manner; αὐτὸς βασιλεὺς, Θεῷ δὲ τῷ τὸ χάρισμα δόντι, ἀξίωσε, the Emperour himſelf, God having beſtowed that alſo, vouchſafed [us a ſight of it.] And ſo Sr Henry Savil and Chriſtophorſon read. In the Fuketian Manuſcript this place is written thus, ὃ δὴ καὶ ἡμᾶς ὀφθαλμοῖς ποτὲ σωθὲν παρελαβεῖν αὐτὸς βασιλεὺς, &c. as above. But, the one of theſe expreſſions is ſuperfluous. For, either the verb σωθὲν muſt be expunged; or elſe thoſe words αὐτὸς βασιλεὺς, &c. muſt be left out. Unleſs you will read as Sr Henry Savil did, αὐτὸς γὰρ βασιλεὺς, &c. For the Emperour himſelf, God having beſtowed that alſo, vouchſafed us a ſight of it. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXXI.

A deſcription of the Standard made in faſhion of a Croſs, which the Romans do now term The Labarum.

IT was made in this form. A very long Spear overlaid with Gold, [a] had a piece like a Sail-yard laid overthwart it, framed in faſhion of a Croſs. Above, on the very top of the Spear, was fixt a Crown, made up of pretious Stones and Gold. In this Crown was the Symboll of the Salutary Appellation, to wit, two Letters repreſenting the name of Chriſt, [which they] denoted by the firſt Characters, the letter Rho being cut thorow in its middle part. Which two letters the Emperour was wont to wear in his Helmet, though [he embraced that uſage] in the times which ſucceeded theſe matters. Further, from the Croſs-piece fixed athwart the Spear, was hung a kind of a * Flag, to wit, a purple cloth, covered with a variety of pretious Stones joyned one with another, which dazled mens eyes with the Rays of their Light; and being [b] interwoven with much Gold, preſented thoſe that viewed it with an inexpreſſible kind of Beauty. This Flag, hung at the Croſs-piece, [c] had a length exactly equall to its breadth. But, the upright Staff of the Spear, [d] from its Loweſt part was extended to a very great length, and in its upper part, under the Trophy of the Croſs, at the very top of the [e] Flag embroidered with a variety of colours, it bore a Golden Picture of the Pious Emperour, as far as his breaſt, and [a repreſentation] likewiſe of his children. This ſalutary Standard the Emperour always made uſe of as a defence againſt the oppoſed Forces of all Enemies whatever; and he gave order, that other Standards made like to this, ſhould be carried at the head of all his Armies.

[a] Κέρας εἶχεν. Langius, Porteſius, and Chriſtophorſon have rendred it Cornu, a Horn; whereas they ought to have tranſlated it antennam, i. e. a croſs piece like that whereto a Sail is fixed, or, the Sailyard. Valeſ.

* Or, Sail.

[b] Καδυφασμῷ χρυσῷ. Sr Henry Savil in his Copy has mended it καδυφασμῷον interwoven. Indeed, in the Fuketian Manuſcript I found it written καδυφασμένον; and a little after, the ſame Copy and Turnebus read παρεῖχε, not παρέχον. Valeſ.

[c] Σύμμετρον μήκους τε καὶ πλάτους. By theſe words Euſebius ſhews, that that Flag or Sail was ſquare. For an equall meaſure of length and breadth, does neceſſarily make a ſquare figure. Indeed, in the old Coyns of Conſtantine and the following Princes, this Flag is to be ſeen in that figure I have mentioned. Chriſtophorſon therefore has rendred this place ill, in this manner, Iſtud igitur velamen ad cornu affixum, longitudinis latitudiniſque crucis menſuram penitus exæquavit. Valeſ.

[d] The meaning is, that that Spear from its baſis to the Antenna, or Croſs-piece fixed athwart it, was far longer, than from the Antenna to its very top. And this alſo may be diſcerned in the Coyns. This place may likewiſe have another meaning, viz. that that Spear was of a very great length from its bottome to the top. Valeſ.

[e] Τῷ διαγεγραμμένῳ ὑφάσματι. It muſt be written τῷ διαγεγραφότι, that is, Painted or Embroidered with a variety of colours. For, that purple Flag which hung at the Antenna, was adorned with Gold and various ſorts of Stones. But, I can't imagine what Chriſtophorſon meant, who has rendred theſe words of Euſebius in this manner, ad texturæ diſcurrentis ſimbrias: unleſs he read διαγεγραμμένον instead of διαγεγραφότι. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXXII.

That Conſtantine becoming a Catechumen, read the Sacred Scriptures.

BUt theſe things [were done] a little afterwards. But being then amazed at that wonderfull Viſion, after he had taken a reſolution of worſhipping [a] no other God but him whom he had ſeen, he ſent for [b] thoſe perſons that were skilled in the Myſteries of His Doctrine; and enquired of them what that God was, and * what the Viſion of that Sign meant.

[a] Οὐδέτερον. It muſt be written two words, οὐδὲ ἕτερον, or οὐδένα ἕτερον, no other. Sr Henry Savil at the margin of his Copy hath mended it οὐδ' ἕτερον θεὸν: the Fuketian Manuſcript has it οὐδέτερον θεὸν. Valeſ.

[b] Τοὺς περὶ αὐτῷ λόγων μύστας. At this place Euſebius ſeems to have made uſe of μύστας inſtead of μυσταγωγοὺς. For there is no doubt but he means the Biſhops: becauſe a little after he adds theſe words, καὶ δὴ καὶ τοὺς τῷ Θεῷ ἱερέας παρέδρους αὐτῷ πεποιημένος, &c. and having made thoſe Prelates of God his Aſſeſſours, &c. Valeſ.

* Or, What was the meaning of that Sign of the Viſion which appeared.

They affirmed that he was God, the only begotten Son of the one and only God: but that that ſign which had been ſhown him, was the Symboll of immortality, and the Trophy of that Victory, which he, when heretofore converſant on the earth, had obtained over death. They likewiſe taught him the cauſes of his Advent, and expounded to him the accurate account of his [c] Incarnation. He gave them attention, being deſirous of information in thoſe matters. But he was taken up with an admiration of that appearance of God which had been exhibited to his ſight. And when he had compared that Celeſtial Viſion with the interpretation given of it by the diſcourſes of the Biſhops, he was ſtrengthened in mind; and became fully perſwaded, that the knowledge of theſe matters was delivered to him by the miniſtration of God himſelf. From thence forward he reſolved to apply himſelf to the reading of the Divine Books; and having made thoſe Prelates of God his Aſſeſſours, was of opinion, that that God whom he had ſeen, was to be worſhipped with all imaginable obſervancy. After this, being fortified with good hopes placed in Him, he undertook to extinguiſh *the fire of Tyrannick fury.

* Or, The Menace of Tyrannick fire.

[c] Τῆς κατ' ἀνθρώπους οἰκονομίας. What the import of οἰκονομία is in the writings of the holy Fathers, we have ſufficiently noted at book 1. chap. 1. of Euſebius's Eccleſ. Hiſtory. For, whatever Chriſt as man performed in the fleſh, in order to the ſalvation of men, that is comprehended in the term οἰκονομία. Therefore Chriſtophorſon's rendition of this place is not good, who has turned it thus, Chriſti inter homines œconomiam, the œconomie of Chriſt amongſt men. Nor does κατ' ἀνθρώπους ſignifie amongſt men, but rather agreeable to men, that is, in an humane manner and faſhion. So Gregorius Nyſſenus in his Epiſtle to Euſtathia and Ambroſia; ἀλλ' εἰ ὡσαύτως ἔχων, καὶ περὶ τῆς κατ' ἄνθρωπον οἰκονομίας, καὶ ἐν ἐκείνῳ, καὶ μὴ τοῦτο. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Concerning the adulteries committed by Maxentius at Rome.

FOr he who by Tyranny had poſſeſt himſelf of the Imperial City, was arrived at that height of impiety and wickedneſs, that no audacious fact, no filthy and impure practiſes were omitted by him. [a] For he parted the Wives, from their Husbands, to whom they had been legally married; and having debauch't them, in a moſt diſhonourable manner ſent them back to their Husbands. Nor did he in this wiſe inſult over and abuſe obſcure perſons, and thoſe of mean quality, but even ſuch as filled the eminenteſt places in the Roman Senate. But although he vitiated almoſt infinite numbers of free women in a moſt ſhamefull manner, yet could he in no wiſe ſatiate the immoderate and intemperate [Luſt of] his own mind. But, after he began [to ſollicite] Chriſtian women, [b] He could by no arts of his own bring it about, [that he might enjoy their Embraces.]

[a] Διαζευγνύς γέ τοι ἀφ' ἀνδρῶν. The place is imperfect, as 'tis evident; with Chriſtophorſon we have perfected it from the fourteenth chapter of the eighth Book of his Eccleſ. Hiſtory. In the Kings Sheets, this place is ſupplied at the margin in this manner; τὰς κατὰ νόμον γαμετὰς, αὐτοῖς ἐνυβρίζων διαχειρότατος, &c. In the Fukeſian Manuſcript 'tis written thus, διαζεύγνυς γέ τοι ἀφ' ἀνδρῶν τὰς γαμετὰς, τοῖς ἀνδράσιν, &c. Moreover, having parted Wives from their Husbands, he ſent them back to their Husbands. Valeſ.

[b] Καὶ ἐκεῖθ' ὅτου τε ἦν. The firſt word muſt be expunged. But the following words are maimed and corrupted, which 'tis hard to make good without the aſſiſtance of the Manuſcript Copies. Yet it may be read in this manner, ἐκεῖθ' ὅτου τε ἦν ἐυπρεπείαν τοῖς οἰκείοις ἀπεργάσασθαι, he was unable to find out a ſatiety or ſatisfaction for his own Luſts. A little after this, the reading in the Fukeſian and Sr Henry Savils Copy is, Πρῶτον γὰρ τῶν, &c. For they choſe ſooner, &c. Valeſ.

For they choſe ſooner to expoſe their lives [c] to death, than ſuffer their Bodies to be vitiated by him.

[c] Τὴν ἐπὶ θανάτῳ. It muſt, as I think, be written θανάτῳ, to death. For ſo our Euſebius expreſſes himſelf in book 8, chap. 14; where he treats concerning the wickedneſſes of Maximinus; αἱ δὲ ἐπὶ φθορᾷ ἑλκόμεναι, πρῶτον τῷ ψυχῷ θανάτῳ, ἢ τὸ σῶμα τῇ φθορᾷ παραδιδῶσιν, others, haled away to be raviſhed, were more ready to part with their lives, than yield up their bodies to be defiled. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXXIV.

How the Præfect's Wife, that ſhe might preſerve her chaſtity, laid violent hands on her ſelfe.

ONe of theſe women, wife to a perſonage of the Senatorian Order in that City, who bore the Præfecture, when ſhe underſtood that thoſe [Guards,] which the Tyrant made uſe of as his Miniſters in ſuch wickedneſſes, were ſtanding before her houſe, (this woman was a Chriſtian;) and knew, that her Husband, out of fear, had given them order to take her, and carry her away [to the Tyrant;] having requeſted that a ſhort ſpace of time might be allowed her, wherein ſhe might adorn her body in her uſuall dreſs, ſhe went in to her Chamber. And being left alone, ſhe ſheathed a Sword in her own Breaſt. And expiring immediately hereupon, ſhe left her dead Body indeed to thoſe that came to conduct her [to the Tyrant.] But, by this act of her's, which reſounds far more than any voice, ſhe has manifeſted to all men that now are and ſhall be in future Ages, that Chaſtity [a Virtue] ſo famous amongſt Chriſtians, is the only thing that is invincible, and which cannot be deſtroyed. Thus this woman behaved her ſelf.

CHAP. XXXV.

The Slaughter of the People of Rome by Maxentius.

ALL perſons therefore, both the Commonalty and the Magiſtracy, as well the Honourable as the Obſcure, ſtood in great fear of him, [when they beheld] him audaciouſly perpetrating ſuch impieties as theſe; and were ſorely afflicted with his intollerable Tyranny. And although they were quiet, and patiently bore the auſtere ſervitude [they were oppreſt with;] yet none could ſo avoid the Bloudy Cruelty of the Tyrant. For, one time, upon a very trivial pretence, he expoſed the people of Rome to the ſlaughter of his own Guards. And ſo, innumerable multitudes of the Roman people (not Scythians, nor Barbarians, but his own Citizens,) were killed with Spears and all manner of Weapons, in the midſt of the City. Moreover, 'tis impoſſible to enumerate how many ſlaughters were committed of thoſe that were Senatours, to the end a ſeizure might be made of each perſons Eſtate; infinite numbers of them being put to death at ſeverall times, for various Crimes framed [againſt them.]

CHAP.

CHAP. XXXVI.

Maxentius's Magick Arts against Constantine; and the scarcity of Provisions at Rome.

AT length, as the Complement of his impieties, the Tyrant proceeded to [exercise] the delusions of Magick Art: sometimes ripping up women great with child; otherwhiles searching into the Bowells of new-born infants: He also † killed Lyons, and performed some other Horrid Rites, to call forth the Dæmons, and repell the approaching War. For he hoped, that by these performances he should obtain Victory. Whilst he Tyrannized therefore in this manner at Rome, 'tis impossible to relate what mischievous facts he perpetrated, and [how miserably] he enslaved his Subjects: in so much that, they were reduced to such extream penury and want of necessary sustenance, * as ('tis recorded by those of our times,) never hapned at Rome, nor any where else.

† Or, Sacrificed.

* Or, As those of our age do record never to have hapned at Rome, or any where else.

CHAP. XXXVII.

The overthrow of Maxentius's Armies in Italy.

BUt Constantine, moved with compassion at all these [calamities of the Romans,] furnished himself with all manner of military provisions against the Tyranny. And when he had procured the supream God to be his Patron, and invoaked His [Son] Christ to be his Saviour and Assistant; and had set up the Victorious Trophy, to wit, the salutary Standard, before his Souldiers and Guards, he began his march with his whole Army, that by his intervention he might restore to the Romans the Liberties they had received from their Ancestours. Now Maxentius, confiding more in his Magick * Impostures, than in the Love and Affection of his Subjects, durst not so much as stir out of the City Gates; but with a multitude of Souldiers, and with innumerable Bodies of men laid in Ambushes, had fortified every place, Region, and City, which were under the pressures of his Tyranny. But the Emperour [Constantine] depended upon Divine assistance, and having attacked the Tyrant's first, second, and third Body, and with ease routed them all at the very first charge, he opened himself a passage into the greatest part of the Country of Italy.

* Or, Devices.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

Maxentius's Death on the Bridge of the River Tiber.

AND he had now made his approaches very near to Rome it self. But least he should be constrained to assault all the Romans for the Tyrant's sake only, God himself drew the Tyrant (as it were with Cords) a great way out of the Gates: and effectually confirmed the truth of those Miracles ([a] Recorded in the everlasting Monuments of the Sacred Scriptures, which though they are accounted fabulous by many persons, and are not credited, are nevertheless believed by the Faithfull;) he had wrought in times past against the wicked, to all in generall, Believers as well as Infidells, who with their own eyes saw this Miracle we are about to relate. For, as heretofore in the days of Moses and the old religious Nation of the Jews, God cast the Chariots of Pharaoh and his Army into the Sea, and drowned his Chosen Captaines in the Red-Sea: after the same manner Maxentius with the Souldiers and Guards that were about him, were cast into the deep like a stone; at such time as, having been put to flight by that Divine power which gave assistance to Constantine's Arms, he would have past the River that was in the way before him. Over which he having laid a Bridge of boats well fastned together, had thereby framed an Engin of destruction against himself, being in hopes that the [Emperour] beloved by God might have been caught in this snare: but the God whom he worshipped was present with, and gave him his assistance. But the wretched Maxentius, [b] deprived of his aid, framed these secret machines against himself. On which account these words may be pertinently spoken of him; wherefore, * He he hath graven and digged up a pit, and is fallen himself into the destruction that he hath made. His travell shall come upon his own head, and his wickedness shall fall on his own pate. Thus therefore, by God's assent, the Machines framed upon the Bridge of Boats, and the Ambuscade placed in them [being disjoyned] at a time in no wise expected, the passage began to sink, and the Boats together with the men in them descended on a sudden to the bottom [of the River.] And in the first place the Wretch Himself, then the Protectors and Guards that were about him, as the Divine Oracles have predicted, sank down like Lead into the deep waters. So that [Constantine's Souldiers] who by Divine assistance then obtained the Victory, in such sort as the Israelites heretofore did who were lead by that eminent servant of the Lord Moses, might deservedly have sung and repeated (though not in words exactly the same, yet in reality) [some of] those expressions which they heretofore did against that impious Tyrant [Pharaoh,] in this manner: * We will sing unto the Lord, for he hath been magnificently glorified. The Horse and his Rider hath he thrown into the Sea. [My] helper and defender is become my salvation. And again, who is like unto thee, O Lord, amongst the Gods? Thou hast been glorified in the Saints, admirable in glories, doing wonders.

[a] In Robert Stephens's Edition there was a whole line wanting here, which we have supplied from the Fuketian, Savilian, and Turnebian Copies. But 'twas easie to have made up this defect, without Manuscript Copies, from book 9. chap. 9. of Eusebius's Eccles. History. Vales.

[b] Ὁ δὲ ἀνὸ. In Morau's Copy the last word is expunged, as superfluous. But I am afraid that some words are wanting here. Sr Henry Savil, at the margin of his Copy, notes that 'tis to be made good thus, τῆς τότε βοηθείας of his aid, or some such like expression. In the Copy of Hadrian Turnebus 'tis mended in this manner, ὁ δὲ ἄτης, But that madman; but this emendation is written in a more modern hand, to wit, the hand of Odo Turnebus: For Hadrianus had expunged the word ἀνὸ as superfluous. Vales.

* Psal. 7. 15, 17.

* Exod. 15. 1, 2, 11.

CHAP. XXXIX.

Constantine's Entry into Rome.

AFter Constantine, who at that time imitated that Great servant of God Moses, had in reality sung these and other such like Hymns as these, in praise of God the Governour of all things, and the Authour of Victory; he made his entry into the Imperial City in Triumph. And immediately all persons, as well those of the Senatorian as them of the Equestrian Order in that City, being freed from the confinement of a Prison as 'twere, together with the whole Roman Populace, received him with a joy in their * Countenances that proceeded from their very Souls, with acclamations and a gladness insatiable. And the men, together with the women, children, and infinite numbers of servants, stiled him a Redeemer, a Saviour, and a Benefactour, with Voices that could not be silenced. But he, possest of a piety towards God naturally implanted in him, was neither swelled with pride at these Shouts, nor elevated at these commendations. But being sensible of that assistance which God had given him, he forthwith rendred a Thanksgiving to the Authour of his Victory.

* Or, Eyes.

CHAP. XL.

Concerning the Statue of Constantine which held a Cross; and concerning its Inscription.

[a] AND with a Loud Voice and by Inscriptions He made known to all men the Salutary Standard; by erecting this Great Trophy against his Enemies in the midst of the Imperial City, [b] and by plainly Engraving this Salutary Standard, which is the preservative of the Roman Government and of the Empire of the whole world, with indelible Characters. He issued out therefore an immediate order, that an high Spear made in the form of a Cross, should be placed under the hand of his own likeness expresst in a Statue set up in the most publick and frequented place of the City Rome, and that this very inscription in the Latine Tongue should be cut upon it: [thus Englished;]

BY THIS SALUTARY SIGN WHICH IS THE ‖ COGNIZANCE OF TRUE VALOUR, I HAVE DELIVERED AND FREED YOUR CITY FROM THE SLAVISH YOAK OF THE TYRANT. AND HAVE SET AT LIBERTY THE SENATE AND PEOPLE OF ROME AND RESTORED THEM TO THEIR ANCIENT SPLENDOUR AND DIGNITY.

[a] Γραφῇ τε μεγάλῃ, with a great Picture. In Eusebius's Panegyrick on Constantine's Tricennalia, the reading is φωνῇ τε μεγάλῃ and with a Loud Voice; which in my judgment is to be preferred. Further, at these words I began a new chapter, following the Authority of the King's and Fuketian Manuscripts; to which agree the old Sheets. Valesius.

[b] Διαῤῥήδην δὲ. The reading is truer in the Panegyrick, διαῤῥήδην τε, and by plainly Engraving, &c. A little after this, the Fuketian and Savilian Manuscripts add a word in this manner, φυλακτήριον ἀποδέδειχεν, which he hath demonstrated to be the preservative, &c. Valesius.

‖ Or, True Cognizance of Valour.

CHAP. XLI.

The rejoycings over the Provinces, and Constantine's Acts of Grace.

THE Pious Emperour having in this manner adorned himself with the Confession of the Victorious Cross, with all imaginable freedom of Speech made known the Son of God to the Romans. And all persons inhabiting the City, as well the Senate as the people, in regard they had been eased of a bitter and Tyrannick Government, seemed in their own judgments to enjoy purer Rays of light, and to * enter upon a certain new life as 'twere. All those nations also which are bounded with the Western Ocean, freed from those mischiefs wherewith they had been before oppressed, celebrated Festivalls with the greatest cheerfullness, and continued to applaud [Constantine, and give him the Titles of] Victour, Pious, and The Common Benefactour. And with one voice and one mouth, all persons acknowledged he was a Common Good * bestowed on men by God's favour and benignity. Moreover, the Emperour's ‖ Letters were fixt up in all places, which allowed an enjoyment of their own Estates to those who had had their Goods taken from them, and recalled to their own Houses such as had undergone an unjust Exile. And those persons were freed from Bonds, all manner of danger, and fear; who by a Tyrannick Cruelty had layn under these sufferings.

* Or, Partake of a Regeneration of a fresh and new life.

* Or, Shown to.

‖ Or, Edict was.

CHAP. XLII.

The Honours conferred on the Bishops, and the Building of the Churches.

MOreover, the Emperour personally invited God's Ministers to himself, and vouchsafed them the highest [a] Veneration and Honour; to whom he gave a kind and courteous Reception, as well by deeds as words, in regard they were persons consecrated to his God. There were admitted therefore to his own Table, men who as to their outward [b] Garb indeed and Dress seemed despicable, but they were not accounted such by him: For he was not for viewing the outside of a man, which is visible to the eyes, [c] but was pleased to look upon God himself.

[a] Θεραπείας ὡς διὰ πολλῶν. I think it must be made, θεραπείας τε καὶ τιμῆς, Veneration and honour. Turnebus in the margin of his Copy had mended it, θεραπείας καὶ τιμῆς, &c; and so 'tis written in the Fuketian Manuscript. In the Kings Sheets the adverb ὡς is blotted out, and in its place αὐτοὺς them is written above. Valesius.

[b] Τῇ τοῦ σχήματος ὀφθῆναι πολυτελείᾳ. At this place σχῆμα signifies not the countenance and form, as Christophorson thought, but the Garb and Dress. Wherefore I have expresst both in my Rendition; which I afterwards found had been done by Portesius also. The Garb and Dress of Prelates was at that time very mean, as Amm. Marcellinus attests in his 27th Book, where he speaks concerning Damasus and Ursinus. Gregory Nazianzen also, in the Funerall Oration he wrote concerning the praises of Basilius, says that he, whilst he was Bishop of Cæsarea, was clad in a mean Cloak, which he terms ῥάκος. Valesius.

[c] Τὸν θεὸν δὲ ἐποπτεύειν ἐδόκει. In the Kings Sheets this place is supplied in the margin, in this manner, τὸν δὲ ἐν ἑκάστῳ πιῶνον ἐποπτεύειν ἐδόκει θεὸν, but was pleased to behold God honoured in each person. But the reading is shorter in the Fuketian and Savil. Manuscripts thus, τὸν δὲ θεὸν ἐποπτεύειν ἐδόκει αὐτὸν, but was pleased, or, thought good to look upon God himself. Valesius.

And

And these persons he carried along with him, which way so ever he made a journey; being fully perswaded, that that God whom they worshipped, would [d] for this very reason be propitious to him. Moreover, he gave very * large and plentifull † Benefactions to the Churches of God out of his own Treasury; partly enlarging the Oratories, and raising them to an height; and partly adorning the august || Sacraria of the Churches with many consecrated Gifts.

[d] Κὰν τούτῳ. I had rather write κ' ἐπὶ τούτῳ, that is, for this Reason. Valesius.

* Or, Rich.

† Or, Assistances.

|| Or, Chappells, or, Vestries of the Church.

CHAP. XLIII.

Concerning Constantine's Beneficence towards the Poor.

[a] In the King's and Fuketian M. SS. and in the old Sheets, the Chapter begins at these words. Valesius.

[a] HE likewise made various distributions of money to the indigent. Besides, he shewed himself humane and beneficent even to [b] Extraneous persons who made their addresses to him. And to those Wretches and Abjects, who beg'd in the Forum, he [gave] not only money, and necessary food; but provided them decent garments also to cover their Bodies. But, on those, who had heretofore lived well, and by a change of * Fortune had afterwards faln into great Calamities, he bestowed larger and more plentifull allowances. And with a mind truly Royall, conferred on such persons as these, magnificent Benefactions; to some of whom he gave possessions of Lands; and honoured others of them with various dignities. He took a care, nothing inferior to that of a Father, of those fal'n into the calamities of † Orphancy: and relieved the destitute and forlorn condition of widdows, by cherishing them with his own patronage and protection. Moreover, he match't young Virgins made Orphans by the loss of their Parents, to rich men and such as were known to himself. And this he did, when he had before hand bestowed on the Virgins [c] marrying, whatever it was fitting they should bring to such persons as took them to wife. [In fine,] [d] as the Sun, when it rises upon the earth, does liberally impart the Rayes of its Light to all men: in the very same manner Constantine, going out of his Imperial Pallace early in the morning, || and rising as 'twere together with that celestiall Luminary, imparted the Rayes of Light of his own [e] Beneficence to all those who approacht his presence. Nor did ever any person come near to him, who gained not something of good: neither were they ever frustrated of their good hope, who had expected to receive assistance from him.

[b] Καὶ τοῖς ἔξωθεν. He means the Heathens, who were ἔξω τῆς ἐκκλησίας without the Church. And this is confirmed from the following Chapter, where his words are these; Κοινῶς μὲν ἦν πρὸς ἅπαντας ἡμῖν τοιοῦτος. ἐξαίρετον δὲ τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ, such was his behaviour towards all persons in generall. But his, &c. The like expression we meet with in Book 2, at the close of the 21, and beginning of the 22 chapters. Valesius.

* Or, Life.

† Or, Wanting Father and Mother.

[c] Τὰς γαμουμένους. Christophorson renders it ill, nuptas, married: for, not those that are married, but them who are marrying bring a Portion to their Husbands. The same Christophorson has committed the like mistake, in rendring the word τελευτῶντας dead, as we have noted at Euseb. Eccles. Hist. book 10. chap. 8. note (c.) Valesius.

|| Ὥσανεὶ σωματοειδῶν τῷ κατ' ἐφοδὸν φωτὶ; which words Valesius renders thus, ac cum cælesti soli subare quodammodo exoriens, and rising in a manner with a celestial beam of the Sun.

[d] In the King's Manuscript, at the side of these words, this mark is set, ὡρ. which mark seems to me to denote, ὡραῖον λόγον seu τόπον, an elegant expression, or, place. Valesius.

[e] Καλοκαγαθίας. Eusebius uses this term to signifie benignity or beneficence. So he has also used this word in the tenth book of his Hist. Valesius.

CHAP. XLIV.

How he was present at the Synods of Bishops.

SUch was his behaviour towards all persons in generall. But his care of the Church of God was signal and eminent: [For] when some persons in several Provinces differed one with another; like some Common Bishop constituted by God, he convened Synods of God's Ministers: Nor disdained he to be present and sit with them in the midst of their Congress; but made himself an Associate in reference to the matters inquired into, and ministred to all persons those things which have relation to the peace of God. Further, he sate in the midst of them, as one amongst many; and would send off his Protectours, his Armed men, and all the Guards of his Body; but he was covered with the fear of God, and surrounded with the dearest affection of his [a] Faithfull friends. And when he perceived any persons inclinable to acquiesce in an opinion that was sounder and better, and disposed to a quiet and agreeing temper of mind; he approved highly of such men, and shewed himself extraordinarily pleased at the unanimous consent of all. But he had an aversion for those that were opinionative and not to be perswaded.

[a] Πιστῶν ἑταίρων. At this place Eusebius does not term them faithfull, who were true-hearted and well-affected towards the Emperour, as the Translatours thought: but he styles the Christians so. For Constantine, in regard he was a most Religious Emperour, when ever he was present at the Councills of Bishops, was wont to send off all his Guards, and took with him only those of his Courtiers, who had been instructed in the mysteries of the Christian Faith. Valesius.

CHAP. XLV.

In what manner he bore with the * Madmen.

* That is, The Donatists.

MOreover, he patiently bore with some persons who were exasperated [a] against him; commanding such men in expressions that were sedate and mild, to behave themselves with prudence and modesty, and not to raise Seditions. Some of these people, revering his admonitions, desisted [from being obstinate and perverse.] But he let alone others of them, who were incurable in reference to their being brought to a soundness of mind, and committed them to God; having at no time designed any thing of severity against any one of them. Hence it hapned, (as 'tis probable,) that [b] those who had raised a Sedition in the Region of the Africans, proceeded to such an height of wickedness, that they attempted some audacious facts; [c] the Devill (as 'tis likely,) envying that plenty of the present blessings, and inciting those men to absurd practises, that he might incense the mind of the Emperour against them.

[a] Κατ' αὐτοῦ τεχνωμένους, exasperated against them. Doubtless it must be written κατ' αὐτῶν against him, as the reading is in the King's and Fuketian Manuscripts: which emendation I found written also in Moræus's Copy. In the old Sheets likewise 'tis mended in the same hand. Valesius.

[b] He means the Donatists, of whose boldness and insolence many passages occur in Optatus and Augustinus. Concerning the beginning and progress of which Schism throughout Africa, we have made many remarks not taken notice of by others, and have designedly placed them at the close of these notes. Valesius. See Valesius's notes on Eusebius, pag. 289, &c.

[c] In the Kings Sheets, this place is thus supplied in the margin, πονηρὸς πρὸς ὡς ἔοικε δαίμων, some wicked devil (as 'tis likely;) which is more elegant. Valesius.

But he reapt no advantage by his envy; in regard the Emperour accounted what was done to be [d] ridiculous, and affirmed that he acknowledged it the incitation of the Devil. For [he said] that those were not the actions of sober persons, but of such as were either altogether mad men, or stimulated by the wickedest of Devils: which sort of people ought to be pitied, rather than punish't. [For it would not be such an height of justice to be incited] [e] against the fury of mad men, as 'tis a transcendency of Humanity to compassionate their condition.

[d] Eusebius makes use of too soft a term. For those things which were then done by the Donatists in Africa, were such, as not to deserve laughter, but animadversion rather. For, both the sanctity of Religion, and the authority likewise of the Emperour himself, were most insolently trampled on by those persons. But perhaps Eusebius at this place meant only those matters which had a reference to the contempt of the Imperial Majesty. For Constantine could dissemble those things, and might think them worthy of laughter, rather than trouble of mind. But he was resolved most severely to revenge what those Donatists did against God and the observancy of the Catholick Law, and on that design determined to pass over into Africk, as he himself writes in his Letter to Celsus Vicar of Africa. Vales.

[e] Περὶς τῆς ΔΔ ἀφεγνόντων. Before these words is to be set an Asterisk. For some words are wanting, which in my judgment may be supplied in this manner: ἃ γὰρ τοσοῦτον δικαιοσύνης ὑπερβολὴ ἂν εἴη τὸ ἐρεθίζεσθαι περὶς τῆς ΔΔ, &c. which we have expreſt in our Version. Chriſtophorſon and S^r Henry Savil made good this place otherwiſe. In the Kings Sheets this place is thus made up in the margin; αὐτὸν δὲ κατ' μηδένα τρόπον ζημιῶσαι περὶς τῆς ΔΔ ἀφεγνόντων μανίας. But, that he would in no wiſe inflict puniſhment on the fury of mad-men. But the words immediately following do reject this conjecture, In the Fuketian Manuſcript this place is written thus; ὅσον γὰρ τὸ συμπαθεῖν αὐτοῖς ὑπερβολὴ φιλανθρωπίας τοσοῦτο τὸ κολάζειν, ἀνδρῶν ἀφεγνόντων ἀνοίας ἂν εἴη, καὶ ὑ φρενούντων ὀρθῶς. The ſame alſo is the reading in Turnebus's, and S^r Henry Savils Copy. But this reading ſeems to me to have iſſued from the conjecture of the Tranſcriber. Valeſ.

CHAP. XLVI.

His Victories over the Barbarians.

THus the Emperour in all his Actions worſhipped God the Inſpectour of all things, and [a] with an indefatigable ſollicitude made proviſion for his Churches. But God rewarded him, and ſubdued almoſt all Barbarous Nations under his feet; in ſo much that he erected Trophies in all places againſt his Enemies. He proclaimed him Conquerour amongſt all men; and rendred him formidable to his Enemies and adverſaries; although naturally he was no ſuch man; [b] but rather the mildeſt, meekeſt, and moſt compaſſionate perſonage of all Mortalls what ever.

[a] Ἀτρωτον ἐπιεῖτο τῷ ΔΔ ἐπιμελείαν αὐτῶ προνοιαν, made an invulnerable proviſion for his Churches. Although th's term ἄτρωτον may be fitly made out concerning Conſtantine, whoſe mind could never be exulcerated and provok't by the madneſs of the Donatiſts and other Hereticks of the ſame ſtamp; yet at this place I had rather write ἄτρυτον. For, in my judgment, it cannot well be ſaid, ἄτρωτον ἐπιεῖτο τῷ προνοιαν, he made an invulnerable Proviſion. But on the contrary, the term ἄτρυτον will be uſed moſt elegantly: that is, he made an indefatigable Proviſion, &c. So in book 2. chap. 14. ἄϋπνον ἐπιεῖτο τῷ ὑπὲρ ΔΔ κοινῶν φροντίδα, he exerciſed a ſleepleſs or watchfull care over the publick. Valeſ.

[b] Ἡμερώτατόν τε. It muſt be written ἡμερώπαλον δὲ, but rather the mildeſt; as 'tis in the King's and Fuk. Manuſcripts. Valeſ.

CHAP. XLVII.

The Death of Maximin and others, whoſe Plots Conſtantine diſcovered, God making them known to him.

IN the interim that he was doing theſe things, the [a] ſecond of thoſe two perſons who had reſigned the Empire, framed a deſign to cut off Conſtantine; and being diſcovered, ended his life by a moſt ignominious death. And [b] this was the firſt perſon, whoſe Pictures, Statues, and what ever other Monuments are uſually erected in honour of the Emperours, were defaced and thrown down in all parts of the world, in regard he was an impious and wicked wretch. After this man, other perſons alſo related to him, who were contriving ſecret Plots [against Conſtantine,] were detected; God himſelf in a moſt miraculous manner being the diſcoverer of all their deſigns to his ſervant, by Viſions. For he frequently vouchſafed him his own preſence, the Divine Likeneſs appearing to him in a moſt wonderfull manner, and ſuggeſting to him all manner of foreknowledge in relation to future affairs. Indeed, the Miracles [ſhown him] by divine Grace, are inexpreſſible; nor is it poſſible for a Narrative to comprehend, what great bleſſings God himſelf vouchſafed to afford his Servant. With which he was ſurrounded, and ſpent the reſidue of his life in Repoſe and Safety; highly pleaſed at the benevolence and good affection of his Subjects; rejoycing becauſe he ſaw all thoſe under his Government leading peaceable and chearfull lives; but above all, extraordinarily delighted with the ſplendour and flouriſhing condition of God's Churches.

[a] He means Maximianus Herculius. For he had obtained the 2^d place in the Empire; and when he had framed Plots againſt Conſtantine, being detected, he ended his life with an halter. Beſides, the following words, wherein Euſebius tells us his Pictures and Statues were thrown down and defaced, do evidently ſhew, that Maximianus Herculius is meant here. Which if true, Euſebius hath committed a moſt foul miſtake here, in relating Herculius's death after the Victory over Maxentius: when as 'tis certain, that Maximianus Herculius ended his life two years before the defeat and deſtruction of Maxentius, on the year of Chriſt 310. But who can believe, that Euſebius, who was contemporary with theſe times, could have been guilty of ſo great a miſtake? Beſides, the Title of this chapter gives us the name, not of Maximianus, but of Maximinus. Therefore, I am eaſily induced to believe, that this place is corrupted, and that it ought to be mended thus, ΔΔ εἰς βασιλείαν προχειρισθέντων ὑπὸ ΔΔ τῶν ἀρχὴν ἀποθεμένων ὁ δεύτερος, the ſecond of thoſe perſons that were choſen into the Empire by thoſe who had reſigned the Government: that ſo, Maximinus may be meant here, who together with Severus was made Cæſar by Diocletian and Maximian, at ſuch time as they reſigned their purple, as Idatius writes in his Faſti. And thus the order of the times will proceed right in Euſebius. For Maximinus ended his life after the overthrow of Maxentius, and by a moſt ignominious ſort of death too, as Euſebius relates, Eccleſ. Hiſt. book 9. chap. 10. Valeſ.

[b] Πρὸς δὲ τούτῳ. I read πρῶτος δὲ τούτῳ, this was the firſt perſon; from book 8. chap. 13. of his Eccleſ. Hiſtory; where this whole place occurs almoſt in the ſame words. Further, what Euſebius ſays hapned firſt of all to Maximianus Herculius, that his Pictures and Statues ſhould in all places be thrown down, ought not to ſeem ſtrange to any one. For we muſt underſtand this in the ſame manner, as where he tells us that Conſtantius Chlorus was the firſt Emperour that was deified. He means he was the firſt of thoſe Emperours which he had ſeen. But if any one had rather underſtand theſe words concerning Maximinus, he has Euſebius to defend his Opinion, who in the laſt chapter of his ninth book atteſts in expreſs words, that all Maximin's Statues and Pictures were broken after his death. Valeſ.

CHAP. XLVIII.

The Celebration of Conſtantine's Decennalia.

WHilſt he was in this condition, the Tenth year of his Empire was compleated. On which account he celebrated publick and ſolemn Feſtivalls, and put up Thankſgivings, like ſome pure ſacrifices without fire and ſmoak, to God the ſupream King. With which [Holy Exerciſes] he was highly delighted; but [he was not ſo well pleaſed] with the account brought him by thoſe Meſſengers, from whom he received advice, concerning the Ruine of the Provinces in the Eaſt.

CHAP.

CHAP. XLIX.

In what manner Licinius afflicted the East.

[a] At these words a chapter is begun in the Fuketian Manuscript, and in the old Sheets. Valef.

FOr, [a] a certain Savage Beast, he was told, had beset both the Church of God there, and the rest of the Provincialls also; the most impure Devil, enraged with emulation as 'twere, striving to do the quite contrary to those things performed by the pious Emperour. In so much that, the Roman Empire, divided into two parts, seemed to all men to be like the night and the day. For, a darkness involved the Inhabitants of the East: but a most bright day enlightned those who dwelt in the * Western parts. Whose enjoyment of those innumerable Blessings procured them by God, was an intollerable spectacle to the Envy of the Devil that hater of good: nor did the Tyrant, who oppressed the other part of the world, think that fit to be born with. Who seeing the affairs of his Empire succeeding prosperously, and being vouchsafed an affinity by marriage to so great an Emperour as Constantine was, relinquished the imitation of that pious Prince, and strove to embrace the instructions and wicked Moralls of the Impious. And he made it his business, rather to follow their advices, whose calamitous end he had been an eye-witness of, than [b] to continue in a friendship and amity with him that was his Better.

* Or, Other part.

[b] This place must be made up from chapter 8. book 10, of his Eccles. History; whence also the following chapter is to be mended. Valef.

CHAP. L.

In what manner Licinius attempted to frame Treacheries against Constantine.

* Or, Traiterous.

HE raises therefore an * irreconcileable War against his Benefactour; without calling to mind the Laws of friendship; not considering his Oaths, his affinity, or the Leagues [that were between them.] For, the most Benigne [Constantine,] that he might give him the surest evidence of his sincere Benevolence and affection, made him partaker of his own paternall Lineage, and of that Imperiall bloud he drew from his Ancestours, by matching his Sister to him; and permitted him to enjoy the Colleague-ship of the whole Roman Empire. But Licinius's thoughts were contrary hereto, being taken up in contriving Machinations and ill-designes against his Better; inventing various sorts of * Treacheries successively, that with mischiefs he might reward his Benefactour. And at the beginning he pretended friendship, and performed all things with deceit and fraud; hoping that his audacious designs might be kept concealed. But God discovered those Treacheries of his, hatch't in darkness, to his Servant [Constantine.] Whereupon Licinius, because detected in his first attempts, betook himself to second frauds; sometimes pretending friendship; at others, procuring himself belief [by the Religion] of Oathes and Leagues: then on a sudden he would violate what he had agreed to; and again, would crave pardon by an Embassie; after which he would render himself infamous by Lyes. But at length he proclaimed open War; and, instigated by a desperate madness of mind, took a resolution in future to bear Arms against God himself, of whom he well knew the Emperour [Constantine] was a Worshipper.

* Or, Menaces.

CHAP. LI.

Licinius's Treacheries against the Bishops, and his prohibitions of Synods.

AND in the first place, with great closeness and subtlety he made a strict inquiry into those Ministers of God that lived under his Dominions, who had never committed any Crime against his Government; by hunting out Various Calumnies against them. And when he could not furnish himself with any the least offence of theirs, nor had [any pretext] wherewith he might blame these men; he issued forth a Law, whereby he commanded, that the Bishops should in no wise * confer one with another in any place what ever, nor should it be Lawfull for any one of them to go into the Church of his neighbour; nor to convene Synods, nor Councills; or to consult about matters that were usefull and advantagious. Now, this gave him an occasion of vexing and disquieting us. For, if those of our Religion transgrest that Law of his, they were oblieged to undergo punishment; but, if they paid an obedience to this his Order, of necessity they must enervate the Laws of the Church. For, 'tis impossible that the more momentous † Controversies should by any other means be composed and rectified, than by Synods. And thus this [Tyrant] highly odious to God, because he studied in all things to contradict the pious Emperour, issued out such Orders as these [in reference to us Christians.] For Constantine called together God's Priests, in [a] honour to those consecrated persons, and for the promoting of mutuall Peace and Concord. But Licinius, attempting to abrogate whatever was well constituted, endeavoured to || disturb the harmonious agreement [of the Churches.]

* Or, Hold communication.

† Matters of consideration, or, debates.

[a] Τῇ περὶ τὸ ἱερωμένον τιμῇ. Turnebus at the margin of his Copy hath mended it, τῇ περὶ τὸ ἱερωμένον. And this reading I found in Moræus's Copy also. But I had rather write, περὶ τῇ τῶν ἱερωμένων τιμῇ, in honour to those consecrated persons. For Eusebius gives reasons, why the Emperour Constantine would ever and anon convene Synods of Bishops. The first reason, says he, was, that he might give honour to Gods Priests when assembled together. Secondly, that he might establish Peace and Concord amongst them. 'Tis certain, Eusebius does usually term The Priests τοὺς ἱερωμένους, as it frequently occurs in these books. But if, with Turnebus, we would rather read περὶ τὸ ἱερωμένον, then it must be made τῆς τιμῆς, that the discourse may agree with what follows; and τὸ ἱερωμένον must be taken for Religion it self; which is more uncouth. For I had rather express it thus, τῇ περὶ τὸ ἱερὸν νόμου τιμῇ, in honour to the sacred Law. Valef.

|| Dissipate, or, tear insunder.

CHAP. LII.

The Banishments and Proscriptions of the Christians.

AND because Constantine, who was God's friend, vouchsafed the servants of God admission into his Imperial Pallaces; the Enemy of of God Licinius, whose Sentiments were quite contrary hereto, [a] drove all God's Worshippers, who lived under his Dominions, from his Imperial Pallaces; and sent into Banishment those persons in his Court that were faithfullest and best-affected to him. And such persons as for their former brave actions had received from him honour and dignities, them he ordered to serve others, and to perform servile Offices. And when he had seized upon the Goods of every one of them, as if they had been some unhop't-for Gain; at last he threatned [to punish] those with death, who assumed to themselves the salutary name [of Christians.] [b] Further, whereas he himself possest a mind that was incontinent and lustfull, and committed infinite Adulteries, and the most infamous Acts of obscenity; [c] it was his Sentiment that no man could be chast and continent; * and thus, from his own distemper he past an ill judgement upon the Nature of mankind in generall.

[a] Eusebius in his Chronicon, at the fourteenth year of Constantine, says thus; Licinius drives the Christians from his own Pallace. Orosius says the same in book 7. but in a disturbed order of affairs and times, in regard he relates that before the Cibalensian War, which War happned on the eighth year of Constantine's Empire. For there were two Civil Wars between Constantine and Licinius. The first War, wherein Licinius was vanquished at Cibalis in Pannonia, hapned on the year of Christ 314. The reasons of which War are Recorded by no other Writer, that I know of, but the Authour of the Excerpta de Gestis Constantini, which I have long since published at the end of Amm. Marcellinus; see pag. 473. But the latter War was that, wherein Licinius was routed near Hadrianople, and at length compelled to a surrendry of himself on the year of Christ 324. Eusebius has made no mention of the former War; for this reason perhaps, because Licinius as yet had not raised Persecution against the Christians. For Licinius undertook to persecute the Christians long after that first War, to wit, on the fourteenth year of Constantine's Empire, as 'tis Recorded in Scaliger's and Miræus's Edition of Eusebius's Chronicon, that is on the year of Christ 320. The same year occurs in Cedrenus's Chronicon. But Baronius relates, that Licinius raised Persecution against the Christians on the year of Christ 316. But in Baronius's Annalls, the History of both the Wars against Licinius is very much confused, and must be amended, partly from Idatius's Fasti, and partly from the Gesta Constantini heretofore published by me. 'Tis certain, Sozomen (book 1. chap. 7.) attests in expres words, that Licinius undertook to persecute the Christians after the Cibalensian War. Valesius.

[b] From these words a new Chapter ought to have been begun. For these words belong to Licinius's second Law. Further, the expression εἰς ἐκκλήμψον, which occurs in the Contents of Chap. 53, seems to be faulty, and put instead of εἰς ἐκκλησίαν, in the Church. And yet 'tis strange, that both in the King's Manuscript, and in the old Sheets, the reading is constantly, εἰς ἐκκλήμψον συναίξεως. Although in the old Sheets 'tis mended in the same hand, εἰς ἐκκλησίας μὴ συναίξεως. But in the Fuketian Manuscript 'tis excellently written thus, εἰς ἐκκλησίας ἀνδράσιν ἅμα μὴ συναίξεως, should not meet in the Churches together with the men. Valesius.

[c] Or, He despaired of finding the Ornament of Chastity amongst men. Valesius thinks it should be written and pointed thus, τῆς γὰρ ἀνθρώπων ἀπεγίνωσκε φύσεως, ἐλέγχῳ κακῷ χρώμενος; He despaired of the nature of men, making use of an ill argument.

* Or, He Himself making use of himself as the Brand and Reproach of Nature.

CHAP. LIII.

[Licinius's] Edict, that Women should not meet in the Churches together with the Men.

WHerefore, he made a second Law, wherein he gave Command, that the men should not be present at prayers [in the Church] of God together with the women: nor should womenkind frequent the Venerable Schools of Virtue: Lastly, that the Bishops should not deliver the Divine Precepts of Religion to women; but, that women should be made choice of, to be the Teachers of women. But whereas these things seemed Ridiculous to all persons, he invented another device for the subversion of the Churches. For, he ordered, that the solemn Assemblies of the people should be held without the Gates, in the open fields; affirming, that the fresh air without the Gates was far more commodious for crouds, than the Oratories situate within the City.

CHAP. LIV.

That he Cashiered from the Militia those who refused to Sacrifice; and forbad, that such as were shut up in Prisons should have any nourishment given them.

BUt when he perceived they would not obey him even in this; in future [he went to work] bare-fac't [as we say,] and gave order, that the [a] Civill Milice shou'd be removed from their attendance upon the * Præsidial Office, unless they were willing to sacrifice to Dæmons. [b] The Offices therefore of Magistrates throughout every Province, were emptied of pious and religious persons. And he himself, who made this Law, was deprived of the prayers of holy men, which he had bereaved himself of. What need we, [c] besides these things, make mention, in what manner he gave order, that no person should shew compassion to those afflicted in Prisons, by ministring food to them; nor, that any one should take commiseration of such as perished with Famine in their Bonds: (that is, that not so much as one good man should exist:) nor, that those who by nature it self are drawn to a compassion of their neighbours, should do any thing of good? Indeed, this was clearly the most impudent and unjustest of Laws, and far out-did the utmost ferity of Nature. To which Law there was a penalty also annext, that they who shewed compassion, should suffer the same Inflictions with those to whom they shewed it; and that such as performed Offices of Humanity, should be lyable to punishment.

* See note (b.)

[a] See what I have noted at chap. 8. book 10. of Eusebius's Eccles. History; whence these passages are transcribed almost word for word. Vales.

[b] Τῶν κατὰ πᾶν ἔθνος ἀξιωμάτων αἱ τάξεις. So the words are to be construed; which Christophorson perceived not. Indeed, in the Fuketian Manuscript, after the word τάξεις is placed a Comma. Τάξεις or τάγματα are Offices of Magistrates. For each Magistrate had his Office or Attendants. This Office was a certain Body of Officials or Souldiers, who attended on the Judges, as may be seen in the Notitia of the Roman Empire. These Offices the Greeks termed τάξεις, as I have long since remarked at the 26th book of Amm. Marcellinus, pag. 318 of my notes. The Old Glosses therefore are right, in explaining τάξις ἀρχοντος, officium, apparitio. So John Chrysostome in his first Homily on the Epistle to the Corinthians; ὃς ὁρᾶτε τοὺς παῖδας, ὅταν παίζοντες τάξιν ποιῶσι καὶ στρατιώτας, &c. Don't you see children, how when at play they make a company of Apparitours or Attendants, and Officials, &c. Vales.

[c] Τῶν ἐκτὸς μεμουσεύειν. Johannes Morinus, a Learned person who has rendred these Books into French, thought that by ἡμῖν ἐκτὸς here, the Gentiles or Heathens were meant; as if Eusebius had said, What need we make mention of the Heathens. See chap. 43, note (b.) But Christophorson renders ἡμῖν ἐκτὸς præterea, besides; as if it 'twere the same with τῶν ἐκτὸς, in which manner Eusebius expresses himself at chap. 43. Vales. Valesius renders it in the same manner with Christophorson.

CHAP. LV.

Concerning Licinius's Improbity and Avarice.

SUch were Licinius's Constitutions. But, what need we reckon up his Innovations concerning Marriages? Or his new Laws in relation tion to such as are ending their lives? Whereby he presumptuously abrogated the ancient, good, and wisely establisht Roman Laws, and instead of them introduced certain barbarous and inhumane [Ordinances.] Besides, he found out a thousand sorts of Exactions towards his Subjects. On which account, he invented * New Surveys of Lands, that he might compute a small field to be greater in measure, because of his insatiable desire after unequall Exactions. For this reason, he enrolled in his Censuall Tables the names of countrymen who were not alive, but had been dead long before; procuring to himself from hence a filthy and ignominious gain. For his sordidness had no measure; nor was his unsatiableness to be circumscribed by any Limit. Wherefore, when he had filled all his Treasuries with Gold, Silver, and immense quantities of Riches, he sighed and lamented his Poverty; his mind being disquieted with the disease of † Tantalus. [Why should I mention] what punishments of Exile he inflicted on Innocent persons? What proscriptions of Goods? What Imprisonments of men well-descended and of eminent quality; whose young wives he delivered to some impure slaves, that they might be most injuriously vitiated? How many married women, virgins, and young maids he himself attempted to force, though his Body was now rendred decrepit by age? 'Tis needless to enlarge upon these things, in regard the exorbitancy of his last Actions hath evinced his former to be triviall and in a manner nothing.

* Or, Remeasurings.

† The punishment allotted him was, as we are told, to starve in the midst of plenty.

CHAP. LVI.

That at length he undertook the raising a Persecution [against the Christians.]

IN fine, he proceeded to that height of madness, that he armed himself against the Churches; and sets upon the Bishops, whom he accounted to be his chiefest Adversaries; and look't upon them as Enemies, who were friends to the Pious and Great Emperour. On which account he sharpned his fury most especially against them, having forsaken [a] the way of sober and right reason. Nor did he take into consideration the memory of them, who had Persecuted the Christians before him, nor of those, whose Destroyer and Punisher he himself had been appointed, because of the height of those impieties at which they had arrived. Neither [did he reflect upon] what he had been an eye-witness of; then, when with his own eyes he beheld the [b] chief Authour of [our] mischiefs, whosoever he was, smitten with a scourge sent from Heaven.

[a] Τῆ σώφρονϑ. After these words, an Asterisk is to be placed. For there is an imperfection; which nevertheless may be made up from book 10. chap. 8. in this manner; τῆ σώφρονϑ ἐκτεραπεῖς λογισμῆ, declining from the way of sober reason. In the Fuk. Turneb. and Savil. Copies, the reading is τῆ σώφρονϑ παρεννεσμόϑ. Vales.

[b] He means Galerius Maximianus, who was the first Authour and Ringleader of the Christians Persecution, as Eusebius relates in book 8. of his Eccles. History. Cedrenus writes, that on the eighteenth year of Diocletian, Maximianus had raised a Persecution against the Christians, by the perswasion of one Theotecnus an Impostour. Who having forged Acts of Pilate stuft with impiety against Christ, Galerius made an establishment by an Edict, that Masters should give them to their Schollars to be learned by heart. But any one may perceive, that Cedrenus is out here, who attributes that to Galerius Maximianus, which was performed long after by Maximinus. This is an usuall mistake amongst the Greeks, to confound Maximianus with Maximinus. Vales.

CHAP. LVII.

That Maximianus having been afflicted with a Fistulous Ulcer that bred worms, wrote [a Law] in favour of the Christians.

FOr, whereas he had begun a Siege of the Churches, and was the first that had defiled his own soul with the bloud of just and religious persons; a punishment sent from God seized him: which, having made its beginning in his very flesh, proceeded even to his soul. For on a sudden an Impostume arose upon him about the midst of the privy parts of his Body; after that a Fistula in ano: and both these diseases spread incurably, and did eat into his inmost bowells. From them bred an unspeakable multitude of worms, and a most *noysom stench proceeded therefrom. For, the whole mass of flesh upon his body, by reason of that abundance of food he devoured, was grown to an immense fatness: which being then putrified, became ('t is said) an intollerable and most horrid spectacle to those that approach't him. Whilst therefore he was strugling under these many and great afflictions, at length, though late, he began to be sensible of the Villanies he had audaciously committed against the Church. After which, having made his confession to God, he stops the Persecution against the Christians; and by Laws and Imperial Edicts orders that their Churches should with all expedition be built: and commanded that the Christians themselves should perform their usuall Solemnities, and make Supplications [to God] for him.

* Or, Deadly.

CHAP. LVIII.

That Maximinus being a Persecutor of the Christians, fled away in a servile habit and hid himself.

SUch was the punishment, which the Beginner of the Persecution underwent. But this [Licinius,] concerning whom we now speak, who had been an eye-witness of these things, and by experience had had an accurate knowledge thereof; nevertheless, on a sudden forgat all; neither did he call to mind the punishment inflicted on the Former, [a] nor the revenging judgment [divine justice executed] on the Latter. Who, because he strove with the greatest earnestness imaginable, to out-do the Former in a Combat of mischiefs as 'twere, gloried in his invention of new punishments against us. For he was not satisfied with Fire, Sword, and the *Fastnings with Nails; nor with the wild-beasts and depths of the Sea. But besides all these, he himself contrived a certain new sort of punishment, and by a Law gave order, that those members whereby we perceive the light, should be destroyed. Immediately therefore, vast numbers, not only of men, but of children and women also, having had the Sights of their right eyes, and the Junctures of their feet rendred useless, partly by Iron, and partly by † Cauteries, were thrust into the Mines, there to be afflict'd with daily Labour. On which account, the just judgment ment of God not long after ſeized this perſon alſo; at ſuch time as, putting his truſt in Dæmons, whom he thought to be Gods, and confiding in innumerable Myriads of Armed men, he began an Engagement. For, being at that time † Or, Hope. deprived of the divine † aſſiſtance, he deveſted himſelf of the Imperial Habit, which in no wiſe became him; and having in a cowardly and moſt unmanly manner ſhrowded himſelf in the common crowd, * Or, Invented, * purchaſed his own ſafety by flight: after this, he abſconded in the Fields and Country Villages [clothed] in a ſervile habit, and ſuppoſed he might have kept himſelf concealed. But he could not thus avoid † Or, Of univerſall providence. the great Eye † of Providence which inſpects all things. For when he hoped his life was now in ſafety, being ſtruck with God's fiery dart, he fell proſtrate on the ground; and his whole body was in ſuch a manner conſumed by a blow given him from Heaven, that the entire * Or, Figure. * ſhew of its Priſtine beauty vaniſhed; and only his parch't bones, turned into a perfect Skeleton, like ſome Ghoſt, were left remaining to him.

[a] Οὔτε πῃ ἐπὶ τῆ ἐσχάτῃ πτωχῇ δίκην. The Preposition must be expunged. Further, this person termed the Latter is Maximinus Tyrant of the East. Vales.

* Περονῶν λαγόνες.

† Or, Scathring-Irons.

CHAP. LIX.

That Maximine, blinded by [the acuteneſs of] his Diſeaſe, * iſſued out a Law in favour of the Chriſtians. * Or, Wrote.

FUrther, when this Diſeaſe, wherewith God had afflicted him, was arrived at a greater degree of acuteneſs and vehemency, * his eyes leap't out; and falling from their proper place, left him blind: thus, by a moſt juſt ſentence he underwent the ſame puniſhments, which he had been the firſt Inventer of againſt God's Martyrs. Breathing nevertheleſs ſtill after theſe ſo calamitous miſeries, at length, though late, he alſo made an open confeſſion to the God of the Chriſtians, and declared his own oppoſitions of the Deity. He likewiſe compoſed a Retractation, in ſuch manner as the former perſon had done, and by Laws and Edicts in writing confeſt his own errour in reference to thoſe whom he thought to be Gods; atteſting, that by experience it ſelf he had found, the Chriſtians God to be the only true God. Notwithſtanding Licinius knew all this, not by the information he received from others, but from the very facts themſelves; yet wrapping up his mind within ſome thick darkneſs as 'twere, he † reſolved upon a performance of the very ſame things they had done. * See Euſeb. Eccleſ. Hiſt. book 9. chap 10. note (a.) † Or, Adhered to, or, cloſed with thoſe very Actions, or, perſons.

THE

THE SECOND BOOK OF EUSEBIUS PAMPHILUS CONCERNING THE LIFE OF THE BLESSED EMPEROUR CONSTANTINE.

CHAP. I.

Licinius's Clandestine Persecution, and his Murder of the Bishops at Amasia [a City] of Pontus.

IN this manner the forementioned [Licinius] plunged himself into the pit of the * impious. And, imitating their example to his own destruction, whose ruines by reason of their Impiety he had beheld with his own eyes, he re-kindled the Persecution against the Christians, like some raging fire long since extinguished; and blew up the flame of impiety to a greater fierceness than his predecessours had done. Moreover, (like some outragious wild-beast, or crooked Serpent rolled together about himself,) breathing forth Rage and Hostile Menaces against God, he durst not as yet commence an open War against the Churches of God within his own Dominions, because of his fear of Constantine: but concealing the venome of his malice, he contrived secret Plots, and those in some particular places only, against the Bishops; and † by calumnies framed by his Governours of Provinces, destroyed the eminentest and most approved amongst them. And the manner of murdering them was new, such as never was known before. [a] Indeed, the Facts perpetrated at Amasia [a City] of Pontus, far exceeded the most superlative Cruelty.

* Or, Rebells against God.

† Or, By the treachery of his Governours in each Province.

[a] Ταῦτ' ἴσν. It must be made τὰ γ ἴσν, from book 10. chap. 8. of his Eccles. History; where these passages occur almost word for word. Further, 'tis strange that Eusebius should have made no mention, either in his Ecclesiastick History, or in these books, of Basileus Bishop of the Amaseni: which Prelate nevertheless, as all Greek Writers do agree, was slain by Licinius's order. But Philostorgius, in the first book of his Eccles. History, writes in expres words, that Basileus Bishop of Amasea in Pontus was present at the Nicæne Councill. Further, the Nicæne Councill, as 'tis manifest amongst all men, was convened the year after Licinius's deposition. Besides, Athanasius in his first Oration against the Arians, (where he makes mention of the eminent Bishops who were either present with him at the Nicæne Councill, or had approved of his opinion;) together with others, names Basileus Bishop of Pontus. Nor does he style him Martyr, although he there terms Hosius Confessour. The Acts also of Basileus, which are extant in Metaphrastes, seem to me foolish and fabulous. And most of the passages which occur at the beginning of them, are word for word taken out of Eusebius. But that little story concerning the Virgin Glaphyra was, in my judgment, framed by some idle people. Vales.

CHAP. II.

The demolishments of the Churches, and Butcheries of the Bishops.

WHere some of the Churches, after that former * demolishment of them, were thrown down to the ground from their vast height; others were shut up by the Governours in their severall districts, least any one of those persons who usually frequented them, should meet there, or least they [a] might render

* Or, Siege.

[a] Ἀποδῶσιν ἀλιτηρίας. In the Vat. Manuscript, and in Sr Henry Savils Copy, 'tis written ἀποδοθῶσιν; in book 10. chap. 8. of his Eccles. History 'tis ἀποδοθῶ. Vales.

a due worshipp to God. For that person who issued out these orders, was of opinion, that prayers were not made there for him, being induced to entertain such thoughts as these from a consciousness of his own impieties. But he had perswaded himself, that all we did was in behalf of Constantine, and to render God propitious [to him.] Now, those [Presidents] who were his flatterers and soothed him up, being fully perswaded they should do what would be gratefull to the impious [Tyrant ;] subjected the eminentest Prelates of the Churches to capitall punishments. Therefore, harmless and innocent persons were haled away, and without any the least cause punished as if they had been Murderers. But some of them underwent a new sort of death, having their bodies cut with a sword (as Butchers do meat) into a great many pieces : and after this barbarous spectacle far more horrid than any Tragicall representation, they were thrown into the depths of the Sea to be made food for Fishes. After this therefore, persons that were worshippers of God began to flye again, in such manner as they had done a little before. And the Fields and Solitudes were again become the Receptacles of Gods servants. When the Tyrant had succeeded thus prosperously in these his attempts, he afterwards entertained thoughts of raising a generall Persecution against the Christians. And he had undoubtedly been master of his desire, nor could there have been any obstacle which might in future have hindred him from effecting it, had not [God] the defender of his own [servants,] (that he might prevent what would have ensued,) caused his servant Constantine to appear like some great Light in darkness and in a most obscure night, and led him by the hand as 'twere into these parts.

CHAP. III.

In what manner Constantine was moved in behalf of the Christians, when [Licinius] made preparations to Persecute them.

* Constantine. † Or, Account. || Or, Defence.

* WHo perceiving, that the † complaint he had received of the foresaid proceedings was not any longer to be endured, musters up a soberness and prudence of mind ; and having mixt an austerity of disposition with his own innate clemency, hastned to the || assistance of the oppressed ; judging, that that ought to be accounted a pious and holy Action, when by the taking off of one person, the greatest part of mankind is preserved. For [thus he thought with himself,] if he should make use of [a] much clemency, and should shew compassion to him who deserved no pity, it would not advantage him in the least, for he would in no wise desist from his practise of mischiefs, but would rather increase his Rage and Fury against his Subjects : nor could there be any hopes of safety in future remaining to those persons who had been afflicted by him. The Emperour having considered these things with himself, without any dilatorines resolved to stretch forth a salutary right hand to those who had faln into the bittereſt of calamities. He made therefore a * vast provision of Military Forces ; and his whole Army, as well Troops of Horse as Companies of Foot, were drawn together. But before them all were carried † the Insignia of his confidence in God, to wit, the forementioned Standard.

* Or, usuall.

† Or, The signs or Marks of his good hope in God by the &c.

[a] Πολλῆ. In book 10. chap. 9. whence this passage is transcribed, instead of πολλῆ, the reading is μόνη, clemency only ; which seems truer. I had also rather write αὐτῷ χρωμένῳ ; unless the Dative case may be taken for the Ablative put absolute. Valesius.

CHAP. IV.

That Constantine made provision for the War with Prayers ; but Licinius, with Divinations and Prophecies.

AND well knowing, that, if ever before, he now stood in need of prayers, he carried God's * Prelates along with him : it being his Sentiment, that these persons [a] like some good Guards of his Soul, ought to be always present and conversant with him. Whereupon, when he that Headed the Tyranny was informed, that Constantine obtained Victories over his Enemies by no other means than by God's assistance ; and, that the foresaid persons were alwaies present and conversant with him ; also, that the Symboll of the Salutary passion went before himself and his whole Army : he judged these things to be deservedly ridiculous ; and at the same time mock't Constantine, and revil'd him with opprobrious expressions. [b] But he himself got the Diviners and Soothsayers of the Egyptians about him, the Sorcerers and Impostours, the Sacrificers and Prophets of such as he look't upon as Gods. And when he had with sacrifices appeased those [c] whom he thought to be Gods, he enquired of them, what manner of end he was like to have of the War. They made answer with one consent, that [d] without controversie he would be the Conquerour of his Enemies, [e] and should get the better in the War ; the Oracles every where promising him this in long

* Or, Priests.

[a] Ὡσπέρ τινας ψυχῆς ἀγαθὲς φύλακας. He alludes to the word σωματοφύλακας, Guards of his Body. As therefore the Emperours had always some Souldiers with them to guard their bodies ; so Constantine would have some Bishops, who were the guards of his soul as 'twere, always present with him. Further, after the Verb ἐπείγεσθο must be placed a point, from the King's and Fuketian Manuscripts ; which Chistophorson perceived not. But, in the Fuketian, Turneb. and Savil. Copies, 'tis truer written ἐπήγετο, he carried along with him. A little after, in the Fuketian Manuscript the reading is, πυθόμενος κωνσταντῖνον τὰς κατ' ἐχθρῶν νίκας μὴ ἄλλως, ἢ τῶν θεῶν συμπρεσβευόντων ποιεῖσθαι, was informed, that Constantine, &c. which is truer in my judgment, Valesius. The reading in Robert Stephens is, πυθόμενος κωνσταντῖνῳ τὰς κατ' ἐχθρῶν νίκας μὴ δ' ἄλλως ἢ τῶν, &c.

[b] Αὐτός τε διατρέφεις. It must be αὐτὸς δὲ, But he himself. Although our Manuscript Copies have no alteration here ; save that instead of διατρέφεις, in the Fuketian Manuscript 'tis διατρέφεις ; but in the old sheets, διατρεπεῖς. Valesius.

[c] Οὓς δεῖν αὐτὸ θεὸς. It must, I think, be, ὃς δεῖ, or rather in one word, ὃς δίεγνοεῖτο, whom he thought, &c. Valesius.

[d] Ἀδειλήπτως. In the Kings Manuscript 'tis ἀνδηλήπτως. I write ἀδηλεήτως, that is, without controversie. In the Fuketian, Savil. and Turneb. Copies 'tis ἀναντρρήτως, without contradiction. Valesius.

[e] It must, as it seems, be written, καὶ πολέμου κρατῆσαι πρόλεγον, συμφώνως αὐτῷ ταῦτα μακραῖς τε ἐπῶν χαλκειρείαις ἅμ' ἀπαντα χῶ χρησμείων περιεχομένων. So this whole place is to be restored. In the Fuketian Manuscript 'tis thus written, καὶ τῶ πολέμου κρατῆσαι συμφώνως εἶπον μακραῖς ἐπῶν χαλκειρείαις ἅμ' ἀπαντα χῶ χρησμείων τῶτο περιεχομένων : which is the best reading, and we have therefore followed it in our Version. Valesius.

and

and elegant Verses. Moreover, † the Interpreters of Dreams predicted, that success was portended to him by the flying of Birds; and the † Or, Sacrifices. Auspices affirmed the like was signified by the motion of Entrail's. Elevated therefore by the fallacious promises of these persons, with great confidence he proceeded forth [g] to the Camp, and made preparations for an Engagement.

[f] Ὀνειροπόλοι δὲ. After these words, these following, διὰ τῶν ἱερῶν ὀρνίθων πτήσεως σημαίνειν ὤμπω τὰ αἴσια προλέγον. ἢ δύτα, are wanting in the Kings Manuscript, and are added in the margin in a very modern hand. If I may have leave to conjecture, I think it should be written thus, ὀνειροπόλοι δὲ ἢ δύτα τὰ ὄμοια, &c. The Interpreters of Dreams and Auspices [or, Sacrificers] affirmed the like was, &c. Turnebus in his Copy had mended it ὀιωνοπόλοι the Augures. In the Fuketian and Savil. Copies 'tis written ὀνειροπόλοι δὲ διὰ τῆς, &c. Moreover, the Interpreters of Dreams predicted, &c. Vales.

[g] Ταῖς παρεμβολαῖς. In the Fuketian Manuscript this place is written thus; σὺν πολλῷ θράσει προῆει. τὰς παρεμβολὰς ὡς οἷ τε ἦν, ἐξεπάτηδον. He proceeded forth with great confidence; pitching his Camp as well as 'twas possible. Which reading and punctation displeases not; τὰς παρεμβολὰς παρεκπάτειν signifies castrametari, to pitch a Camp, or lodge an Army. Vales.

CHAP. V.

What Licinius spake concerning Idolls and concerning Christ, whilst he was sacrificing in a Grove.

* Or, The War.

BUt when he was just about beginning * a fight, he called together the choicest of his Protectors that were about Him, and those of his Friends for whom he had an higher value, into a certain place which by them was accounted sacred. It was a well-watered and shady Grove; but in it were erected various Statues, carv'd out of Stone, of those whom he thought to be Gods. To whom after he had [a] lighted Tapers, and offered the usuall sacrifices; 'Tis reported, that he made this speech [to those that stood by him.]

[a] It was the usage of the Heathens to light Tapers before the Statues of their Gods, as may be observed from the 22 book of Amm. Marcellinus, pag. 226, of Valesius's Edition.

Friends and [b] Fellow Souldiers! These, whom we Honour, whose Adoration hath been handed down to us from our Remotest Ancestours, are our Country Gods. But he who Leads the Army opposed against us, having violated the Usages and Institutions of his Fore-fathers, has made choice of their impious opinion who believe no God; and hath erroneously embraced a certain strange God [procured] from I know not whence: And with his most filthy sign [c] disgraces his own Army. In whom having put his confidence, He comes forth and takes up Arms, not so much against us, as against those very Gods whom he hath * Or, Time. abused. This present * day therefore will evidently shew, which of Us two have erred in Opinion: and will give a judgment concerning those Gods who are worshipped by us, and of them [honoured] by the other side. For, either it will declare us Conquerours, and so most justly demonstrate our Gods to be the Saviours and true Assistants. Or else, if this one God of Constantine's who comes from I know not whence, shall get the better of our Gods, which are many, and at [d] present do exceed in number; no body in future will be in doubt, which God he ought to worship; but will betake himself to the more powerfull God, and attribute to him the Rewards of Victory. And, if this strange God, who is [e] now a Kidicule to us, shall appear to be the Victor, it will behooove us also to acknowledge and adore him, and to bid a long farewell to those, to whom we light Tapers in vain. But, if our Gods shall get the better, which no person can entertain a doubt of; after the Victory obtained in this place, we will proceed to bring a War upon those impious contemners of the Gods.

[b] Καὶ σύμμαχοι. A term improperly used by Eusebius, instead of συστρατιῶται. Vales.

[c] Καταμιαίνει. In the Fuketian Manuscript 'tis καταισχύνει; and a little after, the reading there is, ὀφθῆναι τὰ νῦν πρὸς ἡμᾶς. πολυπειρότερον δὲ, &c. He comes forth now against us; but much rather takes up Arms against those very Gods, &c. Which reading is truer, if I mistake not. Vales.

[d] Καὶ τέως τῷ πλήθει πλεονεκτοῦντων. Christophorson omitted the word τέως at present; in which term lies the whole force of the Sentence. For Licinius shews, that his Gods exceed in number at present; but in a short time will be superiour in force and power. Johannes Portesius, otherwise a silly Translatour, has not omitted the rendition of this word. For he translates it thus, Numero quidem adhuc potiores, as yet do exceed in number. A little before, I reade εἷς τις ἐστὶ, this one God; as Turnebus has mended it at the margin of his Copy. Vales.

These are the words Licinius spake a little before the Engagement, to those persons who stood round him. Which very Speech of his was not long after imparted to [f] us who have been called to this History, by those who had been ear-witnesses of his very expressions. After therefore he had made this Speech, he commanded his Forces to begin the Fight.

[e] Καὶ νῦν γελώμενος. 'Tis the same as if he should have said, ὁ χθὲς καὶ πρώην γελώμενος, who is of yesterday or the day before. The impious Licinius derides Constantine's God, because he was a strange and new God. For amongst the Gods, some were accounted patrii, Gods of the Country, others peregrini, strange Gods. The dii patrii were commended for the ancientness of their worship. But the perigrini were new Gods, in regard they were lately procured or chosen. Ciccro's words in his 2d book De Legibus, are these: Novos verò deos, & in his colendis nocturnas pervigilationes sic Aristophanes facetissimus poeta veteris comœdiæ vexat, ut apud eum Sabazius & alii quidam dii peregrini judicati è civitate ejiciantur; But the new Gods, and the watchings all night long in the worship of them, have in such a manner been disquicted by Aristophanes the pleasantest Poet of Old Comedie, that Sabazius and some other Gods having by him been judged strange, are ejected out of the City. The passage of Aristophanes, which Ciccro means, was extant in his Comedie Lemnii, as Suidas informs us in ὦ νὺν θερμοὶ βωμοί. There was indeed at Athens a vast multitude of new and strange Gods, whom they termed ξένους or ξενικοὺς θεούς. Apollophanes the Poet had put together their names and Series in his Cretensibus, as Hesychius attests in θεοὶ ξενικοί. Menander Rhetor or rather Alexander in methodo generis demonstrativi pag. 1612, observes; that some Gods were termed ancienter, others more modern, οἱ μὲν δὲ παλαιότεροι, οἱ δὲ νεώτεροι λέγονται ἥδ' ἐσῶν. But Portesius and Christopherson who has followed him, have rendred this place ill; their mistake arose from hence, because they perceived not, that the Adverb νῦν does sometimes signifie the same with nuper, lately, as I have noted at book 4. of the Ecclesiastical History chap. 8. note (d.) These remarks I had made here formerly, having followed the Geneva Edition: but afterwards I understood, that in Robert Stephens's Edition and in the Manuscript Copies the reading was, ἢ νῦν γελώμενος, who is now a Ridicule to us. Which reading the Translatours have followed, and therefore are in no wise to be blamed. Vales.

[f] Τοῖς τῶν ἱστορίαν γεγραφόσιν, to us who have been called to this History. In Moræus's Copy at the margin 'tis mended ποιησάσιν who compose; in which manner Eusebius expresses himself at chap. 8. A little before, in the same Copy of Moræus 'tis well mended μακρὰ χαίρειν τοῖς εἰπόντας, and to bid a long farwell to those: [In Robert Stephens 'tis μακρὰ χαίρειν ὕπως, &c.] In the Fuketian Manuscript I found it written, ἡμῖν δὲ τοῖς εἰς τοῦτο ἱκνουμένοις τῶν γεγραφόσιν, to us who have been called to this History; which reading is right. Vales.

CHAP. VI.

The Apparition seen in the Cities under Licinius's Government, of Constantine's Souldiers pursuing the Forces of Licinius.

WHilst these things were doing, a most wonderfull Apparition ('tis said) was seen in the Cities subject to the Tyrant. For, they thought they saw various Companies of Constantine's Souldiers, passing at noon day thorow the Cities, as if they had obtained the Victory. And these things were seen, when in reality no Body appeared; but the Divine and Superiour power, by that Vision shown to the eyes of men, foreshewed that which was ready to happen. Further, after the Armies had made ready to engage, he that had broken the League of Friendship, began the Fight first. Then Constantine, having called upon God the supream

Saviour, and given this Signall to the Army about him; got the better in the [a] first Engagement. Not long after, he was superiour in a [b] second Fight, and obtained a far greater Victory; in regard the Salutary Trophy was carried before his Army, at Cibalæ; which Zosimus describes excellently well in his Second Book: as also The Author of the Excerpta de Gestis Constantini, pag. 473. This Fight hapned when Volusianus the second time and Annianus were Consuls; on the eight of the Ides of October, as 'tis recorded in Idatius's Fasti. To whom agrees Sigonius in his third Book de Occidentali Imperio. In Eusebius's Chronicon the Cibalensian Battel is ill placed on the seventh year of Constantine, in regard that Action hapned on the eighth year of his Empire. Yea, if you compute the matter exactly, it was now the ninth year of Constantine's Empire. For, his ninth year began on the eighth of the Calends of August, Volusianus the second time and Annianus being Consuls. Aurelius Victor writes thus concerning the Wars between Licinius and Constantine. Ita potestas orbis Romani duobus quæsita. Qui quamvis per Flavii Sororem nuptam Licinio connexi inter se erant, ob diversos mores tamen anxiè tricennium congrucre quivêre, &c. Thus the power of the Roman world was gotten by two. Who though by Flavius's Sister married to Licinius they had been joyned together, yet because of their different dispositions, for three years space they could ill agree, &c. Which passage does manifestly confirm Idatius's Fasti: Otherwise, from the opinion of the Eusebian Chronicon it ought to be said, Biennium, for two years space. A passage in Eutropius's Tenth Book must also be corrected, which is commonly Printed thus. Ac primo eum in Pannonia, Secundò ingenti apparatu bellum apud Cibalas instruentem, repentinus oppressit, &c. Doubtless, the word Secundò must be expunged, which was added by some unskilfull Transcriber. For first, Constantine's first Battel against Licinius was at Cibalæ, as we have shown above. Then, it would be ridiculous to say, that the first Battel was in Pannonia, the second at Cibalæ; in regard Cibalæ is a City of Pannonia. Moreover, Pcanius who rendred Eutropius into Greek, acknowledges not that word Secundò, as appears from his Rendition. Yet Orosius (as also the Author of the Historia Miscella,) hath followed the vulgar reading in Eutropius. For his words are these; Constantinus Licinium Sororis suæ virum in Pannoniâ primùm vicit, deinde apud Cibalas oppressit. Vales.

[a] The first Battel between Constantine and Licinius was in Pannonia,

[b] This second Fight of Constantine against Licinius, hapned in Thracia, as Zosimus informs us. But Zosimus mentions not the very place: but the Author of the Excerpta de Gestis Constantini pag. 474. says 'twas fought in the Campus Mardiensis: which place is equally unknown to us. Further, this Battel hapned on the same year with that at Cibalæ, as 'tis concluded from the Relation of Zosimus, and of that unknown Author. Which may also be demonstrated by this argument. After this Battel a Peace being made up between Constantine and Licinius, on the year following Constantine and Licinius were made Consuls; and in the West that year is inscribed, Constantine the Fourth and Licinius the fourth time Consuls; but in the Eastern parts Licinius's name is set first, in this manner, Licinius Augustus the Fourth and Constantine the fourth time being Cos; as it occurs in the Excerpta de Gestis Constantini. Vales.

CHAP. VII.

That in the Battels, where-ever the Standard, made in the form of a Cross, was, there a Victory was obtained.

INdeed, where-ever that [Standard] appeared, hapned a Rout of the Enemies, and a pursuit [was made] by those who had gotten the better. Which when the Emperour perceived, in what ever place he saw any party of his Army prest hard upon, thither he ordered the Salutary Trophy to be carried, as some most efficacious * Amulet to procure a Victory. After the doing whereof, a Victory followed immediately; in regard Strength and Courage was by a divine act of providence insused into those who fought.

* Or, Remedy, or, help.

CHAP. VIII.

That fifty persons were made choice of, to carry the Cross.

WHerefore, out of the Protectours that were about him, he made choice of such persons as excelled for strength of body, courage of mind, and exemplarines of piety; on whom he imposed only this of duty, that they should take an assiduous care of this Standard. [a] These persons were in number no less then fifty: on whom nothing else was incumbent, but to surround, defend, and guard the Standard; which each of them by turns carried on his shoulders. These things the Emperour himself related to us who compose this History, whilst he was in Peace and Repose, a long time after [the Transaction] of these affairs; and to his Relation he added a matter highly worthy to be recorded.

[a] These Guards to whose care Constantine committed the Labarum in Battels, Gretserus (book 2. de Cruce, chap. 40.) says are the same with those who in the Theodosian Code are termed the Præpositi Laborum, that is, τῶν λαβδρων. For the Greeks termed it λάβρον, because it was an assistance to the Labouring Companies, as Sozomen attests. Vales.

CHAP. IX.

That one of the Cross-bearers who fled, was killed; but he that by Faith stood his ground, was preserved.

FOr he said, that a dismal noise and sudden disturbance having one time put the Army into a consternation during the very heat of an Engagement, he who bore the Standard on his shoulders, was in an agony by reason of his fear; whereupon he delivered the Standard to another, to the end he might make his escape out of the fight. That other person had no sooner taken it, [a] but he who slipt away, being got without the protection of the Standard, was stuck into the belly by a Dart cast at him, and was deprived of his life. Thus this man underwent the punishment of his cowardise and infidelity, and lay dead upon the Spot. But the Salutary Trophy became the preservative of his Life who bore it. In so much that, though Darts were frequently cast at him who bore the Standard, yet he was preserved unhurt: but the Spear of the [Salutary] Trophy received the Darts. And this was a thing which far surpassed every miracle, [to see] in what manner the Enemies Darts fell upon the smallest circumference of the Spear, whereon they were fixt and stuck fast; but the Standard-Bearer was preserved from death: yea, none of those employed in this Office did ever receive a wound. This is not our relation, but the Emperour's own, who amongst other matters declared this also to us. Who, when by the power of God he had obtained the former Victories, afterwards marched forward, and moved his Army in a Military order.

[a] Ὁ δ' ὑποδὰς. The Fuk. Manuscript has opened to us the true writing of this place; wherein the reading is ὁ δ' ὑφδὰς. For I doubt not but Eusebius wrote, ὑπεκδὰς, he who slipt away. Vales.

CHAP.

CHAP. X.

Various Fights, and the Victories of Constantine.

But the Van [a] of the adverse party, not able to † stand his first Attack, cast away their Arms with both their hands, and fell prostrate at the Emperour's feet. He * saved them all, being one that was highly pleased with the preservation of men. But others of them, who continued in Arms, prepared themselves for an Engagement. To whom when the Emperour had proposed overtures, and had [b] treated them with expressions of kindness and friendship; perceiving they were not to be perswaded, he sent his Army against them. They turned their backs immediately, and betook themselves to flight. And some of them, taken in the pursuit, were slain by the Law of || Arms: but others ran one against another, and so were cut off by their own swords.

[a] Τῆς ἐναντίας ὁρμήν. The words are transposed, and are thus to be restored, τότε δὲ τῶν πρώτων ὁρμὴν οἱ τῆς, &c. as 'tis in the Fuketian Manuscript; and so we have rendred it. Valesius.

[b] Πρὸς φιλικὰς λαλήσεις. I think it must be written, φιλικὰς προσπαλήσεις προσιόχμενον, that is, blandis & amicis verbis eos compellans, treating them with kind and friendly words. Further, what Eusebius relates in this chapter, seems to belong to the first Battel in the field of Cybalæ, whereof I have spoken before. And this is confirmed by what follows. Valesius

† Or, Endure.

* Or, Received them all safe.

|| Or, War.

CHAP. XI.

Licinius's Flight, and Inchantments.

After this, when their Prince saw himself deprived of an assistance [a] from his servants, and that the vast numbers as well of Souldiers as Auxiliaries which he had gotten together, were vanished; and was experimentally convinced that the hope he had placed in those whom he thought to be Gods, was vain; he forthwith betook himself to a most inglorious flight. And in this manner he made his escape, and * secured himself from danger; because the most pious Emperour ordered his own men not to make a close pursuit after him, to the end by flying he might obtain safety. For 'twas his hope, that Licinius, made sensible of the unhappy posture of his own affairs, might at length desist from his mad boldness, and would change his opinion for thoughts that were sound and better. These were Constantine's thoughts, suggested to him from that transcendency of Humanity wherewith he was endowed; and he took a resolution patiently to bear injuries, and to give Him pardon who deserved it not. But so far was Licinius from abstaining from his pristine improbity; that he heap't mischiefs upon mischiefs, and attempted more nefarious and audacious Facts. Moreover, he betook himself again to the evill Arts and practises of Conjurers, and was more insolently emboldened. But, that saying might have † fitly been applied to him, which was spoken of that old Tyrant, to wit, God had hardned his heart.

[a] Παρὰ τῶν οἰκετῶν. Eusebius uses the term οἰκέτας in a new sense, to signifie Souldiers. Indeed, the Militia was a kind of Temporary servitude. Which Suidas tells us also, in the word βετρεάνω. Hence 'tis, that the Tyrones were marked, like Servants, with certain marks in their skin. The Missio likewise, or Military-discharge answers the Manumission or making free of Servants. With good reason therefore Eusebius terms the Roman Souldiers οἰκέτας. But if any one be displeased herewith he may easily make it τῶν οἰκείων his own men. Valesius.

* Or, Was in safety.

† Or, In like manner.

CHAP. XII.

In what manner Constantine, praying in a Tabernacle, obtained the Victory.

Licinius having therefore involved himself in such [impieties] as these, was thrust headlong into the pit of destruction. But the Emperour, when he saw there was a necessity of a [a] second Battel, diligently † applyed himself to [the worship of] his Saviour. And pitch't a [b] Tabernacle of the Cross without [his Camp,] and at a good distance from it: where he || lived chastly and purely, and poured forth his prayers to God; agreeable to the practise of that old Prophet of God; concerning whom the divine Oracles give this attestation, that * He pitch't the Tabernacle without the Camp. Some few persons, of whose Faith piety and [c] benevolence he had the most assured proofs, were continually present with him. And this he was always wont to do, as often as he was about to begin a fight. For he was slow, because he would be secure: and 'twas his constant usage to act all things by the advice of God. Further, when with great earnestness he made Supplications to his God, he was always vouchsafed the Divine presence. After which, moved as 'twere by a more Divine inspiration, he was wont to leap out of the Tabernacle, and would forthwith give order for the immediate march of his Army; and that without delay, yea even in that very hour, they should draw their Swords. His men would fall on pell-mell, and cut down all before them without any distinction of age; till such time as (having gotten a Victory [d] within a very short space,) they had erected Victorious Trophies against their Enemies.

[a] Hence it appears, that what I have noted at the tenth chapter is true; viz. that Eusebius speaks there concerning the former Battel, which was fought at Cybalæ. Valesius.

† Or, Dedicated his leasure to his Saviour.

[b] Concerning this Tabernacle which Constantine carried about with him in his expeditions, Sozomen writes in book 1. chap. 8. Valesius.

|| Or, Made use of a chast and pure diet.

* Exod. 33. 7.

[c] Εὐνοίᾳ. perhaps it should be εἰλικρινείᾳ, sincerity. Valesius.

[d] Εἰς ὥρας ἀκμαζεῖ ῥοπῆ. in the Kings Copy 'tis ἐς ὥρας. I write ἐν ὥρας ἀκμαζεῖ ῥοπῇ, within a very short moment of an hour; so I found it mended in Morus's Copy, and in the Fuketian Manuscript. A little before, instead of ἔς' ἂν, I read εἰς ὅτ' ἂν, till such time as; in which manner Eusebius does usually express himself. Valesius.

CHAP. XIII.

His Humanity towards the Souldiers that were taken Prisoners.

In this manner was the Emperour long before wont, both to behave himself, and to order his Army, before they engaged in a Battel: for he always preferred God before his own Life; and studied to perform all things by his advices; and used all imaginable caution to prevent the slaughter of many men. On which account, he consulted the safety of the Enemies no less, than that of his own Souldiers. Wherefore, he admoniſhed his own men, when they had been Victors in a Battel, to ſhew compaſſion to the vanquiſhed: and, that being men themſelves, they ought not to forget the ſame Nature which they were of. But if at any time he perceived, that the mindes of his Souldiers were greedy of ſlaughter, he repreſſed them by a Largeſs of Gold; giving order, that whoever took one of the Enemy alive, * ſhould have a certain weight of Gold beſtowed on him. And this inticement for the preſervation of mens lives, was found out by the Emperours prudence. Inſomuch that, very many even of the Barbarians themſelves were ſaved, the Emperour's Gold being the Ranſome of their Lives.

|| Or, Should be honoured with, &c.

CHAP. XIV.

Again concerning his Prayers in the Tabernacle.

THeſe, and infinite other ſuch like actions as theſe, the Emperour was wont at other times frequently to perform. But at that preſent, before he joyned Battel, he retired alone into the Tabernacle, where, as his uſage was, he was earneſt in prayers to God; abſtaining from all manner of divertiſement, and delicious food; and * macerating himſelf with faſtings, and † bodily auſterities. And in this manner he appeaſed God with Supplications and Prayers, that he might have him for his benign and propitious Aſſiſtant, and might perform thoſe things which God had ſuggeſted to his mind. Moreover, || his care in behalf of the Republick was watchfull and diligent; and he poured forth prayers, not more for the ſafety of his own Forces, than for that of his Enemies.

* Or, Afflicting.
† Or, Vexation of body.
|| Conſtantine's.

CHAP. XV.

Licinius's * diſſembled Friendſhip, and his Worſhip of Idolls.

* Or, Deceit in relation to friendſhips.

BUt becauſe Licinius (who had fled a little before,) practiſed diſſimulation, and entreated, that an amicable League might be again renewed; [the Emperour] ſuppoſing a Peace would be of uſe [to the Government,] and advantagious to mankind in general, vouchſafed to grant him even this, upon certain [a] Terms and Conditions. Licinius ſpeciouſly pretended a ready compliance with the Terms offered him, and with oaths confirmed his * adherence thereto. But he ſecretly got together another † Army of men, and reſolved to renew the War, and begin a Fight. He alſo called in the Barbarians to be his Auxiliaries; and went up and down in queſt of other Gods, becauſe he had been deceived by the former. He did not in the leaſt remember, what he himſelf had ſaid a little before, in his Speech concerning the Gods. Nor would he acknowledge that God who had been Conſtantine's Defender: but in a moſt Ridiculous manner began to enquire out for himſelf, more and thoſe newer Gods.

[a] The conditions of Peace were theſe, that Licinius ſhould continue poſſeſt of the Eaſt, Aſia, Thracia, Mœſia, and Scythia Minor; but that Dardania, Macedonia, Achaia, Pannonia, Mœtia, and Dacia ſhould be added to the Dominions of Conſtantine: this Information we have from Zoſimus, Sozomen, and the Autbour of the Excerpta de Geſtis Conſtantini. Valeſ.

* Or, Faith.
† Or, Proviſion of Forces.

CHAP. XVI.

In what manner Licinius Commanded his Souldiers, not to make an Attack againſt the [Standard of the] Croſs.

AFter this, knowing for certain, that there was a certain divine and ſecret power in the Salutary Trophy, by which power (be underſtood) Conſtantine's Army obtained Victory; he warned his Souldiers, that they ſhould by no means engage againſt it, nor by chance or [a] raſhly caſt their eyes upon it. For, that Standard (he ſaid,) was of a force incredible, and an Enemy and Adverſary to him in particular: wherefore they were to uſe great Caution, not to begin a Fight againſt it. Having given out theſe Orders, he prepared for an Engagement with * Him, who by reaſon of his † innate Clemency made delays, and deferred that Ruine which hung over him. The || Licinians, placing their confidence in a Multitude of Gods, marched forth with vaſt numbers of Forces, carrying before them, as their defence, Images of dead perſons, and inanimate Statues. But Conſtantine, ſurrounded with the * Armour of piety, againſt the multitude of his Enemies oppoſed the Salutary and Vivifick Standard of the Croſs, as ſome affrightning ſpectacle and potent preſervative againſt miſchief. And at firſt he † made an Alt; in which interim he forbore the uſe of his Arms, that he might not begin the fight firſt; which thing he did, on account of the League he had made.

[a] Ἀπροσκέπτως. In the Kings Sheets the reading is ἀπρεπῶς, incircumſpectly, or inconſiderately; in which manner 'tis mended in Turnebus's Copy at the margin. And ſo the Reading is in the Fuketian Manuſcript. Valeſ.

* Conſtantine.
† Or, Humanity.
|| Or, Licinius's Army.
* Or, Coat of Mail.
† Or, Stop'd.

CHAP. XVII.

Conſtantine's Victory.

BUt when he ſaw the Enemy perſiſting in an obſtinacy of mind, and perceived that they drew their Swords; moved with indignation, [a] with one Shout and in a moment he Routed all the Forces of the Enemy, and obtained a Victory at the ſame time, both over his Eenemies, and over the Dæmons.

[a] Βοῇ τε μιᾷ ῥοπῇ. I think it ſhould be, βοῇ τε μιᾷ ῥοπῇ, with one Shout and in a moment. And ſo 'tis in the Fuketian and Savil. Copies. Further, this ſignal Victory of Conſtantine's hapned in Criſpus's and Conſtantine's third Conſulate, on the fifth of the Nones of July, near Hadrianople, as 'tis recorded in Idatius's Faſti. But Baronius places this Hadrianopolitane Battel on the year of Chriſt 318, whereon Licinius the fifth time, and Criſpus were Conſuls. Whoſe opinion we overthrow by theſe arguments and Teſtimonies of the beſt Writers. The firſt is Idatius, who in his Faſti writes thus; Criſpo III. & Conſtantino III. Coſſ. &c. Criſpus and Conſtantine being Conſuls the third time, the Hadrianopolitane Battel [hapned] on the fifth of the Nones of July, and the Chalcedonenſian Battel on the fourteenth of the Calends of October. The ſame words occur in the Alexandrian Chronicle; but they are erroneouſly aſcribed to the year following, when Paulinus and Julianus were Conſuls. With Idatius agrees Aurelius Victor, who writes thus concerning the Fights between Conſtantine and Licinius: Quo ſanè variis prœliis pulſo, &c. Who having indeed been beaten in many Battels; in regard it would have ſeemed dangerous wholly to cruſh him; on account of Affinity; the children of them both being received into a Colleague-ſhip, and elected to the Empire of Cæſars; Criſpus and Conſtantinus begotten by Flavius: Licinianus by Licinius. Which [Colleague-ſhip] was ſcarce laſting, nor proved it happy to thoſe who were aſſumed into it, being publiſhed in that ſame month on a day defiled with an Eclipſe of the Sun. Therefore fore six years after, the Peace being broke, Licinius, Routed amongst the Thracians, went to Chalcedon. Crispus, Licinianus, and Constantinus had been created Cæsars in the Consulate of Gallicanus and Bassus, on the Calends of March, (as Idatius relates in his Fasti, and the Authour of the Alexandrian Chronicle,) that is, on the year of Christ 317. On the year following there hapned a darkness in the day time, at the ninth hour, as 'tis recorded in Idatius's Fasti. Wherefore Aurelius Victor is mistaken, who places the promotion of the Cæsars on the same year whereon the Eclipse of the Sun hapned. For, there hapned indeed an Eclipse of the Sun on the year of Christ 318. But Crispus (together with Licinianus and Constantinus,) had been made Cæsar on the year of our Lords Nativity 317. Yet, Aurelius Victor does rightly compute the intervalls of the times. For, from the Eclipse of the Sun, which hapned on the year of Christ 318, to the Hadrianopolitane Battel there are full Six years. Hereto agrees Cedrenus, who on the nineteenth year of Constantine's Empire, says, that Constantine undertook an Expedition against Licinius. For Constantine's nineteenth year falls on Crispus's and Constantine's third Consulate, which was the year of Christ 324. Sigonius differs not much from this account, who assigns the Hadrianopolitane Fight to the year of Christ 323, when Severus and Rufinus were Consuls. There is mention of the same Hadrianopolitane Fight in Lege 1. Cod. Theod. de Veteranis, where Constantine says thus. Veteranis qui ex die quintâ nonarum Juliarum, &c. To the Veteranes, who from the fifth day of the Nones of July, when the first Victory in Thracia shined upon the whole world, and who afterwards deserved a Mission [or, Discharge] at our Nicomedia, we have indulged certain priviledges by an Edict, &c. For the Hadrianopolitane Battel was fought on the fifth day of the Nones of July, as Idatius has recorded in his Fasti, and the Authour of the Alexandrian Chronicle. But the subscription of this Law is faulty. For, 'tis said to be published, Licinius the fifth time and Crispus being Consuls that is, on the year of Christ 318. Which gave occasion of mistake to Baronius. But, who sees not that it should be written, Paulinus and Julianus being Coss? For when they were Consuls, Constantine came to Nicomedia, after Licinius was Routed and totally vanquished. But, when Licinius the fifth time, and Crispus were Consuls, Nicomedia obeyed Licinius, and was the seat of his Empire. When they were Consuls therefore Constantine could not indulge a Mission and Priviledges to his own Veteranes, in the City Nicomedia, in regard that City was in no wise subject to his Government. Whereas therefore in that Law Constantine does term it Our Nicomedia, we must of necessity say, that that Law was dated in the Consulate of Paulinus and Julianus. Vales.

CHAP. XVIII.

Licinius's Death, and the Triumphs celebrated over him.

* Licinius. THen he inflicted on that * Enemy of God, and on those about him, a condign punishment; to which he adjudged them by the Law of War. What persons soever therefore had been his Advisers to a War against God, were lead away, together with the Tyrant himself, and underwent a deserved punishment. And they, who [a] a little before had been puft up with a vain hope, did in reality embrace the God of Constantine, and profest that at length they acknowledged him to be the true and only God.

[a] Μικρὸν ὕστερον. I write, μικρῷ πρότερον, a little before. Unless we should say, that the words are transposed, which frequently occurs in these Books. And so Christophorson seems to have mended this place; μικρὸν ὕστερον, ἔφη ἡ κωνσταντίνου θεὸν οἷός ἦν παρελάμβανον, a little after, did in reality discern the God of Constantine, what a God he was; which reading is very good. Further, in the Fuketian Manuscript and in the old Sheets, from those words, But when he saw, to these, only God; 'tis but one chapter, not two, as 'tis in the Geneva Edition. Vales.

CHAP. XIX.

The publick Rejoycings and Festivities.

* Or, Taken away. MOreover, when the Impious were quite * destroyed, the Rays of the Sun in future appeared bright and pure, [the cloud as 'twere] of Tyrannick power [being dispersed.] And all parts of the world which paid obedience to the Roman Empire became conjoyned; those Provinces in the East were united to them in the West; and the whole Body of the Empire was adorned with * one universall Monarch, as with one Head; the Dominion and Authority of one person † comprehending all men whatever. And the bright Rays of the Light of Piety bestowed joyfull days on them, who before sate in darkness and the shadow of death. Nor did there remain any remembrance of the past Evills; in regard all persons every where adorned the Conquerour with praises, and profest they acknowledged the only God his preserver. Thus, Our Emperour, embellisht with all the virtues of Religion, Constantinus Victor (for he procured himself this [a] most agreeable and proper Surname and Title, on account of those Victories granted him by God over all his Enemies and Opposers:) received the East; and reduced under a Subjection to himself the entire Roman Empire, conjoyned as heretofore it had been. He was the first [Emperour] who publisht to all men the Dominion of one God: and he himself, posses of the sole Dominion over the Roman world, governed the whole Body of Mankind. All fear of those mischiefs wherewith all men had been heretofore oppresst, was now taken away. And they who in times past had been dejected and sorrowfull, then lookt one upon another with smiling countenances and chearfull eyes. In Dances also and Songs they first of all glorified God the King of Kings, ([b] for thus they were instructed to do;) and in the next place The Victor Augustus, and his most Modest and Pious Sons The Cæsars, with * uninterrupted Acclamations. There was an oblivion of past Afflictions, no remembrance of impiety; but an enjoyment of the present † Blessings, and an expectation of more in future.

* Or, One Government of the whole.

† Or, Arriving at.

[a] Κυριότητα τὴν ἐπωνυμίαν. In Moræus's Copy and the King's Sheets 'tis mended κυριώτατα. But I had rather write κυριωτάτην ἐπωνυμίαν, this most agreeable and proper Surname. Constantine used the Prænomen of Victor, as 'tis apparent from his Constitutions and Letters. In the Gesta purgationis Cæciliani, some of his Letters have this Inscription, Victor Constantinus Maximus Augustus. Eusebius says therefore, that this was his proper name as 'twere. For the Greeks term a proper name κύριον ὄνομα. In the Fuketian Manuscript the reading is, τὴν ἐπώνυμον αὐτῷ κυριώτατα ἐπωνυμίαν ἔθεντο. Vales.

[b] Ὅτα δὴ τοῦτον ἐδίδασκον. Make it ὅπη δὴ τοῦτο ἐδιδάσκοντο, for thus they were instructed, from the close of the Tenth Book of his Ecclesiastical History, where all these passages occur almost in the same words. A little after, write παῖδάς τε ἅμα κοσμιωτάτους, and his most modest Sons as 'tis in the Fuketian and Savil. Manuscripts, and in the Kings Sheets. Vales. In Robert Stephens the reading is παῖδα, Son.

CHAP. XX.

How Constantine made Laws in favour of the Confessours.

MOreover, the Emperour's Constitutions full of Clemency, were then * published amongst us also, as they had been before amongst those who inhabited the other part of the world: and Laws, breathing forth Piety towards God, gave various promises of all manner of Goods; in regard they bestowed [a] on the Provincials

* Or, Opened.

[a] In the Alexandrian Chronicle these words occur concerning Constantine's Liberality and Indulgence towards the Provincials; on the twentieth year of his Empire, ἀφῆρε τεχνιτῶν καὶ σωμπελεκτῶν τὰ ὀπτάσματα ἀφιείλεν, he took off the Burthens of Artificers and Collators (that is, those of the Provincials who paid Tribute.) Vales.

throughout each Province, what was usefull and of advantage to them; and assigned to the Churches of God those things that were congruous and convenient. And first of all, * they recalled home those persons, who, because they would not sacrifice to Idolls, had been banished by the Governours of Provinces, and compelled to remove out of their own Country. Then, they freed from publick Functions, those who for the same reason had been [b] adjudged to the Curiæ: and ordered, that such as had been deprived of their Goods, should have them restored to them again. Besides, they who during the time of Persecution, [having been strengthened] by God, had given a signall proof of their fortitude and constancy of mind; and were either condemned to the Mines, there to be tortured with daily Labour; or adjudged to a Deportation into the Islands; or had been forced [c] to a slavery in the Publick Works; these persons, freed on a sudden from all these disquietudes and troubles, enjoyed their Liberty. Further, such as, by reason of their egregious resoluteness in retaining their Religion, had been despoyled of the honour of the Militia, were recalled from this ignominy by the Emperour's Munificence: who gave them [d] a free Liberty of choice, either of recovering their proper Offices, and of flourishing in their Pristine dignities; or, if they were in love with a quiet and retired Life, of continuing in future exempt from the troubles of all publick Functions. Lastly, whatever persons in order to their being reproacht and disgrac't, had been condemned to a slavery in the [e] Gynæcia, them [the Emperour] set at Liberty as well as the rest.

* The Laws.

[b] Τὰς βουλὰς εἰσεδέντας. Christophorson understood not this place; but Portesius has rendred it, not unhappily, in this manner; Qui eâdem de causâ translati erant ad Curias, who for the same reason had been removed to the Curiæ. Valesius. The Curiæ were the Offices of Corporations, the bearing whereof was generally very chargable and burthensome; the persons who bore these Offices were termed Curiales.

[c] Δημοσίοις ἔργοις δουλεύειν. Christophorson renders this place ill, thus, ad publica imperii opera obeunda vi compulsi, by force compelled to undergo the publick Works of the Empire. Eusebius terms the Mines, publick Bake-houses, Work-houses wherein they Wove, and Gynæcia; δημόσια ἔργα: to which works who ever had been condemned by a sentence of the Judge, lost their Liberty. For this was termed a servitude of punishment. Now, 'twas usuall to condemn the Christians to such works as these, because of their confession of Christ's name. And, as to the Mines the matter is notorious. But, of a condemnation to the publick Bake-house, we have an instance in the Acts of the Passion of Pope Marcellus. Valesius.

[d] Ἐπ' ἐξουσίας. Two words seem to have grown into one, which are, thus to be disjoyned, ἐπ' ἐξουσίας. A little after, where the reading is, τὰς οἰκίας ἀπολαμβάνειν, of recovering their Houses; I think it must be, τὰς οἰκείας τάξεις ἀπολαμβάνειν, of recovering their proper Offices. For they had not been despoyled of their Houses, but of their Employments in the Militia. Valesius.

[e] Γυναικείοις δ' ἔργοις. Concerning the Gynæcia there is frequent mention, as well in both the Codes, as in the Notitia of the Roman Empire. See Brissonius's Lexicon. Further, persons condemned to the Gynæcia, were clothed in a short coat made of Linnen, which was a servile habit. We learn this from the Passion of Romanus the Martyr, which is published by Mombritius, and occurs in the Musciacensian Copy. Eadem vero die Maximianus jussit, &c. But on the same day Maximianus commanded, that the Christians who were in the Pallace should be ungirt. Maximianus therefore took notice to himself of many passing by, whilst they were loosing their Girdles: and he saw Isitius of Blessed Memory; and being in a rage, called him to him, and stript him of the garments wherewith he was clothed, and clothed him in a Linnen-short-coat, and put him into the Gynæceum to the Wool-Workers, in order to his reproach. Further, the Fuketian Manuscripts has this place written thus, ἐφ' ὕδατι ἢ ἀπιμία δουλεύειν κελεύσας ὁμοίως τοῖς λοιποῖς ἠλευθέρω, which is the truer reading no doubt, and we have followed it in our Version. Valesius. The Gynæcium or Gynaiceium (says Brissonius in his Work de Verbo. Significat. book 7. fol. 254, Edit. Paris. 1596,) signifies the Weaving-House appointed for making the Garments of the Emperour. The Emperours had Slaves of both Sexes employed in their Gynæcia. They had likewise Weaving-Houses for Linnen Garments, termed λινύφια Linyphia, which we find mentioned in Chap. 34 of this Second Book.

CHAP. XXI.

How [he made Laws] concerning the Martyrs, and concerning the Estates of the Churches

And these were the Establishments which the Emperour made in written Laws, concerning such persons as had undergone those sufferings. But in relation to their goods, a most full and ample provision was made by a Law of the Emperour's. For he commanded, that the Goods and Estates of God's holy Martyrs, who had ended their lives in their Confession, should be enjoyed by their nearest Relatives. But, if no Relation of their's could be found, then the Churches were to have their Estates. And, the [Imperial] Letter of Indulgence ordered, that the Goods which had been heretofore transferred to others, out of the Treasury, either by a Sale, or by donation; and which remained still in the Treasury, should be returned back to their Owners. Such were the favours which the Emperour's benignity conferred upon the Church of God, by his Laws transmitted into all the Provinces.

CHAP. XXII.

In what manner he refreshed and cherish't the People also.

But, his Imperial Munificence bestowed more, and far greater Favours than these, upon the people that were strangers to our Religion, and upon all the Provinces. Wherefore, all the Inhabitants of our [Eastern Countries,] [b] who having before this received an account of what had been done in the other part of the Roman Empire, had styled them happy because they were possest of such Blessings; and who fervently prayed, that they themselves might at length enjoy the like: beholding these things with their own eyes, * doubted not of terming themselves blessed now; and confest, that some new Miracle, and such a one as no Age under the Rays of the Sun had ever beheld before, so great and gracious an Emperour [namely,] had † appeared to mankind. And these were their Sentiments.

[a] Δήμοις τε τοῖς ἐκτὸς. It must be, Δήμοις δὲ, But, &c. and from these words the twenty second chapter is to be begun, as 'tis in the Fuketian Manuscripts and the Old Sheets. Valesius.

[b] Ὅσα τὸ πρὶν. I mend it, ὅσοι τὸ πρὶν, who having before this: which Christophorson saw not. I write also, πυθανόμενοι τὰ ἐν δευτέρῳ, received an account of what, &c. Valesius.

* Or, Thought good to style.

† Or, shined upon.

CHAP. XXIII.

That he publickly Proclaimed God the Authour of Good; and concerning the Copies of his Laws.

But, when the Emperour, by the power of God his Saviour, had reduced all places under a Subjection to himself, he himself made known to all men that God who had bestowed these Blessings upon him: and attested, that He

* God.

* He, not himself, was to be accounted the Authour of his Victories. And this he declared by his Letters, written as well in the Latine as Greek Tongue, and sent throughout every Province. Further, the [a] powerfullness of his Language will easily be perceived by him, who shall apply himself to the perusall of his Letters, They were two: the one directed to the Churches of God; the other, to the people in every City that were Strangers to our Religion. [b] Which Latter, in regard 'tis accommodate to our present Subject, I think fit to insert here; both, that the Copy of this Letter may be recorded in the Monuments of History, and consigned to posterity; and also, that the truth of our Relation may receive confirmation. It was transcribed from an Authentick Copy of the Imperial Law, which is in our Custody. A subscription whereto in the Emperour's own * hand, does, like some Seal, † assert the verity of our Narrative.

[a] Eusebius praises the Emperour Constantine's Eloquence. For that is the meaning of these words. But Christophorson seems to have read τῶν ἡμετέρων λόγων πῶς ἀληθείαν, the truth of our discourse. It must also be written μάθοις δ' ἄν, as Turnebus has mended it at the side of his Copy; and the same is the reading in the Fuketian and Savil. Manuscripts. Besides, from these words the 24th Chapter is begun, both in the Fuketian Manuscript, and in the Old Sheets. Vales.

* Or, Right hand.

† Or, Record the evidence of the confirmation of our discourse.

[b] Ὁ δὴ τῇ παρούσῃ. In the Fuketian Manuscript 'tis ἃ τῇ παρούσῃ; which reading the Geneva-men have taken notice of, as occuring in some Copies. But, this way of writing is not to be born with. For φερσῆκον in the singular number follows. Besides, Eusebius produces but one Constitution of Constantine's here; to wit, that which had been sent by Constantine to the Provincials. He does indeed attest, that two Laws had been issued forth together in favour of the Christians; the one to the Catholick Church, the other to the Provincials. But he annexes the Copy but of one of them, namely of that which had been sent to the Provincials of Palestine. The other, sent to the Churches, is omitted by Eusebius, either because it had been drawn according to the same Copy with that to the Provincials; or for some other reason. Vales.

CHAP. XXIV.

Constantine's Law concerning Piety towards God, and concerning the Christian Religion.

VICTOR CONSTANTINUS, MAXIMUS AUGUSTUS,

[a] To the Provincials of Palestine.

[a] Ἐπαρχειώταις παλαιστινοῖς. In the Medicæan Manuscript I found it written, ἐπαρχιώταις παλαιστινοῖς, to the Palestinian Provincials. Further, from these words I began the 24th Chapter, following the authority of the Kings and Fuketian Manuscripts. Vales.

* Distinction, or, diversity.

[b] Πᾶσαν ἀνείρυσαι. From the Medicæan Manuscript make it κἀν πᾶσιν, &c. And such as, &c. And a little after, from the same Manuscript it must be read τῷ χειστιανισμῷ θρεπτείαν, worship of Christianity; and the same is the reading in the Kings Sheets and Fuketian Manuscript. Vales. In Robert Stephens 'tis χειστιανισμῷ θρεπτείαν.

[c] καταφρονητικῶς ἔχοντας. The Medicæan Manuscript has it καταφρονητικῶς ἔχειν ἐθέλοντας, desirous of contemning it; which reading seems to me much truer. Vales.

Amongst those whose Sentiments concerning the Deity are right and prudent, it has long since been made apparent by a manifest * Evidence, [b] and such as is sufficient far to remove all scruple whatever; how great a difference there hath been between an accurate observancy in reference to the most venerable Worship of Christianity, and those who are its Opposers [c] and desirous of contemning it. But now, by far evidenter Actions and more illustrious Exploits, as well the absurdity of the doubt hath been demonstrated, as also, how great the power of the Supream God is. In as much as, to those who faithfully revere the venerable Law, and dare not violate any of its precepts, a plenty of * Blessings is presented, and an incomparable strength with good hopes to effect what they have attempted. But, to them who have embraced an impious Opinion, [d] even the Events were correspondent to the designes. For, who ever obtained any thing of good, that would not acknowledge God to be the Authour of Goods, and refused to pay Him a due Worship? [e] Indeed, the things themselves give confirmation to what we affirm.

* Or, Goods.

[d] Καὶ τὰ ἀποβαίνοντα. The reading in the Medicæan Manuscript is far truer. For thus it runs, ἀκόλουθα ἦ τὰ ἀποβαίνοντα ἦν. τὶς γὰρ ἂν ἀγαθῶν τύχοι τινὸς, &c. even the Events, &c. And after the word Worship, it has a point, which is the mark of an interrogation. Vales.

[e] Πίστιν τῷ. The reading in the Medicæan Manuscript is far more elegant, thus, πίστιν δὲ τῷ ῥηθέντι, Indeed, the things, &c. Vales.

CHAP. XXV.

An Example from ancient Times.

IF therefore any one does in his thoughts run over the [a] former Times derived down as far as these days of ours, and in his mind contemplates the Affairs heretofore transacted; he will find all those, who laid Justice and Probity as the foundation of their Actions, both to have brought their attempts to an happy issue, and (as from some root of sweetness) to have likewise gathered the pleasantest fruit. But [he will perceive] them, who have audaciously attempted unjust Facts; (and have either [broken out] into a foolish madness against God himself; or have entertained not one good thought [b] towards mankind; but have inflicted Exiles, Infamies, * Proscriptions, Slaughters, and many other such like [punishments;] and who never repented at any time, nor recalled their mindes to a better Temper:) to have received rewards of the like nature. And these things do happen [c] not ill and unseemly, nor contrary to reason.

[a] Ἀναδὺν καὶ εἰς δεῦρο. The particle καὶ is wanting in the Medicæan Manuscript; nor is it very necessary. Presently, where the reading is τὰς πρὸ τοῦ γεγονυίας, heretofore transacted; the same Manuscript has it, τὰς πώποτε γεγονυίας, at any time transacted. Also, instead of ἐπιχειρήσεως πέρας the Issue of their attempt; 'tis written, τὰς ἐπιχειρήσεις πέρας, their attempts to an issue; in which manner I found it written in the Kings Sheets and Fuketian Manuscript. Vales.

* Or, Publications of Goods.

[b] This place is imperfect, and ought thus to be restored from the Medicæan Manuscript; καὶ ἢ πρὸς τὸ κρεῖττον ἀνοήτως ἐκμανέντας, ἢ πρὸς τὸ ἀνθρώπινον ἦθος λογισμὸν ὅσιον μηδένα λαβόντας, &c; which reading we have expresst in our Rendition. Vales.

[c] Οὐκ ἀπεικότως. In the Medicæan Manuscript 'tis written, οὐκ ἂν ἀπεικότως, οὐδ' ἂν ὑπὸ λόγῳ συμβαίνοι. In the King's Manuscript also 'tis συμβαίνοι. Vales.

CHAP. XXVI.

Concerning the Persecuted, and the Persecutors.

[a] FOr, what ever persons proceed to Action with a just [purpose of] mind, and have the fear of God continually in their thoughts, preserving their Faith towards Him firm and unshaken; and who do not prefer present fears and dangers before the hopes of those future things: although they may have had experience of some Troubles and afflictions for a time, yet they have not born what befell them with heaviness, because they believe, that greater Rewards are treasured treasured up for them. But, by how much more pressing the Calamities were, wherewith they have been tryed; by so much more shining was the Glory they obtained. [b] But, such as have either dishonourably contemned what is just; or not acknowledged God themselves, and have dared to inflict on those who faithfully * worship Him, Contumelies and the cruellest of punishments; and who have not judged themselves wretched, because they have [c] punished [men] upon such Pretexts as these; nor [accounted the persons thus punish't] happy and blessed, who amidst so great sufferings have preserved their Piety towards God inviolate: Many of these mens Armies have been ruined, and many routed. In fine, their whole Military Forces have ended in a totall Overthrow.

[a] At these words I began the 26th Chapter, from the Fuk. Manuscript, and the King's Sheets. Vales.

[b] Ὅσοι δὲ τὸ δίκαιον ἀτίμως. The reading in the Medicæan Manuscript is truer, thus, ὅσοι δὲ ἢ τὸ δίκαιον ἀτίμως παρεῖδον ἢ τὸ κρεῖττον οὐκ ἔγνωσαν, But such as have either dishonourably, &c. see note (b.) Vales.

* Or, Follow.

'Tis much like what he had said above, at chap. 25, where [c] Ἐκόλαζον. In the Medicæan Manuscript the reading is κολάζοιντο, which is truer if I mistake not. A little after, the same Copy has it, εἰς αἰσχίστην ἔληξεν ἧτταν, have ended in a most reproachfull Overthrow. Vales.

CHAP. XXVII.

That Persecution hath been the Occasion of Mischief to those who waged War.

* Or, Heavy.

FRom such [impieties] as these, * Bloudy Wars have risen, and dismall devastations. Hence [hath been occasioned] a want of necessaries for daily use, and a multitude of [a] impendent Mischiefs. Hence, the Authours of so great Impiety, fallen under the pressures of the extreamest calamities, have either perished by an [b] unhappy death; or, leading a most reproachfull Life, have acknowledged that more afflictive than Death it self; and have received punishments in a manner equall to their unjust Actions. For, each of them hath met with Mischiefs so much the more Calamitous, with how much more of vehemency he had through madness resolved to assault (as he hoped,) and put a force upon the Divine Law. In so much that, they were not only disquieted with the Troubles of this present Life, but most acutely tortured with a fear and expectation of the Infernall punishments.

[a] Ἐπιζημιούντων κακῶν. In the Medicæan Manuscript 'tis ἐπηρτημένων δεινῶν, impendent Miseries. And a little before, in the same Copy, the reading is, ἐπὶ τοιούτων ἀναφύονται, &c. From such [impieties] as these, bloudy Wars arise. Vales.

[b] Παιωλεθρον. The Medicæan Copy adds a word, in this manner, θάνατον παιωλεθρον ἐδυσχήσας, perished by an unhappy death. A little after, in the same Manuscript the reading is, τοσοῦτον γὰρ ἔκαστος ἐυρεθῆ συμφορῶν, For, each of them hath found, or met with, &c. which doubtless is truer. Vales.

CHAP. XXVIII.

That God chose Constantine to be the Minister of Blessings.

FUrther, when so great and sore an impiety had seized [a] Mankind; and the Republick, as 'twere by the rage of some Pestilentiall distemper, was infected with the imminentest of dangers, and therefore wanted a Cure that was salutary and great; what solace, what Remedy did God find out, to free us from these evills? (Now, when I speak of God, [b] He must always be meant, who really is the only God, and is possest of a perpetuall power in every Age. [c] Nor will it in any wise be arrogancy for him, who acknowledges the Benefits [received] from God, to speak magnificently.) [d] God himself hath required and determined to make use of our assistance as fit in order to [the Completion of] his own will. Who having begun from that Brittish Ocean, and those parts where, by a determined Necessity, the Sun is ordered to set; and having [e] by a certain divine power expelled and dissipated [f] all those mischiefs which had possest [the world;] both, that Mankind, instructed by My Ministery, might be recalled to an observancy of the most Venerable Law; and also, that the most Blessed Faith might be increased and propagated, by God Himself being the Leader:

[a] Τὰ ἀνθρώπινα. In the Medicæan Copy 'tis τὰ ἀνθρώπεια. And a little after, θεραπείας σωτηρίας πολλῆς, a great salutary Cure; without the Conjunction. Vales.

[b] Ἐννοητέον. In the Medicæan Copy, the simple term occurs instead of the compounded, thus, νοητέον; which has less of roughness. A little after, the reading in the same Copy is, ὃ μόνον τε καὶ ὡς ὄντως ὄντι. Vales.

[c] Πάντως δὲ κόμπος ἂν εἴη. The reading in the Medicæan Manuscript is truer, πάντως δὲ ἂ κόμπος τὸ πῶ παρὰ τοῦ, &c. Nor will it in any wise, &c. which emendation Zosimus confirms book 1. chap 8. where he has epitomized this Law of Constantine. Vales.

[d] Τὴν γὰρ ἐμὴν ὑπηρεσίαν, For God Himself hath required, &c. In the Medicæan Copy the particle γὰρ is wanting, which to me seems altogether superfluous. Vales.

[e] Κρείττονί τινι δυνάμει, by a certain divine power. The two last words are wanting in the Medicæan Copy, and the term κρείττονι is referred to the word ἀνάγκην which went before; in this manner, by a divine necessity, the Sun is ordered to set; and having expelled, &c. Vales.

[f] Τὰ κατέχοντα πάντα δεινά. After these words, the Fuketian, Turnebian and Savil. Copies adde these two, ἐκποδὼν ἐποιήσατο, hath wholly taken away. And so Christophorson read, as 'tis apparent from his Version, which at this place is very intricate. But I am of opinion, that those words [ὃς ὑπὸ τῆς πρὸς βρεττανοῖς ἑκείνης θαλάσσης ἀρξάμενος, &c. Who, having begun from that Brittish Ocean, &c.] are spoken concerning Constantine himself, and not concerning God, as Musculus and Christophorson thought. Wherefore, there is no need of those words ἐκποδὼν ἐποιήσατο, which occur not, either in the Medicæan or King's Copy, or in the Old Sheets: especially, in regard it follows in the next chapter, μέχρι καὶ ἧδε ἐώων πρόειμι, I am come as far as the Eastern parts. Vales.

CHAP. XXIX.

Constantine's Pious Expressions towards God; and his praise of the Confessours.

([a] FOr I could never have been ingratefull in reference to the Benefit wherewith I am obliged; in regard I firmly believe [b] this most excellent Ministery to have been conferred on Me as a Gift of the highest value;) at length I am come as far as the Eastern Parts. Which [Countries,] because they * groan under heavier Calamities, call for a greater Cure from us. Further, I do most firmly believe, that My whole Soul, all that I breath, and what ever dwells within the inmost recesses of my mind, is entirely owing from Me to the Supream God. I know accurately well indeed, that they who have rightly pursued † an hope of Celestiall things, and have [c] peculiarly and firmly placed this Queen in the divine ‖ dwellings; do in no wise stand in need of the Benevolence of men: in regard they enjoy

* Or, Are seized with.

† Or, The Celestiall hope.

‖ Or, Places.

[a] Οὐκ ἂν ἀγνώμων. In the Medicæan Copy the reading is, οὐκ ἂν ἀγνώμων; right, if you make it ἀγνώμων; For I could never have been ungratefull. Further, these words from for I could, to highest value, must be understood as spoken by a Parenthesis. In the Fuketian and Turnebian Copies the reading is, οὐκ ἂν ἀγνώμων. Vales.

[b] Τῷ δείσῳ. In the Medicæan Copy this whole place is written far truer, thus, πάντῳ δείσῳ διακονίαν, τοῦτο καιρεισμῷδο ἑαυτῷ δῶρον πιστεύσας, μέχρι καὶ ἧδε ἐώων πρόειμι, &c. in regard I firmly believe this most excellent, &c. as we have rendred it. Further, with these words the whole period is concluded, which begins from those words of the preceding chapter, ὃς ἀπὸ τῆς πρὸς βρεττανοῖς. who having begun from that Brittish, &c. which the Translatours perceived not. Nor could I my self ever have found it out, without the assistance of the Medicæan Copy. Vales.

[c] Ἐξαίρετόν τε καὶ ἀσφαλῶς. The Medicæan Manuscript has it written, ἐξαίρετόν τε καὶ βασιλίδα ἀσφαλῶς, and have peculiarly and firmly placed this Queen. The Emperour Constantine terms the hope of the Sons of God, a Queen, because it excells all humane things Vales.

so

so much the Greater Honours, [d] by how much farther they have removed and separated themselves from * the vices and impieties of Mortality. Nevertheless, I account it as belonging to Me, at the greatest distance now to remove, from persons void of all fault and reprehension, those necessities imposed on them for a time, and those misbecoming tortures. Otherwise, it would be most absurd, that these mens fortitude and stability of mind, should have been made apparent under their Reign, who were desirous of persecuting them, on account of their Worship of God: but, that under a servant of God [swaying the Imperiall scepter,] their Glory should not have been raised [c] to an higher degree of Resplendency and Blessedness.

* Or, Terrene defects.

[d] Ὅσῳπερ ἀσφαλῶς αὐτοῦ. Before I had gotten the Medicæan Copy, I perceived the reading was to be, ὅσῳπερ σφᾶς αὐτοῦ, by how much farther they have removed and separated themselves from, &c; which conjecture the Medicæan Manuscript hath plainly confirmed. In which also the reading is, τοσούτῳ τε so much the greater; but γ is overwritten, thus, τοσοῦτῳ γε. Valesi.

[c] Εἰς λαμπρότερόν τι. In the Medicæan Copy I found it written, εἰς λαμπρότερον ἢ μακαριότερον χῆμα τὴν δόξαν, &c. to a more resplendent and more blessed Scheme or Figure. Valesi.

CHAP. XXX.

A Law setting [men] free from Banishment, from The Curia, and from Proscription of Goods.

LEt all those therefore, whether they be such as have changed their Country for a strange Soil; because they would not * betray their Honour and Faith towards God, to which with their whole souls they had consecrated themselves, at what time soever each of them have been condemned by the cruell [a] Sentences of the Judges: or, whether they be such as have been enrolled within the Catalogues of the Curiales, when as before they did not fill up their Number: be now restored both [b] to their paternal Estates, and to their wonted leasure, and return thanks to God the Deliverer of all. Also, whoever have been deprived of their Goods, and, [c] stricken with a * Mulct of their whole substance, have hitherto led a most miserable and sad life; let them likewise be restored to their Pristine habitations, [d] Families, and Goods; and may they with gladness enjoy the Beneficence of God.

* Or, Contemn.

[a] Γνώμας δικαστῶν. In the Medicæan Copy 'tis γνώσεσι; and a little after, the reading is συνκατηριθμησαν καταλόγοις, have been enrolled together within, &c. In the King's Sheets and Fuketian Copy 'tis συνηριθμησαν, have been enrolled within. Valesi. The same with this last is the reading in Robert Stephens.

* Or, Loss.

[b] Χωρίοις τοῖς πατρίοις. In the Medicæan Copy the reading is righter, thus, χωρίοις τε πατρώοις ἀποκαταστάντες, be now restored both to their, &c. In the King's Copy the reading is also ἀποκαταστάντες: in Robert Stephens 'tis ἀποκατασήσωντες. Further, Eusebius here calls their paternall Lands or Estates, πατρῶα χωρία. For those that were lyable or bound to serve in the Curiæ, (into which the richest persons were wont to be enrolled;) their Farms or Lands were enslaved to the Curiæ; [that is, were burthened with such Services and Offices as belonged to the Courts of Corporations.] Therefore, although they withdrew themselves by flight, it availed them nothing, in regard The Curia seized their Farms. Constantine therefore appoints by this Constitution, that those who had been bound to the Curiæ on account of the Christian Faith, (provided their paternall Farms, which the Curia had made seizure of, were not of a Curial original;) should recover those their paternall Farms. Wherefore Christophorson has rendred it ill, thus, Patriis sedibus, to their Fathers seats. Turnebus in his Copy hath mended it, ἀποκαταστάντες. In the Fuketian Manuscript 'tis written ἀποκαταστήσαντες ἑαυτοὺς; as 'tis also in Sr Henry Savil's Copy, and in Christophorson. Valesi.

[c] Καταπονηθέντες, oppress. In the Medicæan Copy the reading is καταπεπληγότες, stricken, which pleases me better. For, 'tis a Civill-Law Term. So, ferire mulctâ, to be stricken or smitten with a mulct, occurs frequently in the Constitutions of the Emperours. Valesi.

[d] Γενέσεσι, Generations. In the Medicæan Copy 'tis χρέσει, Families. And a little after, the reading there is χαίροντες ἀπολαύοιεν, and may they with gladness enjoy. Valesi. In Robert Stephens 'tis χαίροντες ἀπολαύσουσιν, and they shall with gladness enjoy.

CHAP. XXXI.

Those in Islands likewise.

MOreover, we Command, that what ever persons are detained in Islands [a] against their wills, shall enjoy [the benefit of] this provision [b]: to the end that they, who hitherto have been inclosed, both within the impassable Craggs of Mountains, and within the surrounding Sea, being freed from their sad and inhumane Solitude, should restore themselves to their dearest Relatives, and fulfill their wishes and desires. And, that such as for a long time have lived a miserable and necessitous Life in a most [c] detestable filthiness, having obtained their return as some prey given to them, and being in future freed from Cares, [d] should without fear live with us. For, for any one to live in fear under us, who both boast and believe our selves to be the servants of God, would not only be a very absurd thing to be heard, but also much more to be believed. For our * usage is such, that we would correct the faults of others.

* Nature, or, disposition.

[a] Not without reason he has added the words ἄ βουλομένους, against their wills; because of the Monks, who lived a solitary life in Islands. Valesi.

[b] Ὅπως οἱ μέχρι νῦν. The Medicæan Manuscript gives us a different reading, in this manner; ὅπως μόλις ποτὲ ὁρῶν τε, &c. to the end that they who at any time have with some difficulty been inclosed, &c. And a little after, αὐτοὺς ἀποδοῦεν, may restore themselves. Also, οἱ πανιχρὸν, that such as for, &c; not ὅ τι πανίχρων, And, that such, &c. Valesi.

[c] Ἀποτροπαίᾳ ῥύπῳ, detestable filthiness. In the Medicæan Copy I found it written προστοπαίᾳ ῥύπῳ. Which perhaps is truer. The import whereof is cum invidioso quodam squalore, with an hated nastiness. Valesi.

[d] Μὴ μετὰ φόβου σὺν ἡμῖν βιῶσιν. This place is written far otherwise in the Medicæan Copy. For, that Manuscript hath a full point after these words καὶ τῆς φερομένων εἰς τὸ λοιπὸν ἀπαλλαγῶσι, and being in future freed from cares. Then, it words the following passage thus; μὴ φόβῳ γὰρ ὑφ' ἡμῶν βιῶσι, οἳ Θεοῦ θεράποντες εἶναι αὐχοῦμεν τε καὶ πιστεύομεν. καὶ εἰς ἀκοὴν ἐλθεῖν μόνον εἴη ἂν αἰσχρὸν, ἂν μὴ γε μὴν ἢ μοχθηρείας, ἢ τὰς περὶ τοῖς ἔργοις δημοσίοις ὑπηρεσίας πλεῖν. That is; For, to live with fear under Us, who both boast and believe we are the servants of God; would be a most absurd thing even barely to be heard; much more, that any one should undergoe either the sore Labours [at the Mines,] or the services in the publick works. Which reading, in my sentiment, is purer, and more plain than the common one. Valesi.

CHAP. XXXII.

Also, Those who have been * condemned to the Mines and Publick Works.

* Or, Disgrac't in the, &c.

ALso, what ever persons have been condemned either to work in the sore Labours of the Mines, or to undergo the Services in the Publick Works; Let such men exchange their continual Toyls for a [a] sweet leisure, and in future lead a more easie life agreeable to their own minds, and conclude * the Troubles of their immoderate Labours with a pleasing rest. [b] And although some of them may have † lost their common Liberty, and may have been so unfortunate as to have been marked with infamy; nevertheless, let them with a becoming joy recover their Pristine dignity separated from them by some long voyage as it were, and hasten to return into their own Countries.

* Or, The immoderate Troubles of their Labours.

† Or, Exiled from.

[a] Τὴν γλυκεῖαν σχολήν. In the Medicæan Copy 'tis γλυκείαν. In the Fuketian 'tis γλυκίω. Valesi.

[b] Εἰ καὶ τῆς κοινῆς. From the Medicæan Copy make it, εἰ δὲ καὶ; which is far truer. Turnebus in his Copy had mended it, καὶ εἰ τῆς κοινῆς; but the reading of the Medicæan Manuscript is truer, which is confirmed by the Fuketian Copy. Valesi.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Concerning the Confessours who have been employed in the Militia.

FUrther, to those who have heretofore been * adorned [a] with Military dignities, and have lost them upon this cruel and unjust pretence, to wit, because professing the knowledge of God, [b] they preferred that before the dignity they were * Or, Eligible according to their will. possest of; it shall be * free to choose, whether they will embrace their Military Employes, and continue in the same figure they were in; [c] or live in freedome with an honourable discharge. For it will be fit and agreeable to reason, that he who hath demonstrated such a greatness of mind and Constancy in undergoing † torments inflicted on him, should, according to his own choice, enjoy either Repose, or Honour.

† Or, Dangers.

* Or, Approved in.

[a] Ἐπὶ στρατηγικαῖς ἀξίαις. The Medicæan Copy has it ἐν στρατηγικαῖς, &c; in Military dignities: and a little after, διὰ τῶν ἀπηνῶν, upon this cruell, &c. Valesi.

[b] Περιήμησαν. In the Medicæan Copy the reading is, περιμόρτερον ἧς εἶχον ἀξίας ἦγον, ἔστω σφῶν βούλησιν, they accounted that more valuable then the dignity they had; let it be according to their will. Valesi.

[c] Ἐλευθερίαν ἄγειν. From the Medicæan Copy it must be written ἐλευθέραν ἄγειν σχολὴν, leade a free Leisure. Which reading Sozomen confirms book 1. chap. 8. where he has epitomized this Law of Constantine. In the Fuketian Manuscript I found it written, ἐντίμως ἐλευθερίαν ἄγειν, live in freedome honourably. But the Medicæan Copy has it written, ἔντιμον ἐλευθέραν ἄγειν σχολὴν, lead an honourable free Leisure. Valesi.

CHAP. XXXIV.

The setting at Liberty those free persons in the Gynæcea, or them delivered over to Slavery.

[a] ALso, whatever persons, by force deprived of their Nobility, have from the Judges received some such like sentence as this, that being thrust into the * Gynæcea or Linyphia, they have endured [b] Cruell and miserable Labour, or were accounted Servants of the Treasury, their Pristine splendour of Birth [c] being of no advantage to them: Let such men (rejoycing both at the honours they formerly enjoyed, and at the † priviledge of their Liberty,) recover their usuall dignities, and in future live in all manner of gladness. And let him ( [d] who has changed his Liberty for Slavery, by an unjust and inhumane madness of the [e] Seller, and hath often [f] lamented his unusuall servile offices, perceiving himself on a sudden as 'twere made a servant from being a free man;) receive his former freedome according to this our command, and restore himself to his Parents, and undergo those Labours that befit a Freeman; having cast out of his memory those misbecoming servilities, [g] which he had before Laboured under.

* See chap. 20. note (e.)

† Or, Goods.

[a] Καὶ μὴν ὅσοι. The Medicæan Copy has it καὶ μὴν καὶ ὅσοι, moreover, whatever persons, &c. Valesi.

[b] Ἀπηνῆ τε καὶ ἄθλιον. In the Medicæan Copy I found it written λύδη καὶ; from which, though a corrupt word, I presently smelt out the true and genuine reading of this place. I write therefore ἀΐδη καὶ ἄθλιον, an unusuall and miserable Labour. For, such servilities in the Gynæcea and Weaving Houses were unusuall to free men. The same Copy has πόνον, not κόπον. Valesi.

[c] Οὐδὲν αὐτῆς ἐπαρκούσης. The reading in the Medicæan Copy is truer, thus, οὐδὲν αὐτοῖς, &c. being of no advantage to them. And a little after, from the same Copy I write χαλοῖς ἐνδοξαζομένοις, rejoycing——at, &c. Valesi.

[d] Καὶ ὁ δουλείαν τῶν ἐλευθερίας. The Medicæan Copy adds a word, in this manner, καὶ ὁ δουλείαν μᾶλλον ἐλευθερίας, &c. which is truer, if I mistake not. For the Emperour distinguishes two sorts of men: some of which, being nobly born, were enslaved to the Gynæcea, or made servants of the Fiscall Farms, which was a nobler servitude: others of them, whose extraction was meaner, were sold to private men. In the Fuketian Manuscript the reading is, καὶ ὁ δουλεία τῶν ἐλευθερίαν ἀλλαξάμενος. Valesi.

[e] Πολίτης ἀπορροία. In the Medicæan Copy 'tis written δόπτε ἀπορροία. He means the boldness and immanity of the Judge, who had despoiled a free man of his Liberty, on account of his confession of the true God. In the Kings Sheets I found it written πωλήτης; the Fuketian Copy has it πωλητῆ. Valesi.

[f] Ἀποδυρόμενον, lamenting: in the Medicæan Copy the reading is truer, thus, ἀποδυρόμενον, hath——lamented. Valesi.

[g] Ὡς πρότερον ἐμόχθησεν In the Medicæan Copy 'tis more elegantly expresst, ἃς προεμόχθησεν; and a little before, ἐκβαλὼν τῆς μνήμης, having cast out of his memory. And the same is the reading in the Kings Sheets and Fuketian Copy. Further, from these words 'tis sufficiently apparent, that what I have said is true, viz. that in this latter place Constantine speaks of the viler and meaner sort of people, who had been sold by the sentence of the Judge. For, concerning the former sort who were eminent for the splendour of their Birth, Constantine says that they may now recover their Pristine dignity. But he sends away these latter to the Services and Labours usually undergone by Freemen. Valesi.

CHAP. XXXV.

Concerning the succession in inheriting the Goods of Martyrs and Confessours, and of such persons as had been banished, and of them whose Goods had been brought into the Treasury.

BUt, we must not omit mentioning those Estates, [a] whereof severall persons have been deprived upon various pretences. Wherefore, if any persons, undergoing the eximious and divine Combat of Martyrdom with a fearlesness and confidence of mind, have been deprived of their Goods; [b] or, if any men, made Confessours, have procured themselves the * hope of Eternall Goods; also, whatever persons (forc't to remove out of their Country, because by betraying their Faith they would not yield to the Persecutors;) have in like manner been deprived of their Goods: Lastly, [c] if any persons, though not condemned by a Capitall sentence, have [a] Δι' ἃς ἕκαστοι. From the Medicæan Copy make it, ᾗν ἕκαστοι καὶ διαφόρως ἐστερήθησαν προφάσεις, whereof severall, &c. And a little after, ἢ ἀεισόν τε καὶ θεῖον ἀγῶνα; which we have rendred accordingly. Neither do these words δι' ἃς occur in the King's Sheets. Further, I found the beginning of this period variously written in the old Copies. For in the Medicæan Manuscript 'tis read thus, παρεατέον δὲ ἐδὲ τὸ ἧβι ὅσων, &c. In the King's Sheets, παρεατέον δὲ ἐδὲ τὸ, &c. Turnebus in his Copy had mended it, παρετέον. In the Fuketian Copy I found it written, παρεατέον δὲ ἐδὲ τὸ ἧβι ὅσων ὧν ἕκαστοι, &c. The King's Copy has also παρεατέον. Wherefore, I doubt not but this is the true reading, and do wonder why Robert Stephens changed it. Valesi.

* Or, Eternall hope.

[b] Καὶ ὁμολογήσαι καταδάντες. In the Medicæan Copy the reading is, εἴ τέ τινες ὁμολογηταὶ καταδάντες, or, if any men; which, I doubt not, is truer. For, whereas he had before spoken of the Martyrs, he now speaks of the Confessours. A little after, from the same Copy, write thus, καὶ λανθανόντες ὅτι μὴ τοῖς διώξασιν εἶξαν παεσδόντες τῷ πίστιν, ἧβι ὄντων ἐσέσωντο, &c. (forc't——, because by contemning the Faith they would not yield to the Persecutors;) have——been deprived of their Goods; &c. Valesi.

[c] Christophorson omitted this Clause, because it seemed nothing else but a superfluous repetition of what went before. But, in regard these words occur in the Medicæan Copy also, they are not rashly to be expunged. For, after the Emperour had spoken concerning the Martyrs, concerning the Confessours, and concerning the Exiles, who for fear of a Capitall sentence pronounc't against them, had left their Country; he now treats of those, who though they had not been condemned by a Capitall sentence, had nevertheless been despoyled of their Goods. For these were not in the number of Martyrs, or Confessours; in regard they had not been brought to a Tryall. Nor, had they been Exiles; but staying in their own Country, had by force been deprived of their possessions. 'Tis certain, in the Title or Contents of this Chapter, four sorts of persons are reckoned up. But Christophorson omitted the fourth sort. Nevertheless, in the following chapter, the Emperour recounts three sorts of persons only, these last being wholly omitted. Valesi.

nevertheless

nevertheless had the hard fortune to suffer a loss of their Goods: Our Order is, that the Inheritances of all these persons shall be given to their nearest Relations. Further, [d] whereas the Laws do in express words command, that the nearer of the kindred [shall receive the Inheritance,] 'tis easie to know, to whom the Inheritances belong. [e] And moreover, 'tis agreeable to reason, that they should come to the succession, [f] who would have been the nearer of kin, if those persons had ended their lives by their own and a naturall death.

[d] Διαφθόντων τῶν νόμων τῶν ἀγχιστέων τοὺς ἐγγυτέρω. In the successions of persons intestate, the Law calls the nearest of the Agnati [or, Kindred by the Male line] to the Inheritance, if their own Heirs be wanting, as Gaius informs us in his Institutions Titulo decimo sexto. Hence, the Agnati are by the Law termed Legitimi Hæredes, Lawfull Heirs, because the Law casts the Inheritance upon these only. For, the Cognati [Kindred by the Female line] could not be Heirs by the Civil Law, but were called to the Inheritance by the Jus Prætorium only, as Lawyers inform us. Further, amongst the Cognati, he that was nearest took the Inheritance, in the same manner as amongst the Agnati. But there is a difficulty in this place, who ought to be meant by the word ἀγχιστέων of the Kindred, whether the Agnati, or Cognati. 'Tis certain, if by the term Laws we understand the Laws of the twelve Tables, it will be necessary that the Agnati should be meant. Sozomen words it thus, τοῖς ἐγγυτέρω γένους, to those nearer of Kin. Valef.

[e] Καὶ ἔτι. In the Kings Copy the reading is καὶ ἔτι and moreover; which reading I have followed in my Version. At first it had been written in that Copy, ὅτι because; and afterwards, in a more modern hand, it was mended, ἔτι moreover. Valef.

[f] Ὅιπερ ἦσαν καὶ οἰκειότεροι, καὶ ἀυλομάτω χρησαμένων ἐκείνων τῷ τέλει. In the Medicæan Copy the reading is, ὅιπερ ἦσαν οἰκειότεροι. The meaning of this place is very obscure. Christophorson renders it thus; Et quod ratione etiam oportet eos succedere, qui sint domesticâ consuetudine conjunctiores, constat: præsertim cùm illi ipsi Martyres, non criminis ullius convicti, sed suâ inducti voluntate, mortem oppetiverint; i. e. And that in reason they ought to succeed, who are nearer by a domestick acquaintance, 'tis manifest: especially, in regard those very Martyrs, not convicted of any crime, but induced by their own will, underwent death. But, there are many things to be found fault with in this Rendition. For first, αὐτόματον τέλος a voluntary death or end, cannot be spoken in reference to the Martyrs. Secondly, the discourse here is not concerning the Martyrs alone, but concerning the Confessours also, and those that had fled their Country, who had dyed by their own death. Therefore, 'tis better to render it here, suâ & naturali morte, by their own and a naturall death. For so Græcians are wont to express themselves, and particularly our Eusebius, if I mistake not. Lastly, he has rendred the term οἰκειότεροι very ill in these words domesticâ consuetudine conjunctiores, nearer by a domestick acquaintance; whereas the import of that term is persons nearer related. I render therefore this whole place thus, Rationi consentaneum est, ut hi ad successionem veniant, qui propinquiores erant futuri, si illi suâ morte obiissent. 'tis agreeable to reason, &c. Our Rendition is confirmed, both by what I have said above, and also from what the Emperour says, ὅιπερ ἦσαν οἰκειότεροι, who would have been the nearer of Kin, not εἰσὶν who are. Now, by the next words, viz. those persons, he means the Martyrs. Valef.

CHAP. XXXVI.

That the Church is to be Heir to those who have no Relations; and that the Legacies given by them shall remain firm.

BUt, if none of the Kindred be left, who, agreeable to reason, may be Heir to any of the forementioned persons, to wit, of the Martyrs, or of the Confessours, or of those who have removed out of their Country on such an occasion as this; we decree, that the Church in every of those places shall always succeed in the Inheritance.

[a] Nor will this in any wise be * uneasie to the defunct, if they shall happen to have † Her their Heir, on whose account they have undergone all imaginable Labours. [b] Moreover, 'tis necessary to annex this also; that, if any of the foresaid persons have bequeathed any thing of their Goods to such as they had a mind [to give them,] the * property thereof, as 'tis reasonable, shall remain firm and certain to them.

[a] Οὐκ ἔστιν πάντως. From the Medicæan Copy make it οὐκ ἔστιν δὲ πάντως. A little before, the reading in the same Copy is ὑπ' ὁμολογητῶν, of the Confessours (truer than ὁμολογησάντων,) as it is in chap. 35. Also, μήτε ὑπ' ματοίκων μήτε τοι, ὑπ', &c. Valef.

* Or, Grievous. † The Church.

* Or, Dominion.

[b] Περιττὸν γε μήν. I had rather write περισσεῖως to annex, as Turnebus and Sr Henry Savil have mended it. And so 'tis written in the Fuketian Manuscript. A little after, the reading in the Medicæan Copy is, ὡς εἰ ὑπ' περιειλημμένων τινες, that, if any of the foresaid persons. Valef.

CHAP. XXXVII.

That those who possess such places, and Gardens, and Houses, shall restore them; but without the * Mean-profits.

* Or, Fruits.

FUrther, that no † ambiguity may appear in this our Precept, [a] but that every one may with readiness understand what the Law is; let all persons know, that if they are possest, either of a Ground, or of an House, or of a Garden, or of any thing else of the forementioned persons Estates, it will be good and advantagious to themselves, both to confess it, and to restore it with all imaginable celerity. [b] And although it may be most manifestly apparent, that some persons have received great profits from those [Estates,] by an unjust possession; yet we judge a ‖ demand of those Fruits to be in no wise just:

† Or, Mistake.

‖ Or, Exaction.

[a] Ἀλλ' ἔτοιμον τὸ. From the Medicæan Copy make it, ἀλλ' ἔτοιμον ἢ τὸ, &c. and we have rendred it accordingly. Valef.

[b] Διὸ εἰ καὶ τὰ μάλιστα. In the Medicæan Copy the reading is, εἰ γὰρ καὶ τὰ μάλιστα φανεῖεν ἐξ αὐτῶν τινὲς, And although, &c. And a little after, the same Copy has it, χρηματώμενοι, καὶ γίνεως τόκων πλὴ ἀπαίτησιν, have received —— profits ——; yet we judge a demand, &c; incomparably well, as I think. For this is the second member of the period. The last member of the period is ὅμως γε μὴν, &c; Nevertheless, &c: which in the common Editions is ill divided, and removed to the following Chapter. Valef.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

In what manner Supplicatory Libells ought to be presented in reference to these persons.

NEvertheless, let such men of themselves ingenuously acknowledge what profits they have gathered, and whence, and let them supplicate for a pardon of their offence to be granted them from Us; both, that their former Avarice [a] may be cured by such an emendation; and also, that the supream God, receiving this satisfaction in place of some repentance as 'twere, may be rendred propitious [and remit] their offences. But, they who have been constituted Owners of such Estates, (if such men either deserve, or can have this Title given them,) alledging this in defence of themselves, will peradventure say; that it was impossible they should abstain [from those things] then, when a manifold spectacle of all manner of mischiefs was set before their eyes; [b] when men were cruel-

[a] Λυθείη, may be dissolved. The reading in the Medicæan Copy is truer, ἰαθῇ, may be cured. Valef.

[b] Καθ' ὃν ὑπῆρχον ὑπολύμβαι. In the Medicæan Copy this place is written far otherwise, in this manner; ὡμῶς ἀπελαυνόμβοι. ἀφειδῶς ὑπολύμβοι. ἀμελῶς ἐρρίμμβοι. ἡμύσεις ὑπ' ἀδὲν αἰτίων συχναὶ. διώξεις ἀκόρεστοι. ὑπ' ὄντων, &c; and we have rendred it accordingly. Which reading, as every one sees, is far truer. For those words καθ' ὃν ὑπῆρχον are altogether superfluous. A little after, in the same Copy the reading is, εἰ δὴ τοῖς τοιούτοις διαχειζοιντο λόγοις πνὲς, &c. But, if any men do insist upon such discourses as these, &c. So 'tis also in the Fuketian Manuscript. Valef.

* Or, Driven away. † Or, Persecutions insatiable. ly * ejected; incompassionately destroyed; carelesly cast forth; when Proscriptions of innocent persons were frequent; the † fury of Persecutors insatiable; and sales of Goods [every where visible.] But, if any men do insist upon such discourses as these, and do persist in their insatiable [c] purposes and intentions; they shall be sensible, that such a practise will not be suffered with an impunity to themselves; especially, in regard on this account chiefly we give our help and Ministery to the supream God. [d] Whatever things therefore a destructive necessity hath heretofore forced || to be received, its now dangerous to keep. And besides, 'tis necessary to lessen Lusts not to be satiated, partly by considerations, and partly by Examples.

|| Or, To receive.

[c] Ἀναιρέσεσιν, admonitions. I corrected this place by the help of the Medicæan Copy, in which 'tis plainly written, αἱρεσιῶσιν, intentions, or, purposes. Vales.

[d] Ὅσα γὲν πρέπτερον. The Medicæan Copy has it, ὡς ἃ πρέπτερον, &c. So that what things a destructive, &c. and a little after, ἐπισφαλὲς ὑπάρχειν, it will now be dangerous, &c. Which I rather approve of. For this period is to be joyned with the foregoing one. Presently, where the reading is ἄλλως τε δὲ, 'tis righter in the Medicæan Copy, where the last particle is wanting. Vales.

CHAP. XXXIX.

That the Exchequer shall restore to the Churches, Grounds, and Gardens, and Houses.

[a] Οὐδὲ γὰρ τὸ ταμεῖον. In the Medicæan Copy the particle γὰρ is wanting; and a little after, in the same Copy the reading is, ἀδὲ ἀποδέχεσθαι. Vales.

[b] Τολμῶσιν I write τολμῆσιν, as 'tis in the Fuketian Copy. Which the Medicæan Manuscript confirms, wherein the reading is ἐτόλμησαν. In the same Copy, after the word Churches, is added λείπει, that is, some words are wanting. Vales.

[a] Nor shall the Exchequer, if it be possest of any of those things forementioned, be permitted firmly to retain them. But, as 'twere not [b] daring to utter any thing of Obloquie against the sacred Churches, those things which for a long time it hath unjustly detained, them it shall at length justly restore to the Churches. All things therefore whatever, which [c] may rightly appear to appertain to the Churches; whether they be Houses [enjoyed as] a Possession; or certain Fields and Gardens; or whatever else they be, (no right belonging [d] to the Dominion being diminished, but all things continuing firm and entire;) We order to be restored.

[c] Ὀρθῶς ἀναφανεῖν. The reading in the Medicæan Copy is truer, thus, ὀρθῶς ἂν φανεῖν, may rightly appear. Vales.

[d] Εἰς τὸν δὲ τῷ πολιτείαν. The emendation of this place is due to the Medicæan Copy, where we found it plainly written εἰς τὸν δεσποτείαν, to the dominion; excellently well. For the Emperours will is, that all places and Farms, which had been taken away from the Christians, should truly and sincerely be restored to them together with their rights. In such a manner that, if service was owing to any Farm or Field, to wit, a drove-way, passage, or highway, it should be restored to the Christians with the same right in no part diminished. Therefore, if any one had mortgaged a Farm taken from a Christian, or had let it out by Lease to be planted and improved, or by a sale of it had encumbred it with any burthen or service; all these things are by Constantine's Edict rescinded. A little after, where the reading is ἀνδίσασθαι περσάσομεν, from the same Copy we have mended it thus, ἀποδίσασθαι, to be restored. Yet, the Fuketian, Turnebian, and Savilian Copies have ἐξίσασθαι to be yielded up; which is no ill reading. Vales.

CHAP. XL.

The * Martyria and Cœmiteries † are ordered to be yielded up to the Churches.

* Places, where the Reliques of any Martyr are.

† In the Greek 'tis, we order.

[a] Καὶ μὴν χ. In Morum's Copy 'tis mended, ναὶ μὴν χ; which pleases me better. Vales.

[a] Moreover, who doubts but those places, which have been honoured with the Bodies of the Martyrs, and are the Monuments of their glorious departure, do belong to the Churches? Yea rather, who would not even command that? In as much as, there can be no Gift more valuable, nor can there be any other Labour pleasanter, and [b] which has in it more of advantage, than that, by the impulse of the divine [c] Spirit, a diligent care be taken about these matters; to the end that those places, which with wicked pretexts have been taken away by unjust and [d] most flagitious men, being justly yielded up, may be restored again to [God's] sacred Churches.

[b] After these words in the Greek, in the Medicæan Manuscript follow these, ἕτερ ἂν γένοιτο, can there be any other; which words are wanting in the ordinary Editions. Vales.

[c] Πνεύματι, Spirit. In the Medicæan Copy 'tis νεύματι τῷ περὶ ἢ τοιούτων ποιεῖσθαι σπουδὴν, will, a diligent care be taken about such matters as these. Also, in the Fuk. Turneb. and Savil. Copies the reading is ποιεῖσθαι. Vales. In Robert Stephens, 'tis ποιεῖν, to take a diligent, &c.

[d] Μοχθηροτάτων. In the Medicæan Copy 'tis πονηροτάτων, most wicked. Vales.

CHAP. XLI.

That such as have bought things belonging to the Church, or have received them as a gift, must restore them.

[a] But, because it appertains to an entire and absolute * providence, that they should not be past over in silence, who [b] either by a right of Emption have bought any thing of the Exchequer, or by a Title of donation have possest themselves of any thing as granted to them, having [c] in vain [d] extended their insatiable desires to such Goods: Let all such persons know, that although they have attempted to alienate Our Clemency from themselves, by reason of their most notorious audaciousness in making such purchases; nevertheless, that our Benignity shall not be wanting to them, so far as 'tis possible and becoming. But let it suffice thus far to have treated concerning these matters.

* Or, Provision.

[a] From these words I began a new chapter: I also put the Title before it, which was wanting in the Geneva-Edition, and in that of Robert Stephens printed at Paris. Which defect we made up from the Fuketian Manuscript and the Kings Sheets. Vales.

[b] Ἡ ὠνῆ δικαία. The Medicæan Copy opened to us the true writing of this place; wherein the reading is ἢ ὠνῆς δικαίων. I write, ἢ ὠνῆς δικαίῳ, either by a right of Emption. Indeed, to style this Emption just, is contrary to the mind of Constantine, who terms these purchases unjust and nefarious presumptions. Vales.

[c] Μάτην χ' ὅτι τὰ τοιαῦτα. I had conjectured long since, that the particle χ' was to be expunged: which conjecture of ours the Medicæan Copy does plainly confirm. The Emperour speaks concerning those men, who had petitioned that these places might be given them by the Emperours. Which Christophorson perceived not. Presently, in the same Copy the reading is, γινωσκέτωσαν ὡς τοιοῦτοι, &c; truer than in the ordinary Editions, ὅσοι τοιοῦτοι. In the Fuk. and Turneb. Copies 'tis ὅσοι τοίνυν τοιοῦτοι, which is the worst reading of all. Vales.

[d] Ἐκπίνοντες. In the Fuketian Copy 'tis ἐκπίναντες. Vales.

CHAP. XLII.

An Earnest Exhortation to worship God.

[a] Further, whereas it hath been [b] made apparent by most evident and most perspicuous demonstrations; partly by the power and might of

[a] Ἐπειδὴ δὲ. In the Medicæan Copy 'tis ἐπειδὴ δὲ. Vales.

[b] Ἐξεφάνη ἢ ἀρετὴ. If I mistake not, the reading in the Medicæan Copy is truer, thus, ἐξεφάνη· ἀρετῇ τε τοῦ, &c. and we have pointed and rendred it accordingly. It should, I think, also be τοῦ παντοδυνάμου Θεοῦ, of the omnipotent God. Vales.

the

the Omnipotent God, [c] and partly by the Exhortations and Assistances which He desires should frequently be given by Me; that that calamitous grief and disquietude, which had heretofore seized the whole Complex of Humane affairs, hath now been banished from all places under the Sun: all of you in generall, and each person in particular, by a most accurate * inspection do perceive, what and how great that [d] Power, what that Grace is, which hath wholly extinguished and destroyed the Seed (as I may so say) of the [e] most flagitious and wickedest men; but hath recalled the gladness of the Good, and abundantly diffused it throughout all Regions: and which hath permitted all immaginable Liberty to all persons, that they should again both pay a meet worship to the divine Law it self with the highest veneration, and also in a befitting manner revere those who have consecrated themselves to the service of that Law. Who having risen up out of [f] a most profound darkness as 'twere, and received a clear knowledge of [g] Affairs, [h] will in future exhibite a due observancy, and a pious and agreeable honour to this Law. Let it be published in Our Eastern parts.

* Or, Meditation.

[c] Παρεμφέρεσι δ' ἄμα. In the Medicæan Copy the reading is ἐμῇ παρεμφέρειαν ἅμα. Also δι' ὧν is wanting in that Copy, and likewise ἤδη συμβαίνει. All which words were added by those who understood not this Oration. The whole place therefore is to be rendred thus. Porro cum certissimis ac evidentissimis, &c. Further, whereas it hath, &c. There is nothing clearer than this reading, nothing more certain. Instead of ὑφ' ἐμοῦ for me, it must in my judgment be ὑπ' ἐμοῦ or παρ' ἐμοῦ, by me, or from me. For Constantine meanes his own Ministery or Service, which he lent God in the effecting of these things. Concerning which matter he does, not without reason, boast in the beginning of this Edict. Vales.

[d] Ἡ ἐξουσία. In the Medicæan Copy the Article is wanting; and after these words, are added these, τὶς χάρις, what that Grace is. Which words cannot be wanting without a great detriment to the whole sentence. For, the term ἐξουσία imports that which he has above termed ἀρετὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ, the power of God: but χάρις signifies the Benefit conferred upon men by the assistance and ministery of Constantine. Vales.

[e] Ἡ τῶν μὴ μοχθηροτάτων. In the Medicæan Manuscript, 'tis ἢ τῶν μὴ πονηροτάτων καὶ μοχθηροτάτων, of the most flagitious and wickedest. Further, it must be made ἢ; as 'tis in the King's Copy, in the Fuketian Manuscript, and in the Sheets. Vales.

[f] Σκότους βαθέως. In the Medicæan Copy the reading is βαθυτάτου most profound. Vales.

[g] Γραμμάτων. The Medicæan Manuscript has it πραγμάτων of affairs. I found the same reading in the Kings Copy, in the Old sheets, and in the Fuketian Copy. Away therefore with Robert Stephens's Emendation. Vales. In Stephens 'tis γραμμάτων, of Letters.

[h] In the Medicæan Copy the close of this Edict runs thus; διεγράφην τε πᾶσι φανερὰν τὴν λοιπὴν περὶ αὐτὸν καὶ τιμὴν σύμφωνον ἐπιδείξονται· φροντιεῖτε ἐν τοῖς ἡμετέροις ἀναλολικοῖς μέρεσιν. i.e. Will in future exhibit a due observancy, and a pious and agreeable honour to this Law. Let it be published in Our Eastern Parts. And this is the Subscription, which (as Eusebius attests, Chap. 23.) was put to this Edict in Constantine's own hand. For the Emperours were wont, in their own hand to add to the Edicts they sent out, proponatur, let it be published; and to give that in Command to the Præfecti Prætorio, as it appears from the Novells of Valentinianus and Majorianus. Indeed, even this one word ἡμετέροις Our, is a sufficient indication, that this Subscription was added in Constantine's own hand. For 'tis the Emperour himself that speaks, and who calls the Eastern parts His own. For so the Emperours were wont to expresse themselves, then especially, when they spoke of any Province lately reduced under their Government. So Constantine in his Letter to Elasius, and in that to Probianus Proconsul of Africk, says, Africam Nostram Our Africa; and in the first Law Cod. Theod. de Veterank, apud Nicomediam nostram, at Our Nicomedia. So in the only Law Cod. Theod. de his qui sanguinolentos, &c. Imperator Constantinus Italis suis, Emperour Constantine to his Italians. Lastly, Constantius Cæsar in his Letter to Eumenius, which Letter Eumenius records in His Oration pro scholis; Merentur Galli nostri, &c. Our Galli are in service, &c. Further, this Edict of Constantine occurs, in the Medicæan Copy, after the Books of Ecclesiastick History, with this Title, ἀντίγραφον διατάξεως τοῦ θεοφιλοῦς βασιλέως, ἣν τοῦ τυράννους καθελὼν, τοῖς ὑπ' αὐτὸν ἔθνεσιν ἑλληνικῇ συνταξας φωνῇ διεπέμψατο, that is, a Copy of the Constitution of the Emperour dear to God, which, (after he had destroyed the Tyrants,) he wrote in the Greek Tongue, and transmitted to the Provinces under him. Vales.

CHAP. XLIII.

That those things which Constantine had established by Laws, were by him really accomplished and performed.

THese were the Constitutions contained in the Emperours first Edict sent to [a] us. Immediately therefore the Orders contained in this Law were effectually put into Execution: and all things were transacted, contrary to what a little before had been audaciously perpetrated by Tyrannick Cruelty. And they, to whom the Law granted them, enjoyed the Imperial Indulgences.

[a] Hence it appears, that the Writer of this History was a Palestinian. Which I was therefore willing to remark, because Dionysius Gotofredus thought, that Eusebius Cæsariensis was not the Authour of this Work: which nevertheless 'tis easie to refute, both by innumerable testimonies of ancient Writers, and also from very many passages of this Work; especially from chap. 45, and 46, of this Book. Now, the foresaid Law of Constantine was issued out to the Palestinians in particular, for this reason, because the persecution had raged most sorely there, and there had been many Confessours and Martyrs in that Province. Notice likewise is to be taken of what Eusebius says, viz. that this first Sanction or Edict of Constantine had been brought to them. For that Edict concerning the Peace and Liberty of the Christians, which Constantine had sent into the East after his conquest of Maxentius, was by Maximine's fraud suppress, as Eusebius tells us in the beginning of his ninth Book. Vales.

CHAP. XLIV.

That he preferred Christians to the Government of Provinces; but if [any of the Governours] were Pagans, he forbad them to sacrifice.

AFter this, the Emperour * put his hand seriously to the work. And in the first place, most of those he sent as Governours of the Nations distributed throughout the Provinces, were persons dedicated to the salutary Faith. But, if any of them seemed addicted to Gentilism, it was forbidden them to Sacrifice. The same Law was imposed also [a] upon those, who in dignity preceded the Presidents, as likewise on them that had obtained the highest pitch of honour and the power of the Prætorian Præfecture. For either, if they were Christians, he gave them permission, that they should perform what was correspondent to their Appellation: or else, if they were otherwise affected, he ordered them not to worship Idols.

* Or, took in hand affairs of the highest consequence.

[a] Ἐπὶ τῶν ὑποκειμένων τοῖς ἡγεμονικαῖς ἀρχαῖς ἀξιωμάτων. He means the Vicarii, Comites, and Proconsuls.

For these dignities were far more eminent than those of the Presidents, as every one knows. But Christophorson, according to his usuall mistake, translates ἡγεμόνας Præfects; than which nothing is more absurd. Vales.

CHAP. XLV.

Concerning the Laws forbidding Sacrifices, and ordering the Churches to be built.

SOon after, [a] two Laws were issued out at one and the same time. The one whereof forbad the detestable Sacrifices to Idols, heretofore usually performed in every City and Country; so that, no person in future should dare, either to * erect the Statues of the Gods, or to attempt divinations and other such vain † Arts; [b] nor, in any wise to Sacrifice. The other Law ordered the structures of the Oratories to be raised to a vast height, and the Churches of God to be enlarged both in length and breadth; as if all mankind (I had almost said) were about to unite themselves to God, and as if the madness of Polytheism had been wholly destroyed. The Emperour's own Piety towards God moved him to entertain such Sentiments as these, and thus to write to the Presidents of each Province. The Law contained this also, that they should not be sparing in the expence of money; but, that the charges [of building the Churches] should be defrayed out of the Imperial Treasures. Moreover, he wrote Letters of this sort to the Prelates of Churches in all places: and such a one he vouchsafed to write to me also, which was the first Letter he sent to me by name.

[a] Δύο καὶ τὸ αὐτό. Christophorson renders it, duæ Leges in eandem sententiam promulgabantur, two Laws were promulged to the same effect, or meaning: wherein he seems to have followed Portesius, who had rendred it thus; Duæ postea Leges emissæ non ita dissimili argumento, Two Laws were afterwards issued out of a Subject not unlike. But I thought καὶ τὸ αὐτὸ to be the same with simul, uno eodemque tempore, together, at one and the same time. For so Eusebius does usually express himself. Vales.

* Or, Make erections of Statues.

† Or, Curiositics.

[b] Μήτε μὴν δύεσθαι χαλάσαι. These words of Eusebius are to be understood concerning private Sacrifices. For Constantine the Great prohibited by a Law, that no one of the Heathens should Sacrifice privately at home, as the First Law in the Theodosian Code de Paganis informs us. Therefore, he had prohibited, that the Aruspices should be called out to any private house on account of Sacrificing. For these persons inspected the Entrails of Victims. But Constantine forbad not the going to the publick Temples to Sacrifice, and there to make use of the assistance of the Aruspices, as the first Law in the Theodosian Code de Maleficis, attests. See Libanius in his Oration pro Templis, pag. 10, and what Gotofred has noted there. Vales.

CHAP. XLVI.

Constantine's [Letter] to Eusebius and the rest of the Bishops, concerning the building of Churches; and that the old-ones should be repaired, and built larger by the [assistance of the] Presidents.

VICTOR CONSTANTINUS MAXIMUS AUGUSTUS, To Eusebius.

WE really believe and are absolutely perswaded (Dearest Brother,) that, in regard an impious * presumption and a Tyrannick Violence hath Persecuted the Servants of Our Saviour even to this present time, the Edifices of all Churches, have either by neglect gone to ruine, or through fear of the imminent iniquity [of the Times] [a] have been less worthily adorned. But now, since Liberty is restored, and that [b] Serpent by Almighty God's providence, and our instrumental endeavours, is forc't out of the Administration of publick affairs; we suppose that the Divine power hath been sufficiently manifested to all men: have been less worthily adorned. There is also another Emendation, set at the margin of the Geneva Edition, ἐλάττονα τῆς ἀξίας γεγονῶτας, have been adorned with less of statelinesse. Any one might guess likewise, that this place should be read and construed thus, ἀξίως τῆς ὑπαχθείσης ἀδικίας, &c. or through fear have been made agreeable to the imminent iniquity [of the Times.] But that reading μὴ ἀξίως is truer, and is confirmed by the Fuketian Copy. Vales. In Socrates (book 1. chap. 9. Eccles. History; where this Letter occurs) the reading is ἐλάττονα τῆς ἀξίας, &c. have been adorned with less of statelinesse.

* Desire, or, purpose.

[a] Ἀξίας γεγονότας. In Moræus's Copy 'tis mended thus at the margin, μὴ ἀξίως γεγονότας, and that those, who [c] either through fear or unbelief have fallen into any sins, having now [d] acknowledged * Him that truly is, will in future return to the true and right Course of Life. Do you therefore remind as well [all persons belonging to] the Churches over which you preside, as also Bishops presiding in other places, together with the Presbyters and Deacons whom you know, that they use their utmost diligence about the structures of the Churches; either about repairing those that are still standing, or about enlarging them, or in building new ones where ever it shall be found requisite. And You your Self, and the rest by Your Mediation, may aske necessaries [for that work,] both from Our Presidents of the Provinces, and also from the [e] Office of the Prætorian Præfecture. [f] For they have already been empowered by Letters, to be diligently observant about Your Holinesse's Orders. God preserve You, Beloved Brother.

[b] I suppose Licinius to be meant, whom Constantine does thus term, because of his craftiness and age. Indeed, these following words, forc't out of the administration of publick affairs, do sufficiently evince this to be spoken of Licinius. Whence also it may be conjectured, that this Letter was written a little after Licinius's deposition. Vales. See Socrates, book 1, chap. 9. note (o.)

* Τὸ ὄντως ὄν. In Socrates the reading is τὸν ὄντως ὄντα θεὸν, Him that is truly God.

[c] Ἡ φόβῳ ἢ ἀπιστίᾳ. In the beginning of this Letter, instead of ἀπιστία unbelief, he made use of the term ἀμέλεια neglect. By the word Fear those Christians are meant, who through fear of the Persecution had neglected the Churches, or renounced the Faith: but the word unbelief belongs to the Pagans or Infidells, who had disturbed the sacred Houses, and severall waies molested the Christians. Vales.

[d] Ἐπιγνόντας τε. The particle τε must be expunged; which occurs not in the Fuketian Copy. Vales. See Socrat. book 1. chap. 9. note (p.)

[e] See book 1. chap. 54. note (b.) The ἔπαρχοι are the Præfecti Prætorio, so termed because they were ἐπὶ τοῖς ἄρχουσι, that is, over the Presidents and Governours of Provinces. Therefore ἐπαρχικὴ τάξις is the Office of the Prætorian Præfecture, concerning which the Notitia of the Roman Empire is to be consulted. Further, the Office of the Præfectus Prætorio was supream to all other Offices of all the Magistrates. For, as the Præfectus Prætorio in dignity excelled the rest of the Judges as well Civill as Military, so also his Officialls were more honourable than all other Apparitors. Hence, in the Chalcedon Council, Action 3, the Office of the Præfecti Prætorio is termed μείζων τάξις the greatest Office. These things were not understood by the Translatours, whose mistake I had rather pass over in silence, than invidiously refute it. In the Fuketian Copy I found it written, ἢ ἀπὸ τῆς ἐπαρχικῆς τάξεως, as 'tis also in S[r] Henry Savils Copy. Vales.

[f] Τέτοις γὰρ ἐπεστάλθη. Christophorson renders it, Hisce enim per literas à me significatum est, For they are acquainted herewith by Letters from me: He has added the words à me from me, of his own head; which I like not. For, not the Emperour himself, but the Præfecti Prætorio most commonly wrote these sort of Letters. Vales.

[g] The same Letters were sent to the Prelates of Churches throughout every Province. And the Presidents of Provinces were ordered to do what was agreeable and consonant hereto. So that, withall imaginable speed the Precepts of the Law were effectually put in Execution.

[g] From these words a new chapter is begun in the King's Copy. Further, hence it appears, that Constantine wrote Letters after the same Copy to the rest of the Bishops of the East. Vales.

CHAP. XLVII.

That he wrote against Idolatry.

BUt the Emperour made a further progress in his [a] Piety towards God, and transmitted to the Provincials in each Province, [b] an Oration against the errour of Idolatry,

[a] Τὴν πρὸς τὸν θεὸν ὁσίαν διδασκαλίαν. Translatours have rendred this place extreamly ill, in regard they thought ὁσίαν was an adjective; nor could they perceive, that a Comma was to be placed after ὁσίαν. ὁσία signifies nothing else but Piety, or an observancy of the Deity. In this sense 'tis used in chap. 45. of this book, and in several other places in Eusebius. Vales.

[b] Διδασκαλίαν τῆς εἰδωλολατρείας. It must be written διδασκαλίαν κατὰ τῆς, &c. an Oration against, &c; as I found it mended in the margin of Moræus's Copy. Διδασκαλία imports here a speech, Oration, διδασκαλικὸς λόγος. In the Fuketian Copy this place is written thus, διδασκαλίαν κατὰ τῆς εἰδωλολατρείας καὶ πλάνης, an Oration against Idolatry and Errour. Vales.

latry,

latry, wherein they had been involved, [c] who had Governed the Roman Empire before him. [In which Oration] he exhorted His Subjects with an admirable eloquence, to acknowledge the supream God, and openly to assume to themselves his [Son] Christ to be their Saviour. Moreover, I judged it necessary to translate this Letter also, written with his own hand, out of the Latine Tongue [into Greek,] and insert it in to this present work; that we may seem to hear the Emperour himself, crying out in the hearing of all men after this manner.

[c] Τῶν πρὸ αὐτοῦ κεκρατηκότων. Christophorson has rendred this place very ill; who, as I think, had not seen Portesius's Version. For Portesius has rendred these words right, although he has not hit the sense. Vales.

CHAP. XLVIII.

Constantine's Edict to the Provinces, concerning the Errour of Polytheism. The preface, concerning Virtue and Vice.

VICTOR CONSTANTINUS MAXIMUS AUGUSTUS, To the † Provincials of the East.

† Or, Eastern Provincials.

ALL things what ever that are contained in the most Authentick Laws of Nature, do give all men sufficient notices of a divine providence over and ‖ Inspection into the administration of all matters. Nor is there any doubt to those, whose minds are by the right way of knowledge † directed to that end, but an accurate comprehension of a sound mind and of the very sight it self, [a] by one and the same impulse of true Virtue, may lead to the knowledge of God. Wherefore, no considerate person can ever be disturbed, when he perceives most men following * Courses of Life contrary the one to the other. For, the Beauty of Virtue would be [b] unusefull and lye concealed, unless improbity should on the other hand † set forth a perverse and depraved way of living. Therefore, a Crown is proposed to Virtue; but the Most high God presides in the Judgment [and punishment of Improbity.] But, I will attempt, with all possible perspicuity, to ‖ discourse to you all, concerning those * Hopes I have of things future.

‖ Θεωρίας, contemplation; Valesius renders it Intelligence.

† Or, Carried to that scope.

[a] Μιᾷ ῥοπῇ τῆς ἀληθοῦς ἀρετῆς. Virtue seems here to be taken for perfection, as well that which is in the sight, as that in the intellect. For each power and perfection tends to the same end, to wit, the knowledge of truth. The sense proceeds to the truth of things sensible; and the understanding to the verity of Intelligibles from the truth it self of things sensible: and hence by degrees it ascends to the knowledge of the supream God. Also at this place ἀρετὴ τοῦ ἀληθοῦς may be termed the force and virtue of Truth. Yet, the following words doe assure us, that this place must be taken concerning Moral Virtue. Vales. Valesius renders those Greek words set at the beginning of this note thus, veræ virtutis eodem urgente atque inclinante naturâ, the nature of true Virtue verging and inclining to the same end.

* Or, Contrary purposes.

† Or, Disclose a life of perverse madness.

‖ Or, Make a confession.

* Or, Hopes within my self.

[b] Ἀνόητος, foolish or absurd. I read ἀνόνητος unusefull, as 'tis in the Fuketian Manuscript, and in Moræus's, and Gruter's Copy. A little after I write, διὰ τὴν μὴ ἀρετὴν στέφανος προκεῖται, Therefore a Crown is proposed to Virtue. But these words are very obscure and intricate; which is partly to be attributed to Constantine himself, in regard being ὄψιμαθὴς a person that began to learn late, he was more obscure in expressing himself; and partly to Eusebius, or whoever else it was, who of obscure Latine words made the Greek more obscure. In the Fuketian Manuscript the reading is ἀνόνητος, and διὰ τῆς μὴ ἀρετῆς, &c. excellently well. Vales.

CHAP. XLIX.

Concerning the Pious Father of Constantine; and concerning Diocletian and Maximian the Persecutors.

I Always look't upon the former Emperours, by reason of the Ferity of their dispositions, as persons * extraneous and forreign. My Father was the only man, who took in hand works of Lenity and Mansuetude; and with an admirable Piety invoaked God the Father in all his Actings. But the rest [of the Emperours,] not sound as to their Intellectualls, made immanity, rather then mildness, their Business; and this they nourished † in a wonderfull manner, subverting the true doctrine during their own times. Further, the fury of their improbity was kindled to such a degree, that [a] Civill Wars were raised by them, against all as well Divine as Humane affairs, when in the greatest repose and tranquillity imaginable.

* Ἀποκλήρους, men disinherited.

† Or, Prosusely.

[a] He terms the Persecutions of the Christians, Civill Wars. For there is nothing liker a Civill War, than when the Christians were put to flight and murdered in all Cities, not by an incursion of Enemies and Barbarians, but of their own Fellow-Citizens. Vales.

CHAP. L.

That by reason of Apollo's Oracle, who could not give forth Responses because of The just Men, a Persecution was raised.

IT was reported, that at that time Apollo gave forth an Oracle out of a certain Den and dark Cavern, not by humane voice; whereby he declared, that The just men upon earth were an hindrance to him, that he could not speak the truth: and, that on this account † false Oracles were given out from the Tripods: and, that for this reason [a] his mournfull propheteſs suffered her long hair to hang down neglected; and, the Art of Divination being banish't, lamented that great Evill amongst men. But Let us see, what manner of conclusion these things were brought to.

† Or, The Oracles of the Tripods were made false.

[a] Τοῦτο αὐτοῦ κατηφεῖς. It must be written, τοῦτο αὐτοῦ προφῆτις (or, if you will, ἱερεία) κατηφὴς; which reading we have followed in our Version. Portesius also, and Morinus understood these words concerning the Pythia or Priestess of Apollo. But, in the excellent Fuketian Manuscript, this whole place is written thus, τοῦτο αὐτοῦ κληφεῖς τοὺ πλοκάμους ἀνεῖναι πεποίηκε. τῆς μαντείας τ' ἐλαυνομένης, &c. For this reason he [Apollo] suffered his mournfull long hair to hang down neglected, &c: whereto agrees S^r Henry Savils Copy. Presently, in the same Copies the reading is εἰς ὁποῖον τέλος κατέληξεν, in what manner of end these things terminated. Vales.

CHAP. LI.

That Constantine, when he was a youth, heard that the just men were the Christians, from him that had written the [Edicts] concerning the Persecution.

I Now † appeal to Thee, Most high God! [Thou knowest,] that being then [a] very young I heard, how He, who at that time held the chief-

† Or, Call upon.

[a] Κομιδῆ παῖς ὑπάρχων. In the Greek Title of this chapter, 'tis truer written, νέος a youth. For Constantine was not then a child, when, as an Hostage, he resided at Diocletian's Court. For, he was delivered by his Father Constantius to Diocletian, on the year of Christ 291; after Constantius had been made Cæsar by Diocletian. At which time Constantine was about 15 years old. For he dyed on the year of Christ 337, in the 62 year of his age. Vales.

* Or, Deceived in mind by errour.

eſt place amongſt the Roman Emperours, (a perſon wretched, truly miſerable, * impoſed upon by the errour of his mind;) with a great deal of curioſity enquired of thoſe that were his Guards, who thoſe juſt men were [that lived] upon the earth: and, that one of the Sacrificers about him made anſwer, that they were the Chriſtians. The Emperour, [b] having devoured this anſwer like ſome honey, unſheathed the Swords, * prepared to puniſh Crimes, againſt an unblamable Sanctity. Immediately therefore he wrote Edicts of Bloud [c] with bloudy points of Swords (as I may ſay;) and ordered his judges to [d] ſtretch that ſubtilty implanted on them by nature, to an invention of Acuter puniſhments.

[b] Βεβχθήσας μάλι. In the Fuk. and Savil. Manuſcripts the reading is truer, βεβχθίσας; and 'tis the ſame in the King's Copy. Valeſ.

* Or, Invented.

[c] Μιαφόνοις ἀκωκαῖς. He alludes to the point of an inſtrument to write with. Conſtantine expreſſes himſelf with much of Eloquence, in ſaying, that thoſe Laws concerning the Perſecution of the Chriſtians, were written with the bloudy points of Swords. So ſome of the Ancients tell us, that Draco's Laws were written with bloud, not with ink. Valeſ.

[d] Ἐκτείνειν to produce. I had rather ſay ὀπτείνειν to ſtretch; which is an uſual expreſſion with Euſebius. Valeſ.

CHAP. LII.

How many ſorts of Tortures and Puniſhments were made uſe of againſt the Chriſtians.

THen you might, [I ſay] you might have beheld, with how great a freedom [and Licence] the * venerable worſhippers of God daily underwent the ſevereſt of Contumelies, [cauſed] by a continuedneſs of Cruelty. For, that modeſty, which even none of the Enemies ever affected with any injury, [a] was made the eaſie ſport and paſtime of the contumely of their own enraged Fellow-Citizens. What fire, what manner of Torments, what ſort of Tortures was not made uſe of upon every body, and without diſtinction [applied] [b] to perſons of all ages whatever? Doubtleſs, at that time the Earth wept; the Heavens, within whoſe circumference all things are contained, being defiled with Bloud, lamented. Alſo, the very [light of the] day it ſelf was clouded by the ſorrow and horrour of that prodigy.

* Or, That gravity of piety.

[a] Παρεσνίας παίφερον ἐγίνε]ο. So above, at book 1. chap. 27. Euſebius ſpeaking of Severus Cæſar, ſays παίφερον ἐχίνε]ο θανάτ] became a cheap and eaſie ſacrifice of death; where ſee what we have noted concerning that expreſſion. For the Tranſlatours perceived nothing here. Valeſ. In the Greek Text of Valeſius's Edition, the term παρεσνίας is left out; but it occurs in Robert Stephens.

[b] Καὶ ἡλικία πάσῃ. In the Fuketian Copy the reading is ἐκ ἡλικία πάσῃ. A little after, in the ſame Copy, and in the King's Sheets 'tis written, ἥ γε μὴν ἡμέρα αὐτὴ τῇ πένθει τὸ σύμπα]ον ἐνεκαλύπ]ετο. Valeſ. The reading in Robert Stephens is the ſame alſo.

CHAP. LIII.

What reception was given to the Chriſtians by the Barbarians.

BUt why [do I mention] theſe things? On account hereof the Barbarians do now boaſt, who gave reception to the men of our Country that fled at that time, and * treated the Captives with all imaginable tenderneſs and humanity. For, they allowed them not only ſafety, but permitted them to retain † their religious worſhip with ſecurity. Therefore, the Romans do now bear this perpetuall Brand of Infamy, which the Chriſtians, at that time driven out of the Roman world, and flying to the Barbarians, fixt upon them.

* Kept, or, Preſerved.

† Or, The rites of their Sanctimony.

CHAP. LIV.

What manner of Revenge overtook them, who, on account of the Oracle, raiſed a Perſecution.

BUt, what need I in many words rehearſe thoſe Lamentations, and that common mourning of the whole world? Thoſe Authours of ſo horrid an impiety, periſhed afterwards by a moſt ignominious end, and were thruſt down into the pits of Acharon, to an eternall puniſhment. For, having been * involved in inteſtine Wars, they left no Remains, either of their Name, or Stock. Which doubtleſs had never hapned to them, had not the impious prophecy of the Oracles of Apollo had a falſe and depraved force.

* Or, Mixt together.

CHAP. LV.

Conſtantine's Glorification of God, and his confeſſion in reference to the ſign of the Croſs; and his Prayer for the Churches and people.

NOw, I beſeech Thee, * Moſt ſupream God! Be mild and propitious to Thy Eaſterns: Be [merciſull] to all thy Provincialls, worn out by a laſting Calamitie: by me Thy ſervant, † adminiſter a Remedy. And theſe things I aske of thee not without Cauſe, O Thou Lord of all, Holy God! For, by Thy Guidance and Aſſiſtance, I have undertaken and perfected Salutary Affairs. Every where carrying before Me Thy Sign, I have lead on my Victorious Army. And as often as the publick neceſſity requires, following thoſe very Enſigns of thy ‖ Virtue, I march out againſt the Enemy. For theſe reaſons I have dedicated my mind to Thee, purely tempered with love and fear. For I love Thy Name with a ſincerity: but I have an awfull fear for Thy Power, which Thou haſt demonſtrated by many indications, and haſt thereby rendred my faith firmer. I haſten therefore, to put my ſhoulders, may own ſhoulders [I ſay to the Work,] that I may re-edifie thy Moſt holy [a] Houſe; which thoſe deteſtable and moſt impious [wretches] have ruined by * a wicked overthrow.

* Or, Greateſt.

† Or, Reach forth.

‖ Or, Power.

* Or, By a wickedneſs of demoliſhment.

[a] He means The Catholick Church, which in the next chapter he terms the Houſe of Truth. In the ſacred Scriptures 'tis called The Pillar and Ground of Truth. A little after, from the Fuketian and Savil. Manuſcripts, and from the King's Sheets write, ὃν ὁι μυσαγὸ ἐκεῖνοι, &c. which thoſe deteſtable, &c. Valeſ.

CHAP. LVI.

How he prayes, that all perſons may be Chriſtians; but forces no body.

I Deſire, that thy people may live in Repoſe, and without Tumult or diſturbance, for the common advantage of the world and all Mortalls.

May

May those involved in the Errour [of Gentilism] with gladness partake of an enjoyment of the same Peace and Quiet with the Believers. [a] For, this Reparation of mutuall society will be of great efficacy in leading men to the true way. Let no person molest another. [b] Let every one do that which his soul desireth. Yet, it behooves those whose Sentiments are true, to be firmly perswaded, that they only shall live holily and purely, whom Thou calleſt [to this,] that they should acquiesce in Thy holy Laws. But, let those who withdraw themselves, have their Temples of Lies, since they desire them. We retain the most splendid House of Thy Truth, || which Thou hast given us according to Nature. We wish this likewise to them, namely, that by a common consent and agreement, they also may reap a delight of mind.

[a] Πρὸς τῶν ἐυθείαν ἀγαγεῖν ὁδὸν ἰοῦσι. In the Fuketian Copy the reading is ἰοῦς. But that is the true reading which I found in the Kings Sheets, ἰοῦσει. Which indeed is far more elegant; and we have rendred it accordingly. Valeſ.

[a] Ἕκας ὅπῃ ἡ ψυχὴ βάλεται, τοῦτο ἐξῇ πεπόηται. The meaning is, Let every one follow what religion he has a mind to. By which words Constantine leaves His Subjects an entire Liberty of worshipping the Deity according as every one shall have a mind. For, the Most Religious Prince earnestly desired indeed, that all Mortalls should come to the Faith of Christ: but he never compelled any one to that. He wish't that the Heathens were freed from their Pristine Errour: notwithstanding, he prohibited not the Ceremonies and sacrifices of the Temples, as he himself attests hereafter, at chap. 60. Valeſ.

|| Ὅπερ καὶ φύσιν δέδωκας. Valeſius renders it, quam nascentibus nobis donasti, which thou gavest us when born. I understand neither the Emperour's, nor Valeſius's meaning.

CHAP. LVII.

He gives Glory to God, who by his Son has enlightned those that were in Errour.

[a] Concerning the Originall and Antiquity of the Christian Religion, Eusebius writes the same in the beginning of his Ecclesiastick History, and in his books de Evangelicâ Demonstratione. Valeſ.

[a] Nor is our Religion new, or of a late date; but, from such time as we believe this beautifull Fabrick of the world to have stood firmly put together, Thou hast instituted this [Religion] with a due observancy of Thy Deity. Further, Mankind seduced by various Errours, hath stumbled. But, least this Evill should increase and grow stronger, Thou by Thy Son hast raised up a pure Light, and hast put all men in mind * of the worship of Thy Deity.

* Or, Concerning Thy Self.

CHAP. LVIII

Another Glorification of God, from his * Government of the world.

* Charge, or, Administration.

† Or, Way.

|| Or, Circuit.

* Or, Station.

[a] Κατὰ τὴ ἐπειταχθέντα καιρόν. I read κατὰ τὸν ἐπιταχθέντα καιρὸν, according to a set time; as Christophorson seems to have read. And so the reading is in the Fuketian and Savilian Manuscripts. Valeſ.

† Or, Slides by.

Thy Works give confirmation to these things. Thy Power makes us innocent and faithfull. The Sun and Moon have their stated and prescribed † Road; nor are the Stars moved round the || Axis of the whole world in an irregular manner. The Vicissitudes of Times recur by a certain Law. By Thy word the firm * site of the Earth hath been established. And the wind makes its motion [a] according to a set time. Also, the current and carriage of the waters † proceeds from the motion of a restless Flux. The Sea is contained within fixt and immovable Bounds. And what ever is diffused therow the Earth and Ocean, every such thing is framed for certain admirable and || great Uses. Which unless it were in this manner governed according to the Arbitrement of Thy Will, doubtless so great a diversity, and [b] so manifold a division of power, would have brought destruction upon the whole world and humane affairs. [c] For they who have waged War against one another, would doubtless have fought with a greater vehemency against mankind. Which questionless they do, although they are not seen with the Eyes.

|| Or, usefull advantages.

[b] Πολλὴν τῆς ἐξουσίας διάκρισιν: that is, so manifold a divinity, to wit, of the Sun, Moon, Stars, and Elements, concerning which he hath spoken above. For all these, unless they were governed by the Beck and Power of one God, would likewise be Gods. Ἐξουσία therefore imports a power subject to no dominion; which we commonly term an Independency, which is proper to God only. Valeſ.

[c] He means the Gods of the Heathens, as I have said above: to wit, the Sun, Moon, and the rest of the Elements of the world, which Antiquity worshipped for Gods. Presently, from the Fuketian Copy write τὸ ἀνθρώπινον ἐμάχησε ϑεῷ as the reading also is in the Kings Sheets. Valeſ.

CHAP. LIX.

He praises God, in regard he always teaches good things.

We give Thee many thanks, Thou Lord of all, Greatest God! For, by how much the more Humane Nature is known from different * Endeavours; by so much the more the † Precepts of the Divine Religion are confirmed in those, whose Sentiments are right, and [a] who are studious of true Virtue. But, whoever hinders himself from being cured, [b] let not him impute that to another. For the Medicine, which † is of strength sufficient to effect the Cure, is publickly proposed to all men. Only [this must be taken care of,] that no one should violate that Religion, which the things themselves do manifest to be pure and immaculate. Let all us men therefore make use of the || allotment of that Good in common conferred on us, that is, the blessing of Peace; to wit, by separating our Consciences from every thing that is contrary to it.

* Or, Studies.

† Or, The Discipline — is confirmed &c.

† Or, Presides over the Cure.

[a] Γνησίας ὁπωσοῦν μεμελετηκόσι ἀρετῆς. In the Fuketian and St Henry Savils Copy the reading is γνησίως, &c. who are sincerely studious of Virtue. Valeſ.

[b] Ἀλλ' ᾧ τοῦτο μὴ λογίζεσθω. That is, whosoever suffers not himself to be cured, or freed from the disease of Idolatry; let him impute it to himself, in regard the Medicine is ready. Christophorson has rendred this place ill, thus, alteri qui sanari vult, non vitio vertat, let him not blame another, who has a mind to be cured. I say nothing concerning Portesius, who wanders from the true sense almost every where. But Musculus has rendred these words not unhappily. Valeſ.

|| Or, The common Inheritance of that good given us. Valeſius renders it, The fellowship.

CHAP. LX.

An Exhortation at the close of the Edict, that no person should give trouble or disturbance to another.

But, let no person do harm to another, by that which he hath perswaded himself of, [a] and declared. What one Man hath understood and known, with that let him assist his Neighbour, if it may be. But, if it be impossible, let him omit it. For 'tis one thing, voluntarily to undertake the Combat for immortality; another, to be forc't to it by punishment. These things I have said; these things I have discoursed of more at large than the scope of Our Mansuetude required, because I would not conceal [b] the true Faith. Especially, in regard some persons (as I hear,) do assert, that the Rites of the Temples and the [c] Power of Darkness are wholly abolished. Which I had indeed perswaded all men to, had not the violent [d] Insolency of nefarious Errour been immeasurably fix't on the minds of some persons, to the hurt and damage of the [c] Emendation of Mankind.

[a] Ἀναδέκτω. In the Kings Copy 'tis over written in the same hand, ἀναδέκτω received. Both reading may be born with. Valeſ.

[b] Τῷ τῆς ἀληθείας πίστιν, the faith of the Truth. That is, The true Faith. For 'tis the same as if he should have said, τὴν ἀλήθειαν τῆς πίστεως the Truth of the Faith. He expresses himself so again, hereafter. Vales.

[c] These words are taken out of St Paul's Epist. to the Coloss. chap. 1. v. 13. Further, as he here terms Gentilism the power of darkness, so lower (at chap. 67.) he calls Christianity the power and efficacy of Light. Vales.

[d] Ἐπανάστασις. This term does properly signifie Conspiracy and Rebellion: which is most appositely said concerning the worship of Idols. For Idolatry is a defection from the true God. Vales.

[c] Τῆς κοινῆς ἀναστάσεως, of the common Resurrection. It must, as I think, be ἀνορθώσεως, Emendation or Correction. For the common word seems to have been fetcht out of the foregoing line. Further, at the end of this Edict, this subscription was doubtless placed (concerning which I have spoken at large above,) πρεσβύτου ἐν τοῖς ἡμετέροις ἀνατολικοῖς μέρεσι, Let it be published in Our Eastern parts. For this subscription is properly agreeable to this Edict, in regard it was sent to the Provincialls of the East. Vales.

CHAP. LXI.

How from the City Alexandria * Controversies were raised on account of Arius.

* Or, Questions.

THese things the Emperour, like a most loud-speaking Preacher of God, by his own Letter † proclaimed to all the Provincialls; || diverting his Subjects from Diabolicall Errour; and exhorting them to the exercise of true Piety. But whilst he was exceedingly joyfull on account hereof, news was brought him, concerning a disturbance of no small consequence, which had seized the Churches. At the hearing whereof he was extreamly troubled, and began earnestly to consider of a Cure. [The Originall of the disturbance] was this. The people of God were in a flourishing condition, and * pleased themselves with the exercises of good Actions. There was no fear without, which might give disturbance: in regard, by the grace and favour of God, a splendid and most profound Peace fortified the Church on all sides. But Envy framed treacherous designes against our Blessings. [At first] it crept in privately; but [afterward] it daunced in the very midst of the Conventions of the Saints. At length it raised Contention between the Bishops, and [a] cast in discord and wranglings amongst them, under a pretence of the Divine † Dogmata. From thence, as 'twere from some small spark, a great fire was kindled. Which began from the Alexandrian Church, as 'twere from an || Eminence; and afterwards overran all Egypt, and Libya, and the Further Thebais. Moreover, it ruined the rest of the Provinces and Cities: in so much that, you might have seen not only the Prelates of the Churches fighting one with another with words; but the people also rent into factions; some inclining to this party; others, to that. [b] Further, the spectacle of the things performed proceeded to such an height of absurdity, that even in the very Theaters of the Infidells, the vanerableness of the Divine Doctrine * was traduced by a most ignominious and reproachfull derision.

† Or, Shouted forth.

|| Or, Driving away.

* Or, Were adorned with, &c.

[a] Σπάσιν ἐμβαλὼν ἐρεσχελίας. It must, as I think, be ἐν ἐρεσχελίαις and wranglings. Further, by φθόνῳ at this place is meant The envious Devill. For so Eusebius does usually speak in many places. Vales.

† That is, More sublime and hidden doctrines of the Christian faith.

|| Or, High place.

* Or, Underwent a most, &c.

[b] Τοσοῦτον δὲ διήλαυνεν. In the Kings Manuscript the reading is δὴ ἤλαυνεν, which I like better. This whole place therefore is thus to be written; εἰς τοσοῦτον δὴ ἤλαυνεν ἀτοπίας, &c. and we have rendred it accordingly. In the Fuketian Copy the reading is εἰς τοσοῦτον. Vales.

CHAP. LXII.

Concerning Arius and the Melitians.

THese persons therefore at Alexandria in a childish manner strove about the Sublimest [Points.] But [a] others all over Egypt and the Upper Thebais were in the interim at difference on account of a controversie which had been started before: so that, the Churches were in all places rent in sunder. And whereas the Body [of the Church] was distempered as 'twere with these [diseases,] all Libya likewise fell sick; and the other parts of the Provinces without were seized with the same distemper. For they of Alexandria sent Legates to the Bishops in each Province; and these, divided into either side, partook of the like Sedition and disturbance.

[a] He means the Melitians, concerning whose Schism Epiphanius and Baronius are to be consulted. Vales.

CHAP. LXIII.

How Constantine sent a Legate with a Letter in order to a Composure.

UPon hearing hereof the Emperour was highly perplex't in mind; and looking upon this thing to be his own calamitous Concern, he forthwith dispatches away one of the worshippers of God whom he had about him, (a [a] person whom he well knew to have been approved for his * modesty of Faith, and in the late times to have been ennobled with confessions in defence of Piety;) to Alexandria, to make Peace between those that were at difference there. And by him he sends a most usefull and necessary Letter to the Occasioners of that Contention. Which Letter, in regard it containes an illustrious Specimen of his Care in reference to the people of God, is fit to be inserted into this our Discourse concerning him, The Contents of it are these.

* Or, Modest Virtue of Faith.

[a] He means Hosius Cordubensis, as Gelasius Cyzicenus relates book 2; and after him Photius in his Bibliotheca, chap. 127; and Nicephorus. And before all these, Vales.

Socrates and Sozomen.

CHAP.

CHAP. LXIV.

Constantine's Letter to Alexander the Bishop, and Arius the Presbyter.

VICTOR CONSTANTINUS MAXIMUS AUGUSTUS, To Alexander and Arius.

* Or, Make God our witness.

† Ministery, or, Charge.

WE * call God to witness, who, as 'tis meet, is himself the Assistant of Our attempts, and the Saviour of all men; that upon a twofold account we were moved to take in hand the † management of those affairs which We have in reality performed.

CHAP. LXV.

That he was continually Sollicitous about Peace.

[a] Τὼ περὶ τὸ θεῖον πρόθεσιν. I had rather write διάθεσιν, or προαίρεσιν, the affection or mind, or pre-possest Opinion. On the contrary, in the beginning of this Letter, instead of διπλῆν μοι πρόφασιν upon a twofold account, I had rather reade πρόπεδιν. Presently, I write πρὸς μίαν ἕξεως σύστασιν ἐνῶσαι, from the Fuketian and Savil. Copies: or rather, πρὸς μιᾶς, &c. Vales.

FOr first, [our design was] to unite the [a] Opinion of all Nations concerning the Deity, in one Constitution and Form as 'twere: Secondly, We were desirous of restoring to an healthiness the Body of the whole World, afflicted as 'twere with some terrible [b] distemper. Which [two things] having proposed to Our Self as Our aim, we inspected the one with the secret eye of Thought; but we attempted to effect the other by the power of a Military force: well knowing, that if (as 'twas Our desire) We could establish an universall agreement amongst the Worshippers of God, the consequence would be, that the Administration of the publick Affairs would certainly obtaine a change agreeable to the pious minds of all men.

[b] Καθάπερ χαλεπῷ τινὶ. Some words are wanting here, which in Moræus's Copy are thus supplied, χαλεπῷ τινὶ νοσήματι πάσην κακῶς διαθούσῃ, &c. as the reading also is in the Geneva Edition; and we have rendred it accordingly. I would willingly have made good this place thus, χαλεπῷ τινὶ νοσήματι τῆς τυραννίδος πεζόμενον ἐλευθεῶσαι πρόθυμήθην, We were desirous to free [the Body of the whole world] oppresst with some terrible disease of Tyranny. But in regard in the excellent Fuketian and Savilian Copies this place is so made good as I have set it above, 'tis better to follow that writing. Further, in the Fuketian Manuscript, the word κοινῆς whole is wanting. Vales.

CHAP. LXVI.

In what manner he put a stop to the Controversies raised in Africk.

[a] Μανίας τὸ δύπτεσθαι. Question[less] it must be written μανίας γὰρ, &c. When therefore, &c. A little after, where the reading is ἢ δὲ πού, the particle ἢ is to be expunged. He means The Donatists, who after the Roman Synod and that of Orleance, after Constantine's own determination, were as yet tumultuous in Africa. Vales.

[a] WHen therefore an intollerable madness had seized all Africa, occasioned by some persons, who with a rash levity had dared to rent the Religion of the people into various Sects; We being desirous to put a stop to this Distemper, could find no other remedy sufficient to effect its Cure, than (after we had destroyed the [b] Common Enemy of the world, who had opposed his own impious Opinion and Command against your sacred Synods;) [c] that we should send some of You as Assistants in order to the making up an agreement between those who were at variance one with another.

[b] Without doubt he means Licinius, as these following words declare, who had opposed his own impious opinion, &c. For Licinius had prohibited the Synods of the Christian Prelates, as Eusebius attests in book 1. chap 51. But Christophorson by a great mistake thought, that by the Common Enemy of the world here was meant The Devill. The meaning of this place therefore is this. We had thoughts, says Constantine, after our conquest of Licinius, of sending some of you Eastern Bishops into Africa, to make up a Peace there between the Donatists and Catholicks. For, when the Bishops of Italy and of the Gallia's could not effect that, we hop't it would at length be done by your help. But, as we perceive, you your selves do now stand in need of Peace-makers. Vales.

[c] Ἀποστεῖλαι με. I write ἀποστείλαιμι, from Gruter's and Moræus's Copy; whereto agree the Fuketian and Savilian Manuscripts, and the Kings Sheets. Vales.

CHAP. LXVII.

That the Beginnings of Religion were from the East.

FOr, whereas the power of [the true] Light, and the Law of the Sacred Religion, being by the Beneficence of God given forth out of the Bosomes (as I may so say) of the East, hath at the same time illuminated the whole world with its Sacred Light; we upon a very good account believing [a] you would prove the Authours as 'twere and Promoters of the Salvation of [all] Nations, have attempted to find you out, as well by a propensity of our mind, as the * sight of our eyes. [b] Immediately therefore after our great Victory and our most certain Triumph over our Enemies, [c] we had resolved before all things to enquire into that again, which we judged to be the chiefest and most momentous of all.

[a] Ἡμᾶς ὥσπερ πνας ἀρχηγούς. Question[less] the reading must be ὑμᾶς you, as 'tis mended at the margin of Moræus's Copy. Nor is the reading otherwise in the Fuketian and Savilian Manuscripts. Further, Constantine does expresly reckon the Egyptians amongst the people of the East, which was not perceived by Christophorson. Indeed, Egypt was then accounted amongst the Provinces of the East, from the times of Maximine, who having been constituted Cæsar in the East, had had Egypt under him. Hence 'tis, that Amm. Marcellinus (in his fourteenth book where he reckons up the Provinces of the East,) attests, that Egypt and Mesopotamia were of their number. The place occurs at pag. 19 of our Edition. Moreover, the Comes of the East had Egypt and Mesopotamia under his dispose in the times of Constantine and Constantius, as this old Inscription informs us: M. MAECIO MEMMIO FURIO BALBURIO CÆCILIANO. PLACIDO. C. V. COMITI ORIENTIS ÆGYPTI ET MESOPOTAMIÆ. CONSULI ORDINARIO, &c. Further, under the Latter Emperours, although the Egyptick Diocese was severed from the Oriental, yet 'twas always under the Præfectus Prætorio in the East, as 'tis manifest from The Notitia of the Empire. A little after, I think it should be written, ξητεῖν ἠπειγόμην, have hastned to find you out. Vales.

* Or, Efficacy.

[b] Ἅμα γὰρ τῇ μεγάλῃ νίκῃ. 'Tis the same with what he had said in the foregoing chapter, τὸν κοινὸν τῆς οἰκουμένης ἐχθρὸν ὀξελῶν, after we had destroyed the Common Enemy of the world. Constantine means the Hadrianopolitane Battle, and that at Chalcedon. The Former of which hapned on the fifth of the Nones of July: the Latter on the fourteenth of the Calends of October, in the year of Christ 324. About the end of which year This Letter seems to have been dated. Vales.

[c] Τελέσι πρῶτον εἰλόμην. I think the reading should be τῶτ' ἔπ.' perhaps also προσελόμην; that is, we had resolved again to enquire into and determine that dissention of the Donatists. In the excellent Fuketian Copy the reading is τί ποτ' ὄν τὰ πρῶτα, &c. and so 'tis mended in Turnebus's and Moræus's Copy at the margin. Some words are doubtless wanting here. But the meaning of the place is wholly the same with what I have said. Further, the reading of all Copies being compared together, the place seems to be restored thus, τί ποτ' ὄν τῶτο πρῶτον, &c. we resolved upon enquiring what that first thing was, which, &c. Vales.

CHAP.

CHAP. LXVIII.

That being troubled by reason of the Disturbance, he advises to an Agreement.

BUt (O the most Beautifull and Divine Providence!) what a deadly wound hath been given to our Ears, or rather to [a] our very heart, when 'twas told us, that the dissentions raised amongst you were far more fierce than those which have been [b] left remaining in Africk? In so much that, your parts, from which we hop't a remedy might have been produced for others, do now stand in need of a greater Cure. Indeed, when we seriously considered of the Origine and cause of these [differences,] the Occasion appeared to us very trivial, and such as in no wise deserved so fierce a Contest. Wherefore, being induced to a necessity of [penning] this Letter, and writing to Your [c] Unanimous Sagacity, having also called upon Divine Providence to be Our Assistant in this affair, we do upon a good account interpose Our Self as the * Arbiter of your mutuall dissention, and as an † Administrator of Peace. For, if We Our Self (God giving us his assistance, although there were a greater occasion of discord, yet) by instilling reason into the Pious minds of Our Hearers, could be able without much difficulty [d] to recall each person to more wholesome Counsells; why may not we the same person (in regard the occasion is small and very trivial, which hinders the agreement of the whole Body;) promise Our Self an easier and far more expedite ‖ accommodation of this matter?

[a] Τῇ καρδίᾳ αὐτῆς. Every one sees it should be written τῆς καρδίας. Nor is Christophorsons conjecture to be condemned, who read τραῦμα καίριον a deadly wound. For so the Fuketian and Savilian Copies, and the Kings Sheets, do plainly give it us written. Valesius. In Robert Stephens the reading is πρᾶγμα καίριον a deadly thing.

* Umpire.

† Or, Dispenser.

‖ Or, Emendation.

[b] Τῶν ἐκεῖ καταλειφθέντων. Christophorson saw nothing here, nor perceived that this word ἐκεῖ was to be referred to the Schism of the Donatists, whereof Constantine had spoken above. The Emperour says therefore, that this Schism was for the most part appeased, and that only some small Remains of it were left in Africa. Valesius.

[c] Πρὸς τὴν ὁμόψυχον ὑμῶν εὐχήνειαν. Christophorson designedly omitted the term ὁμόψυχον unanimous, because he thought, that Alexander and Arius could not be termed unanimous; in regard they disagreed one with another about matters of so great consequence. But Constantine does nevertheless term them unanimous, in regard he thought well of them both, and believed that they disagreed in words, rather than in reality and in mind. But the term εὐχίνοια seems but little agreeable to Prelates. The Emperours do use this term indeed in their Letters to Governours of Provinces. But when they speak to Prelates, they do more frequently use Sanctity, Gravity, or Prudence. The Old Glosses, εὐχίνοια Solertia, Experientia, Sagacity or Prudence, Experience. Valesius.

[d] Εἰς τὸ χρησιμώτερον ἕκαστον μεταθῆσαι. The word ἕκαστον seems to be used in the Neuter Gender. For 'tis referred to the Article ὅπερ, whereto by and by τοῦτο answers. In the Kings and Fuketian Copy therefore, after the Verb μεταθῆσαι, a distinction is rightly placed. For the sense is not entire. But Christophorson, contrary to his own usage, of one period has made two. Valesius.

CHAP. LXIX.

Whence the Controversie between Alexander and Arius arose; and, that such matters ought not to be enquired into.

WE understand therefore, that the Ground of the present Controversie arose from hence. For whereas You, Alexander, enquired of your Presbyters, [a] what every particular persons [Sentiment was] concerning a certain passage of those things written in the Law, or rather asked about a part of a fruitless Controversie: and whereas You, Arius, [b] inconsiderately vented that, which you ought either not to have conceived at first, or if you had had such conceptions, it had been your duty, to have let them been buried in silence: [c] hereupon a dissention has been raised between you, [d] communion is denied; and the most holy people, rent into two Factions, are separated from the harmonious unity of the whole Body. Wherefore, let both of you, mutually [e] pardoning each other, accept of what your Fellow-Servant doth reasonably advise you to. But what is that? It was fitting, neither to have asked such questions at first, nor if proposed, to have made any return thereto. For such Questions, which no Law does necessarily order or prescribe, but are proposed by the contentiousness of an unprofitable vacancy from business (although they may be made to exercise and imploy our Naturall parts about, yet) we ought to confine within our Breasts, and not inconsiderately divulge them in publick assemblies, nor unadvisedly commit them to the Ears of the Vulgar. For, what person amongst a thousand is sufficiently qualified, either accurately to comprehend the full efficacy and nature of things so sublime and profound, or to explicate them according to their worth and dignity? Or, should any man look upon this to be an easie performance, how small a part of the Vulgar will he induce to be fully perswaded hereof? Or, [f] what man can without danger of falling into gross errours, insist upon the accurate discussions of such nice Controversies? In questions therefore of this nature, Loquacity must be bridled and restrained, least either through the frailty of our Nature, we being not able to explicate what we propose, or through the slower understanding of the Auditors, (being unable accurately to apprehend those matters discoursed of;) least [we say] [g] from the one of these two Causes, the people be reduced to a necessity either of Blasphemy, or Schism.

[a] Τί δή ποτε αὐτῶν ἕκαστος. The word φρονεῖ is without doubt to be added from Gelasius Cyzicenus book 2. chap. 4. But Nicephorus (book. 8. chap. 13.) has νοεῖ, thought. By and by, where the reading is πωδάνοιο, the Fuketian and Savilian Copies have it written ἐπωδάνε, which is truer. Valesius.

[b] Ἀπερισκέπτως ἐνηχθέντας. The reading in Gelasius is truer, thus, ἀντεχθέντας, that is, opposed or objected. And so Epiphanius Scholasticus had read, as appears from the 19th chapter of the Tripartite History. Valesius.

[c] Ὅθεν τῆς ἐν ὑμῖν διχοστασίας. Nicephorus has expunged the first word as superfluous, which nevertheless all our Copies retain, and Epiphan. Scholasticus also, in his Version. Valesius.

[d] Ἡ μὲν σύνοδος ἐκκήρυκτος. Langus renders it, conventus quidem solemnis quibusdam denegatus, the solemn Convention is denied to some. Christophorson translates it in this manner, Conventus qui in Ecclesia fieri solet, impeditus, the assemblie which is wont to be made in the Church, is hindred. They took σύνοδον therefore here for Synaxis, in which sense 'tis used not infrequently. So again in this chapter, εἰς δημοσίας συνόδους ἐκφέρειν, divulge them in or among publick assemblies. Further, Epiphan. Scholasticus renders it mysteria contemnuntur, the mysteries are contemned. Valesius.

[e] Τὴν συγγνώμην ἀλλαχοῦ. Socrates and Gelasius Cyzicenus and Nicephorus have γνώμην, that is, affording me your ears and mind. But the common reading, which we have followed, is truer. For so Constantine expresses himself below in the next chapter. Epiphanius renders it voluntatem præbens. Valesius.

[f] Ἢ τίς ὁ ταῖς ἡμῶν πίστεσιν. In the Kings, Fuk. and Savil. Copies, the reading is, ἢ τίς ταῖς, &c. In Nicephorus 'tis ἢ τίς ὃς ταῖς, &c. truer than in the common Editions. By and by, from the Fuketian and Savil. Copies I have mended it, ἢ τῇ ἡμῶν ἀκεραιοτάτῃ ἑρμηνέως σωτείσει, or through the slower understanding of the Auditors, &c. Valesius.

[g] Ἐξ ὁποτέρου τρόπου. In the King's, and Fuk. Copy the reading is ποτέρου without the Preposition; which reading may be born with, if you referre the word ποτέρου to those which follow ἢ βλασφημίας, ἢ σχίσματος, either of Blasphemy, or Schism. The one of these two, says he, will beget an occasion either of Blasphemy, or Schism. But Socrates and Gelasius and Nicephorus have it written here ὧνδε ἐξ ἑκατέρου. Indeed, this place is very difficult and obscure by reason of the ill Syntax. Therefore in the Kings Copy at the side of this line is set this mark φρ. that is, φρόνησιν, attend. Valesius.

CHAP.

CHAP. LXX.

An Exhortation to an agreement.

VVHerefore, let an unwary Queſtion, and an inconſiderate Anſwer in both of You mutually pardon each other. For this conteſt hath not been raiſed among you upon an occaſion of any principal or chief Commandment of our Law: nor have you introduced any new Hereſie concerning the worſhip of God. But both of You hold one and the ſame Opinion; ſo that, You may eaſily cloſe with each other in a [a] conſent of Communion.

[a] Πρὸς τὸ τῆς κοινωνίας σύνθημα. Langus and Muſculus render it Communionis teſſeram, Mark or token of communion; Chriſtophorſon, communionis conſenſum, conſent of communion. I had rather render it Signum, a ſign. For, as in the myſteries of the Heathens ſome Signes or Symbols were delivered to the perſons initiated, whereby the Symmyſtæ [companions of the ſame diſcipline] might know one another: ſo the Chriſtians had a ſign of Communion, that is, The Euchariſt, or Baptiſm. Indeed, Epiphanius Scholaſticus renders it communionis ſignum, a ſign of Communion. Valeſ. Valeſius has tranſlated it a ſociety of Communion.

CHAP. LXXI.

That a pertinacious Contention ought not to have been raiſed concerning this matter, on account of ſome light and frivolous Expreſſions.

FOr whilſt you thus pertinaciouſly contend about triſles and matters of no importance, 'tis not decent that ſo numerous a multitude of God's people ſhould be under your Care and Goverment, becauſe of your diſſention with one another: nor is it only misbecoming, but 'tis likewiſe judged to be altogether unlawfull. Now, that we may advertiſe your prudence by a ſmaller inſtance, [a] We will tell you: you know even the Philoſophers themſelves, [b] how that they are all united in [the profeſſion of] one Sect; whenas nevertheleſs, they frequently diſagree in ſome part of their Aſſertions: but although they diſſent in the very Perfection of ſcience, yet becauſe of the agreement and union of their Sect, they cloſe again in a mutuall conſent. Now, if it be ſo [amongſt them,] how will it not be much more reaſonable, that [c] You, who are the Miniſters of the moſt High God, ſhould in like manner be unanimous in the profeſſion of the ſame Religion? But, Let us with more accuracy and a greater attention, inſpect and examine what we have now ſaid; whether it be reaſonable, that becauſe of the triviall, vain, and pertinacious Conteſts between you about words, Brethren ſhould be ſet in array as 'twere againſt Brethren; and that the Venerable Aſſembly ſhould upon your account, who contend one with another about things ſo ſlight and in no wiſe neceſſary, be rent in ſunder by an impious variance. Theſe things are poor and mean, and do befit a childiſh ignorance, rather than agree with the underſtanding of Prieſts and prudent men. Let us of our own accord depart from the Temptations of the Devill. Our Great God the common Saviour of all, [d] hath reached forth a Light common to all. By the aſſiſtance of whoſe Providence, give us leave who are his Servant, ſucceſsfully to finiſh [e] this our Endeavour; that by our Exhortation, diligence, and earneſt admonitions, we may reduce you to a Communion of Convention. For in regard, as we have ſaid already, your faith is one and the ſame, and your Sentiment of our Religion is one, and whereas the [f] commandment of the Law doth in each part of it incloſe all in generall in one conſent and purpoſe of mind: Let not this thing, which has raiſed a ſmall contention between you, (in as much as it appertaineth not to * the ſum of all Religion in generall,) by any means make any Separation and Faction amongſt you. And theſe things we ſpeak, not to neceſſitate you to be all of one opinion concerning this fooliſh idle Queſtion, of what ſort ſoever it be. For the pretious value of the Convention may be preſerved entire amongſt you, and one and the ſame communion may be retained, although there be interchangeably amongſt you a great diverſity of Sentiments in things of the leaſt moment. For, we do not all will the ſame in all things; nor is there in us one diſpoſition or opinion. Therefore concerning the Divine providence, let there be amongſt you one faith, one underſtanding, and one † conſent in reference to God. But, as for those ſlender and trivial queſtions, which with ſo much niceneſs you diſpute of and make reſearches into amongſt your ſelves, although therein you do do not agree in the ſame opinion, yet 'tis fit you ſhould confine them to your own thoughts, and keep them within the ſecret repoſitories of your minds. Let therefore that eximious [priviledge] of a common friendſhip, and the || belief of the Truth, and the honour of God, and a religious obſervancy in reference to [His] Law, remain amongſt you firm and immoveable. Return ye to a mutuall friendſhip and charity: reſtore to the whole Body of the people their own embraces. And be you your ſelves (having [g] purified your own ſouls as 'twere,) acquainted again [and renew your familiarity] with each other.

[a] Ὑπομνήσαιμι, λέξω. The laſt word is wanting in Gelaſius Cyzicenus, nor does it ſeem very neceſſary. 'Tis certain, Epiphanius has omitted it in his Verſion. Valeſ.

[b] Ὡς ἐνὶ μὲν δόγματι ἅπαντες συντίθενται. Tranſlatours underſtood not what the import of δόγμα was here; ſome of them have rendred it Opinion, or firm conſent in one opinion; others, a profeſſion of diſcipline. But, there is not one opinion amongſt Philoſophers, as 'tis ſufficiently manifeſt. Therefore I had rather render it Sect. For all Philoſophers have ſome Sect to which they are addicted; ſome have the Sect of the Stoicks; others, that of the Peripateticks. Now, in every Sect there are ſometimes controverſies concerning ſome queſtions between Philoſophers of the ſame Sect. Yet the ſame perſons, on account of the ſociety of their Sect, do eaſily agree one with another. This is the meaning of Conſtantine's words as I think. Valeſ.

[c] Ἡμᾶς, that we. We muſt read ὑμᾶς that you; from Gelaſius, Nicephorus, and Epiphanius. And a little after, ἐν ὑμῖν between you, from the ſame Authours; to whom agree the Fuketian and Savilian Copies, and the Kings Sheets. Valeſ.

[d] Τὸ φῶς ἐξέτεινεν, hath produced a Light. He had better have ſaid ἀνέτεινεν hath reached forth. A little before I read ὁ κοινὸς ἁπάντων σωτὴρ the Common Saviour of all; as 'tis in the Fuk. and Savil. Copies. Valeſ.

[e] Ταύτην ἐμοὶ τὴν σπουδήν. That is, this our endeavour and purpoſe, of eſtabliſhing concord in the Church, and of reducing all men to the worſhip of one God. Concerning which endeavour and deſign, Conſtantine hath ſpoken at the beginning of this Letter, and does boaſt of it every where. Valeſ.

[f] For the Law enjoyns us nothing elſe but love; namely, that we ſhould love God with the entire affection of our hearts, and our neighbour as our ſelves. In theſe two conſiſts the whole Law, as our Lord ſays in the Goſpel. Chriſtophorſon underſtood not this paſſage; he renders it thus; unumque Legis ac diſciplinæ inſtitutum, &c. and one Decree of the Law and diſcipline, which binds the whole body of the Church with its parts, in one agreeing concord and purpoſe of minds. Porteſius tranſlates it truer, thus; Præceptumque Legis in id omnibus partibus incumbit, ut in unam animam univerſum concludat, and the commandment of the Law in all its parts earneſtly endeavours at this, that it may include the whole Body in one mind. Perhaps alſo it ſhould be written τοῖς δυσὶν ὅλῃ μέρεσιν in both its parts. For there are two parts of this commandment, the one has a reference to God, the other to our neighbour. Valeſ.

[g] Ψυχὰς ἐκκαθήραντες. That is, having put away the darkneſs of hatred, wherewith the acuteneſs of your mind was clouded and obſcured. For it follows, ἀλλήλους ὁπάσητε, that is, be acquainted one with another again, embrace, ſalute. In which words Conſtantine ſeems to allude to the uſage of the Chriſtians of of his own time: amongſt whom in their ſacred Conventions, whilſt the people approach't to the participation of the Myſteries, the Deacon often cried out ὅπασώσασθε ἀλλήλους, take acquaintance one of another; to wit, leaſt any prophane perſon or Jew might creep to the ſacred Table, as Chryſoſtome informs us in his firſt Oration againſt the Jews, pag. 440 of the Firſt Tome. The ſame word Marcion uſed, when when on a time he saw Polycarp, ὀπτάνωσκε ἡμᾶς take acquaintance of us, as Eusebius relates out of Irenæus, book 4. chap. 14. of his Eccles. Hist. The Latines also use the verb recognoscere in the same sense. So in the passion of Fructuosus the Bishop: Cùm se excalceasset, &c. when he had pulled off his shoes, a Fellow-souldier, our Brother, by name Felix, came to him, and took him by the right hand, recognoscens eum taking acquaintance of him, and beseeching him, that he would be mindfull of him. Vales.

* Or, The power of the whole.

† Or, Covenant of the Deity.

|| Or, Faith.

For Friendship (when it returns to reconciliation again,) frequently becomes sweeter and more pleasing, after the [h] removall of the Enmity.

[h] Τῆς ἔχθρας ὑστέρου, the occasion of the Enmity. the reading must be ἀποστέρου removall, as 'tis in Gelasius and Nicephorus. And so 'tis plainly written in the Fuk. and Savil. Copy, and in the Kings Sheets. Vales.

CHAP. LXXII.

That being highly affected with Grief in regard of his Piety, he was necessitated to shed tears; and, that on this account, he put off the Journey he was about to make into the East.

Restore therefore to us peaceable and serene days, and nights void of care; that the pleasure of the pure Light, and the joy of a quiet life may in future be reserved for us also. Which if [we shall] not [obtain,] we must of necessity groan, and be wholly surrounded with Tears; nor shall we finish the residue of our Life without great disquietude. For, whilst the people of God, (we mean our Fellow-Servants,) are rent in sunder by this unreasonable and pernitious Contention one with another, how is it possible for us in future to continue in a sedate temper of mind? But, that you may be sensible of our excessive Grief on account of this matter, [* be attentive to what we shall tell you:] when we lately came to the City Nicomedia, we had resolved forthwith to have made a journey into the East. But whilst we were hastning unto you, and [a] by the greatest part were with you, [b] the news of this affair * quite altered our Resolution: that we might not be necessitated to behold with our eyes those things of which we accounted even the Report to be intollerable. Do you therefore in future, by your unanimity, open a way for us into the East, which by your mutuall Contentions you have stop't up. Give us leave with joy speedily to see you, and all the rest of the people, and that with an unanimous consent of praises we may attribute to God due thanks for the Concord and Liberty of all persons.

* In Socrates the Verb ἀκούσατε hear, or, be attentive, occurs; but we meet not with it here.

[a] That is, in mind and thought. For the mind is the greater and the better part of any one. But Christophorson thought the meaning was the greater part of his journey; which is not to be endured. Vales.

* Or, Wholly subverted.

[b] Τὰ δὲ τῶν γεγενημένων ἀγγελία, the news of this Letter. It must be made πεφασμένων affair, from Socrates, Gelasius Cyzicenus, and Nicephorus. A little after I read θεοσεβεῖς, as 'tis in Nicephorus and S^r Henry Savils Copy. Vales.

CHAP. LXXIII.

That after this Letter, the disturbance about the * Controversies continued.

* Or, Questions.

After this manner the Pious [Emperour,] by sending his Letter, made provision for the Peace of the Church of God. Moreover, that good man made use of his utmost diligence, not only in carrying the Letter, but in fulfilling his will, by whom he had been sent. And he was every way a [a] Pious person, as I have said. But, the affair was greater, than to be accommodated by the help of a Letter. In so much that, the Contention of the persons at variance increased daily; and the vehemency of the mischief overran all the Eastern Provinces. Envy, and the malicious Devil, vext at the prosperity of the Church, † invented these things for our destruction.

† Or, Wrought these things.

[a] Θεοσεβὴς ἀνὴρ. In the Kings Copy the word ἀνὴρ is wanting, which is not very necessary. Nevertheless, 'tis my conjecture, that the place it to be read in one breath, thus, ἦκουεν δὲ ὁ τῆ γεφύρᾳ μόνον συμπεφθῶν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῦ τὰς καταπεμφθεὶς θεοσεβὴς ἀνὴρ, ὡς εἴρηται, That Good and every way Pious Person, as I have said, made use of his utmost diligence, not only in carrying the Letter, but in fulfilling his will, by whom he had been sent. But the affair, &c. He means Hosius; see chap. 63. Vales.

The End of the Second Book.

THE

THE THIRD BOOK OF EUSEBIUS PAMPHILUS CONCERNING THE LIFE OF THE BLESSED EMPEROUR CONSTANTINE.

CHAP. I.

A comparison of Constantine's Piety with the Improbity of the Persecutors.

IN this manner the Devill, that hater of Good, envying the Felicity of the Church, raised up storms and intestine disturbances in it, during a time of Peace and Joy. [a] In the interim, the Emperour dear-to-God neglected not the performance of what became him: [b] but doing all things contrary to what had been audaciously perpetrated a little before by Tyrannick Cruelty, [by that means] he was made Superiour to every of his Enemies and opposers. In the first place therefore, They, alienated from [his worship] who truly is God, by various methods of force compelled all men to adore those who were not Gods: but He, evincing them as well by words as in reality in no wise to be Gods, exhorted all persons to an acknowledgment of Him who is the only God. Besides, they derided God's Christ with blasphemous expressions: But he [c] assumed to himself as his preservative, that very thing, against which those impious Wretches with the greatest Virulency * belch't forth their Blasphemies; and gloried in the Trophy of the [Salutary] passion. They persecuted the Worshippers of Christ, and drove them from their houses and habitations. He recalled them all [from Exile,] and restored them to their own dwellings. They surrounded them with ignominies; he made them honourable and happy in the opinion of all men. They seized upon the Goods of God's Worshippers, and with the greatest injustice made sale of them: He not only restored their Goods to them, but likewise enricht them abundantly with very many Gifts and Benefactions. They by written Constitutions [d] publisht Calumnies against the Prelates [of Churches:] on the contrary, he raised and advanced those men to Honour [bestowed] by Himself, and by Edicts and Laws made them more renowned than they had been before. They demolished the Oratories to the very Foundations, and from their vast height pulled them down to the ground: He by a Law ordained, that those Oratories which were standing should be raised higher, and that new ones should be magnificently erected, [the

[a] Καὶ μὴν βασιλεὺς. In Sr Henry Savil's Copy the reading is ὁ δὲ βασιλεύς. In the Old Sheets both readings are retained, in this manner, ὁ δὲ δὴ καὶ μὴν βασιλεὺς, &c. Vales.

[b] Πάντα περάπων τἀναντία. In Moræus's Copy 'tis mended in the margin, παρὰ δὲ περάπων, But doing, &c. as 'tis also in the Fuk. and Savil. Copies. A little before, instead of ἧς αὐτῷ προσηκόντων, of what belonged to him; both Copies and the Kings Sheets have it ἧς αὐτῷ πρεπόντων, of what became him. Vales.

[c] Ἐγέφετο φυλακτήριον, he inscribed as his preservative. It seems to be used instead of ἐπεφέρετο, he assumed. But if you had rather take the verb ἐγεφέρετο in it's common signification, that may also be born with. For Constantine ordered it to be engraven on the Base of his Statue, which he erected at Rome after the Victory gotten over Maxentius, that by the Virtue of this Standard Rome had been set at Liberty by him. Vales.

* Or, Applied.

[d] Ταῖς κατ' ἧς, &c. The Rule of Syntax requires that we should read πρὸς κατ' ἧς, &c. A little after it must be written τῇ παρ' αὐτῆς τιμῇ, to honour [bestowed] by himself; as the reading is in the Fuketian and Savil. Copies. Vales.

charges whereof were defrayed] out of the Imperial Exchequer it self. They ordered the divinely-inspired Scriptures to be destroyed and consumed by fire: He made a Sanction, that at the charge of the Imperiall Treasury the [Copies of the sacred Volumes] should be increased, [e] and * adorned with a magnifick furniture. They commanded, that Synods of Bishops should in no wise be attempted to be any where convened: He called together into his own presence the Prelates out of all the Provinces; and vouchsafed them admission not only into his Pallace, and inmost Bed-Chamber; but likewise gave them a reception within his own House, and made them Companions of his Imperial Table. They honoured Dæmons with consecrated Gifts: but he laid open their frauds, continually distributing the * unserviceable matter of those consecrated Gifts to such as could make use of it. They gave order, that the Temples [of the Gods] should be adorned with all imaginable splendour: He utterly demolished those very Temples, especially them that were highliest esteemed of by superstitious men. They subjected the servants of God to the most ignominious punishments: He took vengeance on those who had done these things, chastizing them with a [f] condign punishment from God; but he never desisted from honouring the memories of Gods holy Martyrs. They drove men that were worshippers of God from the Imperial Pallaces: He put his chiefest confidence in such persons, knowing them to be of all men the best affected and faithfullest to him. They were overcome with [the love of] money, having enslaved their minds to a * Tantalick † passion: but he with an Imperial magnificence opened all his Treasures, and made distributions of them with a || Liberality that was bountifull, noble and generous. Lastly, they perpetrated infinite Murders, to the end they might make a seizure of, and expose to sale the Estates of those that were slain: but during the whole Reign of Constantine, every sword hung up as useless to the Judges; in regard the people and [g] Decuriones were [h] ruled by a paternall power, rather than governed by force and necessity. All which things whoever shall attentively consider, he will have good cause to say, that a certain new [i] Age seemed just then to have appeared; an unusuall light * after a long darkness having shined upon mankind. And he will confess, that all this was the work of God, who opposed this Religious Emperour, as an Adversary against that multitude of the Impious.

[e] In Moræus's Copy these words (which we likewise found in the Fuketian and Savil. Manuscripts,) are added in the margin, μεταλοπρεπεῖ πρέπουσῃ πολυπαρασκόμῳ, adorned, or augmented, with a magnifick furniture; which reading Christophorson has followed in his version. Indeed, Constantine adorned those books which served for Ecclesiastick uses with Gemms and Stones; as Cedrenus tells us in his Chronicon, where he speaks concerning Metrodorus the Philosopher. Vales.

* Or, Augmented with.

* Τῶν ἀχρήστων τῆς ἀναθημάτων ὕλην; which words Valesius renders thus, materiam ipsam donariorum nullis usibus dicatam, the matter it self of the consecrated Gifts dedicated to no uses.

[f] Τῇ πρεπούσῃ τοῦ Θεοῦ κολάσει, with a condigne punishment of God. I had rather make it ἐκ Θεοῦ, from God; as Eusebius does usually express himself Vales.

* See book 1. chap. 55.

† Or, Distemper.

|| Or, Rich and noble bounty.

[g] Πολιτάρχαι. Christophorson understood not the import of this word; He hath rendred it Cives, Citizens. But πολιτάρχαι are the Decuriones, as I have long since remarked at the 22d book of Amm. Marcellinus, pag. 225 of my notes. Vales.

[h] Παλαιονομωμένων, that is, were ruled by a paternal power. He says therefore, that Constantine's Government, by reason of his mildness and clemency, was wholly like the Government of a Father over his Sons: So that, all the people and Decuriones, were not kept within the bounds of duty by force and fear like Subjects, but obeyed on their own accord, like Sons. In the Fuketian Copy, instead of ἐπ' ἀνάγκης the reading is ὑπ' ἀνάγκης, by force and necessity. Vales.

[i] Νεοπαγῆ αἰῶνα. In mine own judgment, I have rendred this passage very happily, thus, novum sæculum, a new Age. So in the Coyns of Philippus, 'tis termed novum sæculum. The old Etrusci affirmed, that every Age was limited by the Gods, by a certain number of years: which number of years being ended, then prodigies were by the Gods shown from heaven, or out of the earth; whereby it might be signified, that a new Age was begun. And, that men were born, who would make use of new fashions and customes, and would be more or less dear to the immortal Gods. These signes the Etrusci had exactly noted in their Libri Rituales, as Plutarch has told us in Sulla; and Censorinus chap. 17. de Die Natali. Vales.

* Or, Out of darkness.

CHAP. II.

Again concerning the Piety of Constantine, who made a free and open profession of the Cross of Christ.

FOr, whereas they were such persons, the like to whom had never appeared at any time, and had dared to act such things against the Church, as * no person from the utmost memory of men ever heard done; with good reason God himself produced a certain new Miracle, [I mean Constantine,] by whom he effected such things as had never been known by report, nor represented to view. For, what miracle was stranger and more unusuall, than the virtue of our Emperour, whom the wisdom of God bestowed upon Mankind? For withall imaginable confidence and freedom he continued asserting God's Chr st to all men; nor was he ashamed of the † Salutary Appellation: but gloried in reference to that matter, and shewed himself in order to his being taken notice of and known by all men; sometimes sealing his face with the Salutary sign; at others, boasting in the Victorious Trophy.

* Or, Are not contained in the hearing of an age.

† He means the name of a Christian, as 'tis manifest from the following words.

CHAP. III.

Concerning Constantine's Picture, over which was placed a Cross, and under it * a wounded Dragon.

* Or, A Dragon was wounded.

MOreover, in an high painted Table placed before the † Porticus of the Imperial Pallace, he proposed to the view of all men, the Salutary Sign represented in a Picture, set over his own head; but [he ordered] that Enemy and fierce Adversary [of Mankind,] who by the Tyranny of the impious had || opposed the Church of God, to be drawn [underneath,] in the form of a Dragon * falling into the deep. For the divine Oracles contained in the Book's of God's Prophets, have termed him a Dragon and a crooked Serpent. On which account the Emperour, under his own and his children's feet, in Encaustick painting exhibited to the view of all men, a Dragon wounded with a Dart thorow the midst of His belly, and cast into the depths of the Sea; denoting hereby that secret Enemy of Mankind; whom also he declared to have been thrust down into the pit of destruction, by the power of that Salutary Trophy placed over his head. And these things were tacitely shown by the Picture painted with a variety of Colours. But I am seized with an admiration of the Emperour's great knowledge; in regard by divine inspi-

† Or, Entry.

|| Or, Besieged.

* Κατὰ βυθοῦ φερόμενον; Valesius renders it in præceps ruentem, falling headlong.

inſpiration he expreſt thoſe very things in paint, which the words of the Prophets had declared before concerning that ſame Beaſt in this manner, ſaying, * That God would † unſheath a great and terrible ſword againſt the dragon the ſerpent that flees, and would ſlay the dragon that is in the ſea. The Emperour therefore expreſt the Figures hereof, || having in the Picture truly imitated the thing it ſelf.

* See Eſai. 27. 1.

† Or, Bring forth.

|| Or, Having in the adumbration truly ſets forth the imitations.

CHAP. IV.

Again concerning the Controverſies [raiſed] in Egypt by Arius.

THeſe things he performed with a complacency of mind. But the blackneſs of Envy, which [at that time] in an horrid manner diſturbed the Churches of God at Alexandria, and the [a] peſtilent Schiſm of thoſe of Thebais and Egypt, troubled him not a little. For the Biſhops in each City * Strove with the Biſhops, and the people made inſurrections againſt the people, and, daſht one againſt another like the [b] Symplegades, were cut in pieces by mutual wounds. In ſo much that, ſpurred on at length by a fury and deſperateneſs of mind, they attempted impious and nefarious Facts, and were ſo audacious as to do violence to the Pictures of the Emperour. But theſe things did not ſo much excite the Emperour's anger, as they grieved and diſquieted his mind; in regard he was extreamly troubled at the madneſs of men that were impaired as to their Intellectualls. Valeſ.

[a] Or, The Schiſmatical Miſchief. He means the Schiſm of the Meletians. For Egypt at that time was ſick of a double diſeaſe; to wit, the Arian Hereſie, and the Schiſm of Meletius.

* Or, Were daſhed againſt.

[b] Συμπληγάσι. In the Fuketian Copy the reading is συμπληγάδων, Symplegades; in which manner Turnebus had mended it at the margin of his Copy. Valeſ. The Symplegades are two Iſlands or Rocks in the Boſphorus; which had this name given them, becauſe (as 'tis fabulouſly reported) they met one time, and fought.

CHAP. V.

Concerning the diſſention on account of [the Feaſt of] Easter.

MOreover, before theſe [diſtempers,] there had riſen another moſt ſore diſeaſe, which [a] for a long time had infeſted the Church; [namely] a diſſention about the * Salutary Feaſt. For ſome affirmed, that the uſage of the Jews ought to be followed: others aſſerted, that † the time it ſelf was accurately to be obſerved, nor were erroneous perſons to be followed, who were eſtranged from Evangelick Grace [b] even in this matter alſo. Whereas therefore the people in all places had now for a long time diſagreed one with another, and whereas the divine Laws [of our Religion] were diſturbed and ſubverted; (for, in one and the ſame Feaſt, a * diverſity of time begat the greateſt diſſention imaginable amongſt thoſe who celebrated the Feaſt; in regard ſome perſons † afflicted themſelves with faſtings and auſterities; others || indulged to Leiſure and Mirth;) there was no mortall able to find out and adminiſter a remedy to this miſchief; becauſe the [c] controverſie hung in an equall poyze as 'twere between the diſſenting parties. To the only Omnipotent God it was eaſie to cure theſe Evills. Whoſe ſole Miniſter of good things upon earth appeared to be Conſtantine. Who, after he had received an account of what we have even now mentioned, and ſaw that his Letter to Alexandria proved ineffectuall; himſelf muſtered up [all the Forces of] his own mind, and ſaid, that this * new ſort of a War againſt an inviſible Enemy that had diſturbed the [peace of the] Church, ought to be ended by him.

[a] Ἐκ μακρῆ διενοχλῆσα. In my judgment the reading would be truer thus, ἐν μακρῆ δὴ ἐνοχλῆσα, which had indeed a long while infeſted. Valeſ.

* He means Eaſter.

† Or, The accurate hour of the time was to be, &c.

[b] Κἂν τούτῳ τυγχανῆν. This place is corrupted by an ill punctation. I write thus therefore, τῆς τῆς εὐαγγελικῆς ἀλλοδοίοις χάριτος· καὶ τούτῳ· Τοιγαροῦν, &c. who were eſtranged from Evangelick Grace even in this matter alſo. Whereas therefore, &c. Euſebius ſays, that the Jews were eſtranged from the Grace of the Goſpell, both in other things, and alſo moſt eſpecially in this; becauſe they as yet celebrated The Paſcha agreeable to the Moſaick uſage, not acording to the verity of the Goſpell. Conſtantine confirms our Emendation in his Letter to the Churches, the words whereof are recorded below at chap. 18. ἐκεῖθεν ἔν τοίνυν καὶν τούτῳ τῷ μέρει τῷ ἀληθείαν ἔχ' ὁρῶσιν. Valeſ.

[c] Ἰσορροπίας τῆς ἔριδος. Gracians term that ἰσορρόπιον μάχην, as often as a fight is ſo maintained, that neither ſide gets the Victory. In the ſame ſenſe Euſebius has here termed it ἰσορρόπον ἔριδα, that is, paribus utrinq; momentis libratam controverſiam, the controverſie was poyſed by equall weights on both ſides. Chriſtophorſon therefore has not rendred it well, thus, præſertim cùm controverſia diſſidentium animos ex æquo exagitaret, eſpecially in regard the controverſie equally diſquieted the minds of the perſons diſſenting. Valeſ.

* Or, Change.

† Or, Were exerciſed with.

|| Or, Aſſigned; or dedicated their Leiſure to a relaxation, or ceſſation.

* Or, Other.

CHAP. VI.

In what manner he gave order, that a Synod ſhould be convened at Nicæa.

IMmediately therefore ſetting in array as 'twere a divine * Army againſt † him, he convened an || Oecumenicall Synod; by honourable Letters inviting the Biſhops every where, to the end they ſhould come with all the ſpeed imaginable. Nor was it a ſimple and bare Order; but the Emperour's appointment gave aſſiſtance to the buſineſs it ſelf. For to ſome he allowed a Liberty of making uſe [a] of the Curſus publicus: others he ſupplied abundantly with the aſſiſtances of Beaſts of Burden. Moreover, a moſt convenient [place] was aſſigned for this Synod, a City [namely] which from Victory has the name Nicæa, ſituate in the Province of the Bithynians. When therefore the Emperour's Order was brought into all the Provinces, all perſons [ſet out] as 'twere from ſome Goal, and ran with all imaginable alacrity. For the hope of good things drew them, * and the participation of Peace, and [Laſtly] the ſpectacle of a new Miracle, to wit, the ſight of ſo great an Emperour. When therefore they were all come together, that which was done appeared to be the work of God. For they who were at the greateſt diſtance one from another, not only in minds, but in bodies, Regions, places, and Provinces; were ſeen aſſembled together in one place. And one City received them all, as 'twere ſome vaſt Garland

* Or, Phalanx.

† That is, The Inviſible Enemy.

|| Or, Generall.

[a] Δημοσίᾳ δρόμῳ. 'Tis ſtrange that Euſebius does here diſtinguiſh τὰ νωλοφόρα, the Beaſts of burden from the Curſus Publicus. But it may be anſwered, that by the name of the Curſus Publicus Euſebius underſtood the Waggons or Chariots. In which ſenſe Nicephorus took it, book 8. chap. 14. To ſome Biſhops therefore Conſtantine ordered Waggons or Chariots ſhould be allowed; to others, publick Horſes, whereon they might be conveyed to the Councill. Valeſ.

* Ἥ τε τῆς εἰρήνης μετουσία; Valeſius renders it, and the opportunity of the preſent peace.

of Priests made up of a variety of beautifull flowers.

CHAP. VII.

Concerning the Oecumenicall Synod, at which were present Bishops out of all Provinces.

* Τὰ ἀκρο-θίνια, the first fruits, or top.

* THe most eminent therefore amongst God's Ministers of all those Churches which fill'd all Europe, Africk, and Asia, were convened. [a] And one sacred Oratory, enlarged as 'twere by God himself, included at the same time within its walls, Syrians and Cilicians, Phœnicians and Arabians; Palestinians likewise, and moreover Egyptians, Thebæans, Libyans; those also that came out of Mesopotamia. There was likewise present at this Synod a Persian Bishop; nor was [b] the Scythian absent from this Quire. Pontus also, Galatia, and Pamphilia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Phrygia afforded their most select Divines. Moreover, [there appeared here] Thracians and Macedonians, Achaians and Epirots, and such as dwelt far beyond these, were nevertheless present. From * Spain likewise it self, that most celebrated person [Hosius] was one, amongst the many others who sate in this Synod. [c] The Prelate of the Imperial City was absent indeed, by reason of his age: but his Presbyters were there, who filled his place. Constantine was the [d] only Emperour of all the Princes since the foundation of the world, who, after he had platted such a Crown as this with the Bond of Peace, dedicated it to Christ his Saviour, as a Divine present and gratefull acknowledgment for the Victories he had obtained over his Enemies and Adversaries; having constituted this [Synod convened] in our days, to be a lively Representation of that Apostolick Quire.

[a] Εἶτ' εἰκὸς εὐκτήριον. I read εἷς τε εἰκὸς, &c. and one sacred, &c. from Gelasius Cyzicenus, Nicephorus, and Socrates. Valesi.

p He has put the Scythians instead of the Goths. For so Grecians are wont to term them; as does Libanius, Themistius, Eunapius, and Eusebius himself in book 1. chap. 8. de Vitâ Constant. Valesi.

* Or, The Spaniards themselves.

[c] Gelasius Cyzicenus thought that by these words was meant the Bishop of Constantinople. Whom Nicetas hath followed in his Thesaurus Orthodoxæ fidei, book 5. chap. 6. in these words; Eusebius autem Pamphili, &c. But Eusebius Pamphilus, in his third Book of the Life of the Emperour Constantine, writes that the Prelate of Constantinople was absent from the Synod, but he suppresses his name: in whose stead some Presbyters appeared. But 'tis manifest from the Acts of the Synod, that at that time Metrophanes was Bishop of Constantinople, &c. So also Epiphanius Scholasticus tells us in Book 2. of his Tripartite History. But this Explication is not to be born with. For Constantinople was not as yet dedicated, nor grac'd with the name of the Imperial City, when the Synod was convened in the City Nicæa. Therefore these words of Eusebius are necessarily to be understood concerning the Bishop of Rome. Which Sozomen confirms, book 1. chap. 16. (into which Writer the name of Julius has corruptly crept, instead of Silvester;) and Theodoret book 1. chap. 7. Valesi.

[d] Μόνον ἐξ ἁπάντων. The same also is the reading in Socrates. But I had rather make it μόνῳ, as 'tis in Gelasius and Nicephorus. And so Epiphan. Scholasticus read in Socrates. But whereas εἷς follows, that ought not to trouble any one: For Eusebius, hereafter at chap. 26. puts μόνῳ εἷς together. Valesi.

CHAP. VIII.

That, like as ['tis said] in the Acts of the Apostles, they met together out of various Nations.

* See Acts 2. 5.

FOr 'tis * said, that in the Apostles times, there were gathered together devout men out of every nation under heaven. Amongst whom were Parthians, Medes, and Elamites, and the Inhabitants of Mesopotamia, Judæa and Cappadocia, of Pontus, and Asia, of Phrygia and Pamphilia, of Egypt and the parts of Libya adjacent to Cyrene: strangers also of Rome, Jews and Proselytes, Cretians and Arabians. This only was wanting amongst them, they who met were not all the Ministers of God. But in this present Quire, there was a multitude of Bishops, which exceeded the number of [a] two hundred and fifty. But the number of the Presbyters and Deacons who followed them, [b] of the Acolythi, and of the many other persons, was not to be comprehended.

[a] In Socrates book 1. chap. 8. where this place of Eusebius is quoted, the reading is τριακοσίων three hundred. The Ancients are not agreed about the number of the Bishops who were present at the Nicene Synod. Eusebius at this place tells us they were two hundred and fifty. But Eustathius Bishop of Antioch (in his Homily concerning those words which occur in the Proverbs of Solomon, Dominus creavit me,) says they were about 270; but tells us, that he had not accurately reckoned up their number. But the more constant Report, and which is confirmed by the consent of all the more modern Authours, is, that 318 Bishops sate in that Synod. So amongst the Ancients Athanasius in his Epistle to the African Bishops, not far from the beginning, Hilarius in his book against Constantius, Hieronymus in his Chronicon, and Rufinus. Athanasius in his Letter concerning the Decrees of the Nicene Synod, says, that the Bishops who met at Nicæa were three hundred more or less. Valesi.

[b] Ἀκολούθων δὲ πλείστων ὅσων δ' ἑτέρων. It must be written, ἀκολούθων τε πλείστων ὅσων ἑτέρων, from Socrates book 1. chap. 8. and from Gelasius and Nicephorus. In the Fuketian and Savilian Copies the reading is ἀκολούθων τε πλείστων, and after the word πλείστων, a midle distinction is set in all our Manuscript Copies. Valesi.

CHAP. IX.

Concerning the Virtue and Age of the two hundred and fifty Bishops.

[a] MOreover,] of these Ministers of God, some were eminent for their * wisedom and eloquence; others, for their Integrity of life, and patient sufferance of hardships; [b] others, were adorned with modesty and a courteous behaviour. Some of them were highly respected by reason of their great age; others were eminent for their youthfull vigour, both of body and mind. Some were newly initiated into the † Order of the Ministery. To all which persons the Emperour commanded a plentifull provision of food should be every day allowed.

* Or, Discourse of wisedom.

† Or, Course.

[a] At these words I began a new chapter, having followed the authority of the Kings and Fuketian Copy: whereto agree the Old Sheets. Valesi.

[b] Οἱ δὲ τῷ μέσῳ τρόπῳ κοσμοῦντο. Severall senses may be given of this passage. For μέσῳ τρόπῳ may be taken for modesty and a courteous behaviour; supposing μέσῳ to be made use of instead of μετείῳ. Or, μέσῳ τρόπῳ may be meant concerning them, who were not the eminentest persons amongst the Bishops for learning and sanctity of life; but did not come much behind them. So the Ancients termed those Medios Principes ac duces, middle Princes or Commanders, who were neither the best, nor the worst, but were in a middle place between both. Lastly, μέσῳ τρόπῳ may be said of them, who deserved to be praised on both accounts, to wit, for their Learning and Sanctity. So Sozomen has expounded this place of Eusebius, in his first book, chap. 17. in these words: οἱ μὲν νοεῖν καὶ λέγειν ἱκανοὶ, &c. Some excelled in understanding and eloquence, and were eminent both for their knowledge in the sacred Scriptures, and for other learning also: others were famous for their integrity and virtue of life: others were well approved of on both accounts. Those whom Eusebius terms τῷ μέσῳ τρόπῳ κατακοσμουμένους, are by Sozomen stiled κατ' ἀμφότερον εὐδοκιμοῦντας, well approved of on both accounts. Epiphanius Scholasticus, in the second book of his Tripartite History, chapter 1, renders this place of Eusebius thus: Ministrorum verò dei, alii sapientiæ sermone fulgebant, alii continentiâ vitæ & patientiâ coruscabant: alii verò medio modo horum virtutibus ornabantur; but of the Ministers of God, some shined with the discourse of wisdom, others glistered with continency of life and patience: but others some were in a middle manner adorned with the virtues of these. Valesi.

CHAP.

CHAP. X.

The Synod [was held] in the Pallace, amongst whom Constantine went in, and sate together with [the Bishops.]

BUt on the day appointed for the Synod, whereon the points in controversie were to be determined; after [a] evrey person concerned in that [determination] was come [b] to the very middlemost * Edifice of the Pallace, which [Edifice] in greatness seemed to exceed all others: and after a great many Seats had been placed in order on both sides of the Room, the persons who had been sent for went in; and each of them took an agreeable Seat.

* House, Room or, Building.

[a] Παρὴν ἑκάτερ☉ πωΐτω ἄγων. It must be written ἕκαστος every person, as Christophorson seems to have read. To whom nevertheless I can't assent, as to his having thought, that πωΐτω was to be referred to σωόδον. But I doubt not, but τῷ λύσιν the determination (which word precedes immediately,) is to be understood. For 'tis truer Greek, as I take it, to say ἄγειν or ἐπάγειν τῷ λύσιν, than ἄγειν τῷ σύνοδον. In the Fuketian and Savilian Copies 'tis plainly written ἕκας☉. Vales.

[b] Ἐν αὐτῷ δὴ τῷ μεσαιτάτῳ οἴκῳ τῆς βασιλείων. Whoever that person was that composed the Greek contents of the chapters, he took these words as meant of the Pallace; and Christophorson has followed him in that. Sozomen likewise (book 1. chap. 19.) and Theodoret (book 1. chap. 7.) do write that the Nicene Synod was held in the Pallace, where the Emperour Constantine ordered Seats and Benches to be prepared for the Bishops. Nicephorus also (book 8.) hath written out the words of Theodoret. But, with the favour of so many and such great men be it spoken, 'tis in no wise likely, that the Nicene Synod should have been held in the Pallace. These persons were deceived, as it seems, by the ambiguous word here made use of by Eusebius, τῷ μεσαιτάτῳ οἴκῳ τῆς βασιλείων. For this term is promiscuously used, as well for the Pallace of the Emperour, as for a Church. 'Tis certain Eusebius, in the Tenth Book of his Eccles. History, terms a Church βασίλειον οἶκον. Indeed, much would be detracted from the authority of that Councill, should we believe it to have been held in the Emperour's Pallace. Besides, Eusebius himself does most apparently contradict this Opinion. For above at chapter 7, he writes thus in expres words, εἷς τε οἶκ☉ εὐκτήρι☉, &c. And one sacred Oratory, enlarged as 'twere by God himself, included at the same time within its walls, Syrians and Cilicians, &c. What can be more manifest than these words? Is it not most evidently declared by this passage, that the Nicene Synod was held in the Church? For Eusebius affirms, that all the Bishops were contained within the compass of one Church. Moreover, the words which Eusebius subjoyns in this chapter, in my judgment do sufficiently shew this. For he writes, ἐν αὐτῷ δὴ τῷ μεσαιτάτῳ οἴκῳ τῆς βασιλείων, ὃς δὴ καὶ ὑπερέφερεν ἑαυτὸν μεγέθει τοὺς πάντας, to the very middlemost Edifice of the Pallace, which [Edifice] in greatness seemed to exceed all others. Eusebius says, that that House was the greatest and largest of all Houses in any place. But this can't be said of the Pallace of the City Nicæa. For, although we grant there was a Pallace in that City, questionless that could not be the greatest of all the Pallaces every where. For the Pallaces at Rome and Millaine were far greater. Nor do I doubt but the Pallace at Nicomedia was far larger and richer than that at Nicæa, in regard Nicomedia had been the Seat and Habitation of the Emperours from the times of Diocletian. Some one will perhaps answer, that Eusebius does not say, that that middle Edifice of the Nicene Pallace or Church, in largeness exceeded all the Buildings of the whole world; but only, that it was greater than the other Edifices of that Pallace or Church. For so Eusebius expresses himself hereafter, at book 4. chap. 66. where he describes Constantine's Funeral. Indeed, I could willingly grant, that this is the meaning of Eusebius's words. But yet it follows not from hence, that the Nicene Pallace is meant by Eusebius. For, as well in Churches as in Pallaces, the middlemost Edifice was the largest and most capacious, as 'tis manifest from Eusebius, in his description of the Church of Tyre. All things therefore being accurately weighed, this is my Sentiment: that the Bishops met first in the Church; and treated there many days concerning the opinion of Arius and the Rule of faith; but, that at length, on the day appointed for finishing the business, they came together into the Pallace, that they might declare their Opinion before the Emperour, and might put an end to the Contention. And thus all manner of difficulty is taken away. Indeed, Eusebius does plainly confirm that which I have said. For he says, that the Bishops, on the day appointed whereon an end was to be put to the Controversies, came all into the Pallace. And the Emperour going forth immediately to the Synod, all things, says he, were established in his presence. From which words it plainly appears, that Eusebius does here speak concerning the last day of the Councill, or the last Session, after the matter had been before discussed and sifted, in many Sessions of the Bishops. For so many and such great matters, as were negotiated in that Synod, could not be examined and determined in one days space. The same also had been done before in the Antiochian Synod against Paul of Samosata, as Eusebius informs us in the Seventh Book of his Ecclesiastick History. Vales.

But when with a befiting decency the whole Synod had sate down, they were all silent, expecting the Emperour's coming forth. Soon after this enters one, then a second, and a third person of those about the Emperour. Others also went before, not any of the [Emperour's] usuall Protectours and Guards, but * those only of his friends who profest the Faith of Christ. And when, [c] upon a sign given which declared the Emperour's entrance, they had all risen up, at length he himself [d] came walking in the midst, like some Celestial Angell of God: shining with his bright purple-garment as 'twere with the splendour of Light, glistering with * flaming Rays, and adorned with the clear brightnesses of Gold and pretious Stones. Such was the attire of his Body. But as to his mind, 'twas sufficiently manifest, that he was to an accuracy adorned with a fear and reverence of God. And an indication hereof was given by his cast-down Eyes, by his blushing Countenance, and by † his Gate and motion. Moreover, the rest of his Bodily shape; his tallness of Stature namely, wherein he excelled all persons that were about him, [as he did likewise] in a Comliness of Make, in a magnificent gracefullness of Body, and in an invincible strength and might: all these [accomplishments I say] being mixt with a † sweetness of disposition, and with an Imperial Lenity and Mansuetude, declared the immense excellency of his mind to be superiour to all manner of commendation. After the Emperour was come to the † upper end of the seats, [e] in the first place he stood in the midst. And when a || low chair made of Gold had been placed before him, he sate not down till such time as the Bishops had beckoned to him. As soon as the Emperour [had seated himself,] they all did the same.

* Or, Those only of his faithfull friends.

[c] Διὰ σωμάτων ὁ τῷ βασιλέως εἴσοδον ἐδήλου. Concerning this signe whereby the Emperour's coming was declared, Corippus speaks in these words;

——————Prænuntius ante
Signa dedit cursor posità de more Lucernâ. Vales.

[d] Διέβαινε μέσ☉. Christophorson renders it per medium consessum intrat, enters through the midst of the assembly sitting together. He might better have rendred it, went thorow the middle space which was between the two ranks of the persons sitting. That's the import of the word διαβαίνειν, that is, διὰ μέσου βαίνειν, to go between two. So below at chap. 15. μέσοι δὲ τάτων διέβαινον, &c. thorow the midst of whom the men of God without fear passed, &c. Vales.

* Or, Fiery.

† Or, The motion of his walking.

† Or, Meeknes, or, modesty.

|| Or, Small.

[e] Μέσ☉ πρώτ☉ ἕστη. Christophorson seems to have read πρῶτον: for he has rendred it thus; Primùm in medio conventu erectus constitit, in the first place he stood upright in the middle of the Convention. Vales.

CHAP. XI.

The Silence of the Synod, after Eusebius the Bishop had made a short Speech.

THen [a] He of the Bishops, who sate first on the right-hand-side, arose, and addrest himself to the Emperour in a speech of an indifferent length, wherein he gave Almighty God

[a] Sozomen attests, book 1. chap. 19. that he who had the first place on the right side, and who in the name of the whole Councill made a speech to the Emperour, was Eusebius Pamphilus. And so 'tis written in the Title of this chapter. But Theodoret (book 1. chap. 7. of his History,) says this Oration was not made made by Eusebius but by Eustathius Bishop of Antioch. Baronius has followed Theodoret's opinion; whom any one, from his writings, will easily find to have been of a mind full of anger and hatred against our Eusebius. But The Authour of the Tripartite History, (book 2. chap. 5. where he writes out Theodoret's words,) says that after Eustathius Bishop of Antioch, Eusebius Bishop of Cæsarea made a speech likewise concerning the praises of the Emperour. Which nevertheless occurs not now in the Greek Copies of Theodoret; so that it necessarily follows, either that Epiphanius Scholasticus had procured more perfect Copies of Theodoret, or else that he added this of his own head, as 'tis sometimes his usage. Of this nature is that which we have noted above concerning the Bishop of the Imperial City, whom Socrates from Eusebius relates not to have been present at the Nicene Synod, where Epiphanius Scholasticus by a notorius mistake has added the name of Alexander, when as he ought rather to have said Metrophanes. But to return to our business, there are those who write, that that honour was conferred neither on Eustathius, nor Eusebius, but on Alexander Bishop of Alexandria, that in the name of the Councill he should make a speech to the Emperour. Nicetas in his Thesaurus Orthodoxæ fidei, book 5. chap. 7. affirms this in these words: Eusebius de Vitâ Constantini Libro 3. se primum verba in Synodo feciſſe teſtatur, &c. Eusebius in his third book concerning the Life of Constantine atteſts, that he made the first speech in the Synod. But if we believe Theodoret, Eustathius was the first, &c. But as Theodorus Mopsuestenus writes, that honour was freely conferred on Alexander the Pontif of Alexandria. But in such a diversity of Writers I should more willingly close with that opinion, which affirms that the first Course of speaking was by the Synod conferred on Eusebius. First of all, because without controversie Eusebius was the Learnedest and most eloquent person amongst them. Secondly, he himself does plainly attest this, at the beginning of this work, in these words: ἀεὶ δὲ καὶ ἡμεῖς αὐτοὶ, &c. We our selves also, by a Panegyrick spoken in his Vicennalia, have lately Venerated the same glorious Conquerour environed with a Synod of Gods Sacred Ministers. See the Preface to the first Book, note (a.) Valeſ.

† The Emperour.

thanks and praise for † Him. After he had taken his Seat also, Silence was made, all persons having fixt their eyes on the Emperour. When he had lookt upon them all with joyfull eyes and a pleasing countenance, afterwards He made a recollection of his own mind within himself, and with a calm and mild voice uttered these words.

CHAP. XII.

Constantine's [Speech] to the Synod concerning Peace.

* Or, End.

THE * Sum of my Prayers (Dearest Friends!) was this, that I might enjoy the sight of your Convention. Which having now obtained, I render my thanks to [God] the Supream King; because, besides his innumerable other [Benefits,] He hath granted Me a sight of this, which is the chiefest of all Goods: I mean, that I might behold all You Convened together, and † find one and the same unanimous Sentiment amongst you all. Let no envious Enemy therefore in future ‖ disturb the happy posture of our Affairs: and, since that opposition made by Tyrants against the Deity is wholly removed by the power of God Our Saviour, let not the malignant Devill [a] by any other methods * expose the Divine Law to Blasphemies. For, an intestine Sedition of the Church of God appears to me more grievous and dangerous than any sort of War or Fight whatever: nor do any externall affairs seem more afflictive to Me, than these matters. Indeed, at such time as, by the Will and Cooperation of God, I had obtained a compleat Victory over mine Enemies, [b] I was of opinion, that nothing remained to Me, but to give God thanks, and to rejoyce with those whom he by our means had set a Liberty. But when (contrary to all expectation) I had received information of your disagreement, I lookt upon that † thing as in no wise to be neglected: but wishing that by our assistance a remedy might be applyed to this [mischief] also, without any delay I called you all together. And I am highly pleased with the sight of this Your Convention. But shall then judge that I have managed this affair according to my prayers, when I shall behold all of You ‖ conjoyned in your minds, and one amicable agreement in common concluded on amongst you all, which it becomes You, who are persons consecrated to God, [c] to Preach to others. Delay not therefore, Deareſt Friends, ye Ministers of God, and good Servants of the Common Lord and Saviour of us all! But beginning [d] even from hence to take away the Occasions of mutuall dissent amongst you, [e] dissolve every knot of controversie by the Laws of Peace. For by this means You will perform both what is most acceptable to the Supream God; and will likewise bestow a transcendent favour on Me Your Fellow-Servant.

† Or, See.

‖ Or, Ruine our goods.

[a] Ἑτέρως. Portesius, Christophorson, and the French Translatour have omitted this word; notwithstanding that therein lyes the whole Emphasis and force of the sentence. For to this word the following period is referred. Take heed, says he, least after the destruction of their Tyranny who brought a War against God, the Devill by some other way should again expose our Religion to reproaches and calumnies. By another way therefore is meant intestine dissensions. See the following words. Valeſ.

* Or, Invest--with.

[b] Οὐδὲν τε λείπειν. It must be written, as I suppose, οὐδὲν ἐμοίγε λείπειν ἐνόμιζον. I was of opinion that nothing remained to me. And a little after with Turnebus and Gruterus I read ἐπεὶ δὲ πῶς ὑμεῖς ἔχετε, &c. But when ——— I had received information of your, &c. Valeſ.

† Or, Report.

‖ Or, Mixt together.

[c] Πρεσβεύειν. Christophorson has rendred it ill, à Deo impetrare, by request to obtain of God; when as he ought to have rendred it, Prædicare, to Preach. For in this sense Eusebius is wont to use this word, as 'tis apparent from innumerable passages in his Eccleſ. History; for instance, book 4. chap 15. In the Fuketian and Savil. Copies the reading is bad, thus, εἰς βεβαίευεν. Valeſ.

[d] Ἐντεῦθεν ἤδη φέρειν. In the Fuketian Copy, this whole place is written far otherwise, thus, τὰ τῆς ἐν ὑμῖν διαστάσεως ἄπαντα τῷ λοιπῷ φέρειν ἀνεξοικείτε. πάντα δὲ συγκόσμου, &c. refuse not in future to take away the occasions of dissent amongst you; dissolve every knot, &c. And so Sr Henry Savil and Christophorson found it in their Copies. Valeſ.

[e] Ἐπλύσασθε. I reade with Christophorson ἐπλύσασθε, to dissolve. But the common reading may stand, provided after the words Saviour of us all, a Colon be placed, as Sr Henry Savil hath noted at the margin of his Copy: and so 'tis poynted in the Kings Copy. Valeſ.

CHAP. XIII.

That he reduced those Bishops who were at difference, to an agreement.

HAving spoken these words in the Latine Tongue, which were done into Greek by some other person, he gave those who presided in the Synod, leave to speak. But then, some of them began to accuse their neighbours; others answered their accusations, and on the contrary made complaints. Many things therefore being in this manner proposed on both sides, and a great controversie raised even at the first beginning [of the debate,] the Emperour heard them all very patiently, and with an [a] intent mind received their proposed Questions; and by turns assisting the Assertions of both parties, by degrees he reduced them, who pertinaciously opposed each other, to a more sedate temper of mind. And by his gracious Speeches to each person, and his making use of the Greek tongue, (for he was not unskilled in that Language,) He rendred himself most extraordinarily pleasing and delightfull; [b] inducing some to be of his opinion by the force of his arguments; woing others by entreaties; praising those who spoke well; and exciting all to an agreement: till at length he had made them all of the same mind and opinion, in relation to all matters concerning which they had before disagreed.

[a] Σχολῇ τε ἐυτόνως. In Socrates, book 1. chap. 8. and in Nicephorus, the reading is ἐυτόνῳ, intent. But Gelazius Cyzicenus, chap. 28. has ἐυσυνοπτότατα most intent. With Socrates agrees the Fuketian Copy, and the Kings Sheets. Valeſ.

[b] Τὲς μὲν γὰρ πείθων. In Socrates, Gelasius, and Nicephorus, the reading is τοὺς μὲν συμπείθων. But in the Kings Copy 'tis τοὺς μὲν πείθων. Valeſ.

CHAP.

CHAP. XIV.

*The Concordant * Determination of the Synod concerning the Faith, and concerning* Easter.

* Or, Exposition.

SO that, there was not only an universall agreement about the [Articles of] Faith, but one and the same time also was generally acknowledged for the celebration of the salutary Feast [of Easter.] Moreover, [a] the Determinations ratified by a Common Consent, were engrossed, and confirmed by the Subscription of every person. Which things having in this manner been performed, the Emperour affirmed that he had obtained this second Victory against the Enemy of the Church, and celebrated a Triumphant Feast in honour of God.

[a] That is, the draught of the Creed, the Canons, and the Synodick Letter. For all these were confirmed by the Subscriptions of every one of the Bishops. They who besides these three, think that the Acts of the Nicene Synod were put into writing, are very much mistaken. For Eusebius says in expres words, that nothing was committed to writing, except those matters which had been Decreed by the common consent of the Councill; and he affirms, that those things were confirmed by the Subscriptions of all. Indeed Baronius at the year of Christ 325. chap. 62. says that the Acts were written by the Nicene Synod, and has affirmed that that is expresly recorded by Athanasius in his book de Synodis. But Baronius was imposed upon by the Latine Version, which runs thus; Tom. 1. pag. 873. quòd si ad hanc rem usus Synodi desideratur, supersunt Acta patrum, nam neque in hâc parte negligentes fuere qui Nicææ convenerunt, sed ita accuratè scripserunt, &c. But if the use of the Synod be wanting to this matter, the Acts of the Fathers are to be had. For those convened at Nicæa were not negligent even in this matter, but wrote so accurately, &c. But in the Greek Text there is no mention of Acts; for thus it runs, ἔστι τὰ τῶν πατέρων, that is, the Writings of the Fathers are to be had; to wit, the Creed, the Canons, and the Synodick Letter. There is another passage of Athanasius, in his Epistle de Decretis Nicænæ Synodi, pag. 250. whence it may be manifestly gathered, that there were no Acts written. For thus he speaks: Quandoquidem tua dilectio ea nosse desiderat quæ in Synodo, &c. Inas much as your love desires to know those things which were done in the Synod, I have made no delay; but have forthwith signified to you whatever was done there, &c. Now, if the Acts had been taken in writing by the Notaries, Athanasius had done enough, had he transmitted those Acts to his friend. Vales.

CHAP. XV.

That Constantine entertained the Bishops at a Feast, it being His Vicennalia.

AT the same time the twentieth year of his Empire was [a] compleated. On which account publick Feasts were celebrated in all the other Provinces; and the Emperour himself began the Feasts with the Ministers of God, banquetting together with them now reconciled one with another, and by them offering this becoming sacrifice as 'twere to God. Nor was any of the Bishops absent from this Imperial Feast.

[a] These words must be interpreted favourably. For the twentieth year of Constantine's Empire was not yet compleated, nay scarce begun. For the twentieth year of his Reign began on the eight of the Calends of August, when Paulinus and Julianus were Consuls, which was the 325th year of Our Lords Nativity. But the Nicene Councill was celebrated on the twentieth of the month May, in the same persons Consulate, as Socrates writes in the thirteenth chapter of his first book, or rather on the 13th of the Calends of July, on the 19th day of the month Desius, which by the Romans is termed June, as it occurs in the Acts of the Chalcedon Councill, in the Alexandrian Chronicle, and in the Collectio Cresconiana. Which I think to be truer. For if we suppose the Nicene Councill to have been convened on the 20th day of May, too narrow a space of time will be left for the transacting of those affairs which Constantine performed after his Conquest of Licinius. Licinius was vanquished in the last Battle at Chalcedon, on the year of Christ 324, on the 15th of the Calends of October, as 'tis recorded in Idatius's Fasti, and in the Alexandrian Chronicle. On the day following Licinius, who had betaken himself to Nicomedia, surrendred himself to Constantine the Victour. After this Constantine made his Entry into Nicomedia; whilst he made his residence in that City, and hastned to take his progress into the Eastern parts, he received the news concerning the dissention of the Alexandrian Church and all Egypt, on account of the Opinion of Arius and the disturbances of the Melitians, as he himself writes in his Letter to Alexander and Arius. And in the first place he sent Hosius with his Letters to Alexandria, who by his authority might compose the Tumults there. But after Hosius had staid some time at Alexandria, he returned to Constantinople without having effected any thing. All which businesses could not any wise have been done within less time than three months. Further, when Constantine saw the mischief increase daily, he resolved upon convening a Generall Councill of Bishops, that thereby he might restore Peace to the Church. In order thereto he dispatch't away the Veredarii (Couriers) and Agentes in Rebus (Messengers of the Emperour) thorowout all the Provinces, who might call together the Bishops to Nicæa of Bythinia. Let us suppose therefore, that the Veredarii had brought the Emperour's Letters to each of the Bishops in the month March: 'tis scarce credible that the Bishops could come into Bythinia from the most distant Countries as well of the East as West, before the month July; especially, in regard they were conveyed thither by Land, not by Sea, as Eusebius tells us chap. 6. The Greeks do usually term the seventh Sunday after Easter, that namely which immediately precedes Whitsontide, κυριακὴν τῶν ἁγίων πατέρων the Sunday of the holy Fathers, or τῶν ἁγίων τριακοσίων δέκα καὶ ὀκτὼ θεοφόρων τῶν ἐν νικαίᾳ of the 318 holy Divines which were at Nicæa; as we are informed from The Typick of the Monastery of Saint Saba. Vales.

Further, what was then performed, surpasses the bounds of any Narrative. For the [b] Protectors and Souldiers, with the naked points of their swords, on all sides guarded the Porticus's of the Pallace; thorow the midst of whom the men of God without fear passed, and went into the inmost Rooms of the Pallace. Then, [c] some of them * lay down together with the Emperour; others rested themselves on Stibadia [or, Beds to eat on] placed [d] on both sides. One would have thought, that a representation of Christ's Kingdom was adumbrated, and that the thing it self was a dream, but nothing more.

[b] Δορυφόροι καὶ ὁπλῖται. In the same manner he joyns them both together a little above, where he speaks of Constantine's entrance into the Synod. Δορυφόροι are the Hastati, or the Protectors who carried Spears. Themistius in his Oration to the Emperour Jovian, writes that he went an αἰχμοφόρῳ (a Spear-Carrier) against the Persian, that is a Protector Domesticus, as we understand from Amm. Marcellinus. The ὁπλῖται were the Scutati, Shield-Bearers; to wit, Souldiers who were under the Command of the Magister Militum præsentalis, or Master of the Milice who lived at Court or in the presence of the Prince. Vales.

* That was heretofore the usual posture at Feasts.

[c] Οἱ μὲν αὐτῷ συναναπλίνοντο. It must be made ἅμα τῷ together with the Emperour, as Christophorson seems to have read; and so 'tis plainly written in the Fuketian Copy. Theodoret confirms our Emendation (book 1. chap. 11.) in these words, which do wonderfully explain this passage of Eusebius; πολλὰς δὲ στιβάδας ἐντρεπισθῆναι κελεύσας, ἐπὶ ταὐτὸν εἱστίασεν ἅπαντας· τοὺς μὲν ἀξιωτέρους ὁμοτραπέζους λαβών, τοὺς δὲ ἄλλους διελὼν εἰς τὰς ἄλλας, and having ordered many Stibadia to be made ready, He feasted them all in one and the same place; the more honourable of them he took to his own Table, but distributed the rest upon other Stibadia. A better Scolion could not have been placed at Eusebius's words. Those which Eusebius had termed κλινάδας, (for so 'tis to be read from the King's and the Fuketian Copy;) Theodoret calls στιβάδας; that is Stibadia or Accubita. Nicephorus's Translatour renders it toros, which is ill done. Nor has Theodoret's Translatour done better in translating it Sedes, Seats. Suidas interprets στιβὰς, χαμαικοίτιον, ἀκκούβιτον, a Bed lying on the ground, an Accubitum. The words of Juvenal's Scholiast at the fifth Satyr, are these; apud veteres Accubitorum usus non erat, sed in Lectulis Discumbentes manducabant, amongst the Ancients there was no use of the Accubita, but they lay down upon little Beds and eat. Vales.

[d] Ἀμφὶ τὰς ἑκατέρων. I think it must be written ἐξ ἑκατέρων on both sides. Than which Emendation nothing is more certain. Eusebius says that the Stibadia were placed on both sides of the Imperial Hall, whereon the Bishops might lie down; but, that the Emperour's Stibadium was in the midst, whereon he lay down together with the more honourable Bishops. After the same manner in the Nicene Synod, the Seats whereon the Bishops sate were placed on both sides: but the Emperour himself sate in the midst on a golden chair, between the two rows of the sitting Prelates. The Tribunal of the nineteen Accubita at Constantinople was some such like thing, made in imitation of this Constantinian Feast, as I think. Vales. See Evagr. book 5. chap. 13, note (a.)

CHAP. XVI.

The Gifts bestowed on the Bishops, and the Letters written to all.

AFter the Feast had in a most splendid manner been kept, the Emperour received them all, and out of his own magnificence added this also, that he honoured every one of them according to his desert and dignity, with presents from himself. He likewise gave an account of this Synod, even to those who were not present at it, by his own Letter: which I will insert into this very Narrative concerning him [and will publish it fix't] as 'twere upon some pillar. The Contents thereof are these.

CHAP. XVII.

Constantine's [Letter] to the Churches, concerning the Synod [convened] at Nicæa.

CONSTANTINUS AUGUSTUS
To the Churches.

*HAving sufficiently experienced, by the flourishing posture of the State, how great the benignity of the Divine power has been towards us; I judged it my chiefest concern and aim [to Labour] for the preservation of one Faith, a sincere Love, and one universally-acknowledged Religion towards Almighty God, amongst the most Blessed * Congregations of the Catholick Church. But in regard this thing could not be firmly and stedfastly constituted, unless all, or at least the greatest part of the Bishops were convened in one place, and every particular that concerns the most Holy Religion were discussed: on this account, when as many of the Clergy, as could possibly be got together, were assembled, and I my Self also, as one of You, was present with them, (For I will not deny, what I account my greatest Glory, that I am Your Fellow-Servant;) all matters were sufficiently discussed so far, till such time as an opinion acceptable to God the Inspectour of all things, was brought to light, [a] in order † to an universall agreement and union: so that no place might be left for dissention or controversie in relation to the Faith.*

* Multitudes, or, people.

† Or, To a consent of unity.

[a] Παρὰ τῶν ἐνότητ[ος] & συμφωνίαν. In Theodoret and Nicephorus the reading is truer, thus, περὶ τῆν, &c. in order to, &c. Vales.

CHAP. XVIII.

The same persons [words] concerning the Agreement about the Feast of Easter, and against the Jews.

WHere also, after a disquisition made concerning the most Holy Day of Easter, it [a] was by a generall opinion thought good to be Decreed, that [that Festivall] ought to be celebrated by all persons in all places on one and the same day. For what can be more comely, what more grave and decent for us, than that this Festivall, from which we have received the hopes of immortality, should be unerringly kept by all men, in one and the same order, and in a manner apparently agreeable? And in the first place, it seemed [to all] to be a thing unworthy and misbecoming, that in the celebration of that most Holy Solemnity we should follow the usage of the Jews. Who being persons that have defiled their own hands with a most detestable sin, are deservedly impure and blind as to their minds. For, [b] their usage being rejected, we may by a truer Order, which we have observed from the first day of the Passion untill this present time, propagate the * Rite of this observance to future Ages. Let nothing therefore be common to us with that most hostile multitude of the Jews. For we have received another way from Our Saviour. There is proposed to us a [c] Lawfull and decent course to [Our] most sacred Religion. Let us therefore (Dearest Brethren!) with one accord constantly persist in this course, and withdraw our Selves from that most impure [Society and] [d] their consciousness. For 'tis really most absurd, that they should boast, that we are not sufficient of Our Selves, without their instruction, to observe these things. But, of what are they able to pass a right judgment, who after the Murder of the Lord and that parricide, having been struck with madness, are led, not by the conduct of reason, but by an ungovernable * impetus, whithersoever their innate rage shall drive them? Hence therefore it is, that even in this particular they discern not the Truth: in so much that, wandring at the greatest distance [e] from a decent and agreeable amendment, [f] they celebrate Easter twice within one and the same year. [g] What reason have we to follow these men,

[a] Ἔδοξε κοινῇ γνώμῃ. These words of Constantine, Athanasius seems to have had a respect to, when (in his Book de Synodis Arimini & Seleuciæ, pag. 873.) he observes that the Fathers of the Nicene Synod spake one way in their exposition of the Faith, another in their defining the day of Easter. For in this business they made use of the word ἔδοξε it pleased, or, it was thought good. But in their Exposition of the Faith they did not in any wise say placuit, it pleased, but ita credit sancta & Universalis Ecclesia, the holy and Universall Church believes thus. 'Tis certain, the word ἔδοξε which Athanasius mentions, is not found in the Synodick Letter, but in this Letter only of Constantine's; which any one might conjecture, was not without reason taken for the Synodick Letter. Vales.

[b] Τῶ ἐκείνε ἔθνες, that Nation. I reade ἔθος usage, with Christophorson and Gruterus. We have noted the same fault in his Eccles. Hist. In the Kings Sheets and Sr Henry Savils Copy 'tis ἔθος usage. Vales.

* Or, Completion of this observation.

[c] Καὶ νόμιμῳ & πρέπων. In Gelasius and Nicephorus the reading is καὶ νόμῳ & πρέπων, and a decent Law. But Socrates and Theodoret defend the common reading. Vales.

[d] For they who celebrate the Lord's Pascha with the Jews, seem to be conscious of that wickedness which the Jews committed against the Lord. But Christopherson renders συνείδησιν, Opinion; with whom I agree not. Vales. In Socrates, instead of ἀνίχεως impure, the reading is ἔχθρας Hostile or Adverse.

* Or, Violence.

[e] Τῆς μετανοίας ἐπανορθώσεως. Socrates, Theodoret, Gelasius, and Nicephorus have ἀντὶ τῆς μετανοίας, &c. which I like not. For 'tis rightly said πλανωμένης τῆς ἐπανορθώσεως Vales.

[f] Whereas the Paschal Neomenia (or New-moon) of the Jews began from the fifth day of the moneth March, and was ended on the third of April, hence it sometimes hapned, that their Pascha began before the Æquinox. So they kept a twofold Pascha in the same year, (if you understand the Solar or Julian year,) to wit, from the Vernall Æquinox of this year to the Vernall Æquinox of the year following. Ambrosius says the same in his Epistle to the Bishops of Æmilia, where he writes, that the Jews sometimes celebrated the Pascha on the twelfth month, that is, according to the Latines or Orientals. For the Jews never celebrated the passover on that month which amongst them was accounted the twelfth, but on the fourteenth day of the first month. Further, this repetition or doubling of their passover, which Constantine objects against the Jews, seems to me not at all momentous. For the Jews might have retorted against the Christians, namely that they celebrated Easter twice in the same year, if we understand the year current. For let us suppose, that this year Easter was celebrated on the tenth of the Calends of May; on the year following it must necessarily be kept sooner. And so there will occur two Easters amongst the Christians within the space of one year current. Which nevertheless will not happen, if you count the year from the Æquinoctial Cardo to the Vernal Æquinox of the other year. See Epiphanius in Hæres. Audian. and Petav. Animad. p. 294. To whom add Ægidius Bucherius de Paschali Judæorum Cyclo, cap. 3. Vales.

[g] Τίν & χάριν. In Theodoret and Nicephorus the reading is τίν & ἂν χάριν, what reason therefore, &c. so 'tis also in Socrates and Gelasius.

Iasius. From whom the following words must be amended in this manner, πῶ ὑμετέρᾳ ἀγχίνοιαν, your prudence. And a little after, ἐν μηδεμία ὁμοιόσει, in no likeness. Although in those writers I have mentioned, the reading is ἐν μηδενὸς ὁμοιότητι in the likeness of any thing. In the Fuketian Copy 'tis ἐν μηδεμιᾷ προφάσει upon no pretence. Further, the Author of the Apostolick Constitutions. (book 5. chap. 16.) seems to allude to these words. Which any one will confess, who compares that place with these words of Constantine. Valef.

who, 'tis acknowledged, are distempered with a most grievous errour? For we shall never endure the keeping of two Easters in one and the same year. But, although what I have said were not sufficient, nevertheless it behooveth your prudence, to make it your greatest care, and the constant matter of your Prayers, that the purity of your souls should not in any thing seem to have communion with the usages of most wicked men. Besides, this also is to be considered, that 'tis a most detestable thing, that there should any disagreement be found in a matter of so great concern, and in such a solemnity of Religion. For Our Saviour left us but one Festival day of our Liberty, that is the day of His most Holy Passion; and 'twas his will, that His Catholick Church should be one. The members of which Church (although for the most part they are dispersed into many and various places, nevertheless) are cherished by one spirit, that is by the Divine Will. Let the prudence of Your Sanctity consider, how grievous and indecent a thing it is, that on the self-same days some should keep [h] strict Fasts, and others celebrate Feasts: and that after the days of Easter, some should be conversant in Feastings and a relaxation [of their minds;] and others devote themselves to set Fasts. Wherefore, 'tis the Will of Divine Providence, that this thing should be redressed by a convenient emendation, and reduced to one and the same form, as I suppose you are all sensible.

[h] He means the head [or beginning] of the Fast, which by the Quartodecimani was begun at one time; by the other Christians, at another. Indeed, the following words concerning the days after Easter, do inform us that these words are to be understood concerning the head of the Fast. Otherwise it would be a superfluous Repetition. But if any one had rather understand these words concerning the end of the Lent-fast, I shall not gainsay him. See Chrysostome in his Homily against those who fasted the first day of Easter, pag. 714. Valef.

CHAP. XIX.

An Exhortation, that they would rather follow the greatest part of the world.

Since therefore it was expedient to make such an amendment in this matter, as that we might have nothing in common with the * usage of those Parricides and Murderers of Our Lord; and since this is the most decent and becoming Order, which all the Churches of the Western, Southern, and Northern parts of the world, and also some of the Eastern parts, do observe: [a] on this account all persons have at present judged it good and expedient, (and I my self have promised that it would please your prudence,) that that which with one and a concordant mind is observed in the City of Rome, and over all Italy, Affrica, Egypt, Spain, the Gallia's, the Britannia's, the [b] Libya's, thorowout all Achaia, the Asian and Pontick Diœceſis, and Cilicia; Your prudence also would most willingly embrace and receive. Which [wiſedom of yours] will consider, that not only the number of the Churches in the forementioned places is far the greater; but that 'tis most just and equal, that all men should in common desire that, which [c] strict reason seems to require, and should have no communion with the [d] perjury of the Jews. But that I may speak more summarily and briefly, it has pleased the judgment of all in common, that the most holy Feast of Easter should be celebrated on one and the same day. For 'tis indecent, that there should be any difference in so great a sanctity: and 'tis better to follow that Opinion, [e] wherein there is no mixture of strange errour and impiety.

* In the Greek 'tis ἔθνος, Nation.

[a] Οὗ ἔνεκεν. In Socrates, Theodoret, Gelasius and Nicephorus the reading is ὧν ἕνεκεν, for these reasons. But it would be better thus, τούτων ἕνεκεν, or τούτου, as 'tis above. In the Fuketian Manuscript 'tis τούτου ἕνεκεν, on this account, and so 'tis in Turnebus's Copy. Valef.

[b] Every one sees, that the words are misplac't here. 'Tis tighter therefore in Gelasius, thus, The Britannia's, Egypt, and the Libya's. Socrates has Libya; which reading I like best. Valef.

[c] Ἀπειθὴς λόγῳ. In Theodoret and Gelasius the reading is ἀλογισμός; which displeases me not, provided λογισμὸς be the same with ψηφισμὸς, that is, diligens supputatio, an exact reckoning; whence 'tis termed Computus Paschalis. ἀπειθὴς λόγῳ is taken in another sense, in the Synodick Letter of the Nicene Council, where it treats concerning the cause of Meletius. For 'tis there taken for the rigour of the Law, and 'tis opposed to equity or a dispensation. Valef. See Socrates, book 1. chap. 9. note (b.)

[d] The Jews are termed perfidious and perjured men, who, whenas they acknowledged no King or Lord besides God, afterwards denied the same [Lord,] and attested they had no other King but Cæsar. Valef.

[e] After these words, there was a whole line wanting in Robert Stephens's Edition; which 'twas easie to have made good from Socrates, Theodoret, Gelasius, and Nicephorus, in this manner, ἐν ᾗ δήπουθεν ἔστι ἀλλοτρίας πλάνης καὶ ἁμαρτήματος ὁπωσοῦν, wherein there is no mixture of [or converse with] strange errour and impiety. This is what Constantine had said above at chap. 18. τῆς ἀλλοκότου ταυτησὶ συνωδίνης ἀπαναδύσεως; where see what we have remarked at note (d.) For Christophorson in no wise understood these words. Valef.

CHAP. XX.

An Exhortation, that [all] should * give their assent to the Decrees of the Synod.

* Or, Be perswaded by those things written by the Synod.

Since therefore these things are thus, do you with all willingness receive this † Gift of God, and this truly divine Commandment. [a] For whatever is transacted [and determined] in the holy Assemblies of Bishops, That has a reference to the divine will. Wherefore, when you shall have intimated to all our beloved Brethren those matters which have been transacted, [b] you ought to embrace and establish the forementioned rule and observation of the most holy day: that when I shall come into the presence of [c] Your Love (which I have long since been desirous of,) I may celebrate the holy Festival with you, on one and the same day, and may rejoyce with you for all things, beholding the Cruelty of the Devil totally removed by the Divine power, and by [d] our * endeavours; whilst your Faith, Peace, and Concord does every where flourish. God preserve You, Dearest Brethren!

† Or, Grace.

* Or, Actions.

[a] This opinion of Constantine concerning the authority of the determinations of Synods, is to be taken notice of. There is another place like to this, in a Letter of the same Constantine to the Bishops after the Council of Orleance. Dico enim, ut se veritas habet, &c. For I speak, as the truth is. The judgment [or, determination] of the Bishops [or, Priests] ought so to be esteemed, as if the Lord himself sate and judged. For they may not think any other thing, or judge any other thing, but what they are taught by the Instruction of Christ. Valef.

[b] From this place it may plainly be gathered, that this Letter of Constantine's was written to the Bishops who had not been present at the Synod. Indeed, the Letter is inscribed To the Churches. But, by the name of the Churches, the Prelates are to be meant. For The Church consists in the Prelates, as Honorius says in the Appendix to the Theodosian Code. Valef.

[c] This is an Expression peculiar to the Christians; who when they spoke to any one of their Brethren, either by word of mouth or Letter, were wont to say Your charity or Your Love. Nothing occurs more frequently in the Epistles of the holy Fathers, so that we need not heap together instances. So Athanasius expresses himself in his Epistle concerning the Decrees of the Nicene Synod, a passage whereof we have quoted a little before. But Christophorson renders διάθεσιν, disposition; nor did he understand the meaning of this place. Valef.

[d] Διὰ τῆς ὑμετέρων πράξεως, by your actions. I doubt not but it should be ἡμετέρων, our, as the reading is in Socrates, Theodoret, Gelasius, Iasius, and Nicephorus. 'Tis certain, Constantine in his Letters is wont to boast, that the Divine Majesty by his Labour had destroyed the Tyrants who persecuted the Church, and had freed the whole world from the superstitious worship of Damons. Vales.

c Ταύτης τῆς ἐπιστολῆς ἰσοδυναμοῦσαν γεγραφήν. Christophorson understood not this place, as 'tis apparent from his Version. For he renders it thus; Edictum, quod idem pondus habebat & autoritatem cum hâc Epistolâ, Imperator in singulas misit Provincias: An Edict, which had the same weight and authority with this Letter, the Emperour sent into each Province. But Eusebius mentions no Edict, but only a Letter sent to the Bishops. Christophorson thought that γεγραφὴ signified an Edict, which was a great mistake. For ἰσοδυναμοῦσα γεγραφὴ τῆς ἐπιστολῆς is nothing else but a Transcript of a Letter; which Graecians do likewise term ἴσον or ἰσότυπον; and we in the vulgar Idiome call it Copiam, a Copy. Eusebius says therefore, that Constantine sent a Copy of this Letter into all the Provinces, or, (which is the same thing,) that he sent this Letter written from the same Copy to all the Provinces. Further, the Reader is to be advertised, that the Title of this chapter was put in a wrong place, in regard it belongs to the conclusion of the foregoing Letter, as any one may see. This Title therefore must be placed above, before these words Since therefore these things, &c. as 'tis in the Fuketian Copy. And there we have set it. Vales.

c A Copy of this very Letter was by the Emperour transmitted into every Province; whereby, as in a glass, he gives those that reade it, the clearest view of his own mind, and of his piety towards God.

CHAP. XXI.

*[His] advice to the Bishops now ready to go away, * that they would preserve Unity.*

* Or, Concerning Concord.

FUrther, when the Synod was about to be dissolved, a He made a Valedictory Speech to the Bishops. For on a set day he called them all together. And when they were met, he advised them that they should use their utmost diligence to preserve Peace one with another, and to avoid pertinacious Contentions; that they should not be envious, if any Bishop amongst them appeared eminent and approved for wisdom and eloquence: but, should account the virtue of every one to be a common good: that those who were the more eminent ought not to † exalt themselves above them who were meaner: For, that it was God's property to give a judgement concerning every one's true virtue and worth. That it was rather behoveable, that [the more eminent] should yield and condescend to the Weaker; with an indulgence and Lenity; especially, in regard 'twas very difficult to find any thing every way perfect. Wherefore, that it behoved them to grant one another pardon for small offences, and to forgive and remit whatever has been committed through humane frailty; b having always an high regard to, and honour for mutual Concord; least whilst they raise Seditions and Factions one amongst another, an occasion of derision might be given to those, who are ready to blaspheme the Divine Law. c Of which persons we must take the greatest care, and ought to do all things, in regard they d might easily be saved, if those things performed amongst us could seem to them desirable and worthy of imitation. e And, that they [ought] not to doubt, that the advantage [arising] from discourses does not profit all men. For some rejoyce, that conveniences are f allowed them as 'twere in order to their maintenance: others are imperfect in many places, as we have already noted diverse times. Now, this place may not unfitly be made good thus; ὧν μάλιστα προσηκεῖν ἡμᾶς, καὶ ποιεῖν τὰ πάντα δεῖν, of which persons we must take the greatest care, and ought to do all things, in regard, &c. For these words are spoken concerning the Pagans, of whom Constantine had made mention just before, when he said τοῖς τὸν θεῖον βλασφημεῖν νόμον παρεσκευασμένοις, to those, who are ready to blaspheme the Divine Law. Constantine says therefore to the Bishops, that their chiefest care ought to be, least by their dissentions the Pagans should be provoked to contemn and deride the Christian Religion. For, that it behoves us, to take the greatest care imaginable of them, and to do all things, whereby they might be recalled to the true faith and salvation. But, that they might easily be saved, and come to the knowledge of the truth, if our matters might seem blessed and admirable to them. Wherefore, that every one of them ought to be allured to our side by various ways and arts. Then he makes use of an instance of Physitians, who that they may restore health to the sick, devise all things which they believe may be of advantage to them. These words, 'tis certain, the Translatours understood not, in whose Versions the Reader will find all things contrary. To this place is to be referred a passage of Eusebius in chap. 58. of this book, where he says that the Emperour Constantine gave a great quantity of Gold to the Churches for the maintenance of the poor, in regard he was desirous, that all men should be invited, even this way also, to embrace the doctrine of the saving faith; according to the example of the Apostle, who in his Epistle to the Philippians says these words, whether in pretence, or in truth, Christ is Preached. Further, in the Fuketian and Savilian Copies, and in Turnebus's Book, this whole place is written thus; ὃς καὶ μάλιστα δεῖ σωθῆναι. ἐκ ἀδύνατον δὲ εἰ τὰ καθ' ἡμᾶς αὐτοῦ ζηλωτὰ φαίνοιντο. Which questionless is the true reading. This only I would have mended, that instead of ἐκ ἀδύνατον δὲ it should be written ἐκ ἀδύνατον δὲ; and afterwards, instead of μὴ ἀξιοεῖν that the reading be μὴ ἀξιοεῖν δὲ. Vales.

a Συντακτικὴν παρεῖχεν ὁμιλίαν. Translatours understood not this expression. For Portesius renders it thus, ex composito verba fecit ad Episcopos. Christophorson in this manner, Sermonem apud Episcopos de rebus ordine dispensandis instituit. But συντακτικὴν παρεῖχεν ὁμιλίαν imports no more than, Valedixit, he bad farewell, or took his leave of. Menander, or rather Alexander Rhetor, (in the chapter περὶ λαλιᾶς pag. 624,) writes, that συντακτικὴ λαλιὰ was by the Sophists termed an Oration, wherein the Scholastici (when the course of their studies was compleated,) departing from Athens, and about to return into their own Country, attested their grief in reference to their going away: or when any one going from home, resolved upon a journey to Athens. The same Author in his chapter περὶ συντακτικῶν λόγων, gives us the method of such Orations: ὁ συντασόμενος, φίλος ἐστὶν ἀναιρούμενος ἐπὶ τῇ χωρισμῷ, he that bids farwell, pretends himself grieved on account of his departure. Moreover, throughout the whole chapter he every where uses συντάττειν for valedicere, to bid farwell. And he says, that this sort of Oration was first invented by Homer, in whom Ulysses bids farwell to the Phaeaces. But Natalis Comes who translated Menander Rhetor into Latine, renders συντακτικὸν λόγον, adjunctivam Orationem, an adjunctive Speech, and translates those words I have cited, ὁ συντασόμενος, &c. adjungens, &c. adjoyning, &c. Than which nothing can be more foolish. But with Graecians σωτάττειν is valedicere ta bid farwell. Hesychius, συντάξασθαι, ἀσπάσασθαι. So Eusebius uses it in the end of this chapter, and in the First Book, chap. 21. where he speaks concerning the death of Constantius Chlorus. There is an Oration of this sort extant, made by Gregory Nazianzene in the convention of the 150 Bishops; which Oration has this Title, συντακτήριος λόγος, which is the same with σωτάκτικος. For in this Oration Gregorius bids farwell to the Constantinopolitane Church. Suidas therefore is right in saying συντακτήριος. συντακτικός. But, as to what the same Suidas adds, that Origen was called συντακτήριος, in that he is much out: for Origen was termed συντάκτης, as Epiphanius attests, not συντακτήριος. Vales.

† Raise, or, advance.

b Περὶ πολλοῦ ποιούμενον. It would be better, were it made ποιούμενος. Vales.

c Ὧν μάλιστα τὰ πάντα δεῖν. Some words seem to be wanting here. Indeed these Books are imper-

d Σωθῆναι σωφρόνων. At this place σωθῆναι signifies to partake of the doctrine of the salutary Faith; in which sense 'tis taken by St Paul, where he says, that God would have all men to be saved, and come to the knowledge of the Truth. This verb is in this sense proper to the Christian Religion. In which signification nevertheless, the Philosophers of the latter age used it, as I remember I have read in the Commentaries of Proclus on Timaeus. Vales.

e Μὴ ἀμφισγοεῖν. It is rather to be written μὴ τε ἀμφισγοεῖν, by understanding δεῖ which was made use of a little before; and we have rendred it accordingly. But the Fuketian Copy has opened to us the true reading, wherein 'tis thus worded, μὴ ἀξιοεῖν δ' ὑμᾶς ὅτιμα ἀς, &c. But I suppose you are not ignorant, that, &c. And so Turnebus had mended it at the margin of his Book, from a Manuscript Copy. Vales.

f Ἐπιχορηγούμενοι. A new and unusual word; instead whereof it ought, as I think, to be ἐπιχορηγούμενοι, allowed. The meaning of this passage is the same with that we have set in our Version. For Constantine says, that the Pagans are wont to be converted to our Religion on various accounts and occasions. That some are drawn by the hope of food, namely because of the Alms of the Christians. Others, by the hope of Patronage; to wit, on account of the authority of the Bishops, who could do much with the Emperour and Grandees at Court. Πρεσβεία signifies Patronage, Protection, or Favour, as I have noted at Amm. Marcellinus; which term John Chrysostome makes frequent use of. In the excellent Fuketian Copy the word ἐπικαιρούμενοι is wanting, and this whole place is thus worded; οἱ μὲν δὲ ὡς πρὸς ὄψιν χαίρουσιν. οἱ δὲ τοῦ πρεσβείας ἕνεκα μᾶλλον ὑποτρέχειν εἰώθασιν; For some rejoyce as 'twere on account of food: others are wont to run under those who are possessed of [or, have procured] Patronage. Vales.

are

are wont to flie to Patronage. Some love those from whom they have had a kind reception: and others being honoured with Gifts, are thereby induced to enter into a friendship. But their number is small who are [g] true Lovers of discourses, and † 'tis a rare thing to find a friend of Truth. For which reason they ought all to fit and conform themselves [to all men,] and (like a Physitian) administer to each person those things which are profitable for salvation; to the end that the saving Doctrine may be honoured by all men. These were the admonitions [given them by the Emperour] in the first place. But in the close he added, that with all diligence and earnestness they would put up their prayers to God in behalf of him. Having in this manner taken leave of them, he permitted them all to return into their own Countries. They therefore went home with all the chearfullness imaginable; and in future one Opinion, which had been agreed on in the Emperours presence, prevailed amongst all men; in regard, those who for a long time had been disunited, closed again in one Body as 'twere.

[g] Λόγων ἀληθεις. The Fuketian Copy and Sr Henry Savil's have it written λόγων ἀληθῶν ἐραστὰι, Lovers of true discourses. And in the same manner 'tis mended in the margin of Turnebus's Book. But the common reading (expresst in our Version) pleases me best, by reason of those words which immediately follow, to the end a tautology might be avoided. A little after, the Fuketian Copy and the Kings Sheets have it written ὑφ' ἑνὶ σώματι, in one Body; not ἐφ' ἑνὶ, as 'tis in the common Editions. In the same Copy I found it written διόπερ πάντας ἁρμόσθαι δεῖ, For which reason they ought to fit and conform themselves to all men; not as 'tis commonly Printed, διὸ πρὸς πάντας. Vales.

† Or, A friend of truth is rare.

CHAP. XXII.

In what manner he sent to some, and wrote to others; and [concerning] the distributions of money.

THe Emperour therefore, rejoycing at this * great success, by his Letters imparted most plentifull and pleasing fruit to those who had not been present at the Synod. Moreover, he ordered liberal distributions of money to be made amongst all the people, as well those in the Countries as them in the Cities; in this manner honouring the publick Festivals [celebrated] on account of the twentieth year of his Empire.

* Or, Brave exploit, viz. the union of the Church.

CHAP. XXIII.

How he wrote to the Egyptians, *and exhorted them * to Peace.*

* Or, In relation to Peace.

BUt when all other persons were at Peace one with another, amongst the Egyptians only the mutual contention was fierce and implacable: in so much that they did again disturb the Emperour; nevertheless they excited him not to anger. For he † treated them with all the honour imaginable, as if they had been Fathers, or rather Prophets of God; and called them to him a second time; and did again with great patience mediate between them; and honoured them with Gifts again, and declared to them his determination by a Letter: wherein he confirmed and establisht the Decrees of the Synod; and besought them that they would be studious to preserve Concord, that they should not distract nor tear in sunder the Church; but, that they should take into their consideration the memory of the judgment of God. And these things the Emperour suggested to them by † a peculiar Letter.

† Or, Cherisht.

† Or, His own writing.

CHAP. XXIV.

*That he frequently wrote * Pious Letters to the Bishops and People.*

* Or, Piously.

MOreover, he wrote infinite other things of the same sort with these, and penn'd a vast number of Letters; † sometimes to the Bishops, wherein he commanded those things which were of advantage to the Churches of God; at others, he addrest himself by Letters even to the || populacy themselves, [in which Letters] this thrice blessed person stiled the people of the Church, Brethren and his own Fellow-servants. But we will at another time get leisure [a] to make a Collection of these [Letters and Sanctions] in a peculiar Volume, to the end the || Series of this our History may not be interrupted at present.

† Or, Partly.

|| Or, Multitudes.

|| Or, Body.

[a] Indeed, Eusebius did afterwards perform what he here promises; and in a peculiar volume comprized all the Letters and Sanctions of the Emperour Constantine, which bore a reference to the Catholick Faith. This I am informed of from the Medican Copy; wherein, at the close of his Eccles. Hist. Constantine's Letter to the Palestinians is written out, which Eusebius hath recorded in the foregoing book, and after the foresaid Letter these words occur; ταῦτα μὲν ἐν ὧδέ μοι κείσθω. φέρε δὲ λοιπὸν. τοὺ νόμους, καὶ τὰς ὑπὲρ τῆς ἀληθοῦς εὐσεβείας τῷ θεοφιλεῖ ἡμῶν καὶ περσοτάτῳ βασιλεῖ ὁπισθολὰς, ἀφ' ἑτέρας ἀρχῆς ὁμοῦ πάσας συναγάγωμεν; that is, Let these things therefore be here placed by me. But come on now; let us from another head [or, beginning] gather together the Laws, and all the Letters of our Pious and most mild Emperour [written] in defence of the true Religion. Vales.

CHAP. XXV.

That he ordered a Church to be built at Jerusalem, in the holy place of our Saviour's Resurrection.

THese matters having been in this manner performed, this pious [Emperour] effected [a] another vast work highly memorable, in the Province of the Palestinians. But what was that? He lookt upon it as his duty, to render that most blessed place of the Salutary Resurrection, which is at Jerusalem, illustrious and venerable in the sight of all men. He gave order therefore, that an Oratory should forthwith be erected there: which he was induced to do, not without God's appointment; but had his mind incited thereto by our Saviour himself.

[a] Μνήμης ἄλλο τι μέγιστον. The first word ought, I think, to be expunged, as being superfluous; unless it should be made μνήμης ἕνεκα, on account of its memorableness. It may also be worded thus, εἰς μνήμην. Turnebus at the margin of his Copy hath made it ἄξιον instead of μέγιστον. Vales.

CHAP. XXVI.

That the Impious had covered our Lord's Sepulchre with Rubbish and Idols.

FOr impious men, or rather the whole Tribe of Dæmons by the assistance of such men, had heretofore made it their business, wholly to involve that admirable monument of Immortality in darkness and oblivion. [That Monument I say] to which an Angel, shining with light, descended from heaven, and rolled away the stone from their minds who were really stony, and who supposed that the living [Christ] as yet lay amongst the dead : [which Angel] brought glad tidings to the women, and removed the stone of Infidelity from [a] their minds, to the end he might assert an opinion concerning his Life, who was sought for by them. This salutary Cave therefore some impious and profane persons took a resolution wholly to render invisible ; being so fooliish as to think, that by this means they should conceal the truth. Wherefore, having by much labour brought together a vast quantity of earth, [b] from what place soever they could get it, and heap't it up, they * filled that whole place. And after this they raised it to an height, and paved it with stone ; under which great heap of earth they hid the divine Cave which was below. Then, as if nothing else remained to [be done by] them, upon this [heap of] earth they prepare a truely horrid Sepulchre of Souls ; erecting a dark Cavern of dead Idols, in honour of that Lascivious Dæmon [whom they term] Venus : in which place they [c] offered abominable oblations upon impure and execrable Altars. For by this means only, and not otherwise, they thought to bring to effect what they had attempted, if by these execrable abominations they could cover the salutary Cave. For the Wretches were not able to understand, that it was altogether unlikely, that he who had been Crowned with a Victory over death, should leave this attempt of theirs concealed : [d] in the like manner as 'tis impossible, that the Sun shining above the earth, and performing his † usual course in the Heavens, should escape the knowledge of all mankind. For the power of our Saviour (which shines with a light far more resplendent than the Sun, and which does not illustrate Bodies [as the Sun does,] but the souls of men,) had now filled the whole world with its own Raies of Light. Nevertheless, the Machinations of these impious and prophane men against the Truth, had continued for a long space of time. Nor was there any person to be found, either of the Presidents, or * Duces, or of the Emperours themselves, who could be fit to destroy this so audacious an impiety ; save only this one [Prince,] the Friend to the supream God. Who, inspired with the divine Spirit, and not enduring that that forementioned place, which by the Enemies frauds had been hid under all manner of impure † filth, should be delivered up to oblivion and ignorance ; nor thinking it fit to yield to their malice, who had been the occasioners hereof : having called upon that God who was his Assistant, gives order that it should be cleansed. It being his Sentiment, that that part especially of the Ground, which had been defiled by the Enemie, ought by his means to enjoy the Divine Magnificence. As soon therefore as this Order was issued out from the Emperour, those engines of fraud were thrown down from their vast height to the very ground ; and the Buildings erected to lead men into errour, were ruined and demolish't, together with the very Statues themselves and the Dæmons.

[a] I supposed the word their was to be referred to the women which came early to the Sepulchre of our Lord. But Christophorson referred it to those stony and incredulous persons, concerning whom Eusebius hath spoken a little before ; which I approve not of. Vales.

[b] Ἐξωθεν ποθέν. I would rather read ὁξ ὅθεν ποθέν, that is, from what place soever they could get it. Vales.

* Or, Cover.

[c] Θυσίας ἐπὶ βωμῶν ἐπισπένδουσες. Christophorson has rendred this place very ill, in this manner ; tum detestabiles ibi victimas super impuras aras immolare, also to offer detestable victims there upon impure Altars. But the term ἐπισπένδουσες does sufficiently shew, that Eusebius speaks not here concerning Victims or Beasts killed in Sacrifice, but concerning Libations ; to wit, Wine, Milk, and the like, which the Heathens offered to their Gods. Besides, 'tis wholly absurd, that Victims should be killed upon the Altars. For Sacrifices were kil'ed by, not upon the Altars. This is a known Verse of Ovid ;

Rode caper vitem. Tamen hinc cùm stabis ad aras, &c. Vales.

[d] Οὐδὲ πῃ σύμπασαν ὑφ' ἀνθρώπων λαθεῖν. This place is imperfect, of which sort very many occur in these Books of Eusebius. It may, as I think, not unfitly be made good in this manner ; ὡς οὐδὲ πῃ σύμπασαν ὑφ' ἀνθρώπων φύσιν δυνηθῆ λαθεῖν, &c. in the like manner as 'tis impossible, &c. Indeed, Eusebius's following words do most plainly confirm this our emendation. But Christophorson has confounded all things here, as 'tis apparent from his Version. Vales.

* Military Commanders.

† Or, Matters.

CHAP. XXVII.

In what manner Constantine gave order, that the Materials wherewith the Idol-Temple had been built, and the Rubbish should be removed and thrown at a great distance.

NOr did the Emperour's earnestness and diligence stop here. But he issued forth another Order, that the Materials of the Buildings demolished, which consisted of Stone and Timber, should be removed, and thrown at a vast distance without the confines of that Region. Which Order of his likewise was forthwith put in execution. Nor was he satisfied in proceeding thus far only. But, incited again by a divine warmth and zeal, he commanded, that they should dig up the very ground it self of that place, to a vast depth, and carry away the earth which was thrown out a far off, in regard it had been defiled with the Gore of Sacrifices offered to * Devils.

* Or, Dæmons.

CHAP. XXVIII.

*The discovery * of the most Holy Sepulchre.*

WIthout delay therefore this Command was likewise fulfilled. But after another ground † beneath the former, namely the place which was at the bottome, was discovered ; then the August and most Holy || Monument of our Saviour's Resurrection, contrary to all expectation appeared. And then also that Cave, [which may truly be stiled] the Holy of Holies, expresst a certain likeness to our Saviour's Resurrection : in regard, after its being * buried in darkness, it came forth into the light again, and gave a manifest History of those Miracles heretofore performed there, to be viewed

* Or, Of the Holy Sepulchre of the Holies.

† Or, Instead of ; he means the heap of earth wherewith the Heathens had filled that place.

|| Or, Evidence.

* Or, Overwhelmed with.

viewed by them who flock't together to that sight; [an History] that attested the Resurrection of our Saviour [a] by the things themselves, which sound far more audibly and clearly than any voice.

[a] Ἔργοις ἅπασι γεγονοτέρᾳ φωνῆς. It must doubtless be made γεγονοτέρᾳς, which Christophorson perceived not. The meaning of the place is this, that that restitution of the Lord's Sepulchre after so many ages, did really confirm the Resurrection of our Lord. In the Fuketian Copy the reading is γεγονοτέρως, in which manner Turnebus had likewise mended it at the margin of his Book, from a Manuscript Copy. In the Kings Sheets 'tis γεγονοτέρας. Sr Henry Savil had noted at the margin of his Book, that perhaps it should be γεγονότεσιν. Vales.

CHAP. XXIX.

In what manner he wrote to the Presidents, and to Macarius the Bishop, concerning the Building [of a Church.]

THese things having been thus performed, immediately the Emperour, by issuing forth pious Laws and constitutions, and by plentifull allowances for expences, orders a Church befitting God to be built about the Salutary Cave, with a magnificence that was rich and royal. For he had laid this design within himself long before, and with a divine alacrity had foreseen that which in future would be. [He gave command] therefore to the Governours of the Provinces in the East, that by allowing liberal and plentifull supplies, they should make that Work Stately, large, and Magnificent. But to the Bishop who at that time presided over the Church at Jerusalem, he sent this Letter, wherein by manifest expressions he has asserted * the Doctrine of the saving Faith, writing in this manner.

* Or, The saving Doctrine of the Faith.

CHAP. XXX.

Constantine's [Letter] to Macarius, concerning the Building of the Martyrium of Our Saviour.

VICTOR CONSTANTINUS MAXIMUS AUGUSTUS, To Macarius.

SO great is Our Saviour's Love and Favour, that [a] no Rhetorick seems sufficient to set forth a Declaration of the present Miracle. For, that the Monument of his most Holy Passion, long since hid underneath the earth, should lie concealed for so many periods of years, till such time as, by the [b] slaughter of that common Enemy, it should gloriously appear to his servants now set at Liberty, [is a matter which] does really surmount all admiration. For, if all those persons who throughout the whole world are accounted wise, should be convened in one and the same place, with a design to speak something agreeable to the worthiness of this matter; they would not be able after their utmost endeavours, to attain to [an explication of] the least part of it. [c] For, * the authority of this Miracle doth as far transcend every Nature capable of Humane reason, as things that are celestial do exceed those which are humane. Wherefore, this is always my chief and only aim, that as the authority of the truth doth daily demonstrate it self by new Miracles, so the minds of us all should with all modesty and unanimous alacrity, become more carefull and diligent about [an observation of] the Holy Law. [d] Which thing in regard I judge to be manifestly apparent to all men, my desire is you should most especially be perswaded of this, that there is nothing which I have a greater care about and concern for, than that we should adorn that sacred place (which by God's command I have unburthened of that most detestable accession of the Idol, as 'twere of some ponderous and heavy weight; [which place] by God's determination was made holy from the beginning; but was afterwards demonstrated to be more holy, out of which he hath brought to light the Truth and Certainty of Our Saviour's passion;) with magnificent and stately structures.

[a] Μὴ δὲ μίαν λόγων ἐκφαυλίσειν. In Socrates, Theodoret and Nicephorus, the reading is λόγων χορηγίαν; which I think to be truer. Vales.

[b] Constantine here terms Licinius the publick Enemy; after whose destruction, he says, the sacred Sepulchre of Our Lord, which before had been concealed, was brought to the light and sight of men. Licinius was slain on the year of Christ 326, as 'tis recorded in Idatius' Fasti. And on that very year, when Helena was come to Jerusalem, the Sepulchre of Our Lord was found. By the name of Publick Enemy, the Devill might also be meant here, were not this contradicted by the following words. For the Devill was not then finally vanquished and overcome, when the Sepulchre of the Lord was cleared from the filth and rubbish which covered it. Besides, ἀναίρεσις, that is, slaughter, is more appositely spoken of Licinius, than concerning the Devill. Vales.

[c] Ἐπὶ ποσὸν πᾶσαν. I think it must be ἐπεὶ ποσόν πᾶσαν, &c; and have rend ed it accordingly. Vales.

* The term πίστις, faith, authority, or credit, is wanting here; which we have inserted from Socrates booke 1. chap. 9.

[d] Ὅπερ δὴ ἔν. This place is to be mended from Socrates and Theodoret. Vales.

CHAP. XXXI.

That He would have this Church built so, as to exceed all the Churches in the world, for beauty of Walls, Columns, and Marbles.

THerefore, it does well become Your Prudence, so to dispose and make provision of all materials necessary for the work, that not only the Church it self may in stateliness excell all others in what place so ever, but also that the other parts of it may be made such, as that all the beautifullest structures in whatever City may be outdone by this Fabrick. And as concerning the raising and exquisite workmanship of the walls, We would have you know, that the care thereof hath by Us been committed to Our Friend [a] Dracilianus Deputy to the most Famous the Præfecti Prætorio, and to the President of the Province.

[a] Δεξικιλιανῷ τῷ ἡμῶν ἐπαρχῶν μέρη. This place must likewise be mended from Socrates, Theodoret, and Nicephorus, in this manner, τὰ ἡμῶν λαμπρεστάτων ἐπάρχων μέρη, Deputy to the most Famous the Præfecti Prætorio. There are indeed two Laws of Constantine extant in the Theodosian Code, the one in the Title de Usuris, the other in that de Hæreticis, written to this Dracilianus. The former has this Inscription; Imp. Constantinus Aug. ad Dracilianum agentem vices Præfectorum Prat. It was published at Cæsarea in Palestine on the fifteenth of the Calends of May, in the Consulate of Paulinus and Julianus. But the second is said to have been published on the Calends of September, at Generastum, Constantinus Augustus the seventh time and Constantius Cæsar being Coss. That is, on the year of Christ 326. On which year also Constantine wrote this Letter to Macarius Bishop of Jerusalem. Further, 'tis to be noted, that the Præfecti Prætorio are here termed Clarissimi, most famous. For they had not yet received the dignity of the Illustrissimate, [or the title of most Illustrious.] Moreover, in other of Constantine's Laws, the Præfecti Prætorio are stiled clarissimi, as it occurs in these Books. But, as the Præfecti Prætorio had only the Title of Clarissimi in Constantine's age, so the Vicarii [Deputies] of the Prætorian Præfecture were stiled only perfectissimi [most perfect] in the times of the same Constantine; as a Letter to Probianus Proconsul of Africk informs us. See Athanasius's Apologetick to Constantius pag. 794. Vales.

For it has been ordered by Our Piety, that Artificers and Workmen, and whatever else they may be informed of from Your Prudence as necessary for the Structure, shall by their care be forthwith sent. But concerning the Columns or Marbles, whatever You Your Self, [b] on sight of the Modell, shall judge to be more sumptuous and usefuller, make it Your business to inform Us by Letter; that when we shall understand from Your Letter, how many and what manner of Materials You stand in need of, they may be conveyed to you from all parts. [[c] For 'tis but reasonable, that that most admirable place of the whole world, should be beautified according to its dignity and worth.]

[b] Σωφρο-σύνης ἀξιω-θήσῃ. At this place σύνοψις signifies the form and delineation of the future work. In which sense 'tis taken also in the Letter of Himerius the Rationalis of Alexandria to the Præfect of Mareotis, which Athanasius records in his Apologie, pag. 803. For, after he had said, that Augustus and the Cæsars had permitted Ischyras to build a Church in his own Village, he commands the Præpositus of that Village, forthwith to draw a Modell of the future Building, and send it to his office. See Socrat. book 1. chap. 9. note (x.) Vales.

[c] This whole sentence is wanting here in the Greek Text of Eusebius. It occurs in Socrates book 1. chap. 9; in Theodoret book 1. chap. 17; and in Robert Stephens's Edition also at the said places of Socrates and Theodoret: but at this place 'tis left out in Robert Stephens's Edition. 'Tis inserted here in Valesius's Version; from whom, and the forementioned authorities, we have put it into our Translation.

CHAP. XXXII.

That [Macarius] should write to the Presidents concerning the beautifying of the * Concha, and concerning Workmen, and Materials.

* Or, Inside of the Roof.

Further, I desire to know of You, whether You think good to have the inner Roof of the Church [a] Arched, or † Embowed, or made of any other sort of Work. For, if it be Embowed, it may also be ‖ gilded with Gold. [b] It remains therefore, that as soon as may be, Your Holiness should inform the forementioned Judges, how many Workmen and Artificers, and what money for Expences there will be need of: and that [Your Holiness] take care to give Me a speedy account, not only concerning the Marbles and Columns, but in reference also to the Embowed Roofs, if You shall judge that to be the more beautifull Work. God preserve You, Beloved Brother!

† Or, Fretted.

‖ Or, Adorned.

[a] Τὴν δὲ τῆς βασιλικῆς καμάρων, πότερον λακωνείαν. The Roofs of Churches were usually adorned two ways. For they were either beautified with Lacunaria, Embowed or Fretted-Roofs, or else wrought with Mosaick-Work. As to the Lacunaria, this place of Constantine is an evidence. Concerning the Mosaick-Work, Procopius is to be consulted, in his first book de Fabricis Justiniani, where he describes the Church of Saint Sophia. Now the Lacunaria were usually adorned two ways. For either they were gilded; or painted, which Pausias was the first inventer of, concerning whom Pliny (book 35, chap. 11,) writes thus: Idem & Lacunaria primus pingere instituit: nec cameras ante eum taliter adornari mos fuit. Isidorus (book 19. of his Origines,) writes thus; Laquearia sunt quæ cameram subtegunt & ornant: quæ & Lacunaria dicuntur: quòd Lacus quosdam quadratos vel rotundos ligno vel gypso vel coloribus habeant pictos, cum signis intermicantibus. Which place of Isidorus, Salmasius does without cause find fault with, in his notes on Flavius Vopiscus, pag. 393; where he denies that Lacunaria were ever put under Roofs. But Pliny in expres words affirms that very thing, as also Constantine in this Letter. The Old Authour of the Questions upon the Old and New Testament, at Question 106, has these words; Sicut enim ad ornamentum domus pertinet, si camera ejus habeat auro distincta Laquearia, &c. Vales.

[b] Καλλωπίσῃς τὸ λειπόμενον. At this place I followed the punctation of Theodoret and Nicephorus, who after the verb καλλωπίσῃς, gilded with Gold, set a point. All the Translatours likewise before us did the same, saving Musculus. But if any one had rather place the point after λειπόμενον, thus [what remains, or, the rest of the Building, may be also guilded with Gold.] Then it must be written, πλὴν ἡ σὴ ὁσιότης, &c. Besides, Your Holiness as soon as may be shall inform. &c; as the reading is in the Fuketian Manuscript and in Sr Henry Savil's Copy. Vales.

CHAP. XXXIII.

How the Church of [Our] Saviour was built, which the Prophets had termed New-Jerusalem.

THese were the Contents of the Emperour's Letter: his * order was immediately followed by the things themselves effectually put in execution. And [a] in the very Martyrium of Our Saviour, [b] the New-Jerusalem was built, over against that most celebrated Old [Jerusalem;] which having been reduced to the * utmost degree of Ruine and desolation after that nefarious Murder of Our Lord, underwent the punishment of its impious Inhabitants. Opposite to this [City] therefore, the Emperour erected † the Trophie of Victory which Our Saviour had gained over death, ‖ with a rich and gorgeous splendour. And this perhaps was that fresh and New Jerusalem, spoken of in the Oracles of the Prophets; concerning which there occurs so many, and such large expressions uttered by the divine Spirit it self. In the first place therefore, he adorned the sacred Cave, in regard it was the Head of the whole work; to wit, that divine Monument, at which an Angel shining with [a celestial] light, heretofore * declared to all men that Regeneration which was demonstrated by our Saviour.

* Or, Word.

* Or, Last.

† Or, The Salutary Victory over death.

‖ Or, With rich and abundant Honours, or Glories.

* Evangelized.

[a] Κατ' αὐτὸ τὸ σωτήριον μαρτύριον. Eusebius uses the same words in his Panegyrick concerning Constantine's Tricennalia, towards the latter end of chap. 9. Nor has Christophorson translated it ill in both places, thus, Salutare Christi Monumentum, the Saluary Monument of Christ. Indeed, above at chap. 28, Eusebius terms the Sepulchre of Our Lord τῆς σωτηρίου ἀναστάσεως μαρτύριον, the Martyrium or Monument of Our Saviour's Resurrection. Moreover, Cyril of Jerusalem, in his fourteenth Catechesis, writes that the place of Our Lord's Passion and Resurrection is termed The Martyrium. Vales.

[b] Νέα κατεσκεύαζέτο ἱερουσαλήμ. These words of Eusebius, Socrates has written out at chap. 17. book 1. ἡ δὲ τῆ βασιλέως μήτηρ, οἶκον μὲν εὐκτήριον ἐν τῷ τῆ μνήμαθ τόπῳ, πολυτελῆ κατεσκεύασεν, ἱερουσαλὴμ νέαν ἐπωνόμασεν, ἀντιπρόσωπον τῆ παλαιᾷ ἐκείνη καὶ καταλελειμμένῃ ποιήσασα; But the Emperour's Mother erected in the place of the Sepulchre a most magnificent Church, called it New-Jerusalem, building it opposite to that Old deserted [Jerusalem.] Which words of Socrates are to be observed with more of attention. In the first place he attributes that to Helena, which Eusebius says was done by Constantine. Wherein he has followed the Authority of Rufinus, who (book 1. chap. 8. of his Eccles. History) writes, that this Church was built at Jerusalem by Helena. Now, although it be of small moment, whether Helena at the charge of the Emperour Constantine, or Constantine himself by the care and diligence of his Mother Helena, be said to have built that Church: yet 'tis better to follow Eusebius's opinion; in regard he was both present at the things themselves, and also produces Constantine's Letter concerning the building of that Church. 'Tis to be remarked also, that what Eusebius had worded thus, κατ' αὐτὸ τὸ σωτήριον μαρτύριον, in or at the Martyrium of Our Saviour; that is thus exprest by Socrates, ἐν τῷ τῆ μνήμαθ τόπῳ, in the place of the Sepulchre. But, what Eusebius had expressed in this manner, ἡ νέα κατεσκεύαζέτο ἱερουσαλήμ, the New-Jerusalem was built; that Socrates words thus, οἶκον εὐκτήριον κατεσκεύασε, ἱερουσαλὴμ νέαν ἐπωνόμασεν, ἀντιπρόσωπον, &c. erected —a— Church, called it New-Jerusalem, building it opposite, &c: where any one may see that the word ἐπωνόμασεν, called it, must be expunged. For that Church was not termed New-Jerusalem, as the Translatour thought, and before him Nicephorus; but it was called The Martyrium, or The Basilica Constantiniana, and Anastasis. Eusebius therefore and Socrates do say only this, that Constantine or Helena, having erected that Church which was a great and stately Structure, built the New-Jerusalem over against that old one, which heretofore had been ruined by the Romans. Which is most true. For from that time, the City Ælia, its true and old name being by degrees abolished, began to be called Jerusalem by the Christians;

Christians; whenas notwithstanding, it really was not Jerusalem, in regard it had been erected in another soil, and was built by a Roman Emperour (who then was the bitterest Enemy to the Jews,) with that design and intent, that the Gentiles might inhabit it; but, that the Jews might be driven at the greatest distance from its entrance. Further, I doubt not but Eusebius alludes to that place which occurs in the Revelation, chap. 21. vers. 2; And I—saw the Holy City, New-Jerusalem coming down from God out of Heaven, prepared as a Bride adorned for her husband. Vales.

CHAP. XXXIV.

A description of the Fabrick of The most Holy Sepulchre.

THis [Monument I say,] in regard it was the Head of the whole work, the Emperour's Munificence in the first place *adorned with Eximious Columns, and with all imaginable beauty; and rendred it glorious and splendid by various sorts of Ornaments.

* Or, Distinguished.

but the outward surface of the Walls, being beautified with polisht Stones cemented together by exact joynts, made a most glorious and beautifull shew, nothing inferiour to the appearance of Marble. * As to the top of the Church, he covered the outward part of the Roof with Lead, in regard that was the strongest defence against Winter showers. But the Inner Roof being † set with [b] Carv'd Lacunaria, and spread like some great Sea all over the Church by ‖ Tables joyned one with another, and covered all over with the *purest Gold, made the whole Church shine, as 'twere, with Rayes of Light.

* Or, At the Roofs themselves above.

† Finished, or fitted.

‖ Or, Continued junctures.

* Bright, or clear.

[b] Γλυφῶς φαλνωμάτων. What φαλνώματα are, Hesychius and the Author of the Etymologicon do inform us; who interpret φαλνώματα, σανιδώματα, στέγη διάλυφα, that is, Tabellæ, tecta laquearia, Tablets, Embowed Roofs. Eusebius uses the same word hereafter at chap. 49. Hence therefore it appears, that the Roof of the Church was on the inside covered and adorned with a Lacunar [or Embowed Roof,] according to Constantine's thoughts about it, as he attests in his Letter to Macarius. For on the outside it was covered with Lead, to keep off showers. Therefore the Roof must necessarily have been framed of Stone, which might bear up the Lead laid upon it. Vales.

CHAP. XXXV.

A description of the Atrium, and of the Porticus's.

AFter that he passed to a most Spacious place, open to the pure air. The * Ground whereof he beautified by paving it with [a] shining or bright stone, and inclosed it [b] on three sides with Porticus's that † were extended to a vast length.

* Floor, or, Bottom.

† Or, Ran out.

[a] Λίθῳ λαμπρῷ. He seems to mean Marble, or at least polisht stone like to Marble. So in the following chapter Eusebius uses these words ξεστῷ λίθῳ λαμπρυνομένῃ to signifie the same. But Christophorson has rendred λαμπρὸν λίθον, Eximious Stone: Portesius translates it excellent Stone; not well, as I think. Vales.

[b] Ἐκ πεπλευρα. The Atria (Courts) of Churches consisted usually of four Porticus's, placed in form of a Quadrangle. In the midst there was an open place, such a one as we now a days see in the Cloysters of Monks. Eusebius informs us hereof, in the description of the Church at Tyre, which occurs in the Tenth Book of his Eccles. History. But in the Church at Jerusalem, the Frame or Composure was different. For there were only three Porticus's there, placed at the three sides. But in the fourth side, which was directly opposite to the Sepulchre at the rising Sun, instead of a Porticus there was the Church it self, as Eusebius informs us in the following chapter. Which seems to have been done for this reason, that the Church it self might be enlightned with a larger light, no Porticus on the outside giving any hindrance to the lights. Vales.

CHAP. XXXVI.

A description of the Walls, Roof, Beauty, and Gilding * of the Church it self.

* Or, Of the Temple of the Church.

FOr, to that side placed opposite to the Cave (which [side] lookt towards the rising Sun,) the † Basilica was joyned: a Work admirable and stately, raised to an immense height, and extended to a vast length and breadth. The In sides of which Structure [a] were covered with Crusts of Marble, that were of different colours:

† Or, Royal Church.

[a] Ὑλῃς μαρμάρῳ ποικίλῃς διηκριβωμένον πλακώσεις. The Ancients adorned walls with cut Crusts of Marble of a different colour, as I have noted at book 28. of Amm. Marcellinus, pag. 363. Such Crusts of Marble as these they termed πλάκας. See Gregor. Nazianz. in Orat. 32; and in His Carmen Anacreonticum ad animum suum. Vales.

CHAP. XXXVII.

A description of the double Porticus's on both sides, and of the three Eastern Gates.

FUrther, at both the sides, [a] double [b] Porticus's as well [c] beneath as above, in length equalled the whole Church; the Roofs of which [Porticus's] were likewise variously adorned with Gold.

[a] There were four Porticus's in the Jerusalem-Church; to wit, two at each side of the Church. For that's the meaning of these words δίπλῆν στῶν δίδυμοι παραστάδες. Besides, the following words do manifestly evince this. For, of these Porticus's Eusebius says some were in the front of the Church, that is more outward; but others more inward. In the same manner there were four Porticus's in the Church of the Apostles which was in the City Rome, as Prudentius attests in the Passion of the Apostles, in these Verses;

Subdidit & Parius fulvis laquearibus Columnas
Distinguit illic quas quaternus ordo.

The same Prudentius in the Passion of Hippolytus, writes thus concerning the Church of Saint Hippolytus:

Ordo columnarum geminus laquearia tecti
Sustinet, auratis suppositus trabibus.
Adduntur graciles tecto breviore recessus,
Qui literum seriem jugiter exsinuent.

The same Form may be seen in the greater Churches amongst us, where four Orders of Pillars do make two Porticus's on both sides. Further, such Porticus's as these seem to be termed gemellares in the Itinerarium Hierosolymitanum. Interius verò civitatis sunt piscinæ gemellares quinque Porticus habentes. In which place nevertheless, 'tis doubtfull, whither the pools themselves, or the Porticus's are to be termed gemellares. And 'tis better to understand the pools to be gemellares. For there were two Pools, as Jerome relates in his Book de Locis Hebraicis, where he treats of Bethesda. Vales.

[b] Παραστάδες. Christophorson has rendred it Xysta, which is ill done. For στῶν παραστάδες are by a Synecdoche made use of to signifie Porticus's. Hesychius expounds παραστάδας, Pillars which are set against [or, turned towards] a wall. But Christophorson referred those words δίπλῆν στῶν to πλάγιᾳ in this manner, ἀμφὶ δ' ἑκάτερα τὰ πλάγια δίπλῆν στῶν, &c. at both the sides of the double Portius's, &c: whereas, after the word sides, a comma is to be placed, as the reading is in the King's and Fuketian Manuscript; and those words δίπλῆν στῶν ought to be referred to πυραστάδες. For the sides of the Church are meant here; which is confirmed from the Tenth Book of his Eccles. History, where he describes the Church of Tyre in these words, τοῖς πρὸ ἑκάτερα τῆ παυλὸς νεῶ στοαῖς, to the Cloysters [or, Porticus's] on both sides of the whole Church. Vales.

[c] Ἀναγείων τε καὶ καταγείων. Eusebius has treated above concerning the Porticus's of the Atrium. Now he speaks concerning the Porticus's of the Church. And in the first place he says, that at each side of the Church there were two Porticus's. Then he tells us, that those Porticus's were partly ἀναγείους, partly καταγείους. Which I so render, as that those Porticus's had two Roofs; and that some of them were equal to the floor of the Church it self; but that the other Porticus's were placed above them; such as we see in our Churches. Porticus's of this sort the Ancients termed διοράφους or διστέγους, double-roof't. Gregory Nazianzene (Orat. 19, pag. 313, where he describes a Church built by his own Father,) has these words; χιόνων δὲ ἢ τοῖν κιόνοιν δι' ὀροφῶν εἰς ὕψος ἀειράμενον, that is, rising to an height with the beauties of pillars and double-roof't porticus's. For in that place of Gregory it must be written διορόφων in one word, which Billius perceived not. We may also render καταστέγους, under-ground-porticus's. For in Temples, Porticus's of this sort were wont to be built, which Aristides (in his Oration de Cyzicene Templo) calls δρόμους ὑποστέγους. Where he also says, that that Temple was threefold, partly subterraneous, partly in the open air; but, that the middle part of it was fitted for daily uses. Vales.

[a] Αἱ μὲν ἐπὶ τοῖσδε τοῖσι; that is, the outermost Porticus's. So in the 10th book, speaking of the Fountaines that were before the doors of the Church at Tyre, he says they were opposite εἰς τοῖσιν τῶν νεῶν, to the front of the Church. Vales.

Of these [Porticus's,] [d] they which were in the Front of the Church, were under-prop't with vast Columns: [e] but those which were more inward, were born up by [f] piles of Stone most beautifully adorned on the outside. Three || doors fitly placed at the rising Sun, received the multitudes of those that went in.

|| Or, Gates.

[c] Αἱ δ' ἔσω μὴ ἔσωθεν. At the margin of the Moræan Copy 'tis mended μὴ ἔμπροσθεν, the same with which is the reading in Gruter's Book. It might also be mended μὴ ἔξωθεν. But in regard the Fuk. and Savil. Copies have it μὴ ἔμπροσθεν, that reading is to be preferred. Vales.

[f] Ὑπὸ πασσοῖς. Christophorson renders it postes, posts; extreamly ill: Portesius translates better, pilas, piles. What πασσοὶ are, Procopius informs us in Book 1. de Fabricis Justiniani, where he describes the Church of Saint Sophia; to wit, hills or heaps of stone, which he compares to certain Rocks that underprop't the Apsis [Bowing of the Arch't Roof.] The latter Grecians have termed them πασσούς, as Meursius has remarked in his Glossary. They were therefore stony piles, so called as I think from their figure, because they were four-corner'd, like pessi or pessuli, bars or bolts. Now, the inner Porticus's, which were next to the sides of the Church, were therefore underprop't with these pessi, because they bore up the Roof of the Church on each side: which Roof in height exceeded all the rest. Vales.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

A description of the Hemisphære, and of the twelve Columns with their Capitals.

OPposite to these [doors] was the [a] Hemisphære, the Head of the whole Work, [b] which was * stretch't to the top of the Church. This Hemisphære was † begirt with twelve Pillars, equall to the number of our Saviour's Apostles. The heads of which [Pillars] were adorned with vast Capitals made of Silver: which the Emperour himself had dedicated to his God, as the faireſt sacred present.

[a] Ἡμισφαιρεῖα. I write ἡμισφαίριον: so he calls the Altar of the Church, because it was built in the form of an Hemisphære. Hence 'tis that he terms it τὸ παντὸς κεφάλαιον the Head of the whole Work. For Churches were therefore built, that upon the Altar an unbloudy Sacrifice might be offered to God. A little above Eusebius has termed the Sepulchre of our Lord the Head of the whole Work: but now he gives the Altar of the Church that name; which two differ widely one from the other. For the Sepulchre of our Lord is therefore called the Head of the whole Work, because it was the beginning and entrance [or, porch] as 'twere of the whole Fabrick, and because for the sake of that, Constantine built the whole work. But the Altar of the Church is termed the Sum of the whole Work, in regard the whole Work had a reference to that, and that was the Complement of the whole Structure, without which the Church was imperfect. Further, Eusebius has improperly stiled it The Hemisphære, instead of the Hemicycle, or rather The Hemicylinder; of which form the Altar of Saint Sophia was, as Procopius informs us Book 1. de Ædificiis. In Turnebus's Book at the margin 'tis mended ἡμισφαίριον, but in a more modern hand. Vales.

[b] Ἐπ' ἄκρου τοῦ βασιλείου ἐπτελαμβόλου. 'Tis the same as if he had said ἐπ' ἄκρον, to the top. The Hemisphære was stretcht from the bottom to the top of the Church. And in the bottom there were twelve pillars, placed in a semicircular form. Procopius (book 1. de Ædificiis) confirms this explication, where he describes the Church of Saint Sophia: whose description it will be pleasant to compare with this Narration of Eusebius. Ἐπ' ἄκρου may also be expounded in the upper end or top of the Church, that so the meaning may be, that the Altar was not placed in the middle of the Church, but at the upper end or top of it. Vales.

* Continued, or prolonged.
† Or, Crowned.

CHAP. XXXIX.

[a] A description of the Area, Exhedræ, and Porches.

[a] Ἔκφρασις μεσαυλίου. Christophorson is grievously out, in rendring μεσαύλιον portas atrienses, the Gates of the Atrium; as if μεσαύλιον and ἡ μέσαυλος were all one. But μεσαύλιον is Area, a Court or Court-yard. For that which in the Contents of this Chapter is termed μεσαύλιον, in the Text of the Chapter is by Eusebius called ὕθειον. He makes use of the same term in his description of the Church at Tyre, in the Tenth Book of his History, μέσον αὔλιον ἡφίει, the middle space he left open; see book 10. chap. 4. note (u.) Christophorson renders it aream, which is not ill done. Portesius and Musculus translate it subdivale spatium, a space that is vacant or abroad in the Air, which is in my judgment better Latine. For the Latins called a clean place wherein Corn was threshed, Aream; but not those which now a days we term Curtes: yet use has prevailed, that Areæ should be called Curtes. Græcians likewise term Curtis (wherein Hens are fed and Oxen stalled,) μέσαυλον and μέπαυλον; as Apollonius informs us in book 3. Argonautic. pag. 134; and his Greek Scholiast, and Harpocration in the word μέπαυλος. The Areæ of Churches are mentioned in Law 4 Cod. Theod. de his qui ad Ecclesias confugiunt. Ut inter templum quod parietum descripsimus cinctu, & Januas primas Ecclesiæ, quicquid fuerit interjacens, sive in cellulis, sive in domibus, hortulis, balneis, arcis atque porticibus, confugas interioris templi Vice tueatur. The Greek Constitution there related runs thus: ὥς τε μεταξὺ τῆς ναοῦ, ὃν τῷ περιεστηκότι τοίχῳ περιφέχθαι διεσταλμένον, ἄχει δὴ πρώτων μὲν τοῦ δημοσίου τύπου ἐκκλησίας ὑφεῶν, πᾶν τὸ παρεσκευασμένον, εἴτε ἐν οἰκίαις, ἢ κήποις, ἢ αὐλαῖς, ἢ λέσχαις, ἢ ἐν στοαῖς πυλῶνί, &c. You see that αὐλαὶ is rendred Areas. This Law of Theodosius is related in book 7. Capitular. Caroli M. Tit. 125; where nevertheless, instead of areæ, atrium is made use of. Vales.

[b] Ἔνθεν δὲ περιόντων. I had rather write περιών, as Musculus seems to have read; and then it must be rendred thus, proceeding from hence to those passages which lie, &c. Vales.

[c] Αὐλὴ πρώτη. Christophorson and Musculus render it right, Atrium. Indeed, the Old Translatour of the Gospell, whereever the word αὐλὴ occurs, renders it Atrium. Besides, in the Old Glosses αὐλὴ is expounded Atrium. Victorinus Petabionensis on the Revelation of Saint John, says, Aula atrium dicitur, vacua inter paricies area, Aula is termed Atrium, an empty Space between walls. Yet Isidorus (book 5. Origin.) distinguishes Aula from Atrium: But I agree rather with Victorinus. In the Itinerarie of Antoninus the Martyr, there is mention of the Atrium of the Constantinian Church. Further, notice is to be taken, that in the Contents of this Chapter, Exhedræ is made use of instead of Aula. Vales.

[d] Ἡ δὲ ἐντωῦθοι παρ' ἑκάτερα. The words seem to be transposed here; which I would rather read thus; ἦσαν δὲ ἐντωῦθοῖ ἡ αὐλὴ πρώτη, ἔσαι τ' ὀπὶ ταύτη παρ' ἑκάτερα. In which place there were first the Atrium, then the Porticus's on both sides. For to those who went out of the Church, first of all occurred the Aula, then the Porticus's on the right and left hand of the Atrium, and after that the Porch. Vales.

[e] Ἐπ' αὐλῆς μέσης πλατείας ἀγορᾶς. Before the greater Churches, for the most part there were streets, wherein was kept a Market of things vendible, on the Festival of that Martyr to whom the Church was dedicated. Which thing the Ancients therefore observed, that the sight of the Porches might be fairer, and that there should be nothing which might hinder their lights. So at Rome, before the Church of the Apostles there was a Street, as Prudentius attests. At Alexandria also, there was a Church at the great Street, as Athanasius informs us in his Epistle ad Solitar. Ἔκαυσαν τὰς πυλῶνας ἐν τῇ πλατείᾳ τῇ μεγάλῃ. Further, the word ἀγορᾶς seems to be a Scholion added to explain the term πλατείας; unless you had rather write ἀγυιᾶς; and then it must be rendred thus, in the very midst of the broad Street, being most &c. Vales.

[f] Τῶν ἔνδον ὁρωμένην θέαν. It must be ὁρωμένων, of the things seen within, as 'tis mended at the margin of Turnebus's Copy. Vales.

CHAP.

CHAP. XL.

Concerning the Number of the * Donaria.

* Sacred Presents, or, Gifts.

THis Church therefore, which was a manifeſt evidence of the ſalutary Reſurrection, the Emperour erected; and beautified it throughout with a furniture that was † magnificent and truly Imperial. He adorned it likewiſe in a various manner with inexpreſſible || ornaments of innumerable conſecrated Gifts, conſiſting of Gold, Silver, and pretious Stones. The Compoſure of which [ornaments,] being wrought with the moſt curious workmanſhip, and [eminent] for greatneſs, number, and variety, we are not now at leiſure to deſcribe particularly.

† Or, Rich.

|| Or, Beauties.

CHAP. XLI.

Concerning the Building of the Churches at Bethlehem, and on the Mount of Olives.

HAving likewiſe in the ſame Country found other places [a] ennobled with two * Sacred Caves, he beautified them alſo with magnificent † ornaments. To that Cave, wherein our Saviour firſt made his Divine appearance, where alſo he endured to be born in the fleſh; he attributed a becoming Honour. But in the other Cave he honoured the Memory of our Lord's Aſcent into the heavens, which [had heretofore hapned] on the top of a Mountain. And theſe places he adorned moſt magnificently; and [at the ſame time] eternized the Memory of His own Mother, who had procured ſo great a Good for Mankind.

Valeſ.

[a] Τελμηρέας, cut. It muſt be written τετιμημένας, ennobled, or, Honoured; as the reading is in his Panegyrick concerning Conſtantine's Tricennalia, chap. 9; where the ſame words are repeated.

* Or, Myſtick.

† Or, Honours.

CHAP. XLII.

That Helena Auguſta, the Mother of Conſtantine, going [to Bethlehem] on account of Prayer, built theſe [Churches.]

FOr, in regard ſhe had reſolved to pay the due debt of her pious affection to God the ſupream King, and had determined that ſhe ought to give thanks with Supplications for her own Son ſo glorious an Emperour, and for his Sons the Cæſars moſt dear to God, her Grand-children; though now very aged, yet [a] ſhe haſtned and came with a youthfull mind, (being a woman of a [b] ſingular prudence,) that ſhe might view that admirable Ground, and with a care and ſollicitude truly Royal, might make a Viſit to the Eaſtern Provinces, * Cities, and people. But, after ſhe had given a due Veneration to the Footſteps of our Saviour, agreeable to that prophetick Expreſſion which runs thus, † Let us worſhip at the place where his Feet have ſtood: immediately ſhe left the fruit of her own piety even to poſterity.

[a] Ἦκε δὲ σπεύδουσα. I had rather read ἧκε δὴ; as I found it written in the Fuketian Copy, and in the Kings Sheets. Valeſ.

[b] Beſides Euſebius's teſtimony, there are many things which perſwade us to think, that Helena the Mother of Conſtantine was a woman of a ſingular prudence. For, whereas ſhe had the Emperour Conſtantine always obedient to her, even to the very laſt day of her life; this very one thing is an argument of her ſingular prudence. This alſo was an evidence of her great wiſdome, that ſhe abuſed not the riches of her Son, and the height of the dignity of Auguſta, to Luxury and Voluptuouſneſs; but with her own liberality ſuccoured the Provinces, Cities, and private perſons. And whereas ſhe entirely loved her own Grand-children the Sons of Conſtantine, ſhe took care of this above all, that no one of Conſtantius's children brethren to Conſtantine, ſhould ſnatch the Empire from them. Wherefore, as long as ſhe lived, ſhe always detained them Exiles as 'twere; ſometimes at Toulouſe in France, as Auſonius writes; otherwhiles, at Corinth, as Julianus relates in his Letter to the Corinthians. A fragment of which Letter is extant in Libanius, in His Oration pro Ariſtophane Corinthio, pag. 217: where Libanius terms Helena πανδέρον μητρυιὰν, a crafty mother-in-Law, and atteſts, that by her advice and Step-mother-hatred, Conſtantius Father to Julian had been conveyed up and down this way and that way. Valeſ.

* In the Greek 'tis δήμους, commonalty.

† See the Scpt. verſ. of Pſal. 132. v. 7.

CHAP. XLIII.

Again Concerning the Church at Bethlehem.

FOr, ſhe forthwith dedicated two Churches to that God whom ſhe had adored: the one at the Cave * wherein Chriſt was born: the other on the Mountain † whence he had aſcended into Heaven. For || Emanuel endured to be born for us [a] under the earth: and the place of His Nativity is by the Hebrews termed Bethlehem. And therefore the Empreſs moſt dear to God, adorned the place where the Theotocos was delivered, with admirable Monuments, and illuſtrated that Sacred Cave with all manner of Ornaments. Not long after which, the Emperour honoured it alſo with Imperial ſacred Gifts; increaſing his Mother's * Magnificence with Monuments of Silver and Gold, and [b] with various Curtains. Further, the Emperour's Mother, † in memory of his Aſcent into the Heavens who is the Saviour of all, raiſed ſtately Edifices in the Mount of Olives; erecting a ſacred Houſe [c] together with an holy Church upon the very top of the Mount.

* Or, Of the Birth.

† Or, Of the Aſcent.

|| Or, God with us.

[a] Ὑπὸ γῆν. Chriſtophorſon has not rightly expreſt the force of the Greek word; who renders it in terris naſci, to be born—in the earth. For Euſebius ſays more, viz. that the Lord for our ſake would be born in a Cave under-ground. Saint Jerom's words in his Epitaph of Paula are theſe; Bethlehem & in Specum Salvatoris introiens, entring into Bethlehem and into the Cave of our Saviour. And a little after; orare in Speluncâ, in quâ virgo puerpera dominum infantem fudit, &c; to pray in the Cave, wherein the Child-bed-Virgin brought forth the infant Lord. Whence by the by it appears, that wherever Euſebius has made uſe of ἄντρον, it ought to be rendred Specum or Speluncam, a Cave. For ſo the Latines term it, not antrum, a den, as Chriſtophorſon renders it. Valeſ.

* Or, Studies of Elegancy.

† Or, Exalted the memory — by ſtatue, &c.

[b] Παραπετάσμασί τε ποικίλοις. I approve not of Chriſtophorſon's tranſlation, who renders it aulæa. For aulæa befit a ſcene rather than agree with a Church. I choſe therefore to tranſlate it Vela, Curtains; for there were Curtains in Churches. And they were made uſe of both in the doors of Churches; (concerning which ſee Epiphanius in his Epiſtle to John Biſhop of Jeruſalem, which Letter Saint Jerome has done into Latine;) and about the Altar alſo, of which ſort ſome are to be ſeen even at this time amongſt us. Further, the Curtains which hung before doors, were by Grecians termed ἀμφίθυρα, which word occurs in Choſroes's Letter recorded in Theophilactus Simocatta, Book 5; Chap. 14. —— &c. —— See Evagr. Eccleſ. Hiſtor. Book. 6, Chap. 21, note (f.) Valeſ.

[c] Νεών τε. Some thing ſeems to be wanting here, or at leaſt the words are tranſpoſed. Therefore I would have the place reſtored thus; ἱερὸν οἶκον ἐκκλησίας νεών τε ἅγιον ἀναδείξασα, erecting a ſacred, &c. But Chriſtophorſon underſtood theſe words ſo, as if Euſebius ſhould ſay, that Helena built two Churches in the Mount of Olives; one on the top, the other in the Cave: which nevertheleſs I do not think to be true. For the Author of the Jeruſalem-Itinerarie tells us, that one Church was built there by Conſtantine. And Euſebius in his Panegyrick (chap. 9. towards the end;) ſpeaking of that Martyrium which Conſtantine built at Jeruſalem, expreſſes himſelf in the ſame manner as he does here; viz. οἶκον ἐυκλήειον παμμεγέθη, νεών τε ἅγιον τῷ σωτηρίῳ σημείῳ, &c. Where you ſee, that οἶκον ἐυκτήειον and ναὸν are joyned, and uſed concerning one and the ſame Church. And he terms the Baſilica, οἶκον ἐυκτήειον, becauſe people came thither to pray; but the whole Sacred Houſe (which being incloſed within one circuit, contains within it ſelf the Atrium, Porticus's, Secretarie, Baptiſterie, Baptisterie, and the Church it self;) he terms ναὸν. Which Eusebius does most plainly declare below, at chap. 50 of this book, where he speaks concerning the Dominicum Aureum which Constantine built at Antioch. And thus the passage of Eusebius in the close of his Panegyrick concerning Constantine's Tricennalia is to be explained; as likewise a passage in his tenth book, and another in chap. 45. of this book; where he joyns together ναὸν and εὐκτήριον οἶκον. 'Tis something otherwise in the fifth Law Cod. Theod. de his qui ad Ecclesias confugiunt. For there ναὸς εὐκτήριος is called the Basilica or Oratory where the Altar is. But the Church is termed that whole Building within the circumference whereof are contained the Atrium, Porticus's, Cells, Baths, and lastly the Oratory it self. Vales.

[a] Καὶ ταῦτα λόγος ἀληθής. The Author of the Itinerarium Hierosolymitanum has these words; Inde ascendis in montem Oliveti, ubi dominus discipulos docuit ante passionem, Thence you go up to Mount Olivet, where our Lord taught his Disciples before his Passion. Bede (in his book de Locis Sanctis, chap. 7.) has this passage; Tertia quoque ejusdem montis ad australem Bethaniæ partem Ecclesia est, &c.; There is a third Church also of the same Mount at the South part of Bethanie, where the Lord before his Passion spoke to his Disciples concerning the day of Judgment. He means the place in Saint Mathew chap. 24. This Sermon therefore Eusebius here terms ἀπορρήτους τελετάς, secret Mysteries, because the Lord then spake concerning secret things, viz. about the end of the world, concerning Christ's coming, and the last judgment. For even the Apostles came then to the Lord secretly, as Saint Matthew says; in regard they were desirous to know Mysteries, and the Revelation of things future, as Jerome on Mathew writes. But that which Eusebius says (viz. that our Lord delivered these Mysteries to the Apostles in the Cave,) is not expresly recorded in the Gospel. Yea, the contrary seems possible to be made out from the Gospel. For 'tis related therein, that the City Jerusalem was in sight to the Disciples, when our Lord Preach't these things. They were not therefore in the Cave, but in an open place. Yet it may be answered, that that Cave had several holes, of which sort there were many Caves in Palestine, as the Itineraries inform us. Indeed, whereas Saint Matthew affirms, that the Disciples came to our Lord secretly, 'tis probable that that discourse in the Cave was made by Our Lord whilst he stayed there. Vales.

[a] Moreover, here (as the true History attests,) the supream Saviour [e] in the very Cave informed his * disciples in secret Mysteries. But the Emperour himself in this place also reverenced the supream King with all manner of sacred Gifts and Ornaments. And these two stately and most beautifull Monuments worthy of an eternal Memory, [erected] at the two sacred Caves, Helena Augusta the Religious Mother of a Religious Emperour, dedicated to God Her Saviour, by the indications of a pious affection; Her Son reaching out to Her the right hand of His Imperial power. Not long after which, this aged woman received a † reward worthy [of her Labours.] For, having passed the whole time of her Life, unto the very Threshold of old age, in all manner of felicity, and having as well in words as deeds brought forth plentifull fruits of the saving precepts; and having for that reason lead a Life void of trouble and grief, in the greatest healthiness both of body and mind; at length she obtained from God, both an end befitting her piety, and a reward also of her good [works,] even in this life present.

* Θιασώτας, companions.

† Or, The fruit.

[c] Τῆς ἐν ἄντρῳ ἄνλῳ. The first word is to be expunged, as being superfluous. Eusebius seems to allude to the usage of the Gentiles, who performed their Mithriaca Sacra [Sacrifices in honour of the Sun] in a Cave, as Porphyry, (in his book de Abstinentia,) Jerome, and others inform us. The Fuketian Manuscript confirms our conjecture, in which the word πρὸ is wanting. Vales.

CHAP. XLIV.

Concerning Helena's greatness of Mind, and Beneficence.

For whilst she was taking her progress round the whole East with a * Royal Magnificence, she heapt innumerable benefits and favours, both on Cities, and on every private person also who approacht her: and with a liberal † hand she distributed numerous [largesses] amongst the Military Forces. But, on the poor, naked, and on such as were destitute of all help and comfort, She bestowed very many Gifts: making distributions of money to some; plentifully supplying others with clothes to cover their bodies. Others some She set at Liberty from bonds, as also them afflicted with the slavery of the Mines: She likewise freed some that were oppresst by the violence of persons more powerfull than themselves; and again, re-called others from banishment.

* Or, Magnificence of Imperial power.

† Or, Right hand.

CHAP. XLV.

In what manner Helena was religiously conversant in the Churches.

Having rendred her self eminent by such actions as these, [in the interim] she in no wise neglected Her piety towards God. For * She was seen to come constantly into the Church of God; and beautified the sacred houses with splendid ornaments; not contemning the † Churches even in the smallest Cities. You might therefore have beheld this admirable woman, in a ‖ modest and decent garb associating her self with the rest of the multitude, and demonstrating her Reverence towards God, by all manner of pious actions.

* Or, She gave her self to be seen coming, &c.

† Ναούς. Valesius renders it Sacella, Chappells.

‖ Or, Grave, and mean, or, frugal.

CHAP. XLVI.

How, being eighty years old, and having made her Will, she ended her Life.

But at length, when, after she had lived a sufficient space of time, she was called to a better allotment; having prolonged her life till about the eightieth year of her age, and being arrived at the very confines of death, she composed ordained and declared her last Will and Testament, constituting her only Son (* sole Emperour, and Lord of the world,) Her heir, together with his Sons the Cæsars Her Grandchildren; and distributing to each of Her Grandchildren, those her own Goods, whatever she was possest of throughout the whole world. Having in this manner made Her Will, afterwards she closed her life, Her † Great Son being present with and standing by her, ‖ paying her all imaginable respect, and embracing her hands. Insomuch that, to those whose Sentiments are good and true, this thrice-blessed woman in no wise seemed to die, but in reality to * make a change of this earthly life, for one that was celestiall. [a] Her soul therefore was new-framed into an incorruptible and Angelick substance, and received up to her Saviour.

* Or, Emperour, Monarch, and Lord, &c.

† Or, So Great.

‖ Or, Cherishing her with all, &c.

* Or, undergoe.

[a] Ἀνεσοτοιεῖτο γὰρ αὐτῆ ψυχῆ, Her soul therefore was reformed, or, new-framed. These words seem to favour of Origen's doctrine, to which our Eusebius was too much addicted. For the souls of the Blessed are not reformed into an Angelick substance. Indeed, Origen believed, that in the Resurrection, Bodies would be turned into souls, and Souls would be changed into Angels, as Saint Jerome says some where. Vales.

CHAP.

CHAP. XLVII.

In what manner Constantine deposited his Mother; and how he honoured her whilst she was living.

But the Body of this Blessed woman was vouchsafed no trivial Honour. For it was conveyed into the [a] Imperial City [accompanied] with a numerous train of the [Imperial] Guards; where it was deposited in a Royal Monument. In this manner the Emperour's Mother closed her Life; a woman worthy of an indelible Memory, both in respect of her pious Actions, and also on account of that most eminent and admirable Son born of her. Whom 'tis fit we should stile Blessed, besides all other things, even for this also, his piety towards her who brought him forth; whom he rendred so Religious, (she having before not been a worshipper of God,) that she seemed from her tender years to have been discipled by [b] Him Himself who is the common Saviour of all: whom he honoured with Imperial Dignities in such a manner, that in all the Provinces, and by the very Companies of the Milice, she was stiled Augusta and Empress; and Golden Coynes were stamp't bearing her Image. Moreover, Constantine granted her a power over the Imperial Treasures, to make use of them according to her own arbitrement, and to dispose of them according to her own mind, in such manner as she thought good, and as every thing might seem well-pleasing to her. For even in *this respect also, her Son rendred her conspicuous and †admirable. Wherefore, amongst those things belonging to the illustrating of his Memory, We have, not without reason, included these also, which out of his transcendency of piety the Emperour performed in honour of his Mother; whereby he fulfilled the Divine Laws, which do injoyn due [Offices] of honour towards Parents. These forementioned beautifull structures therefore, the Emperour in this manner erected in the Province of Palestine. Moreover, in all the other Provinces also, he built new Churches, and made them far more stately than those that had been before.

[a] He means Rome. For thither the dead Body of Helena Augusta was carried, and after two years was conveyed to Constantinople, as Nicephorus tells us, book 8. chap. 30. But Socrates (book 1. chap. 17.) transcribing Eusebius's words, interprets βασιλεύουσῃ πόλιν, New-Rome. Which error of Socrates, Baronius does deservedly reprove, in regard by the name of the Imperial City Eusebius is always wont to mean Rome. Besides, Constantinople was not yet dedicated, and therefore could not be called the Imperial City, whenas then it was only old Byzantium. Nevertheless, Cedrenus has followed Socrates; who also adds this, that Helena died twelve years before Constantine. By this computation Helena must have died on the year of Christ 325, or 326. On which year nevertheless, she is said by Eusebius and Rufinus to have gone to Jerusalem. Besides, after the death of Crispus Cæsar and Fausta Augusta, Helena was for some time alive, as Zosimus attests, book 2. Further, Crispus was slain in the seventh Consulate of Constantinus Augustus which he bore with Constantius Cæsar, on the year of Christ 326; as 'tis recorded in Idatius's Fasti. The death of Helena therefore may rightly be assigned to the year of our Lord 327, as Sigonius thinks, book 3. de Imperio Occidentali. Vales.

* Or, These things.
† Or, Worthy of Emulation.

[b] Ὡς αὐτὸ δοκεῖν. It must be written αὐτῷ. For 'tis referred to τῷ κοινῷ σωτῆρι, as we have rendred it. And so I found it mended in Moræus's Book, at the margin. Nor is it otherwise written in the Fuk. and Savil. Copies, and in the Kings Sheets. Vales.

CHAP. XLVIII.

In what manner He built * Martyria at Constantinople, and abolished all manner of Idolatry.

* Churches.

But when he had resolved upon raising that City to the highest honour which bore His own name, he beautified it with many Oratories, with vast Martyria, and with most stately Houses; part whereof were erected in the Suburbs, and part within the City it self. And by this means, he both honoured the Memories of the Martyrs, and likewise consecrated his own City to the God of the Martyrs. In fine, being [a] wholly inspired with the wisdome of God, he thought it requisite, in such a manner to purifie that City, which he determined to dignifie with the appellation of his own name, from all sorts of Idolatry; that the images of those reputed to be Gods, should no where be worshipped in Temples therein; neither should Altars defiled with the † Bloud of Victims be visible in it; nor Sacrifices wholly consumed by fire; nor should the Festivals of Dæmons [be celebrated there;] nor any other of those usages [commonly practised] amongst superstitious persons.

[a] Ὅλως δ' ἐμπνέων. I had rather make it ὅλῳ, which is far more elegant. So indeed it occurs written in the Fuketian Copy, and in the Kings Sheets. Vales.

† Λύθρου αἱμάτων, with the gore of bloud.

CHAP. XLIX.

The Sign of the Cross in the Pallace, and [the * Effigies of] Daniel in the † Conduits.

* Image.
† Or, Fountains.

You might therefore have seen in the Conduits situate in the middle of the Forum, the † Representations of the Good Shepherd, well known to those skill'd in the Divine Oracles; [the Effigies] of Daniel likewise, toge her with the Lyons, [a] cast in Brass, and shining with ‖ plates of Gold. Further, so ardent a divine Love had possest the mind of the Emperour, that in the statelier Room of all those within the Imperial Pallace, at the very middle of the Embowed Roof which was gilded with Gold, a large Table was displaied, in the midst whereof was fixt the Sign of our Lord's passion, consisting of a variety of pretious Stones, and wrought with a great quantity of Gold. And this [in my judgment] seemed to have been * set up by that pious Emperour, as the preservative of the Empire it self.

† Or, Symbols.

‖ Or, Spangles.

* Or, Made.

[a] Ἐν χαλκῷ πεπλασμένα. In the Fuketian Copy 'tis written πεπλασμένον; and 'tis referred to those words τὸν τε Δανιὴλ, Daniel likewise. But the ordinary reading pleases me better, in regard it occurs both in the Kings Copy, and in the Old Sheets. For πεπλασμένα is referred to the word σύμβολα, Representations. So that, it must be written, τῶν τε Δανιὴλ, [the Effigies] of Daniel likewise. Vales.

CHAP. L.

That He built Churches at Nicomedia also, and in other Cities.

With these [ornaments] therefore He beautified his own City. He likewise honoured the [a] chief [City] of Bithynia with the Monument of a most * stately and most magnificent Church; in which place also, † at his own charge, he erected the Trophies of Victory which he had gained over the Enemies and Opposers of God, in hohad compelled Licinius, besieged therein, to a surrendry. therefore of that Victory, Constantine built a Church at See Sozomen, book 2. chap. 3. Vales.

[a] He means Nicomedia, which was the Head-City of Bithynia. In which City Constantine In memory Nicomedia.

* Or, Large.
† Or, Out of his own Treasures.

nour of his own Saviour. Moreover, he also, grac't the chiefest Cities of the rest of the Provinces, with most beautifull Oratories: [b] for instance, that City which was the Metropolis of the whole East, that took its name from Antiochus. In which [City,] as 'twere in the head of all the Provinces of that Region, he dedicated [to God] a † Peerless Church, in respect both of its Largeness and Beauty. For he encompassed the whole Temple with a large circuit on the outside: [c] but within, he raised the Basilica to an immense height: it was built in an [d] eight-square figure; and surrounded on all sides with many Lodging Rooms, and [e] Exhedræ, and with * apartments [f] as well above as under [or, even with] the ground. Which Church [he beautified] with ‖ a vast quantity of [g] Gold, and † adorned it with Brass and other Materials of great value.

† Or, Matchless.

* Or, Places.

‖ Or, Abundance of much Gold.

† Or, Crowned it with the beauties of Brass, &c.

[b] Ὥσπερ ἦν καὶ τῶν ἐπὶ τῆς ἀνατολικῆς μητροπόλεως. It must be written μητρόπολιν. Except you had rather read thus; ὥσπερ ἦν καὶ ὅπι τῆς ἀναλολικῆς μητροπόλεως; which reading indeed displeases me not. In the Kings Copy 'tis written, ὥσπερ ἦν καὶ τὸν, &c. Vales.

[c] Εἰσω δὲ τὸν ἐυκλῆειον ὄικον. In his panegyrick, chap. 9, whence these words are transcribed, Eusebius has termed it ἀναλολεγν. I have rendred it Basilica the Cathedral or Church it self; not the Sanctuary, as Christophorson translates it. Vales.

[d] Ἐν ὀκλαέδρε —— χήματι. Of the same figure was that Church, which Nonnus Father to Gregory Nazianzene built in the Town of Nazianzum, as Gregory himself attests in his Funeral Oration concerning the praises of his own Father, pag. 313. These Temples were termed octachora. This old Inscription occurs in Gruter's Thesaurus, pag. 1166; Octachorum sanctos templum surrexit in usus.

Octagonus fons est munere dignus eo.

Now, that is a Templum Octachorum, which hath eight sides rising from the bottom to the very top. From the same reason Altars are termed trichora, in Paulinus's Epistle; that is, trino sinuata recessu, bent or embosomed with a triple recess, as the same Paulinus expresses himself, in his Natale of Saint Felix. Cedrenus (at the 26th year of Constantine,) terms that church which had been built by Constantine at Antioch, Octagonum Dominicum, the eight-cornered Church. Vales.

[e] Ἐξέδρεγς. In Eusebius's Panegyrick, at the chapter just now cited, the reading is truer, thus, ἐξέδραις. For so Eusebius terms them, in His description of the Church at Tyre, which you have in the Tenth Book of his Ecclesiast. History. What an Exedra is, Valafridus Strabo tells us, in his book de Rebus Ecclesiasticis, chap. 6: Exedra est absida quædam, seperata modicum quidem a templo vel palatio: dicta inde, quòd extra hæreat. Græcè autem κύκλον vocatur; An exedra is a certain outward building, separated a little from the Temple or Palace: thence so termed, because it sticks without. In Greek 'tis called κύκλῳ. Strabo is indeed mistaken, because he understood not, that Exedra was a Greek word: but he is not at all mistaken in the origine of that word. For, 'tis truly termed ἐξέδρα, Exedra, ἀπὸ τῆς ἔξω ἕδρας, from its being without the seat. For so more outward houses were termed, which were usually built within the circuit of a Church, wherein 'twas lawfull to sit, and take rest, as Eusebius tells us. Concerning these Exedræ, Saint Austin speaks in his book de Gestis cum Emerito Donatista. Cæsareæ in Ecclesia majori, &c. At Cæsarea in the greater Church, when Deuterius Metropolitane Bishop of Cæsarea, together with Alipius, Augustinus. Possidius Rusticus and the other Bishops had gone forth into the Exedræ, &c. In the Concilium Nannetense, Canon 6th, there is mention of an Exedra. Prohibendum etiam secundùm majorum instituta, ut in Ecclesia nullatenus sepeliantur, sed in atrio aut porticu, aut in Exedris Ecclesiæ; it is to be forbidden also, according to the orders of our Ancestours, that they should in no wise bury [or be buried] in the Church but in the Atrium, or Porticus, or in the Exedræ of the Church. So the reading is in the Manuscripts Copy belonging to the Bibliotheca Puteana. See Jerome on the 40th chapter of Ezechiel. ——Further, the Fuketian and Savilian Copies have it written right here, ἐξέδραις τε. Vales.

[f] Ὑπερῴων τε καὶ καταγείων χωρημάτων. See what we have noted at chap. 37. καταγεια ὀικήματα are Houses whereto we go up no Stairs; to which are opposed ἀνάγεια or ὑπερῶα, that is, Chambers, or upper Rooms. Although by the term καταγεια you may here understand Cryptæ, Vaults or Rooms under ground. Vales.

[g] For this reason that Church was termed Dominicum Aureum, the Golden Church. Jerom in the Chronicon at the 22d year of Constantine; Antiochiæ Dominicum quod vocant aureum, ædificari cœptum; at Antioch the Dominicum which they term Aureum, was begun to be built. It was consecrated in the Reign of Constantius, on the fifth year after Constantine's death. Vales.

CHAP. LI.

That He likewise gave order for the building of a Church in [the place called] Mamre.

THese were the most eminent Structures, which the Emperour dedicated to God. But, having been informed, that that one and the same Saviour, who had lately made his appearance in the world, had heretofore exhibited the presence of His Divinity, to certain men of Palestine that were lovers of God, near that called the Oak of Mamre; He ordered an Oratory to be erected there also, to the God who had appeared. Therefore, the * Emperour's order was issued out to the Governours of Provinces, by the Letters transmitted to each of them, commanding them to bring to effect what they had been enjoyned to perform. But to us who write this History, he sent an [a] Exhortation full of wisedome. A Copy whereof I judge fit to be inserted into this present work, to the end that the care and diligence of this most pious Emperour might be accurately known. Having blamed us therefore for those things, which, as he had been informed, were done in the forementioned place, he wrote word for word thus.

* Or, Imperial Authority.

[a] Λογικωτέραν διδασκαλίαν, a more rational Sermon. So also Eusebius has before termed Constantine's Letters, because in those Letters Constantine seemed in a manner to Preach. Such is Constantine's Speech to the Convention of the Saints, and almost all his Letters, which are recorded partly by Eusebius, and partly by others. For in all these, Constantine, although as yet but a Catechumen, plays the Doctour. Indeed it can't be denyed, but Constantine was a man full of God, and was sent by God in order to the propagation of the Christian Faith; to which single person, next to the Apostles, we owe very much. Yet in Ecclesiastick affaires, he took something more upon himself, than might befit a Prince that was a Laick; the Bishops permitting him all things, and rejoycing greatly with themselves, because they saw an Emperour a Christian. Vales.

CHAP. LII.

Constantine's Letter to Eusebius concerning Mamre.

VICTOR CONSTANTINUS MAXIMUS AUGUSTUS, To Macarius and the rest of the Bishops of Palestine.

EVen this very one thing was a most eminent favour [a] of my most Holy Mother-in-

[a] Τῆς ὁσιωτάτης μεκνδεσείας. In the rendition of this place all the Translatours, Portesius, Musculus and Christophorson, have been mistaken; they rendring it curam & solicitudinem, care and solicitude; as if the reading had been κηδεμονίας. But Constantine speaks of his Mother-in-law, to wit, Eutropia Syra, to whom Fausta the wife of Constantine was daughter. For κηδεσεια signifies in Greek a mother-in-law, as the Old Glosses inform us, wherein 'tis thus read, κηδεστὴς a father-in-law, κηδέσεια a mother-in-law. Indeed, the following words do plainly confirm our explication. For it follows, διὰ ἧς πρὸς ὑμᾶς γνωείσα γεγραμάτων, by her Letters to us she hath made known. He means the Letters which his mother in law Eutropia had sent to him. Wherefore Christophorson's Emendation is to be rejected, who hath corrected it πρὸς ὑμᾶς, to you. Moreover, these following words, ἣ προειρημένη διὰ τὴν πρὸς τὸ θεῖον εὐλάβειαν, &c. do sufficiently shew the very same thing. For who would say concerning care and solicitude, ἣ προειρημένη, the foresaid care and solicitude? That would have been altogether trifling and foolish. But in our Version all things are plain and clear. For ἣ προειρημένη is rendred our foresaid mother in law; who by reason of her Piety and Religion could not hide so great an impiety, but by Letter declared it to her Son-in-law Constantine, that at length he might remedie this mischief. Eutropia therefore was a Christian, as we learn from this place. Her daughter Fausta also profest the Christian Faith, and together with her husband Constantine was buried in the Church of The Apostles. Further, I must not omit what what I found noted at the margin of the Kings Copy. For there, over against the word κηδεσείας, instead of a Scholion ϰηδεστείας mother was written; as if Constantine meant his own mother Helena; which explication I don't approve of. 'Tis certain, Sozomen says it was the Emperour Constantine's Mother-in-law, who, when She was come to the Oak Mamre, and had found there the deteſtable impieties of the Heathens, gave Constantine an account of that affair. See Sozomen, Book 2. chap. 4. Valeſ.

[b] Εἰς ἡμᾶς εὐεργέτημα, favour ——-towards us. I had rather write εἰς ὑμᾶς towards you; although the common reading may be born with. Further, by a ſmall tranſpoſition of the words, I would have the beginning of this Letter read thus, ἓν τοῦτο ϰ᾽ μέγιστον, &c. This was one and the greateſt favour, &c. The other reading is ἓν ϰ᾽ τοῦτο μέγιστον, &c. Valeſ.

law [b] towards you, that by Her Letters to us She hath made known that nefarious boldneſs of certain impious perſons, which hitherto hath lain concealed amongſt you: to the end that, that long-neglected Crime might, (though late, nevertheleſs) neceſſarily obtain a befitting animadverſion and cure from us. For, 'tis moſt certainly the greateſt impiety, that holy places ſhould be defiled by deteſtable impurities. What therefore is that (deareſt Brethren!) which, when it had eſcap't Your prudence, Our foreſaid Mother-in-law, by reaſon of Her Reverence towards the Deity, was not able to keep concealed?

CHAP. LIII.

That our Saviour appeared there to Abraham.

[a] This place was likewiſe called Terebinthus, diſtant from the City Jeruſalem about thirty miles, as we are told by the Authour of the Jeruſalem Itinerarie, who lived in the times of Conſtantine the great. His words are theſe. Inde Terebintho millia 9. ubi Abraham habitavit, &c. Thence to Terebinthus nine miles; where Abraham dwelt, and dug a well under a Turpentine tree, and ſpake with the Angels, and took food. There a Church is built by Conſtantine's order, of a wonderfull beauty. Then from Terebinthus to Chebron, two miles; where there is a Monument [or, Memory] built four-ſquare [or, by a four-ſquare-figure] of Stones, of a wonderfull beauty, wherein are laid Abraham, Iſaac, Jacob, &c. Sozomen alſo, book 2. chap. 4, relates that that place was termed Terebinthus. Now, this place was ſo called from a Turpentine-tree, which was ſaid to be the oldeſt Tree there, and to have ſtood from the very beginning of the world, as Joſephus atteſts in his fifth Book of the Jewiſh Wars. Although others ſaid it was the Staff of one of the Angels which appeared to Abraham, from which Staff thruſt into the ground ſprang up a Turpentine-tree. So Georgius Syncellus tells us in his Chronicon. But 'tis ſtrange, (whereas there was an Oak there under which Abraham had pitcht his Tent, as we read Gen. 18.) why that place ſhould have taken its name from a Turpentine-tree, rather than from an Oak. Valeſ. In our Engliſh Bibles, at Geneſis 18, there is not the leaſt mention of an Oak, but of a Tree only, at verſe 8. Nor does Saint Jerom, in his Tranſlation, term it an Oak. Indeed, in the Verſion of the 72, (at Gen. 18.1.) we have theſe words, πρὸς τῇ δρυῒ τῇ ϰαμβρῆ, at the Oak Mambre: but the expreſſion in the original is בְּאֵלֹנֵי מַמְרֵא in the Plaines of Mamre. The Seventy Two were belike of opinion, that אֵלֹנֵי had the ſame import with אֵלָה; the determination whereof is left to the Learned.

[b] Μιαίνεσθαί φασιν. In the Kings Copy, the Fuk. Manuſcript, and in the Kings Sheets, 'tis truer written thus, μιαίνεσθαί φησιν, is (She ſays) defiled: ἡ ϰηδέστια, Mother-in-law, is underſtood. Valeſ.

[c] Ἐϰλωσε. You muſt again underſtand ϰηδέστια, Mother-in-law. Our Mother-in-law (ſays Conſtantine) has related to us, that there is an Altar there, whereon impure ſacrifices are offered. Valeſ.

[d] I ſuppoſe, that the Pictures of the Angels are meant, which had appeared there to Abraham. For the Heathens worſhipped theſe Pictures. Moreover, the Heathens worſhipped the Turpentine-tree it ſelf, as Euſebius informs us in his fifth book Demonſtr. Evangel; chap. 9. Which place Scaliger (in his Animadverſions on Euſebius, pag. 192.) took in a wrong ſenſe. For he thought, that that Turpentine-tree had had the higheſt honour imaginable paid to it by the Chriſtians; and he cites Euſebius as the Relatour of that thing. But Euſebius ſpeaks of the Heathens there, not concerning the Chriſtians. For after he had ſaid; ὅθεν εἰσέτι ϰ᾽ νῦν, &c; wherefore, to this preſent time, this place is adored, as being Divine, by thoſe that dwell near it; and the Turpentine-tree is viſible, which as yet ſtands: He adds; οἱ τε τῷ ἀβραὰμ ὀπτανευθέντες, &c; and the Angells, which were entertained by Abraham, are painted in a Table there, on each ſide one; but he in the middle is made better, and exceeds in honour: He is our forementioned Lord himſelf, our Saviour, whom they ignorantly worſhip. You ſee Euſebius does here plainly ſpeak of the Heathens, who were ignorant of Chriſt. For this cannot be ſpoken of the Chriſtians. Our opinion is confirmed by Sozomen, book 2. chap 4; where he diſcourſes at large concerning that Market kept at the Terebinthus. For he writes, that every year in Summer time, Jews, Chriſtians, and Pagans came thither out of Paleſtine, Phœnice, and Arabia, partly on account of Trade, and partly for Religion; and, that all theſe celebrated a Feſtival after their own way. For the Heathens (he ſays) adored the Angells, offering to them Sacrifices, and meat and drink-offerings. The Pictures therefore of the Angells were there, to which the Pagans offered Victims. Saint Jerom de Locis Hebraicis, where he treats concerning Arboch, writes in this manner. Quercus Abraham quæ & Mambre, &c; The Oak of Abraham, which is alſo called Mambre, was to be ſeen there untill the times of the Emperour Conſtantine; and his Sepulchre is at preſent viſible. And in regard a Church is now built there by us, Terebinthus [the Turpentine-tree] is ſuperſtitiouſly worſhipped by all the Nations round, becauſe under that Abraham heretofore entertained the Angells. Saint Jerom has added many things here of his own head. For Euſebius himſelf, in his book de Locis Hebraicis, has only theſe words, ἀρϐώ. ἄυτη ὅτι χεϐρὼμ ϰώμη νῦν μεγίστη, &c. Arbo. This is Chebrom, now a great Village, heretofore a Metropolis, the ancient Habitation of the ſtrange Nations [or, Philiſtines,] and Gyants, and after that the Royal City of David. It was in the alotment of the Tribe Judah, and was one of the Cities ſet out to the Levites, one of the Cities of Refuge alſo, diſtant from Ælia at the North two and twenty miles. The Oak of Abraham and his Sepulchre are to be ſeen there, and the Terebinthus [Turpentine-tree] is manifeſtly worſhipped by our Enemies, as likewiſe the Angells entertained by Abraham. Heretofore its name was Arbo, afterwards 'twas called Chebrom, from Chebrom one of the ſons of Caleb, as 'tis in the Chronicles. A famous paſſage this; which totally overthrows Scaliger's opinion, and does egregiouſly confirm our explication. For Euſebius ſays, that the Terebinthus and the Angells were ſuperſtitiouſly worſhipped there by our Enemies; which is the appellation he gives to the Heathens and Jews. This paſſage of Euſebius is alſo cited by Damaſcenus, Book 3. De Imag. Valeſ.

and that an [c] Altar is built hard by, and that impure Sacrifices are continually * offered there. Wherefore, in regard this thing ſeems both diſagreeable [f] to Our Times, and an indignity alſo to the ſanctity of that place; I would have Your Gravity know, that we have given order by Letter to the moſt Perfect Acacius the Comes and a [g] Friend of ours;

* Or, Performed.

[c] Concerning this Altar Euſtathius ſpeaks in his Hexameron, which he ſays was ſtanding in his time, as alſo the Terebinthus it ſelf. Whence it appears, that this work of Euſtathius's was written before Conſtantine had given order for the demoliſhment of that Altar. In Sozomen's age, neither the Altar, nor the Terebinthus was ſtanding. Nevertheleſs, the ſuperſtition of the Heathens continued in that place, as Jerom atteſts. So difficult a matter it is wholly to pluck up the roots of Superſtition! We muſt not omit what Antoninus the Martyr hath written concerning this place, in His Itinerarie. De Bethleem, ſays he, uſque ad radicem Mambre ſunt millia viginti quatuor: &c. From Bethlehem unto the root of Mambre there are twenty four miles: in which place reſt the bones of Abraham, Iſaac, Jacob, Sarah, and Joſeph. There is a Church built [per quadrum] in a four-ſquare-figure, and in the middle an uncovered Atrium: and thorow the midſt of the Rails on one ſide the Chriſtians enter, on the other the Jews, carrying in much incenſe. For, the interment of Jacob and David in that Ground, is moſt devoutly celebrated on the firſt day after our Lord's Nativity; in ſo much that, a multitude meets together from all parts of the Land of the Jews, carrying Incenſe and Lights. And they beſtow Gifts, and worſhip there. See Jerom in Epitaphio Paulæ. Valeſ.

[f] Τῶν ϰαιρῶν ἧς ἡμετέρων τῷ ϰράτει ἡμετέρῳ ἀλλότριον, diſagreeable to our times to our Empire. Chriſtophorſon expunged the four firſt Greek words, and they are wanting in the Kings, Fuketian, and Savil. Manuſcripts. But if the matter were to be determined by me, I would rather blot out the following words, τῷ ϰράτει ἡμετέρῳ, to our Empire; which, in my judgment, are added inſtead of a Scholion, in order to the explaining of the former words. Græcians do elegantly term the time of any one's Empire, ϰαιρός. Further, the Emperours were mightily ambitious of this, that the felicity and clemency of their own times might be celebrated. Nothing occurs more frequently in the Latine Hiſtorians, and in the Laws of the Emperours. In Philoſtratus (book 2. de Vitis Sophiſtarum, where he ſpeaks of Heliodorus;) this word is corrupted. For when Heliodorus had begun his Oration in the Emperour's preſence, Philoſtratus ſays that the Emperour aroſe on a ſudden, and cryed out, ſuch a man, the like to whom I have not yet ſeen! The Glory and Ornament of my Times! ἧς ἐμαυτῆ ϰαιρῶν εὕρημα; for ſo the reading ſhould be. Conſtantine makes uſe of this very term in his Letter to the Hereticks, which occurs at the end of this book. Wherefore, I am of opinion, that the common reading is to be retained: and that theſe words τῷ ϰράτει τῷ ἡμετέρῳ are tranſpoſ'd, and muſt be placed after the word ἐστειν, thus; Wherefore, in regard in this our Empire, this thing, &c. Valeſ.

[g] Καὶ φίλον ἡμῶν. In the Fuketian Manuſcript and the Kings Sheets the reading is φίλον ἡμέτερον, our friend. Valeſ.

that

that without any delay, not only all the Idols, which can be found in the fore-mentioned place, shall be committed to the flames; but that the Altar also shall be totally demolished: and, that [h] a condigne punishment shall be inflicted on all those, who, after this Order of Ours, shall dare to perform any thing that is impious in that place. Which place moreover We have commanded to be beautified with the pure Edifice of a Church, to the end it may be made a fit Seat for holy men. But if any thing shall happen to be done contrary to Our Precept, 'tis fit it should without any delay be made known to Our Clemency, by Your Letters namely: to the end We may Order the person detected to undergo the extreamest of punishments, as being a transgressour of the Law. For you are not ignorant, that the supream Lord and God appeared first to Abraham in that place, and talkt with him. Moreover, the observance of the holy Law took its first beginning there. There Our Saviour himself, together with the two Angels, first gave Abraham a full sight of his own presence. There God first of all appeared unto men. There he made Abraham a promise concerning his future seed; and immediately fulfilled that promise. There he foretold, that he should be the Father of many Nations. Which things being so, 'tis fit, as to me it seems, that by Your care this place should be preserved from all manner of pollution, and restored to its Pristine Sanctity; that so in future, no other thing be done in that place, save the performance of a befitting worship to the Almighty and Our Saviour and to God the supream Lord. Which thing [i] 'tis fit you should observe with a due care, if Your Gravity be desirous (of which I am confident) to accomplish my will, which is chiefly inclined to the worship of God. God preserve you, Beloved Brethren!

[h] Τιμωρίας ἄξιον. I read τιμωρίας ἄξιον ἦ. That is, it shall be capitall for all those, &c. Wherefore, there is no need of Christophorson's emendation here, viz; τιμωρίας ἄξιον κείνομεν, we judge him worthy of punishment, who, &c. Nevertheless, there is another reading in the Fuk. Savil. and Turneb. Copies; which 'tis better to follow here. A little after, from the Fuk. Copy make it ὃν δὴ καθαρᾷ, &c. Which place moreover, &c. Vales. Though Valesius preferres the reading in the Fuk. Savil. and Turneb. Copies here; yet he has not shown us what it is.

[i] Πρέσσκειν ὑμᾶς φυλάττειν. I read πρέσσκον or πρέσσκει, 'tis fit, as Christophorson seems to have read. In the Kings Sheets I found it written πρέσκον, according as I had conjectured. Vales.

CHAP. LIV.

*The demolishment of the Idol-Temples and * Images in all places.*

* Or, Statues.

ALL these things the Emperour performed with all imaginable earnestness, to the Glory of [Christ's] salutary power. And in this manner he ceased not from giving honour to God his Saviour. But he endeavoured all manner of ways to † confute the superstitious errour of the Heathens. Therefore, the Porches of some Temples in the Cities were * laid open, they being, by the Emperour's order, deprived of their doors: the Roofs of others were ript, that wherewith they were covered being taken off. The venerable Brazen † Statues of other some, on account whereof the errour of the Ancients had for a long time boasted, were exposed to publick veiw [a] in all the Forum's of the Emperour's City. In so much that, for a reproachfull sight to the Spectatours, there lay exposed to view, in one place Apollo Pythius, in another Smimthius; and in the very Cirque it self The Delphick Tripods; and the [b] Heliconian Muses in the Pallace. In fine, the City which bore the Emperour's name, was filled in all places with Images, which being made of Brass with great art and curiosity, had heretofore been consecrated in every Province. To whom, under the notion of Gods, when men distempered with errour had for many ages in vain offered numerous Hecatombs and Holocausts; at length, though late, they learn't to be wise; after the Emperour had begun to make use of these very Images as objects of sport in order to the laughter and recreation of the Beholders. But, on those Images made of Gold [c] he was revenged another way. For, whereas he perceived, that the simple multitude, like children, in vain stood in fear of those * Bugbeares of errour made of Gold and Silver; it was his Sentiment, that they ought wholly to be destroyed; in regard they would be like some pieces of Stones cast before the feet of those who walk in the dark; and because a smooth and plain passage through the Kings-high-way was in future to be opened to all men. [d] Having therefore considered these things with himself, he was of opinion, that he stood not in need either of military Forces or a numerous army, in order to his giving check to these things; but, that one or two of those persons well known to him, were sufficient to effect this business; whom by one nod he dispatch't away into every Province. They, confiding in the Emperour's piety, and in their own Religiousness towards God, made their way thorow the thickest crowds and thorow infinite multitudes of people, [e] and totally destroyed that ancient errour [of Idolatry] in all Cities and throughout every Country. And in the first place they commanded the Priests themselves, with much laughter and disgrace to bring forth their Gods out of certain dark recesses. Then they devested [those Gods] of their outward dress, and exposed their inward deformity, which lay concealed under a painted shape, to the eyes of all men. Lastly, having scrap't off that matter which seemed to be usefull, and † cast it into the fire, and melted it down; so much of it as by them was thought to be of use and necessary, they reserved, and put it up safe. But what was superfluous and wholly useless, that they left to the superstitious for a lasting monument of disgrace. More-

† Vanquish, or, overthrow.

* Or, Made naked.

† Or, Images.

† Or, Tried it in the furnace and in the fire.

[a] Ἐν ἀγορᾶς πάσαις. Sozomen (book 2. chap. 5, where he has in a manner transcribed this whole passage of Eusebius) words it thus, κατὰ τὰς ἀγυιὰς, καὶ ἐν ἱπποδρόμῳ, καὶ τὰ βασίλεια, in the Streets, and in the Cirque, and in the Pallace. Vales.

[b] Themistius (in his fifth Oration to Theodosius,) is a witness, that the Statues of the Muses were in the Curia of Constantinople. The same Authour, in his Oration to the Senate περὶ πρεσβείας, says that these Statues were placed on this and that side, in a double number; so that they were not now nine, but eighteen. Vales.

[c] Ἄλλη τη μετῆλθετο Constantine ordered the brazen Statues of the Gods to be brought to Byzantium, that he might beautifie that City with these sort of Spoyles. But whatever Statues were made of Gold or Silver, them he ordered to be melted down, and coyned into money, as Sozomen relates, book 2. chap. 5. who explains this passage of Eusebius excellently well. Concerning this demolishment of the Temples and destruction of the Statues, our Eusebius has a passage in his second Sermon de Resurrectione. Vales.

* Μορμολύκεια, things made up so, as to affright the beholders.

[d] After these words [opened to all men,] those which follow, as far as [Moreover, this admirable Emperour, &c.] are wanting in the Kings Copy, and in Robert Stephens's Edition. But they are added by Gruter, Portesius, Christophorson, and others, from Eusebius's Panegyrick, and from Manuscript Copies. Indeed, we found them in the Fuketian Copy; and Sr Henry Savil hath given us notice, that the same words are extant in his Copy. Vales.

[e] Ἐπιεῖστο φθορὰν. In the Panegyrick, chap. 8. whence these words are taken, the reading is ἐπιῆντο φορὰν, made a discovery of; which reading in my judgment is truer. Vales.

[f] Moreover, this admirable Emperour performed another thing of this nature. For, at the same time that those Idols of the dead, made of pretious matter, were spoyled in that manner we have declared, [g] He ordered the rest of the Images consisting of Brass to be brought together. Therefore, those Gods, celebrated in the doting Fables [of the Greeks,] having had ropes made of hair cast about them, were drag'd away bound.

[f] Οἷον δὴ καὶ βασιλεὺς, &c. In Eusebius's Panegyrick, chap. 8. the reading of this place is fuller, in this manner, οἷον δὴ καὶ τὸ δ' ἤρξε βασιλεὺς ὁ θαυμάσιος, Moreover, this admirable Emperour performed another thing like hereto. In Moræus's Copy I found it written, οἷον δὴ καὶ τότε διεπράξατο βασιλεὺς, &c; moreover, at that time, &c. In the Fuketian Copy the reading is οἷον δὴ καὶ τόδ' εἰέργασεν. So also 'tis in Sr Henry Savils Copy, but without the Apocope. Valef.

[g] Τὰ λοιπὰ μετῆλθε, &c. Johannes Portesius renders it, ad alia perrexit, He proceeded to others. Christophorson translates it, reliquas aggressus est statuas, He set upon the other Statues. In the same sense namely, with that Eusebius had said above, ἄλλη τε μετήϊσχετο, he was revenged another way. Valef.

CHAP. LV.

The demolishment of the Idol-Temple at Aphaca in Phœnice, and [the disannulling] those Acts of uncleanness [committed there.]

After this the Emperour having as 'twere lighted a most bright Torch, lookt about with his Imperial eye, if peradventure he might any where find any Remains of Errour as yet lying concealed. And as some most sharp-sighted Eagle, which has raised her self to heaven on her wings, sees from above those things on the earth which are at the greatest distance: in the same manner he, whilst he *was resident in the Imperial Pallace of [a] his own most beautifull City, beheld as from a Watch-Tower a certain pernicious snare of souls in the Province of the Phœnicians. It was a Grove and a Temple, [not placed] in the midst of a City, nor in the Forums, or Streets; of which sort many [are visible] in Cities, most gloriously built for ornament sake: but this [Temple] was out of the way, far distant from the common Road and beaten path, consecrated to that filthy Dæmon [termed] Venus, in part of the top of [Mount] Libanus which is at [b] Aphaca.

* Walk't up and down in, or, was conversant in.

[a] Τῆς ἀστυ καλλιπτόλεως. So Themistius does likewise term Constantinople, in his 16th Oration, about the close of it; to wit, on account of the Beauty and Magnificence of the publick Works, which Constantine had most gorgeously erected there. For he had spoiled all Cities, Towns, places, and Temples, that he might beautifie that City which bore his own name. Therefore Jerome has with good reason affirmed in his Chronicon, that Constantinople had been dedicated by the nakedness of almost all cities. Valef.

[b] Concerning this Temple of Venus Aphacitis, Zosimus is to be consulted in his first book; and the Author of the Etymologicon in the word Ἄφακα; as also Suidas in the word χειροδωρῶν, and Mr Selden in Syntagm. 2. de Diis Syr. Further, in the Fuketian Manuscript the reading here is τῷ λιβάνῳ τῷ ἐν ἀφάκοις, of [Mount] Libanus in Aphaca. But in the Kings Sheets 'tis ἐν ἀκρωρείᾳ μέρει τῷ λιβάνῳ τῆς ἐν ἀφάκοις, in part of the Top of Libanus which [Top] is in Aphaca. Valef.

This was a School of wickedness, [open] to all impure persons, and such as with all manner of * Intemperance had debauch't their bodies. For certain effeminate men, who ought to be termed women rather then men, having renounc't the † Gravity of their own Sex, appeased the Dæmon ‖ by suffering themselves to be made use of as women. Besides, unlawfull * mixtures with women, and adulteries, and other † obscene and infamous facts were committed in that Temple, [c] as in a place that was lawless and without a Governour. Nor was there any one that might inspect what was done in that place, in regard no person of gravity or modesty durst go thither. But the impieties committed there could not lie concealed from this great Emperour. But when He Himself had lookt into them with the eye of Imperial providence, he judged such a Temple as this to be unworthy of [being enlightned] with the Rays of the Sun. Wherefore, he orders it to be totally demolished, together with its Statues and consecrated Gifts. Immediately therefore, the * Engines of this impudent and libidinous errour were dissipated by an Imperial Order; and a company of Souldiers gave their assistance in cleansing that place. And they who had hitherto been addicted to Lasciviousness, being scar'd by the Emperour's Menaces, in future learned Modesty: as likewise did those superstitious Heathens, that in their own opinion seemed very wise; who even themselves truly and experimentally understood their own vanity and folly.

* Sloth, or, pleasure.

† Or, Dignity.

‖ Θηλείᾳ νόσῳ; Valesius renders it, muliebria patientes.

* Or, Copulations of women.

† Horrible.

[c] Ὡς ἐν ἀνόμῳ καὶ ἀποπτῳ χώρῳ. Doubtless it must be made ἀοικητῳ, without a Governour; as the reading is in his Panegyrick, chap. 8; where this whole passage occurs. Yet in the Fuketian Copy, 'tis ἀποπλίτῃ deserted, in the Panegyrick also. A little before it must be made κλεψίγαμοί τε φθοραὶ, as the reading is in the Panegyrick. Valef.

* Or, Instruments.

CHAP. LVI.

The demolishment of Æsculapius's Temple at Ægæ.

For, whereas the [superstitious] errour of those thought to be wise, was great and much talk't of, in reference to that Dæmon of Cilicia; almost infinite numbers of men highly admiring him as a Saviour and a Physitian; in regard he sometimes appeared [a] to those who slept in his Temple; at others, healed the diseases of them that were infirm in their bodies: (nevertheless, he was a manifest Destroyer of souls, a Seducer of men from the true Saviour, one that drew off such as could easily be imposed upon, to the errour of impiety:) the Emperour [b] behaving himself according to his wonted manner, (for he had proposed the jealous God and true Saviour as the object of his adoration;) ordered this Temple also to be pulled down to the very ground. Presently therefore, at one nod of the Emperour's, [this Temple, which was] a wonder cryed up amongst the [c] noble Philosophers, lay flat on the ground, being ruined

[a] Τοῖς ἐγκαθεύδουσι. Neither Christophorson nor Portesius understood the true import of this word. For this term does not barely signifie to lie down and sleep, but to sleep in a Temple. This was an usage of the Heathens, to lodge all night in the Temple, expecting Dreams and Cures from their Gods. Of which thing innumerable instances occur in ancient Writers, but especially in Aristides, in his Orationes Sacræ. The Latines termed it incubare. Plautus's words in his Curculio are these; Ideo fit, quia hic Leno ægrotus incubat in Æsculapii fano. Solinus, chap. 7. Epidauro decus est Æsculapii sacellum, cui incubantes, &c. See Saint Jerom on the 65th chap. of Esaiah, vers. 4. Valef.

[b] Εἰκότα δὴ πράττων. Christophorson was egregiously mistaken in referring these words to Æsculapius, whenas they are spoken of the Emperour Constantine, as I have expresst it in my Version. 'Tis certain, in the Fuketian and Turnebian Copies the reading is εἰκότα δὴ βασιλεὺς πράττων, the Emperour behaving, &c. Valef.

[c] He means Apollonius Tyaneus, concerning whom Philostratus relates in his first book, that he was a long time resident in the Temple of Æsculapius at Ægæ, as the Guest of that very God. Valef.

ned

ned by a Company of Souldiers: and [together with the Temple] [d] He that lay lurking within it, who was not a Dæmon, nor a God, but a Seducer of souls, one who for an exceeding long space of time had led men into errour. Thus therefore he, who promised that he would free others from their illnesses and calamities, was not able to find out a [e] remedy in order to his own preservation; no more than when he was struck with thunder (as we are told in the [f] Fables.)

But the Actions of * Our Emperour, being such as were highly acceptable to God, were not in like manner fabulous: but by the manifest power of Our Saviour himself, this Temple in that place was so utterly ruined [together with others,] that not the least footstep of the former madness was left remaining there.

[d] Καὶ ὁ τῶν. In the excellent Fuketian Manuscript, this place is far otherwise expresst. For, after the word δαῖμα in the Greek [or, Souldiers in the English Version] that Copy places a full point. Then, it has the following passage worded in this manner; ὅτι δὲ ἐνδομυχῶν ἢ δαίμων· οὐδὲ γε θεὸς· πλάνος δέ τις ψυχῶν, μακροῖς καὶ μυείοις ἐξαπατήσας χρόνοις, δῆλον ἐκ ἧς πραγμάτων, Because 'twas manifest from the facts, that no Dæmon lay lurking within it; nor a God; but a deceiver of souls, who for an exceeding long, &c. The four last words [δῆλον ἐκ ἧς πραγμάτων] which are wanting in the ordinary Editions, Turnebus had likewise added at the margin of his book, from a Manuscript Copy. Presently, where the reading in the common Editions is, εἶθ' ὁ κακῶν ἑτέρους ἀπαλλάξειν, &c. Thus therefore he, who promised that he would free others from their illnesses, &c: the Fuketian Copy has it thus written, ὁ γὰ κακῶν ἑτέρους ἀπαλλάξειν καὶ συμφορᾶς περιχωθεὶς, οὐδὲν αὐτὸν ἑαυτῷ πρὸς ἀμυναν εὗρεθο, &c. For he who had promised that he would free others from their illnesses and calamity, himself found nothing for his own defence. Which reading seems to me fitter and better. In the Kings Sheets also I found it written εὕρεθο. Vales.

[e] Φάρμακον μᾶλλον. The last word is wanting in the Kings Copy, and may perhaps be understood. But the other Copies acknowledge it. In the close of this chapter, instead of ἀνετέρεψο, the Fuketian Copy has ἀνετέτραπο. Vales.

[f] The story is this, this Æsculapius, by the entreaty of Diana, restored to Life Hippolitus who had been torn in pieces by horses; whereat Jupiter being angry, killed him with Thunder.

* ἡμεδαπῆ βασιλέως, Of our country Emperour.

CHAP. LVII.

How the Heathens having rejected their Idols, returned to the knowledge of God.

WHatever persons therefore had heretofore been addicted to the superstitious worship of Dæmons, when with their own eyes they saw their own errour confuted, and actually beheld the Ruine of the Temples and Images in all places; some of them came over to the salutary Doctrine of Christ: but others, although they refused to do that, yet condemned the vanity of their fore-fathers, and laught at and derided those which by them had heretofore been accounted Gods. And indeed, how could they forbear having such thoughts as these, when under an external beauty and splendour of the Images, they saw so much filth and impurity lie concealed within? For either the Bones of dead Bodies, and dry skulls [a] stoln by the frauds of Conjurers, were within them: or else, nasty rags and clouts stuft with abominable filth; or lastly, a bundle of hay and straw. Which after they beheld heapt together within their soulless images, they blamed both their own and their fathers extream folly of 'tis truer mind; especially when they perceived, that within those their * Adyta, and within the Images themselves, there was no Inhabitant, [b] no Dæmon, no Utterer of Oracles, no God, no Prophet, as they had before perswaded themselves; no not so much as an impotent or obscure phantome. And therefore every dark Cavern, and every secret Recess was readily opened to those sent by the Emperour: the Adyta also, and places before inaccessible, as likewise the inmost parts of the Temples, were trodden by the feet of the Souldiers. So that, hereby was discovered and exposed to publick view that blindness of mind, wherein all the Heathens had for so long a time been kept involved.

[a] Τοῦτων περιεργίας ἐσκαωρημένα. In the King's, Fuketian, and Savilian Copies written ἐσκαωρημμένα. Which word Christophorson renders thus, calvæ præstigiatorum dolis callidè obtectæ, skulls craftily covered by the frauds of Conjurers. Which translation I approve not of; and had rather render it subreptæ, stoln, or else adornatæ & ad maleficia comparatæ, trimmed and made ready for mischievous Facts. For Bones and Skulls are the instruments of Conjurers, whereof they made use in order to their mischievous acts. Vales.

* Or, Inaccessible Recesses.

[b] In his Panegyrick concerning Constantine's Tricennalia, chap. 8, these words are placed otherwise, in this manner, ὁ δαίμων, ὁ θεὸς, ὁ χρησμῳδὸς, ὁ μάντις, no Dæmon, no God, no Utterer of Oracles, no Prophet: which I do indeed like better. Vales.

CHAP. LVIII

That having demolished Venus's Temple at Heliopolis, He was the first who built [a Church there.]

[a] ANd these things may deservedly be recounted amongst the Emperour's famous Actions; as likewise those matters particularly constituted by him in several Provinces. Of which sort is that [which we have seen performed by him] at Heliopolis a City of Phœnice. In which City the Heathens who honoured obscene Lust with the appellation [of the Goddess Venus,] permitted their wives and daughters to commit whoredom with impunity. But now a new and modest Law is issued out from the Emperour, whereby 'tis cautioned, that no one of those usages heretofore common amongst them, shall in future be in any wise audaciously practised. And to these persons he again transmitted instructions in writing; for he [b] was * appointed by God for this reason chiefly, that he might instruct all men in the Laws of Temperance. Wherefore, he accounted it not a thing below himself, to Preach even to these persons by his own Letter, and to exhort them to hasten to the knowledge of God. And in that place he added works consonant to his words, erecting even amongst them a [c] most spacious Church with the Edifices belonging thereto. In so much that, [d] what had no where been heard of by any preceding age whatever,

[a] This whole passage, as far as the Heathens who honoured, &c. is wanting in the Kings Copy and in Robert Stephens's Edition. But it has been added by Learned men, from the authority of Manuscripts. Turnebus and Sr Henry Savil found it in their Copies; and we also saw it written in the Fuketian Copy, at the margin. But the reading in the Fuketian Manuscript is larger by one word, thus, τοῖς βασιλέως εἰκότως ἀναθεὶν, &c. Vales.

* Or, Sent.

[b] Περιγεγράφως ἀποσταλεὶς. The last word is wanting in the Kings Copy and Stephens's Edition. Wherefore 'tis to be considered, whether we had not the Turnebian, Savilian, and Fuketian Manuscripts do defend the writing of the Geneva Edition, I am of opinion, that it is to be retained. Vales.

better read περιγραφῶς, in the first place. But, whereas [c] Οἶκον ἐυκτήριον ἐκκλησίας τε μέγιστον. I doubt not but it should be written οἶκον ἐυκτήριον ἐκκλησίας, νεώντε μέγιστον. For so Eusebius is wont to express himself, as I have remarked above. And by οἶκον ἐυκτήριον he means Basilicam, a Church; but by νεὼν he means the whole compass or inclosure of the Church, that is, the Porch, Atrium or Court, Porticus's, Exhedræ, Baptisteries, and the other Edifices which are wont to be annext to Churches. In the Fuketian Copy the reading is οἶκον ἐυκτήριον ἐκκλησίας μέγιστον. Vales.

[d] Any one may, not without reason, wonder, why Eusebius should say it was a thing unheard-of by all ages, that a City addicted to the superstitious worship of Dæmons, should receive a Church and a Bishop. For that had hapned to other Cities also at that time. But perhaps Eusebius means, that this was a thing new and unheard-of, that a Church

Church of God had been built in that City, wherein as yet there was no Christians, but all persons equally adored Idols. This Church therefore was built by Constantine at Heliopolis, in hope rather than for necessity; to wit, that he might invite all the Citizens to the profession of the Christian Religion. A little after, the reading in the Fuketian Manuscript is ἔργα τυχεῖν, truer than in the ordinary Editions, where 'tis ἔργον. Vales.

was then first of all really compleated; and a City of men addicted to the superstitious worship of Dæmons, was vouchsafed a Church of God, and Presbyters and Deacons; and a Bishop consecrated to the supream God, presided over the inhabitants of that place. Moreover, the Emperour taking great care that many persons might come over to the Faith of Christ, made large distributions there, in order to the relief of the poor: and in this wise he perswaded and invited men to the salutary Doctrine, in a manner uttering those very words spoken by Saint Paul; * whether in pretence, or in truth, Christ is preached.

* Philip. 1. 18.

CHAP. LIX.

Concerning the disturbance raised at Antioch on Eustathius's account.

BUt, whilst all persons passed their lives in the greatest joy imaginable on account of these [Blessings,] and the Church of God was all manner of ways exalted amongst all Nations every where; the envy [of the Devil,] who is always contriving Plots against the Good, began again to make an insurrection against this so great a prosperity of our affairs: supposing, that the Emperour, † exasperated at our disturbances and indecencies, would in future have his affection towards us alienated. Having therefore kindled a great fire, he ‖ filled the Church of Antioch with Tragical Calamities: in so much that, there wanted but little of the whole Citie's being utterly subverted. [a] For the people of the Church were divided into two Factions; and the Commonalty of the City in an hostile manner were so highly enraged against the Magistrates themselves, and the [b] Milice: that, they were just upon the point of drawing their Swords, had not the providence of God, and the fear of the Emperour, repress the violence of the multitude. And here the clemency of the Emperour, like a Saviour and Physitian of souls, did again by discourse administer a Cure to those distempered. For he dispatcht away thither one of those about him, whom he had had tryal of, a person honoured with the dignity of a Comes, a man eminently trusty and faithfull; [by whom he spake] to those people in a most gracious manner. And by Letter after Letter he exhorted them to entertain thoughts of Peace; and taught them to practise such things as were agreeable to the divine Religion. And at length he prevailed with them; and excused them in those Letters he wrote to them, affirming that he himself had publickly heard [c] him who had been the occasioner of that Tumult. And these Letters of his, which were filled with no ordinary Learning and Utility, I had inserted at this place, had they not set a Brand of infamy on the persons † guilty. Wherefore I will at present omit them, being resolved not to renew the memory of mischiefs: and will only annex those Letters to this Work, which he wrote to [d] expres the joy and satisfaction of his own mind in reference to the Peace and agreement of others. In which Letters he entreats them, that they would not in any wise challenge to themselves the Prelate of another place, by whose intervention they had made up a Peace amongst themselves; but that, agreeable to the Canon of the Church, they should rather choose him Bishop, whom [our Lord] himself the Common Saviour of all, should design [for that office.] He writes therefore both to the people, and also to the Bishops, severally, these following [Letters.]

† Or, Wearied out with.

‖ Or, Encompassed.

† Or, Accused.

[c] He means Eustathius Bishop of Antioch, as 'tis apparent from the Contents of this chapter. Whom when the Eusebians [that is, the party of Eusebius Bishop of Nicomedia] had by fraud and calumny ejected out of his own See, a great tumult was raised at Antioch.

This hapned on the year of Christ 329, (as may apparently be gathered from Philostorgius's second Book;) or on the year 330, as Theodoret seems to assert, book 2. chap. 31. For he writes, that Meletius was translated to the See of Antioch thirty years after Eustathius's Deposition. Now, 'tis manifest that Meletius was translated to Antioch on the year of Christ 360. Wherefore, I can't assent to the most illustrious Cardinal Baronius, who being always angry with our Eusebius, whilst he refuses to follow his account, hath confounded all things. For he says that this Tumult hapned at Antioch on the year of Christ 324, that is on the very year before the Nicene Synod, then, when Eustathius was created Bishop of Antioch: whereas Socrates, Sozomen, and Theodoret do attest, that this Tumult had happned at the deposition of this Eustathius. But Baronius proves by most evident arguments, as he himself supposes, that Eustathius was ejected out of the See of Antioch, not under the Reign of the Emperour Constantine, but in that of Constantius. Let us see therefore, with what arguments he endeavours to make this out. In the first place he cites a passage out of Athanasius's Epistle ad solitarios, about the beginning. Fuit, says he, quidam Eustathius Episcopus Antiochiæ, &c. There was one Eustathius Bishop of Antioch, a person famous for confession, &c. whom the men of the Arian Opinion had accused to Constantius by a forged calumny in such a manner, as if he had been contumelious towards the Emperours Mother. But I affirm, that in this passage of Athanasius, instead of Constantius, Constantine is to be written. Which emendation is confirmed by those words immediately added concerning the Emperour's Mother. For he means Helena, who about this time had come into the East. For these words can't in any wise be meant of Fausta, who had been put to death above twenty years before, if we follow Baronius's computation. But the passage of Saint Jerom, out of his book de Scriptoribus Ecclesiasticis, makes little for Baronius, in regard in the Old Editions, as also in that of Lyons which I have, 'tis plainly written, sub Constantino Principe missus est in exilium, was sent into Exile under the Emperour Constantine. Wherefore, I had rather follow Eusebius here, than Baronius. Nor do I see, how so great stirs could have been made at the Creation of Eustathius, (of which stirs there is mention in the Emperour Constantine's Letter,) that to appease them a Comes was to be sent, and so many Letters written by the Emperour. Besides, Constantine says in his Letter, that he had publickly heard him who had been the Author of that whole Sedition; to wit, Eustathius, whom he had ordered to come to Court, and had banisht him into Thracia. And this Athanasius in his before-mentioned Letter, accounts as the first Exploit of the Arians; which thing is to be remarked. For this was done before the Synod of Tyre, which was convened against Athanasius, that is before the year of Christ 334. Athanasius therefore does right in beginning the History of the War which the Arians brought upon the Catholick Church, from Eustathius's deposition, as from the first Exploit of the Arians: which having succeeded according to their wish, they thought that all other matters would in future be ready and easie. Further, Baronius's Opinion is refuted as well from what we have said above, as from this, because Flaccillus (who after Paulinus and Eulalius succeeded Eustathius,) is mentioned amongst those Bishops present at the Synod at Tyre, by Athanasius in his Apology to the Emperour Constantius; as Jacobus Gothofredus has well observed in his Dissertations on the second book of Philostorgius. Vales.

[a] Διαφεῖδε. I reade διαιρεθέντων γὰρ τῆς ἐκκλησίας λαῶν, from Socrates book 1. chap. 24. But this whole place is thus to be restored from the Fuketian, Savil. and Turnebian Copies: εἰς δύο μὲν δὴ τμήματα διήρητο ὁ τῆς ἐκκλησίας λαός. τὸ δὲ κοινὸν τῆς πόλεως, αὐλοῖς ἄρχουσιν ἢ στρατιώταις, πολεμίων τρόπον ὅπλοις τοῦτον ἀνακεκίνητο; For the people, &c, as we have rendred it. Vales.

[b] Καὶ στρατιωτικοῖς. Christophorson renders it ill, Milites præsidiarios, the Souldiers in Garrison. For the Milites Præsidiarii were in Castles, not in Cities. I suppose therefore that those Souldiers are meant, who had performed their service in the wars; as likewise the Officials of the Comes of the East, and of the Consularis of Syria. Vales.

[d] Τῶν ἄλλων ἐνδυμένῳ. It must be ἐνδυμένῳ, as Christophorson seems to have read; and we have rendred it accordingly. Vales.

CHAP. LX.

Constantine's Letter to the Antiochians, that they should not draw away Eusebius from Cæsarea; but should seek another [Bishop.]

VICTOR CONSTANTINUS MAXIMUS AUGUSTUS, To the people of Antioch.

HOw gratefull and pleasing is the Concord amongst You * to all the prudent and wise men of this Age! Even I my Self, Brethren, have determined to embrace You with an everlasting affection; being invited thereto both † by the Rule of Religion, and by your way of Life, and also by your love and favour. This is most certainly the genuine product of Blessings, to || act with an understanding that is right and sound. For what can so much become you? [a] Wonder not therefore, if I shall affirm the Truth to have been to you * a cause of safety, rather than of hatred. Indeed, amongst Brethren (to whom one and the same affection of mind, and a progress in the way that is right and just, doth by Gods assistance promise an enrollment into the pure and holy family;) what [b] can be more goodly and valuable, than with a joy and unanimity of mind to rest contented at their beholding the Blessings of all men? Especially, in regard the instruction of the divine Law incites [c] your purpose of mind to † a greater perfection, and because 'tis our desire that your judgment should be confirmed by the best determinations. This will perhaps seem strange to you; what namely this preface of our || Letter should mean. Truly, I will neither avoid, nor refuse to declare the reason of this matter. For I confess that I have perused the Acts, wherein both from your honourable commendations and Testimonies in reference to Eusebius Bishop of Cæsarea, (whom I my Self also have long since very well known, on account as well of his Learning as his Modesty;) I perceive you have an [d] inclination towards him, and are desirous of making him your own. What, think you, came into my mind, who am [e] earnestly hastning to an accurate disquisition of * what is right and true? What a care and solicitude [do you believe me] to have taken on account of that your desire? O Holy Faith, which by the Words and Precepts of our Saviour dost exhibite to us as 'twere an express † representation of Life; with what trouble wouldest even Thou thy self resist || Sinners, unless Thou shouldest wholly refuse to serve in order to gain and favour! Indeed to Me, he seemes to have [f] conquered even Victory her self, who * makes Peace his more earnest study and endeavour. For where that which is decent, is lawfull to any one, no body can be found who is not highly pleased with it. I beseech you therefore, Brethren, on what account should we so determine, as thereby to procure others an injury? For what reason do we follow those things, which will certainly overthrow the Faith of Our Opinion? Indeed, I do highly praise that person, who by you also is approved of as worthy of honour and affection. Nevertheless, that (which amongst all should remain firm and ratified,) ought not in such a manner to have been * enervated, as that all persons should not be contented [g] with their own Limits, nor all enjoy their domestick Blessings; and that in a search after those who might equally seem worthy of the Bishoprick, not only one, but many persons should not be † produced comparatively of equall worth with || this person. For when neither * Terrour nor Roughness gives any disturbance to Ecclesiastick Honours, it happens that those [Honours] are alike in themselves, and † are in all things equally desireable. Nor is it agreeable to reason, that a deliberation concerning this matter should be made [h] to the injury of others: in regard the minds of all men, whether they may seem to be [i] meaner or more illustrious do equally ad-

* Or, To the prudence and wisedom of the world.
† Or, By the Law.
‖ Or, Have made use of.
[a] Οὐκ ἂν θαυμάσαιμι ἄν. This place is corrupted; the meaning of it I have pick't out as well as I could. And in the first place, I think it must be made θαυμάσατε, wonder not therefore. Then, a little after write thus, οἷς μία τε καὶ αὐτὴ διάθεσις δι' ὀρθῆς τε καὶ δικαίας ὁδοῦ πορεία πρὸς θεὸν κατεπαγγέλλεται, to whom one, &c; as the reading is in the excellent Fuketian Copy, whereto Sr Henry Savil's, and Turnebus's book do in part agree. Vales.

* Or, An occasion of salvation.
† Or, A more beautifull direction.
‖ Or, Discourse.
[b] Τί ἂν τιμιώτερον γένοιτο. After these words Scaliger and others have inserted these, τὸ δι' εὐτυχίας, which I found written also in Moræus's book. But I can't approve of this their conjecture. For, what should the meaning of δι' εὐτυχίας be? I had much rather read thus, ἢ τοῖς πάντων καλοῖς χαίρουσι ὁμογνωμονεῖν, than with a joy, &c. For, Constantine says that it does not become Christians to grieve at the Blessings of others, and to draw away the Bishops of neighbouring Cities from their own Churches, because they may be eminent for knowledge and virtue. For the Antiochians would have done that; who, after they had deposed Eustathius, requested, that Eusebius Bishop of Cæsarea might be made their Prelate. In the Fuketian Copy, after the word γένοιτο, there is a point set at the top. Then the reading is, τοῦτο δ' εὐτυχίας τοῖς, &c. Nor is it otherwise in Turnebus's Copy. Sr Henry Savil had mended it thus at the margin of his Copy; τὸ δ' εὐτυχίας τῆς πάντων καλῶς, &c. Which reading, whether it proceeded from conjecture, or was taken out of some Manuscript Copy, I can't approve of. Indeed I had rather reade thus; τί ἂν τιμιώτερον γένοιτο τὸ διαλυχθέντας τοῖς πάντων καλοῖς ὁμογνωμονεῖν; that the meaning may be the same with that which I have set above. Vales.

[c] Τὴν προθυμίαν ὑμῶν. Christophorson did not rightly understand this place. For Constantine means that earnestness or vehemency of their minds, wherewith the Antiochians had purposed to procure Eusebius to be their Bishop. As a little afterwards by the term κρίσιν he means the Judgment wherewith they had elected the same person. I read therefore, καὶ πῶς ὑμετέραν ἐν κρίσιν βεβαιοῦς τοῖς ἀληθεῖς, &c; and because 'tis our desire that your judgment, &c: as the reading is in the Fuketian and Turneb. Copies. Vales.

[d] Ἐγκειμένους ἀνδρὶ τὸν σφέτερον ἐξομοιῶσαι. In the Old Sheets of the King's Library the reading is ἐγκειμοίως, which pleases me mightily. But the Fuk. Savil. and Turneb. Copies give us another reading, ἐγκειμένους καὶ σφετερίζομένους. Vales.

[e] Ἐπιζήτησιν σπουδομένου. I doubt not but it should be written ἐπειγόμενον, earnestly hastning to. In the Fuketian Copy I found it written σπεύδομένου. It might also be made ἐπεγειρόμενον, who am raised. Vales.

[f] Αὐτῆς τῆς νίκης φιλειρηνοῦσης. A most elegant sentence, which Christophorson understood not. Indeed to me, says Constantine, he seems to have conquered Victory her self, who is earnestly studious of Peace. Therefore, after the word ἀντιποιούμενος [or, endeavour, in our Version] a point must be placed; as 'tis in the Kings and Fuketian Copy, and in the Old Sheets. Vales.

[g] Τοῖς ἰδίοις γνώμαις ἔχειν ὅρους καὶ ἀρκεῖσθαι. That is, every one should be contented with their own Limits. For γνώμων is a Boundary or Limit of grounds; whence those Writers are termed Gnomatici, who have written concerning the Boundaries of fields. After the same way ὅρος is promiscuously taken amongst Græcians, as well for a Sentence, as a Limit. For as a Limit does bound Fields, so does a Sentence terminate strifes and controversies. Further, in my judgment it should be writen, ἐχέμυθος ἀρκεῖσθαι. For it follows, καὶ ἴδιον οἰκεῖον πάντας ἀπολαύειν. Although in the Fuketian and Turneb. Copies the reading is, πάντων ἀπολαύειν, nor enjoy all their domestick, &c. Vales.

[h] Εἰς ἕτερον πλεονέκτημα, to another injury. It must be written εἰς ἑτέρου πλεονέκτημα, to the injury of others. 'Tis not becoming, says Constantine, that a deliberation of this nature about the choosing a Bishop into Eustathius's place, should bring an injury upon others. Nor ought ye to spoil other Churches. A little after, I am of the same opinion with Scaliger and Christophorson, who have mended it thus, τῆς πάντων διανοίας. And so I found it written in the Fuk. and Savil. Copies, and in the Old Sheets. Vales. In Robert Stephens 'tis πάντως.

[i] Ἄν τ' ἐλάττους, ἄν τε μείζους. That is, whether they be inhabitants of a lesser City, such as is Cæsarea; or of a greater City, of which sort is Antioch. All, says he, as well the Citizens of smaller, as of greater Cities, are equal with God. Wherefore lesser Towns are not to be deprived of their Bishops. Constantine had said the same a little before; namely, that Ecclesiastick Honours are all equal, and are to be accounted of equal value. Vales.

* Or, More earnestly strives for Peace.
* Or, Weakened.
† Or, Proposed.
‖ Eusebius.
* Ἐκπλήξεως ὄντος τοῦ τραχύτητος; Valesius renders it, neither roughness nor violence.
† Or, Are to be accounted of equal price; so Valesius.

mit

* Decrees † Or, Law.

mit of and keep the divine * Dogmata; ſo that, as to what relates to the Common † Faith, one ſort of perſons are in nothing inferiour to another.

k These words may be referred to the preceding period. And ſo after the verb ὑποφαινόμεθα a full point is to be ſet, and the place rendred thus: So that ſome perſons (as to what relates to the Common Faith,) are in no wiſe inferiour to others, if we ſhould plainly ſpeak the truth. Wherefore, this is not to detain a man, but to take him away by force, &c. And thus this place is pointed in the Old Sheets. Valeſ.

* Or, Multitudes.

k But ſhould we plainly declare the Truth, any one might with good reaſon affirm, that this is not to detain a man, but rather to take him away by force; and, that what is done is an act of Violence, not of Juſtice. And whether the * generality of the people think thus, or otherwiſe, I my ſelf do plainly and boldly affirm, that this buſineſs gives occaſion for an accuſation, and does raiſe the diſturbance of no ſmall tumult. For, even lambs do ſhew the † force and ſtrength of their teeth, as often as (the uſual care and Concern of their Shepherd for them growing more remiſs,) they perceive themſelves deprived of their former guidance and looking to. Now, if theſe things be thus, and if we are not miſtaken; in the firſt place, Brethren, conſider this. (For many, and thoſe great advantages will offer themſelves to you even at the very beginning.) Firſt of all [I ſay conſider this;] whether the ‖ affection and love you have one towards another will not be ſenſible of ſome abatement of it ſelf. Then [weigh this alſo,] that that perſon who l came to you on account of good advice, does from the divine Judgment reap to himſelf the due fruit of Honour; in regard he has received no mean favour from that Honourable Teſtimony which you by a general conſent have given of His * Virtue. Laſtly [conſider,] m that 'tis agreeable to your uſage, to make uſe of a care and diligence which becometh good judgment, in your looking out for ſuch a man as you ſtand in need of; ſo as that you may avoid all manner of tumultuous and diſorderly Clamour. For ſuch ſort of Clamour is always † noxious; n and from the * collision of ſeveral men one againſt the other, ſparks and fires are uſually raiſed. May I therefore ſo pleaſe God and you, and may I ſo leade a Life agreeable to your deſires and wiſhes, as I Love you, and the Calm Port of your Mildneſs; o ſince you have caſt out that filth, and inſtead thereof have brought in Concord with good Morals, and have put up [A-boord your Ship] the firm Flag [of the Croſs;]

† Or, Nature.

‖ Or, Ingenuity.

l From theſe words it may be gathered, that our Euſebius had come to Antioch together with the reſt of the Biſhops, who in a Synod had condemned Euſtathius Biſhop of Antioch; and that the Antiochians, after Euſtathius's depoſition, had a mind to keep him with them. This is what Conſtantine has ſaid above, ἐκ κάθειξιν, ἀλλ' ἀφάιρεσιν μᾶλλον, this is not a detention, but rather the taking away of a man by violence. Theodoret tells us the ſame, book 1. chap. 22. Valeſ.

* Or, Probity.

m Ὁ τῆς ὑμετέρας σωφθείας. I think it muſt be written ὅπ τῆς ὑμετέρας, &c. For the verb σκέψασθε, conſider, is to be underſtood in common. But if any one has a mind to defend the common reading, I ſhall not much reſiſt him. Valeſ.

† Or, Unjuſt.

n Καὶ κ τῆς ἧς διαφορᾶς συσκειόσεως, and from the companing of ſeveral perſons togeſher. It would doubtleſs be better to read thus, τῆς ἧς διαφορᾶν συσκρόσεως; that is, from the colliſion of many men, ſparks and flames are uſually raiſed. The Fuketian Copy hath at length confirmed our conjecture to us; wherein I found it plainly written συσκρόσεως. Valeſ.

* Knocking, or, beating together.

o Ἐξ ἧς τὸν ῥῦπον ἐκεῖνον ὑποπάλωσι. Chriſtophorſon renders this place thus: Ex quo portu ſordibus ſeditionis præcritæ ejectis, pacato mentis ſtatu concordiam in earum locum inducite: Out of which port having ejected the filth of your paſt Sedition, in place thereof do you bring in Concord with a calm temper of mind. But in this Verſion, there are many things which I can't approve of. For firſt, I am not pleaſed with his making ῥῦπον ἐκεῖνον to mean the filth of Sedition. In my judgment Conſtantine ſeems to hint at that cauſe, on account whereof Euſtathius had been depoſed; to wit, the debauching of a certain woman; concerning which whoredome conſult Theodoret, book 1. chap. 21. The ſame thing is likewiſe intimated by Conſtantine a little after this, where he ſays, πᾶν γὰ τὸ ναῦν λυμαινόμενον ὥσπερ ἐξ ἀντλίας ἀνάλωται. That is, For, whatever could any way defile the veſſel, is drawn out by the Pump as 'twere. At which place nevertheleſs, Chriſtophorſon does again render it the filth of Sedition. But, how filth can be a term properly uſed in reference to Sedition I can't indeed perceive. But no body can doubt, but it may be very properly ſpoken in reference to that incontinency wherewith Euſtathius was charged. There is a Metaphor here, taken from Ports, which are wont to be cleanſed, as often as they are ſtopt up with ſand, mud, or ſuch like filth. Now, thoſe words ἐξ ἧς may be rendred adverbially; and ſo the reading muſt be ἀντλειστευέσθαι, which diſpleaſes me not. May I ſo pleaſe God, ſays Conſtantine, as I Love you, and the port of your Lenity, after having caſt out that filth, you have brought in Concord with good Morals. Indeed, this meaning pleaſes me much better than the common reading. For now the Antiochians were quiet, and the Sedition was appeaſed, at ſuch time as Conſtantine wrote this Letter, as 'tis apparent from its beginning. Valeſ.

p Steering a proſperous courſe to the Light it ſelf, with Rudders of Iron, as one may ſay. Wherefore, q convey on Boord your Ship the incorruptible Cargo. For, whatever could any way defile the Veſſel, is drawn out by the Pump as 'twere. Now therefore, uſe your utmoſt endeavours, that your enjoyment r of all theſe Bleſſings may be ſuch, as you may not a ſecond time ſeem, either to have determined any thing at all, with an inconſiderate and unprofitable deſire, or from the beginning to have attempted what is diſagreeable. God keep you, Beloved Brethren!

p Δεόμον τῷ ἑφτὸν εἰς φῶς δεχμεύσες, Steering a celeſtial courſe to the Light it ſelf. I think it muſt be made δεόμον θεῖον, a proſperous Courſe. For 'tis a Metaphor taken from Navigation. In Sophocles, θεῖος δεόμος is uſed to ſignifie a happy Voyage by Sea; and a Ship which Sails with a proſperous gale of Wind, is by Græcians termed θειοδεγμῶσα ναῦς. Valeſ.

q Τὸν ἄφθαρτον φόρτον ἀγεῖτε. This whole Letter is in many places faulty; but eſpecially this clauſe does abound with miſtakes. For, what is the meaning of theſe words? I doubt not but it muſt be read thus, ἄφθαρτον φόρτον ἄγετε, convey on Boord, &c. Conſtantine does here make uſe of a continued Metaphor taken from Navigation, and compares Chriſtians to Merchants who make Voyages on account of Trade. Saile on, ſays he, with a proſperous Courſe to the eternal Light, having erected the Flag of the Croſs in your Ships, and carry on Boord your Veſſel the incorruptible Goods. For now, whatever could have endammaged the Ship, is Pumpt out. Thus, by making a ſmall, and in a manner no alteration, the meaning does now appear elegant and plain. Valeſ.

r Τῷ ἧς ἁπάντων. It muſt, I think, be written in on word, ἓν τῶν; as Sr Henry Savil had mended it in his Copy. In the Fuketian Copy the reading is ὑπάλαιον ἧς ἁπάντων. The cloſe of this Letter is in my judgment thus to be reſtored; ἢ καθόλυ τι προξένσας, ἢ τὸ ἀρχὸν ὀπηγειῶσαι μὴ συμφέρον δοκοίησε. Which reading I have followed in my Verſion. Conſtantine terms the deſire which the Antiochians had manifeſted towards Euſebius, when they coveted him to be their Biſhop, ἄζυλον σπυδὴν, an inconſiderate deſire. The affection of the Antiochians towards Euſtathius may alſo be meant; at whoſe depoſition they were vext, and had raiſed a Sedition. In the Fuk. Sav. and Turneb. Copies, this place is written thus, ἐπιχειρῆσαι ὃ μὴ συμφέρον ἦ ἡμεῖς δοκοίησε. But the reading is plainer which we found in the Old Sheets, ὀπηχειρῆσαι μὴ συμφέρον δοκοίησε. Valeſ.

CHAP. LXI.

Constantine's Letter to Eusebius, wherein he commends Him for His Refusal of [the See of] Antioch.

The Emperour's Letter [a] to Us, after our Refusal of the Bishoprick of Antioch.

[a] This Title was written by Eusebius himself, as 'tis apparent. For He himself says concerning himself, πρὸς ἡμᾶς, to us. Wherefore, there was no need of any other Title. Further, hence it may be plainly gathered, that these Books were written by Eusebius Bishop of Cæsarea. Which, notwithstanding it may be proved by innumerable arguments and testimonies; yet I wonder at James Gothofred, who has been so bold as to deny it. In the Fuketian Copy, which has the Contents or Titles prefixt before every Chapter, these words are wanting. But in the Kings Sheets they are written at the margin. Vales.

VICTOR CONSTANTINUS MAXIMUS AUGUSTUS, To Eusebius.

I Have perused your Letter very often; and have found that you do most exactly observe the Rule of Ecclesiastick discipline. For, to persist in those Sentiments which appear both acceptable to God, and agreeable to Apostolick Tradition, is an eminent degree of Piety. You may account your self blessed even in this very thing, because by the testimony of the whole world, as I may say, you have been judged worthy [b] to be Bishop over the whole Church. For, whereas all persons desire you to be [Bishop] amongst them, without question they increase this your felicity. But Your prudence ([c] which hath resolved to observe the commands of God, and the Apostolick Canon, and that of the Church,) has acquitted it self incomparably well. in regard it hath refused the Bishoprick of the Church at Antioch; and hath endeavoured to continue in that See rather, the presidency over which by the will of God it had at first undertaken. Further, concerning this matter I have written a Letter to the people, and to those other persons your Colleagues, who also themselves wrote to me in relation to the same affairs. Which Letters when Your * Holiness shall have perused, it will easily understand, that, because Justice seemed to Resist them, I have written unto them by the impulse of the Deity. It will behove Your prudence also to be present at their † Council, to the end this very thing may be constituted in the Church of Antioch. God keep you, Beloved Brother.

[b] πάσης ἐκκλησίας ἐπίσκοπον εἶναι. Baronius (at the year of our Lord 24, Number 145,) expounds these words thus. Constantine, says he, terms the care of the Antiochian Church the Bishoprick of the whole Church; because Antioch was the Metropolis of all the East. But, with the favour of that great person be it spoken, there seems to be another sense of these words. For whereas all Cities were desirous of having Eusebius their Bishop, as Constantine attests a little after, Eusebius was by the consent of all worthy of the Episcopate of the whole world. Vales.

[c] Ἦγον τὰς τε εὐλαβὰς. In the Fuketian Copy and that of Sr Henry Savil, the reading is εἴπερ τὰς τε εὐλαβὰς. I should choose to write ἥπερ τὰς τε, &c. which hath &c. A little before, where the reading is σύμφωνα φαίνεται, the Fuketian and Savilian Copies add εὐαγὲς, is an eminent degree of piety. Vales.

* Or, Purity.

† Or, Consultation.

CHAP. LXII.

Constantine's Letter to the Synod, that Eusebius should not be drawn away from Cæsarea.

VICTOR CONSTANTINUS MAXIMUS AUGUSTUS;

To [a] Theodotus, Theodorus, Narcissus, Aëtius, Alpheus, and to the rest of the Bishops which are at Antioch.

[a] This Theodotus was Bishop of Laodicea in Syria; Narcissus was Bishop of Neronades in Cilicia; Aëtius was Bishop of Lydda in Palestine: all Favourers of the Arian Party. Who, when they were come to Antioch, together with Eusebius Bishop of Nicomedia, and Eusebius Cæsariensis, deposed Eustathius, as Theodoret relates Eccles. Hist. book 1. chap. 21. But Aëtius betook himself afterwards to the side of the Orthodox, as Philostorgius attests, book 3. chap. 12; and also Athanasius. Now, Alphæus Bishop of Apamea in Syria, and lastly Theodorus Prelate of Sydon in Phœnice are named amongst the Bishops who subscribed to the Nicene Synod. Concerning Theodotus, Athanasius speaks also, in his book de Synodis Arimini & Seleuciæ. Vales.

I Have read the Letter written by Your prudence, and do highly commend the wise resolution of Your Colleague Eusebius. And when I had perfectly understood all transactions, partly from Your Letter, and partly from that of the Most Perfect [b] Acacius and Strategius [the Comites,] and had made a due inspection into the thing; I wrote to the people of Antioch, what was well pleasing to God, and befitting the Church. A Copy of which Letter I have ordered to be annext hereto, to the end You also might know, what I, [c] invited thereto by the way of Right, had ordered to be written to the people [of Antioch:] in as much as this was contained in Your Letter, that according to the suffrage of the people. and [d] the desire of Your prudence, Eusebius the Most Holy Bishop of the Church of Cæsarea might preside over the Antiochian Church, and undertake the care thereof. [e] Indeed, Eusebius's Letter appeared highly observant of the Ecclesiastick Canon: but 'tis meet, that Our Sentiment also should be made known to Your prudence. [f] For, it has been related to me, that Euphronius a Presbyter, who is a Citizen of Cæsarea in Cappadocia, and [g] Georgius

[b] Concerning Acacius Comes of the East, if I mistake not, Constantine speaks above in his Letter to Macarius Bishop of Jerusalem, chap. 53. But Strategius is he, who by another name was called Musonianus; concerning whom I have made several remarks in my Notes on the 15th Book of Amm. Marcellinus, pag. 99. He had been sent to Antioch by the Emperour Constantine, to appease the tumult there, as Eusebius has said above; see chap. 59. Vales.

[c] Προσκληθείς, I had rather write προσκληθείς. Vales.

[d] Προαιρέσεως σύνεσιν, the prudence of your desire. I would more willingly read συναίσεως προαίρεσιν, the desire of your prudence. Further, from these words (which are ill understood by Christophorson) it appears, that the Bishops who had been convened at Antioch, had by their Letter requested of Constantine, that according to the desire of the Antiochian people, and themselves, Eusebius might be translated to the See of Antioch. Therefore those words, ὡς τε κατὰ τὸν τῶν λαῶν καὶ τὸν τῆς ὑμετέρας συναίσεως προαίρεσιν, are taken out of the Letter of the Bishops convened at Antioch, which they sent to the Emperour Constantine. Vales.

[e] Τὴν μὲν τὰ τῆς βίβ γράμματα. I am not displeased with the conjecture of Learned men, who have mended it τὰ μὲν τῆς εὐσεβίβ γράμματα &c, Indeed Eusebius's &c. The place might likewise have been restored thus, ἀπῆκται γε ὑμῖν τὰ τῆς εὐσεβίβ &c. But the former reading is confirmed by the authority of the Fuketian and Savilian Copies. Only the postpositive Article ἅ is to be expunged, which occurs not in the Fuketian Copy. Vales.

[f] Ἀφῖκται γάρ εἰς ἐμὲ. In the Fuketian and Sr Henry Savils Copy, the reading of this place runs thus; ἀφῖκται γὰρ εἰς ἐμὲ συνάξις, For it hapned that there have come to me Euphronius &c; which reading Christophorson has followed. But the common reading is far better, ἀφῖκται γὰρ εἰς ἐμὲ, that is, I have been given to understand, as Musculus renders it; or, It has been told me. Vales.

[g] Γεώργιον τὸν ἀρειανόν. Understand πολίτην, a Citizen; which word Christophorson perceived not was to be repeated in common. Now, πολίτης does not only signifie a person born in some City, but rather such a one as has his residence in a City, and is enrolled amongst the Citizens, whether he may have been born there, or elsewhere. Vales.

[a Citi-

[a Citizen] of Arethusa, a Presbyter also ([h] whom Alexander preferred to this dignity in the City Alexandria,) are most approved persons in reference to the Faith. [i] It seemed good therefore, to give Your prudence notice of these men, that having [k] proposed them, and some others, whom You shall judge fit for the dignity of the Episcopate, You may determine such things as may be agreeable to the Tradition of the Apostles. For such matters as these having been well prepared and ordered, Your Prudence will be able so to direct this Election according to the Canon of the Church and Apostolick Tradition, as the Rule of Ecclesiastick discipline does require. God keep you, Beloved Brethren!

[h] Athanasius says the same in his Book de Synodis Arimini & Seleuciæ; that this George namely, who was afterwards Bishop of Laodicea, had first been ordained Presbyter by Alexander Bishop of Alexandria; but was afterwards deposed by the same Alexander because of his impiety. In his Apologetick also against Constantius, pag. 728; he writes that the same person was deposed by Alexander, which very thing is plainly confirmed by the Fathers of the Sardican Council in their Synodick Letter. The same Athanasius, in the same Book de Synodis pag. 886, attests that this George resided at Antioch. Further, from the Kings Sheets I have pointed this place thus; ὃν ἐπὶ τῆς τάξεως ταύτης ἀλέξανδρος ἐν ἀλεξανδρείᾳ κατεστήσατο, εἴ τῳ πίστιν δοκιμωτάτους, whom Alexander &c; and so Musculus points the place. Valesius.

[i] This place seems to me to be imperfect, which is in my judgment thus to be made good: καλῶς ἂν εἶχε δηλῶσαι τῇ συνέσει ὑμῶν τούτους, ὑμᾶς δὲ προχειρισαμένους τούτους τε καὶ ἑτέρους, &c; which reading I have followed in my Version. By τούτους, these men, he means the foresaid Euphronius and Georgius. Of whom, Euphronius was afterwards Bishop of Antioch, and immediate successour to Eustathius; as Socrates and Sozomen doe relate, and also Theodorus Mopsuestenus in Nicetas's Thesaurus Orthodox. fidei. But this Georgius was, as I have said, afterwards Bishop of Laodicea. In the Fuketian Copy the reading is τούς τε προχειρισαμένους. Further, 'tis to be noted, that men who were Arians, are here by Constantine commended for persons that were Orthodox; either because as yet they concealed their Heresie, or else in regard the Arians had possest themselves of the Emperour's ear and mind. Valesius.

[k] Προχειρισαμένους. Christophorson perceived nothing here. The term προχειρίζειν in elections imports thus much, to propose or publickly to produce the name of some person, that it may be inquired whether he be worthy of that Office, the debate about which is in agitation. Which very thing Constantine in his Letter to the people of Antioch expresses by the verb ἐκφῆναι. The προχειρισμὸς was followed by an Examination, then the Election, and last of all the Ordination or Consecration. See Socrates's Eccles. Hist. book 1. chap. 9. note (f.) Valesius.

CHAP. LXIII.

In what manner He endeavoured to destroy Heresies.

SUch were the admonitions [which the Emperour gave] to the [Prelates] of the Churches, [advising them to do all things] in order to the glory and commendation of the divine Religion. But after he had made a riddance of all dissentions, and had reduced the Church of God to an agreement and Harmony of doctrine; He past from thence, and was of opinion, that another sort of impious persons were to be suppresst and destroyed, in regard they were the poyson of Mankind. These were a sort of pernicious men, who under the specious disguise of Modesty and Gravity ruined the Cities. Whom Our Saviour somewhere terms false Prophets or ravenous Wolves, in these words: * Beware of false prophets which come to you in sheeps clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves. Ye shall know them by their fruits. By the transmission of a precept therefore to the Presidents of Provinces, He put to flight the whole Tribe of these sort of persons.

* Matt. 7. 15, 16.

But besides this Law, the Emperour composed an enlivening * Exhortation, directed to them by name; wherein he incited those men to hasten their repentance: For [he told them] that the Church of God would be to them a Port of † safety. But, hear in what manner || He discourst even to these persons, in his Letter to them.

* Or, Instruction.
† Or, Salvation.
|| Ὡμίλει; Valesius renders it, he Preaches.

CHAP. LXIV.

Constantine's Constitution against the Hereticks.

VICTOR CONSTANTINUS MAXIMUS AUGUSTUS, To the Hereticks.

ACknowledge now by the benefit of this Law, (O ye Novatianists, Valentinians, Marcionists, Pauliani; and you who are termed Cataphrygæ; in a word, all of you, who by your private Meetings, breed and * compleat Heresies!) in how many Lyes the † vanity of your Opinions is wrapt up, and in what manner your Doctrine is || compounded of certain pernicious poysons: in so much that, by you the healthy are reduced to weakness, and the living to a perpetual death: Ye Enemies of Truth, ye Adversaries of Life, and ye Councellours of destruction! All things amongst you are contrary to Truth; agreeable to filthy impieties; [a] stuft with absurdities and fictions: whereby you compose Lyes, afflict the Innocent, and deny Believers the light. And, sinning continually under a Mask of Divinity, you defile all things! Ye wound the innocent and pure consciences [of men] with blows that are mortal and deadly; and ye ravish even the day it self (I had almost said,) from the eyes of men. But what necessity is there of recounting every particular? Especially, since neither the shortness of the time, nor the urgency of Our Affairs will suffer Us to speak concerning your * Crimes according as they deserve. For, your impieties are so large and immense, so filthy and full of all manner of outragiousness, that a whole day would not be sufficient for a description of them. And besides, 'tis fit we should remove our ears and turn away our eyes from things of this nature, least by a particular declaration of them, the pure and sincere † alacrity of Our Faith should be defiled. What reason is there then that We should any longer tolerate such Mischiefs? Especially since Our long [b] forbearance is the cause, that even those who are sound, become infected with this pestilential distemper as 'twere. Why therefore do we not immediately cut off the roots (as we may so term them) of such a mischief by a publick animadversion?

* Or, Perfect.
† Or, Vanity amongst you is, &c.
|| Contained in, or, beset with.

[a] Ἀτοπίαις καὶ δόγμασι χρῆμα. In the Fuketian Savil. and Turneb. Copies, I found it χαίρουσα, rejoycing in; according as Scaliger, Christophorson and others found it in their Copies. Valesius renders it referta, stuft; on what account I know not.

* Or, Mischiefs.

† Or, Activity.

[b] Παρεμπύμησις. Perhaps it should be παρενδύμησις, negligence and forgetfulness. In the Fuk. Savil. and Turneb. Copies, the reading is ὑπέρθεσις, delay. A little after, from the Fuketian Copy I write διὰ δημοσίας ἐπιστροφείας, by a publick animadversion. Valesius. In Robert Stephens 'tis ἐπιστροφίας. Valesius.

CHAP. LXV.

Concerning the taking away the Meeting-places of hereticks.

*WHerefore, in as much as this perniciousness of your improbity is not any longer to be born with, We declare by this Law, that no one of you shall in future dare to hold Assemblies. And therefore We have given order, that all those your houses, wherein you hold such Assemblies, shall be taken away: and this Care [of Our Majesty] does extend so far, as that the congregations of your superstitious madness shall not meet together, not only in publick, but neither in a private house, nor in any places, whereto the Right or Title is peculiar. Therefore, what ever persons amongst you are studious of the true and pure Religion, (which is a thing far more commendable and better,) let them come over to the Catholick Church, and hold communion with its sanctity; by the assistance whereof they may arrive at the Truth. But, let the Errour of your perverted mindes, I mean the execrable and pernicious dissent of Hereticks and Schismaticks, be wholly separated from the felicity of Our Times. For it becomes Our Blessedness, which by God's assistance We enjoy, that they who lead their lives [buoy'd up] with good hopes, should be reduced from all manner of * Extravagant Errour to the right way; from darkness to the light; from Vanity to the Truth; Lastly, from Death to Salvation. And, to the end that the force and power of this Remedy may be effectual and prevalent, We have given order, that [a] all the Conventicles of your Superstition, as We have said above, I mean the Oratories of all sorts of Hereticks, (if it be fit to term them Oratories,) shall without any contradiction [b] be taken away, and without any delay delivered to the Catholick Church: but, that the rest of the places shall be adjudged to the publick: and, that no Licence shall be left to you [c] of holding Meetings there in future. So that, from this present day, your illegal Congregations shall not dare to meet, either in any publick or private place. [d] Let it be published.*

* Or, Disorderly.

[a] Ὑπὸ πάντα τὰ τῆς δεισιδαιμονίας. The first word must be expunged, as superfluous. In the Fuketian, Savil. and Turnebian Copies, the reading is ὑπὸ πάντα: perhaps it should be, ὑπὸπαν τὸ, &c; that the Conventicles —— shall wholly be taken away. Valesf.

[b] Ἀφαιρεθέντας. Christophorson did ill in rendring it diruta pull'd down. For Constantine does not order the Churches of Hereticks to be pull'd down, but to be taken from them, and given to the Catholick Church. There are the like Constitutions of the Emperours in the Theodosian Code, in the Title de Hæreticis. Further, from this Law of Constantine the Novatianists had before been excepted, as 'tis apparent from the second Law in the same Title. But in this last Sanction of Constantine, they are included, together with the other Hereticks and Schismaticks. Valesf.

[c] Τῷ συναλσεῖν. The reading in the Fuketian Copy is truer, thus, τῷ συνάξειν. For συνάξειν is the proper term to denote this thing. The Latines in one word call it colligere, as may be proved by many instances. Whence they term that Collecta, which in Greek is σύναξις. Optatus (in his Second Book, where he speaks concerning the Bishops of the Donatists in the City Rome,) has this passage. Sed quia quibusdam Afris urbica placuerat commoratio, & hinc a vobis profecti Videbantur, ipsi petierunt, ut aliquis hinc qui illos colligeret mitteretur. And a little after. Non enim Grex aut populus appellandi fuerant pauci, qui intra quadraginta & quod excurrit, basilicas, locum, ubi colligerent non habebant. Valesf.

[d] Πεσθήτω. Christophorson understood not this word; it was usually added to the laws and Constitutions of Princes, and sometimes in their own hand. So in Theodosius's Novell de reddito Jure armorum, it occurs; Et Manu divinâ. Proponatur amantissimo nostri populo, Rom. And at the side, Data 8. Calend. Julias Romæ Valentiniano & Anatolio Coss. See book 2. chap. 42. note (b.) After the word τολμήσει herefore in the Greek, a point is placed in the Kings Copy, which is well done. In the Fuketian Copy, the verb πεσθήτω is wanting. Valesf.

CHAP. LXVI.

That impious and prohibited Books having been found amongst the Hereticks, very many of them returned to the Catholick Church.

IN this manner therefore the * Dens of the Heterodox were by the Imperial Order laid open; and the wild Beasts themselves, that is the Ring-leaders of their impiety, were put to flight. Now, some of those persons who had been deceived by them, being put into a fear by the Emperour's Menaces, crept into the Church with a mind and meaning that was false and counterfeit, and for a time [a] play'd the Hypocrites. And because the [b] Law commanded that a search should be made after the Books of those men; they who made evill and forbidden Arts their business, were apprehended. On which account they practised dissimulation, and did all things, to the end they might purchase themselves safety. But others of them betook themselves to a better hope, with a purpose of mind that was hearty, true, and sincere. Further, the Prelates of the Churches made an accurate † inspection into both these sorts of persons, and such as they found coming over [to the Church] * under a disguise, who were hid under the skins of Sheep, them they drove away a far off. But they who did this with † sincerity, were tryed for some time; and after a sufficient proof, [the Bishops] enrolled them amongst their number who are [c] admitted to the sacred Assemblies. And in this manner they treated those * Hereticks that were infamous and abominable. But such as maintained nothing that was impious in † their Opinions and Doctrines, but by the fault of Schismatical men had been rashly severed from the common society, them they admitted [into the Church] [d] without any delay.

* Ἐσκευάσματα; it properly signifies a company of Souldiers hid in any place, in order to their attacking the Enemy at unawares.

[a] Καλειρωνδώμενοι. In the Kings Copy, this term is thus explained in the margin, καθυποκρινόμενοι, acting the Hypocrites. Valesf.

[b] Therefore besides the above said Letter of Constantine to the Hereticks, there was another Law, which ordered the books of Hereticks to be found out and burnt; or else this Letter produced by Eusebius is not entire. Further, the reading should be ἐπεὶ καὶ διερευνᾶσθαι, And because, &c; and a little after, ἠλίσκουτό τ' ἀπειρημένας, &c; not ἠλίσκουτο τότε, which is the reading in the Fuketian Copy, and must be rejected; though, by what chance I know not, it has crept into our Edition. Valesf.

† Or, Inquisition.

* Or, Feignedly.

† Or, A pure mind.

[c] Τῷ πλήθει εἰσαγομένων. I had rather write ἧς συναγομένων. For, that Bishop is properly said συνάγειν, who holds a religious assembly. The σωαγόμενοι are the Laicks who come together into the Church. Whence σύναξις imports an Ecclesiastick Assemblie. Dionysius Alexandrinus's words in his fifth Epistle to Pope Xystus, are these; ἧς δὲ συναγομένων ἀδελφῶν πρὸς νομιζόμενα ἀφχαῖα, &c. Therefore Scaliger, Christophorson, and Gruterus have mended it ill, thus, συνεισαγομένους. Christophorson has rendred it adscititios, counterfeit; which can no wise be born with. In the Fuk. and Savil. Copies, the reading likewise is σωεισαγομένους. Valesf.

[d] Ἀμελήτως, without care. It must doubtless be ἀμελλήτως, without any delay. For he says, that Schismaticks were without delay received into the Church; but, that Hereticks were admitted after a long penitency. For the Church is always wont to give Schismaticks a more favourable and kinder reception, than Hereticks. Of which matter we have an eminent instance in the Nicene Synod; which, when it had Anathematized the Arians, received the Meletians into Communion, after they had been gently chastized. Now, what the difference is between Hereticks and Schismaticks, Basilius informs us in his first Canonical Epistle to Amphilochius; where he distinguishes these three, αἵρεσιν, χίσμα, ὀργισωαγωγήν. Nevertheless Chrysostome, in his eleventh Homily on the Ephesians, proves Schismaticks to be worse than Hereticks. Valesf.

These

These therefore, returning in troops from some [e] Forreign Region as 'twere, recovered their own Country again, and acknowledged their Mother the Church. From which having strayed, after a long interval of time they made their return to * Her with a gladness and joy. Thus the members of the whole Body were united one with another by one common Band, and grew together into one Frame. And the one and only Catholick Church of God, † fitly cohering with it self, darted forth its Rays of Light; no congregation either of Hereticks or Schismaticks being left remaining in any part of the earth. To the performance of which [f] singular and great Action, Our Emperour (the only person car'd for and respected by God, amongst all those that had ever sway'd the Imperial Sceptre,) entitled Himself.

[e] Ἐξ ἀπανικίας. He has used ἀπανικία improperly, to signifie a Forreign Region. Which Christophorson not perceiving, rendred it very ill, ex colonia, from a Colony. Valesius.

* The Church.

† Or, Having been converted into it self.

[f] Καὶ τὰ τὰ δὲ μόνου. The word μόνου must be blotted out, because it disturbs the sense; unless you take it to signifie singular, or Eximious. Further, Christophorson has translated this place otherwise. For thus he renders it: cujus præclari facinoris causam Imperator Deo acceptam plane retulit, the cause of which famous Action the Emperour plainly ascribed to God as acceptable to him. Nor does Musculus render it otherwise. But I have interpreted these words [τῷ αἰτίαν ἐγεφέλο, or rather, ἐπεγεφέλο] concerning Constantine Himself; that is, The Emperour was the Authour of this glorious action. Johannes Portesius also, the first Translatour of these Books, renders this place in the same manner. For thus his Version runs; Id verò unicum ab orbe condito factum, homini dei tutelâ præclaro, tum acceptum etiam relatum est. Valesius.

THE FOURTH BOOK OF EUSEBIUS PAMPHILUS CONCERNING THE LIFE OF THE BLESSED EMPEROUR CONSTANTINE.

CHAP. I.

In what manner he honoured very many persons with gifts and promotions.

ALthough the Emperour accomplished so many and such signal performances in order to the Edification and Glory of God's Church; and administred all matters so, as that Our Saviour's Doctrine might every where find a glorious * Reception: nevertheless, in the interim he neglected not the † Civill affairs. But even in this respect he never desisted from bestowing various favours, which were successive and continued, on all the Inhabitants of each Province: sometimes demonstrating in publick a paternal care towards all persons; at other times, honouring in private each of His Favourites with different dignities; and bestowing all things upon all persons with a true greatness of mind. Nor did it ever happen, that he mist of his design, who beg'd a Favour of the Emperour: neither was there ever any person who hop't to obtain a Boon from him, that went away frustrated of his expectation. But some got Money; others Estates: some were grac't with the [a] dignity of the Prætorian Præfecture; others with the Senatorian: some were created Consuls; many were designed Presidents. Some were made [b] Comites of the first rank; others, of the second; others, of the third. Innumerable other persons had the * Perfectissimatus bestowed on them, as likewise very many other such like dignities. For, to the end he might honour the more, the Emperour devised various dignities.

* Repute, or, commendation.

† External, or, Temporal.

[a] Ὑπατικῶν ἀξιωμάτων, with Consular dignities. Doubtless it ought to be written ἐπαρχικῶν ἀξιωμάτων, with Præfectorian dignities, or, with the dignity of the Præfectorian Præfecture, from the Copies of Christophorson and Sr Henry Savil: or at least, ὑπερτικῶν; as the reading is in the Fuketian and Turnebian Copies. Ἔπαρχοι or ὕπαρχοι are the Præfecti Prætorio. They are termed ἔπαρχοι, because they excell the other Governours and Judges. And they are stiled ὕπαρχοι, in regard being placed under the immediate power of the Prince, they are above all others. It matters not much therefore, whether you term them ἐπάρχους or ὑπάρχους. But the ordinary reading, ὑπατικῶν, consular, can no wise be born with. For, whereas he speaks afterwards concerning the Consular and Senatorian dignity, it would have been superfluous to make mention of the Consulate here. Nor can it be said, that below are meant the Consulares who governed Provinces. For first, it ought then to be mended there ἀφ' ὑπατικῶν, which term occurs a little before. Secondly, under the term ἡγεμόνες, the Consulares are also comprehended: so that, there can be no necessity of mentioning the Consulares by themselves. Lastly, in regard all the dignities are here reckoned up, 'tis not at all likely, that the Præfecti prætorio were omitted, whose number Constantine increased, as Zosimus attests. Now, at that time the Præfecti Prætorio had only the title of Clarissimi, as Constantine's Letter informs us, which Eusebius has recorded above; See book 3. chap. 31; and what we have noted there. Also, under the Emperour Constantius, the Præfecti Prætorio were only termed Clarissimi, as the Protestation of the People of Alexandria informs us, which Athanasius has recorded at the close of his Epistle ad solitarios. Vales.

[b] Concerning the Comites of the first Rank, as also of the second and third Order, there is frequent mention in Old Inscriptions, and in The Code. Some of these were within the Pallace; others in the Consistory, who were afterwards termed Comites Consistoriani; others were Comites Domestici. In Gruter's Thesaurus, pag.

* That is. had the honour to be stiled perfectissimi, most perfect.

pag. 406, this old Inscription occurs; FL. EUGENIO V. C. EXPRÆFECTO PRÆT. CONSULI ORDINARIO DESIGNATO. MAGISTRO OFFICIORUM OMNIUM. COMITI DOMESTICO ORDINIS PRIMI, &c. Concerning the same Comites Domestici, there is another Old Inscription extant in the House of the Barbarini, worth the setting down here. M. NUMMIO. ALBINO. V. C. QUÆSTORI CANDIDATO, PRÆTORI. URB. COMITI. DOMESTICO. ORDINIS. PRIMI. ET CONSULI. ORDINARIO. ITERUM NUMMIUS. SECUNDUS. EJUS. This Nummius Albinus was Consul the second time and Præfect of the City in the times of Gallienus, as 'tis manifest from the Fasti, and from the Old Book de Præfectis Urbi. Whence it may be concluded, that this dignity of the Comes of the first and second Order or Rank, was not first instituted by Constantine, as Cujacius thought in his Notes on Justinianus's Code; but that it was in use long before Constantine's time. Vales.

CHAP. II.

A Remission of the fourth part of the * Census.

* Or, Tributes.

BUt, with what earnestness he endeavoured, that all mankind in general might lead joyfull and pleasant Lives, may be perceived even from this one instance, which being highly advantageous to the Life of men, and extended to all persons in general, is even at this very present highly celebrated in the mouths of all. Having abated a fourth part of those annual Tributes which were paid for Land, he bestowed it upon the Owners of the Grounds: so that, if you compute the sum of this annual abatement, it will † appear, that every fourth year the [a] Occupiers of the Fruits are free from the payment of Tribute. Which thing being || past into a Law, and confirmed for the time to come, not only to those of the present age, but to their children, and the successours of them, made the Emperour's Beneficence indelible and perpetual.

† Or, Happen.

[a] τὰς ἀπὸ καρπῶν οἰκήτορας, the Occupiers of the fruits. This expression can't be born with.

|| Or, Establish't by a Law.

'Tis my Sentiment that the words are transposed here; and that at this place we should read, τοὺς ἀπ' ἀγρῶν οἰκήτορας, the Occupiers of the Grounds: and above, τοῖς ἀπὸ καρπῶν δεσπόταις, upon the Owners of the fruits. Turnebus at the margin of his Copy, instead of οἰκήτορας, Occupiers, has made it κλήτορας, Possessours. Or at least it must (says he) be written, ἀπὸ χωρῶν οἰκήτορας, the Occupiers of the places or Farms. Vales.

CHAP. III.

The * Peræquation of those Censûs that were too heavy and burthensome.

* Equalling, or, making even.

BUt, whereas some persons found fault with those Surveyes of Land, which had been made by the former Emperours, and complained that their own Grounds were too much oppress't; here also [the Emperour in obedience] to the Laws of justice, dispatcht away [a] Peræquatores, who might free the Complainants from wrong.

[a] Ἐξισωτὰς. These the Latines term Peræquatores; of whom there is mention in the fourteenth Book of the Theodosian Code, in the Title de Censitoribus, Peræquatoribus, & Inspectoribus. Most commonly Senatours were by the Prince elected to that Office; it was the business of these Officers, to make equal the Census in those Provinces which complained that they were oppress't with the Burthen of the Tributes. In Gruter, pag. 361, this Old Inscription occurs: L. ARADIO VAL. PROCULO V. C. PRÆTORI TUTELARI LEGATO PRO PRÆTORE PROV. NUMIDIÆ PERÆQUATORI CENSUS PROV. GALLECIÆ. There is also extant a ninth Oration of Gregory Nazianzene, εἰς ἐξισωτὴν Ἰουλιανὸν, to Julianus the Peræquator. Vales.

CHAP. IV.

That on those who were overthrown in Pecuniary Causes, he himself bestowed money out of his own [Income.]

MOreover, as often as the Emperour had pronounc't Sentence between two who were at Suit; to the end the party that had lost his cause, might not go away sadder [a] than him in favour of whom Sentence had past; out of his own [Revenues] he bestowed on those who had been cast in their Suits, sometimes Farms, and sometimes Money: by which means he managed the matter so, as that the party worsted did no less rejoyce than he who had carried the Cause; in regard [the person overthrown] had been vouchsafed to come into * his presence. For he judged it altogether unfit, that any one who had stood before so great a Prince, should be dismist sad and sorrowfull. By this means therefore, both parties that were at Law returned from Sentence with countenances full of joy and chearfullness: and the Emperour's Greatness of mind was the admiration of all men.

* The Emperour's.

[a] Ἐδωρεῖτο τὸ νενικηκότος. Every one sees that the words are transposed here; which is a fault frequently committed in these Books. At my peril therefore, write thus; ὡς ἂν μὴ τὸ λυπρὸν παρ' αὐτῷ μεῖζον ἢ τὸν ἀπαλλάττοιτο χαίρων τοῦ νενικηκότος, ἐδωρεῖτο, &c; to the end the party that had, &c. In the Fuketian Copy the words τοῦ νενικηκότος, than him in favour of whom Sentence had past, are wanting. But Turnebus and Sr Henry Savil place those words after the verb ἀπαλλάττοιτο, might not go away. The said Sr Henry Savil hath noted at the margin of his Copy, that perhaps it should be χαίρων, and that the comma after the word ἀπαλλάττοιτο should be blotted out. Which when I had read, I was extreamly glad, that my conjecture was confirmed by the judgment of that most Learned person. But, whereas Sr Henry Savil adds there, that Christophorson seems to have read thus, in this I can't assent to him. For Christophorson read χαίρων, and renders it Libenter, willingly. Further, Turnebus does here mend it τὸ λυπρὸν, which pleases me. Vales.

CHAP. V.

The conquest of the Scythæ, who were subdued by the Standard of Our Saviour's [Cross.]

[a] WHat need have I here of making mention by the by as 'twere, how he reduced the Barbarous Nations under the Empire of the Romans? In what manner he first brought under the Yoak, the Nations of the [b] Scythæ and Sarmatæ, who before had never learn't to obey any one; and forc't them even against their wills, to acknowledge the Romans their Lords?

[a] Τί δεῖ μάχει λόγε. I doubt not but It should be written thus, τί δὴ μαχὴ λόγε πάρεργον ποιεῖσθαι. Than which emendation there is nothing more certain. In the Kings Sheets the reading is, τὶ δὲ μάχει. Sr Henery Savil at the margin of his Copy mends it, τὶ δεῖ μετὰ πάρεργα λόγε ποιεῖσθαι. In the Fuketian and Turnebian Copies, the reading of this place is this, τὶ δὲ δεῖ μάχει λόγε τὰ πάρεργα ποιεῖσθαι. Vales.

[b] Instead of the Scythæ, Socrates (book 1. chap. 18,) and Sozomen (book 1. chap. 8,) term them The Goths. Indeed, Greek Writers do usually term them Scythæ, whom the Latines call Goths. So Libanius, Themistius, Eunapius, and many others. Further, the Goths were vanquished by the Roman Army in the Country of the Sarmatæ, on the twelfth of the Calends of May, in the Consulate of Pacatianus and Hilarianus, (as 'tis recorded in Idatius's Fasti,) that is on the year of Christ 332. Vales.

For

For the preceding Emperours had paid [c] Tribute to the Scythæ: and the Romans were Servants to the Barbarians, allowing them a sum of money yearly. [d] But this indignity was insupportable to the Emperour: nor did he judge it a thing befitting a Victorious Prince, to pay what had been paid by the former Emperours. Putting his confidence therefore in his Saviour, he raised the Victorious Trophee against them also, and in a small time subdued them. Such of them as were contumacious and made a resistance, he vanquished by his Arms: but the rest he appeased by prudent Embassies, and from a Lawless and Savage life, reduced them to a way of living that was agreeable to reason and Law ‖ thus the Scythæ at length learn't to obey the Romans.

[c] Socrates says the same at the place before cited. Indeed Jordanes (in his book de Rebus Geticis, speaking concerning the Emperour Philippus) says the Romans paid an annual tribute to the Goths. And Petrus Patricius (in his Excerpta Legationum) attests the same concerning Tullus Menophilus, where he writes concerning the Carpi. Vales.

[d] Οὐκ ἦν δ' ἄν. I read ἂκ ἦν δ' ἀϱ' ἔτῳ, &c; from the Fuketian and Turnebian Copies, and from the Kings Sheets. Vales.

CHAP. VI.

The Subduing of the Sarmatæ, occasioned by the Rebellion of the Servants against their Masters.

BUt God himself * prostrated the Sarmatæ at the feet of Constantine; and subdued those men swelled with a Barbarick insolence, in this manner. For the Scythæ having raised a War against them, the Sarmatæ, that they might make a resistance against their enemies, armed their Slaves. After these Slaves had gained the Victory, they † turned their Arms against their Masters, and drove them all from their own [a] habitations. They found no other Port of safety, save only Constantine. Who, in regard 'twas his usage to preserve men, gave them all a reception within the confines of the Roman Empire. And those that were fit for Service, he enrolled amongst his own Military Companies: But to the rest of them he distributed Grounds to be Tilled, in order to their procuring necessaries for a Livelyhood. In so much that, they acknowledged their calamity to have been succesfull and fortunate to them; in regard, instead of a Barbarick Savageness, they enjoyed a Roman freedom. In this manner God annext ‖ very many Barbarous Nations to his Empire.

* Or, Drove— under.

† Or, Took up.

[a] Τῆς οἰκίας. From the Fuketian Copy it must be made ὀικείας. Further, this Conspiracy of the Sarmatæ against their Masters hapned on the year of Christ 334. In those Fasti which Jacobus Sirmondus terms Idatius's, these words occur; Optato & Paulino. His Coss. Sarmatæ servi universa Gens Dominos suos in Romaniam expulerunt. Jerome agrees also in the Chronicon, who terms those Slaves of the Sarmatæ, Limigantes. And so does Amm. Marcellinus. See the Excerpta de Gestis Constanti. Vales. For a further account of these Limigantes, the Reader may consult Dr Howell's History, second part, pag. 11, and 127, 128.

‖ Or, All sorts of.

CHAP. VII.

The Embassies of several Barbarous Nations, and the Gifts [bestowed on them] by the Emperour.

FOr, from all places Embassies arrived continually [at his Court,] and brought him such presents as were of greatest value amongst themselves. In so much that, even We our selves hapned on time to see * various shapes of Barbarians, standing in order before the [a] Court-Gate of the Imperial Pallace. Whose garb and manner of dress was different and changeable; and the hair both of their head and beard much unlike. Their aspect grim, barbarous, and terrible; and their Bodily Stature of an immense greatness. Some of them had ruddy countenances; the faces of others were whiter than snow. In othersome of them there was a middle temperature of colour. For the Blemmyæ, Indi, and Æthiopes (who [as [b] Homer says,] are divided two ways, and live in the out-skirts of the earth;) were to be seen amongst those forementioned Barbarians. Each of these persons ([c] in such manner as we see it commonly painted in Tables) brought severally to the Emperour such presents as were of greatest value amongst themselves. Some [presented him with] Crowns of Gold; others, with Diadems beset with pretious Stones; others, with yellow-hair'd boyes; others, with Barbarick Garments [d] interwoven with Gold and Flowers; others, with Horses; others, with Bucklers, long Spears, Arrows, and Bowes. By which presents they demonstrated, that they made an offer of their Service and confederacy of Arms to the Emperour, if he pleased. The Emperour received and * kept the presents brought by each of them, and remunerated them with so many and such great Favours, that in an instant of time the persons who had brought these presents were extraordinarily enrich'd. Moreover, he † grac't the eminenter persons amongst them with Roman dignities: in so much that, very many of them forgat to return into their own Country, and † chose to make their Residence here amongst us.

* Eminent, or, conspicuous.

[a] Περὶ τῆς ἀυλῆς. It must be ἀυλείᾳ, as I found it written in the Fuketian Manuscript and in the Kings Sheets. So Græcians termed that gate of an house which they who go in, do first of all meet with: and they accounted that to be the Limit; to pass which was look't upon as a thing indecent in Matrons. Philo's words in his Book de Specialibus Legibus are these; Δηλείας δὲ οἰκείας καὶ ἔνδον μονῆς παρθένοις μὴ ἐξὸν κλισιάδων, τῶν μεσαυλίων ὅσον πεπαιμμένας. Without doubt Philo alludes to these Verses of Menander, which Stobæus records, chap. 163.

Τὰς τῆς γαμετῆς ὄψεις ὑπερβαίνεις γυναῖ
Διὰ τῶν ἀυλῶν· πέρας γὰ ἀυλείᾳ δύσις.
Ἑλλάδι μὲν γυναικὶ νενόμισ' οἰκίας
Τὸ δὲ σπουδάσειν, εἴς τι τῶν ὀδὸν τρέχειν
Ἐπὶ λοιδορημάτων, κυνὸς ἐς' ἔχον ῥοδόν.

† Or, Fell in love with.

These very verses of Menander, Harpocration does tacitly mean, in the word ἀυλείᾳ. Vales.

[b] Homer's words (Odyss. 1. near the beginning) are these;

Αἰθίοπας τοὶ δίχθα δεδαίαται, ἔσχατοι ἀνδρῶν,
Οἱ μὲν δυσομένου Ὑπερίονος, οἱ δ' ἀνιόντος:

Which Mr Hobbs has thus Englished;

The Blackmoors are the utmost of mankind,
As far as East and West asunder stand,
So far the Blackmoors Borders are disjoyn'd.

[c] Ὥσπερ ἐν πίναξι γεγραμμένοι. These words seem to be superfluous; unless Eusebius had a mind to express the matter it self more clearly in this manner, in favour to those who had not been present and seen it. For the pictures of the Emperours were usually so drawn, as that they might represent the Embassadours of the Barbarians making them presents, or the Provinces paying them Gold, as may be seen in the Notitia of the Roman Empire. Vales.

[d] He means the Barbarick manner of weaving; of which sort is that in Virgil, in the first Book of his Æneid.

Et circumtextum croceo Velamen acantho. Vales.

[e] Amm. Marcellinus says the same in his 21 Book, pag. 190, and 195 of our Edition. Vales.

CHAP.

CHAP. VIII.

That He wrote to the Persian Emperour (who had sent an Embassie to him,) in favour of the Christians there.

MOreover, in regard the King of the Persians was desirous of being made known to Constantine by an [a] Embassie, and had likewise sent him Presents which were the signes of Peace and Amity; [b] making it his business to enter into a League with him: here also the Emperour [shewed] a transcendent greatness of mind, and by the magnificence of his Presents far out-did him who had first honoured him. And being informed, that the Churches of God were numerous amongst the Persians, and that infinite numbers of people were gathered together within the Folds of Christ; he was highly pleased at the news hereof, as being the common Patron and Defender of all men whereever they lived; and even to those Regions also he extended his providence [which Laboured] for the good of all men.

[a] The only person that I know of, who speaks concerning this Embassie of Sapor to Constantine, is Libanius, in his Oration entitled βασιλικὸς, pag. 119. where he writes, that Sapor King of the Persians, when he had resolved upon entring into a War with the Romans, and in order to that affair wanted Iron, took such measures as were fraudulent and crafty, and dispatcht away Embassadours to Constantine, who might adore him as his Lord, and might request of him a vast quantity of Iron; under a pretence indeed, that with his Arms he might revenge himself on some Barbarians that were his neighbours: but in reality, that he might make use of that Iron against the Romans. Vales.

[b] Ἔπεμψε δὲ τὰς συνθήκας κἀπὶ τούτῳ βασιλεύς, &c. The other Translatours render these words so, as if they were all spoken concerning Constantine, supposing the import of them to be this, that Constantine entred into a League with the Persian King. But Valesius (whom we have followed) takes the former part of this clause as meant concerning the Persian King; and therefore has plac't a semicolon after his rendition of these words, ἔπεμψε δὲ τὰς συνθήκας.

CHAP. IX.

Constantinus Augustus's Letter to Sapor King of the Persians, wherein he makes a most pious Confession of God and Christ.

A Copy [of the Letter] to the King of the Persians.

BY keeping the Divine Faith, I am a partaker of the Light of Truth: being lead by the guidance of the light of Truth, I * arrive at the knowledge of the Divine Faith. By this means therefore, as 'tis confirmed by the things themselves, I acknowledge the most Holy Religion: this very worship I declare to be the Teacher of my knowledge of the † Most Holy God. Having the power of this God for mine assistance, I have begun from the utmost Bounds of the Ocean, and have raised the whole World [a] to a firm hope of safety. In so much that, all the Provinces (which being enslaved under so many Tyrants, and involved in daily Calamities, [b] were in a manner totally ruined;) [c] having at length gotten a * Restorer of the Republick, are raised to life again by some sovereign medicine as 'twere. This God I assert: whose Standard my Forces which are dedicated to God, do carry on their shoulders, and are directed to what place soever the Rule of Equity invites them; and on these very accounts I immediately obtain most Glorious Victories as my Reward. This God I profess my Self to honour with an immortal memory. Him I contemplate with a pure and sincere mind, whose Seat is in the highest [Heavens.]

* Or, Acknowledge the Divine Faith.

† Ἁγιοτάτου; so the reading is in Theodoret, book 1. chap. 25. where a more perfect Copy of this Letter occurs, and therefore we have taken our Version of it from thence.

[a] Βεβαίοις σωτηρίοις ἐλπίσι. It must doubtless be σωτηρίας, of safety: although in Theodoret, book 1. chap. 25, Edit. Stephen. the word σωτηρίας is wanting. But Epiphanius Scholasticus acknowledges that word, as his Version informs us in the 3d book of the Tripertite History. Vales.

* Or, Avenger.

[b] Ἐξίτηλα ἐγεγόνει. 'Tis evident that this place is imperfect: In Moræus's Copy I found it supplied in the same manner as 'tis in the Geneva Edition; namely thus, τῶν τὰ πλὴν ἐπὶ τὸ κρεῖττον δι' ἐμοῦ βελτίωσιν δέξασθαι. But whoever mended this place thus, was certainly an ill and unskilfull conjecturer. With how much more of ease and safety might this imperfection have been supplied from Theodoret, in which Writer this Letter of Constantine to Sapor occurs much perfecter, and more correct. Nevertheless, the Fuketian, and Sr Henry Savil's Copy make up this defect in the same manner with the Geneva-Edition. Nor ought it to trouble us, because this expression is barbarous. For this Letter of Constantine had at first been written in Latine by him: then it was done into Greek by some unskilfull Translatour. The same thing has hapned to Constantine's other Letters and Orations. Vales.

[c] All these words, from, Having at length, to, This God I profess, are wanting in this Copy of Constantine's Letter to Sapor. They occur in Theodoret; from the Greek Text of which Authour we have inserted them into our English Version.

CHAP. X.

That [He speaks] against Idols, and concerning the Glorification of God.

HIm I invoke upon my bended knees; and I have an aversion for all manner of abominable Blood, and unpleasant and detestable Odours; and lastly I do avoid all sorts of [a] terrene Fire: of all which the impious and execrable Errour [of superstition] has made use, and has [b] thrust down many of the Heathens, yea almost whole Na-

[a] Γεώδη λαμπάδα. Christophorson renders it Sacrificiorum flammam, the flame of sacrifices; Camerarius, incantationum igniculos, the fires of inchantments; which is a truer Version. For, certain kinds of fires [were made use of] in the Mysteries of the Pagans, and a sort of light shined after darkness. Which thing the Priests of Dæmons performed by magick Art, and I know not what impostures, to the end they might gain an Authority and Reverence to their sacred Rites. Apuleius's words in his 11th Book are these; Accessi confinium Mortis: & calcato, &c; I approach't the confines of death; and having trod the path of Proserpine, I went back, conveyed through all the Elements. At midnight I saw the Sun glistering with bright Light, &c. Concerning this Rite there is an elegant passage of Themistius, in Stobæus, chap. 274; which deserves to be set down here: τὸ δὲ παθεῖν παθὼν οἷον οἱ τελεταῖς μεγάλαις καθοσιαζόμενοι. Διὸ καὶ ῥῆμα τῷ ῥήματι καὶ ἔργον τῷ ἔργῳ τὰ τελευτᾶν καὶ τελεῖσθαι παρσημοῦνται. Πλάναι τε πρῶται καὶ θεσπέσιαι, καὶ κοπώδεις καὶ διὰ σκότους τινὸς ὑποπλοι πορεῖαι καὶ ἀτέλεστοι· ἔπειτα πρὸ τοῦ τέλους αὐτοῦ τὰ δεινὰ πάντα· φρίκη καὶ τρόμος καὶ ἱδρὼς καὶ δάμβος· ἐκ δὲ τούτου φῶς τι θαυμάσιον ἀπαντήσεται, ἢ τόποι καθαροὶ καὶ λειμῶνες ἐδέξαντο, φωναὶ καὶ χορεῖαι καὶ σεμνότητες ἁγισμάτων ἱερῶν καὶ φαντασμάτων ἁγίων ἔχοντες· ἐν αἷς ὁ παντελὴς ἤδη καὶ μεμυημένος ἐλεύθερος γέγονε, καὶ ἄφετος περιών, ἐστεφανωμένος ὀργιάζει, &c. This passage of Themistius is taken out of his Book concerning the Immortality of the Soul; wherein Themistius asserted that the soul was immortal, as well by several other arguments, as by this, that Gracians do term death τελευτὰν, as if it were τελετὰν, that is, a Mystery. And, as these two terms are exceeding like one to the other, so the things themselves, signified by these terms, have a wonderfull similitude. For, in the Mysteries there are first unconstant and restless wandrings, and troublesome circuits, and fearfull passages thorow dark places, and most tedious journeys accompanied with weariness. Then, before an arrival at the end, all things are terrible; Horrour, trembling, sweat, and amazement. But at last, a certain admirable Light occurs, and pleasant places and Meadows, wherein sacred voices are heard, and holy apparitions seen, &c. To the same Rite belong these words of Origen, in his 4th Book against Celsus; ἐξουσιεῖ ἡμᾶς τῆς ἐν ταῖς βαπτισταῖς τελεταῖς τὰ φάσματα καὶ τὰ δείματα περιεσπάσθαι. Vales.

[b] Ὅλα γὰρ κατέρρηξε. In the Fuketian Copy I found it written, κατέρρεξε, which pleases me better. In the same Copy the reading is πολλὰ ἔθνη ἐθνῶν, many of the Nations. Vales.

tions,

tions, to the loweſt * Hell. For, the ſupream God can in no wiſe endure, that thoſe things which by His providence over men, and out of his own benignity [towards them] he has produced for common uſe, ſhould be † perverted to any one's Luſt. But, He requires of men a pure mind only, and an immaculate ſoul; * wherewith, as in a Ballance, he weighs the Actions of Virtue and Piety. For he is pleaſed with the works of Modeſty and Lenity; loves the meek, hates the Turbulent; loves Faith, puniſhes infidelity: deſtroyes all power joyned with arrogancy, puniſhes the contempt of the proud. He utterly ruines thoſe who are puft up with inſolency, but diſtributes agreeable Rewards amongſt them that are humble and patient of injuries. † Hence 'tis, that he puts an high Value upon that Empire which is juſt; confirms it by his own aſſiſtances, and alwayes keeps Imperial Prudence in a Calm of Peace.

* Or, Parts.

† Or, Drawn.

* Or, Wherein.

† Or, And in this manner.

CHAP. XI.

Againſt Tyrants and Perſecutors; and concerning Valerian who was taken Priſoner.

NOr do I ſeem to my ſelf to be miſtaken (My Brother!) by my profeſſing this one God to be the Author and Parent of all things. Whom many of thoſe who have been poſſeſt of the Empire here, induced thereto by mad Errours, have attempted to deny. But, all theſe [Emperours] have been deſtroyed by ſuch a dreadfull and avenging end, that ſince their times, all Mankind [a] doth uſually wiſh their Calamities may fall as a Curſe and puniſhment on thoſe, who ſhall ſtudy to imitate them. One of which perſons I judge him to have been, (Him [I mean] whom divine vengeance, like ſome thunder, drove out of our Regions, and conveyed into your Country;) [b] who by his own diſgrace and ignominie erected that Trophie ſo * much boaſted of amongſt you.

* Or, Famous.

[a] Τοῖς παρὰ τούτοις. The reading of this place is far otherwiſe in Theodoret, namely in this manner; ἐπαρᾶσθαι τοῖς τὰ ὅμοια ζηλῶσι τῶνδε. Incomparably well, in my judgment. Nor had Conſtantine written otherwiſe. All the preceding Emperours, ſays he, who perſecuted the Faith of Chriſt, have been cruſh't by ſuch a lamentable end, that now all mankind are wont to imprecate or wiſh for the Calamities of thoſe Princes as the ſum totall of puniſhment on them, who ſhall ſtudy to imitate them. What can be plainer and more elegant than this meaning of the words? Παράδειγμα therefore does in this place ſignifie puniſhment, in which ſenſe that term is frequently uſed amongſt Gracians, as Agellius has remarked. Further, ἐπαράσθαι τῶνδε τὰς συμφορὰς is an elegant phraſe to ſignifie that which the Latines term imprecari, to wiſh for as a Curſe. So εὐχὴν τῶνδε is an uſual expreſſion with Gracians, as I have noted above. Epiphanius Scholaſticus tranſlates this paſſage thus; Sed illos omnes finis comprehendit exitioſus, ita ut omne genus hominum poſt eos exurgens, clades illorum pro maledictionis exemplo proponere videatur; But ſo diſtructive an end has incloſed them all, that all mankind who have lived ſince them, ſeem to propoſe their Ruine as the pattern of a Curſe. Valeſ.

[b] Τῆς ὑπ' αὐτοῦ ἀισχύνης. In the Hiſtory of Theodoret the reading is truer, thus, τῆς ἐπ' αὐτῷ αἰσχύνης πολυθρύλλητον τὸ παρ' ὑμῖν τρόπαιον ἀποφήναντα, who by his own, &c. He means Valerian, who having been taken priſoner by the Perſians, ended his days amongſt them in a diſhonourable ſlaverie, and by his own private diſgrace ennobled the Triumph of the Perſians. That is, by his own ignominie he made the Victory of the Perſians over the Romans moſt ſignal and famous. This is the meaning of this place, which was not hit, either by Epiphanius, or any of the other Tranſlatours. In the Fuketian and Turnebian Copies it is ἀποφήναντα, which is no ill reading. Valeſ.

CHAP. XII.

That He ſaw the Fall of the Perſecutors, and does now rejoyce becauſe of the Peace of the Chriſtians.

INdeed, this thing has ſucceeded well, namely, that in Our age alſo the puniſhment of ſuch perſons hath moſt evidently been demonſtrated. For even I my ſelf have been a ſpectator [of their diſaſtrous End,] who lately diſquieted the people dedicated to God, by their moſt impious Edicts. Therefore, I give God great thanks, becauſe by his ſignall Providence, all mankind who are obſervant of the divine Law, having Peace and Repoſe reſtored to them, are exceeding joyfull and glad. From whence I do perſwade my ſelf, that all affairs are in an excellent and moſt ſafe poſture, in regard God vouchſafes to gather all perſons to himſelf, by their pure and approved Religion, and by their unanimous Sentiment in reference to the Deity.

CHAP. XIII.

An Exhortation, that he ſhould love the Chriſtians, who live in his * Country.

* That is, in Perſia.

HOw great a pleaſure and delight was it to Me (think you) when I heard, (what is my moſt earneſt deſire,) that even the richeſt and beſt places of Perſia were † plentifully adorned with a [a] multitude of theſe men, I mean Chriſtians? for my whole diſcourſe at preſent is concerning them. I wiſh therefore, both that your affairs may continue in a moſt flouriſhing poſture, and in like manner that their affairs may be ſo too; that is, [b] the affairs of both of you equally. For, by this means you will have God the ſupream Lord and Father, mercifull and propitious towards you. Theſe perſons therefore, becauſe you are ſo great [a Prince,] I commit to Your Care: theſe very perſons, in regard You are eminent for piety, I deliver into your hands. Love theſe men in a manner befitting Your own benignity and good nature. For, by this Your Faith, You will do an immenſe kindneſs both to Your Self and Us.

† Or, Far and wide.

[a] Τάττω τῷ καταλόγῳ. The reading in Theodoret is truer, τούτῳ τῷ καταλόγῳ. For theſe words are referred to the verb κεκόσμηται. Preſently, write ὑπὲρ ἀμφοτέρων, from Theodoret and Nicephorus. Valeſ.

[b] Ὅπῃ σοὶ καὶ ἐκείνῳ. In Theodoret and Nicephorus the reading is ὃ δεῖ σοι, καὶ ἐκείνοις. In Syrmondus's Edition 'tis ὅπῃ δεῖ, &c. Which words Epiphanius Scholaſticus renders into Latine thus; Tu ergo optimè gubernaveris, ſi fueris ſicut illi, & habueris commune quod illi. Joachimus Camerarius who rendred Theodoret's Hiſtory into Latine, tranſlates it in this manner: Optimè igitur tecum, ſimiliterque cum illis optimè agitur, quia communiter cum utriſque. And Langus's Verſion is in a manner the ſame. But this meaning does not ſatisfie me. Formerly I thought it was to be written thus, ὅπῃ σὺ κἀκείνοις, κἀκείνοι σοι, that as you to them, ſo they to you. Which reading I had followed in my Verſion. But having now examined the matter more attentively, I am of opinion that the reading of Theodoret and Nicephorus is to be retained, and thus I render this whole place. Opto igitur, ut & tuæ res quàm florentiſſimæ, & illorum perinde ſint florentiſſimæ; hoc eſt utriuſque veſtrûm ex æquo: I wiſh therefore, &c. Thus the ſenſe is moſt plain, and the following words will agree. Only it muſt be made ὑπάρχει in the optative mood. 'Tis certain Muſculus read ὑπάρχοι: For thus he renders it: Cedat igitur id tibi optimè & illis ſimiliter: & tibi inquam & illis. In the Fuketian Copy, the reading is ὅπῃ σοὶ, without that word κἀκείνῳ. Valeſ. Valeſius (in his notes on Theodoret's Hiſtory, book 1. chap. 25,) tells us, that in Leo Allatius's Copy the reading of this place is, ὅπῃ σοὶ κἀκείνοι, For even they are yours: which he concludes to be the trueſt reading of all.

CHAP.

CHAP. XIV.

How, by the earneſtneſs of Conſtantine's Prayers, Peace was beſtowed on the Chriſtians.

ALL Nations in all parts of the world being (like ſome Ship,) in this manner ſteered and directed by one Commander, and willingly embracing the [a] Religion and Government of this Servant of God; and there being no perſon who might give any further diſturbance to the Roman Empire; all men in future lead peaceable and undiſturbed lives. But, becauſe the Emperour judg'd the Prayers of pious perſons to be highly uſefull and advantagious in order to the ſafety and preſervation of the State, 'twas his Sentiment, that theſe were neceſſarily to be procured. Therefore, both he himſelf humbly implored Gods aſſiſtance, [b] and alſo commanded the Prelates of Churches to put up their prayers to God for him.

[a] Τὴν πολιτείαν. He means the Chriſtian Religion, as I ſuppoſe; which almoſt all Nations did then embrace; having rejected the errour of their own Superſtition. Valeſ.

[b] Τοῖς ὑπὲρ ἐκκλησίων θεσπίσεσι. Make it τοῖς τε ὑπὲρ, &c. unleſs you had rather read ἐπεκελεύσατο, as 'tis in the Fuketian, Savil. and Turneb. Copies. Valeſ.

CHAP. XV.

That both on his money, and in his Pictures, he ordered himſelf to be ſtamp't and drawn in a praying poſture.

But, how tranſcendent a livelineſs of [a] divine Faith was fixt in his ſoul, may eaſily be conjectured from this very one thing; that on his Golden money he ordered his own Image to be ſtamp't in ſuch a manner, as that he might ſeem to look up to God with his Hands * expanded, in the poſture of one praying. And this ſort of money was current over the whole Roman World. But in the Imperial Palaces which were [b] in ſome Cities, his Pictures were plac't on high at the very entrance of the Porch, wherein he was drawn ſtanding upright; looking up to heaven; [c] but his hands were expanded, in the faſhion of one praying.

* Stretch't out.

[a] Πίστεως ἐνθέου. Anaſtaſius Bibliothecarius in his Verſion of the ſeventh Synod, wherever the word ἔνθεος occurs in the Greek, renders it deificum, which term imports any thing extraordinarily ſent, or made by God himſelf. So the Latines termed the Books of the ſacred Scriptures, Deificos Libros, as it occurs in the Geſta Purgationis Cæciliani. Valeſ.

[b] Κατὰ τινας πύλας, near certain gates. In the Fuketian and Turnebian Copies, and in the Kings Sheets, the reading is κατὰ τινας πόλεις, in ſome Cities; which is far the truer reading, as I judge. For Euſebius ſays, that not in all, but in the Palaces of ſome Cities, Conſtantine's Picture was thus drawn. Valeſ.

[c] Τῷ χείρε δὲ ἐκτεταμένῳ. Whoever was the Tranſlatour of this Book, he has rendred this place with little of attention, thus; Et precantis formâ manus ſurſum tollens, and liſting up his hands in the form of one praying; whereas he ought to have rendred it, manibus expanſis, ut precantes ſolent, with expanded hands as perſons praying are wont to do. For the Chriſtians were wont, when at prayers, to ſtretch forth their hands, that by this means they might repreſent the likeneſs of a Croſs. Indeed, the Chriſtians lifted up their hands, whilſt they were praying. But this was not peculiar to the Chriſtians, in regard the Heathens did the ſame; as Virgil atteſts in theſe words, —Et geminas tollens ad ſidera palmas.

But, that was peculiar to the Chriſtians, to expand their hands in the form of a Croſs. Tertullian's words, in his Book de Oratione Chap. 11, are theſe: Nos verò non attollimus tantum, Sed etiam expandimus, & dominicâ paſſione modulamur; We do not only liſt up [our hands,] but do ſpread them alſo, and we put our ſelves into a form agreeable to Our Lord's paſſion. He ſays the ſame in his Apologetick, chap. 30. Valeſ.

CHAP. XVI.

That He iſſued forth a Law, forbidding his own * Statues to be placed in Idol-Temples.

* Or, Images.

IN this manner therefore he repreſented himſelf praying, even in his Pictures drawn in Colours. But by a [a] Law he forbad, that his own Statues ſhould be dedicated in Idol-Temples: leaſt they ſhould be [b] pollured, even as far as the † outward Form only, with the errour of prohibited Superſtition.

† Or, Adumbration.

[a] But Socrates (book 1. chap. 18;) relates the contrary, in theſe words; καὶ πρῶτα μὲν τὰ μονομάχια. εἰκόνας δὲ τὰς ἰδίας ἐν τοῖς ναοῖς ἀνεπέθηκε; And firſt, he aboliſhed the Combats of the Gladiatours; then, he placed his own Statues in the Temples. But any one might with good reaſon conjecture, that this place of Socrates is corrupted. For, Socrates does there reckon up all things, which were invented by Conſtantine in order to the abolition of the Superſtition of the Heathens. Amongſt which he ſays, that Conſtantine placed his own Pictures and Statues in the Temples of the Gods. But by doing of that, the ſuperſtition of the Heathens was not extinguiſhed, but rather increaſed, or changed. For the Heathens would adore the Emperour in place of a God. Wherefore that paſſage of Socrates muſt be mended from Euſebius, in this manner; εἰκόνας δὲ τὰς ἰδίας ἐν τοῖς ναοῖς ἀπεῖργε ἀνατιθέναι, But he forbad, that his own Statues ſhould be dedicated in the Temples. Valeſ.

[b] Μολύνεσθαι ἢ γεφυρᾶν. The two laſt words muſt in my judgment be expunged; in regard they diſturb the ſenſe. For if you blot out them, the ſenſe is plain. Valeſ.

CHAP. XVII.

His praying in the Palace, and his reading of the Divine Scriptures.

But whoſoever has a mind to give attention, will perceive far nobler [inſtances of his piety] than theſe; how he conſtituted [a] a Church of God as 'twere, within the Imperial Palace; and with diligence and chearfulneſs lead the way himſelf, to thoſe who aſſembled within that Church. Moreover, he took the Bible into his hands, and with an attentive mind meditated upon thoſe divinely-inſpired Oracles. After which he recited the * uſual prayers, together with [b] the whole aſſemblie of his Courtiers.

* Preſcribed, or, ſolemn.

[a] Ἐκκλησίας Θεοῦ τόπον. Sozomen (book 1. chap. 8.) has theſe words: καὶ ἐν τοῖς βασιλείοις εὐκτήριον οἶκον κατεσκεύασε, and he erected an Oratory within the Imperial Palace. 'Tis plain that Sozomen (as he uſually does,) borrowed this out of our Euſebius. But Euſebius does not ſay, that Conſtantine built a Church in the Palace. He ſays only this, that he conſtituted a kind of a Church in the Palace. See Euſebius's Panegyrick on Conſtantine's Tricennalia, chap. 9; where he does plainly confirm our Opinion. Valeſ.

[b] Τοῖς τὸν βασίλειον οἶκον πληροῦσιν, with thoſe that filled the Imperial Palace, or, the Church. Βασίλειος οἶκος is an ambiguous expreſſion, which ſignifies a Church, and a Palace. And Euſebius ſeems deſignedly to have play'd with the ambiguity of this phraſe, becauſe Conſtantine's Palace was like a Church. And thoſe whom at this place he calls τοὺς τὸ βασίλειον οἶκον πληροῦντας, he has termed above in this chapter, τοὺς ἔνδον ἐκκλησιάζομένους. Valeſ.

CHAP. XVIII.

That by a Law He commanded Sunday and Friday to be honoured.

But He ordained, that a day ſhould be eſteemed of, as convenient and fit for prayers; that day namely, which really is the Chief and Firſt of the other days, and which is truly the Lord's, and the Salutary day. Moreover, he appointed pointed Deacons and Ministers consecrated to God, who were grac't with integrity of Life and all other virtues, to be the [a] Keepers of His whole house. Lastly, the Protectors and trusty Guards, furnished with the arms of good affection and faith, [b] acknowledged the Emperour himself as their Instructer in the practise of piety; and they themselves in the same manner honoured the Salutary and the Lord's day, whereon they poured forth [to God] prayers that were gratefull to the Emperour. And this Blessed [Emperour] incited all other men to practise the same thing; in regard this was his chiefest desire, that by degrees he might make all persons worshippers of God. And for this reason, he issued out a Precept to all those who lived under the Roman Empire, that they should keep Holy-day on those days which had their denomination from our Saviour; as likewise, that they should honour [c] the day before the Sabbath: in memory (as I think) of those things said to have been performed on those days by the common Saviour. Further, whereas he instructed his whole Army diligently to honour the Salutary day, which happens to derive its name from the light and from the Sun; to those who had embraced the divinely-inspired Faith, he allowed time and leisure for a free exercise of themselves according to the usage and order of God's Church, to the end they might without any impediment be present at the performance of the prayers.

[a] Φύλακες τῆς παγκλ ὄικε. The Translatour followed the opinion of Sozomen, and supposed a Church to have been meant here; with whom I don't agree. For Eusebius himself in his Panegyrick, chap. 9, where this passage occurs word for word, says nothing concerning a Church. The meaning therefore of this place is, that Constantine committed the Care and Custody of his whole Palace to the Ministers and Servants of God, and to the Prelates: so that, the Prelates were certain Controllers as 'twere of his house, or such Officers as the Romans termed Cura Palatii. Valesius.

[b] Διδάσκαλον ἐυσεβῶν ἐδιδάσκοντο. It must I think, be written ἐπυγεφρουτο, acknowledged: and so 'tis in the Panegyrick at the place now cited. The Printed-reading is not to be born with. Valesius.

[c] Καὶ πὰς τὴ σαββάτυ ημᾶν. Doubtless it must be written, πὰν πρὸ τῆ σαββάτυ, the day before the Sabbath. And thus, as 'tis evident, he read, who composed the Contents of these Chapters. Moreover, Sozomen (book 1, chap. 8,) confirms this very thing in these words; πὰν δὲ κυριακὴν καλυμένην ἡμέραν, &c; But, he made a Law that on that day called Sunday, (which day the Jews term the first of the Sabbath, but the Gentiles give it the name of Sunday;) and on that day before the Sabbath, all persons should cease from doing business in the Courts of Judicature, and abstain from all other employments, and should worship God with Prayers and Supplications. In these words of Sozomen, something of difficulty occurs, as to what respects Fryday. For I can scarce perswade my self, that Constantine should have commanded, that on that day people should abstain from doing business in the Courts of Judicature. 'Tis certain, Eusebius affirms no such thing concerning Fryday, but concerning Sunday only. There is a Law of Constantine's extant in the Theodosian Code, Tit. de Feriis, in which Law Sunday only is excepted. Therefore Sozomen added this of his own. Who seeing this observed in his own Times at Constantinople, (for he was an Advocate in that City, together with one Aquilinus, as he himself relates in his second book chap. 3.) believed Constantine to have been the Authour of this thing. Valesius.

CHAP. XIX.

How He ordered the * Ethnick-Souldiers to pray on Sundays.

* Or, Heathens.

But to them who as yet had not embraced the Doctrine of the divine Faith, He issued out a Precept in a Second Law, that [a] on Sundays they should go out into a [b] pure field in the Suburbs; where, after a Signal given, they should all together power forth a prayer to God, which they had * learnt before. For, [c] that they ought not to place their confidence in their Spears, nor in their Armour, nor in their strength of Body: but were to acknowledge the supream God, the giver of every good thing, and of Victory it self; and, that to him the solemn prayers were to be performed; lifting up their hands on high towards Heaven; but raising the eyes of their mind higher, as far as the celestial King himself: and that in their prayers they ought to call upon Him as the giver of Victory, the Saviour, the Preserver, and the Assistant. Further, he himself gave all His Souldiers a form of prayer, ordering all of them to recite these words in the Latine tongue.

[a] Τὰς κυριακὰς ἡμέρας. It must be written πὰς κυριακὰς, &c; or at least χτ πὰς κυριακὰς, &c. Valesius.

[b] He terms that a pure field, wherein there were no Altars, no Sepulchres. Valesius.

* Or, Meditated on.

[c] Μὴ τε δεῖν χερῶς, that they ought not to use their Spears. In Eusebius's Panegyrick, chap. 9, where this passage occurs in the same words; 'tis truer written χερῶν, that they ought not to place, &c: which the translatour perceived not. Valesius.

CHAP. XX.

The Form of Prayer which Constantine gave to His Souldiers.

THee we acknowledge [to be] the only God: Thee we declare [to be] King: Thee we invoke as Our Assistant. 'Tis Thy Gift, that we have gotten Victories: By Thee we have vanquished Our Enemies: To Thee we pay our thanks for past * Blessings: and from Thee expect [more] in future. We are all Thy humble Suppliants: Keep Our Emperour Constantine (together with His most pious Children,) in safety amongst us, and continue Him a Victor during the longest space of time, we humbly beseech Thee. These things He ordered his Military Companies to do on Sundays, and taught them to utter these expressions in their prayers to God.

* Goods.

CHAP. XXI.

[He orders] the Representation of Our Saviour's Cross [to be drawn] upon the Arms of his Souldiers.

MOreover, he caused the Symbol of the Salutary Trophie to be expresst [a] upon the very Arms [of His Souldiers: and [commanded,] that before his [b] Armed Forces, none

[a] Sozomen says the same, book 1. chap. 8, &c. Further, that he might accustome His Souldiers to worship God in the same manner with himself, he markt their Arms with the Symbol of the Cross. Which words of Sozomen, as any one may see, are taken out of Eusebius. Further, by the term ὅπλων Arms, I understand the Bucklers or Shields, whereon Constantine ordered the Salutary sign of the Cross to be painted. In the Notitia of the Roman Empire, such kind of Shields as these are to be seen, whereon the sign of the Cross is divers ways expresst. Moreover, Prudentius (in his Book against Symmachus) attests the same in these verses:

Christus purpureum Stellanti pictus in auro
Signabat Labarum: Clypeorum insignia Christus Pinxerat. —— Valesius.

[b] Ἐνόπλῳ σταυρῷ, before the Armed Cross. I reade ἐνόπλῳ σταυτῷ, before his Armed Forces; as the Translatour seems to have read. The occasion of the mistake seems to have been given by the contracted Form of writing. For whereas the Librarius [Book-writer] had written σῷ, some unskilfull Transcriber thought that the meaning of that abbreviature was σταυρῷ, Cross. Valesius.

of

[t] Χρυσῶν μὴ ἀγαλμάτων. Before these words in the Greek, the Fuk. and Turneb. Copies add two words in this manner, τὰ πρὸ χρυσῶν, &c. And in the following line, after the word τὸ μυστήριον, the same Copies and S[r] Hen. Savil's insert the verb ἠγείρετο. But the common reading, which we have followed, is far better. Valef.

of the [t] Golden Images ſhould be carried in pomp, (as the uſage had heretofore been;) but the Salutary Trophie only.

CHAP. XXII.

*His Fervency and earneſtneſs in praying, and his Religious obſervation of the Feſtival of Eaſter. * Or, Honour.

[1] Ὅπου δὴ προσευχῆς. I have, as I think, very happily mended the Title of this chapter, in this manner, σπουδῆ προσευχῆς, his fervency and earneſtneſs in praying. For in this chapter Euſebius treats concerning that fervency in praying wherewith Conſtantine was inflamed. The cauſe of the miſtake aroſe from the uſage of the Antiquarii [perſons that wrote Books fair;] who in their writing out the Titles of chapters, were wont to omit the firſt letter, that afterwards at their leiſure they might paint it with Vermilion. In the Kings Sheets the firſt letter of the Title is always left out. But in the Fuk. Copy 'tis ſometimes added, ſometimes omitted. For inſtance the Title of this chapter, both in the Fuketian Copy and in the Kings ſheets, is thus worded, πῶς δεῖ προσευχῆς, the firſt letter being omitted; which the Fuketian Manuſcript, in the body of the Book, does make good in this manner, ὅπως δεῖ, &c; very ill, and without any ſenſe, as it is apparent. Valeſ.

* Or, Myſteries.

But He himſelf, in regard he was a partaker of the ſacred * Rites, every day at ſtated hours ſhut himſelf up within the inmoſt Rooms of his Imperial Palace, where he converſt alone with his only God; and falling upon his knees, made his requeſt in humble ſupplications, that he might obtain thoſe things which he ſtood in need of. But on the days of the Salutary Feſtival, he raiſed the vigour of his Religious exerciſes and meditations, and with his utmoſt ſtrength of body and mind [b] performed the Office of a Prelate or Pontif. [c] And with a chearfullneſs and diligence he himſelf lead on all perſons to the celebration of the Feaſt. But he turned the ſacred Vigil into the brightneſs of day, [d] pillars of wax which were of a vaſt height being lighted up all over the City, by thoſe perſons to whom this affair was given in charge.

[b] Θείας ἱερουργείας ἐτέλειτο. Chriſtophorſon renders it, divinos ſacrorum Ritus obibat, He performed the divine Rites of things ſacred. Muſculus tranſlates it in this manner; Sacras cerimonias expediebat, he diſpatcht the ſacred Ceremonies. But neither of theſe two perſons perceived that this place was corrupted. I reade therefore, ἱερουργείας ἐτέλει, perform'd the Office, &c. For he compares Conſtantine to a Prelate or Pontif: whence he ſubjoyns theſe words in the following chapter, ὅπως μὲν οὖν αὐτὸς τῷ ἑαυτοῦ ἱερεῖτο θεῷ, In this manner therefore he himſelf performed the Office of a Prieſt to his own God: and in the chapter after that, adds, that, Conſtantine behaved himſelf as a Biſhop; and in preſence of the Biſhops took that appellation upon himſelf. Valeſ.

[c] Ὡδὲ δὲ τοῖς πᾶσι. In the Fuketian Copy the reading is ὧδε δή. I read σπουδῇ τοίς πᾶσι τῆς ἑορτῆς ὑξάρχων, And with a chearfullneſs, &c. So above at chap. 17, his words are, σπουδῇ ὑξάρχων αὐτὸς πρὸ ἔνδον ἐκκλησιαζομένων, with diligence and chearfulneſs himſelf lead the way to thoſe who aſſembled within that Church. Valeſ.

[d] Κηροῖς λίνοις. The Chriſtians in the Vigil of the Feaſt of Eaſter lighted a vaſt company of wax Tapers. Which thing having been done by them, within the Church only; Conſtantine gave order that without the Church alſo Tapers ſhould be every where lighted, in honour of ſo great a Feſtival. And whereas lights were uſually kindled in the night, in great Cities, as I have remarked at the 14[th] Book of Amm. Marcellinus, pag. 6, of my notes; Conſtantine would have far more, and larger Torches lighted up on that night, to the end he might induce the minds of the Heathens to a veneration of the Chriſtian Religion. Further, thoſe pillars of wax, which Euſebius makes mention of here, do excellently well denote the Paſchal-Taper which we are wont to light up in the Vigil of Eaſter: concerning which Taper Barnabas Briſſonius has written a particular Book. See Gregory Nazianzene in his 19[th] Oration. And in his ſecond Oration de Paſcha, pag. 676, he ſays, that then Lights were uſually kindled both in private and publickly; in ſo much that, by reaſon of the multitude of lights which all ages and degrees of men lighted up, that night was rendred tranſcendently bright. Gaudentius Brixienſis therefore does deſervedly term that night, noctem ſplendidiſſimam, a moſt ſplendid night; as does likewiſe Zeno Veronenſis in his firſt Sermon ad Neophytos. Valeſ.

[e] Torches likewiſe were kindled, which enlightned all places; in ſo much that this Myſtick Vigil was rendred brighter than any the moſt glorious day. But as ſoon as the day-light appeared; in imitation of our Saviour's Beneficence, [f] He reacht out a bountifull hand to all Nations, Provinces, and people, and beſtowed on all perſons the richeſt ſort of Gifts.

[e] Λαμπάδες δὲ πύρεοι. Muſculus took theſe words in ſuch a ſenſe, as if they were an expoſition of the foregoing words, κηροῖς λίνοις, pillars of wax. But Chriſtophorſon diſtinguiſhes λαμπάδας from thoſe pillars of wax; whom we have alſo followed. Grecians do properly term thoſe λαμπάδας, which the Latines call Tedæ, Torches; as Pollux informs us Book 10. chap. 26. In which place of Pollux the reading muſt be ἐν ξαντείαις, not ἐξαντείαις, as 'tis commonly printed. Hence a Game amongſt the Greeks was termed λαμπαδηδρομία, ſo called from theſe Torches. Grecians do likewiſe uſe λάμπας to ſignifie a Lamp, in which ſenſe it occurs in the 25[th] Chap. of Saint Matthew; in the ſame manner that φανὸς is taken both for a Torch, and alſo for a Lamp. Valeſ.

[f] This paſſage of Euſebius is to be taken notice of in reference to the Eaſter-Alms, which Conſtantine was wont to beſtow yearly, in memory of that Benefit which Chriſt on thoſe days conferred upon mankind. The Ancient Chriſtians were heretofore wont on the Feaſt-day of Eaſter to diſtribute money amongſt the poor: which thing was carefully performed not only by Lay-perſons, but by the Clergy alſo. Concerning which matter there is an eminent paſſage in Commodiana's Second Book of Inſtitutions, Chap. 75.

C ongruit in Paſcha, die feliciſſimo noſtro,
L atentur & illi qui poſtulant ſumpta diurna.
E rogetur eis quod ſufficit, Vinum & Eſca.
R eſpicite fontem quo memorentur iſta pro vobis.
I mmodico ſumptu deficitis Chriſto donare.
C im ipſi non facitis, quomodo ſuadere poteſtis
J uſtitiam Legis talibus? Vel ſemel in anno.
S ic multos urget blaſphemia ſæpe de Vobis.

Commodianus ſpeaks to the Clergy, as 'tis apparent from the Title of the Poem, and from the firſt letters of every verſe. And he adviſes them, that at leaſt on Eaſter-day they ſhould beſtow an Alms upon the poor. He reproves them alſo, becauſe, by reaſon of their living too high, they had nothing left which they might beſtow on the poor. For that is the meaning of this verſe;

Immodico ſumptu deficitis Chriſto donare.

Concerning theſe very Paſchal-Alms, Anaſtaſius (in the Life of Pope Hadrian) ſpeaks in theſe words. Simulque & in Balneo juxta eandem Eccleſiam ſito, &c; As likewiſe in the Bath alſo, which is ſituate near the ſame Church, where Our Brethren, the poor of Chriſt, who were wont to meet yearly to receive Alms in the Paſchal Feſtivity, and to bathe; &c. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXIII.

How He prohibited the worſhip of Idols; but honoured the Feaſts of the Martyrs.

IN this manner therefore He Himſelf performed the Office of a Prieſt to his own God. But to all perſons who lived under the Roman Empire, as well to the Commonalty as the Milice, the doors of Idolatry were ſhut, [a] and every ſort of ſacrifice was prohibited. A Law alſo was tranſmitted to the Preſidents of Provinces, that they likewiſe ſhould pay a veneration to the Lord's day. Which [Preſidents] [b] by the Emperour's Order did in like manner honour

[a] These words muſt be rendred favourably. For 'tis manifeſt, that the Sacrifices of the Heathens were not expreſly and by name forbidden by Conſtantine the Great, as Libanius in expreſs words informs us in His Oration Pro Templis. Indeed, Conſtantine by iſſuing forth a Law prohibited private and domeſtick Sacrifices, as it appears from the Theodoſian Code de Maleficis & Mathematicis. and from the firſt Law de Paganis. But he forbad not the publick and ſolemn Sacrifices, which had been inſtituted by their Anceſtours. Euſebius repeats the ſame thing in chap. 25. Valeſ.

[b] Τῷ νόμῳ βασιλέως. It muſt be made οἱ τῷ νόμῳ βασιλέως ἄρχοντες being to be underſtood; and we have rendred it accordingly. In Robert Stephen's Edition a point is ill ſet after the word βασιλέως; whereas it ſhould be placed after the verb χαρίσων, as 'tis in the Kings Copy, and in the Sheets: agreeably whereto we have pointed it. Valeſ.

the Feast-days of the Martyrs, and shewed a due Reverence to the Times of the Ecclesiastick Festivals. All which things were performed with the greatest joy and satisfaction imaginable to the Emperour.

CHAP. XXIV.

That He affirmed Himself to be as 'twere a Bishop of External Affairs.

WHerefore, at an Entertainment which one time He gave the Bishops, he cast forth an expression which was not absurdly uttered, [affirming] that he himself also was a Bishop: the words he made use of in our hearing, were these. You (says He) are Bishops in those matters transacted within the Church: But in them done without [the Church,] I am a Bishop, constituted by God. Therefore, the thoughts of his mind were agreeable to his expressions; He governed all His Subjects with an Episcopal Care, and by what ever Methods he could take, incited them to be followers of * true piety.

* Or, A pious life.

CHAP. XXV.

Concerning His prohibiting of Sacrifices, and Initiations; and concerning His abolishing the Gladiators, and the heretofore impure [Priests] of the Nile.

ON this account it was, that by frequent Laws and Constitutions He prohibited all persons, from Sacrificing to Idols; from a Curious consulting of [a] Diviners and Soothsayers; from erecting Images; from performing secret Initiations; and from polluting the Cities with the * Bloody Shows of Gladiators. And whereas they of Egypt and Alexandria had a custom [b] of worshipping their River, by the ministery of certain effeminate men; another Law was transmitted

* Or, Murders.

[a] Μαντεῖα. The Translatour has rendred it ill, nec oracula curiosè sectarentur, nor should curiously follow Oracles. For the Dæmons had long before ceased from giving forth Oracles. Wherefore Constantine's Law was superfluous, wherein he had forbidden the searching after Oracles. I had rather therefore understand here the Diviners, Prophets, Astrologers, and Soothsayers: the consulting of whom was prohibited by Constantine, in the first and second Law Cod. Theod. de Maleficis & Mathematicis. Vales.

[b] Τὸν παρ' αὐτοῖς ποταμὸν δι' ἀνδρῶν ἐκτεθηλυμμένων θεραπεύειν. Amongst the Egyptians, Androgyni were the Priests of the Nile, as Gregory Nazianzen informs us in his second Invective against Julian; as also in his Poem to Nemesius. The same Gregorius (in the Oration which he wrote in Sancta Lumina Epiphaniorum,) does elegantly assert, that by this fact the Egyptians reproacht, rather than honoured the Nile. Concerning the same Rite of the Egyptians, there is an eminent passage in Libanius's Oration Pro Templis, which, in regard it makes very much for our purpose, and was not understood by the Translatour, deserves to be set down here: ὃ τοίνυν τῇ ῥώμῃ μόνον ἐφυλάχθη τὸ θύειν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῇ τοῦ σαρόπτου, τῇ πολλῇ καὶ μεγάλῃ, καὶ πλήθει κεκλημένῃ νεῶν, δι' ὧν κοινὴν ἁπάντων ἀνθρώπων ποιεῖ τὴν τῆς αἰγύπτου φορᾶν. αὕτη δὲ ἔργον τοῦ νείλου. τὸν νεῖλον δὲ ἑστιᾶν, ἀναβαίνειν ὅπη τὰς ἀρούρας πείθοντα, ὧν ὑπεμνήσθη τε πρὸ, καὶ παρ' ὧν, καὶ δι' ἃν αὐτὸς ἐθελήσειεν. ἃ μοι δοκοῦσιν εἰδότες οἱ καὶ τοῦτα ἂν ἥδεως ἀνελόντες, ὡς ἀνελεῖν. ἀλλ' ἀφεῖναι τὸν ποταμὸν εὐνοχεῖσθαι τοῖς παλαιοῖς νομίμοις, ἐπὶ μισθῷ τῷ εἰωθότι. Nor was a permission of Sacrificing reserved to Rome only, but to the City of Sarapis also, that great and populous City, which is possest of a multitude of Temples, by the assistance whereof it renders the plenty of Egypt common to all men. Now, this [plenty] is the product of the Nile. They entertain the Nile at a Banquet, and [those Sacred Rites] perswade it to rise and overflow the Fields; which [Rites] not being performed both at the stated and solemn time, and by those persons [appointed for that purpose,] the Nile would not [swell and overflow its Banks.] Which thing when they well understood, who would very willingly have abolished these [Rites] also; nevertheless, on second thoughts they would not abolish them; But suffered that River to be entertained at a banquet, according to the usage of the Ancients, because of the usual Reward it paid, [to wit, a plentifull Crop.] From this place of Libanius it plainly appears, that these Androgyni the Priests of the Nile were not abolished by Constantine: or if they were abolished by him, they were soon after restored. Vales.

to them, [wherein 'twas ordered] that that whole Tribe of * Androgyni, in regard they were all an † adulterate sort of people, should be utterly destroyed; and that it should not be lawfull for those to be seen in any place whatever, who were distempered with the disease of this sort of uncleanness. Now, whereas the superstitious supposed, that the Nile would not in future any more overflow their Fields, as it had usually done before; God, in favour to the Emperour's Law, performed the quite contrary to what they expected. For those persons who by their obscenity had polluted the Cities, ‖ were taken off indeed. But the River Nile, as if that whole Region had been cleansed and purged for it, ran higher than it had ever done before; and overflowing with a rich stream, laid all the fields under water: whereby it effectually taught the unwise, that they ought to have an Aversion for impure persons; but, that the original Cause of Blessings and Success was to be ascribed to the only [God, the] Giver of every thing that is Good.

* Persons that were both Males and Females.

† Falsified, or, depraved.

‖ Or, Were not any more.

CHAP. XXVI.

The amendment of that Law made against the Childless, as also the * alteration of that Law concerning Wills and Testaments.

* Or, Correction.

BUt, in as much as the things of this Nature performed by the Emperour in every Province, are almost infinite; whoever shall attempt to record them accurately, will be furnished with plenty of matter [for such a subject.] Of the same sort herewith is this likewise, that, to the end he might reduce [many] Laws to a greater Sanctity; instead of the old, he made new ones. And 'tis easie to manifest * the manner hereof, * by one or two instances. The old Laws punished the [a] Childless with a deprivation of the inheritance of their Fathers. And this Law against the Childless was doubtless the Cruellest of Laws, in regard it inflicted a punishment on them, as if they had been guilty of some Crime. [b] But the Emperour abrogated this Statute, and turned it into an holy and religious Law. For he said, that those who committed faults designedly and on set purpose, ought to be chastized with condign punishment.

* Or, In few words

[a] See Sozomen book. 1. chap. 9. who, in regard he was a Lawyer belonging to the Byzantine Forum, does explain these knots of the Roman Laws, more perspicuously than Eusebius. Consult Lipsius also, in his Comment at the Third Book of Tacitus's Annals; where he discourses at large de Lege Papia. Vales.

[b] Λύσας δὴ συγχωρεῖ κληρονομεῖν τοὺς θεσπίσαντας τοῦτο. I read, λύσας δὴ τοῦτο βασιλεὺς, But the Emperour, &c; and do expunge these four words συγχωρεῖ κληρονομεῖν τοὺς θεσπίσαντας, which crept out of the margin into the Text. Further, this Constitution of the Emperour Constantine, is exstant in the 8th Book of the Theodosian Code, in the Title de Infirmandis Pœnis Cœlibatûs & Orbitatis. In the Fuketian and Savilian Copies, instead of λύσας δὴ, the reading is τελοῦντας δὲ, &c. And so likewise 'tis written in the Copies of Scaliger, Bongarsius, and Christophorson, as the Geneva Printers have told us. But I had rather reade from Sozomen, ὧν συγχωρῶν κληρονομεῖν εἰ μὴ τοὺς ἐγγυτάτω θεσπίσαντας. Vales.

But,

But, Nature her self hath * denied Children to many persons: who although they earnestly desired a numerous issue; nevertheless wanted Children, by reason of their infirmity of † body. Others lived without having any Children, not that they would not have had Children to succeed them; but because they would avoid Carnal Copulation with a Woman; which [sort of continency] they embraced, out of their most ardent Love to Philosophy. Besides, many women consecrated to the service of God, were studious followers of Chastity and spotless Virginity, having dedicated themselves, in reference as well to their minds as bodies, to a chast and most holy Life. What then? Ought this to be accounted worthy of punishment, or rather of praise and admiration? For, the very inclination to this thing deserves an high commendation: but, to perfect and bring it to effect, is a matter above the strength of humane Nature. 'Tis fit therefore, that those who (though very desirous of Children, nevertheless) are deprived of them by the infirmity of Nature, should be pitied rather than punished. But he who is lead by the Love of a Sublimer Philosophy, is so far from deserving punishment, that he ought to be the wonder and admiration of all men. In this manner the Emperour with the greatest equity mended that Law. Further, provision had been made by the Old Laws, that dying persons, [c] who were at the very last gaspe as I may say, should make their Wills with a great deal of exactness, in some certain words: and there were Set Forms and Solemnities prescribed, and what expressions ought to be added. And hereupon many frauds were practised, in order to the disannulling the Will of the dead. Which when the Emperour perceived, he corrected this Law also; affirming, that a dying person ought to have a liberty of making his Will as he pleased, whether in bare words, or in any ordinary expressions, and, that he might declare his Last Will in [d] any written Form; or if he had rather do it by word of mouth, he might; provided it were done in the presence of Credible Witnesses, who were able to preserve integrity with the Truth.

* Or, Hath demonstrated many persons to be Childless.
† Or, Nature.

[c] Ἐξ ἐπ' ἀυλῆς ἐφάτης. The words are misplaced here; but may easily be restored in this manner, ἐπ' ἐσχάτης ἀναπνοῆς ἐξακριβολογεῖσθαι. This Law of Constantine, wherein he abolish't the severity of the Old Law, and the Forms of words in making Wills, is not (I think) now extant. But 'tis mentioned in the Third Law of the Theodosian Code de Testamentis. In the Fuk. and Savil. Manuscripts, ἐξ is wanting. Vales.

[d] There is indeed a Law of Constantine's extant, (Cod. Justin. Book 6. Tit. 21. qui Testamenta facere possint, &c.) dated from Nicomedia, concerning the Testaments of Souldiers in expedition, or in present service; by which they are discharged from the obligation of those solemnities which are by the Law made necessary in the Wills of other persons; and their Wills are made good, if but written on the Scabberd of their Swords, or on their Targets with their Bloud, or with their Swords in the dust, at such time as they died in Battle.

CHAP. XXVII.

That he made a Law, that a Christian should not be Slave to a Jew, and that the Decrees of Synods should be firm and authentick, and so forth.

MOreover, he made a Law, that no Christian should serve Jews. For, it was [he said] a thing not to be permitted, that those who had been redeemed by our Saviour, should be reduced under the yoak of Slavery to those who were the Murderers of the Prophets and of the Lord. But if any person professing the Christian Religion should be found to be Slave to a Jew; [his order was,] that he should be set at Liberty; but, that the Jew shou'd be punished with a pecuniary mulct. He also confirmed those [a] Decrees of Bishops which were promulged in Synods, by his own authority: in so much that, 'twas not in the power of the Governours of Provinces to rescind the Bishops determinations. For the Priests of God [he said] were * to be preferred before any Judge whatever. He issued forth to His Subjects a vast number of Laws of this nature: to comprize all which in a peculiar Volumn, to the end an accurate inspection may be made into the Emperour's prudence even in this particular, would require a greater leisure. What necessity is there of our relating at present, in what manner he applied himself to the supream God, and was from morning to night sollicitously inquisitive, what sort of men he might do good to; and how, in reference to His Beneficence, He shewed himself equal and † obliging to all persons?

* Or, More approved than any, &c.

† Κοινὸς, Liberal; Valesius renders it Civil.

[a] There is a Law of Constantine's extant in the close of the Theodosian Code, under the Title de Episcopali audientia, wherein the Emperour commands that the sentences pronounced by a Bishop, even in Causis Minorum, should obtain the force of a Law. The Translatour therefore has done ill, at this place to render ὅρους, Regulas, Rules or Canons. For the discourse here is not concerning the Ecclesiastick Rules, which are promulged in a Synod by the Bishops; but concerning Sentences pronounc't between persons at Law, as 'tis apparent from the words which follow. Moreover, Sozomen understood these words of Eusebius no otherwise. But, that which occasions the difficulty is, what Eusebius has said in the following words, ὅρους τοὺς ἐν συνόδοις ἀποφανθέντας. those Decrees —— which were promulged in Synods. But, σύνοδος is here used to signifie an Ecclesiastick Session, to wit of a Bishop and his Presbyters. Sozomen has the very same term, in his first book, chap. 9; where he speaks concerning this Law of Constantine. Which Authour's words I do so much the more willingly produce, as often as the Laws are treated of, because he was a person incomparably well skill'd in the Roman Laws, as 'tis evident from his books. His words therefore in the foresaid book and chapter are these. Τῶν δὲ ἐπισκόπων ἐπικαλεῖσθαι τῷ κρίσιν ἐπέτρεψε τοῖς δικαζομένοις, &c. Moreover, he permitted Litigants to appeal to the Judgment of the Bishops, if they had a mind to avoid the Civil Magistrates. And, that their [the Bishops] Sentence should be firm and valid, and of more force than the Sentence of the other Judges, as if it had been pronounc't by the Emperour himself. And, that the Governours of Provinces, and their Officials, should put in Execution the Sentences pronounc't [by the Bishops.] And, that the Decrees of Synods should be unalterable. But, if any one will have the Councills of Bishops to be meant by the term συνόδοις, then ὅρους will signifie the Sentences pronounc't in a Synod against mischievous Priests and Hereticks; which Sentences the Emperours do confirm in the Second Law, in the same Title de Episcopali audientia. Vales.

CHAP. XXVIII.

His Gifts [bestowed] on the Churches; and His Distributions of money to Virgins, and to the Poor.

BUt on the Churches of God He conferred innumerable Gifts, in a manner that was extraordinary and transcendent; sometimes bestowing Lands; at others, * Annonæ, for the maintenance of poor men, fatherless children, and † widows. Lastly, He took all imaginable care, that even infinite numbers of garments should be provided for the naked and such as wanted clothing. But above all others, He vouchsafed them the highest honour, who had wholly ‖ addicted themselves to the divine Philosophy. Indeed

* Or, Certain proportions of Bread, or Bread-corn.
† Or, Miserable women.
‖ Or, Dedicated their Lives to, &c.

deed, he paid little less than a Veneration to the most Holy Quire of God's perpetual Virgins; in regard he was fully perswaded, that that very God, to whom they had consecrated themselves, had taken up his habitation within the minds of such persons.

CHAP. XXIX.

Speeches and * Discourses written by Constantine.

* Declamations.

YEa farther, He spent whole nights without taking any rest, to the end He might accomplish his own mind by a meditation on divine matters. He likewise employed his vacant hours in [a] writing Orations, and [b] made frequent Speeches in publick: accounting it as a duty incumbent on himself, to Govern his Subjects by the precepts of reason, and to make * His own Government an Empire of Reason. Wherefore He himself would call a Meeting. Numerous multitudes of people flock't into the place of hearing, that they might be Auditours of a Philosophizing Emperour. But if during his Speaking, any occasion was offered of treating concerning Divinity, he stood upright immediately, and with a † composed Countenance and low Voice, [c] seemed to initiate those that were present, in the Mysteries of the Divine Doctrine, with all imaginable piety and modesty. And when His Hearers applauded him with their Acclamations, He gave them notice by a nod, that they should look upwards to Heaven, and with pious praises highly admire and honour that One Supream King. Farther, he divided his Speeches in such a manner, that in the first place he would lay the Confutation of the Errour of Polytheism, as the foundation [of his Discourse,] asserting by most evident arguments, that the Superstition of the Pagans was meer fraud, and the Bulwark of impiety. Then he discoursed concerning the Sole Empire of God. After this he treated about Providence, whereby as well all things in general, as every Individual is governed. From hence he proceeded to the Salutary Dispensation, and shewed That to have been done necessarily, and in an agreeable manner. Passing from that point, he began a discourse concerning the Divine * Judgment. In his treating whereof he gave the minds of His Hearers most sharp and severe Touches; reproving the Rapacious and † Deceitfull, and those that had enslaved themselves to an insatiable desire of money. He likewise whip't as 'twere and scourg'd with his Expressions, some of His Confidents that stood round Him; and forc't them, when stung by their own Consciences, to Cast down their eyes. To whom he evidenc'd and declared with a loud voice, that they themselves should give God an account of their own undertakings [d]. For [he told them,] that the Supream God had given him the Empire of the world; but, that he, in imitation of the Deity, had committed the parts of His Empire to their Government: moreover, that all of them should at a fit opportunity render an account of their Actions to the Supream King. These things he attested continually; these things he suggested to them; with these Lessons he instructed them. And truly he himself, trusting in the sincerity of his own Faith, not only declared, but had his thoughts taken up with such matters as these. But they were unapt to learn, and deaf to all good Documents; applauding indeed his sayings with their tongues and Acclamations; but in their practises they disregarded them by reason of their unsatiableness.

[a] Least any one should think, that our Eusebius does flatter Constantine here, the same is also attested by Victor, in his Epitome, in these words. Ipse assiduè Legere, Scribere, meditari. Vales.

[b] Ἐποιεῖτο τὰς παῤῥησίας. This term παῤῥησία was not understood by the Translatour. For thus he renders it; frequentes cum suis inibat congressus; whereas it ought to have been rendred, crebras habebat conciones, he made frequent Speeches. For παῤῥησίαν ποιεῖσθαι imports verba facere, to make a Speech; which Græcians do more frequently term περίοδον ποιεῖσθαι. So Isocrates terms it in the beginning of his Areopagitick; περὶ σωφροσύνης πῶς περίοδον ἐποιησάμην: and also Pausanias (in Achaicis) pag. 168. Edit. Aldin; as likewise in the two Decreta Deliorum, which are extant amongst the Marmora Arundelliana, pag. 42 and 43: εἶδ' δὲ αὐτοῖς περίοδον περὶς τῶν βουλὴν καὶ τὸν δῆμον πρώτους μετὰ τὰ ἱερά. Which words are thus to be rendred: ad Senatum quoque & ad populum verba faciendi expleris sacris primi omnium habeant facultatem. Polybius (book 4. pag. 302.) uses ἔφοδον διδόναι in the same signification: διόριθμοι δεῖν, τῷ τε μαχατᾶ διδόδς τῶν ἔφοδον ὅτι τοῦ πολλοῦς, &c. Which place, in regard 'tis very faulty, we will by the by restore. Write thus therefore, οἱ μὲν νέοι ὥοντο δεῖν, &c. Which emendation is confirmed by Polybius's next words, For it follows, οἱ δὲ ἔφοροι διδόντες τῶν ἧβν νέων συνεφῆν, &c. Thus much concerning the signification of the word. As to the thing it self; from this deed of Constantine seems to have been derived the usage of the Byzantine Emperours, who made Catechetick Orations even concerning things sacred, which Orations were termed Silentia, as you may see in Meursius's Glossary, in the word σιλέντιον. Vales.

[c] Μυεῖν ἔδοξεν αὐτούς. In the Fuketian and Turnebian Copies, the reading is μυεῖν ἐδόκει τοῦ παῤῥησίας, seemed to initiate, &c. Which in my judgment is the truer reading. Vales.

* Or, Judicatory.

† Or, Covetous.

[d] Τῶν ἐγχειρισθέντων αὐτοῖς. After these words, in the Kings Copy and in Robert Stephen's Edition follow these, ὡς' ἤδη ποτὲ ἧβν ἀμφ' αὐτὸν, &c; which occur at the beginning of the 30th chap. But in the Geneva Edition, Some body, who I know not, hath noted at the margin, that there is a great imperfection here; which Scaliger, Bongarsius, Gruterus, and others supply in this manner: ὥστε ἤδη ποτὲ ἧβν ἐπὶ γῆς τὴν βασιλείαν διαφέρειν τῆς τοῦ κρείττονος ἀρχῆς, τὰς τε μέρος αὐτοῖς ἐπιτρέψαι δίκας, πάντας μὲν τῷ μεγάλῳ, &c. But first, those words ὡς' ἤδη ποτὲ, must be expunged. For the imperfection, if there be any in this place, begins before these words ὡς' ἤδη ποτὲ, which in the Geneva Edition appear corruptly repeated. Secondly, those words ἧβν ἐπὶ γῆς τὴν βασιλείαν, &c. are altogether void of sense. This imperfection therefore is better made up in Moræus's Book, thus: πάντας μὲν γὰρ τῷ μεγάλῳ βασιλεῖ, τάς τε καιρὸν τὰς ἐυθύνας ὑφέξειν, &c; to the end of the chapter, as 'tis in the Geneva Edition. In the same Copy the reading is truer, thus, ταῦτα σωεχῶς διεμαρτύρετο, These things he attested continually. Sr Henry Savil in the lower margin of his Copy, makes good this place thus; ὡς ἤδη ποτὲ ἧβν ἐπὶ γῆς τὴν βασιλείαν παρέχειν τῇ τοῦ κρείττονος ἀρχῇ, τάς τε τε μέρος αὐτῷ ἐπιτρέψαι δίκας. πάντας μὲν γὰρ, &c. But, from the footsteps of the written reading which I found in the excellent Fuketian Copy, I have, as I think, very happily restored this place. The writing therefore of the Fuketian Manuscript is this: ἐγχειρισθέντων αὐτοῖς... τὸν ἐπὶ πάντων θεὸν ἧβν ἐπὶ γῆς τὴν βασιλείαν παρέχειν. αὐτὸν δὲ καὶ μιμήσει τοῦ κρείττονος τῆς ἀρχῆς τάς τε μέρος αὐτοῖς ἐπιτρέψαι δίκας... πάντα... μὲν ἧβν τῷ βασιλεῖ καὶ καιρὸν, &c. What is easier than to make up these imperfections in this manner? αὐτὸς μὲν γὰρ τὸν ἐπὶ πάντων θεὸν, &c. And a little after, καὶ μιμησιν τοῦ κρείττονος, τῆς ἀρχῆς τάς τε μέρος αὐτοῖς ἐπιτρέψαι δοικήσεις. πάντας γε μὲν τῷ ἧβν ὅλων βασιλεῖ, &c. Nothing is plainer, nothing more certain. That is, That the Empire of the world was delivered to Him by the Supream God: but, that He, by the Example of the Deity, had distributed the parts of His Empire to be governed by them. Vales.

CHAP. XXX.

That He shewed a certain Covetous person the measure of a Grave, to the end he might shame him.

WHerefore, one time He took one of those persons about him by the hand, and spake these words to him. How far (Hark ye!) Do we stretch our * Covetous desires? Then marking out on the ground the † length of a man, with a spear which he hapned to have in his his hand: Although (said he,) you were possest of all the Riches of this world, and of the whole Element of the Earth, yet you shall carry away nothing more than this space of ground which I have mark't out, if even [a] that be allowed you. Notwithstanding this Blessed Prince said and did these things, yet he reclaimed no person. But, 'twas manifestly evidenced by the very event of affairs, that the Emperours * Admonitions were rather like Divine Oracles, than bare words.

* Or, Unsatiable.

† Or, Stature.

[a] For 'tis uncertain whether you shall be buried in the ground; in regard you may either be burnt, or drowned in the Sea, or devoured by wild Beasts. In the Fuketian Copy the reading is τύχοις, not τύχης, as 'tis here. Vales.

* Or, Predictions.

CHAP. XXXI.

That he was laught at because of his too great Clemency.

FUrther, whereas there was no fear of * any Capital punishment, which might restrain ill men from wickedness; (the Emperour himself being wholly inclined to Clemency, and the Governours in each Province wholly neglecting the prosecution and punishment of Crimes;) this thing exposed the publick Administration of Affairs to no ordinary blame and reprehension: whether justly, or otherwise, every one may judge according as he shall think good. Let me be permitted to record the Truth.

* Or, Death.

CHAP. XXXII.

Concerning Constantine's * Oration, which He wrote to The Convention of the Saints.

MOreover, the Emperour * wrote his Orations in the Latine tongue. But they were rendred into † Greek by the [a] Interpreters, whose imployment it was to do this. One of these orations done into Greek, I will, for an instance, annex after the close of this present Work; to which [Speech] he himself gave this Title, To the Convention of the Saints, dedicating that His Discourse to the Church of God: [which Oration I will subjoyn for this reason,] least any one should account our Testimony in reference to these matters, to be [nothing more than] Ostentation and Noise.

* Or, Volumn, or, discourse.

* Or, Gave the writing of his, &c.

† Or, Our tongue.

[a] Under the disposition of the Magister Officiorum [Master of Offices] were the Interpreters of various Nations and Languages, as the Notitia of the Roman Empire informs us. Constantine therefore made use of their assistance in translating his Orations and Letters out of Latine into Greek. Vales.

CHAP. XXXIII.

How He heard Eusebius's Panegyrick concerning the Sepulchre of our Saviour, in a standing posture.

BUt that, in my judgment, is in no wise to be silently overpast, which this admirable [Prince] did, even in Our own presence. For, when we had one time besought him, being confident of his singular piety towards God, that he would be an Auditor of a Speech of Ours concerning the Sepulchre of our Saviour; He gave us Audience with all imaginable willingness. And a great company of Hearers standing round, [a] within the Imperial Palace it self, He himself stood also, and together with the rest gave Audience. But when We entreated him to rest himself upon his Imperial Throne which was placed hard by, he would by no means be perswaded to Sit; But with an intent mind, weighed what was spoken, and by his own Testimony approved the truth of the * Theologick Dogmata. But when much time had been spent, and Our Oration was continued to a great length; We were desirous to break off. But he would not suffer that; but entreated us to go on till we had ended our Discourse. And when we again Sollicited Him to sit down, He on the contrary was urgent in His Refusal: sometimes affirming, That it was unfit to hearken to Discourses which treated concerning God, with ease and remisness; at other times saying, that this was usefull and advantagious to Him. For it was [He told us] a thing consonant to Piety and Religion, to hear Discourses about Divine matters in a standing posture. After these things were finished, we returned home, and betook our selves to our usual Studies and exercises.

[a] Ἔνδον δὲ αὐτοῖς βασιλείοις. The Translatour renders it in ipsa Basilica, in the very Church, which I like not. For Eusebius notes this as a wonderfull instance of piety in Constantine, that the Emperour vouchsafed to hear Eusebius's Oration, in a standing posture within the very Palace. Questionless, if the Emperour had heard the Speech standing in the Church, that would have been less strange, in regard the place it self requires reverence, and because in the Church the Emperour himself is one of the number of the Faithfull. But, for the Emperour to stand in the Palace whilst a Bishop was speaking, that is a signal instance of Religion. See chap. 46, whence it may be manifestly gathered, that the Palace is meant here. Further, the Christians were heretofore wont in a standing posture to hear the Sermon of the Priest in the Church. For no body sate in the Church but the Presbyters, as Optatus informs us, Book 4. Dum peccatorem arguit, & Sedentem increpat Deus, Specialiter ad vos dictum esse constat non ad populum, qui in Ecclesia non habet sedendi licentiam. Vales.

* Or, Points of Divinity.

CHAP. XXXIV.

That He wrote to Eusebius concerning Easter, and about the Divine Books.

BUt He, always [a] Sollicitously consulting the good of God's Churches, wrote a Letter to us, about providing [some Copies] of the Divinely inspired Oracles: as also [another Letter] concerning the most Holy Feast of Easter. [b] For, whereas we had dedicated a Book to Him, wherein the Mystick account of that Festival was explained; in what manner He rewarded and honoured us by His answer, any one may perceive, by perusing this Letter of His.

[a] Περιεγρηγορώς. In the Fuketian Copy 'tis written περιγρηγορώς, which is truer, if I mistake not. Vales.

[b] He seems to mean the Book de Ratione Computi paschalis, which Beda (in his Book de Ratione Temporum, Chap. 42,) asserts to have been made by Eusebius. Indeed, the Emperour Constantine, in his Letter to Eusebius, does attest, that that work of Eusebius's, which is here mentioned, was a Laborious work, and that it contained the whole account, Original, and perfection of the Paschal Feast. Concerning this Book of Eusebius, Ferome in his piece de Scriptoribus Ecclesiasticis speaks thus. Hippolytus rationem paschæ, temporumque Canones Scripsit, & sedecim annorum circulum reperit, & Eusebio qui super eodem paschæ canonem decem & novem annorum circuli composuit, occasionem dedit. Which words of St Ferome, Bede hath transcribed in his Book de Sex Ætatibus Mundi; and in his History, Book 5. Chap. 22. Vales.

CHAP. XXXV.

Constantine's [Letter] to Eusebius, wherein He commends His Oration concerning Easter.

VICTOR CONSTANTINUS MAXIMUS AUGUSTUS, To Eusebius.

IT is indeed a mighty Attempt, and [a work] superior to all the power of Oratory, to declare the mysteries of Christ agreeably to their dignity, and in a due manner to unfold the [a] Reason and Ground of Easter, and its Institution, and its advantagious and laborious consummation. For, 'tis impossible even to men that are able to understand things Divine, to declare those matters according to their dignity. Nevertheless, I do highly admire your excellent Learning, and your Extraordinary diligence, and have my self most willingly perused your Book; and, according to your desire, have given order, that it should be put into the hands of many persons who sincerely adhere to the observance of the Divine Religion. Whereas therefore you understand, with how great a delight of mind we receive such Presents as these from Your Prudence, take care to please us in future with more frequent Discourses [b], whereto you confess your self to have been by education accustomed. But (as the saying is,) we incite you who run, to your usuall Studies. In as much as, [c] this so great an opinion does sufficiently demonstrate, that you have not found an unworthy Translatour of Your Writings, who can render Your Labours into [d] Latine: although 'tis impossible, that such a Version should express the dignity of Works that are so egregiously eminent. God keep You, Beloved Brother! Such was his Letter in reference to this matter. But, that which he wrote about providing [some Copies of the Scriptures] to be read in Churches, runs thus.

[a] Τῇ πάσῃ ἀντιλογίαν, The controversie of Easter. It must be written ἀπολογίαν, reason, or cause, as I also found it mended at the margin of Moræus's Copy. Which emendation is confirmed by the following words. For he adds, καὶ ἡρέσαν, λυσιτελῆ τε καὶ ἐπίπονον τελεσιουργίαν, and its institution, &c. 'Tis certain, γένεσις cannot be said concerning the original of a controversie. You would do better therefore to render ἡρέσαν, institution. τελεσιουργία imports the consummation of the Paschal Feast, performed by Christ, who by the Miracle of his own Resurrection, instituted a true Pascha for Christians. Vales.

[b] Λόγοις ἐυφεδάνειν. After these words in the Greek, in the Kings Copy, and in the Edition of Robert Stephens, these words follow, κἂν τὰ μάλιστα ἧς καλῶν ἔργων, &c; although 'tis impossible, that such, &c. But Scaliger, Bongarsius, and others have made up this place from I know not what Copies. The same supplement I likewise found in the Fuketian Copy, and in Moræus's Book, and indeed something more correct than it is in the Geneva Edition. For, in that the reading is, οἷς ἀντελεφθῆναι σοὶ ὁμολογεῖς. But it must be written ἀναλεφθῆναι, or ἐνλεφθῆναι. Vales.

[c] Ἡ τοσαύτη πεποίθησις, This so great a confidence, or perswasion. He means his boldness, who by Constantine's order had translated Eusebius's Book concerning Easter: or rather, πεποίθησις is the opinion and judgment of the Emperour himself. The Translatour understood it as meant concerning the boldness or confidence of Eusebius himself, which can in no wise be agreeable here. Doubtless, πεποίθησις cannot here be taken otherwise, than for the judgment and perswasion, as well of Constantine Himself, as of other men, who highly extolled Eusebius's Treatise concerning Easter, which by Constantine's order had been rendred into Latine. This so great an opinion of all men, says he, does sufficiently shew, that you have met with no unworthy a Translatour. Futher, those words ἧς συγγεγραμμάτων may be construed two ways, either with the adjective ἀνάξιον, or with the term πεποίθησις. Vales.

[d] Καὶ τὸν εἰς πᾶν. After these words, in Moræus's Copy there is an empty space left. Questionless the word ῥωμαϊκὴν is wanting. The place therefore must be made good in this manner, τὸν εἰς πᾶν ῥωμαϊκὴν τοῦ σὰς πόνους μεταῤῥυθμίσοντα γλῶτταν, who can render, &c; or rather, εἰς πᾶν ῥωμαϊσμὸν, as Eusebius expresses himself above at ch p. 32. Indeed, in the Fuketian Copy, the reading is, εἰς πᾶν ῥωμ.... τοῦ σὰς πόνους μεταῤῥυθμίζοντα, &c. Vales.

CHAP. XXXVI.

Constantine's Letter to Eusebius, concerning the providing [some Copies] of the Divine Scriptures.

VICTOR CONSTANTINUS MAXIMUS AUGUSTUS, To Eusebius.

IN That City which bears Our Name, by the assistance of God Our Saviour's Providence, a vast multitude of men have joyned themselves to the most Holy Church. Whereas therefore all things do there receive a very great increase, it seems highly requisite, that there should be more Churches erected in that City. Wherefore, do you most willingly receive that which I have determined to do. For it seemed fit, to signifie to Your Prudence, that you should order fifty Copies of the Divine Scriptures (the provision and use whereof you know to be chiefly necessary for the instruction of the Church) to be written on well-prepared parchment, by artificial Transcribers of Books most skilfull in the art of accurate and fair writing; which [Copies] must be very legible, and easily portable in order to their being used. Moreover, Letters are dispatcht away from Our Clemency to the [a] Rationalist of the Diœcesis, that he should take care for the providing of all things necessary in order to the finishing of the said Copies. This therefore shall be the Work of your diligence, [to see] that the written Copies be forthwith provided. You are also empowered by the Authority of this our Letter, to have the use of two publick carriages, in order to their Conveyance. For by this means, those which are transcribed fair, may most commodiously be conveyed even to Our Sight; to wit, one of the Deacons of your Church being employed in the performance hereof. Who, when he comes to Us, shall be made sensible of Our * Bounty. God preserve you, Dear Brother!

* Or, Humanity.

[a] Διοικήσεως καθολικοῦ. At this place διοίκησις signifies the Dioceses of the East. so the Romans termed a certain number of Provinces, which joyntly obeyed a Vicarius of the Prætorian Præfecture. For a Præfectus Prætorio had several Dioceses under his own dispose; but the Vicarii had but one Diocese. Further, this word began to be used in this sense about Constantine's times, as we learn both from Constantine's Letters recorded above, and also from some Laws of the Theodosian Code. Vales.

CHAP. XXXVII.

In what manner the Copies were provided.

THese things the Emperour gave order for. Which Order of his was immediately followed by the completion of the work it self; we having sent him [a] Ternions and Quaternions in Volumns magnificently adorned. Which very thing another answer of the Emperour's will attest. In which Letter (information having been given him, that the City Constantia in our Country, try, heretofore consisting of men notoriously superstitious, had by an [b] impulse of piety receded from their Pristine errour of Idolatry ;) he signified, that he rejoyced, and highly approved of that Action.

[a] Τεσσαρὰ καὶ τετρασσαρά. The Translatour renders it right, terniones & quaterniones. For Parchment Copies were usually digested into Quaternions, that is, four sheets were made up together, as Ternions are three sheets made up together. And the Quaternions had sixteen pages, the Ternions twelve. Further, in the last page of the Quaternion was set the number of the Quaternion, to wit, 1, 2, 3, and so on; as I have observed in the most ancient Copies, as well Greek as Latine. In a very old Copy of Gregorius Turonensis, which was written above nine hundred years since, in the last page of the Quaternion I found this mark, q. 1. that is, the first Quaternion. Further, the Reader is to be advertized, that in these words of Eusebius there is an Enallage. For he hath said τέλεσσαι ἐν τεύχει. whereas it ought rather to have been worded thus, τεύχη ἐν τέλεσσιν. Vales.

[b] Ὁρμῇ θεοσεβείας. In the Fuketian Copy this place is read thus, ὁρμητήριον θεοσεβείας, τῆς ἐμφερομένης μεταβεβληκυῖα εἰδωλικῆς πλάνης ἐχώρει. And so I guess it was written in Sr Henry Savil's Copy, because Sr Henry hath under-mark't these three words, namely, ὁρμῇ μεταβεβληκεν and πλάνης, with lines. Vales.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

How the Mart-Town of the Gazæi, by reason of [its embracing] the Christian Religion, was made a City, and named Constantia.

FOr Constantia in the Province of Palestine having at this very time embraced the Salutary Religion, was vouchsafed a signal honour, both from God, and from the Emperour. For, it was both termed a City, which it had not been before; and likewise changed its name for a better appellation, to wit, that of the Emperour's most religious Sister.

CHAP. XXXIX.

That in Phœnice there was a City made [termed Constantina;] and in other Cities the Idols were destroyed, and Churches erected.

THe same thing was likewise done in many other places. For instance, in a City of the Province of Phœnice, which is called by the Emperour's name. The inhabitants whereof having committed their innumerable Images to the flames, changed their worship of them, for the observation of the salutary Law. Moreover, in other Provinces, they came over in great companies, as well in the Country as in the Cities, to the saving knowledge [of God,] and destroyed their Images consisting of all sorts of matter (which before had been accounted sacred by them,) as if they were nothing: they also demolished their own Temples and places of worship, which were raised to a vast height, when no person ordered them to do it. But they erected Churches from the very foundations, and made a change of their former opinion, or errour rather. But, [a] to give a particular Narrative of all this pious Emperour's Actions, is not so much our business, as theirs who were vouchsafed a continual converse with him. After therefore we have in short [b] recorded in this work those matters which came to our knowledge, we will pass to the * later part of his Life.

* Or, Last time.

[a] Καθ' ἕκαστα γράφειν; In the King's, and Fuketian Copies, 'tis written καθέκαστα, in one word; which I rather approve of. For it follows, ἧκιστα τῆ θεοφιλεῖ πραγματείᾳ. But it would be better, were it thus written, τὰ καθέκαστα. Vales.

[b] Παραδόντες τῇ γραφῇ. The Translatour renders this place thus: nos verò quoniam breviter quæ nobis nota fuerunt, literarum monumentis mandavimus; but because we have in short committed to writing, those things which were known to us. But I render it thus; postquam ea quæ nobis nota sunt breviter exposuerimus, ad extremum ejus vitæ tempus Sermonem transferemus; after we have briefly declared those things which are known to us, we will turn our discourse to the last time of his Life. Which rendition is doubtless truer, and more agreeable to the words and meaning of Eusebius. For, if Eusebius had meant so as the Translatour thought he did, he would have said, ἤδη φθάσαντες. Vales.

CHAP. XL.

That having created his three Sons Cæsars in the three ten years of his Reign, He celebrated the dedication of the Martyrium at Jerusalem.

THirty * years of His Reign were now compleated [a]. Wherein his three Sons had at different times been created Colleagues of the Empire. Constantine, who bore the same name with his Father, was the first that partook of that honour, about the tenth year of his Father's Empire. His second Son Constantius, grac't with his Grandfather's name, was declared Cæsar about the time of the celebration of his Father's Vicennalia. His third Son Constans, who by his own name denotes Presence and Stability, was promoted to this honour about the thirtieth year of his Father's Reign. Thus therefore when (* according to a likeness of the Trinity as 'twere,) he had gotten † three Sons beloved by God, and had honoured them with the Colleagueship of his Empire, [b] at each period of ten years of his Reign; he thought his Tricennalia to be a [c] most opportune time, wherein he might give thanks to [God] the supream King. And he himself judged it best and most agreeable, should He celebrate the dedication of that Martyrium, which with all imaginable diligence and magnificence he had caused to be erected at Jerusalem.

* Or, Periods of years.

[a] Περιόδοι τῆς βασιλείας. After these words, a whole line was left out in the King's Copy, and in Rob. Stephens's Edition; which I make up thus, ἐν οἷς παῖδες αὐτῷ τρεῖς κοινωνοὶ τῆς βασιλείας διαφόρους, &c, wherein his three Sons had at different, &c. The repetition of the same word, namely βασιλείας, was the occasion that this whole line was omitted by the over-hasty Antiquarius [Transcriber of Books.] In the Fuketian Copy, the reading is, διαφόρους δ' ἀναδείκνυσιν χρόνους, excellently well. Thus by the addition of one small word, this place is perfected. But Sr Henry Savil supplied this place by adding three words, as did also Scaliger and Christophorson, παῖδες δὲ τρεῖς διαφόρους, &c. Vales.

* πεπλασμένῳ λόγῳ; an odd Expression.

† Or, A threefold issue of Sons.

[b] Ἐφ' ἑκάστῃ πεντάδι δεκάτους χρόνους. The translatour has rendred it ill, decimo quoque anno, every tenth year. For Constantine did not create his Sons Cæsars, every tenth year of his Empire. For he made Crispus and Constantinus, Cæsars, in the Consulate of Gallicanus and Bassus, on the Calends of March, which was the eleventh year of his Empire. But Constantius was created Cæsar, in the third Consulate of Crispus and Constantinus, on the sixth of the Ides of November, that is, on the nineteenth year of Constantine's Empire. Lastly, Constans was proclaimed Cæsar by his Father, in the Consulate of Palmatius and Zenophilus, on the eighth of the Calends of January, when Constantine was entred into the twenty eighth year of his Empire. as it appears from Idatius's Fasti. Wherefore Eusebius's words will be better rendred thus, singulis decenniis, in each of his ten years. But neither will what Eusebius hath said, be true, even this way. For Crispus and Constantinus junior were not created Cæsars in Constantine's first ten years, but about his first ten years. Therefore, these words want a favourable interpretation. Which Baronius not in the least perceiving, has recorded Crispus to have been made Cæsar on the year of Christ 315; which is a Prochronism of two years. Vales.

[c] Εὐχαειστήριον καιρὸν. I doubt not but it should be written εὐχαειστηρίων; which I wonder was not perceived by others. In the Fuketian Copy 'tis written, εὐχαειστήριον χωρὶν ᾧ εὐχωρὶν; which reading I like not. Vales.

CHAP. XLI.

That in this interim He ordered a Synod to be convened at Tyre, because of some controversies [started] in Egypt.

BUt the envious Devill, that Enemy to all good, [a] like some dark cloud opposed against the most splendid Rayes of the Sun, attempted to disturb the brightness of this Celebrity; brity; and again disquieted the Churches in Egypt with his own contentions. But the Emperour, whom God himself took care of, having again armed a Synod of many Bishops resembling the Host of God, set them in array against the Malevolent Devil: an Order having been issued forth from him, that [the Prelates] of all Egypt and Libya, Asia and Europe, should hasten, in the first place to a determination of the Controversie, and from thence to make a dedication of the formentioned Martyrium. Wherefore he commanded them, that by the by they should compose the differences, at the Metropolis of Phœnice. For, it was [he said] unfit, to approach the worship of God with dissenting mindes; in regard the Divine Law prohibits those that are at variance, from bringing their Gifts [to God,] [b] before they have embraced friendship, and are peaceably affected one towards another. These wholesome precepts [of our Saviour] the Emperour gave new Life to, by a continual meditation on them within his own mind; and advised them to set about the business with all imaginable consent and agreement of mind, by his Letter which runs thus.

[a] Οἷον εἰς. It must be written in one word, οἱονεὶ like, or, as 'twere; as I found it mended at the margin of Moræus's Copy: and a little after, the reading must be ὑπανίσχειν. Vales.

[b] Ἡ φιλίαν σπασαμβύους. Some body, who it was I know not, has noted at the margin of the Geneva Edition, that it should be ἀσπασαμβύους. But I had rather reade ασυσπαμβύους, before they have entred into a League. Nevertheless, in the Fuketian and Savil. Copies the reading is ἀπασπαμβύους, and we have rendred it accordingly. Vales.

CHAP. XLII.

Constantine's Letter to the Synod at Tyre.

VICTOR CONSTANTINUS MAXIMUS AUGUSTUS, To the Holy Synod [convened] at Tyre.

IT was manifestly agreeable to, and highly befitting the prosperity of our Times, that the Catholick Church should be void of all disturbance, and that the Servants of Christ should now be free from [a] all manner of reproach. But in regard some persons, prick't forward by the Spur of unsound Contention, (For I will not say that they leade a life unworthy of themselves;) attempt to confound all things; which [mischief] seems to Me more grievous than any Calamity whatever: for this reason I incite you, who (as the saying is) run of your own accord, that without any delay you would meet together, and make up a Synod; that you may give your assistance to those who want it; that you may administer a Remedie to the Brethren who are in danger; that you may reduce the dissenting members to an agreement; [and lastly,] that you may correct Faults, whilst opportunity does permit: to the end that, to so many and such large Provinces you may restore a befitting Concord, which (oh absurd!) the arrogancy of a few men hath destroyed. Further, that this thing is highly acceptable to God the Supream Lord, and more earnestly wish't for by Us than any desire whatever; Lastly, that to your selves (if you shall restore peace,) it will be an occasion of no small honour, I suppose all men do acknowledge. Delay not therefore; but henceforward raise your alacrity to the highest pitch, and make it your business to put an end to the present differences by a befitting [b] determination: [meeting together namely with all Sincerity and Faith, which that Saviour whom we worship, who lifts up his Voice * every where in a manner, does chiefly require [c] of us. But, as to what appertains to ‖ Our Piety, nothing shall be wanting to you. All things have been done by Me, which by your Letter you gave notice of. [d] I have written to those Bishops whom you desired, that they should come, and be partakers with you in the Common Care and Solicitude. I have sent [e] Dionysius the Ex-Consularis, who may both put in mind those Bishops that ought to come with you to the Synod, and may also be an Inspector of what is transacted, [f] but most especially of regularity and good order. But if any person (which I don't in the least suspect,) presuming at this juncture to violate our precept, shall refuse to be present; One shall be forthwith dispatch't from Us, who by an Imperial Order shall drive that person into Exile, and shall teach him, that 'tis in no wise fit to resist the determinations of an Emperour, when publisht in defence of the truth. As to what remains, it shall be the business of Your Sanctity, neither with hatred] nor favour, but in a manner agreeable to the Ecclesiastick and Apostolick Rules, to find out a befitting remedy, whether for Crimes, or such things as have hapned by mistake: to the end, you may free the Church from all reproach, may lighten Our Cares, and, having restored the pleasantness of Peace to those Churches now disturbed, may procure the eminentest Glory to your Selves. God preserve You, Beloved Brethren!

[a] Πάσης λοιδορείας. At this place λοιδορεία has a passive signification. And imports the same with the term βλασφημία, which occurs at the close of this Letter. And thus Christophorson renders it in the First Book of Theodoret's Eccles. Hist. chap. 28. Vales.

* Ἐκασταχοῦ; Valesius renders it, in omni negotio, in every business.

‖ Ἐμὴν εὐλάβειαν; which Valesius renders, religionem nostram, our Religion.

[b] Τοῖς προκειμένοις ὅροις. It must be made ὅρον, from Theodoret; and the word κειρὸν which follows presently, must be expunged: which word occurs not in the Fuketian Copy. Vales.

[c] Παρ' ἡμῶν δὲ ἐδέν. So the reading is in Theodoret; from whose first book, chap. 29, this place is made good, which in the Manuscript Copies, and in Stephens's Edition was imperfect. But in Moræus's Copy I found another punctation of this place, which in my judgment is righter, thus, ἀπαιτεῖ μάλιστα παρ' ἡμῶν· ὅδεν δὲ ἧς, &c; does chiefly require of us. But, as to what, &c. Only I would rather read παρ' ὑμῶν, from you. Nevertheless, the common reading may be born with. In the Fuketian, as well as the Turnebian Copy, and in Moræus's Book, 'tis written; ἀπαιτεῖ παρ' ἡμῶν· ὅδεν δὲ ἧς εἰς πλὴν ἐμὴν εὐλάβειαν ἡκόντων ὑμῖν ἐνδείξεται; according to our Rendition. Vales.

[d] Ἐπέσταλα, I have sent. It must be ἐπέστειλα, I have written, as the Translatour seems to have read. Yet in Theodoret and the Fuketian Copy the reading is, ἀπέσταλα πρὸς ὅς, I have sent to those, &c. Vales.

[e] Διονύσιον τὸν ἀπὸ ὑπατικῶν. Flavius Dionysius is termed Comes by Athanasius in his Apologetick to Constantius, where he relates a great deal concerning this Synod at Tyre, which was held in the Consulate of Constantius and Albinus, in the months August and September. This Dionysius had before been Consularis of Phœnice, in the Consulate of Januarinus and Justus, as it appears from the Fourth Law Cod. Theod. de Famosis Libellis. Vales.

[f] Ἐξαιρέτως δὲ. So indeed the reading is in Theodoret. But in the Fuketian Copy this place is written thus, καὶ ἧς περιπομένων δὲ καὶ τῆς εὐταξίας ἐξαιρέτως κατάσκοπος παρέσῃ. Which reading Scaliger, Bongarsius, and others found in their Copies. A little after I write, πλὴ ἡμετέραν κέλευσιν καὶ νῦν διακρέσωσι, from the Fuketian Copy and Theodoret. For there is no small emphasis in these words καὶ νῦν. Vales.

CHAP. XLIII.

That at the Feast of Dedication [of the Church] at Jerusalem, there were Bishops present out of all the Provinces.

AFter these Orders had been effectually put in execution, another Messenger from the Emperour arrived, who having brought [a] an Im-

[a] Σὺν γράμματι βασιλικῷ. In the Old Sheets the reading is συγγράμματι. In the Fuketian Copy there is an imperfection, and the last part of the word only occurs, thus ματι. Therefore Sr Henry Savil supplied it in this manner, σὺν νεύματι, with an Order; and so did Scaliger, and the rest. Vales.

perial

perial Letter, moved the Synod, that without any delay they would forthwith haſten their journey to Jeruſalem. All of them therefore left the Province of the Phœnicians, and by [the aſſiſtance of the] Curſus Publicus went whither they had received orders to go. At which time that whole place was filled with a numerous * divine aſſembly, the eminent Biſhops out of every Province having met together at Jeruſalem. For the [b] Macedonians had ſent the [Biſhop] of the Metropolis amongſt them: and the Pannonii and Mœſi [had directed thither] the choyceſt flower of God's youth in their Country. There was likewiſe preſent the Ornament of the Perſian Biſhops, an holy perſon and one that was incomparably well verſt in the divine Oracles. [c] The Bithynians alſo and Thracians * by their own preſence adorned the Convention. Nor were the moſt eminent [of the Biſhops] amongſt the Cilicians abſent. Thoſe of Cappadocia likewiſe who excelled for Learning and Eloquence, ſhined in the midſt of this Congreſs. Moreover, all Syria and Meſopotamia, Phœnice and Arabia, together with Paleſtine it ſelf; Egypt alſo and Libya, and thoſe who inhabit the Country of Thebais, all [met] together, and filled up that great Quire of God. Who were followed by an innumerable company of people out of all the Provinces. There was preſent together with all theſe perſons, an [d] Imperial Attendance; and from the Imperial Palace it ſelf, approved men were ſent, who, with Expences furniſhed by the Emperour, might illuſtrate the Feſtivity.

* Or, Quire of God.

* Or, Adorned the fullneſs of the Synod.

[b] He means Alexander Biſhop of the City Theſſalonica, who was preſent at the Synod at Tyre, as Athanaſius witneſſeth. By the Biſhops of Pannonia and Mœſia, Euſebius means Urſacius and Valens leading men of the Arian faction, who were ſent from the Synod of Tyre into Egypt, that they might there enquire concerning the Crimes wherewith Athanaſius had been charged, as Athanaſius relates in his Apologetick. Valeſ.

[c] He means Theogonius Biſhop of Nicæa, and Theodorus Biſhop of Perinthus, which was otherwiſe termed Heraclea; which Prelates were preſent at the ſame Synod, as Athanaſius and Theodoret do inform us. Beſides Theogonius, two other Biſhops out of Bithynia were preſent at the Synod of Tyre, namely Euſebius of Nicomedia, and Maris of Chalcedon. Valeſ.

[d] Athanaſius in his Apologetick to Conſtantius, pag. 788, ſpeaking concerning this Synod, does atteſt, that Conſtantine ſent the Palatine Souldiers, who were to obey the commands of the Biſhops: His words are theſe, καὶ κόμης διοικήσων ἀποσέλλεται, καὶ γραπτὰ δοῦφόροι δίδοντα τοῖς περὶ εὐσέβιον. Valeſ.

CHAP. XLIV.

Concerning their Reception by Marianus the Notary, and concerning the money diſtributed amongſt the poor, and the ſacred Gifts of the Church.

* That is, The approved men ſent from the Imperial Palace.

But, over * all theſe there was appointed as chief, a [a] perſon highly acceptable and uſefull to the Emperour; one that was eminent for his Faith, Religion, and Skill in the Sacred Scriptures. Who having been famous for his confeſſions in defence of piety during the times of the Tyrants, was deſervedly entruſted with the ordering of theſe matters. This perſon therefore with all imaginable ſincerity paid obedience to the Emperours Commands, and honoured the Synod with a moſt Courteous Reception, entertaining them with ſplendid Feaſts and Banquets. But, amongſt the indigent and naked, [b] and amongſt infinite multitudes of poor of both Sexes, who ſtood in great need of food and other neceſſaries, he diſtributed vaſt quantities of money, and a great number of Garments. Laſtly, he variouſly adorned the whole Church with magnificent and royal ſacred Gifts.

[a] This was Marianus the Tribune and Notary, as 'tis ſaid in the Contents of this Chapter, and in Sozomen. He bore the ſame dignity under Conſtantius, as Athanaſius atteſts in his Book de Synodis Arimini & Seleuciæ. Valeſ.

[b] Πενήτων δ' ἀνδρῶν. It muſt be written πανήπτων τε ἀνδρῶν. There is the ſame errour in the foregoing Chapter; where the reading is ἀιγυπτῷ δὲ καὶ λιβύῃ, inſtead of ἀιγυπτός τε; in which manner 'tis written at both places in the Fuketian Copy. Valeſ.

CHAP. XLV.

Various Diſcourſes of the Biſhops, in the Sacred Aſſemblies; as alſo of Euſebius himſelf the Authour of this Work.

Such was the Service performed by this perſon. But the Miniſters of God adorned the Feſtival, partly with their prayers, and partly by their Diſcourſes. [a] For ſome of them with praiſes celebrated the [b] Benignity of the Religious Emperour towards the Univerſal Saviour, and in their Orations ſet forth the Magnificence of the Martyrium. Others * entertained their hearers with Theologick diſcourſes upon the divine Dogmata, fitted to the preſent ſolemnity, as with ſome ſplendid banquet of rational food. Others † interpreted the Leſſons of the divine Volumns, and diſcloſed the Myſtick meanings. But ſuch as were unable to arrive at theſe things, appeaſed the Deity with unbloudy Sacrifices and myſtick Immolations; humbly offering up their prayers to God, for the common Peace, for the Church of God, for the Emperour himſelf who was the Occaſioner of ſuch great Bleſſings, and for his pious Children. At which place we our ſelves alſo, who were vouchſafed ‖ Bleſſings much above our deſerts, honoured the ſolemnity with various diſcourſes uttered in publick; ſometimes making deſcriptions in writing of the ſtateline's and magnificence of the Royal Fabrick; at others, [c] explaining the meanings of the prophetick Viſions, in a manner befitting the preſent [d] Symbols and Figures Thus was the Feaſt of Dedication celebrated, with the greateſt joy imaginable, [e] on the very Tricennalia of the Emperour.

[a] This whole paſſage, as far as thoſe words, Others interpreted, &c, was wanting in the Kings Copy and in Robert Stephens Edition: which words Learned men have inſerted from ſome Manuſcript Copy, as I judge. For they ſeem to me to be genuine, and to proceed from Euſebius's own ſtile. They do indeed occur in the excellent Fuketian Copy; but in Sr Henry Savil's, they are wanting. For, at this place Sr Henry hath made this Remark. Chriſtophorſonus hoc loco, &c. At this place Chriſtophorſon has from his own Copies inſerted theſe following words, which to me ſeem ſcarce agreeable to this place, ὅτι μὲν τῷ θεοφιλεῖ, &c Valeſ.

[b] Τὴν εἰς τὸν τῶν ὅλων σωτῆρα δεξίωσιν. Euſebius does, not without reaſon, term that kindneſs and benignity which the Emperour Conſtantine made uſe of towards the Prieſts of God, a benignity towards Chriſt himſelf. For, kindneſs towards his Miniſters, redounds to the honour of the Lord himſelf. Therefore ſays Chriſt in the Goſpel, He that receiveth you, receiveth me: and, that which you have done to one of them, you have done to me. Valeſ.

* Or, Delivered to their hearers Theologick, &c.

† Or, Made interpretations of the divine readings.

‖ Or, Goods.

[c] Τὰς φερομένας ποτὲ μύθους θεωρίας. Here the words ſeem to be tranſpoſed, a thing which, as we have told you, is frequently done in theſe Books. Above therefore is muſt be written, τὰς ἀφορήσεις ποιοῦντες, making deſcriptions; and here the reading muſt be, ἐρμηνεύοντες θεωρίας, explaining the meanings, &c. But ſome body will perhaps aſke, what thoſe Prophetick Viſions are, which Euſebius means here. He means, if I miſtake not, that place which occurs in the third chapter of Zephaniah, verſe 8; διὰ τοῦτο ὑπόμεινόν με, λέγει κύριος, εἰς ἡμέραν ἀναστάσεώς μου εἰς μαρτύριον. For Cyril of Jeruſalem alſo, in his fourth Homily, explains this paſſage of Zephaniah concerning the Martyrium or Church, which Conſtantine erected in the place of our Lord's Reſurrection. Valeſ.

[a] Τοῖς περικειμένοις συμβόλοις. He terms the Jeruſalem Church, and all its Members and Edifices, Symbols. See Euſebius's Oration in the dedication of the Church at Tyre, which is recorded in the tenth book of his Eccleſ. Hiſtory: where he aſſerts, that every member of the Church imported ſome thing that was myſtical. In the Fuketian Copy, the reading is, καὶεἰς τοῖς περικειμένοις συμβόλοις, without the conjunction καὶ. Valeſ.

[e] Ἐν αὐτῇ βασιλέως τριακονταετηρίδι. The Tranſlatour has rendred it right, triceſimo imperii anno, in the thirtieth year of his Empire. For the Dedication-Feaſt of the Jeruſalem Church was celebrated in the the year of Christ 335, on the Ides of September, Constantius and Albinus being Consuls, in Constantine's Tricennalia. At which time Constantine was in the thirtieth year of his Empire. τριακονταετηρὶς, does properly signifie Tricennalia, that is, a festivity of sports which were performed on account of the thirtieth year of an Emperours Reign. The Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle, in the Consulate of Constantius and Albinus, has these words: Τότων ἦρξ ὑπάτων ἦχθη τριακονταετηρὶς ἐν κωνσταντινουπόλει πάνυ φιλοτίμως περὶ ὀκτὼ καλανδῶν ἰουλίων; which in Idatius's Fasti occur rendred into Latine, in this manner; His Coss. Tricennalia Edidit Constantinus Augustus die 8. Cal. August 3 in the Consulate of these persons, Constantinus Augustus published his Tricennalia, on the eight of the Calends of August. Yet sometimes τριακονταετηρὶς and Tricennalia are taken for the thirtieth year. So Jerome relates, that Dalmatius was created Cæsar in Constantine's Tricennalia, that is, on the thirtieth year of his Empire. But whereas I have said, that the Dedication Feast of the Jerusalem Church was celebrated on the Ides of September, of this matter I have Nicephorus my Authour, in his eight book, chap. 30. Indeed, in Saint Saba's Typicon, and in the Greek Menology, on the thirteenth day of September are placed τὰ ἐγκαίνια τῆς ἁγίας ἀναστάσεως. So also Sophronius in his Oration de Exaltatione Sanctæ Crucis; and this Festivity was observed every year, for the space of eight days. From these Authours the Alexandrian Chronicle must be corrected, wherein there is a mistake, as well in the day as the Consulate, in which these things were done. Vales.

CHAP. XLVI.

That He afterwards recited his Description of our Saviour's Martyrium, and his Oration upon Constantine's Tricennalia, before the Emperour Himself.

* Οἷαί τε ἐς βασιλέως φιλοκαλίας, and how great the Emperours attempts of Elegancy.

But, what the Form of our Saviour's Church is, what the fashion is of the Salutary Cave, * how great the Beauty and Elegancy of the Structure, and [Lastly] how [a] many the Donaria, made partly of Gold and Silver, and partly of pretious Stones; we have, as well as we could, comprized in a peculiar Treatise, and have dedicated it to the Emperour Himself. Which Book we shall make a seasonable publication of [b] at the close of this present Work: whereto we will annex that Oration concerning his Tricennalia, which, having not long after made a journey to Constantinople, we recited in the Emperours own hearing. This was the [c] second time that we celebrated the praises of God the supream King, within the Imperial Palace. Which [Oration] the Emperour, who was beloved by God, being an auditor of, seemed like one transported with joy. And this he himself manifested after the Speech was done, in regard he entertained those Bishops that were present at a Banquet, and bestowed on them all imaginable honour.

[a] Amongst the other Donaria [Sacred Gifts,] which Constantine gave to the Jerusalem Church, there was a Sacerdotal pall woven with threads of gold, which the Bishop made use of in his performing the solemn prayers, as Theodoret relates, Eccles. Hist. book 2. chap. 27. Vales.

[b] Μετὰ τὸν παρόντα λόγον, after this present Subject. That is, at the close of this work. The Translatour rendred it ill; Quod etiam cum videbitur & absoluto opere edemus. But our Rendition is confirmed by Eusebius himself in chap. 32. of this book. Vales.

[c] For Eusebius had before made a speech in the Palace, as he himself attests above, at chap. 33, where see what we have noted. Vales.

CHAP. XLVII.

That the Synod at Nicæa hapned on Constantine's Vicennalia; but the Dedication [of the Church] at Jerusalem [was performed] on His Tricennalia.

This Second Synod, the greatest that we have known, the Emperour convened at Jerusalem, after that first Synod, which he had assembled [a] at the most eminent City of Bithynia. That was a triumphal [Synod,] which in the Vicennalia of [Constantine's] Empire paid its [b] Vows for the Victory obtained over his Enemies and Adversaries, in that very City which had its name from Victory. But this [Synod] grac't the period of his third Decade; when the Emperour Dedicated to God the Giver of all Good, [c] the Martyrium, as 'twere some Sacred Present of Peace, [erected] round the very Monument of our Saviour.

[a] Ἐπὶ τῆς Βιθυνῶν διαφανοῦς. I had rather write διαφανεῦς, which reading I have followed in my Version; nor do I doubt, but Eusebius wrote so. Further, in this place there is an ambiguity. For the words may be construed thus; τοῦτο δεύτερον μεῖζόν ὧν ἴσμεν σύνοδον μετὰ τοῦτο πρῶτον ἐκεῖνον, &c, This Second Synod, which we know to be the greatest after that First [Synod] which he had assembled at the most eminent City of Bithynia, the Emperour convened at Jerusalem. Which sense Christophorson has followed, Vales.

[b] Ἐυχὴν τῆς νικηφίας. I embrace the emendation of Learned men, which I found written in Moræus's Copy also; viz. ἐυχὴν ὑπὲ τῆς νικηφίας. Nevertheless, I would willingly add another word also, in this manner, ἐυχὴν νικητήριον ὑπὲ τῆς νικηφίας, &c; and have rendred it accordingly. Further, the term ἐυχὴ must be rendred vota, vowes. For Eusebius alludes to the usage of the Romans, who in such Solemnities made Vowes for the safety and felicity of the Prince, as 'tis apparent from Plinius's Epistle to Trajan. Moreover, in old Coyns we reade such Vows as these thus expresst, VOTIS XX. MULTIS XXX. But in other Coyns 'tis thus, SIC X. SIC XX. That is, So His Decennalia, So His Vicennalia. In the Fuketian Copy 'tis plainly written ἐυχὴν ὑπὲ τῆς νικηφίας. Vales.

[c] Τὸ μαρτύριον. In the Letter of the Bishops of the Jerusalem Synod, (who by Constantine's Order met in order to the Dedication of this Church, which Letter Athanasius records in his Apologetick, pag. 801,) 'tis termed σωτήριον μαρτύριον, the Salutary Martyrium. Jerome also in his Chronicon terms it the Martyrium; as does likewise Sozomen book 2. chap. 26, Marcus in the Life of Porphyrius Bishop of Gaza, and Eucherius in his Book de Situ urbis Hierosolymitanæ. See Our Letter de Anastasi, &c, wherein we have at large proved against Jacobus Gretserus and Jacobus Sirmondus, that there was only one Church erected by Constantine, which was termed the Martyrium and Anastasis. Which Letter we thought good to make a second publication of, at the close of our Notes, pag. 304, &c. Vales.

CHAP. XLVIII.

That Constantine was displeased with One, who praised Him too highly.

[a] After the performance of all these things; when the Emperour's God-like Virtue was cry'd up in the Discourses of all men, one of the Ministers of God was so bold, as to pronounce Him blessed to His very face: in regard he had both been vouchsafed the supream Empire over the whole Roman world in this Life present; and also, in that to come, should reign together with the Son of God. But he, much displeased at the hearing of this Expression, advised the man, that he should not presume to utter such words; but, rather that by prayer he would make his humble request to God, that as well in the Life present, as in that to come, * He might appear worthy of being reckoned amongst the servants of God.

[a] This whole clause, as far as the word ἀπέφηνεν in the Greek, or, His very face in the English, was wanting in the Kings Copy, and in Robert Stephens's Edition: Learned men had inserted it, whether from some Manuscript Copies, or from conjecture, I know not. But at length, the Fuketian Copy has informed us, that these words were on a good account inserted, from the Manuscripts. Vales.

* Constantine.

CHAP.

CHAP. XLIX.

The Marriage of Constantius Cæsar, His Son.

WHen the Thirtieth year of His Empire was ended, He celebrated the Marriage of his second Son, [a] having long before performed the same thing for his elder Son. Banquets therefore and Feasts were made; the Emperour Himself led His Son the Bridegroom, and in a most splendid manner entertained and feasted the whole company, the men apart by themselves, and the women in separate places by themselves. * Rich Gifts were likewise bestowed, both on the people, and on the Cities.

[a] Παλαιστάτης τε ἤδη τῆς πρεσβυτέρου. Questionless it must be written thus, πάλαι ταὐτὸ ἤδη τῇ πρεσβυτέρῳ τῷ ἡλικίαν διαπεραξαμένῳ, having long before performed, &c. Vales.

* Or, Rich distributions of gifts.

CHAP. L.

The Embassie and Presents [sent from] the Indians.

AT the same time arrived Embassadours from those Indians who dwell at the rising Sun, and brought with them Presents. Which were various sorts of pretious Stones of an exquisite Lustre, and wild Beasts of a Nature different from those known amongst us. All which they presented to the Emperour, [thereby] declaring that his Empire reach't [a] to the Indian Ocean it self; and that the * Roytelets of the Indians Country honoured him with Pictures, and Statues erected to Him, and profest their acknowledgment of Him to be the Emperour and King. [b] Indeed, at the beginning of his Empire, the Britains [who dwell] at the setting Sun, were the first that submitted themselves to his Government: but now the Indians whose habitation is at the rising Sun, [did the same.]

[a] Εἰς αὐτὸν ὠκεανὸν, to the very ocean it self. It must, I think, be written, εἰς αὐθις ὠκεανὸν, to their [that is, the Indian] Ocean it self.

* Leaders, or, Princes.

Further, Metrodorus the Philosopher seems to have been the chiefest person of this Indian Embassie; who from the King of the Indians brought to Constantine very many Gems and Pearls: and pretended that he had brought many more, had not the Persian King taken them from him in his passage thorow Persia. By which lie Constantine being prevailed upon, whilst with too much eagerness he pursues what had been taken from Metrodorus, raises the Persian War, as 'tis recorded by Cedrenus and Amm. Marcellinus. But Cedrenus relates that in a place wholly foreign and disagreeable, namely in Constantine's twenty first year; whereas he ought to have placed it on the thirty first year of Constantine. For in this year the peace between the Romans and Persians was broken. Vales.

[b] Ἀρχομένῳ μὲν τῆς βασιλείας. In the Fuketian Copy 'tis ἀρχομένῳ μὲν γὰρ τῆς, &c. But in the Old Sheets the reading is, ἀρχομένῳ μὲν ἐν, which I like better. Vales.

CHAP. LI.

That Constantine having parted His Empire betwixt His three Sons, instructed them in the Art of Governing, * and Offices of Piety.

* Or, With Piety.

WHen therefore he had reduced both the Limits of the whole world under His own power, He divided his whole Empire, distributing some paternal inheritance as 'twere to his dearest Relatives, amongst His three Sons. To the Elder, He gave his Grand-fathers allotment: to the Second, the Empire of the East: to the Third, that Portion which lay in the midst between these two. But being desirous to procure a good inheritance for his Children, and such as might be salutary to their Souls, he scattered the seeds of Piety in their minds: partly by [a] cultivating them himself with divine Precepts; and partly by appointing them Tutors, who were persons of approved Piety. He likewise set over them Teachers of Secular Learning, such persons namely as were arrived at the heighth of Literature. Others instructed them in the knowledge of the Military Art. Others were their Instructours in politicks, and matters Civil. And [lastly,] others rendred them knowing and expert in the Laws. Moreover, to each of His Sons was allotted an Imperial * Attendance, [namely] † Scutarii; Hastati; Protectors; Legions also, and Military Companies; and Officers that commanded them, [to wit,] Centurions, Tribunes, and ‖ Duces: of whose skill in warlike affairs, as likewise of their good affection towards them his Sons, the Father had had experience.

[a] Παιδάγων, instructing, or furnishing them with. Eusebius makes use of this word in the same sense again, in the next chapter. Vales.

* Or, Furniture.

† Or, Souldiers armed with shields; Spear-men; Guards of their Bodies.

‖ Or, Captaines.

CHAP. LII.

How, when they were arrived at man's estate, He taught them Piety.

FUrther, during their being Cæsars as yet very young, they had (as 'twas requisite,) Ministers and Councellours present with them, who administred the publick affairs.

[a] But when, afterwards, they grew up to be men, their Fathers instruction onely, was sufficient for them. Who sometimes incited them, when present with him, by private instructions to an imitation of himself; and taught them to become exact followers of his own piety: at other times, when they were absent, by his Letters he suggested to them Imperial Precepts. The first and chiefest whereof was this, that they should value the knowledge and worship of God the supream King, above all riches whatever, and before the Empire it self. But at length he gave them power, of themselves to do what might be of advantage to the publick: and before all things gave them this in charge, that they should take a particular care of God's Church, and commanded them openly to own themselves to be Christians. And in this manner he instructed his Sons. But they, incited not so much by Precept as their own alacrity of mind, exceeded the admonitions of their Father; in regard they had their minds always intent upon piety towards God, and in the very Palace it self exactly performed and observed the Rites of the Church, together with all their Domesticks. For this was the work of the Fathers Care, to assign no Domesticks to his Sons, but such as were * worshippers of God. [b] The Commanders also of the First Companies, and they to whom the Care of the State was entrusted,

[a] Εἰς ἄνδρας τε λοιπὸν. Any body may of himself perceive, that it should be written εἰς ἄνδρας δὲ, But when, &c: which I should not have taken notice of, had I not fear'd least any one should think that it had escap't me. A little after, the word παρορμῶν seems to be superfluous. Vales.

* That is, Christians.

[b] Καὶ οἵ πρῶτοι δὲ τάγμάτων. So in the foregoing chapter Eusebius makes use of the word τάγματα to signifie Military Companies; and in many other places. So Sozomen book 1. chap. 8. ἔξ ἐκείνης δὲ καὶ τὰ ῥωμαίων τάγματα, ματα, ἃ νῦν ἀριθμὸς καλοῦσιν, ἔκαστον ἰδίαν σκηνὴν κατεσκεύασατο. from that time the Roman Legions, which they now term Companies, provided each of them a Tabernacle proper to themselves. Further, this place seems to me to be imperfect, and must be made good in this manner; καὶ τῶν πρώτων δὲ ταγμάτων ἡγεμόνες, καὶ οἱ τῶν τῆς κοινῶν, &c; and we have rendred it accordingly. For Eusebius says, that both the Commanders of the first Companies, and those also to whom the Care of the Republick was committed by Constantine, were Favourers of the Christian Religion. By those former persons, he means the Tribunes and Comites of the Scholæ: but the latter are the præfecti Prætorio, the Quæstors of the sacred Palace, the Masters of the Offices, and the others who transacted Civil affairs. Vales.

* were of this sort. For he † confided in persons who profest a faith in God, as in some strong and firm walls. [c] When this thrice-blessed Prince had [thus] constituted these matters also, God the disposer of every good thing, (in regard all affairs of the State had been put into good order by the Emperour,) thought it now at length an opportune time, for translating him to a better allotment, and brought upon him the debt due to Nature.

* Viz. Christians

† Or, Fortified himself with, &c.

[c] Ἐπεὶ δὲ καὶ ταῦτα διεκεῖτο. I like not the conjecture of the Learned, who after the word ταῦτα have added καλῶς, thus, well constituted, &c; which addition I found written in Moræus's Copy also. But if any thing was to have been added, I would rather have put in ὕπως, thus. For καλῶς can have no place here, in regard in the following clause εὐδιατυθέντων occurs. Otherwise it would be an idle repetition, nor would there be more said in the second member of the period, than in the first. Nevertheless, in the Fuketian Copy the reading is καλῶς διεκεῖτο. Vales.

CHAP. LIII.

That after He had Reigned about two and thirty years, and lived above sixty, He had a Body that was sound and healthy.

[a] This passage of Eusebius hath led many persons into a mistake. Amongst whom was Dionysius Petavius, who both in his Annotations on Epiphanius's Book de Ponderibus, and also in his eleventh Book de Doctrinâ Temporum, confiding in the authority of Eusebius, was of opinion that Constantine died in the thirty second year of his Reign. Most of the Ancients have likewise written the same thing: viz. Philostorgius, Book. 2. Theodorus Lector in his Collectanea; Epiphanius, and the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle: and amongst the Latines, Aurelius Victor. But this opinion seems to me wholly absurd. For they who think thus, must of necessity affirm also, that the same Constantine began his Empire on the year of Christ 305, Constantius the fifth time and Maximianus being Consuls. And, that on the same year Constantius Augustus the Father of Constantine departed this Life. But, on the year following which is the year of Christ 306, Constantius Augustus was Consul the sixth time with his Colleague Maximianus, as all the Fasti do constantly affirm. Wherefore Constantine's Reign can be brought but from the year of Christ 306. Now therefore, whereas he died in the Consulate of Felicianus and Titianus, that is on the year of Christ 337, on the twenty second of the month May, as 'tis agreed on amongst all Writers, it is plainly made out, that Constantine Reigned thirty years, and ten months, three days only excepted. For he had been created Cæsar on the eighth of the Calends of August, as Idatius writes in his Fasti. Eutropius therefore and Rufinus are right in their affirming, that Constantine ended his Life in the thirty first year of his Empire. Our Eusebius also says true in his Chronicon, that Constantine Reigned thirty years and ten months. Further, whence it has hapned, that our Eusebius here, and most of the Ancients have attributed two and thirty years Reign to Constantine, this, as I think, was the reason. Two years before his death, Constantine had celebrated his Tricennalia, in the Consulate of Constantius and Albinus, as Eusebius has related above. They thought therefore, that the thirtieth year of Constantine's Reign had been compleated when those men were Consuls; which nevertheless is false, as I have noted above. Besides, from the beginning of Constantine's Reign, unto his death, two and thirty Pair of Consuls are reckoned. Whence it might have hapned, that they should believe him to have died in the thirty second year of his Empire. Further, some Chronologers have ascribed the years of his Father Constantius, because he Reigned but a very short time, to Constantine. But the Reader is to be advertized, that the most Learned Petavius has at length changed his Sentiment, and has embraced the Common opinion concerning the years of Constantine's Reign, and concerning its beginning; as 'tis apparent from the Fourth Book of the Second part of his Rationarium Temporum. Vales.

[a] This passage of Eusebius hath led many persons into a mistake. Amongst whom was Dionysius Petavius, who both in his Annotations on Epiphanius's Book

HE Compleated the time of His Reign in [a] two and thirty years, abating some few months and days: but the space of His Life was about double as much. At which age his Body continued free from Diseases, firm, void of all manner of blemish, and youthfuller than any the most juvenile Body; beautifull to behold; and strong to do any thing whatever, that was to be performed by strength. In so much that, he could exercise as a Souldier; ride; walk; fight; erect Trophies against his conquered Enemies; and, according to his own usage, could obtain unbloudy Victories over his opposers.

CHAP. LIV.

*Concerning those who abused his eximious humanity, to * avarice and a pretence of Piety.*

* Or, Insatiableness, and Hypocrisie.

HIS Mind also arrived at the heighth of humane perfection; being adorned with all manner of † accomplishments; but most especially, with humanity. Which, nevertheless, many persons found fault with, by reason of the baseness of ill men, who ascribed [the occasion of] their own badness to the Emperours [a] patience and clemency. Indeed, even we our selves beheld the mighty prevalency of these two Vices in those times; [b] the Violence namely of insatiable and ill men, who infested almost all Mortals; and the unspeakable Dissimulation of those who craftily crept into the Church, and pretendedly took upon themselves the name of Christians. But the Emperours innate humanity and goodness, the sincerity of his Faith, and * Integrity of his Morals, induced him to credit the specious and outside piety of those men who were thought to be Christians, and who with a crafty mind pretended to † bear a true and sincere benevolence towards him. His committing of himself to which persons, did sometimes perhaps drive him upon those things that were unfitting; the Envy [of the Devil] bringing this Blot upon his other || praises.

† Or, Goods.

[a] Ἀνεξικακίαν αἰτίαν. The last word is here added by learned men from the Manuscript Copies; which word I likewise found in Mr Fuket's Book. But I had rather place this word before the Verb ἐπεγεφύρουν. So Eusebius [expresses himself] at the close of his Third Book concerning the Life of Constantine. It would indeed be far more elegantly written thus, αἰτίαν ἐπεγέφυρεν τῷ βασιλέως ἀνεξικακίαν. Vales.

* Καὶ τὸ τέρπτον τὸ φιλάληθες, and that Love and Truth which was in his disposition.

† Maintain, or, keep.

|| Or, Goods,

[b] Ἐπιεικῶς ἀπλήστων. I embrace the emendation of Learned men, which occurs also in the Fuketian Copy, viz. ἐπιεικῶν. Further, the judgment of our Eusebius is here to be taken notice of, who in the Reign of Constantine, as in some most beautifull Countenance, took notice of this Blemish, that he chose the worst and most rapacious men to be his friends, and to bear the publick Offices: and, that he was circumvented by the fraud and craft of certain persons, who pretended themselves to be Christians. Aurelius Victor reproves almost the same thing, in these words: Fiscales molestiæ severius pressæ. Cunctaque divino ritui paria viderentur, ni parùm dignis ad publica aditum concessisset. Quæ quanquam sæpius accidêre, tamen in summo ingenio, atque optimis Reip. moribus, quamvis parva vitia elucent magis. Amm. Marcellinus also in his sixteenth Book, attests the same. Nam proximorum fauces aperuit primus omnium Constantinus. Vales.

[c] Ἐνεπείρεσο. In the Fuk. and Sr Hen Savil's Copy the reading is ἐνεπιέζετο. Vales.

CHAP.

CHAP. LV.

How Constantine wrote Orations to the very last day of his Life.

BUt Divine Vengeance seized [a] those men not long after. But the Emperour himself had in such a manner furnished his mind with discursive knowledge, that to his very death, according to his accustomed manner, he wrote Orations; and, [b] as his usage was, made Speeches, and instilled into his hearers divine Precepts: He would likewise be continually making of Laws, sometimes about Civil matters, at others, concerning Military affairs: in fine, he employed his thoughts about all things that were advantagious, and of use to the life of men. But this is highly worthy to be recorded, namely that when he was at the point of death, he recited a certain Funeral Oration in the presence of his usual Auditory. And [c] having continued his Speech to a great length, he discoursed therein concerning the Immortality of the Soul, and concerning those who had spent their Lives piously, and concerning the Blessings treasured up with God himself for those that love him. But on the other hand, he made it apparent by many and those evident reasons, what manner of end they would come to, who had lead a contrary course of life; and gave an accurate description of the calamitous death of the impious. By his solid and weighty attestation to which truth, he seemed severely to touch those about him. In so much that, he asked one of them [d] who were puft up with a vain opinion of wisdom, what his Sentiment was in reference to those things which had been discoursed of. Who by his own testimony confirmed the truth of what had been spoken, and though much against his will, highly commended his reasonings against the worship of many Gods. By making such discourses as these to his Confidents, before his death, he seemed to render his way to a better allotment, smooth and plain.

[a] I suppose amongst others, Ablabius to be meant; who after Constantine's death, in regard 'twas believed that he attempted a Rebellion, was slain by the order of Constantius, as Eunapius does at large relate in the Lives of the Sophists. Vales.

[b] Σωώθως δὲ τὰς παρρόδους πιεῖσθαι. Above, at chap. 29 of this book, Eusebius has made use of the term παρρόδους, where see what we have noted. You might also reade παρσόδους, as 'tis written at the margin of the Geneva-Edition.

The Translatour persisting in his mistake, renders it here also, Congressus cum amicis habere, to hold meetings with his friends; whereas he ought to have translated it, conciones habere, to make Speeches, as 'tis plainly confirmed by the words following. Victor in his Epitome says the same likewise concerning Constantine: Commodissimus tamen rebus mutis fuit: Calumnias sedare legibus severissimis: nutrire artes bonas, præcipuè studia Literarum: legere ipse, scribere, meditare. Where meditari has the same import with μελετᾶν, that is, declamare, to declaim. Vales.

[c] Μακρὸν δὲ κατὰ τινας. Doubtless it must be written κατατείνας, having continued; as others have already remarked. Vales.

[d] Τινα τῶν δοκησσόφων. I had rather write τῶν δοκησσόφων. So Eusebius does usually term the Heathens, and especially the Philosophers, who thought themselves wiser than others. In the Vuketian Copy the reading is δοκησσόφων. But the third syllable has a line drawn under it. Vales.

CHAP. LVI.

How, making an Expedition against the Persians, He took the Bishops along with him, and [provided] a * Tent made in form of a Church.

* Or, Tabernacle.

THis also is worthy to be recorded, that about the forementioned time, upon his hearing of the motion of those Barbarians [who dwell] at the East, having said, that as yet there remained to him this Victory [to be obtained] over them, he resolved upon an Expedition against the Persian. Which when he had determined to undertake, he summoned together his Military Forces; and likewise conferred with the Bishops that were about him, concerning the designe of his Expedition; it being his chiefest care, that some persons should always be present with him, who were of use in order to the worship of God. They affirmed, that they would most willingly follow him, nor would in any wise leave him; but with their incessant prayers to God would ingage and fight together with him. At which news he was highly pleased, and described to them a way whereby they might go [a]. [b] Then he prepared a Tabernacle most richly furnished, made in the form of a Church, for the use of this War; wherein he resolved, in company with the Bishops, to pour forth his prayers to God the Giver of Victory.

[a] Αὐτὸς διεξύπνα. Those words which follow after these in the Geneva-Edition, unto the beginning of the 58th chapter, (which passage we have inclosed within this mark [ ],) were wanting both in the Kings Copy, and in Robert Stephen's Edition: and they have been added by Learned men, from conjecture as I think. For the chapters which follow are too short, and contain nothing more than the very Titles of the chapters; which is a thing altogether disagreeable to Eusebius's designe. Wherefore 'tis credible, that Learned men inserted these words from the Titles of the chapters which occur perfixt before the fourth Book. Further, in the Geneva-Edition, these words αὐτὸς δὲ, which occur after the verb διεξύπνα, must be expunged. For the imperfection begins before these words αὐτὸς δὲ νεῶν, &c. We have taken notice of a like mistake above. Our conjecture concerning this Supplement is plainly confirmed by the Vuketian Copy which (though it faithfully shews the other Supplements which are publisht by the Geneva-men, as we have noted in their places; yet) has not the Supplement of this place. Nor is this Fragment written in Turnebus's Copy, although all the rest occur written at the margin of his Book. Vales.

[b] Socrates (book 1. chap. 18.) relates the very same thing, in these words: τοσοῦτος δὲ ἦν ὁ τὸ βασιλέως φρὲν τὸ χριστιανισμοῦ πόθος, &c. Moreover, so ardent was the Emperours Love for the Christian Religion, that being about to ingage in a War with the Persians, He provided a Tabernacle made of Linen, painted with divers colours, much resembling a Church, even as Moses did in the wilderness, and this he would have carried about with him, that so in the most desert Regions he might have an Oratory ready. Which words of Socrates I have the more willingly produced, because I know that Socrates is wont most commonly to make use of the very words of Eusebius, in those passages which he borrows out of Eusebius. Therefore, these words of Socrates may supply the place of Eusebius's words. For I can very hardly be induced to believe, that those words which occur in this imperfection, are Eusebius's. Further, before this, in the Licinian War namely, Constantine had a Tabernacle of the Cross fixt without the Camp, into which he retired to fast and pray, as Eusebius attests Book 2. But in his preparation for the Persian War, Constantine did this further, that he built a Tabernacle in form of a Church. Sozomen relates, that from this practise of Constantine it was afterwards derived, that each Cohort in the Roman Army had its Tabernacle furnished like a Chappel, and peculiar Priests and Deacons, who might there perform Divine worship. Vales.

CHAP. LVII.

That having received the Embassie of the Persians, He watch't all night, together with others, on the Feast of Easter.

IN the interim the Persians, informed of the Emperours preparation for a War, and being extreamly fearfull of coming to an Engagement with him, [a] by an Embassie entreated him to make a Peace.

[a] Rufus Festus writes the same thing in his Breviarium. Constantinus rerum dominus, &c. Constantine supream in the Empire, at the latter end of his Life prepared an Expedition against the Persians. For the Nations in the whole world being subdued; and he being rendred more glorious by a fresh Victory obtained over the Goths, went down against the Persians with many Troops. At whose approach the Kingdoms of Babylonia trembled so much, that an humble Embassie from the Persians met him, and promised they would do what they were commanded. Nevertheless, they deserved not to be pardoned for the continual Eruptions, which they had attempted thorowout the East, under Constantius Cæsar. But Socrates says only this: ἀλλ' ἐ μὲν τότε ὁ πόλεμος, &c. But this War went on no farther at that time: For it was immediately extinguished by the fear which the Emperour had put the Persians into. Vales.

Wherefore, this most peaceable Emperour, gave the Embassie of the Persians a kind reception, and [b] readily entred into a League with them. The great Festival of Easter was now at hand: wherein the Emperour paid his Vowes to God, and together with others watch't all night long.

[b] Φιλικὰς δεξιὰς προθύμως σὺν ἐκείνοις ἐσπείσατο. You will here observe the Barbarism, not of Eusebius, but of him who has made up this chapter. For it ought to have been said, μετ' ἐκείνους ἐσπείσατο. Nor is this likely, that Constantine, who had drawn together all the Forces of the Roman Empire against the Persians, should have made a Peace with them. 'Tis certain, the contrary is affirmed by Rufus Festus, whose words we have produced above; as also by Eutropius, and Aurelius Victor. But Socrates intimates, that a Peace, or at least a Truce, was made with the Persian. Vales.

CHAP. LVIII.

Concerning the Building of that termed the Martyrium of the Apostles, at Constantinople.

[a] Who sees not, that this passage was made by another hand? For it does not in the least agree with the following chapter. In this chapter Constantine is said to have begun to build the Church of the Apostles, after Easter in the year 337. But in the following chapter, which 'tis manifest was written by Eusebius, that Church appears to be now finished. But from Easter to Pentecost, on which day Constantine died, the ground could scarce be dug up, in order to laying the foundation of the Temple. Wherefore that Church must necessarily have been begun to be built long before. See chap. 36. Vales.

[a] After this He began to build a Martyrium in that City which bore his own name, in memory of the Apostles.] And when he had raised the Church to an unexpressible height, he made it Splendid and Glorious by a variety of all manner of Stones, covering it with Crusts of Marble from the Foundation to the very Roof. He laid the inner-Roof all over with Lacunaria of very small work, and gilded it thorowout with Gold. [b] Above, instead of Tyles, Brass was laid, which afforded the whole Structure a secure defence against showers. Which [covering] being likewise over-spread with Gold, shined gloriously: in so much that, it * dazled their eyes who beheld it at a distance, [the Brass] † reverberating the Rayes of the Sun. But the whole [c] Roof was encompassed round with chased Net-work, made of Brass and Gold.

[b] Ἄνω χαλκὸς ὢν. It must be, ἄνω μὴ χαλκὸς. Vales.

* Or, Sent forth brightnesses to them who, &c.

† Beating back.

[c] Τὸ δωμάτιον. Above, at book 3. chap. 36, Eusebius terms the outward Roof of a Church, τὸ ἐκτὸς δώματα. Therefore δωμάτιον seems here to be the Roof of the whole Church, or at least of the Altar. Such Roofs built in form of a Circle, we French-men do at this day term Domats. Further, concerning the magnificence of this Church of the Apostles, Gregory Nazianzene, in his Poem de Insomnio Anastasiæ, writes thus:

Σὺν τοῖς δὲ μεγάλαυχον ἔδνον χειστὸν μαθηταῖς
Πλευραῖς τετρασκοπίοις τετεχα τιμόωσαν.

That is, And likewise the magnificent Temple of Christ's Disciples, distinguished by four sides in form of a Cross. In this Form Churches were heretofore built, as Gretser hath remarqued in his Books de Cruce, and Marcus in the Life of St Porphyrius. Vales.

CHAP. LIX.

A further description of the same Martyrium.

IN This manner was the Church it self beautified, by the Emperour's extraordinary Care and Munificence. But about the Church there was a most Spatious * Area, open to the pure Air. At the four sides whereof ran Porticus's [joyned one to another,] which inclosed the Area Scituate in the midst, together with the Church it self. Moreover, † Basilicæ, Baths, Rooms to lodge and eat in, and many other apartments built for their use who kept the place, were joyned to the Porticus's, and were equall to them in length.

* Or, Open Court.

† Οἶκοι βασίλειοι, Imperial, or stately houses.

CHAP. LX.

That in this [Church] also, He built * Himself a Sepulchre.

* Or, A Tombe for his own burial.

ALL These [Edifices] the Emperour * Dedicated [with this intent,] that He might consign to posterity the memory of our Saviour's Apostles. But he had another design in his mind, when he built this Church: which [purpose of his] was at first concealed; but in the end it became known to all men. For he had † designed this place for himself || after his death; foreseeing by a transcendent alacrity of Faith, that his own Body should after death be made a [a] partaker of the Apostles appellation:

* Or, Consecrated.

† Or, Treasur'd up a place there.

|| Or, At the fit time of his death.

[a] Τῆς τῶν ἁγίων ἀποστόλων προσρήσεως κοινωνόν. Eusebius alludes to that appellation of ἰσαπόστολος, that is, equall to an Apostle, which was given to Constantine after his death, as it occurs in the Menæa of the Greeks. Which appellation I can't tell why Scaliger (in his fifth Book de Emendatione Temporum,) should so much envy him, as to say that much was detracted from the praise and glory of the Apostles, because their name is given to Constantine. Doubtless, whoever shall accurately look into those things done by Constantine, in order to the propagation of the Faith of Christ, will acknowledge that name to have been deservedly given Him. If Thecla could deserve that appellation, which woman Basilius Seleucensis and others do term ἰσαπόστολον, how much more justly will it be given to Constantine, by whom 'tis effected, that we are now all Christians? Further, Eusebius makes use of the same words again, below at chap. 71. The Authour of the Synodicon speaking concerning the Nicene Synod; Κωνσταντῖνος, ὁ ἐν χριστιανοῖς βασιλεῦσιν ἀπόστολος, Constantine, the Apostle among the Christian Emperours. And so he is termed in the Office of the Greeks, at the 21st of May, as it occurs in the Typicon of St Saba. Vales.

* to the end that even after death, He might be esteemed worthy of the prayers which should be performed there in honour of the Apostles. Having therefore raised twelve † Capsæ there, as some Sacred Columns, in honour and memory of the choire of the Apostles, he [b] placed his own || Ark in the midst; on each side of which lay six Capsæ of the Apostles. And this, as I have said, he prudently considered of, [namely] where his Body might be decently deposited after he had ended his Life. Having in his mind ordered these matters

* Ὡς ἂν καὶ μετὰ τελευτὴν ἀξιοῖτο τῆς ἐνταῦθα μελλουσῶν ἐπὶ τιμῇ τῶν ἁγίων συλλειτουργιῶν τυγχάνων. In Robert Stephens's Edit. 'tis likewise worded and pointed in the same manner.

† Chests. In the Greek 'tis θήκας.

[b] But Chrysostome (Homil. 26. in 2. Epist. to the Corinthians, pag. 741,) says Constantine was buried in the Porch of the Church of the Apostles, as their Porter; and that matter he magnifies according to his usual way. These things therefore must be so reconciled, as that Constantine himself would have had his dead body buried in the midst of the Apostles: but, that Constantius, or some body else, placed it otherwhere. Indeed Zonaras writes, that Constantius deposited his Father's Corps in the Church of the Apostles, in a peculiar Porticus, which he had built for that very purpose. Vales. || Λάρναξ, Coffin.

long long before, he conſecrated a Church to the Apoſtles; * believing, that their memory would be uſefull and advantagious to his Soul. Nor did God account him unworthy of thoſe things which by his prayers he expected. For, as ſoon as the firſt [† Exerciſes of the Feaſt of Eaſter had been compleated by him, and when he had paſt over our Saviour's day, rendring it ſplendid to himſelf, and a Feſtival to all other perſons; whileſt he was intent upon theſe things, and ſpent his Life herein to the very [c] Cloſe of it, God, by whoſe aſſiſtance he performed all theſe things, opportunely vouchſafed him a divine paſſage to a better allotment.

* Ὠφέλειαν ψυχῆς ὀνησιφόρον τῷ θεῷ δι' ἣν μνήμην ποιεῖσθαι ἀπῶν πεδίων. And ſo 'tis in Robert Stephens.

† Theſe words within this mark [ ], from Exerciſes to Martyrs, are wanting in Robert Stephens; nor has Muſculus taken any notice of them in his Verſion.

[c] Ἐν τέτῳ τέλῳ. In Moræus's Book the reading is τέλως, and an Aſterisk is placed before that word. I reade therefore, ἐν τέτῳ μέχει τέλως τῷ ζωὴν διανύοντα, and ſpent his Life herein to the very cloſe of it. Farther, this Aſterisk aſſures us, that this imperfection was ſupplied from ſome Manuſcript Copy. Nevertheleſs, I queſtion much, whither even theſe words alſo proceed not from the conjecture of ſome Learned man. For this expreſſion ſeems to me ſcarce Greek, ἐν τέτῳ τῷ ζωὴν διανύοντα ἢ ἐν τέτοις ὄντα. And I had much rather write διανύσαντα. But the words which occur at the end of the imperfection, are much more ſuſpicious; viz. κἀνταῦθα τῷ ἅγι μαρτύρων μαρτυρίῳ ἐνδιαιτᾶσθαι οἴκῳ. For firſt, μαρτυρίῳ οἴκῳ is a fooliſh expreſſion, in regard Euſebius always ſays μαρτύριον, in the neuter gender. Then, why has he ſaid μαρτύρων, in the plural number? Was that Church dedicated to many Martyrs together? There was a famous Church at Helenopolis, dedicated to the Martyr Lucianus. In this Church therefore Conſtantine abode on account of prayer, when he returned from the warm waters. Wherefore it ought to have been ſaid τῷ μάρτυρος, of the Martyr, not ἅγι μαρτύρων, of the Martyrs. After I had written this note, I procured the Fuketian Copy, which has retained the true writing of this place. For thus it is; τῷ ἅγι μαρτύρων ἐυκτηρίῳ ἐνδιατεῖσθαι οἴκῳ, having made his abode for ſome conſiderable time in the Oratory of the Martyrs. In the ſame Copy the reading is ἐν τέτῳ τέλως without a chaſme: alſo, ἀπὸς ὧ ταῦτα ξωσξετέλει. Valeſ.

CHAP. LXI.

[The Emperour's] Indiſpoſition of Body at Helenopolis, and his Prayers. [Alſo] concerning his Baptiſme.

AT firſt an unequal temper of Body hapned to him: together therewith a diſtemper ſeized him. Soon after which he went to the * warm Baths of his own City: thence he goes to the City which bore the name of his own Mother: where having made his abode for ſome conſiderable time, in the Oratory of the Martyrs,] he put up his Prayers and Supplications to God. And when he perceived that the end of his Life drew near, [a] he thought this was the time of purgation, of all thoſe ſins which he had committed throughout his whole Life: firmly believing, that whatever ſins as a man he had faln into and committed, would be waſht from off his Soul, by the efficacy of myſtick words, [b] and by the ſalutary Laver. Having therefore conſidered this with himſelf, kneeling upon the pavement, he humbly beg'd God's pardon, making a confeſſion of his ſins in the very Martyrium: in [c] which

* Or, Baths of warm water, &c.

[a] Δεῖν ᾤετο. It muſt, I think, be written, διενοεῖτο, he thought. Valeſ.

[b] Λόγῳ λατρῷ. I ſuppoſe it muſt be written, σωτηρίῳ τε λατρῷ, and by the ſalutary Laver. For what can the meaning of λόγῳ λατρῷ be, eſpecially when he had ſaid before, λόγων ἀπορρήτων δυνάμει, by the efficacy of myſtick words. In the Old Sheets the reading is σωτηρίῳ λόγῳ λατρῷ, which plainly confirms our emendation. Valeſ.

[c] This place does chiefly call for the Reader's attentive diligence. For from it, that great queſtion concerning Conſtantine's Baptiſm may eaſily be determined. Euſebius ſays therefore, that the Emperour Conſtantine did then firſt of all receive impoſition of hands with ſolemn prayer in the Church: that is in one word, was then firſt made a Catechumen. For Catechumens were made by impoſition of the hand by the Biſhop, as the ſixth Canon of the Council of Orleance informs us: De his qui in infirmitate credere volunt, placuit eis debere manum imponi. The ſame is eſtabliſhed in Chap. 39. of the Eliberitane Council. Gentiles ſi in infirmitate deſideraverint ſibi manum imponi, ſi fuerit eorum ex aliquâ parte vita honeſta, placuit eis manum imponi, & fieri Chriſtianos. Which Eliberitane Canon (that I may give notice of that by the by,) ſeems to be nothing elſe but an expoſition of the Orleance-Canon: which may alſo be ſeen in other Chapters of that Council. Concerning the ſame Rite there is a famous place in Sulpicius Severus, Dial. g. 2, concerning the Miracles of Saint Martin, Chap. 3. Poſtremò cunctî caterватim ad genua beati viri ruere cæperunt, fideliter poſtulantes, ut eos faceret Chriſtianos. Nec cunctatus, in medio, ut erat, campo, cunctos impoſitâ univerſis manu Catechumenos fecit. The ſame Author, Book 1. Nemo ferè, ſays he, Ex immani illâ multitudine fuit Gentilium, qui non impoſitione manûs deſideratâ, in Dominum Jeſum relicto impietatis errore crediderit. S[t] Auguſtine alſo, in Book 2. de Peccatorum Remiſſione, Chap. 26. Non uniuſmodi eſt Sanctificatio. Nam & Catechumenos ſecundùm quendam modum ſuum per ſignum Crucis & Orationem manus impoſitionis puto ſanctificari. Petrus Chryſologus writes the ſame likewiſe in his 52[d] Sermon. Hinc eſt quod veniens ex Gentibus, impoſitione manus & exorciſmis ante à dæmone purgatur; & apertionem aurium percipit, ut fidei capere poſſit auditum. So alſo in his 105[th] Sermon. Namque ut incurvus peccatis Gentilis erigatur ad cœlum, prius à Gentili per impoſitionem manuum nequam ſpiritus effugatur. To theſe Authours, is to be annext Symeon Metaphraſtes, who in the Acts of the Holy Martyrs Indes and Domna, writes thus concerning Cyrillus the Biſhop. Ille autem cùm moderatè divinas ei eccinîſſet Scripturas, & Venerandâ Chriſti cruce eam obſignaſſet, tunc quidem eam facit Catechumenam. Laſtly, Marcus in his Book concerning the Life of Porphyrius Biſhop of Gaza: Die ſequenti parentes mulieris & Cognati euntes ad B. Porphyrium, prociderunt ad ejus pedes, petentes Chriſti ſignaculum. Beatus verò cùm eos ſignaſſet, & ſeciſſet Catechumenos, dimiſit illos in pace, præcipiens eis ut vacarent Sanctæ Eccleſiæ. Et Paulò poſt cùm eos catecheſi inſtituiſſet, baptizavit. From theſe Authours it appeares, that Catechumens were heretofore made in the Church, no otherwiſe than by an impoſition of the hand. Whereas therefore Conſtantine is ſaid to have then firſt received impoſition of the hand in the Church, 'tis plain that as yet he was not a Catechumen. But ſome body will ſay: who can believe that the Emperour Conſtantine was not till this time a Catechumen? whereas he had both been preſent at the Nicene Council, and had publiſhed ſo many Laws and Reſcripts in favour of the Chriſtians; had built ſo many Churches; had all manner of ways incited the Heathens to embrace the Faith of Chriſt; and had deprived the Hereticks and Schiſmaticks of their Churches. Indeed, Euſebius does atteſt, that he had performed all the Offices of a Chriſtian. For he writes, that he had buſied himſelf in faſtings and prayers, and had obſerved Sundays, and the Feaſts of the Martyrs; and alſo, that he had watcht all night in the Vigils of Eaſter. All theſe things, and many more beſides, which might be produced, doe prove Conſtantine, not to have been a Heathen; but they do not evince him to have been a Catechumen. 'Tis certain, in theſe four Books of Euſebius, wherein the Piety and Religion of Conſtantine is celebrated, it no where occurs, that Conſtantine prayed in the Church with the reſt of the Catechumens, or that he partook of the Sacrament of the Catechumens. And although Euſebius does in expreſs words affirm that, of Helena Auguſta the Mother of the Emperour Conſtantine, that ſhee ſtood in the Church with the reſt of the women; yet you will never find the ſame thing ſaid by him concerning Conſtantine. If it be objected, that Conſtantine made his abode at Helenopolis in the Church of the Martyrs, and pour'd forth his prayers to God: in the firſt place I anſwer, that this paſſage occurs not in our Copies, as I have obſerved a little before. Secondly, even Heathens had a liberty of going into the Churches, except only in the time of prayers; how much more might the Emperour do that, who profeſt himſelf a Chriſtian. Whereas therefore Euſebius does plainly inform us here, that Conſtantine received impoſition of the hand from the Prelates firſt at Helenopolis; it evidently appears, that before that time he was not a Catechumen. I know, that Athanaſius (in the Life of Saint Anthony, where he ſpeaks concerning the Letters written by Conſtantine to Anthony,) and Saint Auguſtine (in Epiſt. 162, and 166,) do give Conſtantine the Title of a Chriſtian Prince. But it may be anſwered, that they have in this matter followed the vulgar opinion and Report of all men; and, that they publickly termed Conſtantine a Chriſtian Prince, not becauſe he had as yet been initiated in the Sacraments of the Chriſtian Faith, but in regard he openly profeſt the worſhip of the Chriſtian Religion. Alſo, another far more weighty objection againſt our Opinion, may be brought from Chap. 32, Book 1. the Contents of which chapter run thus, ὅπως κατηχθεὶς κωνσταντῖνος, &c, That Conſtantine becoming a Catechumen, &c. Whence it may be concluded, that Conſtantine was made a Catechumen ſoon after that Viſion of a Croſs in the Heavens. But my anſwer is, that thoſe Contents were not made by Euſebius, but by ſome more modern perſon, as it is ſhown above. Beſides, κατηχθεὶς is taken there for μαθητευθεὶς, inſtructed, or, taught. 'Tis certain, Euſebius does not ſay any where in that chapter, that Conſtantine was made a Catechumen, but only, that the Biſhops being call'd for by him, opened to him the reaſon of that Celeſtial Viſion: and that thence forward he applyed himſelf to the reading of the Sacred Volumns. Valeſ.

[d] Τῶν διὰ χειροθεσίας εὐχῶν. So in the first book of his History chap. 13, these words occur, εὐχάς τε διὰ χειρὸς λαβὼν, received a blessing by prayer and the laying on of his hands. ——Saint Augustine, Book 2. de Remissione Peccatorum, Chap. 26, terms it Orationem manûs impositionis, the prayer of imposition of the hand. Vales.

place likewise he was first vouchsafed [d] imposition of hands with prayer. Removing from thence, he goes to the Suburbs of the City Nicomedia: where he called the Bishops together, and spake to them in this manner.

CHAP. LXII.

Constantine's request to the Bishops, that they would confer Baptism upon him.

THis was the time long since hop't for by me, when I thirsted and prayed, that I might obtain Salvation in God. This is the Hour, wherein even We may also enjoy that Seal which conferrs immortality; the Hour, wherein We may partake of that [a] Salutary Impression. I had heretofore taken a Resolution, of doing this in the [c] streams of the River Jordan, where Our Saviour himself, * in a likeness to us, is recorded to have partaken of the Laver. But God, who best knows what is advantagious to Us, in this place vouchsafes Us a participation thereof. [d] Let therefore all doubt be removed.

[a] Σωτηρίᾳ σφραγῖδι. A very fooliſh repetition, this; in regard he had ſaid juſt before, τῆς ἀθανασιοποιοῦ σφραγῖδος, that Seal which conferrs immortality. Wherefore I doubt not but Euſebius wrote σωτηρίᾳ χαρίσματι, the ſalutary gift. For ſo the Antients termed Baptiſm alſo, as, beſides others, Gregory Nazianzene informs us. Valeſ.

* Or, According to our example: So Valeſius renders it.

[b] Ἐνεῦθεν ποτέ. In the Fuketian Copy the reading is, τότ' ἐνεῦθεν πρὶν ποιῆσαι, I had heretofore taken a reſolution of doing this; in which manner I found it written in Turnebus's and Moræus's Copy. Valeſ.

[c] Leaſt any one ſhould raſhly find fault with Conſtantine, becauſe he coveted to be baptized there, where the Lord had heretofore been baptized by John; notice is to be taken, that moſt Chriſtians at that time coveted the ſame thing. Our Euſebius's words in his Book de Locis Hebraicis, are theſe. Βηθβααρὰ ὅπου ἦν ἰωάννης βαπτίζων πέραν τοῦ ἰορδάνου. καὶ δείκνυται ὁ τόπος, ἐν ᾧ καὶ πλείους ἤδη ἀδελφῶν εἰς ἔτι νῦν τὸ λίαν φιλοτιμοῦνται λαμβάνειν. Which place Jerome renders thus: BETHBAARA trans Jordanem, &c. BETHBAARA beyond Jordane, where John Baptized to Repentance: whence even to this day many of the Brethren, that is of the number of believers, deſirous to be born again there, are baptized in the vital Stream. Jerome takes Euſebius's words to be meant concerning Catechumens who earneſtly deſired that they might be baptized in Jordan. But the words of Euſebius may be underſtood concerning bare waſhing. Indeed, long after the age of Euſebius and Jerome, the Faithfull were wont to waſh in that very place, eſpecially on the Feſtival of the Theophania [that is, either on the firſt of February, or the ſixth of January, as Scaliger affirms in his Notes on 1 Cor. 15.] after the Baptiſm of the little children; as I have learnt from the Itinerary of Antoninus the Martyr, whoſe words are theſe. Juxta Jordanem verò ubi baptizatus eſt Dominus Jeſus, eſt tumulus cancellis circundatus. Et in loco ubi redundat aqua de alveo ſuo, poſita eſt Crux lignea intus in aquâ, & ex utrâque parte rupes ſtrata marmore. Et in vigilia Theophaniæ magnus ibi fit conventus populorum. Et quarta aut quinta vice gallo canente, fiunt Vigiliæ. Completis Matutinis, primo diluculo ſurgentes procedunt ad Sacra Miniſteria celebranda ſub divo. Et diaconi tenentes ſacerdotem, deſcendit ſacerdos in flumen. Et horâ quâ cæpit benedicere aquam, mox Jordanis cum magno rugitu poſt ſe revertitur; & ſtat aqua ſuperior in ſe uſque dum baptiſmus perficitur: inferior autem fugit in mare. And a little after: Baptiſmo autem completo, deſcendunt omnes in flumen pro benedictione, induti ſindonibus quas ſibi ad Sepulturam ſervant. The ſame thing is likewiſe related in the Hodœporicon of Saint Willibald which Caniſius publiſhed. Ad Jordanem, ubi Dominus fuit baptizatus, ibi nunc eſt Eccleſia in columnis lapideis ſurſum elevata: & ſubtus eccleſiam eſt nunc arida terra, ubi dominus baptizatus fuit. In ipſo loco & ibi nunc baptizant. Ibi ſtat crux lignea in medio, & parva derivatio aquæ ſtat illic; & unus funiculus extenſus ſuper Jordanem hinc & inde firmatur. Tunc in ſolemnitate Epiphaniæ infirmi & ægroti venientes habebant ſe cum funiculo, & ſic demerguntur in aquam. Epiſcopus Noſter Willibaldus balneavit ſe ibi in Jordane. Valeſ.

[d] Μὴ δή τις ἀμφιβολία πῆ γιγνέσθω. The meaning of theſe words is ſufficiently intricate. Had Conſtantine a mind to ſay this? Let all perſons now ceaſe from doubting concerning me, whether I be really a Chriſtian; let no body in future ſuſpect me to have embraced the Faith of Chriſt in words only, not from the inmoſt affection of my heart. Ἀμφιβολία may alſo be taken at this place for ἀναβολή; that is, Let all delay be removed. Which ſenſe does indeed agree better with what goes before. For in theſe words Conſtantine accuſes himſelf, becauſe namely he had too long deferred the Salutary Laver, and becauſe he had been ſo long wavering as 'twere and doubtfull, neither following the Rites and Ceremonies of the Heathens, nor embracing the worſhip of the Chriſtians. Valeſ.

For if the Lord of Life and Death, will have Us continue our Life any longer here; and if it be [e] once ſo determined [concerning me,] that I may in future be aſſembled with the people of God, and, being made a member of the Church, may together with all the reſt partake of the prayers: I will preſcribe my ſelf ſuch Rules of living, as may * befit [a ſervant of] God.

* Or, Be worthy of God.

[e] Ἄπαξ ὤειτω. There may be a two-fold meaning given of theſe words: for either τῷ θεῷ is underſtood with ὤειτω; which ſenſe the Tranſlatour of this Book has followed. Or elſe with ὤειτω, ἐμοὶ is underſtood, which meaning is in my judgment truer. Indeed, in the Kings Copy, after the word ὤειτω a middle diſtinction is placed. Beſides, that word ἅπαξ does plainly ſhew, that Conſtantine ſpeaks concerning himſelf. Laſtly, if theſe words were to be meant concerning God, Conſtantine would not have ſaid τῷ τοῦ θεοῦ λαῷ, with the people of God, but τῷ ἁγίῳ λαῷ, with his people. Valeſ.

Theſe were the words he ſpake. They performed the Rites, and compleated the Divine Ceremonies; and, [f] having firſt enjoyned him whatever was neceſſary, made him a partaker of the Sacred Myſteries. Conſtantine therefore, the only perſon of all thoſe that ever were Emperours, was by a Regeneration [g] perfected in the Martyria of Chriſt: and being dignified with the Divine Seal, [h] rejoyced in Spirit; 'tis mended προδιατεθειμένοις, which pleaſes me better. This verb διατέλλομαι is frequently taken in this ſenſe, in the Sacred Scriptures. Valeſ.

[f] Προδιατελεσθεὶς μύσεσι. In the Books of Turnebus and Moræus, at the margin

[g] Ἐτελείωτο. I can't approve of the Verſion of the Tranſlatours, who have rendred ἐτελειοῦτο, initiatus eſt, was initiated; as if the reading ought to be, ἐτελεῖτο. But I have choſe to render it, conſummatus eſt, was perfected. So S^t Cyprian in his 73 Epiſt. to Jubaianus, pag. 145; Quod nunc quoque apud nos geritur, ut qui in Eccleſia baptizantur, præpoſitis Eccleſiæ offerantur, & per noſtram Orationem ac manus impoſitionem Spiritum Sanctum conſequantur, & ſignaculo dominico conſummentur. 'Tis certain, the Greek Fathers do uſually term Baptiſm τελείωσιν, that is, Perfection and Conſummation. So Athanaſius in his third Oration againſt the Arians; Ἡ διατὴ ἐν τῷ τελειώσει τὸ βαπτίσματι συγκαλουμένη τοῦ παιδὸς ὁ υἱός. And a little after; ἢ διατὸ πεποιημένον σωτηρίαν τοῦ ποιήσαντος εἰς τὸν θεὸν πάντων τελείωσιν. Alſo, a little after he makes uſe of τελειωθῇς, for baptizari, to be baptized: Ὃν βαπτίζει ὁ πατὴρ, τοῦτον ὁ υἱὸς βαπτίζει· καὶ ὃν ὁ υἱὸς βαπτίζει, ὅτου ἐν πνεύματι ἁγίῳ τελειῶται. And in the following page he does again term Baptiſm τελείωσιν. In which places P. Nannius always renders it initiationem, initiation. Moreover, Gregory Nazianzene in his firſt Oration againſt Julian, gives Baptiſm the ſame name; ἄλλαι μὲν οὐχ ὁσίως τὸ λίαν ἀπορρύπτεται. τῶν καθ' ἡμᾶς τελειώσεων τὸν τελειωσίων τὰς μύσεις ἀντιπαθείς. Laſtly, Clemens Alexandrinus, Book 1. Pædagog. writes, that Baptiſm is called by various names. For, ſometimes, he ſays, 'tis termed χάρισμα; ſometimes φώτισμα; ſometimes λουτρόν. Then he annexes a reaſon why it ſhould be termed τέλειον: we term that τέλειον, ſays he, whereto nothing is wanting. What is farther wanting to him who knows God, and who poſſeſſes the grace of God, and now enjoyes Life eternal. Whence Clemens concludes thus; that all perſons who have believed in Chriſt, and who have been dipt in the ſacred Laver, are now perfect. ὅτῳ τὸ πιστεῦσαι μόνον καὶ ἀναγεννηθῆναι, τελείωσίς ὅτιν ἐν ζωῇ. Amongſt the Latines alſo, they were termed perfecti Chriſtiani, perfect Chriſtians, who had received Baptiſm, although they had not received impoſition of the Hand from the Biſhop. The Old Authour de Hæreticis non rebaptizandis, has this paſſage; Quod hodiernâ quoque die non poteſt dubitari eſſe uſitatum, & evenire ſolitum ut plerique poſt Baptiſma ſine impoſitione manûs Epiſcopi de ſæculo exeant; & tamen pro perfectis fidelibus habentur. And again afterwards, at pag. 135 Edit. Rigalt; he uſes a perfect Chriſtian for a Believer; and, an imperfect one for a Catechumen. See the place. ——Valeſ

[h] Ἡσθέλετο τῷ πνεύματι. That which I have already remark't to have hapned in many places of this work, has, I conjecture, been committed here alſo; namely, that the words are tranſpoſed. I am

of

of opinion therefore, that it must be read thus; ἐσάλλετο, ἀνεκαινοῦτό τε τῷ πνεύματι, rejoyced, and was renewed in Spirit. For he alludes to that verse of the known Psalm, Create a clean heart in me, O God, and renew a right spirit within me. Further, from this place of Eusebius we may gather, that Constantine was not sprinkled in his Bed, as the sick were wont to be; but received Baptism in the Church. For Eusebius says, τοῖς χειροθ μαρτυρίοις ἀναγεννώμενον, &c, was by a Regeneration perfected in the Martyria of Christ. Soon after this, from the Fuketian Copy and the Old Sheets write φωτὸς ἐνεπίμπλατο, was filled with light. Vales.

and was renewed, and filled with the Divine Light. The joy of his mind was great, by reason of his transcendency of Faith: but he was stricken with an amazement at the manifestation of the Divine Power. After all things had been duely performed, He was clothed with [1] white and Royal Garments, which shined like the Light; and rested himself upon a most bright Bed; nor would he any more touch the purple.

[1] 'Tis a known thing, that it was heretofore the custom, that Neophytes [i. e. persons newly baptized,] should be clothed in white garments, which they afterwards laid by, on the eighth day. Zeno Veronensis in his fifth Sermon ad Neophytos. Primus vos qui in se credentem reprobat nullum, non aries sed agnus excepit: qui vestram nuditatem velleris sui niveo candore vestivit. S[t] Austin in serm. 157. de Tempore. Paschalis Solemnitas hodiernâ festivitate concluditur. Et ideò hodie Neophytorum habitus commutatur: ita tamen, ut candor qui de habitu deponitur, semper in corde teneatur. Bede attests the same in his Book de Officiis. Septuagesima, says he, tendit ad sabbatum ante Octavas Paschæ, quando hi qui in Vigilia paschæ baptizantur, alba vestimenta deponent. Which words occur also in the Roman Order. In an old Pontifical Book of the Church of Senona, written out about six hundred years since, there is a solemn prayer extant, which the Bishop made over the Neophytes, at such time as they laid aside their Albes; which I thought worth while to annex here.

Benedictio in Sabbato quando albas deponunt.

Deus qui calcatis inferni Legibus captivitatem nostram resolutâ catenarum compage dignatus est ad Libertatis præmia revocare, ipse vobis præstet ita hanc vitam transigere, ut in illam perpetuam ipso duce possitis intrare, Amen. Tantum præbeat vobis fervorem Catholicæ fidei, ut sancti adventus illius sitis expectatione securi, Amen. Ut quicunque hic meruerunt purgare unda Baptismi, ibi præsentari valeant pio Judici candidati, Amen.

Farther, the Neophytes celebrated those eight days after Baptism with all imaginable Religion: in so much that, during those days, which were also termed Octavæ, they lookt upon it as impious, to touch the earth with their naked feet, as S[t] Austin writes in Epist. 119. ad Januarium. Also, during those days they were wont to go bare-headed, which was a sign of Liberty. S[t] Austin Serm. 4. in Dominica Octavarum paschæ. Hodie Octavæ dicuntur infantium: revelanda sunt capita eorum quod est indicium Libertatis. Habet enim Libertatem ista spiritalis nativitas, &c. On the contrary, the Catechumens went in publick with their heads covered, in regard they were a Type of Adam expelled out of Paradice, as Funilius says Book 2. Chap. 16. Which I am of opinion is to be understood concerning the Competentes only, who covered not only their heads, but their faces also, as Cyrill of Jerusalem informs us in his first Catechisme. But this covering was taken off of them in Baptism, or at least on the eighth day after Baptism. For this is rather intimated by those words of S[t] Austin, quoted by us a little above. And the same is likewise confirmed by Theodorus Bishop of Canterbury in his Liber Pœnitentialis, in these words. In monachorum ordinatione Abbas debet missam cantare, & tres Orationes complere super Caput ejus; & septem dies velet caput ejus; septimo die abstollat velamen. Sicut in Baptismo Presbyter septimo die velamen infantum tollit: ita & Abbas debet Monacho, quia secundus Baptismus est juxta judicium patrum; & omnia peccata dimittuntur sicut in Baptismo. Vales.

CHAP. LXIII.

In what manner he praised God, after he had received Baptism.

After this he lifted up his voice, and poured forth to God a prayer of thanksgiving. Which ended, he added these words. Now I know my self to be truly blessed: [a] now 'tis evident that I am accounted worthy of an immortal life: now I have an assurance that I am made a partaker of Divine Light. Moreover, he termed them miserable, and said they were unhappy, who were deprived of such great * Blessings. And when the Tribunes and Chief Officers of the Military Forces came in, and with tears bewailed [their own misfortune,] that they themselves should be left desolate; and prayed for his longer Life: He answered them also, and said, that now at length he was vouchsafed true life, and that only He himself knew, what great Blessings he had been made a partaker of. Wherefore, that he hastned, and would by no delayes defer going to his God. After this, he disposed of every thing according to his own mind. And to those Romans who inhabit the Imperial City, he bequeathed certain Annual Gifts. But he left the inheritance of the Empire, as 'twere some paternal Estate, to his own children; ordering all things in such a manner, as he himself thought good.

* Or, Goods.

[a] Πεφάνθαι ἄξιον πίστεως. The Geneva-Printers added the last word from the Books of Scaliger and Bongarsius; which I likewise found added in Moræus's Copy. But 'tis wanting in the Kings Copy, nor does it seem to me to be very necessary. In the Fuketian, Turnebian, and Savilian Copies, the verb πεπίστευκα is added after the word φωλὰς, therefore, there is a mistake both in Moræus's Book, and in the Geneva-Edition. Vales.

CHAP. LXIV.

The death of Constantine on the Festival of Pentecost, about noon.

Further, all these things were transacted in that great Solemnity of the most venerable and most sacred Pentecost; which is honoured with seven weeks, [a] but is sealed with * the number one. In which Festival hapned, both the Ascent of the Common Saviour into the Heavens, and also the descent of the Holy Spirit upon men, as the Divine Scriptures do attest. In this Solemnity therefore the Emperour, having obtained those things we have mentioned, on the last day of all, (which should any one term the Feast of Feasts, he would not be mistaken;) † about noon, was taken up to his God: leaving to mortalls that part of Himself which was related to them; but joyning to his God that part of his Soul which was endued with understanding, and the Love of God. This was the End of Constantine's Life. But, let us proceed to what follows.

* Or, An unit; Valesius renders it, unitate.

† Or, The Meridian hours of the Sun.

[a] Μονάδι τ' ὁπισφραγιζομένης. It must be written, μονάδι δ' ὁπισφραγιζομένης, as it occurs in the Kings Sheets. Farther, from this place 'tis apparent, that Pentecost is taken, not only for that day which is the fiftieth after Easter-day, but also for the seven weeks which follow Easter. Thus 'tis every where used, as well by Greek as Latine Writers. S[t] Jerome in his Letter to Marcella; Non quo per totum annum exceptâ Pentecoste jejunare non liceat. Hence, amongst the Greeks there is a Festival termed μεντηκοστή, which is the twenty-fifth-day from the Feast of Easter. Besides other writers, John Chrysostom makes mention of this Feast, in his Fifth Homily de Anna. Vales.

CHAP. LXV.

The Lamentations of the Milice, and Tribunes.

THE Protectors, and the whole Body of his Guards, rent their clothes forthwith, and casting themselves prostrate on the earth, beat their heads against the ground; uttering [a] mournfull expressions [intermixt] with Sighs and Cries; calling upon him their Master, their Lord, their Emperour; nor [did they invoke him barely] as a Master, but, like most * obedient Children, [they accounted him] as a Father. Moreover, the Tribunes and Centurions styled him a Saviour, a Preserver, a Benefactour. And the rest of the Army, as 'tis usual amongst flocks, with all imaginable decency and becoming Reverence, desired and wisht for their Good Shepherd. The common people also ran up and down all over the City, and by Shreikes and Cries gave a manifest indication of their inward grief of mind. Others with dejected Countenances seemed like persons astonished; and [b] each particular man lookt upon this as his own Calamity, and bemoan'd himself, because the common Good of all men was taken out of this their life.

[a] Κωκυτοῦ φωνάς. The last word must be expunged, although it occurs in all our Copies. Presently, it must be written τὸν εὐεργέτην ἐπικλεῖνλο, from the Fuketian Copy. In the Kings Sheets the reading is ἀπικλεῖνλο. Vales.

* Or, Genuine.

[b] Ἐκάςε τε πένθ@. It must doubtless be written, ἑκάςε τὸ πένθ@ ἴδιον ποιεμένε. Concerning the publick mourning of all persons, at the Funeral of Constantine the Great, Aurelius Victor attests the same, in these words. Funus relatum in urbem sui nominis. Quod sanè populus Rom. ægerrimè tulit: quippe cujus armis, Legibus, clementi imperio quasi novatam urbem Rom. arbitraretur. His dead Body was brought into the City that bore his own name. Which the people of Rome were sorely troubled at: in regard, by his Arms, Laws, and mild Government, they supposed the City Rome renewed as 'twere. I know indeed, that these words of Aurelius Victor may be understood concerning the Citizens of Rome, who took it ill, because Constantine's Body had been interred at Constantinople rather then at Rome. Nevertheless I am of opinion, that Victor thought otherwise; to wit, that all the Inhabitants of the Roman world were most sorely troubled at the death of Constantine. Which meaning is plainly confirmed by the following words: Quippe cujus armis, legibus, clementi imperio, quasi novatam Orbem Romanum arbitraretur. For so 'tis to be read, and not urbem Romanam. Vales.

CHAP. LXVI.

That His Body was carried from Nicomedia to Constantinople, into the Palace.

AFter this, the Milice took His Body [out of the Bed,] and laid it into a Coffin of Gold; which they covered [a] with Purple, and carried it to the City that bore his own name. And there they plac't it * on high, [b] in the statelyest Room of the Imperial Palace. Then they light up Tapers round it, which being put into Candlesticks of Gold, rendred the Sight admirable to those that beheld it, and such a one as had never been seen on earth, by any person that was ever under the Sun's Rayes, since the world was first made. For within, in the very middlemost Room of the Imperial Palace, the Emperours Corps lay on high in a Golden Coffin; and being adorned with Imperial Ornaments, the Purple namely and the Diadem, was encompassed by many persons, who watcht with, and guarded it night and day.

[a] Ἀλυργικῇ ἀλυργίδι. The one of these words is useless. The Fuketian Manuscript has only the Latter; whereto agrees Turnebus's Book. Vales.

* Ῥάθρων ἐφ' ὑψηλῶν, upon lofty Benches or Seats.

[b] Ἐν αὐτῷ τῷ παντὸς μεσῳέ-ρονλι. The reading in the Fuketian and Turnebian Copy is truer, thus, ἐν αὐτῷ τῷ πάντων μεσῳέρονλι τῆ βασιλείων οἴκων: but it must without doubt be made οἴκῳ, as 'tis above, at book 3. chap. 10. Vales.

CHAP. LXVII.

That even after His Death, he was honoured by the Comites and the rest, in the same manner as when he was alive.

MOreover, the * Duces, Comites, and the whole Order of the Judges and Magistrates, whose usage it had heretofore been to [a] adore the Emperour, made not the least alteration in their former Custom, but came in at set times, and on their knees saluted the Emperour when dead, and laid in his Coffin, as if he had been yet alive. After these Grandees, those of the Senate, [b] and all the Honorati, came in, and did the same. After whom, multitudes of all sorts of people, together with women and children, approacht to the sight hereof. And these things were thus performed during a long space of time: the Milice having taken a Resolution, that the Corps should lie and be guarded in this manner, till such time as his Sons could come, who might honour their Father by * a personal attendance at his Funeral. [In fine,] this most Blessed [Prince] was the only Mortal who [c] Reigned after death; and all things were performed in the usual manner, as if he had been still alive: this being the sole person, from the utmost memory of man, on whom God conferred this. For, whereas he of all the Emperours had been the only one, who by actions of all sorts whatever had honoured God the supream King, and his Christ; he alone, and that deservedly, had these honours allotted him: and the supream God was pleased to vouchsafe him this, that even his dead Body should Reign amongst men. Whereby God clearly shewed them, whose minds are not * totally stupified, that † the Empire of his Soul is endless and immortall. In this manner were these things performed.

* Generals, or Commanders in chief.

[a] Τὸν βασιλέα μεσκυνεῖν. Concerning the manner of saluting the Roman Emperours, consult the Learned Dr Howells History, Second Part, pag. 52. This Adoration was little more than what is now a days used to Princes, namely, a kneeling to them, and bowing the head.

[b] Οἵτ' ἐπ' ἀξίας. That is, the Honorati. So the Latines termed those who bore honours, as I have at large remarked at the 14th Book of Amm. Marcellinus. Whereto add a passage of Gaudentius Bishop of Brixia, in his Letter to Benevolus. Nam sicut Honoratorum nostræ urbis, ita etiam dominicæ plebis, domino annuente, dignissimum caput es. Vales.

* Or, Their own carriage of him.

[c] After Constantine's death, there was an Interregnum, nor did any Augustus Reign in the Roman world. Which interregnum [i.e. a time when there was no Emperour,] continued not only till Constantine's Burial, but to the fifth of the Ides of September, as Idatius attests in his Fasti. So, for the space of three months and an half, the Roman world was without the Empire of an Augustus. For during that whole time, which is between the eleventh of the Calends of June and the fifth of the Ides of September, his Sons were styled only Cæsars. 'Tis certain, Constantinus Junior, in his Letter to the Alexandrians, which bears date after his Fathers death, in the Consulate of Felicianus and Titianus, on the fifteenth of the Calends of July, has the Title of Cæsar only. This Letter is extant in Athanasius, in his Second Apologie, near the end. Vales.

* Or, Turned into stone.

† Τῶν ἀ-γήρῳ, &c; in Stephens 'tis τῷ ἀ-γήρῳ, &c; and we have rendred it accordingly.

CHAP.

CHAP. LXVIII.

In what manner the Army resolved, that his Sons should be forthwith proclaimed Augusti.

IN the interim, the Tribunes dispatcht away some choice men belonging to the Military Companies, who for their fidelity and good affection had heretofore been * acceptable to the Emperour; that they might make the Cæsars acquainted with what had been done. And these were the things which those men performed then. But the Armies in all places, as soon as they were acquainted with the Emperours death, incited thereto by Divine instinct as 'twere, with an unanimous consent resolved, as if their Great Emperour had been yet living, that they would acknowledge no other person as Emperour of the Romans, save only his Sons. And not long after, they determined to have them all henceforward, not stiled Cæsares, but Augusti; which [name] is the † Cognisance of supremacy of Empire. And these things were done by the Armies; who by Letters one to another, signified their own suffrages and Acclamations; and the unanimous consent of the Legions was in one and the same moment of time, made known to all persons wherever they dwelt.

* Or, Well known.

† Or, Greatest Symbol of supream Empire.

CHAP. LXIX.

The Mourning * at Rome for Constantine, and the Honour [done Him] by Pictures after his death.

* Or, Of Rome.

BUt the Inhabitants of the Imperial City, as well the Senate as people of Rome, when they were acquainted with the Emperours death, lookt upon that to be most doleful news, and more calamitous than any misfortune whatever; and therefore set no Bounds to their mourning. The Baths therefore and Forums were shut up, and the publick Shows [omitted;] as likewise whatever other Pleasures, as Recreations of Life, are usually followed by those who spend their time in mirth and jollity. Such also, as had heretofore abounded with delights, walk't the Streets with dejected Countenances. And all in general stiled [the Emperour] Blessed; a person dear to God; and one that was truly worthy of the Empire. Nor made they these Declarations in bare words only: but proceeding on to actual performances, they honoured him when dead, with dedications of Pictures, as if he had been still alive. For, having expresst a Representation of Heaven in Colours on a Table, they drew him making his Residence in an Ætherial Mansion, above the Celestial Arches. Moreover, they proclaimed his Sons the sole Emperours and Augusti, without the Colleagueship of any other person; and with humble supplications made it their earnest Request, that they might have the [a] Body of their Emperour with them, and might deposite it within the Imperial City.

[a] The same is attested by Aurelius Victor, in those words of his, which we quoted above, at chap. 65. note (b.) Vales.

CHAP. LXX.

That his Body was deposited at Constantinople, by his Son Constantius.

IN this manner, even these [Inhabitants of Rome] grac't this Emperour, who was honoured by God. But the [a] Second of his Sons, when he was come to the place where his Father's Corps lay, conveyed [b] [it] to the City [that bore his own name,] he himself going before the Hearse. The Companies of the Milice march't before, Troop by Troop in a Military Order: and behind followed an innumerable multitude of people. But the Hastati and Scutarii surrounded the Emperour's Corps. When they were come to the Church of our Saviour's Apostles, they deposited the Coffin there. And thus the new Emperour Constantius, honouring his Father, as well by his presence, as other befitting Offices, in a due manner performed * his Funeral obsequies.

* Or, The things of a becoming Sanctity.

[a] Constantius Cæsar, whom his Father had made Governour of the East, upon hearing of his Father's sickness, had in great haste taken a journey, that he might see his Father before he died. But the vehemency of his disease frustrated the Son's desire. For when he was arrived at Nicomedia, he found his Father dead; as Julian relates in his first Oration concerning the praises of Constantius. pag. 29. With Julian, the other Writers of History do likewise agree. Zonaras is the only Authour who relates, that Constantius Cæsar, who was then at Antioch, arrived whilst his Father was yet living; and that he honoured him, when dead, with a most magnificent Funeral. Vales.

[b] Τῇ πόλῃ τοῦτο προσεπιμίζειν. The last word save one is added by the Learned, from conjecture as I think. Nevertheless, there seems to be something more wanting: and perhaps Eusebius wrote thus. τῇ ἐκείνῳ ἐπωνύμῳ πόλῃ to the City that bore his own name. Hence it appears, that Constantine's dead Body was kept at Nicomedia with all imaginable honour and reverence, till the coming of Constantius Cæsar. Who, after he was arrived at Nicomedia, conveyed his Father's Corps to Constantinople. Wherefore, the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle is mistaken, who relates, that Constantius came directly to Constantinople, and there celebrated his Father's Funeral. Vales.

CHAP. LXXI.

The * performance of the solemn prayers in that termed the Martyrium of the Apostles, at the † Funeral of Constantine.

* Συναξις, the sacred Assemblie.

† Or, death.

BUt after he had withdrawn himself, together with the Military Companies; the Ministers of God, as likewise the Multitudes, and all the Congregation of the Faithfull, came forth, and by prayers performed the Rites of the Divine worship. At which time this Blessed [Prince,] lying on high * upon a lofty place, was celebrated with praises. Likewise, a vast number of people, together with those persons consecrated to God, not without tears and great lamentation, poured forth prayers to God for the Emperour's Soul, thereby performing a most gratefull Office to this pious Prince. Further, herein also God demonstrated his singular Favour towards his Servant: because [after] his

[a] A twofold sense may be given of these words. For, either Eusebius means, that Constantius Cæsar, when he had deposited his Father's Ark or Coffin in the Church, went presently out of the Church with the Souldiers; or else this is his meaning only, that Constantius having done that, withdrew out of the middle of the Church, that he might give place to the Priests. Which meaning is in my judgment truer. For Constantius, although he had not as yet been baptized, was nevertheless a Catechumen, as Sulpicius Severus tells us in the Second Book of his History. Vales.

* Ἐφ' ὑψηλῆς κρηπῖδος. See Gellius, B. 13. Cap. 10.

his death [b] he bequeathed the Empire to his own dear Sons, who were his Successours; and because, [c] agreeable to his own most earnest desire, the Tabernacle of his thrice-blessed Soul was vouchsafed a place with the Monument of the Apostles; to the end namely, that it might be honoured in the same degree with the name of the Apostles; and that it might be joyned with God's people in the Church; and might be vouchsafed the Divine Rites, and Mystick Service; and might enjoy a Communion of the Holy Prayers: [d] but, that He himself, possest of the Empire [even] after death, managing the whole Government by a Return to Life as 'twere, [e] Victor, Maximus, Augustus, might in his own name still [f] Rule the Roman State.

[b] Translatours thought that these words were spoken of God, who gave the Empire to Constantine's Sons. But after a more attentive examination of the matter, I am of opinion that they are spoken concerning Constantine himself, who, even dead, delivered the Empire to his Sons. And this is confirmed by the following words. Valesius.

[c] Καὶ τὰ σπεδασθέντα αὐτῷ. It must, I think, be written, ᾗ χῇ τὰ σπεδασθέντα αὐτῷ. Constantine had wisht, that after his death, he might not, like other Princes, be consecrated, and reckoned amongst the Divi: but, that being buried with the Apostles, he might be a partaker of the prayers, which are wont to be offered to God by the Faithfull in honour of them; as Eusebius has said above, at chap. 60. Whence it appears, that here it must be written χῃ, not as it is in Moræus's Book, and at the margin of the Geneva-Edition, διὰ τὰ σπεδασθέντα, through his own most, &c. Nor will this place be perfect, even this way, unless these words be added, ἧς ὁπτελεσμῶν ευχῶν σὺν τῇ, &c. Which Eusebius confirms in the foresaid 60th chapter. The point must also be blotted out, which is set a little after, as well in the Kings Copy, as in the Common Editions; and it must be read in one breath, thus, σὺν τῇ ἧς Ἀποστόλων κατηξιῶτο μνήμῃ τὸ τῆς τεσσαρακοστῆς ψυχῆς σκῆνος, &c. Than which there is nothing more certain; which makes me admire, that Translatours saw not this. In the Fuketian Copy, the reading of this place runs thus; ᾗ διὰ τὰ σπεδασθέντα αὐτῷ, τότε σὺν τῇ ἧς Ἀποστόλων καληξιῶτο μνήμῃ, ὡς ὁρᾶν εἰσέτι ᾗ νῦν, τὸ, &c. Nor is it otherwise in the Books of Turnebus and Sr Henry Savil: save only that Sr Henry has it, τότε δὴ τῇ ἧς ἀπ. &c. But in the Kings Sheets I found this place written thus; κατασπεδασθέντα αὐτῷ, τότε σὺν τῇ ἧς ἀπ. &c. Which reading comes nearer to our Emendation. Further, those words, ὡς ὁρᾶν εἰσέτι ᾗ νῦν, are spoken in a Parenthesis; and this is intimated by that punctation in the Fuketian Copy, which I have shown above. Valesius.

[d] Αὐξὸν δὲ τῆς βασιλείας, &c. I write, αὐτὸς δὲ τῆς βασιλείας ᾗ μὴ θάνατον ἐπειλημμένος; which reading the following words do confirm. And so I found it plainly written in the Fuketian Copy. Valesius.

[e] Such was the Inscription, usually perfixt before the Laws and Letters of Constantine, as Eusebius does every where attest. Victor Constantinus Maximus Augustus. He took the Pronomen [forename] of Victor, after his Victory obtained over the Tyrants. His Sons also, by an hereditary right as 'twere, retained that name, as their Letters inform us. Farther, from this place it appears, that after the death of Constantinus Maximus, for about three months space, that is during the whole time of the Interregnum, all Laws and Edicts were inscribed with the Name of Constantine, as if he had been living, in regard there was no other Augustus in the Roman world, as I have observed above. This place may also be meant concerning the Sons of Constantine the Great, who made use of the same Title and Name; and in whom their Father seemed to be revived. Which sense is confirmed by what follows. Valesius.

[f] Ἡγεμονίας κρατεῖν. I write ἐκράτει, that it may answer the verb κληξιῶτο, which occurs several lines above. Further, in the Kings Copy, at the margin of this chapter, the Greek Scholiast had written these words in honour of Constantine, εἰς αἰώνιον μνημόσυνον δεῖ τὸ ὄνομά σου, Ἀποστόλων τεσσαρακαίδεκαλε. The same Writer does in this work often besprinkle him with praises and good wishes. In the Fuketian Copy the reading is κρᾶτεῖ. Valesius.

CHAP. LXXII.

Concerning the Bird [termed] the Phœnix.

NOt like that Egyptian Bird: which being the only one of her kind, is said to die upon [an heap of] Spices, at her death making her self a sacrifice: and presently [as 'tis reported,] is restored to life again out of those very ashes; and raising her self by her wings, appears the same in kind that she was before. But in the same manner with his Saviour rather; who, like wheat sown, from one Grain diffusing himself into many, by the blessing of God hath brought forth an Ear of Corn, and hath filled the whole world with his fruits. In a like manner hereto, this thrice-blessed [Prince,] by the Succession of his Children, from being one, has been made [a] many: in so much that, throughout all Provinces, Statues are raised in honour of Him, together with his Sons; and the usual name of Constantine * obtaines even after his death.

[a] Πολυπλασίως. Sr Henry Savil at the margin of his Copy remarkes, that the reading should be πολυπλάσιος; to whom I agree: yet I had rather read πολυπλασίων. Valesius.

* Is in use, or is embraced.

CHAP. LXXIII.

In what manner they Stamp't Constantine on Coyns, ascending up into Heaven as 'twere.

MOreover, * Coyns were Stamp't bearing this impress: on the fore-side they express this Blessed [Prince] [a] with His Head covered: But, on the † Reverse [he was represented sitting] like a Charioteer, in a Chariot drawn by four Horses, and taken up [into Heaven] by a || hand stretcht out to him from above.

* Representations were stamps on Coyns, or, Money.

† Or, other part.

|| Right hand.

[a] Ἐσκεκαλυμμένον τῇ κεφαλῇ χήματι. The last word is, in my judgment, to be blotted out; which in all probability crept out of the margin into the Text. For ὀχήματι had been written in the margin, which might explain the following word ἅρματι. But, that which occurs in the margin of the Geneva-Edition, namely διαδήματι, is in my judgment most egregiously foolish. For the propriety of the Greek Tongue admits not of that expression. Besides, in most Coyns Constantine appears with an Helmet on his Head. Valesius.

CHAP. LXXIV.

That whereas God had been honoured by Him, He was on the other hand deservedly honoured by God.

THese [Miracles] the supream God laid before our very eyes, in [the person of] Constantine, who was the only [Prince] of all the preceding Emperours, that had openly profest himself a [a] Christian; whereby God manifestly declared, [b] How great a difference

[a] Χειστιανῶν. Questionless it must be made χειστιανῷ. It is also to be written, μόνῳ ἧς πώποτε βασιλέων, the only Prince, &c; or at least those words are to be understood. Further, Eusebius excepts none of the Roman Emperours, whilst he says, that Constantine was the first of them all, who was plainly and openly a Christian. Which doubtless is most true. For although the Emperour Philippus is by some reported to have been a Christian; yet he did not openly profess the Christian Religion, as Constantine did. Orosius (Book 7.) writes in a different sense concerning Constantine, in this manner; Primus Imperatorum Christianus, &c; the First Christian of the Emperours, except Philippus, who in my judgment was made a Christian during a very few years, for this reason only, that the thousandth year of Rome might be dedicated to Christ, rather than to Idols. Valesius.

[b] Ὁ πόσον ἦν ἄρα αὐτῷ. I had rather reade, ὁπόσον ἦν παρ' αὐτῷ τὸ διάφορον, &c; that is, How great a difference there was with him, or, how great a difference he made. Valesius.

he

he made, between thoſe who thought good to worſhip him and his Chriſt, and them that had embraced a contrary [opinion.] Who having brought a War upon God's Church, thereby rendred him their Enemy and * Oppoſer. And indeed, the diſaſtrous and unfortunate cloſe of every of their Lives, has produced a moſt convincing Argument of the greatneſs of the divine hatred towards them: in the ſame manner that the death of Conſtantine has rendred the pledges of God's favour in reference to him, manifeſt and apparent to all men.

* Or, Adverſary.

CHAP. LXXV.

That Conſtantine was more pious than [any of] the foregoing Roman Emperours.

WHo being the Sole Emperour of the Romans, that had honoured God the Supream King with a Tranſcendency of piety; and the only one that had freely and boldly * publiſhed the Doctrine of Chriſt to all men; and the only perſon (as I may ſay,) that had raiſed his Church to ſuch a degree of Honour and Glory, as no one had ever done before; and the only perſon that † had totally deſtroyed the Errour of Polytheïſm, and confuted all the Rites and Modes of [ſuch a] Superſtition: is the only perſon alſo, that was vouchſafed ſuch [honours,] both in this Life, and after death, as no one, either amongſt the Græcians or Barbarians, is reported ever to have obtained; Nor can there be any one mentioned, amongſt the ancient Romans themſelves, from the Remoteſt Times to this preſent Age, who may be compared with this [our Prince.]

* Preach't.

† Or, Had overthrown all the errour of, &c.

THE

THE EMPEROUR Constantine's [a] Oration, [b] WHICH HE ENTITLED TO THE CONVENTION OF THE SAINTS.

[a] After his four Books concerning the Life and Piety of the Emperour Constantine, Eusebius had added Two Orations; the one whereof was the Emperour Constantine's, [Entitled] To the Assemblie of the Saints, or To the Church of God: the other was written by himself, concerning the Fabrick and Sacred Presents of the Jerusalem-Martyrium, as Eusebius himself does attest in Chap. 32, and 46 of his Fourth Book. But the Latter Oration of Eusebius is not now extant. And that former one [namely Constantine's] abounds with so many faults, that it would almost be better, if it were not extant. But whereas this is a singular monument of that Religious Prince, and an illustrious proof of his Studies and Disposition, I shall, I think, do what will be worth while, if I shall imploy my care and diligence, in mending and explaining it. Vales

[b] Ὃν ἔγραψε. In book 4. chap. 32, the reading is ἐπέγραψε, he entitled, which is in my judgment to be preferred. This therefore was the Title of this Oration, νικητὴς, μέγιστος, σεβαστὸς κωνσταντῖνος τῷ ἁγίων συλλόγῳ, Victor, Maximus, Augustus Constantinus To the Convention of the Saints. Vales.

CHAP. I.

The Preface makes mention of Easter; and, that *Christ, having been several ways beneficial to all men, hath had plots framed against him by those, on whom he has conferred favours.

THE †more [than usual] Brightness and Splendour, both of the Day and Sun; the Preface of the Resurrection; the new ‖ Reparation of Bodies long since dissolved; [a] the Foundation of the promise, and the way leading to Life eternal, the day [namely] of the Passion is now come, Dearest Doctours, and all the rest of You [My] Friends! [b] Ye Multitudes of Believers are far more Blessed [than others;] Ye [who worship] God the very [Authour] of Religion, and who, as well by an inward sense of every particular Soul, as by outward Expressions, do without intermission praise Him, according to those Rules [contained] in the Divine Oracles. But, Thou Nature, Mother of all things! What of this sort hast Thou ever conferred upon the world? Or rather, what is in any wise Thy work? In as much as He [who is the Authour] of all things, was the Framer of thy [c] Sanctity also. For He it is, who has adorned Thee:

† Or, Brighter Splendour both, &c.

‖ Or, Joyning together.

[a] Ὁμοῦ θ' ὑποθήκης. In Morœus's Book, as likewise in the margin of the Geneva-Edition, 'tis mended ὅρμιον; which word I doe not remember to have met with any where. But in Scaliger's Copy 'tis corrected ἔρμιον, which comes nearer to the Reading of the Manuscript Copies. Indeed, in the Kings Copy 'tis ἐρμαί: whence I conjectured that it should be written ἔρμα, that is, the Foundation. He does elegantly term the Resurrection of our Lord, the foundation of the promise. Nor has Christophorson done ill in rendring it pignus promissionis, the pledge of the promise; which is in a manner the same. For a pledge is given for an assurance; whence 'tis by Græcians termed ἐνέχυρον. In the Fuketian and Savilian Copies I found it written ἔρμιον. Vales.

[b] Μακαριώτερος δὲ πολλῷ πλήθη. I assent not to Learned men, who joyn these with the foregoing words, and reade thus, μακάρια τε πολλὰ πλήθη, &c. For if we read thus, it will be a foolish repetition, in regard Constantine had said before, φίλοι θ' οἱ λοιποὶ ξύμπαντες ἄνδρες. In which words Constantine salutes all the Catholick people, in such a manner as Preachers are wont to do. Wherefore those words μακαριώτερα δὲ πολλῷ πλήθη, are the beginning of another period, wherein Constantine sets forth the happiness of the Catholick people. Further, I would more willingly read πλήθη τυγχάνετε, ye multitudes, &c. that Constantine may be made to speak to the people. Nevertheless, in the Fuketian and Savilian Copies, this place runs thus; μακάρια τε πολλὰ πλήθη τῆς θρησκούντων, καὶ αὐτὸν τὸν τῆς θρησκείας θεὸν διὰ τῆς ἐνδόσεων ἔχετε, καὶ δι' ἐνφωνήσεων ἀδιαλείπτως ὑμνοῦντων καὶ τὰ ἐν θεσπίσμασι μεγαγραφόμενα. Vales.

[c] Τῆς σῆς οὐσίας, of thy Sanctitie. At the margin of the Geneva-Edition there is a note set, that 'tis otherwise written ὑσίας, substance. But having look't into the matter more accurately, I am of opinion, that the common reading is to be retained. For Constantine says, that Nature is not the Framer of things, in regard She Her self

* Or, The Word of God.

* Or, What manner of workmanship is thine?

was made by God; nor is he only the Origine of Nature Herself, but of that Sanctitie also which is in Her. For 'tis God who hath adorned Nature. For the ornament of Nature, is a Life according to the Law and prescript of God. This is the meaning of this place, which Christophorson perceived not. For I say nothing of Portesius, whom I have found most unskilfull, in a manner every where. Yet, in the Fuk. Turneb. and Savil. Copies, and in the Kings Sheets 'tis οὐσίας, substance. Valef.

[d] Ἡ χῆ φύσιν ζωὴ, agreeable to God. a life agreeable to Nature. It must be written, ἡ χῆ θεὸν ζωὴ, a life agreeable to God, as 'tis apparent from the foregoing note. In one word θεοσέβεια, that is, Religion, is the Ornament of Nature. But, what sense there can be in the common reading, truly I can't perceive. So our Eusebius gave his books concerning the Life of the Emperour Constantine this Title, περὶ τοῦ χῆ θεὸν βίε. In the Kings Sheets 'tis, ἡ χῆ κόσμον ζωή. Valef.

[e] Ἐπικεκράτηκε γὰ. It must be written ἐπικεκράτηκε δὲ ὃ μέλειος ὂν ἀβλὰ φύσιν, &c. Indeed, in the Fuketian Copy 'tis ἐπικεκράτηκε δὲ ὃ μέλειος τὰ ἀβλὰ φύσιν, τὸ ὅλῳ ἀπάντων θεὸν, &c. Valef.

* Or, Erroneous.

† Or, Divine inspiration by the Prophets, particularly, &c.

‖ Or, Wicked impiety.

* Τὸ δυσέλεγκτον τοῦ σκότους, the inconfutableness (if I may so say) of darkness.

[d] in as much as the Beauty of Nature, is a [e] Life

[e] *But, those things prevailed afterwards, which are directly contrary to Nature; [namely,] that no one should adore God [the Authour] of all things with a congruous worship; and, that it should be supposed, that all things were managed, not by Providence, but Chance, in a disorderly and * discomposed manner. And although † the Prophets inspired by the Divine Spirit; particularly and in expreſs words foretold these things, to whom Credit ought to have been given; yet ‖ impious injustice made its Resistance by all manner of devices; hating and reproaching the very Light of Truth; and embracing * the impenetrable darkness of Errour. Nor, was Force and Cruelty wanting; especially, when the Will of Princes gave assistance to the † rash and heady ‖ impetus of the Vulgar; or rather, when * they themselves headed an unseasonable Fury. Wherefore, this way of Life having been confirmed by the usage of many Generations, was the Occasion of dismal Calamities to the men of those times. But, as soon as ever the presence of our Saviour shined forth, immediately, instead of unjust Actions, Justice [was advanc't;] in place of a † most destructive Storm, arose a Calm; and all those things which had been predicted by the Prophets, were fulfilled. For, after [that Saviour of ours] was taken up on high to his Father's House, having ‖ enlightned the world with the Rayes of Modesty and * Continence, He founded a Church on earth, like some sacred Temple of Virtue; a Temple [that is] eternal and incorruptible; wherein might be piously performed due [Acts of worship] both to God the supream Father, and likewise an agreeable [service] to Himself. But what did the mad wickedness of the Nations invent, after these things? It endeavoured to † reject the Benefits and Favours of Christ, and to ruine the Church, constituted in order to the Salvation of all men; and in place thereof to substitute its own [f] Superstition.*

† Sudden, or, unthought-on.

‖ Motion.

* Or, Their Will; that is, the Will of Princes.

† Or, Manifold.

‖ Or, Surrounded.

* Or, Sobriety.

† Or, Cast forth.

[f] Δεισιδαιμονίαν δὲ ἀνθσ῾ In the Kings Copy, the two last words are wanting, and an empty space is left, capable of one word only. I doubt not but the reading should be, δεισιδαιμονίαν ἀνθετάγειν, and in place thereof to introduce its own Superstition; that verb ἀνέτρεπε being blotted out, which is wholly superfluous. In the Fuketian Copy this place is written thus; Ἐκκλησίαν πρβῆσαι. ἀνέτρεπέ τε τὰ οἰκείαν δεισιδαιμονίαν, νόσ῾ αὖτες, &c. But in the Kings Sheets 'tis νόσ῾ αὖτες, &c. Sr Henry Savil at the margin of his Copy hath mended it, ἀνέτρεπε δὲ τὰ οἰκείαν δεισιδαιμονίαν, but it overturned its own Superstition. Upon a more diligent inspection into the thing, I am of opinion, that this place is thus to be restored; ἐκκλησίαν πρβῆσαι. ἀνέτρεπε δὲ τὰ οἰκείαν εὐδαιμονίαν, νόσ῾ αὖτες: that is, The Nations, when they had resolved to ruine the Church of Christ, subverted their own felicity. Diseases [hapned] again, Seditions, &c. The term δεισιδαιμονίαν may also be retained, that so the meaning may be this; the Heathens, whilst they persecuted the Church, ruined their own Religion. For the Church of God being attackt by the persecutions of the Heathens, vanquished the superstition and worship of false Deities. Valef.

Again [hapned] horrible Seditions, Wars, Fights, [g] Morosity, [a luxurious] Furniture of Life, and a love of Riches: which having its Being in men contrary to nature (a thing that is the property of wickedness,) does sometimes recreate by false and specious hopes; at others, it astonishes with Fear. [h] But, let Her lie prostrate on the ground, being vanquished by Virtue: and (as 'tis fit She should,) let Her rend and tear Her self by reason of Her Repentance. But, at present we [i] must discourse of those matters which appertain to the Divine Doctrine.

[g] Δυσπαπλίαι. Turnebus at the margin of his Book hath mended it δυσπαπλίαι, Morosities. Indeed, in the Fuketian Copy 'tis written δυσεμπαλίας. But then some lines are omitted. And perhaps it should be written in one continued clause, δυσέμπλ῾ εἰς βλασκὴν, that is, a moroſe Furniture of Life. For, unless we read so, what will be the meaning of those following words, εἰς βλασκὴν, which Constantine reckons amongst the ill things? Musculus seems to have read, εἰαὶ῾ εἰς βλασκευὴ; for he renders it, violenta Victûs astructio. Presently, the Fuketian Copy words it thus; ὃ χῆ φυσικῶς ἴδιον πυνείας ὂν, πο῾ τὲ, &c; which having its being in men, &c; as we have rendred it. Valef.

[h] Αὖτη μᾶλ. In Moræus's Book, and in the Geneva-Edition, it is at the margin mended, ἀλλ' αὐτὴ μᾶλ, &c; excellently well, as those skilled in the Greek tongue do know. The word πυνείας, wickedness, is understood. The reading is ἀλλ' ἄυτη, in the Fuk. and Turneb. Copies also. Valef.

[i] Τηητέον. The correction of this place is due to the Fuketian Copy; wherein 'tis plainly written, ῥητέον, must discourse. Than which Emendation there is nothing more certain. Valef.

CHAP. II.

An * Addresse to the Church, and to his Hearers, that they would Pardon and amend his Mistakes.

* Or, Precaution.

HEar therefore, [a] Thou Master of the Ship, who art possest of Chastity and Virginity! And Thou Church, that art the Nurse of immature and † unskilfull Age! To whose Care and Charge, Truth and ‖ Clemency are committed: From whose everlasting Fountain, flows a Salutary [b] Stream. Be Ye Candid Hearers also, Ye who worship God with sincerity, and for that reason are His Care: be Ye attentive, not so much to the words themselves, as to the truth of what is delivered: and [respect] not Me that Speak, but the * Religious Office of Devotion rather.

† Ignorant, or, untaught.

‖ Or, Humanity.

* Piety of Devotion.

[a] Ναύκληρε, Thou Pilot, or, Master of the Ship. So Constantine terms a Bishop, with no less elegant a Metaphor, than when they are termed Pastours. And, whereas the Church is usually compared to a Ship, the Bishops who govern it, are rightly termed the Patrons or Masters of the Ship; they being also the Apostles Successours, whom Christ, from being Fishers, made Governours of the Church. Farther, he terms Him one indued with Chastity and Virginity; because the Prelates of the Christians were such, ἀγνοὶ χῆ παρθενίαι. Valef.

[b] Σωτήριον νᾶμα. The Fuketian Copy, Kings Sheets, and Turnebus's Book have it written πῶμα, Potion, or, water to be drunk. Presently, where the reading is, προσέχετε τὸν νῶν, be ye attentive; in the Fuketian Copy 'tis προσέχετε τοίνυν, attend therefore. Valef.

For,

* Or, Words.

*For, what can the benefit and advantage of * an Oration be, when the mind of the Speaker remains undiscovered? Indeed, I do peradventure attempt Great things. But, that which occasions my Boldness, is the Love of God implanted in me: for, this [Love] puts a Force upon Modesty. Wherefore, my desire is, that Ye who are eminently knowing in the Divine Mysteries, should be joyned with Me, as My Assistants; to the end that, if any mistake shall happen * during My Speaking, You may go along with Me and correct it. Expect not any Perfect and Consummate † Doctrine from Me; but rather, give a kind reception to the || attempt of My Faith. Farther, may the most * benign influence of the Father and Son, be effectually present with us, whilst we are uttering those things, which [c] it shall Command and Suggest to Our Mind! For, if any person professing Rhetorick, or any other Art, shall suppose Himself able, without the Divine Assistance, with an accuracy to perfect His Work; He Himself, as also the Work He has undertaken, will be found ignorant, and imperfect. But, such persons as have once obtained the Divine influence, must neither loiter, nor be careless. Wherefore, having beg'd Your Pardon for the length of this Our [d] Preface, We will enter upon the † Head and Principal matter of Our design.*

* Or, About my words.

† Knowledge, or, Learning.

‖ Or, Integrity of My attempt.

* Greatest, or, most powerfull Inspiration.

[c] Ἅπερ ἂν αὐτῶ φράσει. It must be made ἄνυτη, and ἡ ἐπίπνοια τῦ πατρὸς, the influence or, inspiration of the Father, must be understood; as Christophorson read. Indeed, in the Fuketian Copy 'tis written thus, φθεγξομένοις ταῦτα, ἅπερ ἂν αὐτὴ φράσει, ἡ διανοία περαίνοι; whilst we are uttering, &c. as 'tis rendred. Vales.

† Or, Perfection.

[d] Τὸ μῆκος τῆς ἀναβολῆς διαλησόμενοι. Christophorson has rendred both this, and the preceding period, very ill. For he thought, that the import of ἀναβολὴ here, was delay, or deferring; whereas at this place, that word signifies a Preface. For Constantine excuses himself, because he had made use of too long a Preface. Ἀναβολὴ is properly the beginning of a Song, which the Chorus was wont to sing in the first place. Aristophanes in Irene page 685, de Dithyrambicis; ξυνελέγοντ' ἀναβολὰς πιτύλωσι: where the Scholiast notes, that ἀναβολὰς are, τὰς ἀρχὰς τῶν ᾀσμάτων, the beginnings of Songs; and he cites a Verse of Homer. Isocrates's words, in his Panathenaicon, are these; ἃ μὲν ἔν ἠδυλήθην ἢ περὶ ἐμαυτῦ, ἢ περὶ τῶν ἄλλων ὥσπερ χορὸς πρὸ τῦ ἀγῶνος προαναβάλλεσθε, ταῦτα ἐστιν. This word therefore was afterwards translated from Singers to Orators; and they used ἀναβάλλεσθαι, instead of προοιμάζεσθαι, as Hesychius does attest. Ulpianus on Demosthenes's Oration de Chersoneso; ἀναβαλόμενος δὲ δι' ἐνὸς λήμματος, ἀντὶ τῦ προοιμιασάμενος· ἢ ἀναβολὰς, προοίμια. So Aristophanes, in Irene, page 717, has used προαναβάλωμαι and ἀναβαλεῖ in the same sense. Farther, from this place it appears, that the Preface of this Oration reaches as far as these words. Vales.

CHAP. III.

That God is both the Father of * The Logos, and the Framer of the [whole] Creation; and, that it were impossible for things to † consist, if their Causes were diverse.

* Or, The Word, i. e. Christ.

† Exist, or, continue firm.

GOD, [a] who is above every Essence, being always that Good which all things desire, has no Generation; and consequently no Beginning. But He Himself is the Origine of all things that are brought forth.

[a] Οὗπερ πλὴν ὄσιαν. I think we must reade thus, ὁ ὢν πλὴν ὄσιαν θεὸς, God, who is, &c. For, the chiefest Good is nothing else but the supream God. So below, at chap. 9. πρῶτον μὲν θεὸν ὑφησάμενος ὃν ὢν πλὴν ὄσιαν. In the Fuketian and Savilian Copies, 'tis ὅπερ; which is an ill reading. Vales.

But He who has His Procession from Him, is united with Him again: the disjunction and conjunction being performed in Him, not locally, but intellectually only. For, * *that Fœtus exists not by any dammage of His Father's bowels, as, for instance, those things do which are born of Seed: but, by the disposé of [Divine] providence Our Saviour has appeared, that he might preside, as well over this visible world, as over all things and works framed therein. The Cause therefore, both of subsistence and Life, to all things which are contained within the Complex of this world, [is derived] from hence. Moreover, hence [proceeds] the Soul, and every Sense, and the * Faculties, by whose assistance those things which are signified by the senses, are perfected. What then does this Discourse † conclude? [Thus much,] that there is one President over all things which are; and, that all things whatever are subject to his sole Dominion, as well things Celestial, as Terrestrial; both Natural, and also [b] Organical Bodies. For, if the Dominion over all these things, which are innumerable, should be in the hands, not of one, but of many; [c] Partitions and Divisions of the Elements, (as 'tis in the ancient Fables,) and Envy, and a desire of having more, powerfully contending to overcome, would disturb the harmonious Concord of all things: in regard those many, would [d] manage that portion allotted to each of them, in a different manner. But, whereas this whole world does keep it self always in one and the same order, 'tis plain, that this is [e] not performed without Providence, and, that it has not proceeded from chance. But, who could ever have acknowledged a Framer of universal * Matter? To whom in the first place, or in the last, were prayers and supplications [to have been assigned?] How could it be, that by my worshipping one of them [f] by choice, I should not have been impious towards the rest? Or, having perhaps requested something necessary for this life, shall I return thanks to that God who has given me assistance; but, revile him who was mine opposer?*

* Or, Offspring.

* Organs, or, instruments.

† Or, Manifest.

* Or, Generation.

[b] Ὀργανικὰ σώματα. Christophorson has rendred it artificialia, such namely as are made by some instrument, but are not begotten by Nature: wherein nevertheless, I do not agree with him. For, whereas Constantine does Philosophize throughout this whole Oration; at this place also he has used Natural and Organical Bodies, in the same sense that Philosophers are wont to take them; namely, for Bodies that are endued with Organs or Instruments fit for operation. So Aristotle expresses himself, when he defines the Soul thus, the Act of an Organical Body. But, an Organical Body is more than a Natural one. For, there are some Natural Bodies, which want Organs, for instance, Stones, and other things of that sort. Vales.

[c] He alludes to the division of the world between those three Brethren, Jupiter, Neptune, and Pluto; which division the Greek Theologi do talk of. Vales.

[d] Διοικουμένων, would continue to govern. In the Fuk. Copy the reading is, διοικημένων, would administer, or, manage. Vales.

[e] Οὐκ ἀμελῶς ἔχειν. The Negative particle hath been added by the Learned, from conjecture, as I think; as also, the words which follow next, ὧδ' ἀπαυλομένης γεγονὸς τῦτον περίσσιον. All which words occur neither in the Kings Copy, nor in the Old Sheets, nor yet in Robert Stephens's Edition: neither do they in any wise agree with the preceding words. For Constantine does not now treat concerning Providence; but he asserts only this, that there is one Beginning of all things; which he proves thus; If there were more Gods than one, each God would govern his own allotment: but, they would be very little solicitous, that the whole world should always keep it self in one and the same order. But, we see the Contrary. Therefore, there are not more Gods than one. This is Constantine's first argument against the Theologie of the Heathens. I reade therefore, τῦ δὲ ἀεὶ; χῇ τὰ αὐτά τε ἢ ὡσαύτως ἔχειν τὸν σύμπαντα κόσμον, ἀμελῶς ἐχόντων. Thus the sense is most evident and plain. But, whereas those words which I have set above, are found in the Fuk. Savil. and Turnebian Copies; there is no need of our Emendation. Vales.

[f] Ἐξ αἱρέσεως; that is, according to mine own arbitrement. It might also be read, ἐξαιρέτως, chiefly, or, most especially. Vales.

But, to whom shall I make my supplication, that he may declare to me the occasion of my Calamity, and may vouchsafe me a deliverance from it? Let us suppose, that an answer has been given us by Oracles and Prophecies: § but, that these things are not in their power, but belong to another God. What is the Compassion then? Of what sort is the providence of God towards man? Unless perhaps, some one of them, inclinable to be kinder, being more forcibly moved, shall give assistance against another, who is not in the least kindly disposed towards men. Moreover, Anger, and Discord, and Railing; and in fine, a confusion of all things would follow from hence; whilst not one of them would perform his own part; but, through covetousness not satisfied with his own affairs, would invade those that belong to others. What therefore will be the consequence hereof? Questionless, this discord amongst the Celestial powers, would ruine things under Heaven, and things on earth; the Order and Vicissitude of Seasons and times would vanish, as likewise the delight and use of those fruits produced at the several seasons of the year; the day would be destroyed, and the Rest of the night which follows the day. But enough concerning these matters. Let us now return to those reasons which can in no wise be refuted.

§ Μὴ δὴ δὲ τῆς ἑαυτῶν ἐξουσίας. This passage seems to me very obscure. Christophorson renders it thus; Fac responsa nobis per oracula dari: ista tamen fieri non propriâ ac suâ vi sed ad deum aliquem pertinere. But, what the meaning hereof should be, truly I can't see. But, having examined all things with more of attention, at length I found out the true meaning of this place. This therefore is what Constantine says. If there be many Gods; when I shall fall into calamity, to which of them shall I address my self, that he may acquaint me with the cause of my Misery, and free me from it. Let us suppose (says he,) that, for instance, Apollo has answered me, that 'tis not in his power to deliver me, but, that that belongs to another God. What is more plain than this sense? It must therefore be written, ἄλλῳ δὲ ταῦτα ἀνήκειν θεῷ, but belong to another God. Many such Oracles as these are extant in the Histories of the Greeks; where Apollo answers those who Consult him, that they must appease Bacchus, or Saturn, if they have a mind to be delivered from their Calamity. Vales.

CHAP. IV.

Concerning * their Errour who worship Idols.

* Or, The Errour in reference to Idols.

WHatever had a Beginning, must necessarily have an End also. Now, a temporal Beginning, is termed a † Generation. But, the things produced by a Generation, are all Corruptible. Besides, Time defaces their Form and Beauty. How then can they, who [have their Original] from a corruptible Generation, be immortal? Now, such an Opinion as this hath been divulged amongst unthinking people, namely, that Marriages are usually made amongst the Gods, and children begotten. But, if they who are begotten, be immortal; and if [new Gods] are always begotten, [a] their Kind must necessarily be excessively numerous: after which Accession made, [b] what Heaven, what manner of Earth must it be, that can be capable of Containing such a growing Swarm of Gods? But, what can any one say in reference to those men, who joyn the Brethren-Gods in a Society of Marriage [with the Sister-Goddesses;] and who charge them with Adulteries, and Acts of Incontinency? We do confidently assert this also, that the very Honours and * Acts of worship, attributed to them by men, are mixt with † uncleannesses and Lust.

† Or, Birth.

* Or, Rewards.

† Or, Whoredoms and Wickednesses.

[c] Now therefore, some skilfull person, and a Statuary, having conceived in his mind the Form [of his future work,] frames it by the Rules of Art, and * soon after, a forgetfulness falling [upon him,] as 'twere, he flatters his own work, and worships it in place of an immortal God: whereas notwithstanding, he himself, [d] the Father and Framer of that Statue, must confess himself to be mortal. Moreover, they themselves do shew the Sepulchres and * Arks of those Immortals, and honour the dead with † Divine Honours: being wholly ignorant, that that which is truly Blessed and ‖ Immortal, stands not in need of Honour from Mortals. For, that which can be discerned by the mind only, and comprehended by the understanding, requires neither a Form whereby it may be known, nor admits of a figure, as its image or Resemblance. But, all these things are done, in favour of the dead. For, they were really men, whilst they lived, * and were endued with Bodies.

[c] Ἤδη γάρ τις. I had rather read ἤδηγόν τις, &c. A little after, where the reading is, διανοίᾳ περιλαβὼν; at the margin of Moræus's Book 'tis mended περιλαβὰν; and so 'tis corrected in Gruter's Copy. Vales.

* Or, In the interim.

[d] Ἑαυτὸν πατέρα. 'Tis truer in the Fuk. Copy, ἑαυτὸν τὸ πατέρα, &c. Vales.

* Or, Coffins.

† Or, Immortal.

‖ Or, Incorruptible.

* Or, Being partakers of the Body.

CHAP. V.

That Christ the Son of God framed all things, and has appointed to every thing the term of its Existence.

BUt, why do I defile my tongue with impure expressions, when I am about to praise the true God? I am resolved in the first place to * wash away that bitter potion as 'twere, with one that is pure. Now, this pure potion is † drawn out of that ‖ ever-flowing Fountain of Virtues, of that God who is extolled by Us. Indeed, I account it my proper Business, to praise Christ [both] by [an holiness of] Life, and a thanksgiving also, which is due to him from us, for those his many and signal benefits. I assert therefore, that 'tis he who hath setled the Beginnings of this Universe, and who hath * Created men, and [a] who hath established these things by a certain Law and Order. And immediately, when † they were newly brought forth, he removed them [b] into a certain blessed and flourishing

* Or, Purge.

† Or, Poured.

‖ Or, Everlasting.

* Or, Invented the Creation of man. So Valesius renders it.

† That is, Our first Parents.

[a] Ἀνάγκη τὸ γιόν. In the Fuketian Copy, after the first word, there is an Empty space, capable of one word. I write therefore, πλημμυρεῖν ἀνάγκη αὐτῶν τὸ γιόν, their kind, &c. Vales.

[b] Τίς ἂν εὐεργὸς. It must be, τίς ἂν εὐεργὸς, as I found it mended at the margin of Moræus's Copy. In the Fuk. Copy the reading is τῆς εὐεργὸς, without the Conjunction. Vales.

[a] Καὶ τῷ τῶν λόγῳ νομοθετήσαντα. The three former words have been added by Learned men from M.S. Copies. Nevertheless, they occur not, either in the Kings Copy, or in the Old Sheets. But I have set a point after the word νομοθετήσαντα, from the authority of the Kings, and Fuketian Copy, and from the Old Sheets. Which Christophorson having not perceived, he joyned this with the following period. Now, the meaning of this place, is this. I affirm, says he, that as well man, as the other things which are in the world, are his workmanship, who hath constituted all these things in order; that is, the workmanship of the Supream God. It must therefore be written, φημὶ δὴ τοῦτον τὰς ἀρχὰς, &c; as 'tis in Sr Henry Savil's Book, and as Christophorson seems to have read. Then I reade, τὸν καὶ τῶν τῷ λόγῳ νομοθετήσαντα, and who hath established, &c; than which emendation there is nothing more certain. In the Fuketian Copy the reading is καὶ τὸν λόγῳ τῶν νομοθετήσαντα. Therefore, λόγῳ νομοθετήσαντα has the same import with λόγῳ διατάξαντα, an expression which he makes use of hereafter. Vales.

[b] Here Constantine seems to place that Paradise, wherein God put put Adam, without the Bounds of the earth. Which was the Sentiment of very many of the Ancients. Stephanus Gobarus, chap. 11. had handled this probleme; Ὡς ὁ παράδεισος ὅτε ἐν τῷ ἁγίῳ, ὅτε ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, ἀλλὰ τόπων μεταξύ, that Paradise is neither in Heaven, nor on Earth, but between them. And this was the Title of the twelfth chapter, that Paradise is the Jerusalem above, and is in the third heaven: and, that the trees which are there, are endued with understanding and knowledge: and, that Adam, after his transgression, was cast down from thence, into the Earth. Then [follows] a contrary assertion, that Paradise is not in the third Heaven, but in the Earth. 'Tis certain, Tatianus, in his Oration Contra Græcos, does affirm, that that Paradise, wherein Adam was placed by God, was not in this earth which we inhabit, but in another far better. His words are these, (which doubtless Stephanus Gobarus had quoted, in confirmation of that Opinion;) Μεσωικίδης οἱ ἀλίμονες, ὀζωειδῆς οἱ παραδόξοι· οὐ γὰρ ἀπ' ἀέρος κατεβλήθησαν· οἱ δὲ ἀπὸ γῆς μόνης, ἀλλ' ἐκ ἑκατέρου· κρείττονος δὲ τῆς ἐνταῦθα διακοσμήσεως. Besides, Tertullian seems to have thought the same. For thus he writes concerning Adam, in his Book de Patientiâ. Innocens erat, & Deo de proximo amicus, & Paradisi Colonus. At ubi semel succidit impatientiæ, desivit Deo sapere; desivit cœlestia sustinere posse, exinde homo terræ datus, & ab oculis dei dejectus, &c. The same may be made out from his Second Book against Marcion, Chap. 2 and 10; where he uses the same Metaphor with Tatianus.——Were that Book now extant, which Tertullian wrote concerning Paradise; it might be more plainly known, that this, which I have mentioned, was his Opinion. Lastly, Clemens Alexandrinus (in Excerptis Theodoti, or in his Books ὑποτυπώσ. page 341, Edit. Commelin.) places the terrestrial Paradise, wherein Eve was made, in the fourth Heaven. But Origen had placed Paradise, whereof Adam was an Inhabitant, in the third Heaven; as Methodius informs us in his Book de Resurrectione in Epiphanius pag. 572. And before all these, Valentinus placed that Paradise, wherein Adam dwelt, above the third Heaven; and had affirmed it to be intellectual; as Irenæus attests, B. 1. Vales.

* Or, Loaden.

c Καρπῶν τε διαφόρων, &c. The Rules of Grammar require, that we should write καρποῖς τε διαφόροις. And so 'tis in the Fuketian Copy. Vales.

d Ὅσον ποτὲ ἄνοσον. It must, I think, be thus; ὅσον τε ἄνοσον ἀπὸ τῆς ὠκεανῦ περιοχήσεως διοικεῖσθαι ὁμῶν ὁικῆσαι, and, that all that, &c. It might also be written in this manner, πιγαρὸν ὅσον ποτὲ τὸ ἄνοσον, &c. wherefore, all that healthy place —— was inhabited; and so there needs no alteration. Vales.

e After these words, Learned men have added these, καὶ ὁπόσα μαι, and Sciences; which I found written also at the margin of Moræus's Book. Nevertheless, they are wanting, not only in the King's Copy, and in the Sheets, but in the Fuketian and Savil. Copies also. Vales.

f Ἁρμονίας ἐμφύτους μετοχῆ. I write μέτοχον, as 'tis in the Fuketian Copy. A little before, where the reading is φύσεσι δὲ καὶ ἕδνεσι διάφορον, but in nature and species very different; I read ἕδνεσι, conditions; in which manner I also found it written in Turnebus's Book. Vales.

† Or, Adorned the most perfect complement of the Universe.

CHAP. VI.

Concerning Fate; that what is discourst of it, is false; [and this] is demonstrated, both from humane Laws, and * things created; which are moved, not disorderly, but in a regular manner; by which order of theirs, † they demonstrate the † Command of the Creator.

* Or, Those matters in reference to the Creation.

† Determination, or, Prescript.

BUt very many men, not so considerate as they should be, make Nature the Cause that has given Beauty and Gracefullness to all these things: some others of them [ascribe it] to Fate, or Fortuitous Chance; [a] assigning to Fate the power of these matters. Nor doe they understand, that when they speak of Fate, they utter a name indeed; but declare no Act, nor any substance proposed as a Subject. For, what can Fate it self be, * in reference to it self, when Nature shall have produced all things? [b] Or, what shall Nature be thought to be, if the Law of Fate be inviolable? Moreover, whereas 'tis said to be a Fatal Law, 'tis plain (in regard every Law is the Work of some Law-maker,) that even Fate it self, if it be a Law, is the Work and Invention of God. All things therefore are subject to God, nor is there any thing that has no share of his power. We do also allow, that Fate both is, and must be thought to be the Will of God. But, in what manner do Justice, Temperance, and the other Virtues [derive their Being] from Fate? Or, whence [proceed the Vices] contrary to these Virtues, injustice namely, and Intemperance? [c] For, wickedness [has its Original] from Nature, not from Fate: and Virtue is [nothing else] but good performances and Offices, of the Disposition and Morals. * But, if those things (which from a good purpose of mind are done well, or which on the contrary are performed otherwise,) have a different issue, according as it seems good either to Fortune or Fate; how will [d] all Right, and a giving of every person his due [proceed] from Fate? But now, Laws, and discourses, which perswade to Virtue, and deter from Vices; praises also, and discommendations; punishments likewise, and all those things whatever, wherewith men are incited to Virtue, and drawn off from wickedness;

[a] Τὴν τόπων ἐξουσίαν. Before these words Muculus has set a point. For thus he renders this passage. Qui potestatem horum fato tribuunt, ne hoc quidem intelligunt, &c. Christophorson has followed Muculus. Vales.

* Or, By it self.

[b] Ἢ τὶ μᾶλλον εἴη ἡ φύσις. It must, I think, be written, ἢ τὶ ἂν εἴη φύσις νομίζοιτο; Or, what shall, &c. In the Fuketian and Savilian Copies 'tis, ἢ τὶ ἂν ἡ φύσις νομίζοιτο. But in the Kings Sheets I found it written, ἢ τὶ μᾶλλ εἴη ἡ, &c. Vales.

[c] Εἶτε τε δὲ πονηρία. I read, εἰ δὲ ἤτε πονηρία, &c. Further, this place is imperfect, as 'tis apparent; and it would be hard to supplie it without the Copies. Nevertheless, this seems to be Constantine's way of arguing. If, says he, the Virtues be from Fate, then so are the Vices also. But, the Vices cannot be from Fate. For wickedness is either from Nature, or from the will. Therefore, 'tis not from Fate. But, if any one shall say, that Virtue indeed and Vice are of the Will; but, that the Will should do right, or otherwise, this is from Fate: in what manner then can justice, which is nothing else but a constant and perpetual desire of giving every one their due, be from Fate? In the Fuketian Copy the reading is, ἢ τε δὲ πονηρία. But Sr Henry Savil remarks at the margin of his Book, that perhaps it should be written, εἴτε δὲ, &c; and presently mends it, ἔχει κἀλορῶματα. Vales.

* Or, But, either Crimes, or, on the other hand, brave performances, which are [the property] of a good and right purpose of mind, if they happen sometimes one way, at others, another, according; &c.

[d] Πάντα τὸ δίκαιον ἔχοντα. The last word is added by Learned men from Manuscript Copies; which, nevertheless, I can in no wise approve of, though it does occur in the Fuketian Copy. I write therefore, πάν τὸ δίκαιον καὶ τὸ κατ' ἄξιαν ἀπενεμόμενον ἑκάστῳ, πῶς καθ' εἱμαρμένην, How will all right, &c. The meaning is the same with what I have said above. Nevertheless, the written reading may be born with, that by πάντα τὸ δίκαιον ἔχοντα may be meant those things which are reckoned up by Constantine, to wit, Laws, Rewards, punishments, Exhortations, and the rest of this sort, which contain justice in them. Vales.

how can these be said to proceed from Fortune or Chance, and not from justice rather, which * Even is the property of the provident God? For, * He that which is agreeable occurs, on account of mens living in this, or that manner. gives men those things, which they deserve for their following [c] this or that Course of Life: sometimes Pestilences [do rage,] and Seditions; and Scarcity and Plenty do by turns succeed one another; making Proclamation as 'twere in plain and express words, [f] that all such things as these do most fitly agree with our lives. For the Divine Essence rejoyces at the * probity of men; but abominates all manner of impiety. And, as it embraces a mind, whose Sentiments concerning it self are moderate; so it hates arrogancy which raises it self higher than is becoming a Creature. The [g] Ὧν εἰ καὶ τὰ μάλιστα. After the first word I found a blank in the Fuketian Copy, proofs of [g] all which matters, although they are very perspicuous, and do lye before our eyes; are yet [h] then more apparently manifest, [i] as often as, making a descent into Our Selves, and as 'twere contracting Our minds, We weigh with Our Selves the Cause of them. capable of one word. It must, I think, be made up thus, ὧν πάντων εἰ καὶ, &c; and we have rendred it accordingly. Vales.

* Or, Good inclinations.

[c] Τὸν ποῖον. Make it ποιὸν, with the accent in the last syllable, as I found it set at the margin of Moraeus's Copy. I read also, καὶ τὸ κατ' ἀξίαν ἀπαντᾶν, from the Manuscripts. 'Tis certain, the Fuketian Copy gives us this reading; διὰ γὰρ τὸν ποιὸν ἡμῶν ἀνθρώπων βίον καὶ τὸ κατ' ἀξίαν ἀπαντᾶν. Vales. In Robert Stephens 'tis, τὸ κατ' ἀξίαν ἐπαρτᾶν.

[f] Τὰ πάντα τὰ τοιαῦτα. I read ὅτι πάντα, &c, that all such, &c; as I found it mended in Moraeus's Book, at the margin. So indeed 'tis in the Fuketian Copy. Vales.

[g] Ὧν εἰ καὶ τὰ μάλιστα. After the first word I found a blank in the Fuketian Copy, proofs of all which matters, although they are very perspicuous, and do lye before our eyes; are yet then more apparently manifest, as often as, making a descent into Our Selves, and as 'twere contracting Our minds, We weigh with Our Selves the Cause of them. capable of one word. It must, I think, be made up thus, ὧν πάντων εἰ καὶ, &c; and we have rendred it accordingly. Vales.

[h] Τηνικαῦτα μὴν τοσάκις. The last word must be blotted out; in regard 'tis not to be found, either in the Kings Copy or in the Sheets, or Stephens's Edition. The place was rather to have been mended in this manner; ὅμως τηνικαῦτα ἡμῖν φανερώτερον ἐναλάμπουσιν. That is; Although it be certain, and evidenced by many instances, that Famine, Pestilence, and such sort of Calamities, are sent from Heaven in order to the punishing of mens wickedness; yet, that does much more manifestly appear, as often as those Calamities happen. For then we come to Our Selves, and understand the Causes of those things. Nevertheless, the reading in the Fuketian Copy is, τηνικαῦτα τοσάκις. Vales.

[i] Ὁσάκις γὰρ. It must, I think, be τοσάκις, or, if you had rather, τοσαυτάκις. In the Fuketian Copy the reading is, ὁσάκις ἂν.... συναγειράμενοι. And in the end of the period, λογιζόμεθα; excellently well. It must therefore be written, ὁσάκις ἂν ἡμεῖς συναγειράμενοι, as often as, recollecting our selves. Vales.

Wherefore, 'tis my assertion, that we ought to lead lives that are * sober and calm, not raising Our † thoughts above the condition of Our Nature; but taking this into Our serious consideration, that God the Inspector of all Our Actions is continually present with Us. Moreover, let us another way examine, whether this assertion be true, namely, that the disposal of all affairs [k] does depend upon Fortune and Chance. Whether therefore, the Celestial Bodies, and the Stars, the Earth and the Sea, the Fire and the Winds, the Water and the Air, and the Vicissitude of times, and the seasonable Returns of Summer and Winter; whether [I say] it ought to be believed, that all these have hapned * without reason and fortuitously, rather than were created. 'Tis certain, some persons, wholly void of understanding, do affirm, that men have found out many of these for their own use and advantage. And truly, whereas Nature does plentifully supply us with all manner of riches; we may grant, that, in reference to things which are terrene and corruptible, this Opinion † wants not something of reason. But, are then things immortal and immutable, the Inventions of men also? For, of these, and of all other things of this nature, (which are removed from our senses, and can be comprehended by the mind only;) [l] not man, a Creature made of matter, but the intelligible and Eternal Essence of God is the Framer. Besides, the Course and Order of that Constitution, is the work of providence also; [namely,] that the day is bright, being enlightened by the Sun; that the night succeeds the setting of the Sun; and, that, when it has succeeded it, it is not left wholly [m] void [of Light,] by reason of the Quire of the Stars. But, what shall we say concerning the Moon; which, when at the greatest distance from the Sun, being in a direct opposition to him, is at the Full; but, is lessened, * as often as 'tis in a Conjunction with the Sun: do not these things manifestly declare the † knowledge of God, and his sagacious wisedom? Farther, [n] the usefull and seasonable warmth of the Solar Rayes, whereby the Fruits are brought to maturity; the Blasts of the winds, which are of great use in making the year fruitfull and healthy; the refreshment of showers, and the admirable Harmony of all these, according to which they are all managed in a due and well-ordered manner: [lastly,] that perpetual Order of the Planets, which at fit and stated times make their Returns to the same * point; is not the Command of God hereby manifested, and likewise the perfect and entire dutifullness of the Stars, which pay an Obedience to the Divine Law? Moreover, the Tops of Mountains, and the hollow depths of Valleys, [o] and the smooth Levels of far-spreading Fields; do these seem to exist without the providence of God? The prospect whereof is not only [p] gratefull, but the use also is delightfull and pleasant. The * Spaces likewise and † Breaks of the Waters and the Earth, (which are of use partly for tillage, [q] and partly for conveyance of those things we stand in need of from forreign Regions;) do they not most clearly demonstrate the accurate and exact care of God? For, the Mountains contain water within their Bowels; which when the Plain has received, and || by the moysture thereof has sufficiently refreshed

* Or, Moderate and quiet.

† Or, Mind.

[k] Ἐκ τύχης καὶ τοῦ αὐτομάτου συνέστηκεν. I had rather read, συνέστηκεν, or συνέστηκε, has had a dependence upon, &c. Further, in the Fuketian and Turneb. Copies, the reading of this place runs thus, ὡς εἰ ἢ πάντων πε.... διάταξις ἐκ τύχης, &c. Vales.

* Or, Rashly.

† Or, Partakes of some reason.

[l] Οὐκ ἄνθρωπον ἔμψυχον ζῶον ὁ ἀνθρώπινος. Write, οὐκ ἄνυλον ζῶον ὁ ἀνθρωπος, not man, &c: But Christophorson read, οὐκ ἄνυλος ζωὴ ἀνθρώπου, not the life of man, which consists of matter; which reading I condemn not, but the former Emendation pleases me best. ——— Nevertheless, the Fuketian Copy does plainly favour Christophorson's Version. Vales.

[m] Μὴ ἄμοιρον αὐτῶν. Understand τοῦ φωτὸς, of light. Wherefore there is no need of Christophorsons conjecture; nor of Sr Henry Savil's, who mends it ἄμαυρον, dark. Vales.

* Or, By reason of its Converse with him at a nearer distance.

† Λόγον ἐγκέφαλον--Θεοῦ, God's conception of mind; Valesius renders it intelligentiam.

[n] Τὸ, τ' ὀπηδήσιον. I read τὸ δὲ ὀπηδήσιον, as 'tis mended at the margin of Moraeus's Book. Presently, make it ἀνέμων τε πνεύματα. And again, a little lower, τό τε εἶδος τῆς διαταξεως εἰς τὸν αὐτὸν ἀπογεωσαμένων τόπον. And thus I found it plainly written in the Fuketian Copy save that there it is ἀνέμων δὲ. Vales.

* Or, Place.

[o] Ὁμαλότης δὲ. It must be ὁμαλότης τε, as that Learned man had remarked in Moraeus's Book. And so the reading is in the Fuketian Copy. Vales.

[p] Ἐπιτερπὴς ἡ διὰ. The word ἐπιτερπὴς should be expung'd here. For at this place 'tis more elegantly understood. Sr Henry Savil has mended it at the margin of his Book, in this manner, ἃ χρεία συνεργεῖται. Vales.

* Or, Dimensions.

† Or, Divisions.

[q] Καὶ τῆς ἀλλοδαπῆς χρείας παρακομιδῆς. I read, καὶ τῆς ἀλλοδαπῆς ἧς ἐν χρείᾳ παρακομιδὴν, &c.; than which, nothing is more certain. In the Fuketian and Turneb. Copies 'tis, καὶ τῆς ἀλλοδαπῆς χρείας παρακομιδὴν. Further, I have rendred διασεισις, dissidia, following the authority of Amm. Marcellinus, who somewhere expresses himself so. Christophorson has likewise rendred it well, divortia Terrarum, the divorcements of the Earth. Vales.

|| Or, Has sufficiently moystened the ground in order to a refreshment.

fresht

freſht the ground; it pours forth the reſidue of it into the Sea: and the Sea tranſmits it to the Ocean. And, dare we yet affirm, that all theſe things come to paſs fortuitouſly, and by accident? When as notwithſtanding, [r] we are in no wiſe able to declare, with what ſhape or Form Chance is endued: a thing which has no ſubſiſtence, either in the underſtanding, or ſenſe; but is only the empty ſound of a name ‖ without the thing, which makes a noyſe about our Ears.

[r] Οὐ δυνάμεθα. In the Fuketian and Turneb. Copies this place is thus worded, ὃ νοοῦντες ἐν ποίῳ τινὶ σχήματι καὶ μορφῇ χαρακτηρίζεται τὸ αὐτόματον, we underſtand not in what manner of form and ſhape chance is characteriz'd. Valeſ.

‖ Or, without a ſubſiſtence.

CHAP. VII.

That, * in things which we can't underſtand, we ought to glorifie the Creator's Wiſdom; nor muſt we ſuppoſe Chance, or any thing elſe [ſave God,] to be the cauſe [of them.]

* Or, As to things incomprehenſible.

For Chance, 'tis moſt certain, is a Term [invented] by men, whoſe thoughts are raſh and inconſiderate; and who cannot † underſtand the cauſe it ſelf: but, by reaſon of their weakneſs of apprehenſion, ſuppoſe that all theſe things, whereof they are unable to give a reaſon, have been framed and ordered without any thing of reaſon. There are indeed ſome things endued with an admirable nature, the certain and evident knowledge of the Truth whereof, lies deep: of which ſort is the Nature of Warm Waters. For no perſon can readily aſſign the reaſon of ſo great a fire. And 'tis ſtrange, that [that fire,] though encompaſſed round with cold water, nevertheleſs, ſhould not looſe its Native Heat. And theſe things are found to be very rare, and few in number thorowout the whole world; for this reaſon, as I perſwade my ſelf, that men might eaſily know the power of [Divine] providence; which has ordered two moſt contrary Natures, Heat namely and Cold, to ſpring from one and the ſame Root. Indeed, the things are many, and almoſt innumerable, which God hath beſtowed on men, in order to their comfort and delight: but, the fruit of the Olive-tree and of the Vine, are chiefly [to be accounted ſuch.] Of which two, [a] this has a power of recreating and exhilerating the mind. But the other is fit not only for delight: but of uſe in order to the curing of Bodies. The perpetual and everlaſting courſe of Rivers deſerves likewiſe the higheſt admiration; which, by their flowing night and day, give a repreſentation of an eternal and never-ceaſing life. Alſo, the continual viciſſitude of night and day, is in the ſame manner admirable.

† Or, Apprehend their own opinion.

[a] Ἐπέχειν λόγον. Learned men have mended this place thus; τὸ μὲν γὰρ ἀναπαύσεως ψυχῆς καὶ φαιδρότητος ἐπέχειν λόγον. But, whereas the particle γὰρ occurs neither in the Kings Copy, nor Robert Stephens's Edition, I had rather read ἐπέχειν; which is plainly confirmed by the ſucceeding words. For it follows, τὸ δ' ἕτερον πρὸς τὴν ἀπολαύσεις καὶ θεραπείαν τῶν σωμάτων χρήσιμον. Nevertheleſs, the Fuk. Sav. and Turneb. Copies do plainly confirm that emendation of Learned men. The ſame Fuketian Manuſcript ſets two points after the word ἀπολαύσεις; right. Valeſ.

CHAP. VIII.

That God does plentifully ſupply men with thoſe things that are uſefull; but, with ſuch as are for delight, [He furniſhes them] in an indifferent manner only; beſtowing both ſorts, ſo as may be agreeable to their profit and advantage.

*ALL Theſe words have been ſpoken by Us, in confirmation of this Truth, that nothing has been done without reaſon, or without underſtanding: but, that Reaſon it ſelf, and alſo * Providence, are [the Works] of God. Who has likewiſe † produced the ſeveral kinds of Gold, Silver, Braſs, and of the other Metals, in a manner and meaſure that is fit and agreeable. For with thoſe things, the uſe whereof was like to be manifold and various, [men] are by his order plentifully furniſhed: but, ſuch things as are of uſe [b] for the delight of the world, and for Luxury only; [them he hath beſtowed,] both liberally, and alſo ſparingly; [obſerving a Mean] between a parcimony and a profuſeneſs. For, if the ſame plenty of thoſe things which were made for ornament, had been granted; the Searchers after Mettals, by reaſon of their overmuch avarice, would have deſpiſed thoſe [Mettals] that are of uſe for Huſbandry, and Building, as well of Houſes, as Ships; Iron namely, and Braſs; and would have neglected the gathering of them together: but would have made it their whole buſineſs, to provide ſuch things as ſerve for delight, and a vain and fruitleſs ſuperfluity of Riches. Wherefore, there is (they ſay) more of Difficulty and Labour, in finding Gold and Silver, than in finding all other Mettals whatever: for this reaſon namely, that the ſoreneſs of the Labour may be oppoſed to the vehemency of the deſire. How many other works of Divine Providence may beſides be reckoned up; whereby, in all thoſe things which it has plentifully conferred on us, it does plainly incite the Life of men to Modeſty and the other Virtues, and draws [them] off from unſeaſonable and importunate deſires? To find out the reaſon of all which things, is a greater Work than can be performed by man. For, how can the underſtanding of a corruptible and infirm Creature, [c] arrive at the accuracy of truth? How can it apprehend the pure and ſincere Will of God from the beginning?*

* Or, Let all theſe words be, &c.

[a] Τὴν προνοιαν ἐν Θεὸν. In Morænus's Book 'tis mended, τῶν Θεῶν; as Chriſtophorſon read; and as we have rendred it. And ſo 'tis plainly written in the Fuketian Copy. Valeſ.

† Reſerved, or treaſured up the nature of Gold, &c.

[b] Πρὸς τέρψιν κόσμου καὶ ἀφθονίαν, for the delight of the world, and for plenty only. The word ἀφθονίαν is corrupted; in the place whereof I would rather put ἀσωτίαν, Luxury. Yet, the ordinary reading may be born with. Valeſ.

[c] Ἀφίκοιτο. It muſt be ἐφίκοιτο, as I found it written in the Fuketian Copy, after I had long before conjectured, that it was ſo to be written. Moreover, I point the whole place thus; πῶς γὰρ ἂν τῆς κτίσεως ἀκηράτου ἀληθείας ἐφίκοιτο ἡ, &c. Πῶς ἂν πλὴν ἐξ ἀρχῆς, &c. Valeſ.

CHAP. IX.

Concerning the Philoſophers, who, becauſe they deſired to know all things, erred as to their Opinions; [a] and ſome of them were expoſed to dangers. Alſo, concerning the Opinions of Plato.

[a] In the very Title of the chapter there is a fault. For what can theſe words mean, καὶ κινδύνοις ἔνιοι περιπεσόντες τῆς πλάτωνος δόξης. But I think the place muſt be made good in this manner; καὶ περὶ τῆς πλάτωνος δόξης. Alſo, concerning the Opinions of Plato. And ſo 'tis plainly written in the Fuketian Copy. But, both in the Fuketian Copy, and alſo in the Kings Sheets, this chapter is begun from theſe words, πόσα δ' ἄλλα τῆς θείας περιοίας, How many other works, &c. Valeſ.

WHerefore, we ought to attempt thoſe things that are poſſible, and which exceed not the capacity of Our Nature. For, the perſwaſiveneſs [b] of ſuch matters as are found in Dialogues and Diſputations, does uſually draw away moſt of us from the truth of things. And this befell many of the Philoſophers, whilſt they [c] exerciſe their wits in diſcourſes, and in finding out the Nature of things. For, as often as the Greatneſs of things tranſcends their enquiry, they * involve the Truth by various methods of arguing. Whence it happens, that their Sentiments are contrary, and that they oppoſe one anothers Opinions: and this [they do] when they would pretend to be wiſe. From whence [have been occaſioned] Commotions of the people, and ſevere Sentences of Princes [againſt them;] whilſt they think, that the uſages of their Anceſtours are ſubverted by them. And their own ruine has very frequently been the conſequence hereof. For Socrates, proud of his knowledge in diſputing; [d] when he would undertake to render Reaſons that were weaker, more ſtrong; and would frequently make Sport in contradicting; was killed by the envy of thoſe of his own Tribe, and of his fellow-citizens. Moreover Pythagoras, who pretended highly to the exerciſe of Temperance and Silence, was taken in a Lye. For, he declared to the Italians, that [e] thoſe things long before predicted by the Prophets, which he had heard whilſt he was a Traveller in Ægypt, were revealed by God to him as 'twere in particular.

[b] Τῶν ἐν τοῖς διαλόγοις γινόμενον. In the Fuk. and Turneb. Copies 'tis truer written, γινομένων. But in the Kings Sheets that word is omitted. I had rather write alſo, τὸ γέτοι πιθανὸν ἦν ἐν τοῖς, &c; and have rendred it accordingly. Valeſ.

[c] Διαλεγέσθαι. In the Sacred Scriptures this verb is uſed in ſuch a ſenſe, as to ſignifie, to exerciſe his wit; as Jacobus Tuſanus has long ſince obſerved. Valeſ. See Pſal. 119. 15; where this word occurs.

* Or, Hide.

[d] Καὶ τὸν χείονας λόγους βελτίους ποιῶν. The ſenſe requires, that theſe words ſhould be added, καὶ τὸν βελτίους χείονας, and the ſtronger, more weak. This was the device of Protagoras, who promiſed young men, that he would make that reaſon which was ſtronger, more weak; and on the contrary, that which was weaker, more ſtrong; τὸν ἡττῶνα λόγον κρείττονα ποιεῖν, καὶ τὸν κρείττονα ἡττῶνα. Againſt the Sophiſts who promiſed theſe things, Socrates diſputed continually, that he might convince them that they knew nothing; and he purſued them with their own weapons, that is, arguments of Logick. Valeſ.

[e] Πάλαι τότε. It muſt be made πάλαι ποτε, from the Fuketian Copy.——What Conſtantine ſays (namely, that Pythagoras, after he was come into Egypt, and had heard what the Prophets had heretofore predicted; divulged thoſe things afterwards all over Italy, as if God had revealed them to him;) ſeems to me ſcarce probable. Indeed, that Pythagoras came into Egypt, and there received from the Prieſts, the Myſtick Rites and Ceremonies of their Religion; this, I ſay, is atteſted by Porphyrius in his Life, and by many others. Moreover, we are told by Ariſtobulus, Clemens, and Euſebius, that Pythagoras had many things out of the Books of Moſes. But, that he had learned the Prophecies of the Jews in Egypt, and had afterwards divulged them amongſt the Italians; is a thing affirmed by none of the Ancients, that I know of. And perhaps this place is to be underſtood, not concerning the Prophecies of the Jews, but thoſe of the Egyptians. For there were Prophets amongſt the Egyptians, as I have obſerved in my notes on Euſebius's Eccleſ. Hiſt. See book 4. chap. 8. note (c.) Which thing perhaps led Conſtantine into a miſtake. Who having read, that Pythagoras had learned many Secrets from the Prophets of the Egyptians, that is, their Prieſts; underſtood that as meant concerning the Prophets of the Hebrews. Valeſ.

Laſtly Plato, the mildeſt and ſweeteſt tempered perſon of them all, and the firſt man that drew off mens minds from the ſenſes, to things intelligible, and ſuch as always continue in the ſame ſtate; accuſtoming men to look upwards, [f] and inſtructing them to raiſe their eyes to things ſublime; in the firſt place taught, that God was above every * Eſſence: wherein he did well. To Him he ſubjoyned a Second; and in number diſtinguiſhed the two Eſſences, although the perfection of them Both be one; and notwithſtanding the Eſſence of the Second God, † proceeds from the Firſt. For He is the Framer and Governour of the Univerſe; and therefore tranſcends [all things.] But He who is the Second from Him, miniſtring to His Commands, || aſcribes the Conſtitution of all things to Him, as to the Cauſe. Therefore, according to the moſt accurate way of Philoſophizing, there will be but One who takes the Care of all things, and conſults their Good; God The *Logos namely, who has beautified all things. Which Logos Himſelf being truly God, is alſo the Son of God. For, what other Name ſhall any one impoſe upon Him, beſides the appellation of a Son, who at the ſame time ſhall not commit a ſin of the deepeſt dye? For, He who is the Father of all, is deſervedly eſteemed the Father of His own Word alſo. Thus far Plato's Sentiments were right. But, in thoſe things which follow, He is found to have wandred far from the Truth; whilſt he both introduces a multitude of Gods, and alſo aſcribes different Forms to each of them. Which was the occaſion of a greater miſtake amongſt unthinking men: who do not conſider the Providence of the moſt High God; but pay a veneration to Images framed by themſelves, made according to the likeneſs of men, and ſome other Creatures. And thus it hapned, that that excellent [g] Wit, and that Learning worthy of the higheſt Commendation, being mixt with ſome ſuch errours as theſe, had in it leſs of purity and perfection. The ſame perſon ſeems to Me, to reprove Himſelf, and to correct that diſcourſe; whilſt he atteſts in expreſs words, that the Rational Soul is the Spirit of God. For [h], He divides all things into two ſorts, intelligible namely and ſenſible: [the Former ſort is ſimple and uncompounded,] the Latter conſiſts of a Frame of Body. And, that is apprehended by the underſtanding; but this is perceived by Opinion with ſenſe. Therefore, that which partakes of the Divine Spirit, in regard 'tis unmixt and immaterial, is alſo eternal, and has for its allotment an endleſs life. But, that which is ſenſible, becauſe 'tis diſſolved the ſame way whereby it was at firſt framed, has no portion in an endleſs life. But, the Doctrine which * he delivers in the following words, is highly admirable; that thoſe who have lived well, the Souls namely of holy [f] Καὶ διδάξας. The conjunctive particle is wanting in the Fuk. and Savil. Copy, and in the Kings Sheets. I write therefore, ἀναβλέψαι τ' ἐπὶ τὰ μετάρσια διδάξας, and inſtructing, &c; as Sr Henry Savil read. Valeſ.

* Or, Subſtance.

† Or, Has its being.

* Or, Remits the Cauſe of the Conſtitution of all things to Him.

* Or, Word.

[g] He means Plato himſelf; whoſe excellent Wit, all the Ancients, yea the Chriſtians alſo, were admirers of. Valeſ.

[h] Διῃρῶν δὲ πάντα. Chriſtophorſon ſeems to have read διϊῶν τε. The place in Plato, which Conſtantine means, occurs in his Timæus pag. 28. Valeſ.

* Plato.

holy and good men, after their departure out of the Body, are conſecrated in the moſt beautifull [Manſions] of Heaven. [Which Aſſertion of his does not only deſerve admiration,] [i] but is alſo highly uſefull. For, what perſon giving credit to him, and expecting ſuch a felicity, will not order his life in the beſt manner, will not exerciſe Righteouſneſs and Temperance, and will not have an Averſion for wickedneſs? Agreeably to theſe words alſo, he has ſubjoyned, that the Souls of wicked men are toſſed up and down in the Streams of Acheron and Pyriphlegon, floating [k] like the Remains of a Shipwrack't Veſſel.

[i] Ἀλλὰ καὶ βιωφελῶς. Before theſe words, after the verb κατηγορῶν, in the Geneva-Edition theſe words are inſerted, τοῦτο δὲ ὁ μόνον δυνατὸν, which aſſertion, &c: Chriſtophorſon, Scaliger, Bongarſius, and Gruter put in theſe words; as 'tis remark't at the margin of that Edition. I likewiſe found the ſame emendation in Moræus's Book, in Turnebus's, Sr Henry Savil's, and in the Fuketian Copy; in which Copies alſo 'tis βιωφελές. Valeſ.

[k] Ναυαγίων τρόπον. I have rendred it, Navis fractæ reliquiæ, the Remains of a Shipwrack't Veſſel; that is, The Tackle or Furniture of the Ship. For after a Shipwrack, theſe proviſions and utenſils of the Veſſel, are toſſed up and down in the Sea. But Chriſtophorſon renders it Merces, the Wares or Goods of the Merchant; a rendition that can in no wiſe be agreeable here. For when a Veſſel is loſt at Sea, moſt commonly the Goods ſink to the bottome. Valeſ.

CHAP. X.

[a] Περὶ μὲν οὖν μὴ μόνον τὰ γεγραμμένα. It muſt be μὴ μόνον, not only, as the Learned man, at the margin of Moræus's Book, had conjectured it ſhould be. And thus Chriſtophorſon read; nor is it otherwiſe written in the Fuketian Copy. Valeſ.

[a] Concerning thoſe men, who do not only reject the Dogmata of the Sacred Scriptures, but them of the Philoſophers, alſo: and, that we either ought to give the Poets credit in all things, or in nothing.

NEvertheleſs, there are ſome men ſo depraved as to their minds, that, when they reade theſe very diſcourſes, neither care, nor are abaſhed with any thing of fear: but, as if they heard ſome forged Stories and Fables, they contemn and laugh [at them.] They highly extol a Variety and Fluency of expreſſion; but abominate the ſolidneſs and ſeverity of the * Dogmata. [b] But, yet the ſame men give credit to the Fables of the Poets; and fill all Greece and the Barbarous Regions with vain and [c] falſe Stories. For the Poets affirm, that ſome men, Sons of the Gods, do judge Souls after death; and they conſtitute them the Inſpectors and Triers of thoſe departed, and celebrate their Sentences, and Judiciary proceedings. But theſe very Poets commemorate the Fights of the Dæmons, and † Rights of War amongſt them. They divulge the Fates of the ſame [Gods] alſo. And affirm, that ſome of them are by nature cruel and auſtere; that others of them are ſtrangers to all Care over men; and, that ſome of them are moroſe. Moreover, they bring in [the Gods] lamenting the ſlaughter of their own Sons; as if they were unable to give relief, not only to ſtrangers, but to them alſo whom they love moſt entirely. They alſo feign them lyable to the ſame Paſſions and Troubles with men; whilſt they ſing their Wars and Wounds, their Joyes and Mournings. And they ſeem worthy of credit, when they affirm theſe things. For, whereas they attempt Poetry, incited thereto by ſome Divine motion; 'tis fit we ſhould believe, and be perſwaded by them, in reference to thoſe things which they utter, † when moved by a Divine Spirit. They likewiſe relate the Calamities of the Gods and Dæmons. Indeed, their calamities are [d] wholly agreeable with Truth. But ſome body will ſay, that 'tis lawfull for Poets to lye. For this ['tis aſſerted] is the Property of Poetry, to recreate the minds of the Hearers: but, [that is ſaid] to be Truth, when what is ſpoken, is in it ſelf no otherwiſe, than ſo as 'tis delivered. Let this be the property of Poetry, ſometimes to conceal and withdraw the Truth. But, they who lye, never lye in vain and for nothing. For they do this, on account either of Gain and Profit; or elſe, being (as 'tis likely) conſcious to themſelves of ſome ill practiſe, they hide [the Truth,] out of a fear of that danger which the Laws threaten them with. [e] But doubtleſs, it might (in my judgment) be poſſible for them, when relating nothing ſave the Truth concerning the Divine Nature, neither to lye, nor act impiouſly.

and have rendred it accordingly.

* That is, The more ſublime and hidden Doctrines and parts of the Chriſtian faith.

[b] Μύθοις τε πεπλάσθαι. I reade μύθοις δὲ, &c. Valeſ.

[c] Ψευδέσι φήμαις. Chriſtophorſon renders it ill, Præconiis celebrant. Φήμαι here imports nothing elſe but the Fables, wherewith the Poets filled the world. So a little lower, ſpeaking of the ſame Poets, he ſays, εἰμαρμένας τε αὐτῶν διαφημίζουσι, They divulge the Fates of the ſame [Gods] alſo; and ſo in the eleven th chapter, where he inveighs againſt Blaſphemy or Impiety. Valeſ.

† Or, Laws.

† Ἐνθουσιάζοντες, when acted by a Fanatick fury.

[d] Παντάπασιν ἀληθείας ἐφάπτεται. It muſt, I ſuppoſe, be παντάπασιν; which I have followed in my Verſion. Valeſ.

[e] Ἦν δ' ἄν δυνατὸν. I had rather reade, ἦν δὲ ἄρα δυνατὸν. Valeſ.

CHAP. XI.

Concerning Our Lord's Coming in the fleſh, what it was, and for what reaſons it has hapned.

IF therefore there be any perſon unworthy of [an acquaintance with] the beſt way of living, [a] and be conſcious to himſelf, that he hath lived wickedly and in a diſordered manner; may he repent and look towards the Deity, having firſt clear'd the eye of his mind, and being made a ſtranger to his former moſt vitious courſes. Nevertheleſs, he ought to reſt ſatisfied, if even in his declining age he may [b] attain wiſdom. But, no Learning [that has proceeded] from men, was ever any aſſiſtance to Us. But, whatever things are commendable in mens Lives and Morals, amongſt thoſe that have underſtanding

[a] Σύνοιδέ τε πῷ. It muſt be written σύνοιδέ τε ἑαυτῷ, and be conſcious to himſelf; which I admire the Learned did not think of. Further, from the beginning of this period, that is, from theſe words ἐκ δὲ εἰ τις δεῖν ἀνάξιος, the eleventh chapter begins, both in the Sheets, and in the Fuketian Copy. And in this Manuſcript, wherein the Contents are prefixt before each Chapter, this is the Inſcription of this Chapter; περὶ τῆς κατ' αἴσθησιν τοῦ κυρίου παρουσίας, τίς τε ὁπόσα γεγόνασι· καὶ περὶ τῶν μὴ γνόντων τὸ μυστήριον, &c; Concerning Our Lord's coming in the fleſh, what [it was] and for what reaſons it has hapned. And concerning thoſe who knew not this Myſtery; &c. But in the Kings Sheets, and in Robert Stephens's Edition, which Chriſtophorſon has followed, this chapter is divided into two, and, concerning thoſe who knew, &c, is the title of a new chapter. Valeſ.

[b] Τὴν σοφίαν ἐυτυχῶσιν. Doubtleſs it muſt be ἐυτυχήσειν, or ἐυτυχήσειεν, may attain; which I wonder neither Chriſtophorſon, nor Scaliger, nor others perceived; who have mended it, τῆς σοφίας ἐυτυχήσωσιν. But, 'tis not Greek to ſay ἐυτυχεῖν τῆς σοφίας, but ἐυτυχεῖν τινὶ σοφίαν. Yet in the Fuketian Copy the reading is τῆς σοφίας ἐυτυχήσωσι. Valeſ.

are

are all accounted the Gifts of God. Moreover, [c] against those poysoned darts which the Devil has framed, I have no mean Buckler which I may oppose; the knowledge namely, of those matters which are acceptable to God. [d] Out of which [knowledge] having selected those things that are sutable to the discourse in hand, I will attempt to laud the Father of all things. [e] But, be Thou Thy Self (O Christ, Thou Saviour of all!) favourably present with this design of Our devotion, and do Thou adorn Our discourse concerning Thine own power, prescribing to us the way and method of uttering praises.

[c] Δηλητήριον ἄντικυς. Questionless it must be written δηλητηρίων ἀντικυς, that is, against those poysoned darts. Where, ἄντικυς is a preposition; which Scaliger, Bongarsius, Curterius, and others saw not. So Constantine expresses himself in the fifteenth Chapter, near the beginning, πίστιν τε καὶ δικαιοσύνην αὐτοῦ ἐνδιδάξας, ἀντικυ τῆς ἐν τῆς ἀντικειμένης φύσεως φθόνου. Yet in the Fuketian Copy, and that of Turnebus, 'tis ὡς κατὰ δηλητηρίων ἄντικυς. Vales.

[d] Ἐξισᾶ πρὸς τὸν προκείμενον. Who would not admire, that Scaliger, Bongarsius, and the rest (out of whose Copies the emendations are taken, and set at the margin of the Geneva-Edition,) should not have seen the true emendation of this place; which, nevertheless, is very obvious and easie. For, the words being parted, which had grown together into one, it must be written thus, ἐξ ἧς τὰ πρὸς τοῦ, &c. The word γνώσεως, knowledge, is understood; which word was made use of a little before. But Christophorson renders this place thus; Hæc igitur commodè ad eum sermonem qui à me institutus est, delegi. Whence it appears, that either he has followed that emendation which occurs in the Books of Scaliger, Bongarsius, and Gruter; (which amendment I also found in Moræus's Book,) or else that Scaliger and the rest, having followed Christophorson's Version, mended it in this manner: which latter I think truer. But, that amendment can't be born with. For, it departs too far from the footsteps of the vulgar reading, if instead of ἐξισᾶ, you write τὰ πίνυν. Yet in the Fuketian and Savil. Copies, 'tis τὰ πίνυν, &c. Vales.

[e] αὐτῷ τε σωαιρόμενον. In Moræus's Book the Learned man had at the margin mended it, αὐτός. I think this whole place is to be read in one breath, thus; αὐτὸς δὲ σωαιρόμενον τῇ τῆς καθοσιώσεως σπουδῇ πάλιν χειρὸ, &c. But, be Thou, &c. Which amendment the Kings Copy does confirm; wherein a point is set before the word αὐτῷ. From those words therefore the twelfth chapter is to be begun; although in the Kings Copy, and in Robert Stephens's Edition, a new chapter is begun from the word πάλιν. The Fuketian Manuscript does plainly confirm our conjecture; wherein the reading is, αὐτὸς τε σωαιρόμενον τῇ τῆς καθοσιώσεως σπουδῇ, πάλιν, &c. But in the Kings Sheets I found it written, αὐτῷ τε σωαιρομένῳ, as Christophorson read. In the same Sheets a new chapter is begun from those words which follow presently, φασὶ δὴ τινες, &c; Some inconsiderate, &c. But, there is no need of beginning a new chapter here; in regard one is begun a little before, at, If therefore there be, &c, both in the Sheets, and in the Fuketian Copy. Vales.

Farther, let no person expect, that he shall hear † an Oration garnished with a singular elegancy of words. For I know accurately well, that that Oration which is soft and loose, and composed to please and allure, will be unacceptable to the prudent; when they who speak, make noyse and applause, rather than a sober and modest discourse, their Care and Business. Some inconsiderate and impious men do affirm, that Our Christ was deservedly condemned to punishment; and, that he who is the Authour of Life to the living, was himself deprived of life. But, 'tis not in the least strange, that [f] those who have once dared to be impious, and who have *taken a resolution neither to be afraid, nor conceal their own wickedness, should assert this. But, that has exceeded the utmost degree of folly and madness, which they seem to have perswaded themselves of; that the immortal God underwent Force from men, and did not [suffer,] meerly out of his own benignity and kindness [towards them.] Nor do they consider, that magnanimity [g] and patience, is neither to be *changed by ignominy, nor removed from its natural constancy and firmness by reproach; but, by consideration and an height of mind, does always break and beat back their fierceness, who invade and assault it. The Clemency of God had indeed resolved, wholly to destroy injustice, and to advance Modesty and Equity. And therefore, having gathered together the [h] wisest of men, † it instituted a most beautifull and most advantagious doctrine to mankind; to the [i] end it might make the Good and Blessed, to emulate and admire his own providence, in reference to worldly affairs. Than which, what can be termed a greater Good? God Himself ‖prescribing the Laws of Justice, and rendring those, who shall deserve to be his disciples, like himself: to the end that, Goodness and Virtue being diffused amongst all persons, an everlasting felicity might be procured for men. This is a Glorious Victory; this is true power; this is a mighty work, and most befitting [God;] the amendment namely of all people, and the reducing them to a better Temper. And to Thee O Thou Saviour of all, with praises and acclamations we ascribe the glory of this Victory! [k] But, Thou, O wicked and infamous Blasphemy, who dost advance Thy self by Lyes, Reports and Rumours every where published; Thou [I say] deceivest young men; and by perswasion dost impose upon youths, and those men who are endued with a childish disposition; drawing them off from the worship of Him who is [l] truly God; and erecting Images, to which they may pray, and pay an adoration!

* Or, Names and things beautified with a certain delectableness.

† Or, Disturbed.

† That is, God's Clemency.

‖ Or, Administring justice.

[f] Τὲς ἀσεβεῖν ἅπαξ τολμήσαντας. Doubtless it must be written, τοὺς δ' ἀσεβεῖν ἅπαξ τολμήσαντας, καὶ μήτε δι' ἀγνοιαν, μήτ' ἐγκαλύπτειν τοῖς ἑαυτῶν πονηρίαν καταγοῦντας, οὐδὲν θαυμαστὸν τοῦτο λέγειν; But, 'tis not in the least strange, &c; as 'tis written in the most excellent Fuketian Copy; whereto agree Sr Henry Savil's, and Christophorson's Copy. Vales.

[g] Καὶ ἀνεξίκακον τῆς θείας. The two last words are added from Gruter's Book; which do likewise occur written at the margin of Moræus's Copy. But, whereas they are not either in the Kings, or Fuketian Copy, or in Robert Stephen's-Edition, there is no reason which may compel us to add them here. And perhaps it must be written, τὸ ἀνεξίκακον τῆς φιλανθρωπίας; that term being brought hither which occurs in the foregoing line. Farther, this Disputation of Constantine is, in my judgment, designed against Porphyrius, or some other Gracian Philosophers; who objected this against the Christians, because they asserted that Christ was crucified, and put to death by men. For thus they argued against the Christians. If Christ be God, how could Force and Violence have been made use of against Him by men, in regard 'tis plain, that men are able to do nothing against God. Vales. In this Edition of Valesius's, the term ἀνεξίκακον is left out, by a mistake of the Press I suppose; for 'tis in Stephens.

[h] Τὲς σοφωτάτυς τῶν ἀνδρῶν. So Constantine calls the Apostles; who nevertheless, 'tis manifest, were illiterate and unskilfull persons. So also lower in this chapter, he terms the same persons εὐπεφυκότας, that is, men endued with an excellent wit. It was indeed Constantine's Sentiment, that we were to think honourably of the Apostles, whom the Church had so high a veneration for. But the holy Fathers speak far otherwise concerning the Apostles, and especially John Chrysostome; who confesses, that the Apostles were persons wholly ignorant and unskilfull; and from thence fetches a most cogent argument in confirmation of the Christian faith; that illiterate men [had prevailed upon] the Philosophers; that the meanest sort of Fishermen of Judæa had perswaded the Romans, who were Conquerours of the world, to worship a person that was Crucified. Constantine repeats the same thing hereafter. Vales.

[i] Ζηλῶσαι. This term seems to be used instead of ζηλωτὰς ποιῆσαι; [and we have rendred it accordingly.] The meaning of this place is to be fetcht from a passage which occurs hereafter in this chapter where Constantine expresses himself thus; τὸ δὲ τῆς φιλανθρωπίας ὑπερέχον, ἐν τῷ τοὺς εὐπεφυκότας τῶν ἀνθρώπων, θείᾳ καὶ μακαρίᾳ ζηλωτὰς ποιῆσαι βίᾳ, &c; But, this is the eminentest gift of Thy Clemency, that Thou hast rendred men, indued with a good, &c. For these two places borrow light one from the other. In the Fuk. Turneb. and Savil. Copies, the reading is ζηλῶσαι, not ζηλῶσαι. Vales.

[k] From these words a new chapter is begun in Robert Stephen's Edition, and in the Kings Copy; wherein these words are set at some little distance from the words foregoing. But in the excellent Fuketian Manuscript, and in the Sheets, there is no distinction made here. Vales.

[l] Τῷ ὄντι θεῷ. I had rather write it adverbially, τῷ ὄντως; [and have rendred it so.] And thus I found it plainly written in the Fuketian Copy. Vales.

That

That so, being deceived, the Reward of their own senselessness may [m] await them. For they accuse and calumniate Christ the Authour of all Good, who is both God, and the Son of God. Is not this God deservedly worshipped by the * Soberest and most prudent Nations and people? Who being possest of all manner of power; and always continuing firm to his own purpose, has not made the least abatement of his innate Clemency. Be gone therefore, Ye Impious! (For that is permitted to You, in as much as no punishment is now inflicted on Your wickedness;) Be gone, I say, to your slaughters of Victims, and to Your Banquets, Festivals, and Drunken Debauches. Wherein, under the Mask of Religion, you make pleasures and intemperance your business. You pretend indeed to perform Sacrifices; but in reality you serve your own Lusts. For you know nothing of Good, not so much as the first Command of the Great God; who has both prescribed Laws to mankind, and also given it in charge to his Son, that he should form and govern the Lives and Morals of men: to the end that they who shall lead their lives well and soberly, may, according to the Judgment of His Son, have a second Life allotted them, which will be blessed and happy. I have declared [n] God's Decree concerning the Life of men, neither wandring in ignorance, as many do; nor yet led by guess, or conjecture. But some body will perhaps say, whence is this appellation of a Son; or, what is the manner of this Begetting; For there is but One only God, and He is wholly a Stranger to all Mixture and Copulation. But, it ought to be considered, that Generation is twofold; the one from † Conception, which is known to all men; the other, from an Eternal Cause. The manner of which [Generation,] by the favour of Divine Providence that person sees even amongst men, [o] who is dear to God. For, any wise man knows the Cause of the Disposition and order of the Universe. There being nothing therefore which has not a Cause; 'tis necessary, that before all things which are, their Cause should exist. Whereas then the world, and the things therein, do exist; and whereas the preservation of those things does exist also; 'tis necessary, that before all things which are, the Preserver should exist. So that, Christ Himself is the Cause [p] of preservation of things, and preservation, the Effect. In the same manner as the [r] Father is the cause of the Son; and the Son, the Effect. Now, that Christ Himself existed before all things, we have already proved sufficiently. But in what manner came He down to men, and [why descended He] into the world? The Intent and purpose [s] of his Coming, as the Prophets have predicted, proceeded from His care over the Universe. For 'tis requisite, that the Framer should take care of His own Works. But, when he was about to * assume a terrene Body, and to stay upon Earth for some time, (necessity requiring this;) He devised for Himself a new way of being born. For the Conception [was] without a Marriage; and the † Child-birth of a pure Virginity; and a Virgin the Mother of God; and a Temporal Beginning of an Eternal Nature; and a || Perception of an intelligible Essence; and a [t] matter of an incorporeal Brightness. All things therefore, which then were seen, were agreeable hereto. [u] A bright Dove, [such a one as heretofore] flew out of Noah's Ark, descended into the Bosome of the Virgin. Those other things are likewise consonant, that were the consequences of this * unspotted [w] Marriage, which is purer than all Chastity, and they are to be rejected. For, they both disturb the whole meaning of this place, and also occur not in the Manuscript-Copies. Valesius.

[m] Μένειν τὸ ἐπιχείρημα. At this place μένειν is taken in the same sense, wherein manet amongst the Latines is sometimes used; as when 'tis said, te manet Capitolina palmata, that is, is provided for Thee. Græcians take the verb μένειν in the same sense. So in Constantius's Letter to the Alexandrians, which Athanasius records in his Apologetick to the Emperour Constantius; ἀλλ' ὁ γοητικὸς καὶ λαμπρὸς, οὐδὲ κείσαν ἔμεινε κατ' ὀπτόν. Nevertheless, the Learned have from their own Copies long since mended it ἀναμένειν, may expect, or, wait: which emendation I found in the Books of Turnebus and Sr Henry Savil. The Fuketian Copy has ἀναπάνευν, come upon them. Valesius.

* Or, Modestest.

[n] He means the Decree of God concerning the assuming manhood, or concerning the Incarnation, by which the life of men was repaired. 'Tis apparent therefore, that the Chapters are well digested by us; unless any one should have a mind, to make the tenth chapter reach to these words; which I should willingly yield to. Valesius.

† Or, Birth.

[o] Ὡς ἐκείνῳ φίλος ὑπάρχῃ. Robert Stephens, in those various Readings which he has remarked at the close of his Edition, gives notice, that in some Copies this place is read thus; ὃς ἐκείνῳ φίλος ὑπάρχῃ, who is dear to him, that is, to God. Which doubtless is the true writing. For Constantine sayes, that the manner of a Natural Generation is known to all; but, that very few know the way of the Divine Generation; those namely whom God shall have a peculiar affection for. In the Kings Copy the reading is φίλος. But in the Sheets 'tis written, ὃς ἐκείνων φίλως. But the Fuk. Savil. and Turneb. Copies give the true reading. Valesius.

[p] Τὴν αἰτίαν αὐτῶν τῆς σωτηρίας. The Genevan-men did ill, in admitting the two last words into the Text, from the conjecture of Scaliger, as 'tis noted at the margin. But, 'tis plain enough, that [q] Τὴν δὲ σωτηρίαν τὸ ἄτιον. Christophorson saw nothing at this place. But 'twas obvious to have been observed, that the reading here ought to be τὸ αἰτιατὸν. For here Constantine compares the Son with preservation, and the Father with the Preserver. As therefore the Father is the Cause of the Son, but the Son, the Effect, or τὸ αἰτιατὸν: So the preserver is the Cause of the safety of all things; but safety is the Effect, or τὸ αἰτιατὸν of the Preserver. Valesius.

[r] The ancient Divines, those especially amongst the Greeks, affirmed, that one person in the Trinity, God the Father namely, was the Cause; but, that the other Two, to wit the Son and Holy Spirit, were the Causata, i. e. the Effects. So Athanasius in Quæstion. Secund. chap. 11. and 12. ὁ δὲ υἱὸς οὐκ ἔστιν ἄιτιος, ἀλλ' αἰτιατός, But the Son is not the Cause, but the Causatum. So also Johannes Damascenus in his first Book de Imaginibus, not far from the Beginning. Imago, says he, Dei invisibilis est ipse Filius, &c; The Image of the invisible God is the Son Himself, who bears the Father in Himself, and is in all things the same with Him, save in this one, that He is from Him, as from the Cause. For the Natural Cause is the Father, from which the Son proceeds. Also, Gregory Nazianzen, in Orat. 29, which is de Dogmate, does in express words assert, that the Father is the Cause of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. But, amongst the Latines, Marius Victorinus has expresst himself in the same manner, in his first Book against Arius. —— Valesius.

[s] Ἡ μὲν προαίρεσις τῆς καθόδου. Our Copies varie not here. Yet I would rather read τῆς παρουσίας, that is, of the Lord's Advent. Valesius.

* Or, Approach to worldly Body.

† Or, Birth.

|| Or, Sense.

[t] Ἀσωμάτου φανότητος ὕλην. It must, I think be written φανότητος, as Christophorson read. For Constantine alludes to that place of Saint Paul, wherein Christ is termed the Brightness of the Glory of God the Father. See Hebr. 1. 3. In the Fuk. and Savil. Copies, 'tis φανότητος. Valesius.

[u] Ἀϊσλήσασα πτερυγί. In the Kings Copy at the margin, the word λαμπρᾷ is written, which is an explanation of the term ἀϊσλήσασα. The emendation therefore of Scaliger and the rest is needless, who read ἀϊθρήσασα. Farther, this story of Constantine's is taken out of the Apocryphal Books, wherein 'twas related, that the Holy Ghost, under the shape of a Dove, descended into the Bosom of Mary, according as the Angel had foretold to her. And perhaps these things were related in this manner, in the Gospel of the Hebrews. But Christophorson supposes that Dove to be meant here, which Noah heretofore sent out of the Ark: and that that Dove was a figure of the Holy Spirit, which was afterwards to come upon the Virgin Mary. But I would rather read here, ἀϊσλήσασα πτερυγὶ οἵα ἡ πάλαι ἐκ τῆς νεὼς λάφυκι ἀποπεμφθεῖσα, &c; a Bright Dove, &c. Thus the sense is plain and elegant. Valesius.

[w] Γαμήλιον. After this word, as plac't in the Greek Text, I have set a point, from the authority of the Kings Copy: which Christophorson having not perceived, corrupted the meaning of this whole place, by adding some words. For thus he read; γαμήλιον, ὀνομαζομένου ἐν ἀπορρήτοις σοφίᾳ τοῦ θεοῦ θαυμαστοῦ. Nevertheless, the Fuketian Copy does plainly confirm this reading and punctation of Christophorson; save that it has, τοῦ θεοῦ σοφία. As it is also in Turnebus's Book. Valesius.

more

more excellent than Continency it self. The [wonderfull] Wisdom of God from his very Cradle: and Jordan, [the River] which afforded Him water for Baptism, receiving Him with a Reverence. Besides this, a Royal Unction * joyned with the knowledge of all things. A doctrine also, and power which performed wonderfull things, and healed incurable diseases. † And a swift and unhindred Assent to Humane prayers. And his whole life in general was beneficial and usefull to men. But, his Preaching [was such as might] not instill prudence, but wisedom: For his disciples did not learn those termed the [x] Civil Virtues, but the paths which lead to an intelligible world; and laboured in the Contemplation of that Nature, which always continues in one and the same State; and made continual researches into the notion of the Supream Father. Now, as to his Favours and Acts of kindness, they were in no wise mean. Instead of [y] Blindness, sight; instead of faintness and a weakness of body, a sound and healthy constitution; Lastly, instead of death, a Restoration to Life. I omit that plentifull provision of Necessaries for food in the Wilderness, and that abundance of all sorts, * raised from small quantities of Victuals, wherewith numerous multitudes were for a long space of time sufficed. This Thanksgiving, according as we are able, we render to Thee, Christ Thou God and Saviour, the Supream Providence of the Great Father! Thou who savest us from Evils, and teachest us a Most Blessed Doctrine. For I speak not these words, that I might praise Thee, but in order to my giving Thee thanks. For who is he amongst men, that hath ever praised Thee according to Thy worth? For Thou art He, who art said to have created things of nothing; [z] and to have given them light; and with Order and Measure to have beautified the † confused heap of the Elements. But this is the eminentest Gift of Thy Clemency, that Thou hast rendred men, endued with a good disposition, Emulatours and Admirers of a Divine and Blessed life; [a] and hast taken order, that, having been made Merchants of those things which are truly good, they should impart their own wisedom and happiness to many others; and that they themselves should reap the immortal fruit of Virtue; being freed from Intemperance, but made partakers of Clemency; having mercy before their eyes, but hoping for the * Promises of Faith; lastly, [b] embracing Modesty and all manner of Virtue, [instead of injustice,] which the former Life of men had cast upon their Morals, [that it might be cut off] from him who makes provision for all things. For, no other person could be found, who might bee a fit Physitian for the curing such great Evils, and that injustice, which had prevailed in that age. Providence therefore coming even to the Earth it self, easily composed and beautified all things, which by wickedness and intemperance had been disordered. Nor [did Christ perform] this secretly and in a concealed manner. For he knew, that there were some men, who with prudence and understanding would [c] contemplate his own power: but, that others, in regard as to their Nature they were like irrational creatures, would * relye upon their own senses rather. [d] Wherefore, that no person, whether good or ill, might be in doubt; [he performed it] openly, and hath exposed this Blessedness and admirable Cure to publick view: restoring again to life, those that were dead; and commanding, that such as had been deprived of their senses, should again recover their former soundness of sense. But, that he rendred the Sea solid, and in the midst of a Storm ordered a Calm to arise; and in fine, that (after he had performed wonderfull works, and from an incredulity had brought men over to a most strong Faith;) He † ascended up into Heaven; whose work was this, save God's, and [a performance] of a most transcendent power? Nor did that time, which was neerest to his Passion, want those Sights that were highly admirable; when the darkness of night obscured the brightness of day, and * totally eclips'd the Sun. For, a terrour had seized all people every where, [who believed] that the end of all things was now come, and that a Chaos, such a one as had been before the Composure of the World, would now prevail. Moreover, the Cause of so great a Calamity was inquired into, and what horrid impiety that might be, which had been committed by men against the Deity. [e] Till such time as, with a pleasing greatness of mind, God had with

* Or, Agreeable.

† Καὶ εὐχῶν ἀνθρωπίνων ταχεῖα καὶ ἀνεμπόδιστος βεβαίωσις; which Valesius renders thus, Mira denique celeritas in hominum precibus audiendis, Lastly, a wonderfull swiftness in hearing mens prayers.

x Τὰς πολιτικὰς ἀρετάς. Philosophers make two sorts of Virtues; the one πρακτικὰς, practical; which Constantine does here term πολιτικὰς, Civil; the other θεωρητικὰς, contemplative, which leade our minds to the contemplation of God. Whence, some of Pythagoras's disciples were termed πολιτικοὶ, others σεβαστικοὶ, as the Old Author concerning the Life of Pythagoras, in Photius's Bibliotheca chapt. 259, informs us. Farther, in the Fuketian Copy the reading of this place runs thus; διδάσκων τοὺς φοιτητὰς, ὡς τὰς πολιτικὰς λεγομένας ἀρετὰς διδάσκα ἐκμανθάνειν, ἀλλὰ τὰς εἰς τὸν νοητὸν κόσμον ἀτρεπτὰς αἰσθάσας ἥν τε πρὸς τὸ ἀεὶ κατὰ ταὐτὰ καὶ ὡσαύτως ἔχον, &c. The same also is the reading in the Books of Turnebus and Sr Henry Savil. But I agree with Sr Henry, who, after he had written this reading at the margin of his own Book, blotted it out again, having added this note; Lectio vulgata retineri potest, paucis immutatis; the common reading may be retained, a small alteration being made. Vales.

y Ἀντὶ μὲν τῆς ῥώσεως, instead of soundness. Doubtless it is to be written, τῆς πηρώσεως, Blindness. Presently, from the Kings Copy I have mended it, ἀντὶ δὲ παρέσεως, instead of a faintness and weakness of body. And so it is in Sr Henry Savil's Copy. A little before, I had rather write, τὰ γέ τοι ἧς ἐνεργειημάτων, &c; instead of τὰ γάρ τοι, &c. Vales. In Robert Stephen's, instead of παρέσεως, the reading is παραυξέσεως.

z Τὸ δὲ φῶς αὐτοῖς ἀνάψαι. I reade, τό τε φῶς, &c. and to have given, &c. In the Kings Sheets, and in Sr Henry Savil's Book, the reading is σὲ δὲ φῶς, &c. But the Fuketian Copy has it, σέ τε. Vales.

a Καλαυξεῖν θ'. Christopherson does here understand the verb παιῆσαι, in common. Which though I condemn not, yet it does not seem necessary. In the Fuketian Copy, this place is thus read, ἀφεστὼ ἀπαυζόμωροι, ἧν ὁ θεσπὶς βίος ἀνθρωπίνων ἠδῶν ἐκδεδεγμένος ὅδεν χδ, &c. without those words πλὴν τοῦ πάντων ποιητοῦ προνοίαν. Vales.

† Or, Disordered confusion.

b Ἀπαυζόμωροι. After this word in the Greek, something seems to be wanting. Nor can it be made sense, unless you add these words, ἀντὶ τῆς ἀδικίας ἥν ὁ θεσπὶς βίος, &c. Which writing I have followed in my Version. Vales.

* Or, Expectation.

c Τὴν ἑαυτῶν δυναμεῖν πρὸς δύναμιν, would contemplate their own power. I doubt not but it should be read πλὴν ἑαυτῆς δύναμιν, his own power. Which is plainly evidenced from the following words. For Constantine gives the reason, why Christ, who had come to cure the Diseases and Vices of men, and to bring news of a blessed and happy life in heaven, would perform so many Miracles on earth, by restoring eyes to the blind, health to the sick, life to the dead. This therefore, he says, he did, in favour of those whose understandings are more slow and heavy; that they might not doubt of his virtue and power, in regard they saw him perform so many Miracles. These are they, whom a little after he terms φαύλους, ill men. Vales.

* Or, Stick to.

d Διὰ φανέρωσιν ἅπαντος. I have, as I think, restored this place very happily; although Scaliger, Bongarsius, and others, whose amendments occur at the margin of the Geneva-Edition, saw nothing in it. But I have restored this place to its former Lustre, and have in a manner made no alteration at all; thus; διὰ φανερῶς, ἵνα μηδεὶς ἀμφιδάλλοι, &c; and have rendred it accordingly. There is nothing more certain than this reading. Indeed, the Fuketian Copy agrees with the reading of Scaliger and Bongarsius. But I have found from many places, that the authority of this Copy is sometimes weak. Which thing is evident enough, even from this one place. Vales.

* Or, Stifled out the Sun.

e Ἕως ὅτε ἠπίως. I write ἕως ὅτε ἠπίῳ μεγαλοψυχίᾳ, &c; and have rendred it accordingly. Vales.

with contempt look't upon the contumely of the Impious, and had reſtored all things, and beautified the whole Heaven with the uſual * courſe of the Stars. The Face therefore of the world, which [f] in a manner had been wholly covered with mourning and ſadneſs, was again reſtored to its † Native beauty.

* Or, Daunce.

† Or, Own.

[f] Τοιγάρ τοι πρσῷ. There was no need of the Emendation of the Learned, who make it ποσῶς; in regard πρσῷ may alſo be uſed adverbially, inſtead of ὅπῃ ποσόν. Yet in the Fuk. and Turneb. Copies, 'tis ποσῶς. Valeſ.

CHAP. XII.

Concerning thoſe who knew not this Myſtery; and, that their ignorance is voluntary; and, what great bleſſings await thoſe who have died in Confeſſion.

[a] From theſe words the twelfth chapter is to be begun: Concerning thoſe who knew not this Myſtery; &c. For hitherto Conſtantine has treated about the Coming of Our Lord, and on what account Chriſt deſcended to the Earth. But now he treats of thoſe perſons, who have been ignorant of this Myſtery. Valeſ.

[a] But, ſome one of thoſe, with whom 'tis uſual to blaſpheme, will peradventure ſay, that God was able to have made the will of men better, and more tractable and mild. [I demand] therefore, what better method, what more effectual attempt in order to the amendment of ill men, than God's own ſpeaking to them? Has not He, when preſent and rendred viſible to all, taught them modeſtie and ſobriety of life? If therefore the Command of a God who was preſent; hath availed nothing; how could [the admonition] of one abſent and un-heard, be of force? What therefore was the Obſtacle of that moſt Bleſſed Doctrine? The perverſe, untractable, and fierce humour of men. For, when with an angry and diſpleaſed mind we receive thoſe things which are well and fitly enjoyned, the * acuteneſs of our underſtanding is dull'd as 'twere, and clouded. [b] Beſides, it was pleaſure to them, to neglect the commands; and in a loathing and diſdainfull manner to give ear to the Law that was made. For, had they not been negligent and careleſs, they had received rewards befitting their attention, not only in this life preſent, but in that to come alſo, which is really and truly The Life. For, the reward of thoſe who obey God, is an immortal and eternal Life. The attaining whereof is poſſible to them only, who ſhall know God, and ſhall propoſe their own lives, as † Pattern, or, Sample. ſome perpetual † Exemplar, for their imitation, [c] that have reſolved to live by way of Emulation with a deſire of excelling. On this account therefore the Doctrine was delivered to the wiſe, that what they ſhall command, might [d] in a pure mind be preſerved with care, by their companions; and that the obſervance of God's Command might thus continue true and firm. For, from ſuch an obſervance, and from a pure Faith, and a ſincere Devotion towards God, ſprings a fearleſneſs and contempt of Death. [Such a mind as this] therefore, gives a reſiſtance to the Storms and Tumults of the world, [e] being fortified in order to Martyrdom, by an inexpugnable ſtrength of Divine Virtue. And when with a magnanimity it has conquered the greateſt Terrours, it is vouchſafed a Crown from Him, [f] to whom with courage and conſtancy it hath born witneſs. Nevertheleſs, it does not boaſt in reſpect hereof. For, it knows I ſuppoſe, that even this is the Gift of God, that it has both endured Tortures, and hath alſo chearfully fulfilled the Divine Commands. Farther, ſuch a life as this is followed by an immortal Memory, and an Eternal Glory; and that moſt deſervedly. For, both the life of a Martyr is found to be full of modeſty, and of a Religious obſervance of the Divine Commands; and [g] his death likewiſe [appears] full of magnanimity and * Gallantry. Wherefore, Hymns, Pſalms, commendations, and praiſes are after this ſung to God the Inſpectour of all things; and ſuch a [h] Sacrifice of thanksgiving as this, is performed in memory of theſe perſons: [a Sacrifice] not polluted with bloud, and void of all manner of violence. Neither is the Odour of Frankincenſe required, nor a kindling of the Funeral-pile: but a pure Light only, as much as may be ſufficient for the enlightning them, who pray to God. Sober [i] Feaſts and Banquets are likewiſe celebrated by many, made for the relief and refreſhment of the indigent, and to help them who have been deprived [of their Eſtates and Country.] Which [Banquets] ſhould any one think to be burthenſome and inconvenient, his Sentiment would be repugnant to the Divine and moſt Bleſſed † Diſcipline.

* Or, Sobriety of the mind is ſpoyled and defac't.

* Or, Nobility.

† Or, Doctrine.

[b] Τὶ δὲ ὅτι πρσφιλὲς ἦν. I had rather write, ἔτι δὲ ὅτι, &c; Beſides, &c. For Conſtantine brings two reaſons, why the Heathens embraced not the preaching of Chriſt. Valeſ.

[c] Τοῖς πρὸς ἄμιλλαν ζῆν πρσηκμάζοις. 'Tis an elegant Greek-phraſe, this, πρὸς ἄμιλλαν ζῆν; ſpoken concerning thoſe who frame their lives in order to the imitation of every thing that is beſt. For they who have a mind to make a great progreſs in Virtue, ought to ſet ſome perſon before their eyes, whom they may imitate. Thus the Emperour Julian framed his own Actions and Morals, in imitation of Prince Marcus, as Amm. Marcellinus relates. Valeſ.

[d] Παραφυλάσσηται καθαρᾷ ψυχῇ. It muſt be written καθαρᾷ ψυχῇ, in a pure mind; as the reading is in the Fuketian Copy. Wherein likewiſe it is, ἀληθῶς τε ἦ, excellently well. Valeſ.

[e] Πρφρασμῷ πρὸς τὸ μαρτύριον. In the Books of Scaliger, Bongarſius, and Gruter, this place is worded thus; ἀναταγωνίσῳ θείας ἀρετῆς μάχῃ φερομένῳ πρὸς τὸ μαρτύριον: which writing I likewiſe found in the Fuketian Copy. But S^r Henry Savil in his Copy has mended it thus, ἀναταγωνίσῳ τε θείας ἀρετῆς μάχῃ φέρεται πρός, &c. And ſo Chriſtophorſon read. But the common reading, which I found in the Kings Copy, and in the Sheets, is in my judgment far better; and therefore we have followed it in our Verſion. Valeſ.

[f] Ὃς γενναίως ἐμαρτύρησε. I doubt not but it ſhould be, ᾧ γενναίως, &c, to whom, &c; which I wonder Chriſtophorſon and the reſt perceived not. Valeſ.

[g] Ἡ τελευτὴ πλήρης. Queſtionleſs it muſt be written, ἥ τε τελευτὴ πλήρης, and his death, &c; that the ſenſe may be compleat. Farther, this place concerning the Martyrs, is a moſt elegant one. Valeſ.

[h] And this paſſage is very remarkable, concerning the Sacrifice of thankſgiving, which was offered to God in memory and honour of the Martyrs. For ſo theſe words θυσία τοῖς ἀνδράσιν τελείται are to be explained, which Chriſtophorſon underſtood not. For the Chriſtians did not offer ſacrifice to the Martyrs; but only to God; giving him thanks, that he had conferr'd on them a Crown of Martyrdom, as S^t Auguſtine writes, Book 8. de Civitat. Dei, Chap. the laſt. And this is what Conſtantine does here term θυσίαν τῆς εὐχαριστίας, a Sacrifice of Thanksgiving. But, becauſe the Chriſtians offered to God this unbloudy Sacrifice, at the Monuments and Sepulchres of the Martyrs, that they might give him thanks for the rewards of the Martyrs, and for their Crowns and Victories; therefore Conſtantine ſays this honour was given to the Martyrs. Valeſ.

[i] Concerning theſe Banquets and Feaſts of the Chriſtians, which were made at the Sepulchres of the Martyrs, mention is made by S^t Auſtin, at the book and chapter now cited, in theſe words. Quicunque etiam epulas ſuas eò deferunt, &c. Alſo, whoever carry their Banquets thither, which is not indeed done by the better Chriſtians, and in many parts of the world there is no ſuch Cuſtome: Yet, Whoever do that, when they have ſet them [there,] they pray, and take them away that they may eat them; or diſtribute alſo of them to the indigent; they will have them ſanctified there, by the merits of the Martyrs, in the name of the Lord of the Martyrs. Farther, at firſt theſe Feaſts were ſober and moderate. But afterwards, when licentiouſneſs was arrived at a greater height, they were perverted to Drunkenneſs and Laſciviouſneſs. And therefore in moſt places they were wholly abolished, as S^t Austin attests, Epist. 64. In the Fuketian Copy, the reading is σωφρονέστατα δὲ πολλῷ καὶ συμπόσια, &c; not πολλῶν, as 'tis in the the ordinary Editions. Vales.

CHAP. XIII.

That a difference of the parts of the Creation is necessary; and that a propensity to Good and Evil, springs from the will of men: and therefore, that the Judgment [of God] is necessary, and agreeable to Reason.

BUt now, some persons do boldly and inconsiderately presume, to find fault with God [a] even in this matter. What was his meaning [say they,] that he has not framed the nature of things, one and the same; but has commanded, that even most things should be produced different, and therefore should be endued with a nature and disposition that are contrary? Whence springs a diversity of the Morals and Wills of us men. It had peradventure been better, both as to what respects an obedience to the Commands of God, and as to an accurate * Contemplation of Him, and in reference to a confirmation [b] of the Faith of every particular person; that all men had been endued with one and the same disposition. But [we answer,] 'tis altogether ridiculous to desire, that all men should be of one and the same humour and disposition: [and 'tis absurd] not to consider and remark this, that the [c] constitution of the whole world is not the same, with that of those things which are in the world: or this, that Natural things are not of the same substance with those that are Moral: Or Lastly this, that the Affections of the Body are not the same with those of the Mind. [d] For, [the rational Soul does far excel] this whole world; and is so much more blessed than Creatures that are earthly and lyable to Corruption, by how much it is nobler and more divine: neither is mankind void of the divine goodness. Nevertheless, all men are not promiscuously and without any thing of difference [partakers of the Divine Goodness:] but those only, who have search't into the Divine Nature, and who have proposed to themselves this, as their chief purpose of Life and primary Study, the knowledge namely of things Divine.

[a] Καὶ ἐν τῷ μέμφεσθε. I had rather write, καὶ ἐν τούτῳ, even in this matter; as I found it mended in the margin of Moræus's Book. And so 'tis written in the Fuketian Copy. Vales.

* Knowledge, or, Comprehension.

[b] Κατὰ τὴν ἑκάστου πίστιν. It must, I suppose, be τὴν καθ' ἑκάστου πίστιν, of the faith of every particular person. Vales.

[c] Οὐκ ἤ περὶ τοῦ κόσμου διάταξις. I had rather make it, οὐχ ἥπερ ἡ τοῦ κόσμου διάταξις, αὕτη καὶ ἡ τῶν κοσμικῶν; which we have expreſt in our Version. Vales.

[d] Τὸν μὲν γὰρ σύμπαντα κόσμον. After these, there are many words wanting, as 'tis apparent from the Contents of the Chapter. We chose to get out any sense from a corrupt and imperfect place, rather than with Christophorson to expunge the whole passage. S^r Henry Savil, in his Copy, has also expunged this whole period, as far as those words, τῆς δὲ θείας ἀγαθότητος, &c. Neither is mankind, &c. Indeed, in the Fuketian Copy that whole period is wanting. Vales.

CHAP. XIV.

That a created Nature is at a vast distance from an Essence which is uncreated: and, that man * approaches neareſt to God, by a virtuous Life.

* Or, Is made a neighbour to it; that is, to an uncreated essence, by a life according to Virtue.

MOreover, to compare things that are made, with them which be eternal, is questionless the highest degree of madness. For these have neither beginning, nor end. But those, in regard they are brought forth and begotten; and because they have received a beginning both of their existing, and of their living for some set time; must consequently of necessity have an end also. But, how can those things which are [a] begotten, be any ways compared with him, who hath commanded them to be begotten? [b] For, if these things were equal to him, the Command whereby he ordered them to be produced, would in no wise fit and be agreeable to him. But, neither can things celestial be compared with him; in the same manner that the sensible world [is not to be compared] with the Intelligible; nor Images, with the Originals. [c] But, is not the confusing and mixing of all things, a thing wholly ridiculous? in regard the dignity of the Divine Nature would be * clouded, [d] by a comparing of it with men, or with beasts. And, is not a desire of power, which might strive to equal the power of God, is not [I say such a desire] to be esteemed as peculiar to madmen and such as abhor a sober, modest, and virtuous course of Life? For if with earnestness we strive to attain divine felicity, we ought to leade our lives according to the Command of God. For by this means, when we shall have lived in Conformity to that Law appoynted by God; being made superiour to all Fate, we shall take up our Residence in immortal and eternal Mansions. For, this is the only strength in man, which is like to the divine power, [namely] a sincere and unfeigned worship paid to God; and a conversion to him; and a contemplation and knowledge of those things which are acceptable to the Deity: not to be enclined towards the Earth; but as far as we are able, to raise our minds to things sublime and celestial. For by such an endeavour

* Or, Covered.

[a] Τὰ δὲ γενόμενα. Christophorson seems to have read γεννώμενα, begotten; which reading pleases me best. Vales.

[b] Εἰ γὰρ μανία. I am of opinion, that this place is to be corrected thus; εἰ γὰρ ὅμοια ταῦτα ἐκείνῳ, οὐδὲ πρέπουσις τῷ γινομένῳ, προσηκόντως ἂν ἐκείνῳ ἐρεμίζοιτο; For, if, &c. That is, if the things which are made, be equal to God, that Command whereby he has ordered them to be made, would not be agreeable to him. For, an equal can't have authority and empire over an equal. Away therefore with the Emendation of Learned men, which I found in the Fuketian Copy, and in Moræus's Book; namely this, εἰ γὰρ μανία ταῦτα ἐκείνῳ παρεξισάζειν, ἡ πρέπουσις τῷ γινομένῳ, &c; For if it be madness to liken these things to him, the Command, &c. But if you reade thus, there is no sense; nor will the following words cohere with the foregoing. Christophorson had indeed found it so in his Books, as 'tis visible from his Version. But, the common reading is supported by the authority of the Kings Copy, and the Old Sheets. Vales.

[c] Ἡ δὲ σύγχυσις πάντων. Musculus seems to have read σύγχεισις, which I am extraordinarily pleased with; For he renders it; Quomodo autem omnium comparatio non ridicula est, &c; But, how is not the comparing of all things ridiculous, &c. Certainly, 'tis either thus to be read, or to be understood thus. For Constantine terms that equalling of all things, a confusion. Vales.

[d] Εἰ τὰ γε θεῖα συγκείνοι. Without doubt it must be συγκείνοιτο. For thus Constantine argues. Even things Celestial, says he, cannot be compared with God. Much less things Terrestrial, and Brutes. This is the meaning of this place. But the Manuscript Copies of Christophorson, S^r Henry Savil, Gruter, and M^r Fuket, word this place thus; ἀπαχρυπτομένης τῆς τοῦ θείου τιμιότητος πρὸς τοὺς ἀνθρώπους καὶ τὰ γε θεῖα συγκείνει, in regard the dignity of, &c. Which reading seems to me better, and more elegant. Vales.

endeavour as this, [c] a Victory is procured for us, * of equal value with many Bleſſings. The cauſe therefore of the diſſimilitude of things, † which is plac't in a diſtance both of dignity and power, has this reaſon. Wherein they who are wiſe, do willingly acquieſce, and are eminently thankfull. But the ingratefull, and the fooliſh, receive a puniſhment [t] befitting their arrogance.

[c] Τὸ νικᾶν ἀντὶ πολλῶν ἀγαθῶν φησί. He ſeems to allude to thoſe paſſages we meet with in the ſecond and third Chapter of the Revelations; where God ſays: Vincenti dabo Coronam, &c; To him that overcometh I will give a Crown, &c. Indeed the life of a Chriſtian man is wont to be compared to Champions, as it frequently occurs in S[t] Paul's Epiſtles. But the word φησὶ is redundant, after the uſual manner of Gracians, as 'tis well known to thoſe skilled in the Greek Tongue. Valeſ.

* Or, In place of many goods.

† Or, Both as to dignity, and in a diverſity of power.

[t] Τὴν ἐυεργεσίαν. In the Kings Copy 'tis πρὸς ἐυεξίαν, as Robert Stephens has alſo remarked in his Various Readings. I read therefore, πρὸς ἀξίαν, befitting, or, agreeable to; with Chriſtophorſon, Scaliger, Gruter, and others: or πρὸς ἐπαξίαν, which comes nearer to the footſteps of the written reading. In the Fuketian Copy 'tis, κὴ πρὸς ἀξίαν. Valeſ.

CHAP. XV.

What Precepts Our Saviour delivered, and what Miracles He wrought; and how beneficial He hath been to thoſe who own a ſubjection to Him.

FArther, the Son of God exhorts all men to Virtue, and conſtitutes himſelf a Teacher to ſuch as are prudent, [inſtructing them] [a] in the Father's commands. Unleſs we forget our ſelves, being wretchedly ignorant, that for the ſake of our advantage, that is, on account of mens bleſſedneſs, He travelled up and down on earth; and having called together to himſelf the beſt men of [b] thoſe times, he delivered them a moſt uſefull Doctrine, the preſervative as 'twere of a ſober life; teaching them Faith and Juſtice, againſt the Envy of the * Malitious Devil, whoſe delight it is to [c] allure and deceive the unskilfull. Therefore, he viſited the ſick; and eaſed the infirm of thoſe ills, wherewith they were ſurrounded. He likewiſe adminiſtred comfort to thoſe, who were reduced to an extremity of poverty and indigency. He highly extolled [d] a ſober modeſt and quiet temper of mind, joyned with reaſon; and gave command, that with a courage and patience of mind we ſhould bear all manner of injury, and every ſort of contempt: teaching us, that the [e] Viſitation of his Father is of this ſort: ſo that, they who could magnanimouſly endure accidents, might always obtain the Victory. For he affirmed, that this is the moſt ſuperlative degree of ſtrength, [namely] a conſtancy of mind joyned with Philoſophy; which is nothing elſe but a knowledge [f] of what is True and Good, accuſtoming thoſe who get riches fairly and juſtly, to impart what they poſſeſs, by a kind and liberal diſtribution to the poorer ſort. But he wholly forbids maſterſhip, and bearing ſway over others; openly declaring, that as he came to give aſſiſtance to the humble, ſo he would deſiſt from favouring thoſe, who ſhould diſreſpect the humble. Having therefore made Tryal of the Faith of thoſe people ſubject to him, by ſuch and ſo powerfull an Experiment, he rendred them not only Contemners of the terribleſt and moſt formidable things, but moſt genuine diſciples alſo of an hope and confidence in himſelf. Moreover, he once ſharply rebuked, and by his words repreſt one of his Companions, who had * been over much heated with anger. That [Diſciple] had [g] with a drawn ſword made an aſſault upon ſome body; expoſing his own life, that he might aſſiſt our Saviour. But [his Lord] commanded him to be quiet, and to put up his Sword; reproving the man ſeverely, becauſe he had diſpaired of a defence and refuge in Him Himſelf. And he enacted a Law in expreſs words, that [h] whoever ſhould begin an aſſault upon another with the hands of Violence, or ſhould attempt to injure him who had begun, or [whoever in general] ſhould make uſe of the ſword, ſhould periſh by a violent death. This is moſt undoubtedly the Celeſtial wiſedom, to chooſe to be injured, rather than to injure; and, as often as neceſſity ſhall require, to be in a readineſs to undergo, rather than do evil. [i] For, whereas the miſchief of being injurious is very great; not he who ſuffers the wrong, but he that does it, * incurrs the heavieſt puniſhment. Farther, [k] 'tis in the power of him who pays an obedience to God, neither to do, nor ſuffer an injury; provided he places his confidence in the protection of God, who

[a] Τῶν τῆς σωτῆρος φιλοσοφημάτων, in the Saviour's Commands. It ſhould, I think, be made, περὶ τῆς σωτηρίας φιλοσ. in the Precepts of Salvation; as 'tis noted in the margin of the Geneva-Edition. You may alſo write, περὶ τῆς πατρὸς, &c, in the Father's Commands. For the miſtake ſeems to have riſen from a contracted way of writing. In the Kings, and Fuketian Copy, and in the Sheets, at this place 'tis thus written, σρς. Valeſ.

[b] Τῶν τηνικαῦτα βιωφελῶν, &c. Chriſtophorſon has rendred this place thus: Et ex illis qui id temporis hominum vitæ adjumento fuerunt, longè optimos advocaſſe ad ſe, and had called to himſelf, by far the beſt of thoſe men, who at that time were an aſſiſtance to the life of men. But, who ever expreſt himſelf in this manner, τοὺς ἀρίστους περὶ βιωφελῶν, the beſt men of the moſt uſefull? Wherefore, I doubt not, but this place is thus to be mended and pointed; κὴ καλέσας ὡς ἑαυτὸν τοὺς ἀρίστους περὶ τηνικαῦτα, βιωφελῆ παιδείαν ἐπαιδαγώγησε, and having called together unto, &c, as we have rendred it. In the Fuketian and Turnebian Copies, the reading is περὶ τηνικάδε. Valeſ.

[c] Ὡ δελεάζειν μόν. In Turnebus's, and Moræus's Book, 'tis mended δελεάζειν κὴ ἐξαπατᾶν, &c, to allure and deceive, &c. But the Fuketian Copy has it truer written, ἢ δελεάζειν κὴ ἐξαπατᾶν. Valeſ.

[d] Τὸ μετ' εὐλόγε. In Robert Stephens's Edition it was Printed, τὸ μὴ λόγε τῆς φρονήσεως μέτριον; which reading is confirmed by the Kings and Fuketian Copy, and by the Sheets. But in Moræus's Book I found it mended μετ' εὐλόγε; and I don't underſtand why the Geneva-men admitted this emendation into the Text. Τῆς φρονήσεως μέτριον has the ſame import with μετριοφρονεῖν. S[t] Paul calls it Sapere ad ſobrietatem, to think ſoberly, or, to ſobriety. Valeſ.

[e] Ἐπίσκηψίν τινα τῆ παλεῖ. I had rather write ὀπτικὴν ψιν, as 'tis noted in the margin of the Geneva-Edition. For, 'tis our common uſage to term ſuch Calamities as theſe, which do ſometimes happen to good men, the Viſitations of God. But Chriſtophorſon has followed the common reading, and renders it Mandatum, the Command. Valeſ.

[f] Τῆ ἀληθῆ κὴ τῆ ἀγαθῆ. In Moræus's Book the Learned man has mended it at the Margin, πάσαθῆ, which diſpleaſes not. For there are many Platonick Expreſſions in this Oration. Valeſ.

* Or, Given place to anger.

[g] Ξιφήρη τινα ὀπφοιτῶν. I read ξιφήρης, as 'tis in Moræus's Book; wherein 'tis alſo mended, τινὶ ὀπφοιτῶν, not ill. In the Fuketian Copy 'tis likewiſe ξιφήρης τινὶ ὀπφοιτῶν, and we have rendred it accordingly. Valeſ.

[h] Πάντα φῆ ἀδίκων χειρῶν καταῤξαντα. This place is thus to be reſtored from the Fuketian and Turneb. Copies, νομοθετῶν διαῤῥήδην, πάντα φ ἀδίκων, &c. As to the following clauſe, ἢ πρὸς τὸν καθυβρίζοντα ἀδικεῖν ὀπιχειρήσαντα, I had rather write thus, ἀντιδικεῖν ὀπιχειρήσαντα, or ſhould attempt to reſiſt him, &c. Valeſ.

[i] Μείζων γὰρ ὄντ τῆ ἀδικεῖν κακῆ. In Moræus's Book, the Learned man hath ſet theſe words at the margin, σωκρατικὸν περὶ ἀδικίας. There are indeed many paſſages in this Oration, taken out of Plato's Philoſophy; which the Learned Reader will of himſelf acknowledge. Valeſ.

[k] Τῷ δ' ὑπηκόῳ τῆ θεῆ ἐξὸν. In the Fuketian and Turneb. Copies, the reading is ἐξόν. Valeſ.

who is present with, and gives him assistance; to the end no one of His Subjects may receive any harm. But, how should he [endeavour] [1] to assist himself, who puts his trust in God? For, by this means a [m] Fight betwixt two would ensue, and a doubtfull and uncertain Victory. But, no man of understanding preferrs dubious matters, before those that are fixt and certain. But, how will he make any scruple about God's presence and assistance, who has had experience of so many perills, and has always been easily delivered from dangers, by the [n] sole will and pleasure of God; who has walkt thorow the Sea, which by our Saviour's command was paved, and afforded a solid and firm way to the people that passed over it. For this, as I suppose, is the most evident and firm * Basis of faith, this is the Foundation of confidence; when we behold these admirable and incredible things performed and perfected by the command of the provident God. Hence likewise it happens, that [o] when any one falls into the trial of Calamities, he does [p] not repent himself of his Faith, and retains his hope in God firm and unshaken. Which habit being once firmly fixt in the mind, God takes up his habitation in the inmost thought. And whereas he is invincible; that mind also, which in its inmost thought [q] possesses him that is thus invincible, can never be vanquished by those dangers that surround it. [r] Besides, we have learn't this very thing from God's own Victory; who, whilst he was making provision for the good of all men, when reproacht and insulted over by the impious and unjust, received no damage from his passion, but obtained a most Glorious Victory over wickedness, and was encircled with an immortal Crown: having brought to effect the design and purpose of his own providence and love, towards the just; but, trampled upon the Cruelty of the unjust and Impious.

* Groundwork.

[1] Αὐτὸς ἑαυτῷ βοηθεῖν. Scaliger, Gruter, and others have mended it, βοηθεῖν θεῷ δαρῶν, which emendation I likewise found written in Moræus's Book. It might also be written, βοηθεῖν ἔμελλε, the two last words being left out; which, as every one sees, are not very necessary here. But the Fuketian Manuscript agrees with those Books of Scaliger and Gruter. Vales.

[m] Μάχη δ' ἦν. I doubt not but it should be written, ὅπως γὰρ μάχη μὴ ἦν μεταξὺ δυοῖν. Where ἦν is made use of instead of εἴη, or ἔμελλεν ἔσῃ. But the Translatour who rendred this Oration of Constantine into Greek, had but little skill in the Greek tongue, and was careless enough, as 'tis apparent from many places. Constantine gives a reason here, why the worshippers of the supream God would never revenge themselves, nor resist force by force. For, should they do that, saith he, they must fight with their adversary, but they would be uncertain of the Victory. But, if they shall in no wise defend themselves, then they have a most certain Victory; for God fights for them. This is the meaning of this place, which (I admire at it,) neither Christophorson nor Musculus understood. Vales.

[n] Μόνῃ θεοῦ νεύματι, by the will of the only God. It must be made μόνῳ &c, by the sole &c, as I found it mended in Moræus's Book. And a little after I read παραχρῆμα ὀδὸν, as 'tis in the same Book. For θελήσεως is understood. In the Fuketian Copy and Old sheets, the reading is μόνῳ θεοῦ νεύματι. Vales.

[o] Ἡνίκα ἂν τις περιπίπτει πείρᾳ κακῶν. I would rather write πεῖρα, in the Nominative case. For that seems to me far more elegant. Presently, the reading must doubtless be, καὶ τὸ ἀτρεπτον ἔχειν, &c. For the verb ἐξαρνεῖται is understood, which is used a little before. In the Fuketian Copy, and in the Sheets, the reading is, ἡνίκα ἂν τις περιπίπτῃ πεῖρα κακῶν, καὶ τὸ ἀτρεπτον ἔχῃ, &c. when any trial of Calamities falls out, &c. Vales.

[p] Μὴ μεταμέλειν. In the Fuketian Manuscript. 'tis μὴ μεταμέλεσθαι. Vales.

[q] Τὸ δήπιτον. At the margin of the Moræan Copy 'tis mended, τὸν δήπιτον ἔχουσα, possesses him, &c. Which reading Christophorson has followed. And so 'tis written in the Fuketian Manuscript. Vales.

[r] Παρὰ δὲ. I read περὶς δὲ, τοῦτο μεμαθήκαμεν, Besides, we have, &c; where περὶς is taken adverbially, for περισσῶς. Vales.

CHAP. XVI.

That the Coming of Christ is foretold by the Prophets; and, that He was appointed for the destruction of Idols, and Idolatrous Cities.

MOreover, his Passion was long since foreshewed by the Prophets; and his Corporal Nativity foretold. The very time likewise of his Incarnation was predicted, [a] wherein the Shoots springing from injustice and intemperance, which are hurtfull to just actions and Morals, might be destroyed; and [wherein] the whole world might be made partaker of Prudence and Modesty; that Law namely, which our Saviour has promulged, prevailing upon the minds of almost all men; the worship of the Deity being confirmed and establisht; and superstition wholly abolished. On account of which [superstition,] not only slaughters of irrational Creatures, but Sacrifices of humane Bodies also, and detestable pollutions of Altars were exercised: for according to the Assyrian and Egyptian Laws, * innocent men were Sacrificed to Brazen or earthen images. Wherefore, the Fruit they reapt, was agreeable to such a Religion.* Memphis [says he] and Babylon shall be made desolate; and both of them, with the Gods of their Countries, shall be left uninhabited. Nor do I relate these things from report and hear say; but I my self was present and saw them; [b] and was made an eye-witness of the miserable and calamitous fortune of those Cities [c] Memphis lyes desolate, that Pride and Glory of the then most powerfull Pharaoh. Constantine says, that he himself had been a spectatour of the ruine and destruction of those two Cities, Memphis namely and Babylon, which had heretofore been most potent. We must therefore make enquiry, at what time Constantine might go to those places. Whilst he was but a youth he went into Egypt, at such time as he had a Military Employ in the Court of Diocletian, by whom he was kept as an Hostage. For Diocletian waged a War many years in Egypt, against Achilleus who had rebelled in Egypt, as Eutropius relates. Out of Egypt, Constantine went afterwards, in company with Diocletian, into Syria, and past through the Province of Palestine, where he was first seen by Eusebius, as he himself attests. Now Diocletian had made a journey into Syria, that with his own Forces he might assist Galerius Cæsar, who waged a War with the Persian. And he made a long stay in Syria, in order to his making a Peace with the Persians, as we are informed from the History of Petrus Patricius. At that time therefore Constantine might take a View of the Rubbish and Remains of the City Babylon. Vales.

* Or, just Souls.

[a] Καὶ τῆς ἀδικίας. In Moræus's Book, at the margin 'tis mended, καὶ ὡς τὰ τῆς ἀδικίας, &c; which reading Christophorson has expresst in his Version. To me this expression seems scarce Greek. Therefore I had rather write, ἐν ᾧ τὰ τῆς ἀδικίας, wherein, &c. Yet in the Fuketian Copy 'tis, καὶ ὡς τὰ τῆς, &c. Vales.

[b] Ἐποπτης τε γεγόμενος. Constantine

[c] I am of opinion, that this place is corrupted meerly by the misplacing of the words. For the sense is most apparent, if you restore the words in this manner; μέμφις ἠφάνισται, ἡ τῶν δυνατωτάτων τότε φαραὼ ὑπερηφία· ὃν μωσῆς καὶ τὼ θείαν πρόσταξιν κατέβραυσε; Memphis lyes desolate, &c. What is more plain than these words? The import of ὑπερηφία here, is glory, τὸ καύχημα, that boasting, wherewith namely Pharaoh puft himself up. Away therefore with the conjecture of Christophorson, Gruter, and others. And this was heretofore our conjecture concerning the reading of this place. But after we had gotten the Fuketian Copy, we found out the true and genuine reading. For in that Manuscript, this passage occurs worded thus: ἐποπτης τε γεγόμενος τῆς οἰκτροτάτης νῦν πόλεως καὶ δυσυχοῦς μέμφις· ἠφάνισται δὲ μωσῆς καὶ τὼ θείαν πρόσταξιν τὼ τῶν δυνατωτάτων τότε φαραὼ χώραν, &c. And thus 'tis plainly read in Turnebus's, and Gruter's Book; save only, that that punctation we have made use of, is peculiar to the Fuketian Copy only; wherein, after the word μέμφις, a point is set. The Translatour therefore of this Oration has used μέμφις in the Genitive case, whereas he ought to have said μέμφεως. Moreover, οἰκτροτάτης is put instead of οἰκτροτάτου. This then is the import of this reading; and was made an eye-witness of Memphis the miserablest and most unfortunate of Cities. But Moses, according to the Divine Command, has laid wast the Country of the then most powerfull Pharaoh, &c. Farther, according to this reading, Constantine affirms, that Memphis only was seen by him; which I do indeed look upon to be truer. For he could never see Babylon, in regard regard he had never gone into Assyria. In the Kings Sheets, the reading of this place runs thus; τῆς δικλεᾶς ἧς πόλεων τύχης· μέμφις ἠρήμωσε, &c; as in the ordinary Editions. But in the Kings Copy 'tis ἠρήμωται, as Stephens has publisht it. Sr Henry Savil in his Book has mended this place thus; πόλεων τύχης· μέμφις ἠρήμωται· ἠρήμωσε δὲ μωσὴ, &c. But, that expression μέμφις ἠρήμωται would be foolish and trifling, nor would it agree with the following words. Besides, neither has Christophorson retained those words in his Version. Vales.

[a] Ὃν ὑβρίσια κατέδραυσε. Christophorson renders it, quem insolentiâ elatum perfregit, whom raised with insolency he broke in pieces. Whence it appears, that he put in ἐπηρμένον, or some such word. But there is no need of this Emendation, in regard ὑβρίσια may be taken in the Nominative Case. Indeed, in all Our Copies, the Kings, the Fuketian, and the Sheets, this word occurs without the ἰῶτα subscript. So he expresses himself below, chap. 19, ἡ ἄγνοια τὰς ψυχὰς ἧς ἀνθρώπων ἔδραξε, &c. Vales.

[b] Whom Moses ruined according to the Divine Command: and destroyed his Forces (which had gained the Victory over many, and the greatest Nations,) whilst well fortified [c] and compleatly furnished with Arms; not by the shooting of Arrows, or the throwing of Darts; but by an Holy Prayer only, and a quiet Supplication.

[c] Καθοπλισμένον. It must I think be made καὶ καθοπλισμένον, and compleatly furnished with Arms. Presently, where the reading is ἡμέρῳ λιτανείᾳ, a quiet supplication; I had rather write ἠρεμαίῳ, humble. In the Fuketian Copy and the Kings Sheets the reading is πεφεγγμένον τε καὶ καθοπλισμένον. Nor does Sr Henry Savil's conjecture displease me, who has mended it, πεφεγγυῖᾳ καὶ καθοπλισμένῳ. Vales.

CHAP. XVII.

Concerning the wisedom of Moses, which was emulated by the Wise Men amongst the Heathens; also concerning Daniel, and the Three Children.

FArther, no people ever were, or could have been blesseder than * that [Nation;] had they not voluntarily alienated their minds from the Divine Spirit. But, what man is he, that can speak concerning Moses according as he deserves? Who having reduced † the confused multitude of the Jews into Order, and beautified their minds with Obedience and Modesty; instead of Captivity, conferred on them Liberty; instead of their sadness, rendred them joyfull. Who raised those mens minds to such an height, that by reason of the [unhop'd-for] change of their Affairs for the better, and because of their fortunate successes and Victories, they became puft up with pride and insolence. Who in wisedom so far excelled those that had lived before him, that those persons which are most celebrated by the Gentiles, whether wise men [a] or Philosophers, have been Emulators of His Wisdom. For Pythagoras having imitated his wisedom, has been so highly fam'd for his Modesty, that that most * prudent and sober person Plato, proposed his abstinence as a pattern for his own imitation. [b] Daniel also, he who foretold things future, who shewed a * Specimen of a most transcendent greatness of mind, and who was egregiously eminent for the * Sanctity of his Morals and his whole Life; what and how rigorous a Cruelty did he vanquish, of that Tyrant which then reigned in Syria? His name was Nabuchodonosor; all whose Race being now extinct, that vast and formidable power is transferred to the Persians. The riches of that Tyrant, were, and to this very day are, much spoken of in all mens discourses; as likewise his unmeet and foolish Care about a misbecoming worship; and [c] his great plenty of Metals of all sorts, for the making of Gods; and the tops of Temples [which he erected,] reaching as high as Heaven it self; and lastly, his horrid Laws about Religion, made and designed for Cruelty. All which [d] Daniel despised, on account of his sincere piety towards him who is truly God; and foretold, that that inconvenient earnestness of the Tyrant, would be the occasion of some great and sore mischief. Nevertheless, he prevailed not with the Tyrant. For an affluence of Riches is a mighty hindrance to sober and good thoughts. But, at length the King manifested the cruelty of his own mind; having given order, that this just and guiltless person should be cast to the wild beasts, that he might be torn in pieces. Moreover, the Consent of those Brethren in undergoing Martyrdom, was highly couragious: whom posterity afterwards imitated, and procured transcendent glory, on account of their faith towards our Saviour. Who appearing unhurt by the fire, and furnace, and by those other Tortures appointed to consume them; by the approach and Touch of their pure Bodies repelled the fire contained within the furnace. But after the ruine of the Assyrian Empire, which was [e] destroyed by Thunder-bolts; Daniel by [the direction of] Divine Providence, betook himself to Cambyses King of the Persians. But, Envy, [vexed him] here also; and, besides Envy, the destructive Treacheries of the * Magi; and a continued succession of many, and those the greatest perils. Out of all which he was easily delivered, by Christs assisting providence, and flourisht, being the * Exemplar of all manner of Virtue. For, whereas he poured forth his prayers to God thrice a day, and performed great and [f] unusual Miracles, † and Works highly memorable; the Magi, induced

* The Israelites.

† Or, A disordered people.

[a] Καὶ φιλοσόφους. A particle seems to be omitted here, which if inserted, the passage would be made far more elegant. I write therefore, ἤ τοι σοφὸς ἢ καὶ φιλοσόφους, that is, whether wise men or Philosophers. Vales.

* Or, Modest.

[b] After he has spoken concerning the Egyptians, and concerning the destruction of Memphis; he passes to the Assyrians, and to the desolation of Babylon. And on occasion of the Egyptians, he has inserted the praise of Moses. But now treating concerning the Assyrians, he prosecutes Daniel's praises, who lived a Captive amongst the Assyrians or Babylonians. Vales.

* Pattern.

* Or, Beauty.

[c] At this place these words [εἰς τιμὴν θεῶν κατασκευὴν ἀνθρώπειαν, καὶ ναῶν] are wanting in the Greek Text of Valesius's Edition; omitted I suppose by the carelessness of the Printer; though Valesius has taken no notice of this mistake, in his Errata. They occur in Robert Stephen's Edition; from whom we have inserted them into our Version. Nor has Valesius omitted them in his Translation.

[d] Ὁ Δανιὴλ καταφρονήσας. After these words, the Antiquarius who transcribed the Kings Copy, offended at the multitude of faults wherewith the Copy abounded, here made an end of writing. And he has attested this in these words set at the bottome of the page: .... ὑσας πρὸς τὸ πέλας ἧς σφαλμάτων τὰς βιβλίας, ἐπέσχον πῶ χεῖρα τὸ γεγράφειν, ὅτι μηδὲν ὑγιὲς ἐνῆν τῷ προϊσυπτῳ, καθὼς ὃν ἧς γεγραμμένων ἔστι τεκμήρασθαι τὸν ἀναγινώσκοντας; .... to the Sea of faults of this Book, I stopt my hand from writing, because there was nothing sound in the original Copy, as the Readers may conjecture from what is written. Vales.

[e] Ἀναιρεθείσης κεραυνῶν βολαῖς. I can't imagine whence Constantine had this, his affirming namely, that the kingdom of the Assyrians was destroyed by the casting of Thunder; which I don't remember, to have read any where else. Neither do I well understand that. For, Men, Towers, and Cities may be destroyed by Thunder-bolts, as the Poets have told us concerning the Phlegyæ. But, truly I can't see, how a kingdom could be ruined by Thunder. In the Fuketian and Turneb. Copies, and in the Kings Sheets, the reading is κεραυνῶν βολαῖς. Vales.

* Magicians, or, Wise men.

* Pattern.

† Or, Of Works, &c.

[f] Ἐξαισίους ἀρετὰς. Constantine had in Latine termed it Virtutes; which word is in the Sacred Books usually taken to signifie Miracles, as every one knows. The Translatour of this Oration has done ill, in rendring it ἀρετὰς; whereas he ought rather to have translated it δυνάμεις. Vales.

thereto by Envy, calumniated the very prevalency of his prayers; making the King acquainted, that that great power of the man [g] was very dangerous: [h] and [at length] they perswaded him, that this very person, who had been the Occasioner of so many, and such eminent Blessings to the State of the Persians, should be condemned to be devoured by fierce Lyons. Daniel therefore, [in this manner] condemned, not that he should be destroyed, but in order to his eternal glory; was shut up in the Den. And whilst he was conversant amongst the wild-beasts, found them more gentle and tamer, than those by whom he had been shut up. [i] For, a prayer of modesty and soberness, giving assistance by its powerfulness, tamed all those Beasts, though by their own nature they are fierce and raging. Which things being made known to Cambyses, (For 'twas impossible, that the performances of so great, and such a Divine power should lye concealed;) he was stricken with an amazement at the wonderfulness of what was told him; and he repented himself, because he had been so easily prevailed upon by the Calumnies of the Magi. Nevertheless he * had a desire to be an eye-witness of that spectacle. [k] And when he beheld Daniel praising Christ, both his hands being lifted up on high; but [saw] the Lyons couching, and as 'twere worshipping the footsteps of the man: immediately [he condemned] the Magi, who had perswaded him hereto, [to the very same punishment, and shut them up in the Den of the Lyons.] But the wild-beasts, which a little before had fawned upon and made much of Daniel, set upon the Magi, forthwith, and, agreeable to their own fierceness of Nature, tore all of them in pieces.

[g] Ἐπχίνδυνον σφόδρα. In the Fuketian Copy, this place is thus pointed; διέβαλλον ἐπχινδυνον. σφόδρα δὲ τῶ πασαν τῶ, &c; calumniated the very prevalency of his prayers, as dangerous: and sorely accused in the Kings presence, that great power of the man. Vales.

[h] Ἔπεισαν αὐτὸν. I write, καὶ ἔπεισαν αὐτὸν, and [at length] they perswaded him; as 'tis mended at the margin of Moraus's Book. But, this relation contradicts the Sacred Scripture. For, the Magi are not in the Sacred Volumes said to accuse Daniel, But the Presidents and Princes: Nor is he called Cambyses, who ordered Daniel to be cast to the wild-beasts, but Darius the Median; concerning whom the Opinions of Chronologers are various. For most of them will have him to be Cyaxares, son to Astiages. But Scaliger affirms him to be Nabonnidus; to whose opinion our Petavius agrees. The consent of which two persons I value highly. For, whereas they are wont to dissent in most things; whereever we see them agree, it is the greatest Argument of Truth. Nevertheless, Abydenus in his History of the Assyrians, seems to contradict their Opinion. For he writes, that Nabuchodonosor, inspired by God a little before his death, foretold the Babylonians, that not long after, their City should be ruined. For, that Mulus the Persian should come, who should put the yoak of slavery on them. But, that Medus, the glory of the Assyrians, should be his Assistant in the besieging of that City. For so I render these words of Abydenus, ἃ δὴ σωαίπ@ ἔσαι μήδης. 'Tis certain, the Greek words have no other import, than that which I have mentioned. Now, if Medus was Cyrus's Companion and Assistant in besieging Babylon, and in reducing it to slavery; then Medus is not Nabonnidus. But Scaliger, who will have Darius Medus to be Nabonnidus, does thus explain Abydenus's words, that by Medus's fault that Calamity would befal the Babylonians. But Abydenus has not said ἃ δὴ ἄπ@, but σωαίπ@; by which term is signified a Society and Communion of some fact, with another person. So the Son of God is termed σωαίπ@, because together with the Father He is the Authour of all things, 'Tis therefore plain from Abydenus's words, that Medus is not Nabonnidus. Vales.

* Or, Attempted.

[i] Πάντας γὰρ ἐυχῆ. I had rather write it in the Nominative Case, thus, πάντας γὰρ ἐυχὴ κοσμιότη@ καὶ σωφροσύνης ἀρετῆ συναιρομένη, πάντας ἀπειργάζετο, For, a Prayer, &c. The meaning is, so great is the power of prayer, that it tameth the most savage Beasts. Indeed, in the Fuketian Copy, the reading is, ἐυχὴ κοσμ. καὶ σωφ. ἀρετῆ σωαιρομένη, &c. Vales.

[k] Καὶ ἰδὼν τὸν ἄνδρα. In the Fuketian Copy, and in the Sheets 'tis, καὶ ἰδεῖν. Vales.

CHAP. XVIII.

Concerning Sibylla Erythræa, who prophesied in an Acrostick of Verses, manifesting [Our] Lord and [His] Passion. The Acrostick is this; JESUS CHRIST, SON OF GOD, SAVIOUR, CROSS.

BUt, I am * desirous likewise of mentioning [a] some Testimonies concerning the Divinity of Christ, taken from Forreigners. For by this means, even they whose usage it is to speak reproachfully of Christ, will also acknowledge Him to be God and the Son of God; if they will give credit to the Discourses of their own party. Sibylla Erythræa therefore, who says that She lived in the Sixth Age after the Flood, [b] was the Priestess of Apollo: She wore a Crown on her head, in the same manner with that God who was worshipped by Her; and kept a Tripod, about which a Serpent was twisted; and gave forth Oracles to those who consulted Her: having [c] by the folly of Her Parents been enslaved to this worship, from which nothing that is decent and virtuous, but immodest Fury only is produced; agreeable to those very things which are related concerning Daphne. This woman therefore, entring in great hast one time into the * Adyta of Her unseasonable Superstition, and [d] being really filled with Divine Inspiration, uttered a Prophecy in verses, containing all those things which should happen in reference to God: plainly setting forth the History of the Advent of Jesus, by those Letters which stand in the front of every verse; which sort of Poem is termed an Acrostick. Now, the Acrostick is this, JESUS CHRIST, SON OF GOD, SAVIOUR, CROSS. And Her Verses are these.

* Or, Ready to, mention, &c.

[a] Τῶν ἀλλοδαπῶν τι μαρτύριον. The Fuketian Copy and Kings Sheets have it written μαρτυρίων, Testimonies; which is righter. For Constantine does not produce only one Testimony, but two. Vales.

[b] Ἱέρειαν τῦ Ἀπόλλων@. I embrace the amendment of Learned men, which I also found in Moraus's Copy; ἱέρεια ἦν τῦ Ἀπόλλων@, was the Priestess of Apollo. So indeed 'tis in the Fuketian Copy, and in the Sheets. Vales.

[c] Τῇ ἠλιθιότητι. He had better have said, διὰ τὴν ἠλιθιότητα. Vales.

* Places in Heathen-Temples, which no body went into, but the Priests.

[d] Καὶ θείας ὀπτηνοίας ὄντως ἠνωμένη μέση. Whatever persons amongst the Christian Writers, produced the Oracles of the Sibylls in confirmation of the Christian Faith; they were constrained to say the same concerning the Sibylls, which Constantine does here; namely, that being inspired by a Divine Spirit, they uttered predictions concerning Christ. So Justin in his Paraenesis to the Grecians; ἔστι δὲ ὑμῖν ῥᾴδιον δοσέβειαν ἐκ μέρους ἔξω τῆς παλαιᾶς σιβύλλης ἔκ τιν@ δυναστείας ὀπτηνούσας διὰ χρησμῶν ὑμᾶς διδασκούσης, μανθάνειν, &c; But, 'twill be easie for us, to learn the true worship of God, in part from the Old Sibyll, who from some powerfull inspiration, teaches us by Oracles, &c. Agreeably whereto S^t Augustine writes, in his de Civitate Dei B. 18. Chap. 23; and S^t Jerome in his first Book against Jovinianus. For he says, that Divination was by God allowed to the Sibylls, as a reward of their Virginity. And S^t Austin is not afraid of enrolling them in the City of God. But Gregory Nazianzene in his Poem to Nemesius, says that Hermes Trismegistus and Sibylla, whatever they predicted concerning God, did not foretell those things by Divine Inspiration, but had them out of the Sacred Books of the Hebrews, which they had incidently perused.

Οὐ θεόθεν, βίβλων δὲ ἐφαβλεύσασιν ἐμεῖο.

Indeed, Gregory of Nazianzum, and those most Holy Fathers of the Church did believe, that those verses were really composed by the Sibylls; whereas notwithstanding, they were made by idle people, and published for the Sibyll's Verses, about the times of the Emperour Hadrian. 'Tis certain, no writer ancienter than Justin, has made mention of them. And Celsus, who, as we have shown above, lived in the Empire of Marcus Antoninus, affirms that the Christians had forged and inserted many passages into the Sibylline Verses. Origen records his words, in B. 7. νῦν δὲ παρεγγεγράφειν μὴ εἰς τὰ ἐκείνης πολλὰ καὶ βλάσφημα εἰκὸς δύναται. I know indeed, that Origen denies this.

For

For thus he anſwers Celſus; that he ought to produce ancienter Copies of the Sibylline Verſes, wherein thoſe verſes, which he ſaid had been inſerted by the Chriſtians, were not in any wiſe to be found. It might doubtleſs have been eaſie for Celſus to do that, and by this argument to have evinced the falſity of thoſe verſes. But, there are other arguments, whereby this may be proved. For, if the Sibyll's Predictions concerning Chriſt had been ſo clear, why has not S^t Paul made uſe of Her Teſtimony, in his Epiſtles, and when he ſpoke to the Athenians; eſpecially, in regard he diſdained not to cite Aratus, and other Heathen-Poets. Doubtleſs, if the Sibyll had written this Acroſtick concerning Chriſt, there is no reaſon, why we ſhould ſcruple to reckon Her amongſt the Prophets, and even in the firſt place. For, none of the Ancient Hebrew-Prophets wrote ſo clearly and diſtinctly of Chriſt, as are theſe verſes of the Sibyll, produced by Conſtantine. And yet, neither Origen, nor any of the Holy Fathers ever allowed this, that the Sibylls ſhould be reckoned amongſt the Prophets: yea, they eſteemed thoſe who believed thus, to be Hereticks; and termed them Sibylliſtæ, as Origen informs us in his fifth Book againſt Celſus. Where he anſwers Celſus, who had objected, that the Chriſtians were divided into ſeveral Sects; for, that ſome of them were Pſychici, others Spiritales; that ſome of them worſhipped the God of the Jews, others did not; that ſome, were Sibylliſtæ, &c. His words are theſe; εἶπε δέ τινας αὐτῶν καὶ σιβυλλιστὰς· πάνυ ὀφθῆναι φιλοκάλους τινῶν ἐγκαλούντων τοῖς ὁμολογοῦσι θεοφόρητον γεγονέναι τὴν σίβυλλαν, καὶ σιβυλλιστὰς τοὺ τοιούτους καλεσάντων. Valeſ.

* I had at firſt reſolved, to have put theſe Greek Verſes into an Engliſh Acroſtick, that is, to have made every verſe begin with one of the Letters of theſe words [Jeſus Chriſt, Son of God, Saviour, Croſs] in their due order; as they do in the Original: agreeably whereto Valeſius, Muſculus, Chriſtophorſon, and Curterius have done them into Latine Verſe. But, on tryal I found it a thing very difficult (at leaſt to me) to be well performed in our Language. Beſides, I judged it a matter of leſs conſequence to omit the Acroſtick, than to give the Reader a lame and imperfect Verſion of the Original. Which muſt neceſſarily have been done, had I been tied up to begin every Verſe with one of thoſe particular Letters.

* When the Great Day of Judgment ſhall appear,
The melting Earth ſhall then diſſolve with fear.
A King Immortal ſhall from Heav'n deſcend,
At whoſe Tribunal the whole world attend.
Both Juſt and Wicked ſhall, when Time grows old,
Their mighty God in fleſh array'd behold;
Armies of Saints on His Right hand ſhall come,
Whilſt Humane Souls expect their final doom.
Th' Univerſe ſhall be a dry Barren Strand,
And Thorns ſhall flouriſh on the ſcorched Land.

Men ſhall with indignation caſt away
Their Wealth, and Idols in that dreadfull day.
The parched Earth, and Heaven in flames ſhall fry,
And [c] ſearching fire drain the Ocean dry:
All fleſh which in the Grave impriſon'd lay,
Shake off their Fetters, and return to Day.

[c] Ἰχνέυων. This verſe was omitted; from Moræus's Book, the Fuketian Copy, the Kings Sheets, and from that Edition of the Sibylline Verſes, which Seb. Caſtalio publiſhed, it is to be ſupplied in this manner,

Ἐκκαύσει δὲ τὸ πῦρ γῆν, θέρμον τὴ δὲ θάλασσαν
Ἰχνεύων·

Although I had rather read ἰχνεῦον, in the Neuter Gender. Now, that this verſe was omitted, we are informed from the Old Verſion in Saint Auſtin, de Civit. Dei, B. 18, Chap. 23; which runs thus:

Exuret terras ignis, pontumque polumque Inquirens.

Further, they had expunged this Greek Verſe, for this reaſon, becauſe the Acroſtick ſeemed to be entire without it. Nor did they perceive that in the Acroſtick, the name of Chriſt is written with a diphthong, thus, χρειστὸς: the reaſon of doing which I don't underſtand. Yet the Latine Acroſtick in Saint Auſtin has retained it. Indeed, the Old Greeks made the name of Chriſt to conſiſt of eight Letters, writing it χρειστὸς, with a diphthong, as Irenæus informs us, Book 1. Chap. 10. Valeſ.

Fire 'twixt Good and Bad ſhall diff'rence make,
And filthy Droſs from purer Metal take.
Mens ſecret Deeds ſhall all be open lay'd,
And th' obſcure Mazes of their Hearts diſplay'd.
Gnaſhing their Teeth, they ſhall their Fate bewail:
The Stars harmonious daunce, and th' Sun ſhall fail.
[f] The Orbs rol'd up, ſhrink into darkeſt night,
The Labouring Moon ſhall loſe her borrow'd light.

[f] Οὐρανὸν εἰλίξει. So the reading is in the ordinary Edition of the Sibylline Verſes. The Old Verſion does likewiſe confirm this writing; for thus it runs, Volvetur Cœlum, &c. Yet I doubt not but it ſhould be made εἰλίξειν. For ἐκλείψει is underſtood, which occurs a little before. Valeſ.

Mountains with Plains on the ſame Level lye;
Valleys ſhall gape no more, nor Hills be high.
On the proud Billows Ships ſhall ride no more:
And Lightning the Earth's Face ſhall ſhrivel ſore.
The [g] crackling Rivers with fierce Fire ſhall burn,
Which ſhall their ſtreams to ſolid Chryſtal turn.

[g] Ποταμοὶ καχλάζοντες. In the Fuketian Copy, and the Kings Sheets, the reading is, ποταμοί τε καχλάζοντες, &c. Valeſ.

The Heav'nly Trump ſhall blow a dolefull ſound,
[h] And th' worlds deſtruction, and its ſin reſound.

[h] Ὠρύσσει τὸ μέλλον.

In Caſtalio's Edition this verſe is written thus,

Ὠρύσσει μύσῳ μελέων καὶ πήματα κόσμε which reading the Old Verſion in Saint Auſtin confirms; where 'tis thus rendred

Sed Tuba tunc ſonitum triſtem dimittet ab alto
Orbe, gemens facinus miſerum varioſque Labores.

In the Fuketian Copy the reading is ὠρύσσει μέλῳ καὶ πήματα κόσμε. Valeſ.

The yawning Earth [i] Hell's vaſt Abyſs ſhall ſhow;
All Kings before God's juſt Tribunal go.

[i] Ταρταρέην χάος. In the Edition of the Sibylline Verſes, the reading is truer, thus Ταρτάρεον δὲ χάος τότε δείξει γαῖα χανοῦσα.

Valeſ.

Then Liquid Sulphur from the Skye ſhall ſtream,
God ſhall pour down Rivers of vengefull flame.
All men ſhall then the Glorious Croſs deſcry,
That wiſht-for ſign unto a faithfull eye:
The Life of pious Souls, their chief delight;
To Sinners an offence, a diſmal ſight:
[k] Enlightening the called with its beams,
When cleans'd from ſin in twice ſix limpid ſtreams.

[k] Φωτίζων πιστὸς, enlightening Believers. In the Edition of the Sibylline Verſes the reading is κλητὸς, the call'd; which I am better pleaſed with, both becauſe the term πιστὸς is made uſe of a little before, and alſo in regard it cannot be rightly ſaid of the Faithfull, that they are illuminated by Baptiſm. For the Faithfull are not enlightned by Baptiſm, but the Gentiles rather who are called to the Faith. But, after they ſhall have been illuminated by the Sacred Laver, then they are termed the Faithfull. Farther, the twelve Streams denote, as I ſuppoſe, the twelve Apoſtles. Valeſ.

His Empire ſhall be boundleſs, and that God
[l] Shall Rule the Wicked with an Iron Rod.
This God, Immortal King, deſcrib'd in Verſe,
Our Saviour, dying ſhall man's doom Reverſe.

[l] Ῥάβδῳ ποιμαίνουσι. Betuleius has well remarked, that the Sibyll does allude here to the ſecond Pſalm. ποιμανεῖς αὐτοὺς ἐν ῥάβδῳ σιδηρᾷ, Thou ſhalt rule [or, feed] them with a Rod of Iron. Whence it appears, that what we have obſerved above from Gregory Nazianzene, is true; namely, that the Sibyll, or whoever wrote the Sibylline Verſes, hath borrowed many paſſages out of the Sacred Scriptures. Therefore, in my opinion 'tis plain, that theſe Verſes (as Cicero has long ſince told us,) were not publiſhed by a Sibyll poſſeſt with a Prophetick Fury; but were written with a conſiderate and compoſed mind, by ſome body under the Cover of a Sibyll's name. Valeſ.

And theſe things were predicted by the Virgin, who ('tis likely) was divinely inſpired. But, I judge Her to be bleſſed on this very account, becauſe our Saviour has made choice of Her to be a Propheteſs of his own Providence and Care in relation to us.

CHAP. XIX.

That this Prophecy concerning Our Saviour, was not forged by any of the Christians; but was written by Sibylla Erythræa, whose Books Cicero rendred into Latine Verse, before the coming of Christ. And, that Virgil makes mention of this Sibyll, as also of a Virgin delivered of a Child: but He sang of this Mystery, * obscurely; out of a fear of those then in power.

* Or, In Riddles.

[a] In the Fuketian Copy, and in the Old Sheets, this chapter is begun from these words; ἀλλὰ ταῦτα τῇ παρθένῳ, &c; And these things were predicted, &c; after the end of the Acrostick. Valef.

[a] BUt, many persons (although they confess Sibylla Erythræa to have been a Prophetess, yet) disbelieve [this prediction.] For they suspect, that some body of our Religion, not unskilled in the Art of Poetry, made these Verses, and put a false Title to them, and affirmed them to be the Predictions of the Sibyll; in regard they contain Sentences that are of great use to the Life of man, whereby both the immoderate use of pleasures is restrained, and a way also is opened to a sober and temperate Life. [b] But, the Truth it self is apparent and exposed to the view of all men; in as much as the diligence of * those who profess our Religion, hath made so accurate a Collection of the Series of Times, that no body can now suspect, that that Poem was composed after the Coming and Condemnation of Christ; [nor can it be now supposed,] that the common Report is false, namely, that these Verses were long before by way of Prophecy uttered by the Sibyll. For, 'tis by common consent acknowledged, that [c] Cicero, after he had read this Poem, translated it into Latine, and inserted it into his own Works. This Cicero was taken off by Antony, whilest he was in power. Again, Antony was vanquished by Augustus, who reigned six and fifty years. His successour was Tiberius: in which time the presence of our Saviour shined upon the World, and the Mystery of the Most Holy Religion began to flourish, and a [d] new Progeny and Succession of people was † established. Concerning which, 'tis my Sentiment, that the Prince of the Latine Poets speaks, in these words.

[b] Ἐν φανερᾷ δ' ἀληθείᾳ. I embrace Christophorson's Emendation, who read ἐν φανερᾷ δὲ ἡ ἀληθεία, But, the truth it self, &c. Valef.

* Or, Our men.

[c] The passage in Cicero, which Constantine means, is extant in his second Book de Divinatione, where he makes mention of some Verses of the Sibyll, and of an Acrostick. But, that Acrostick spoken of by Cicero, can no way be proved to be the very same, with this which Constantine produces here. Yea, the contrary may be gathered from Cicero's words. For, in that Acrostick mentioned by Cicero, the Romans were warned, that they should choose themselves a King, if they would be safe; as Cicero does there attest. Therefore, the first Letters of those Verses shewed, as 'tis probable, the name of Julius Cæsar. But in this Acrostick produced by Constantine, there is no such thing extant. Wherefore 'tis not to be doubted, but Cicero meant an Acrostick different from this, though Sebastianus Castalio thought otherwise, as did likewise several other persons. Besides, what Constantine adds is false; namely, that Cicero rendred this Greek Acrostick concerning Christ, into Latine, and inserted it into his own Books. Valef.

† Begun, or, instituted.

[d] Νέα τῷ δήμῳ διαδοχή. Here also we must acknowledge the unskilfullness of the Translatour, who has made use of δήμῳ instead of ἔθνος. For δήμῳ χειστιανῶν is no good expression; but it should be ἔθνῳ χειστιανῶν. Valef.

[c] Νέων πλῆθος ἀνδρῶν ἐφαάνθη. In the Fuketian Copy, and in the Sheets, I found it written νέα πλῆθος. Valef.

Now from high Heaven springs a [c] new progeny.

And again, in another [f] place of His Bucolicks.

[f] Βυκολικῶν τόπων. 'Tis apparent that it must be made τόπῳ, place. And so 'tis in the Fuketian Copy. Further, neither the Fuketian Manuscript, nor the Old Sheets, begin a new chapter here. Valef.

Sicilian Muses, Sing we one Note higher.

What is plainer than this? For He adds.

Last times are come, Cumæa's Prophecy.

Meaning namely Sibylla Cumæa. Nor is he content herewith; but has proceeded farther; as if necessity it self required His Testimony. What says He therefore?

And Time's great Order now again is born.
The maid Returns, Saturnian Realmes return.

Who therefore is that Virgin which returns? Is it not She, who was full of, and great with child by the Divine Spirit? And what hinders, but She who is great with child by the Divine Spirit, should always be a maid, and continue a Virgin? [The wisht-for King] [g] shall also return again, and by His coming shall comfort the world. For the Poet adds.

[g] Ἐπανήξει δὲ ὁ ἐν δευτέρων. Add these words ὁ ἐρατὸς βασιλεύς, the wisht-for King; of whom mention is made in the last Verse

Ἥκει παρθένῳ αὖθις, ἄγει δ' ἐρατὸν βασιλῆα.

Nevertheless, in Virgil's Verse there is no such expression as this. But Constantine, as it may be supposed, had altered Virgil's Verses a little; and had designedly expunged Saturn's name, that he might serve his own design. Valef.

[h] To th' infant, chast Lucina, favouring be,
Who ending iron ages, through all lands
Shall golden plant:——
If any prints of our old Vice remain'd
By Thee they'r Void, [i] and Fear shall leave the land.

[h] Τὸν δ' νεωσὶ πω. The last word is wanting in the Fuketian Copy, and in the Sheets. But Turnebus had noted at the margin of his Book, that perhaps it should be written πάλιν. Valef.

[i] Καὶ στυγαί τε. This verse is in my judgment to be restored thus;

Ἀλγεά τε στυγαί τε κεδνάσουται ἀλιτρῶν.

But the verse which precedes this, wants no mending. Yet, in the Fuketian Copy and Turnebus's Book, 'tis written thus,

Τῷ μὲν δὲ ἄρχοντι τὰ μὲν ἕλκεα πάντα βεβήλεια.

Valef.

Which words we perceive to be spoken plainly, and also obscurely by way of Allegory. For, [k] to those who make deeper Researches into the force and meaning of the Verses, [to them I say] they give a clear prospect of Christ's Divinity. [l] But, least any one of the Grandees in the Imperial City, might take occasion to accuse the Poet, because he had written [what was] repugnant to the Laws of his own Country, and had overthrown the Opinions concerning the Gods, which had in former times been delivered by their Ancestours; [on this account] he designedly obscures the truth. For he knew, I

[k] Τοῖς μὲν βαθύτερον. I read τοῖς μὲν δὲ βαθύτερον, &c; or rather βαθύτερος. And a little after, where the reading is τῆς τῆ χειστῷ θεότητος, Christ's Divinity; these words seem necessary to be added, ἄγει πλὴν παρουσίαν. In the Fuketian Copy, 'tis written, πλὴν τῆ χειστῷ θεότητα ἄγοντα; and so 'tis in Sr Henry Savils Book. Valef.

[l] Ὅπως τε μὲ πῆς. I write, ὅπως δὲ μή πῃς, &c, But, least any one, &c; which is an amendment wholly necessary, and 'tis strange to me, that neither Scaliger, nor any of the other Correctors saw it. For whereas these words, τοῖς μὲν βαθύτερον, &c, went before; of necessity it must follow here, ὅπως δὲ, &c; that the sense may be compleat. For Constantine says that Virgil spoke both plainly, and obscurely. And, that he had obscurely intimated the Divinity and Advent of our Saviour: but, had spoken plainly and openly after the manner of the Heathens, and had named Altars and Temples. The Fuketian Copy confirms our conjecture; wherein 'tis written exactly so, as I had long before guess'd it should be. Valef.

suppose,

[m] Ἐπώνυμον τῆς σωτηρίας καὶ τελετῆς. I reade τελετῆς, Mystery; as Christophorson likewise read. He has made use of ἐπώνυμον, instead of σωτήριον. In the Fuketian Copy 'tis τελεπτῶ. Vales.

suppose, the Blessed and Salutary [m] Mystery of our Saviour. Therefore, to the end he might avoid the outragious Cruelty [of men,] He led the minds of His hearers, to an usage whereto they were accustomed: and says, that Altars must be erected, and Temples built, and Sacrifices performed to the New-born Child. The other words which He has subjoyned, are likewise agreeable; [in favour] to those who might entertain such Sentiments. For he says.

CHAP. XX.

Other Verses of Virgilius Maro's concerning Christ, and the interpretation of them; in which 'tis shown, but obscurely, as the usage of Poets is, that The Mystery is disclosed.

HE a God's life shall take, with Gods shall see Mixt Heroes, and Himself their Object be:
Namely the just.
Rule with paternal power th' appeased earth,
Which shall to Thee (sweet child) undreſt, bring (forth
Berries, [a] wild Ivy, and shall pay First-Fruits
Of mixt Acanthus, with Egyptian Roots.

[a] Κιττὸν. In Moræus's Book, the Learned man had mended it at the margin, κισσὸς; that it might answer to Virgils Verse, Errantes Hederas, Wild Ivy. But the Greek Rendition is looser and less bound up to the Original; and in many places 'tis far wide of Virgils meaning. Vales.

Farther, this admirable person, a man that was accomplisht with all manner of Literature; in regard he had an accurate knowledge of the Cruelty of those times; [has added these words;]

(bear:
[b] The Goates themselves shall home full udders
Nor shall the Herds the mighty Lyons fear.

[b] Σοὶ δὲ ὦ παῖς. I doubt not but it should be written,

Σοὶ δ' ἄγραι δαλεροῖς μασῖς ὑπαβρεμιδιῶσι.

Which emendation is so necessary, that without it the sense is not plain. In the Fuketian and Turneb. Copies the reading is, σοὶ δὲ παῖς δαλερὰ φησι, &c. But in the Kings Sheets 'tis, σοὶ δὲ παῖς δαλερὸν φησὶ μασδὸν, &c. Vales.

Wherein he speaks very true. For Faith will not be afraid of the Grandees of the Imperial Palace.

[c] Flowers shall thy cradle sprout; the Serpent shall,
And the deceitfull herb of [d] Venome fall:
In each place * Roses of Assyria grow.

* Or, Amomum.

[c] Ἄνθεα αὐτὰ. The Fuketian Copy instead of these words, has these ἄστ' ἐνιπὴν: the Sheets, ἄστ' ἐνιπὴν. Vales.

[d] Ὄλλυται πόωσι. With Scaliger and Bongarsius, I read ποίη. For it answers to those words of Virgil, & fallax herba veneni. But in Moræus's Book 'tis mended at the margin, ὄλλυται ἄτη. But, if you had rather reade πόη, then it must be made ὄλλυτε, that the verse may stand good. In the Fuketian Copy 'tis ποιήσεως. In the Kings Sheets, πόωσις. Vales.

[e] Τούτων τ' ἄμεν. At my peril write, τοῦτον δὲ ὕδεν ἀληθέστερον, &c: in the Fuketian and Turneb. Copies, 'tis τούτων ὕδεν. Vales.

[e] Than which nothing truer, nothing can be said more agreeable to our Saviour's Excellency and Virtue. For the power of the Holy Ghost hath presented the very Cradle of God, as 'twere some most fragrant flowers, to a [f] new Generation. But the Serpent is destroyed, and the poyson of that Serpent [is taken away,] who first deceived our First Parents, seducing their Minds from their innate [Temperance] to the enjoyment of pleasures;

[f] Νεολαίαν. In Moræus's Book 'tis mended, νεολαῖα ὤπασε γόνα. And so 'tis written in the Fuketian Copy. But in the Sheets 'tis νεολεία. Further, the meaning of this place is very intricate. Musculus renders it thus; Ipsis namque Dei Cunabulis Spiritûs Sancti Virtus fragrantes quosdam flores, novum scilicet progeniem dedit. For, to the very Cradle of God, the power of the Holy Spirit hath given some fragrant flowers, to wit a new progeny. But Christophorson translates it in this manner; Ipsa enim Dei Cunabula Spiritû Sancti Virtute fragrantes flores novæ soboli extulerunt; For the very Cradle of God by the power of the Holy Spirit, hath brought forth fragrant flowers to a New off spring. Musculus therefore read αὐτοῖς ἀπεφαίνοις νεολαίαν γόνον. But Christophorson only read δυνάμει instead of δύναμις; which I rather approve of. By νεολαίαν γόνον he means the new people of the Christians: concerning whom Virgil hath spoken above, in this Verse;

Jam nova progenies cœlo demittitur alto.

Vales.

[g] that they might [not] understand the destruction which hung over them. For, before the Coming of our Saviour, [that Serpent] had * Subverted the minds of men, which were blinded with an ignorance of the immortality of the Just, and † Buoy'd up with no hope that was profitable and advantagious. But after His Passion, when the Body wherewith he was clothed, had for some time been separated, [from His most Holy Soul;] [h] by the Communication of the Holy Ghost, the [i] possibility of a Resurrection was discovered to men: and if any spot of humane impieties were left remaining, it was wholly washt off in the Holy Laver. Then 'twas, that [Christ] ordered His Subjects to take courage; and from His adorable and most illustrious Resurrection, commanded them to hope for the like things. On a good account therefore it is spoken, that the Nature of things venomous is destroyed. Death it self is likewise destroyed; and the Resurrection is * confirmed. [k] Moreover, the Stock of the Assyrians is destroyed also, who were the first beginners and chief promoters of a faith in God.

* Broken, or, discouraged.

† Held up, or sustained.

* Or, Sealed.

[g] Ὅπως γνοῖεν. I have added a Negative particle here; thus, ὅπως μὴ γνοῖεν, that they might not understand; which emendation the following words do mightily confirm. But if any one shall have a mind to defend the ordinary reading, I shall not much gainsay it, in regard both may be maintained. Vales.

[h] Ἐκ τῆς τοῦ ἁγίου πνεύματος κοινωνίας. Constantine had made use of the term Spirit, instead of Soul. But the Translatour seems to have taken it as meant of the Holy Spirit; as if Christ had had His Divinity in place of a Soul, which was the Heresie of pollinaris. In the Fuketian Copy, after the word χωρισθέντος, separated, a Comma is placed. Wherefore it is to be considered, whether those words, ἐκ τῆς τοῦ ἁγίου πνεύματος κοινωνίας, ought to be joyned with these which follow, ἀπεκαλύφθη τοῖς ἀνθρώποις, &c; or rather to be parted from them by a Comma; that the meaning may be this; that by the communication of the Holy Spirit, which Christ after His passion poured upon men, the possibility of a Resurrection was manifested. Vales.

[i] Τὸ δύνασθαι τῆς ἀναστάσεως. I don't approve of Christophorsons Version, who has rendred this place thus, Resurrectionis vis hominibus patefacta est, the power of a Resurrection was made known to men. Nor has Johannes Portesius rendred it otherwise. But, I question not, but τὸ δύνασθαι has the same import with that expresst in my Version. Constantine says therefore, that 'twas made known to men after Christ's death, that 'twas possible for Bodies to rise. For before, the faith of a Resurrection was dark and obscure, even amongst the Jews. Which was the reason, that they feared death so much. Vales.

[k] Ἀπώλετο δὲ καὶ τὸ ἀρχηγεῖον γόνος. Christophorson hath interpolated this place, by blotting out the two former words. Sr Henry Savil also in his Book has expunged these words, ἀπώλετο δὲ, in the same manner with Christophorson. But both those persons are much mistaken. For Constantine, whose skill in Grammer was but mean, had construed Virgils Verse in this manner;

Occidet Assyrium: Vulgò nascetur Amomum.
The Assyrian [Stock] shall fall: Amomum shall grow every where.

And this is evident, both from this place, and also from the Version of

of the Greek Translatour, who renders this Verse of Virgil thus, ἀσύφελον τ' ὄιχεται· ἀλλὰ δὲ χῆ τέμπ' ἀμώμον. For so this Verse is worded in the excellent Fuketian Copy, and exactly according to Constantine's mind. Farther, as to this whole Eclog of Virgil's, the Christians always affirmed, that it was translated out of the Sibylline Verses, and ought to be understood concerning Christ's Birth. Nor can these words be spoken of any body else, but of Christ,

Hoc duce, si qua manent sceleris vestigia nostri,
Irrita perpetuâ solvent formidine terras.

Thus, besides Constantine, S^t Austin understood these words, in his Epistle to Volusianus, and in his 155 Epist. In his Epistle to Volusianus, he gives this interpretation of the Assyrian Amomum, namely that thereby is meant the Opinion of Pherecydes the Assyrian, who was the first that asserted the Immortality of the Soul. But this interpretation of S^t Austin can't be born with, in regard Pherecydes was not an Assyrian; but, a Syrian, that is, of the Island Syros. Wherefore, Constantine's explanation is to be preferred, who says, that by the name Amomum the Faithfull or the Christians are meant; because they are ἄμωμοι, that is without fault. But, that 'tis therefore termed Assyrium, because from the Assyrians sprang the first beginning of Faith. For Abraham an Assyrian, was the first who believed in God; whence he had the Name of the Father of Believers. Vales.

* Or, Our Ladies rose.

[i] Πλὴθος δὲ θρησκευόντων θεοσεβείᾳ. I embrace S^t Henry Savil's conjecture, who at the margin of his Book has noted, that perhaps it should be θεαγωγείᾳ. Vales.

And whereas he says, that * Amomum shall grow every where, [i] he gives the multitude of the Christians that appellation. Which [multitude,] like a vast number of branches flourishing with most fragrant flowers, springs from one and the same root. Most Learnedly spoken, O Maro, Thou wisest of Poets! And all the following words are likewise agreeable hereto.

As soon as Thou the Hero's praise shalt know
And read Thy Father's Acts,
And unto Virtue's knowledge can'st attain:

By the praises of the Heroes, he means the Works of just men: and he terms the Constitution of the world and its accurate composure which is to last for ever, the Virtues or Acts of the Father. Perhaps also [he means thereby] the Laws, which the Church, beloved by God, does make use of; * directing to such a Course of life as is correspondent to [the Precepts of] Justice and Temperance. But, the † raising of the Life of men (who stand in some middle rank between the Good and Bad,) [m] to things more sublime, is worthy of admiration also; when as notwithstanding, [such a life] admits not of any sudden alteration.

* Or, Following.

† Or, Enlargement.

[m] Τὸ ἀνημμένον παραύξησις. The Preposition must be added, which by mistake was omitted in Robert Stephens's Edition; thus, ἐπὶ τὸ ἀνημμένον. For so 'tis written in the Kings Sheets, and in Turnebus's, and Moræus's Book. But I am better pleased with that reading, which is proposed from the Books of Scaliger and Bongarsius; which I likewise found in the Fuketian Copy; viz. ὄπῃ τὸ ἀνηρμένον. For, ἀνάγειν is a Verb proper to the Platonick Philosophy, out of which several passages in many places of this Oration are taken. Hence comes the Sensus Anagogicus, the Mystick Sense, which occurs frequently in Proclus; and that saying of Plotinus, extolled by Synesius, δεῖ ἀνάγειν τὸ ἐν ἡμῖν θεῖον πρὸς τὸ ὅλως θεῖον. Vales.

The Fields shall mellow wax with golden grain.

That is, the Fruit of the Divine Law shall be produced for the use [of men.]

The blushing grape shall hang on Thorns, unset;

Which things were not at all visible in the wicked and depraved life [of men.]

And th' hardned Oakes with dewy hony sweat.

[In which words] he describes the folly and hardned temper of mind, of the men who then lived. And perhaps he likewise shews, that those who on God's account have [n] been exercised with Labour, shall receive some sweet fruit of their own patient sufferance.

[n] Τῶν τοῦ θεοῦ πόνων ἀνέσεως. In the Fuketian Copy the reading is, τὸν ὑπὲρ τοῦ θεοῦ πόνον ἀνέσεως. I write therefore, τὸν ὑπὲρ τοῦ θεοῦ πόνον ἀνεῦσεως, those who on God's, &c; which emendation is most undoubtedly certain. Constantine explains that Verse of Virgil's;

Et duræ quercus sudabunt roscida mella.

He says therefore, that by this verse is meant those who undergo most sore labours for God's cause, or on God's account, shall receive most sweet fruit of their Labours. Vales.

Some steps of ancient fraud shall yet be found:
Thetis to tempt with Ships, and to surround
Cities with walls, bids Earth in furrows tear.
A second Typhis, a new Argo bear
Choice Heroes: and another War, imploy
Again a Great Achilles sent to Troy.

Incomparably well, Thou wisest of Poets! For Thou hast * advanced [o] Poetick Licence as far as it was becoming. For, it was not Thy designe to utter Oracles, in regard Thou wert not a Prophet. I suppose likewise, that the present danger was an hindrance, which danger hung over their heads, who would go about to confute those Rites instituted by their Ancestours. As warily therefore, and as safely as 'twas possible, He has represented the Truth to those who are able to understand it, whilst he lays the blame upon Towers and Wars, which at this very present are really visible in the Life of men; and describes our Saviour going to the Trojan War. Now, by Troy [He means] the whole world. [p] For [Christ] waged a War against the opposed Forces of wickedness; His Mission into the world being occasioned partly from the good will and pleasure of his own providence, and partly from the Order of the Supream Father. But, what says the Poet after these words?

* Exercised, or, made use of.

[o] Τὴν καὶ ποιητικὴν ἔξουσίαν. I like Portesius's Version, (who renders it Poeticæ Licentiam,) better than Christophorson's, who translates it poeticam facultatem, as Musculus had likewise rendred it. For Græcians term that ἔξουσίαν, which the Latines call Poeticam Licentiam, Poetick Licence; as, I remember, it frequently occurs in Themistius. Further, the Old Sheets begin a new chapter here, from these words ὦ σοφώτατε ποιητά, Incomparably well, Thou wisest of Poets! Which in my judgment is better. Here therefore the twentieth chapter is to be placed. Vales.

[p] Ἐπολέμησεν ἀντικρυς τῆς ἀντικειμένης. In the Fuketian Copy and Turnebus's Book, this place is written thus; ἐπολέμησε γὰρ ἀντικρυς μὴ τῆς ἀντικειμένης καὶ πονηρᾶς δυναμεως. But S^t Henry Savil had mended it in his Copy, ἐπολέμησε γὰρ ἀντικρυς καὶ τῆς ἀντικειμένης. Vales.

Here when full years shall make Thee perfect man,

That is, when, after Thou art arrived at Man's Estate, Thou shalt have pluckt up by the roots those Mischiefs, which infest the Life of men; and shalt have adorned the whole world with Peace.

[q] The Saylor shall forsake the Ocean;
Nor navigable pines shall traffick Ware;
But each part of the world shall all things bear.

[q] Οὐ χ ὅσοι αὐτοῖσιν. Who sees not, that it should be written, ἃ χ ὅσοι ναύτησιν, &c. In the third verse from hence, I read αὐτὴ δ' ἀπαρξῖ: for γαῖα is understood. Vales.

* Nor earth feel harrows, nor the vine the hook;—

* After this verse, there is one of Virgils verses left out, in this quotation of Constantine's; this namely; Robustus quoque jam tauris juga Solvet Arator; that is, Nor shall his Steers the brawny Tiller yoak. Besides this, some other verses are left out hereafter, in this quotation.

Nor

Nor wool with various colours shall deceive.
But in the meadows Rams [r] shall scarlet have;
And changing, sometimes golden fleeces wear.
And feeding Lambs shall native purple bear.---
Attempt great honours, for the time draws near,
Dear Race of Gods, Great Stock of Jupiter!
Behold! The world shakes on its ponderous axe,
See, Earth, and Heavens immense, and th' Ocean's (tracts;
How all things at th' approaching Age rejoyce!
Oh that my [f] Life would last so long, and voyce,
As would suffice Thy Actions to rehearse:
Not Orpheus then should vanquish me in Verse,
Nor Linus, though their Parents present be;---
Should Pan strive with me, by Arcadia's doom,
Although a God, Pan should be overcome.

[r] Παρτρέφει λευκάσπιν. I had rather write παρπρέφει, as 'tis in the Sheets. For πρέπειν τῇ ἑαυτῆ is an elegant phrase. I also write πάρα, in a word by it self, as 'tis in the Fuketian Copy.

A little after, I would rather reade ὄφρα εὐπικτα δάμεθλα, in the Imperative. For 'tis a rendition of this Verse of Virgil's, Aspice convexo nutantem pondere mundum. Valef.

[f] Ζῶντά τ' ἔχε νήδυμον ἰαχύς. In Moræus's Book, the Learned man hath mended it, ζῶντά γ' ἔχε. But, neither is the Verse made good this way. Wherefore, I should rather reade ζῶντα σχῇ. For these words are spoken in the Optative Mood. In the following Verse write σὴν ἀρετὴν, from Moræus's Book. This Amendment admits of no doubt. But, concerning the former we must think further. For that place may, I think, be restored with less trouble, if you alter the punctation only, in this manner,

Γηθόσυνόν τ' ἀιῶνι ἀπειρεσίῳ κάσμον κῆρ
Εἶδέ μι γηγενέων, ζῶντά τ' ἔχε νήδυμον ἰαχύς.
Σὴν ἀρετὴν κελαδεῖν, &c.

Nothing more certain. Ἔχε is put for ἔχοι. In the Fuketian Copy the reading is, ζῶντά γε νήδυμον ἰαχύς. σὴν ἀρετὴν, &c; without the Verb ἔχε. Further, the Reader is to be acquainted, that all these Verses of Virgil, as well in the Fuketian Copy, as in the Sheets, are not written from the head; but the first words only of every Verse are severed some little space from the preceding. Which is therefore done, because these Verses are not recited without intermission, but with frequent interlocutions of Constantine's. Valef.

* Or, Immense. *Behold, says he, the Joy of the * tottering World, and of all the Elements.*

CHAP. XXI.

That 'tis impossible for these things to be spoken concerning a meer Man: and, that unbelievers, by reason of their ignorance of the Divine worship, know not even whence they have their being.

SOme one of their number, whose Sentiments have less of prudence in them, will perhaps suppose, that these things are spoken concerning the Birth of a man. [a] But, what reason can there be assigned, that upon the Birth of a Son of Man, the earth should be unsown and unplowed; and, that the Vine should not need the edge of the Hook, nor any other care or cultivation? How can these things be thought to be spoken concerning the Off-spring of a Man? [b] For Nature is the Handmaid of the Divine Will, and does not execute humane Commands. Besides, the Joy of [all] the Elements denotes the Advent of God, not the Birth of any Man. And this, namely the Poets praying that the term of his Life might be prolonged, is a certain Evidence of Divine Invocation. For, 'tis our usage to ask life and safety of God, not of men. Thus therefore Sibylla Erythræa [speaks] to God. Why, O Lord, says She, dost Thou lay upon Me a necessity of Prophesying; and not rather keep Me, raised on high from the Earth, until the day of Thy Most Blessed Coming? But Maro adds these Verses also, to those we have quoted above.

[a] Ποῖον δὲ ἔχει λόγον. I had rather write, ποίῳ ἂν ἔχοι λόγῳ; and have rendred it accordingly. Valef.

[b] Ἤτοι γάρτοι φύσις. In the Fuketian and Turneb. Copies, 'tis ἤτε γὰρ φύσις, For Nature, &c. Valef.

[c] Begin Sweet Child, with smiles Thy Mother (know:
Who ten long Months did with thy burthen go.
Sweet Child begin: [d] cheer'd by no parents look,
To's Board no God, t' Her Bed no Goddess took.

[c] Ἄρχεο μειδιόων ἀνορῶν. Robert Stephens was the first that published this Verse in this manner, from conjecture as I suppose. For in the Kings Sheets and the Fuketian Copy, it is written thus, ἄρχεο μειδιῶν ὃς ἂν ὁρῶν, &c. From which words it was most easie to restore the true reading of this place. Thus therefore I mend it;

Ἄρχεο μειδιόωσαν ὁρῶν τὸν μητέρα κεδνὴν γνωεί̈ζειν.

Than which emendation, there is nothing more certain. Valef.

[d] Σοὶ δὲ γονεῖς ὑ πάμπαν. Neither Constantine, nor the Greek Translatour apprehended the true meaning of Virgil's words. For, he understood them in this manner, as if Virgil had said, that the Parents had not smiled on the child; nor, had a God taken him to his Table, nor a Goddess to her Bed. Constantine supposed, that that verse of Virgil, Incipe parve puer cui non risere parentes, &c.

was to be read in one breath, without any distinction or stop: whereas nevertheless, after the word puer, a point is to be set; a thing which even Boyes know. Christophorson, because he perceived not this, interpolated Constantine's following words, by adding a Negative, against the mind of the Authour, and contrary to the Authority of all Copies. Farther, in the Fuketian Copy the reading is ἐφημείως ἐγέλασαν; which is truer, if I mistake not. Indeed, in the sheets 'tis ἐφημειώς. Valef.

For how should his Parents have smiled on him? [e] For God, who is His Father, is a Power void of Quality. And He Himself wants all figure, but [exists] in the circumscription of others; nor is he endued with an humane Body. Who likewise is ignorant, that [f] the Spirit of God is * unconcern'd in a Marriage Bed? For, what desire, what † Appetite [can there be] in the affection of the chiefest Good, whereof all other things are desirous? What can be wholly common to Wisedom and Pleasure? [g] But, it may be permitted them to speak these things, who [feign to themselves] a certain humane [Generation of Christ:] [h] and who make it not their business, to cleanse their mind from every ill fact and word.

* Void of, or, has no part in.

† Love, or, longing.

[e] Ὁ μὲν γὰρ αὐτῶν. 'Tis apparent to any one, that it ought to be written, ὁ μὲν γὰρ αὐτῶν πατὴρ θεὸς, &c. In the Fuketian Copy 'tis, ὁ μὲν γὰρ αὐτῶν ὢν θεὸς, ἀποιός ἐστι δύναμις. Valef.

[f] Τὸ ἅγιον πνεῦμα. By the Holy Spirit Constantine seems to mean the Divinity, or the Divine Nature, as we have already remarked in the foregoing chapter. For he explains those words translated out of Virgil, ἐ δ' ἥλω λεχέων; which are spoken of Christ, not concerning the Holy Spirit. Therefore, at this place I chose to render it the Spirit of God; rather than the Holy Spirit, as Portesius and Christophorson have done. Valef.

[g] From these words it appears, that that mistake, which we have taken notice of above, was not committed by Constantine himself, but by the Greek Translatour, who misunderstood Virgils last Verses. For Constantine himself took those Verses of Virgil in their true sense, as 'tis visible from hence. For, when he had quoted Virgils words; (which run thus;

Cui non risere Parentes,
Nec Deus hunc Mensâ, Dea nec dignata cubili est.)

presently, finding fault with the Poet as 'twere, he adds these words. How, says he, could his Parents smile on him, in regard His Father is God, who wants both a body, and figure also. Besides, how can a Bed and a Table be any ways agreeable to God, who, 'tis manifest, is wholly void of a Marriage-bed, nor is he affected with the pleasures of meates. Then he adds these words, (whence what I have said, plainly appears, namely that Constantine understood Virgil's Verses excellently well;) Verùm illis qui humanam quandam Generationem exponunt, concedamus ut ita loquantur; But, let us permit those, who set forth a certain humane Generation, to speak thus. In which words he excuses Virgil, in regard he was ignorant of Christ's Divine Generation. But in the Greek translation, wherein Virgils Verses are expounded ill, this period has no coherence with the foregoing words. Valef.

[h] Οἱ δὲ τὸν ψυχὸν αὐτῶν. I embrace the conjecture of Learned men, which I likewise found noted in Sr Henry Savil's Book; ὑδὲ τὸν ψυχὸν, &c; and who make it not, &c. Valef.

I here

I here appeaal to Thee, O Piety! I implore Thy Assistance in reference to those things which are spoken: Thou, who [i] art [nothing else but] the Law of Chastity [and Holiness;] the most desirable of all Goods; the School-mistris of a most Holy Hope; the most certain and unfeigned Promise of immortality! Thee I adore, O Piety and Clemency! To Thee we owe eternal thanks, for the benefit of thy Cure, [k] which we stood in need of! But, the Generality of Men, void of Thy assistance, by reason of their innate hatred towards Thee, have an Aversion for God also. Nor do they understand, that the very Cause, as well of their Life and Being, as of all other persons who are impious, depends upon that service and worship, [which is paid] to the Deity. For the whole world, and whatever is contained therein, is [l] His Possession.

[i] Ἁγνόν πνα νόμον ὑπάρχουσα. The Rules of Grammar enjoyn it to be written ὑπάρχουσαν, as 'tis in the Fuketian Copy. Further, this is a most elegant definition of the Christian Religion; but 'tis basely corrupted by an ill punctation. I reade therefore; πάντων τε ἁσαθῶν ἐυκτιστάτιν, ἐλπίδ' ὁσιωτάτης διδάσκαλον, ἀθανασίας ὑπόχεσιν ἀκίδηλον; the most desireable of all Goods, &c. Nothing certainer than this reading, nothing more elegant. Constantine terms Religion the School-mistris of a most Holy Hope, in regard She teaches us to hope for things Celestial, and to place all our hope in God, not in earthly and frail Goods. In the Fuketian Copy the reading is, ὁσιότιτ' & διδάσκαλον. ἀθανασίας ὑπόχεσιν ἀκίδηλον. There is the same punctation in the Sheets. Vales.

[k] Οἱ δενθέντες, we stood in need of. It must questionless be written, οἱ ἰαθέντες, whereby we were healed. For 'tis elegantly said, σαῖς θεραπείαις ἰαθέντες, That is, healed by Thy Remedies. Vales.

[l] Ἐκείνε κτῆμα. I had rather write, ἐκείνε κτίσμα, His Work, or, workmanship. Vales.

CHAP. XXII.

The Emperour's Thanksgiving, wherein He ascribes His Victories, and all His other Blessings, to Christ; also a Reproof of Maximinus the Tyrant of those times, who by the severity of his Persecution had increased the Glory of the Christian Religion.

INdeed, I my self do ascribe mine own Felicity, and all that I am possest of, to Piety, as to the Cause thereof. Whereto the Event of [a] all things, which have been answerable to My desires and wishes, does bear witness: My Battels; My Victories over mine Enemies; and My Trophies [are an Evidence hereof.] The [b] Great City knows these things, and celebrates them with praises. The same likewise is the Sentiment of the Inhabitants of My most beloved City; although, deceived by false hopes, She hath chosen a Prince unworthy of Herself: who forthwith underwent a Condigne punishment, and such as was agreeable to his own audacious impieties. But, I look upon these things as unfit to be mentioned now; by Me especially, who am directing My Discourse to Thee, [O Piety!] and who do make it my whole Care, [c] how I may address my selfe to Thee, in discourses that are * pure and seemly. Nevertheless, I will say something, which shall neither appear foul nor indecent. A fierce and implacable War, abounding with [instances of] Madness and Cruelty, was by the Tyrants [waged,] both against Thee, O Piety! [d] and against all Thy most Holy Churches. Nor, were there some persons wanting in the City Rome, who rejoyced in such great and publick Mischiefs. A [e] Field was likewise pitcht in order to an Engagement. But, Thou camest forth, and didst voluntarily [f] deliver up Thy selfe, being supported by a Faith in God. [g] Then the Cruelty of the impious, having, like some furious fire, without intermission preyed upon all things which it met with, procured for Thee an admirable, and ever-to-be-celebrated Glory. For, on this account [it was,] that a veneration [of Thee] seized the very Spectatours themselves. You might indeed have seen the Executioners and Tormenters, wearied out with torturing the [h] Bodies of the Pious, and sorely perplext at the Labour and Trouble they met with: but the Bonds [you might have beheld] broken; and the Engines of Torture loosed; and the fires which were brought, extinguished: but, [on the contrary,] the constancy and Boldness [of the Pious] not in the least weakened or abated. What advantage therefore hast Thou made, by attempting these things, [i] O Thou wickedest of Men? What was the occasion of this thy outragious Fury? Thou wilt peradventure say, that [thou performedst these things] in honour to the Gods. What Gods were those? Or what Notion conceivest thou in thy mind, that is worthy of the Divine Nature? Didst Thou suppose the Gods to be angry in the same manner with Thee? If therefore they were such, it was expedient to wonder at their Resolution, rather than obey their impudent Commands, whereby they * ordered [k] just men to be unjustly slain.

[a] Τῶν κατ' ἐυχὰς ἁπάντων. Any one might with good reason guess, that it ought to be written, πάντων κατ' ἐυχὰς ἁπαντώντων, But whereas the sense is plain without this Emendation, I think no alteration is to be made here. Vales.

[b] Μεσαλόπολις. So the Greeks are wont to call Rome, as may be made appear by innumerable instances. Thus Tatianus terms it, in his Oration adversus Gracos, where he speaks concerning the worship of Jupiter Latiaris; as also Porphyrius, in his Book de Abstinentiâ. Moreover, Eusebius, in his Tricennalian Oration concerning Constantine's praises, terms Rome thus, as we shall see there. Vales.

[c] Πῶς ἂν ἁσναῖς. I had rather write, ὅπως ἂν ἁσναῖς &c, that I might address, &c. Vales.

* Or, Chast and good.

[d] Καὶ πάσαις ταῖς ἁγιωτάταις. Before these words there is an Asterisk plac't in Robert Stephens's Edition; whereby 'tis shown, that some words are wanting here in the Manuscript Copies. But, the Geneva-Edition has taken out those Asterisks which had been diligently noted by Robert Stephens, especially in the end of this book. Further, some words are wanting here, which I make good thus, σοί τε & πάσαις ταῖς ἁγιωτάταις σε ἐκκλησίαις; Both against Thee, &c. For, he speaks to the Christian Religion. Vales.

[e] He means the field, wherein the Martyrs underwent their last punishment. For, it was the usage, as well amongst the Grecians, as Romans, that Criminals should have punishments inflicted on them, without the Gates; as I have at large remarked in my notes on Amm. Marcellinus. Whence it was, that Offenders led to punishment, were said ad campum duci, to be led to the field. So Saint Austin in his first Book against the Epistle of Parmenianus, chap. 8. Vales.

[f] Ἐπέδωκας ἑαυτὸν ἐπερειδομένην. It must be, σαυτὸν ἐπερειδομένη, &c. That is, and didst voluntarily deliver up thy self, being supported, &c. Constantine alludes to the courage of the Martyrs, who voluntarily offered themselves to the Judges, and ran to death on their own accord, without compulsion. Indeed, ὀπιδίδεναι is not said, but concerning Him, who does any thing voluntarily; as, for instance, concerning Christ, who of his own accord delivered Himself for the salvation of mankind. Christophorson therefore has rendred this place ill, thus, teipsum adversariis opposuisti. thou hast opposed thy self against the Adversaries. Our conjecture is confirmed by the Fuketian Copy, wherein 'tis written, ἐπέδωκας σαυτὸν ἐπερειδομένην. Vales.

[g] Θνητῶν δυσεβῶν ὠμότης, the Cruelty of impious Mortals. In mine own judgment I have happily found out the emendation of this place. For, whereas before these words, the term πίσις occurs, the two last Letters of this word being repeated; I have restored the place thus; εἶθ' ἡ θεὸς δυσεβῶν ὠμότης, &c. Then the cruelty of the impious, &c. Nothing more certain. Away therefore with Gruter's and Christophorson's conjecture, who reade, θνητῶν δὲ δυσεβῶν, &c. Yet the Fuketian Copy confirms that reading of Gruter's. But I have observed before, that many ill corrections are found in that copy. Vales.

* Or, Perswaded.

[h] Τὰ θεῖ ἐυσεβῶν σώματα. After these words Christophorson, Scaliger, and others add ἦν εἰδεῖν, you might have seen; as I also found it in Moræus's Book, and in the Fuketian Copy. But, there is no need of adding these words here, in regard the term θεωμένης precedes, whereto all these words, ought to be referred. Nevertheless, I do acknowledge, that the discourse would be far more perspicuous, if you should add these words. Vales.

[i] He speaks to one of the persecutors; Maximinus namely, as 'tis in the Title of this Chapter. For he persecuted the Christians with more of Cruelty and Malice, than the others. Vales.

[k] Δικαίων ἀνδρῶν σφαγὰς. The reading, I think, ought to be ἀνδρῶν δικαίων, &c; unless there be a fault in the word ἐσφάγντων. Vales.

But,

But, Thou wilt perhaps affirm, [that these things were done by Thee,] on account of the institutions and establishments of Thy Ancestours, and by reason of the Opinion of Men. I pardon Thee. For those institutions are exactly like to the Actions done by Thee, and [flow from] one and the same [Fountain of] ignorance. Thou thoughtest perhaps, that there was some excellent power and virtue, in Images made in the shape of a man, by Workmen and Artificers. Wherefore, Thou paidst a worship to them; making it Thy whole business, that they should not at any time be polluted with filth; those Great and Eminent Gods, forsooth! standing in need of humane [i] Care.

[i] Ἐπιμελείας εἰδωλα. The last word must be blotted out, in adding which, Christophorson, Scaliger, and Gruter did ill. I found the same term added likewise, in the Fuketian and Moræan Copies. But it is not at all necessary; only, after the verb ῥυπωθεῖεν, or polluted with filth, a Semicolon must be placed. And thus Portesius understood this place; who has indeed rendred these words more happily than Christophorson, in this manner. Omnis illa Cura tua, Omne studium ne sordibus opplerentur. Ita Magni primariique Dii humanâ se ope sustinebant: istam diligentiam requirebant. And so Musculus also. Vales.

CHAP. XXIII.

Concerning the Polity of the Christians: and, that the Deity rejoyces in those who leade Virtuous lives: and, that we ought to expect a Judgment, and a Retribution.

COmpare Our Religion with Your [Rites.] Is there not amongst Us a genuine Concord, and a lasting Humanity and Goodness of Nature? Is there not amongst Us such a Reprehension for a fault, as may produce amendment, not ruine? [a] And a cure, which [may bring forth] safety, not Cruelty? Is there not amongst Us, a [b] sincere Faith also, in the first place towards God; and then, towards the Natural Community of men? Do not We exercise a Compassion towards those, against whom Fortune has waged a War? Is there not an honest plain and sincere life, and such as does not cover wickedness with [the mask of] any subtil fraud; and a knowledge of him that is truly God, and of his Monarchy? This is true Piety; this is a Religion that is sincere, and wholly uncorrupt. This is the most prudent course of life; and they who have embraced it, tend directly to an eternal life, making their passage through some splendid High-way as 'twere. For no person, who enters upon such a course of life, and who purifies his mind from [all pollution of] His Body, does wholly die: but he must be said to perform the Office appointed Him by God, rather than to die. For He who has confessed God, [c] does not give place, either to Contumelie, or Rage.

[a] Θεραπείαν δὲ, I read θεραπείαν τε, and a Cure. The word φύσεων is understood, which is made use of a little before. The reading might also be, θεραπεία τε; and a little after, ἡ πίστις εἰλικρινὴς; which perhaps is righter. Vales.

[b] Καὶ πίστιν εἰλικρινῆ. It appears from the following words, that instead of πίστιν, faith, it should be δέησιν or ἀγάπην, Love. For Love is in the first place towards God, then towards our neighbour. But Faith is not but in the one and only God. Therefore πίστιν can't in any wise be agreeable here. Besides, in regard he treats at this place concerning Reprehension; on that account Charity or Love is a fitting term. For a kind rebuke begets Charity. But, 'tis better to read here, ἡ πίστις εἰλικρινὴς, as I have said already. And so Musculus read, as it appears from his Version. Vales.

[c] Οὐ χίνεται πάρεδρον ὕβρεως. What the import of this term πάρεδρον is, we have observed in the foregoing Books of Constantine's Life; (See Book 1. Chap. 27. note (b.) and Book 2. Chap. 52. note (a.)) For Translatours have in no wise hit the meaning, of this term; which nevertheless, was easie to have been done here. Christophorson renders it thus, Qui deum ingenuè confitetur, non contumelia, non iracundiæ sponte succumbit. From which words, there is no body but would extract this sense, that He who confesses God, is not angry, is not Contumelious. But, the meaning of the Greek words is far different; namely, that he who confesses the Name of Christ, before the Judge, does not yield to the Reproach and fury of the persecutors. Vales.

But, couragiously enduring necessity, has the Trial of his sufferance as his [d] Viaticum, in order to his procuring himself the Divine Clemency. [e] Nor is it to be doubted, but the Deity gives a kind reception to * men endued with Virtue. For it would be most absurd, that as well [f] persons in great power, as men of an inferiour Rank, should shew themselves gratefull towards those, and should compensate their favours, by whom they are either reverenced, or have kindnesses shown them: but, that He who is above all, and who is the Ruler over all, and is the Chiefest Good it self, should be negligent in making a Retribution. [g] Who does accompany us thorowout all Our Lives, and is present with us, as often as we do any Good. And forthwith commends and rewards Our Fortitude and [h] Obedience: but defers the complement and perfection [of that Reward till another time.] For, the whole Account of Our lives shall then be cast up. And if all things be found well and right, the Reward of an Eternal life shall follow: but, a condigne punishment shall be inflicted on the wicked.

* Or, The Virtue of men.

[d] Ἐφόδιον τῆς πρὸς τὸν θεὸν εὐμενείας. Christophorson seems to have read εὐνοίας, Benevolence; which I don't approve of. For, no sense can be gotten out of this reading. Farther, ἐφόδιον may be rendred instrumentum, aid, or, assistance; as Amm. Marcellinus expresses himself, Book 29. pag. 393. Cæsar Dictator aiebat, miserum esse instrumentum senectuti, recordationem crudelitatis. Where see what I have long since remarked, at pag. 389 of my notes. I have rendred it Viaticum, Voyage-provision, or, all things necessary for a journey. Nor has Musculus rendred it unfitly, in this manner; toleraniæ experientiam compendii vice habet ad consequendam Dei Benevolentiam; He has his sufferance, in place of an advantage, in order to his obtaining God's favour. Vales.

[e] Οὐδὲ χὸ ἀμφίβολον. In Moraus's Book, the Learned man had set these words at the margin; παλαιωτικὸν ἐκ τῆς πολιτείας; that is, a passage of Plato's taken out of his Common Wealth, B. 10. Indeed, in that Book, Plato disputes concerning those Rewards, which are given by God to just men, both in this life, and after death. But the argument whereby Constantine proves that, occurs not in Plato; at least, I don't know that it does. Vales.

[f] Τῶν ἐξουσίας ἐπειλημμένων. I doubt not but it is to be written thus; τοὺ μὲν ἐξουσίας ἐπειλημμένους καὶ ὑποδεεστέρους, εἰ θεραπεύοιεν τυγχάνοιεν ἢ ἐυεργετήσαντες ἐυτοῦ τινες, ἐυχαρίστως κατιδεῖν, &c. That is, For, it would be most absurd, that as well persons, &c. In which words, the term reverenced is referred to persons in great power; and likewise, have kindnesses shown them, has a reference to men of an inferiour Rank; which Christophorson perceived not. In the Fuketian and Turneb. Copies, and in Sr Henry Savil's, the reading is, κἂν θεραπεύσωσι μὴ τυγχάνοιεν οἱ ἐυεργετήσαντες; which reading I like not. But Musculus read, εἰ καὶ θεραπεύσαντες τυγχάνοιεν οἱ ἐυεργετήσαντες; not ill. Vales.

[g] Ὁ συμπαρομαρτεῖ. Doubtless it must be written, ὃς συμπαρομαρτεῖ. For, 'tis referred to ὁ δὲ ὑπὲρ πάντας, He who is above all, that is, the Supream God. Whom though he has termed τὸ ἀγαθὸν αὐτὸ, the Chiefest Good it self; yet, ὃς in the Masculine Gender, ought to follow. Vales.

[h] Εὐδοκίας. Christophorson renders it Propensam Voluntatem, ready will. Musculus translates it Benevolentiam, Benevolence. I chose to render it obedientiam, obedience. For, this is the import of the Verb εὐδοκεῖν, morem gerere, obsequi Voluntati Divinæ, to follow, to obey the Divine Will. Εὐδοκία therefore, to render it exactly, is allubescentia, a willingness to please. In which sense 'tis taken in Saint Luke, in that Antheme of the Angels, after our Lord's Birth; ἐν ἀνθρώποις εὐδοκία. This term occurs frequently, in both Testaments, as others have already observed. In the Fuketian Copy, 'tis ἐυδοκίας. Vales.

CHAP. XXIV.

Concerning Decius, Valerianus, and Aurelianus, who ended their lives [a] miſerably, becauſe of their Perſecution of the Church.

[a] In the very Title of the chapter there is a fault, but ſuch a one as may eaſily be mended. For, inſtead of ἀθλήσεως, it muſt be written ἀθλίως, miſerably; as 'tis in the Fuketian Copy, and the Kings Sheets. Valeſ.

I Ask Thee now, Decius! who heretofore didſt inſult over the Labours of the Juſt; who hatedſt the Church; and didſt inflict puniſhments on thoſe who had lived holily: [b] what doeſt Thou now do, after this life? With what, and how afflictive Miſeries art Thou now preſt? Indeed, that interval of time, which was between Thy Life and Death, has ſufficiently demonſtrated Thine Infelicity: when, having been overthrown with Thy whole army in the* Scythick Fields, Thou didſt expoſe the Roman Empire, ſo highly celebrated in all places, to the contempt and ſcorn of the † Goths. Thou alſo, Valerian! After Thou hadſt declared the ſame Bloudineſs and Cruelty towards God's Servants, haſt made a manifeſt diſcovery of God's Holy and Juſt Judgment; being taken priſoner by the Enemy, and carried up and down in Bonds, dreſt in thy purple, and thine other Imperial Attire: but at length, by the [c] order of Sapor King of the Perſians, Thy ſkin was pull'd off, and preſerved from corruption by ſalt, whereby Thou wert made an Eternal Trophy of Thine own Calamity. And Thou Aurelian! The * chief promoter of all impieties, by how manifeſt a Stroke of Divine Vengeance, [d] whilſt raging with fury Thou ranneſt thorow Thracia, wert Thou ſlain in the midſt of the High-way, and filledſt the Tracks of the publick Road with Thine impious Bloud?

[b] Τί δεινὸν περάσεις. At my peril write, τί δὴ νῦν περάσεις, what doeſt Thou now doe; in which manner I alſo found it mended in Moræus's Book, at the margin. Nor is it otherwiſe written in the Fuketian Copy. But in the Sheets 'tis, τί δὴ νῶ. Valeſ.

* Τὴν σὴν ξυμφοράν, Thy ſucceſs.

† Or, Getæ.

[c] Ἐκδαρῆναι κελευσθείς. In Moræus's Book, 'tis well mended, thus, κελευσθείς. Further, concerning the Emperour Valerian's ſkin, which was flea'd off by the Perſians, and ſalted; other Writers do likewiſe ſpeak. Petrus Patricius mentions it, in his Excerpta Legationum, in which Authour Galerius upbraids the Perſians, becauſe they detained Valerian priſoner, he having been circumvented by fraud, to the laſt period of his old age; and becauſe after his death, they moſt wickedly preſerved his ſkin, and thereby fixt an immortal Brand of infamy upon his dead Body. Valeſ.

* Or, Flame of, &c.

[d] Διαλῃζόμενος. The Geneva-men did ill in inſerting the particle ἂν, from the Books of Scaliger, Bongarſius, and Gruter; as they tell us: which particle I likewiſe found added in Moræus's Copy. But, whereas that conjunction does diſturb the ſenſe, and occurs not, either in the Kings Sheets, or in Stephens's Edition; I am of opinion, that 'tis to be removed. Yet the Fuketian Copy retains it. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXV.

Concerning Diocletian, who with infamy reſigned the Empire; and, by reaſon of his perſecuting the Church, was ſtricken with Thunder.

BUt Diocletian, after that Bloudy Cruelty of his Perſecution, being condemned by a ſentence which he pronounc't againſt himſelf; [a] becauſe of the harm he received by the loſs of his wits, was puniſhed by being ſhut up in one deſpicable Houſe.

[a] For what reaſon Diocletian reſigned the Empire, is a thing not agreed on amongſt Writers. Some tells us, that Diocletian (in regard he was a Curious Searcher into things future, when he had found by the Anſwers of the Soothſayers, that moſt ſore Calamities hung over the Roman State;) voluntarily relinquiſh't the Empire. This is atteſted by Aurelius Victor. Others write, that Diocletian being grown old, when he perceived himſelf to be leſs fit for the management of the Government, both by reaſon of his age, and on account of his unhealthineſs; took this Reſolution. Thus Eutropius, a moſt faithfull, and moſt elegant Writer. The ſame is recorded by that unknown Authour, in the Panegyrick which he ſpoke to Maximianus Herculius and Conſtantine. Sed tamen, ſays he, utcunque fas fuerit, cum principem quem anni cogerent, & valetudo deficeret, receptui canere. Te verò in quo adhuc ſunt iſtæ integræ ſolidæque vires, &c. There are thoſe who write, that Diocletian, when he ſaw the Chriſtians could not be overcome by him; by reaſon of grief and impatience, reſigned the Empire; as we may reade in Zonaras. But Conſtantine does affirm in expreſs words here, that Diocletian voluntarily removed himſelf from the Empire, on account of the loſs of his wits. And who is he, that dares contradict Conſtantine's Teſtimony, in regard he had lived in Diocletian's Court; nor could any of theſe affairs be unknown to him. Euſebius relates the ſame alſo, in the Eighth Book of his Hiſtory. But, there are many things, which may make us doubt concerning this matter. For firſt, although Diocletian ſurvived his Reſignation of the Empire a long while, yet he never gave any indication of a diſtracted mind. Even that very one ſaying of his, (which was his anſwer to Herculius and Galerius, inviting him to re-aſſume the Empire.) how much of wiſedom is there in it? Utinam Salonæ poſſetis viſere olera noſtris manibus ſata, I wiſh you could come to ſee the Pot-herbs ſown with our hands at Salona. Therefore, in that Retirement he was always honoured by all the Emperours of that time, who paid a dutifull obſervance to him, as to a Father. Hear Eumenius in the Panegyrick which he ſpoke to Conſtantine. Atenim divinum illum virum, &c; But, that Divine Perſon, who was the firſt that was a partner of and reſigned the Empire, repents not of his own Reſolution and deed. Happy and truly Bleſſed man, to whom now a private perſon, your dutifullneſs, who are ſo great Princes, doth pay an honour! Would Diocletian have been ſo highly honoured by four Emperours that were Auguſti, had his Intellectuals been depraved? Or, would Eumenius have termed him a Divine Perſon, on this account eſpecially, becauſe he was the firſt that had reſigned the Empire, if that had been done by him, by reaſon of his madneſs and dotage? Laſtly, Diocletian had taken a Reſolution of reſigning the Empire, long before the Perſecution; then namely, when he triumphed over the Perſians and other Barbarous Nations, at Rome. For there, in the Temple of Jupiter Capitolinus, he required an Oath of his Colleague Herculius, that they ſhould both reſign the Empire on one and the ſame day. This, Eumenius informs us of, in the Panegyrick now cited. Hunc ergo iſtum qui, &c. This man therefore was aſhamed to imitate that perſon, who had been made a Brother [in the Empire] by him; it repented this man, that the other had ſworn in the Temple of Jupiter Capitolinus. Now, Diocletian triumphed at Rome, with his Colleague Herculius, on the eighteenth year of his Empire, as Jerome relates in the Chronicon; that is, on the year before the Perſecution was raiſed againſt the Chriſtians. 'Tis certain, the Authour of the Panegyrick ſpoken to Maximianus and Conſtantine does atteſt, that that Reſolution was taken by Diocletian, and communicated to Herculius, long before his Reſignation: his words are theſe. Tale eſt Imp. quod omnibus nobis incluſo gemitu mœrentibus facere Voluiſti: non quidem tu Reip. negligentiâ, aut Laboris fugâ, aut deſidiæ cupiditate ductus, ſed conſilii olim, ut res eſt, inter vos placiti conſtantiâ, &c. Which things being ſo, how can that which Conſtantine ſays, ſtand good, that Diocletian ran mad after the Perſecution of the Chriſtians, and for that reaſon voluntarily removed himſelf from the Empire? Indeed, I might be eaſily induced to believe, that Diocletian was ſeized with a ſickneſs, after the Perſecution was begun, and was for ſome time diſtracted; eſpecially, in regard Conſtantine and Euſebius do conſtantly affirm that. For this uſually happens to ſick people, and ſpecially to melancholick perſons; of which ſort Diocletian was, as may be gueſſed from his Coyns. But, I deny, that for this reaſon he reſigned the Empire. Further, in the Fuketian and Turneb. Copies, the reading of this whole place runs thus. Ἐαυτῷ καταψηφισάμενος, καὶ διὰ τὴν ἐκ τῆς παραφροσύνης βλάβην μιᾶς ἐυκαταφρονήτῳ οἰκήσεως καθειρξμῷ ἑαυτὸν πεύσας· ἵν' ὅσιμα τὴν τῶ κεραυνῶ βολὴν δεδιὼς διαζῴη ἢ ἐπίλοιπον βίον. τί, δὴ τούτῳ συνήνεγκε πρὸς ἢ νῦν ἢ πόλεμον ἐγείρασθ' λαλεῖ, &c. Valeſ.

What was the advantage therefore which he got, by his raiſing a War againſt our God? This, I think; that he might finiſh the remaining part of his Life, in a continual fear of being Thunder-ſtruck. The City Nicomedia does atteſt this: nor, are they ſilent, who ſaw the thing with their own eyes; of which number I my ſelf am one. [b] The Palace was deſtroyed, and Diocletian's own * Room; Thunder, and a fire from Heaven ruining and devouring it.

* Or, Houſe.

[b] He means the Palace of Nicomedia, which was conſumed by an accidental fire, a little after the Perſecution againſt the Chriſtians was raiſed by Diocletian. And the Emperours themſelves, ſelves, and the reſt of the Heathens, blamed the Chriſtians as the Authours of this fire, and therefore raged againſt them with ſeverer puniſhments; as our Euſebius relates in the Eighth Book of his Eccleſ. Hiſtory, Chap. 6, about the cloſe of the Chapter. But Conſtantine atteſts, that that Palace was conſumed by fire ſent from heaven. Whoſe teſtimony has ſo much the more authority, becauſe he himſelf was preſent, when theſe things were done at Nicomedia. And Diocletian, aſtoniſhed by this clap of Thunder, ſeems till his death to have continued ἐμβεβρονθηκότα, always fearing he ſhould be ſtruck with Thunder. 'Tis certain, this Narrative of Conſtantine's ſeems to intimate this. From hence it appears, how egregiouſly miſtaken Chriſtophorſon is, in tranſlating the Title of this chapter. For he thought, that Diocletian's Palace had been burnt, after his reſignation of the Empire: whenas, nevertheleſs, that hapned whilſt Diocletian as yet held the Empire, and made his Reſidence in the Palace of Nicomedia. Valeſ.

> Indeed, the event of thoſe things had been predicted by prudent perſons. For they were not ſilent, nor did they conceal their lamentation of affairs, which were managed with ſo much of indignity: but with freedom ſpake their minds openly and in publick, and diſcourſed one with another [in this manner.] What outragious fury is this? How extravagant is this arrogancy of power, that men ſhould dare to wage a War againſt God; and ſhould reſolve to inſult over and reproach the moſt holy and moſt righteous Religion; and [ſhould not ſcruple] to Plot and Contrive the Ruine of ſo numerous a multitude, and of ſuch juſt men, when there is not the leaſt fault in them? [c] O Rare Inſtructer of the Modeſty of all Subjects! O [Excellent Teacher] of that care which the Army bore towards their own Citizens! The Breaſts of their own Countrymen were wounded by thoſe, [d] who had never ſeen the backs of their Enemies in a fight. But at length, Divine Providence inflicted on them the puniſhment of ſuch impious facts; and yet, not without damage to the Empire. [e] 'Tis certain, the ſlaughters committed were ſo numerous, [f] that had they been made [in Battels] againſt the Barbarians, they might have been ſufficient to have procured us a perpetual Peace.

[c] Σωφρονύνης διδάσκαλον. The laſt word is wanting in the Fuketian Copy. Valeſ.

[d] Either he ſpeaks theſe words concerning the Tyrones, who having been newly enrolled amongſt the Militia, had never yet engaged with an Enemy; or elſe concerning thoſe cowardly and faint-hearted Souldiers, whoſe uſage it was to flee out of the Fight, and had never conquered their Enemies. Indeed, Diocletian's Army is ſaid to have done nothing memorable, ſave only the taking of the Achillcum at Alexandria, by a long Siege. Farther, 'tis very hard to underſtand what Conſtantine ſhould mean, when he ſays, that thoſe Souldiers had wounded the Breaſts of their own Citizens, that is, of the Chriſtians. 'Tis probable, that Diocletian, in regard he was incenſed againſt the Chriſtians, by whom he ſuppoſed his Palace to have been fired, had given his Souldiers order, that whatever Chriſtians they could find in the City or in the Fields, they ſhould ſlay. 'Tis certain, many thouſands of Chriſtians are related to have been ſlain at Nicomedia, under Diocletian, and Maximian: the memory of which perſons thus murdered, is by the Grecks celebrated, on the fourth of September, and on the twenty eighth of December. Valeſ.

[e] Τοσοῦτοι γὰρ ἐγένοντο σφαγαί. This period is removed out of its place. For, it ought to have been placed immediately after the word διεφθάρθαι in this manner: μεταφερέα διεφθάρθαι· τοσοῦτοι γὰρ ἐγένοντο σφαγαί, ὅσαι εἰ κατὰ βαρβάρων ἐγένοντο, ἱκαναὶ ἦν πρὸς διωνίαν εἰρήνην. τέλος γὰρ, &c. That is, ——who had never ſeen the backs of their Enemies in a Fight. 'Tis certain, the ſlaughters committed were ſo numerous, that had they been made [in Battels] againſt the Barbarians, they might have been ſufficient to have procured us a perpetual peace. But at length, Divine Providence inflicted on them the puniſhment of ſuch impious facts; and yet, not without damage to the Empire. For, that whole Army of the forementioned Emperour, &c. What can be clearer than theſe words, what more plain? Queſtionleſs, he muſt be very obſtinate, who ſhall deny, that theſe words are thus to be reſtored. Valeſ.

[f] Ὅσαι εἰ κατὰ βαρβάρων ἐγένοντο. There may be a double meaning of this place. For, either it may be rendred thus, as Porteſius has turn'd it. Sanè cædis & ſanguinis tanta vis fuit, ut ſi Barbarorum eſſet, ad fœdus ſempiternum ſufficeret. Indeed, ſo great was the abundance of ſlaughter and bloud, that had it been of the Barbarians, it might have ſufficed for a perpetual League. Or elſe, with Chriſtophorſon, it may be tranſlated in this manner. Tot planè factæ ſunt cædes, quot ſi in barbaros factæ fuiſſent, ſatis multæ ad æternam pacem conſtituendam videri potuiſſent. So many ſlaughters were committed, that had as many been made againſt the Barbarians, they might have ſeemed enough to have eſtabliſht an Eternal Peace. And this latter ſenſe pleaſes me beſt. Lucan's opinion is wholly the ſame, in the beginning of his Pharſalia, when he ſays;

> Heu quantum potuit terræ pelagique parari
> Hoc quem civiles hauſerunt ſanguine dextræ!

Yet, inſtead of ὅσαι, it would be better written, ὥστε. For it follows, ἱκαναὶ ἦν. Valeſ.

> For, that whole Army of the forementioned Emperour, when afterwards it came under the Command of a [g] worthleſs perſon, who by force had ſeized upon the Empire of the Romans, (h Divine Providence having at length ſet at Liberty that great City;) was totally ruined in many and thoſe * bloudy Battels. [i] Moreover, the Cries to God of thoſe that were oppreſt, and who ardently deſired their Native freedom; the Praiſes alſo and Thanksgivings paid to God, after a deliverance from thoſe Miſchiefs, when Liberty [k] and contracts with Juſtice were reſtored to them; do not theſe things all manner of ways declare the Providence of God, and his Paternal Love towards men?

[g] He means Maxentius, as 'tis apparent from the following words. Now, how Diocletian's Army ſhould come under the Command of Maxentius, is not difficult to gueſs. After the Reſignation of Diocletian, Galerius Maximianus received his Forces; part whereof he delivered to Severus Cæſar, for the defence of Italy. Some little time after, when Maxentius had ſeized the Empire of Rome, Galerius ſent Severus with his Forces againſt him. But Maxentius having corrupted Severus's Army by fraud, and with promiſes, brought them over to his own ſide. After this, when Galerius had made an Expedition againſt Maxentius with a greater number of Forces, he alſo was deſerted by a like Revolt of his Souldiers. Thus Diocletian's Forces came under the Command and power of Maxentius. Valeſ.

[h] θεσπίας θεὸς τὴν μεγάλην πόλιν. In the Fuketian Copy, and in Turnebus's Book, this place is read thus, θεσπίας τε θεὸς ἡ μεγάλη πόλις ἐκ εὐπαιξᾶσα. Valeſ.

[i] Ἀλλὰ μὴν καὶ. It muſt be, ἀλλὰ μὴν αἱ θεῖς τὸν θεὸν ἐκφωνήσεις, &c; and we have rendred it accordingly. In the Fuketian Copy 'tis, ἀλλὰ μὴν καὶ αἱ. Valeſ.

[k] Καὶ ἥδη μετὰ δικαιοσύνης συμβολαίων. Conſtantine does glory, becauſe, having cruſht the Tyranny of Maxentius, he had reſtored to the Romans, Liberty and Contracts with juſtice. For, after the ſlaughter of the Tyrant, whatever things had been done, either by Him or his Judges, were null'd. Therefore, if any one had been preferred to a dignity by him, he was reduced to his former condition, and was forc't to bring in the Codicills [or, Patent] of the dignity he had obtained, to the Lawfull Prince. The Sentences alſo, and Decrees, which the Judges had made in thoſe times, were taken away out of the Publick Scrinia and Offices of Record. Laſtly, that whole time of the Tyranny was accounted for nothing, in the ſame manner as if it had never been. Wherefore, neither was it of advantage for the preſcription of a long time. Compacts alſo and Bargains, and Contracts of what ſort ſoever, which had been made between private perſons during that ſpace of time, were in like manner null'd, and that even with the ſtricteſt authority and power. But lawfull Princes, after they had gotten the Victory over Tyrants, and had reſcinded all their Acts; were wont to confirm Bargains, Sales, Donations, Manumiſſions, and ſuch like Acts of private perſons, by granting an indulgence of a publick conſtitution: leaſt, if all theſe ſhould be made null, the quiet and ſecurity of private perſons might be diſturbed. Hereof we have information, from the Emperours Laws in the Theodoſian Code, B. 15; De infirmandis his quæ ſub Tyrannis geſta ſunt. Whence we underſtand, why Conſtantine ſays, that he had reſtored Contracts to the Romans. In the Fuketian Copy, the reading is συμβόλων, not συμβολαίων. To this uſage Rufinus ſeems to allude, in the end of his ninth Book, when he ſays. Edictis namque frequentibus per omnem locum propoſitis, non ſolùm tyrannicas adverſus Chriſtianos depulerat leges, juſque civile reddiderat, &c. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXVI.

That God is the Cauſe of the Emperour's Piety; and, that we ought to ſeek proſperous Events from God, and to impute them to Him; but muſt aſcribe faults to our own ſloth and negligence.

> BUt, when they commend my Labour and Service, which took its riſe from the Inſpiration of God; doe they not plainly avouch, that God is the Authour of my Valorous Actions? [a] Nothing more certain. For, 'tis God's property to do whatever is best: but, 'tis the property of men, to pay an obedience to God. Farther, this is, I suppose, the best and most excellent Ministery; when a man, before his taking an affair in hand, makes such provision, that all things be done with the greatest safety. Indeed, all men know, that the [b] most Holy Ministery of these very hands, is owing to God, together with a pure and most sincere Faith; and, that whatever has been performed for the advantage of men, by Prayers and Supplications joyned with Labour of the hands, hath been happily effected: in regard, so much of utility has [c] redounded to all persons, both privately and publickly, as each man could have desired, not only for himself, but for his deareſt Relatives. They have likewise seen Fights, and have been Spectatours of a Battle, when Divine Providence [d] bestowed Victory on the people: and they have beheld God favouring and assisting our Prayers. For righteous Prayer is a thing invincible; and no man ever miſt of his design, who besought God holily. For, there is no [e] pretence left for a Repulse; save only where Faith is wavering. For God is always favourably present, and gives a gracious Reception to the probity of men. Wherefore, sometimes to slip and stumble, is a thing common to men: but God is in [f] no wise the Authour of humane Lapses and Mistakes. All persons therefore whatever, who are Followers of Piety, ought to give thanks to the universal saviour, [g] both for our and their own safety, and for the flourishing posture of the publick affairs: and with holy Prayers, and continual Supplications, to render Christ propitious to us, that he would preserve and perpetuate his own Favours. For he is the invincible Assistant and Defender of the Just: He is the best Judge; the Prince of immortality; the Donour of Eternal life.

[a] Πάντων γε μάλιστα. It must be πάντως; and before this word an interrogation is to be set, as Christophorson seems to have read. Valeſ.

[b] Τὴν ἁγίαν δὲ ταύτην τῶν χειρῶν λατρείαν. I can't approve of Christophorsons Version, who renders it; Manuum ad cœlos sublatarum cultum, the worship of hands lift up to Heaven. I doubt not, but λατρεία here has the same import with Ministerium, Ministery. For Constantine says, that men ought to give the Ministery or Service of their own hands to God; and that, with a pure and sincere Faith. He has made use of διακονίαν and ὑπηρεσίαν above, in the same sense. Truly, I can't perceive, how χεῖρες can be taken in such a sense, as to signifie hands lift up to Heaven, or, prayers. Besides, the following words do most apparently refute Christophorson's Version. For Constantine adds, καὶ σὺν ταῖς χερσὶν, &c; and, that whatever has been performed for the advantage of men, by Prayers and Supplications joyned with Labour of the hands, hath been happily effected. For, after Constantine hath said, that men ought to give the Service of their hands to God, he adds, that not only the hands are to be lent to God, but Prayers also and Supplications are to be used, that the affairs which we have undertaken to perform, may succeed happily. This is what Græcians are wont to say in a common proverb, σὺν εὐχῇ καὶ χεῖρα κίνει; whereby they shewed, that together with prayer the hand was to be put to the work. Farther, when Constantine says ἁγίαν δὲ καὶ καθαρὰν χειρῶν λατρείαν, he speaks concerning himself, in the same manner that Æneas does in Virgil.

——————— Si Pergama dextrâ
Defendi possent, dextrâ hâc defensa fuissent. Valeſ.

[c] Πρὸς γενομένης ὠφελείας. It must be written in one word, προσγενομένης; which I admire Scaliger and the rest did not perceive. So 'tis certain, the reading is in the Fuketian Copy. Valeſ.

[d] He means the people of Rome, who in regard they were oppreſt by the Tyranny of Maxentius, put up their prayers for Constantine, against Maxentius. And this sense may be born with. But having lookt more narrowly into the thing, I have a suspicion that there is something of a fault here. And perhaps the reading should be, τῷ νίκην τῷ ἐμῷ στρατεύματι βεβαιώσης, bestowed Victory on my Army. Valeſ.

[e] Πεπαιδευμένη πρόφασις. At this place πρόφασις is made use of to signifie prætextum, a pretence or colour; which term in Constantine's Latine Oration being not understood by the Translatour, he rendred it in this manner: but, would have done better, had he made use of the word προφάσις. Christophorson therefore, and Portesius have done ill, in rendring it mundum, the world. Valeſ.

[f] Ἀνελπίστῳ γὰρ ἀνθρωπίνων πταισμάτων. It must be written πταισμάτων, Errours, or miſtakes; as I found it mended in Moræus's Book. And this the Geneva-men have already put us in mind of, from the Books of Scaliger and Bongarsius; whereto agrees the Fuketian Copy. Valeſ.

[g] Τῆς ἡμετέρας αὐτῶν σωτηρίας. I am not of the same mind with Scaliger, Bongarsius, and Gruter, who mend this place thus, τῆς ἡμῶν αὐτῶν σωτηρίας, for our own safety. I had rather reade, τῆς ἡμετέρας καὶ σφῶν αὐτῶν σωτηρίας; which reading I have followed in my Version. In the Fuketian Copy 'tis written, τῆς τε ἡμῶν αὐτῶν. But in the Sheets 'tis, τῆς τε ἡμετέρας αὐτῷ. Valeſ.

Eusebius Pamphilus's ORATION IN PRAISE OF THE EMPEROUR CONSTANTINE, SPOKEN AT HIS Tricennalia.

The [a] Prologue [to the Oration] in Praise of Constantine.

[a] It was heretofore the usage of the Sophists, before their Orations to make a kind of a Flourish as 'twere, in a short Preface; after the manner of Harpers, who before the Song, sing some thing for Tryal-sake. This Preface was commonly termed προοίμια. So in Themistius's fifteenth Oration, and in Libanius's Declamations, it often occurs. Hence, προοίμια is by Theodoret taken to signifie a Prologue. Vales.

I Come not hither with a Composure of Fables, nor with an Elegancy of Expressions framed to captivate the Ears; that by the Voice of Syrens as 'twere, I might charm [my Hearers:] nor, that in Golden Cups, namely the beautifull flowers of words bedeckt with the most exquisite art of Rhetorick, I might present the delicate potions of pleasure, to persons in Love with those things. But rather, paying an Obedience to [the Precepts of] the Wise, I perswade all men, to shun and avoid the publick Roads; and entreat them, that they would not herd with The Many. I am come therefore, that I might [b] begin amongst You a * New Song of the Emperour's Praises. And although numerous persons have attempted to tread the same † path with me, yet [c] I will decline the Foot-steps of men, and will go in an untrodden way, into which 'tis impious to enter with unwasht feet. Indeed, they who affect Vulgar Discourses, and Expressions worn with the ‖ Witticisms of Lads, and who Court a pleasing and popular Muse; may daub mens Ears with Humane Narratives; whilst they submit the Arbitrage [of all things] to pleasure. But such as be initiated in the Mysteries of Universal Wisedom it self, (in regard they are Masters of the knowledge of things Divine and Humane;) accounting the choice of what is better, to be the highest felicity; [such I say] esteem and preferre the God-lov'd Virtues of our Emperour, and his Pious Actions, before his humane accomplishments and Deeds; leaving those His Secondary Excellencies, to be celebrated by inferiour persons. For, whereas the Emperour's mind is endued with a knowledge of matters Divine and Humane; and whereas those have a reference to God; but these, to Men: Let them, [d] whoever namely are fit for the performance of this allure and please the minds of his Hearers. So above, ψευσέοις δεπάεσσιν is a poetick expression. Vales.

* Or, Newer.

† Or, Dance.

‖ Sophisms, or, Subtilties.

[b] Ἐπιῤῥάμβω. Write ἐπαῤῥόωμεν, from the Fuketian Copy. Vales.

[c] Πάντων ἀνθρώπων ἀλεείνων. It must be made πάτον ἀνθρώπων, the path, or footsteps of men. For 'tis a noted halfe-verse of Homer's concerning Bellerophon, which Cicero renders in the very words I have made use of in my Version, namely, Hominum Vestigia Vitans. 'Tis certain, in the Fuketian Copy 'tis plainly written, πάτον ἀνθρώπων ἀλεείνων. Farther, Eusebius has designedly besprinkled this Prologue, with many pieces of verses taken out of the Poets, as with flowers; that by this kind of Elegance he might [d] Ὅστι δὲ οἵπερ δὴ ὀπιδέοι. I doubt not but Eusebius wrote, ὅσοι δήπερ οἱ ὀπιδέοι, whoever namely are fit, &c. The Verb εἰσὶν are, must be understood. But Christophorson the Translatour of this Oration, in regard he perceived not these things, has confounded the whole meaning of this place, in his Version. In the Fuketian Copy, these words ὅστι δὲ are wanting; excellently well. Vales.

Office, suggest things are both illustrious Humane to such as stand without the Sacred Rails. For, even these things and transcendent, and of great use to mankind. Yea, all the perfections visible in our Emperour, are eximious; [c] nevertheless, they are far outdone by His Diviner Excellencies. But, let those persons, who are within the Holy Sanctuaries, and who have entred into the Adyta and invious Recesses [of the Church;] (after they have shut the doors against prophane and impious Ears,) unfold the secret Mysteries of the Emperour, to those men only who are initiated therein. Farther, when they have cleansed their Ears in the Fountains of Piety, and mounted their understanding upon the sublime wing of the mind it self, let them lead a dance about [God Himself] the supream King, silently learning the Divine [Mysteries.] And let the Oracles, not those which are the products of Divination, [f] or rather of rage and madness; but them that are uttered by the illumination and inspiration of the Divine [Spirit,] [g] be our Instructers in the Sacred Rites: [let them give us information] concerning the Kingdom it self; and concerning the Supream King; and concerning that Divine Guard which surrounds the Universal Governour: as also, concerning that Copy of Royal Power which is amongst us, drawn from that Original of the Celestial Kingdom; and concerning that other false one, which does counterfeit the Impress thereof: and lastly, concerning those things which do accompany * each sort of Empire. [h] Having therefore learned the Divine Mysteries from these [Oracles,] as from some Hierophantæ, we will thus begin our Divine [i] Discourses.

[c] Πλὴν ἔτι λειπόμενα. So also the reading is in the Fuketian Copy; yet I had rather reade, πλὴν ὅτι, nevertheless. Valesius.

[f] Μᾶλλον ἢ μανίας. A transposition of words usual with Eusebius, instead of ἢ μᾶλλον μανίας. Presently, the reading in the Fuketian Copy is ὑπνοίαις, not ἐπινοίας. Valesius.

* Or, Both the one and the other Order; that is, the true Royal-power; and the counterfeit, or, false one.

[g] Τῶν τελείων ἡμῖν ἡγεμόνων διδάσκαλοι. Doubtless it is to be written, ἡμῖν τελετῶν, in the Sacred Rites, or Mysteries; which emendation is confirmed by these words which follow presently, οἷς δὴ τὰς θεοπρεπεῖς τελετὰς ἱεροφαντέμενοι, Having therefore learn't the Divine, &c. For Eusebius says, that the Sacred Books, wherein are contained the Divine Oracles, are our Teachers of the Sacred Mysteries, and are as 'twere some Hierophantæ. Valesius.

[h] Ἱεροφαντέμενοι. It has the same import with what he has said above, namely τελούμενοι, learning the Divine Mysteries. For ἱεροφάντευειν signifies the same with τελεῖν. Wherefore ἱεροφαντεῖδης will import the same with τελεῖδης. The Chief-Priests of the Eleusinian Sacra were, at Athens, termed Hierophantæ, who delivered and consigned the Rites of Ceres. Whom, persons initiated did so highly Revere, that they would never call them by their own names. Eunapius tells us this, in His Life of Maximus the Philosopher, in these words: τῷ δὲ ἱεροφάντῃ κατ' ἐκεῖνον τὸν χρόνον, ὅστις ἦν τὸνομα, ἔμοι θέμις λέγειν, &c; But, what his name was, who at that time was Hierophanta, it is unlawfull for me to declare: for, he had initiated me who write these things; and had enrolled me amongst the Eumolpidæ. Lucian (or whoever else is the authour of it) attests the same in Lexiphane; where one Megalonymus an Athenian says, that when he had gone out one day to visit the Magistrate, he found the Daduchus [Torch-bearer,] and Hierophanta, and some other Ministers of the Sacred Rites, who haled one Dinias before the Magistrate, accusing the man because he had called them by their own names; whereas it was unlawfull to call them by their own names, after they had been consecrated: ἔξκλημα ἐπάγοντας, ὅτι ὠνόμαζεν αὐτούς. ἢ ταῦτα εὖ οἶδας, ὅτι ἐξ ὅτου ὠσιώθησαν, ἀνώνυμοί τέ εἰσι, κ' ἄκλητοι ὀνομασοί. Although Lucian says more than Eunapius. For Eunapius has told us, that it was unlawfull only for those who had been Consecrated at Eleusina, to call that Hierophanta by his proper name, from whom they had received initiation. But Lucian affirms, that that was forbidden to all persons in general. Hence 'tis, that amongst Libanius's Epistles, some occur with this Title, τῷ ἱεροφάντῃ, to the Hierophanta. And in the Fifth Book of Symmachus's Epistles, the first three are inscribed, To the Hierophanta. For, in regard both those persons had been initiated at Athens, they lookt upon it as a thing unlawfull, to call the Hierophanta by his own name. Valesius.

[i] Θείων ἐφαψώμεθα. The Geneva-Printers had left out a word, which we have supplied from the Fuketian Manuscript, thus, θείων ὀργίων ἐφαψώμεθα, we will begin our Divine Discourses, or, Mysteries. Valesius.

EUSEBIUS PAMPHILUS'S
[ORATION IN PRAISE OF] THE EMPEROUR
CONSTANTINE,
SPOKEN AT HIS TRICENNALIA.

CHAP. I. THIS is the Great Emperour's Solemn Festival; wherein We who are the Servants of the Emperour, inspired with the Instructions of Sacred Discourses, do rejoyce. He who gives beginning to, and Rules this Our Festival, is the Great Emperour Himself. Him I term The Great Emperour, who is truly Great. Him I mean, (nor will the Emperour, who is here present, be offended thereat, but will rather, together with Us, highly approve of this Our Discourse concerning the Divinity;) * who is beyond the Universe; the Supream over all; the Highest; the most Immense. The Thrones of whose Empire, are the Celestial Arches; and the Earth, the Footstool of His Feet. [a] Nor can any one †perfectly comprehend Him in His mind. For, the Glorious Light which surrounds Him, by the unspeakable Splendour of its Rayes, drives off all persons, and hinders them from beholding his Divinity. ‖ Him the Celestial Hosts do encompass

* Τὸν ἐπέκεινα κόσμου θεὸν ὄντα. These words are wanting in the Fuketian Copy. Valesius.

† Or, Worthily.

[a] Οὐδ' εἴ τις ἀπαξίως. It must, I think, be written, οὐδ' ἐν τις; Nor can any one, &c. Nevertheless, something seems to be wanting here. In the Fuketian Copy, the reading is, οὐδέ τις ἀπαξίως νοῆσαι τοῦτον δύναιτ' ἄν; which is right. Valesius.

‖ Or, About him the Celestial Hosts make their Rounds.

compass: His Guards are the Supernal Powers; Him They acknowledge their Master, Lord, and Emperour. The innumerable multitudes of Angels, and the Companies of Arch-Angels, and the Quires of Holy Spirits, * deriving [their Splendour] from the Rayes about Him, as 'twere from some everlasting Fountains of Light, are illustrated. Likewise, all the Lights, and especially those Divine and Intellectual Kinds of incorporeal Lights, which have their place beyond Heaven; do celebrate this Great Emperour with the highest and most Divine Hymns. The vast Firmament, like some azure Curtain, is drawn between, which separates those without, from them who are conversant within the Palace. Round this [Firmament,] in the same manner with the [b] Light-Bearers in the Imperial Porticus's, run the Sun and Moon, and those other Luminaries of Heaven: which do both highly honour the Emperour Himself and also at His beck and word, afford the Splendour of an inextinguishable Light, to those who are without Heaven, and who inhabit a Gloomy Region. Whereas therefore I do presume, that Our Victorious Prince Himself also, does with praises celebrate [c] this Greatest Emperour; therein, in my own judgment, I [d] seem to do very well: in regard I am truly sensible, that * all power amongst us is derivative from Him. Him also the Religious Cæsars do acknowledge to be the Fountain of all † Blessings: having received this Command from their Father. Him, the Milice; the numerous multitudes of the people, as well in the Countries as Cities; and the Governours of Provinces assembling in the Church, do Religiously adore: being instructed by Our [e] Great Saviour and Master. Lastly, all mankind in general, all sorts of Nations, Tribes, and Languages; and all persons, as well collectively and in one Body, as severally and apart; although in other matters they differ in their Sentiments, yet agree in this very one confession; invoking this One and Only God, by natural reason, by notions self-learnt, and which proceed not from the instruction of any Teacher. What, does not the whole * Mass of the Earth acknowledge him Lord? By the Plants and Living Creatures produced out of it, does it not evidently demonstrate its Submission to [f] his command who is far superiour in power? The Torrents also of Rivers overflowing with their waters, and the plentifull streams of Fountaines, perpetually issuing [g] out of the unknown and immense depths of the Earth, do profess him to be the Authour of this inexplicable and miraculous performance. The Gulfs of the Sea, inclosed within unfathomable depths, and the swollen Waves [h] which are raised to a vast height, and strike the adjacent Earth with terrour; as soon as they approach the Shores, dread Him, being bound by the Command of His Divine Law. Moreover, the * Determinate Quantities of Winter Showers; and the astonishing noise of the Thunder; and the flashings of the Lightning; and the variable and inconstant blasts of the Windes; and lastly, the aierie † Tracks of the Clouds, do plainly exhibit his presence [i] to those, who can in no wise take a view of him with their own eyes. The all-enlightening Sun also, who hath * finished so vast a number of ages, acknowledges him only as his Lord; and, in entire obedience to his command, never dare, go beyond his fixt Bounds. The Moon likewise, ([k] which for the splendour of her light is far inferiour to the Sun,) being lessened and again increased at set periods of Times, obeys the Divine Commands. And the Beautie of Heaven, which glisters gorgeously with the Dances of the Stars, and * moves with Order and Harmony, and measures over its own Circles; proclaims God to be the Donor of all manner of Light. Likewise, all the other Celestial Luminaries, having by his Beck and Word made up one harmonious Consort, finishing their long Course by the Circles of so vast a number of ages, like Charioteers run over the Rounds of their Ætherial Stages. The successive Returns of nights and dayes, the changes of Seasons and Times, and the Order and Harmony of the Universe, do celebrate the manifold wisedom [l] of his infinite and immense power.] Those invisible Powers, which flye about the Plains that lye streacht through the Air, do render to this God, due and befitting praise. The whole World therefore with a joynt consent doth laud this Great Emperour. The Heavens above, and those Quires which are higher than the Celestial Arches, do reverence Him: the Hosts of Angels praise Him with inexpressible Hymns: and the Spirits which are

* Or, Drawing.

b Δαδουχοῦντες. Eusebius does elegantly compare the Sun and Moon to the Light-Bearers or Footmen, who were wont to go before the Emperour with Torches and Lights, as I have noted at Amm. Marcellinus. Vales.

c Τὸν μέγαν βασιλέα χειστὸν, this Greatest Emperour Christ. The last word must be blotted out. For what Eusebius has said hitherto, he has spoken not concerning Christ, but of God the Father; to whom the antient Divines did properly assigne the Monarchy. Besides, the following words do plainly shew, that these are not spoken concerning Christ. Nevertheless, if any person be scrupulous of expunging any thing, he must set a distinction after the word βασιλέα, that the meaning may be this; that God the Father, the highest King of all, is celebrated with Hymns, both by Christ, and by Constantine. For our Eusebius does a little lower say the same thing concerning Christ. Vales.

* Or, He only [i.e. God] is the Authour of Empire to us.

† Or, Goods.

d Εὖ μάλα δοκῶν ποιεῖν. It must, I think, be written, δοκῶ ποιεῖν; which reading I have followed in my Version. But some words are undoubtedly wanting here, which may be supplied in this manner; τῆτον ἡμῖν τὸν μέγαν βασιλέα, χειστὸν καὶ αὐτὸν καλλίνικον ἡμῶν βασιλέα ἀνυμνεῖν σωτηριωδῶς, ἀνυμνεῖ ὁ ἡμέτερος βασιλεὺς, εὖ μάλα δοκῶν ποιεῖν, &c. That is, Our Emperour well knowing, that this Greatest King is with Hymns celebrated by Christ, who himself also is our most invincible King; He Himself likewise extols him with Praises and Hymns, thereby doing that which is right and well; for he understands, that he only is the origin of Empire to us. Thus the sense is most plain; nor do I think, that Eusebius either wrote, or thought otherwise. Nevertheless, in the Fuketian Manuscript 'tis written, εὖ μάλα δοκῶ μοι ποιεῖν. Vales.

e The Translatour thought these words were spoken concerning Constantine; which truly I don't condemn. Yet, they may also be meant of Christ. Vales.

f Τὴν πρὸς τὸ νεῦμα τὸ κρεῖττον ὑποταγήν. This place is corrupted, which nevertheless you might easily mend. At my peril therefore write, τὴν πρὸς τὸ νεῦμα τὸ κρεῖττον ὑποταγήν, its submission to the command of the Deity; which amendment is most undoubted. Vales.

g Ἐξ ἀϊδῶν ὑδάτων ἀπείρων. These four words are, in my judgment, to be blotted out, as being superfluous, and but little agreeable to this place. But if any person shall have a mind to retain them, they must be transposed in this manner; πηγῶν τε καὶ ἀενάων ἐξ ἀϊδῶν ὑδάτων ἀπείρων πηγάζουσι ῥύσεις. Although another participle would be substituted. For, πηγῶν πηγάζουσαι ῥύσεις is no good expression. It would be better, were it made ἀναμιγνύουσαι, as Eusebius expresses himself lower; or rather ἀναμιγνῦσαι. Vales.

h Εἰς ὕψος διεξόδια. The last word is wanting in the Fuketian Copy. Vales.

† Or, Paths.

i Τὴν ὡσπερ θέαν αὐτοπτεῖν. It must I think, be, τοῖς πρὸς τὴν αὐτὸ θέαν αὐτοπτεῖν ἀδυνάτοις, to those, who can, &c. In the Fuketian Copy the reading is, τοῖς πρὸ τῶ αὐτῷ θέαν αὐλοπτεῖν; right. Vales.

* Or, By his course fullfilled so, &c.

k Ὑποχωρεῖσθαι τὸ φέγγος ἡλίου. The Translatour renders this place thus; Lunam quoque, cujus Lumen multò obscurius est quàm Solis; the Moon likewise, whose light is far more obscure than that of the Sun. But I think it should be written, τὸ φέγγος ἡλίῳ; that is, the Moon which goes under the light of the Sun. Vales.

* Or, Goes on.

l Τῆς ἀπειρομεγέθους δυνάμεως. I had rather write, τῆς ὑπερμεγέθους δυνάμεως. Instead of σοφίαν ἀναπέμπουσιν, another verb must be substituted; viz. ἀνυμνοῦσιν do extol, or ἀνακηρύττουσιν do proclaim. For that verb ἀναπέμπουσιν is not at all agreeable here, and has crept in hither by mistake, out of the following period. In the Fuketian Copy the reading is, τὴν πολυποίκιλον σοφίαν γεραίρουσιν, do celebrate his manifold wisedom; without those words τῆς ἀπειρομεγέθους δυνάμεων, of his infinite and immense power; nor do these words occur in the most ancient Palatine Manuscript. Vales.

the Off-springs of Intellectual Light, do pronounce Him their Parent and their God. Those Ages * unlimited by Time, which were before this Heaven and this World; and besides, infinite other Ages, before all constitution of things visible, do acknowledge one sole and supream Master and Lord. Lastly, He Himself, who is in all, and before all, [m] and after all, His only-begotten Son and praexisting Word; the Great High-Priest of the Great God; ancienter than all Time and all Ages; [n] devoted and consecrated to the worship of His Father, is the First and Only Person who makes Supplication to Him for the Salvation of all men. Who enjoyes a preheminence in the Government of the world; [o] but possesses an equal share of Glory with His Father, in His Father's Kingdom. For, He is that Light which transcends all things; which dances about the Father, and which by its intervention Separates that Nature which is without a Beginning and without a Generation, from the substance of things begotten. Which Light also, streaming from above, from the Deity which wants both beginning and end, * diffuses it self without, and illustrates the Region above heaven, and all things that are within heaven, with the Rayes of Wisdom, which are far more Glorious than the splendour of the Sun. This is He, who is the Leader of the whole World; the Word of God who goes before all, and through all, and is in all things, as well Visible as invisible. By whom and through whom, Our Emperour dear to God, bearing a resemblance of the Celestial Empire, in imitation of the Deity, directs and manages the Helm of Government over all things upon the Earth.

* Or, Which were before all Time.

[m] Καὶ μετὰ πάντας. I don't see how this expression can be made use of, in reference to The Word; that That is before all things, and after all things; unless we mean it concerning The Word incarnate. In which sense there is a passage in The Revelation; I am Alpha and Omega, the First and the Last. It may also be meant concerning The Word, who, although He was begotten before all ages, is nevertheless continually begotten by the Father. And this is what is said in the Psalms; Thou art My Son, this day have I begotten Thee, &c. Thus The Word is before all things, and after all things, and in all things, not by a succession of time, but by reason of an eternal Generation. For, he is the origin and End of all things who begins and terminates all things which are, or which can be. Nevertheless, Eusebius's words may be understood otherwise, if they be construed with the verb διαλάσκεται. So, the meaning will be this; The Word does appease God the Father before all persons and after all persons. But the former exposition is truer. For in this manner Dionysius Alexandrinus, in his Epistle to Hermammon, speaks concerning the Son of God; οὐδὲ τῷ κείσθαι ἐπείδετο τὸ πρὸ πάντων καὶ διὰ πάντων καὶ ἐπὶ πᾶσι, Neither had he regard to the judgment of Him who was before all, is in all, and above all. Which passage is quoted in the Seventh Book of the Eccles. Hist. Chap. 10. Novatianus likewise, in his Book de Trinitate, Chap. 14, says Christ is before all things, and after all things; before all things, as God; but after all things, as Man. Vales.

[n] Τῇ τοῦ πατρὸς καθωσιωμένῳ τιμῇ. The Tarnslatour has rendred it ill, dignitatis paterna particeps, partaker of His Father's dignity; whereas it ought to have been rendred, devotus ac dicatus cultui patris, devoted, &c. 'Tis an expression like that inscription, which is commonly extant on the Base of Statues which they had dedicated to the Emperours, DEVOTUS NUMINI MAJESTATIQUE EJUS. But, these words smell ranck of Arianism. For whoever asserts, that God the Word is devoted to the worship of God the Father; doubtless that person speaks too meanly of The Word, and seems not only not to equal The Word to God the Father, but rather to make Him subject to the Father. Of the same stamp is that expression which Eusebius adds, that The Word makes supplication to the Father for the Salvation of all men. Which, if it be meant concerning God the Word, as He is the Word, can no wise be born with. But, if it be understood concerning Christ, that is, concerning the Word after He had assumed the humane Nature, it is most true. The same opinion is extant in his Second Book against Marcellus Chap. 7. where Eusebius says, that the Son doth worship, adore, and glorifie God the Father. Farther, a little before, the reading in the Fuketian Manuscript is, ὁ παντὸς κρείττων, καὶ πάντων αἰώνων πρεσβύτατος. Vales.

[o] Ἴσοις δὲ τῆς πατρικῆς βασιλείας, but, possesses an equal share, &c. I doubt not but Eusebius wrote, δευτερείοις δὲ τῆς, &c; But, holds the second place in His Father's Kingdom: which expression the publishers being not able to endure, they thought it was to be changed into ἴσοις, that so the Son might be made equal to the Father. But, that Eusebius wrote as I have said, is apparent, first from the very Series of his Oration. For, at this place Eusebius distinguishes the Government and Regiment of the Universe, from the Kingdom of God the Father. And in the Government of the Universe, he does indeed say, that the Son holds the principal place: but, that he has the Second place in the Kingdom of His Father: πρωτείοις μὲν τῆς τῶν ὅλων ἀρχῆς, δευτερείοις δὲ τῆς πατρικῆς βασιλείας ἐνδοξαζόμενος. You see, that πρὸ τῶν ὅλων ἀρχήν, that is, the Kingdom of the Universe, is opposed to the Kingdom of God the Father. To πρωτείοις therefore, τὰ δευτερεῖα ought also to be opposed. Secondly, τὰ ἴσα τῆς βασιλείας is not Greek. Lastly, Eusebius, in his Books of Demonstrat. Evang. does always term the Son, the Second Cause: And, in Book 5. Chap. 4. Demonstrat. Evang. he says πρὸ δευτερείων ἠξιώθης. Vales.

AND That Only-begotten Word of God, Reigns together with His Father, from ages which want a beginning, to infinite and endless ages. But this Our Emperour, [a] always dear to Him, being supplyed with some Imperial Emanations from above, and fortified [b] with the Surname of a Divine appellation, governs upon earth during many and long periods of years. Farther, that Universal * Preserver renders Heaven, and the whole world, and the Celestial Kingdom, fit for his Father. But this [Our Emperour,] who is His Friend, brings all those persons living upon Earth, that are the Subjects of His Empire, to the Only-begotten Word and Saviour, and makes them fit [c] for His Kingdom. And, that Common Saviour of all, by an invisible and divine power, drives off at the greatest distance from His Fold (in the same manner that a good Shepherd does wild-beasts,) those Rebellious Powers, which flew up and down thorow this Air that is nearest the Earth, and * broaded the Souls of Men. But this [Our Emperour,] His friend, adorned from above by Him with Trophies erected against his Enemies; by the Law of War subdues the open Adversaries of Truth, and chastizes them. That person, existing † The Logos before the world was framed, and the preserver of all things; delivers rational and saving Seeds to His Companions, and renders them reasonable, and instructed in the knowledge of His Father's Kingdom. This [Our Emperour,] His Friend, as 'twere some Interpreter to the Word of God, recalls all mankind to the knowledge of God: crying out in the hearing of all men, and with a loud voice promulging the Laws of [d] true Piety and Verity, to all persons living upon the Earth. That Universal Saviour opens the Celestial Gates of His Father's Kingdom, to those who remove from hence thither. This [Our Emperour,] following the Example of the Deity, after He hath cleansed His Empire on earth, from all the filth of impious Errour, invites the * Assemblies of Holy and Pious men, into the Sacred Houses and † Basilicæ; making it his chiefest care, that the whole Navy, with the Command

CHAP. II.

[a] Ὁ διαρκὴς δὲ τούτῳ φίλος. This place is, in my judgment, thus to be restored; συμβασιλεύων ὢν ἀνάρχων αἰώνων εἰς ἀπειρους καὶ ἀτελευτήτους αἰῶνας διαρκεῖ. ὁ δὲ τούτῳ φίλος, &c; continues to Reign together with His Father, from ages which want a beginning, to infinite and endless ages. But, Our Emperour, dear to Him, &c. Vales.

[b] Τῷ τῆς θείας ἐπωνυμίας ἐπιρρύμῳ. 'Tis not clearly enough made out, what this Surname of a Divine appellation should be, wherewith Constantine was honoured and signalized. Does Eusebius mean the name of Victor, which was given to Constantine, as we have remark't above? Or rather, the surname of Maximus, which is proper to God? The very Name Constantine may also be meant, the import whereof is, He that is. Now, the Sacred Scriptures do inform us, that this is the proper Name of God. Lastly, we may here understand the surname of Christianus, Christian; an appellation which Constantine loved most entirely. Vales.

[c] Πρὸς τὸν αὐτὸν βασιλείαν. I read with the Translatour, πρὸς τὸν αὐτῷ βασιλείαν, for His Kingdom. Vales.

* Or, Saviour.

* Or, Stuck upon the, &c.

† Or, The Word.

[d] Τῆς ἀληθοῦς εὐσεβείας. In the Fuketian Copy, the word ἀληθοῦς is wanting; which is the truer reading. Vales.

* Or, Quires.

† Or, Churches.

Command and management whereof He is entrusted, should be preserved together with the people on Boord. And He is the only person of all those that ever yet governed the Empire of the Romans, who having now been honoured by God the Supream King, with * thirty years Reigne, celebrates this Festival, not to terrene Spirits, as the usage of the Ancients was, nor to the Apparitions of Dæmons which seduce the unskilfull multitude, nor yet to the frauds and [c] feigned Narratives of impious men: but, pays his thanks to that God, by whom he has been honoured, being truly sensible of those Blessings which He has conferred on him. Not polluting his † Palace with blood and gore, agreeable to the Rites of the Ancients; nor appeasing terrene Dæmons with smoke and fire, and with Sacrifices of Beasts wholly consumed by fire on the Altars; but consecrating a most gratefull and acceptable Sacrifice to the Supream King Himself, His own Imperial Soul namely, and His Mind which is most worthy of God. For this is the only Sacrifice wherewith God is well pleased: which Our Emperour has learnt to offer, with the purified thoughts of his mind, without either fire or bloud [f]: giving confirmation to his piety by those unerring Sentiments and Opinions treasured up in his mind; setting forth the praises of God in lofty and magnifick Orations, and by Imperial Actions emulating the Clemency of the Deity: and wholly devoting himself to God, and, like some great Gift, making a present of himself to Him, the First-fruits as 'twere of the World, with the Administration whereof he hath been entrusted. This greatest Sacrifice therefore, the Emperour in a due manner Offers, [g] before all other. But he Sacrifices like a Good Shepherd, not

Offering glorious Hecatombs of Firstling-Lambs:

but rather, bringing over the minds of those rational flocks, which are fed by Him, to the knowledge and worship of God.

* Or, Three periods of Decads.

† Or, Large.

[c] Ἀκρίσις ἀδίων ἀνδρῶν. The word ἀκρίσις is corrupted; in place whereof, what term should be substituted, I don't know. Unless the word ἀκριβάσιοι will please. For he praises Constantine, because he would not admit the Ethnick Orators to his Decennalia. Vales.

† Or, Imperial Houses.

[f] Ζηλῶν φιλανθρωπίαν ἀνακείμενον. These words ought to be expunged; which are not set in their due place here, but must be put in lower, in this manner; ἀδιαψεύστοις μὲν δόξμασι, τὰ τῆς εὐσεβείας κρατύνων. λόγῳ δὲ μεγαλοπρεπεῖ γεραίρων τὸν θεολογίαν, πράξεσί τε βασιλικαῖς τὸν τῶν κρείττονα ζηλῶν φιλανθρωπίαν. ἀνακείμενον αὐτῷ, ᾗ μέγα δῶρον, &c; giving confirmation to his piety, &c. There is nothing more certain than this Emendation; nor did the Translatour read otherwise, as 'tis apparent from his Version. Wherefore this seems to be a mistake of the Printer. This our Emendation was long afterwards confirmed to us by the Fuketian Copy; wherein 'twas exactly written as I had conjectured; save only, that 'tis there worded, ὅλον τε ἀνακείμενον, and wholly devoting himself, &c. Vales.

[g] Πρὸς τῆς ἁπάντων. It must be made πρὸ τῆς ἁπάντων, or πρῶτος, before all other, or, first. Vales.

CHAP. III.

BUT God, highly pleased with such a Sacrifice as this, and with delight accepting this Gift offered to Him; praises the * Hierophanta of this venerable and eximious Sacrifice, and makes an addition of † many periods [of years] to his Reigne; augmenting his favours towards him, in a manner correspondent and proportionate to those Acts of Piety, wherewith He is worshipped by the Emperour. And He has permitted him to celebrate all these Festivals with the highest prosperity of the Monarchy; at each period of the Decennalian Festivity, advancing one of his Sons to the Colleague-ship of the Imperial Throne [a].

* See the Prologue to this Oration, note (b.)

[a] Καὶ ὥσπερ εὐθαλῆ. These words, as far as ἀνακείμενον, are wanting in the Fuketian Copy, and in the most ancient Palatine Copy, as the Geneva-men have told us. Vales. Valesius takes no notice of this clause, either in the Greek Text of his Edition, or in his Version. In Curterius's translation of this Oration (for I have not the Geneva-Edition by me,) it is worded thus; Et velut plantæ florenti virenti-que temporum incrementa donata.

For, [b] in the first Decennium of his Empire, he proclaimed his eldest Son, who bears the same name with his Father, a Partner of the Imperial * Realm: after that, his second Son, who was the next to him in age, at his second Decade: and in like manner his third, at his third Decade, which we now celebrate. [c] And, whereas his fourth period [of ten years] is now current; in regard the spaces of times do more and more extend themselves, he increases the Empire by a Copious † Colleagueship of his Stock, [d] and by Creations of Cæsars; fulfilling the Oracles of [e] the Divine Prophets, which they long since proclaimed in this manner: And the Saints of the most High shall take the Kingdom. Thus therefore, God Himself the Supream King conferrs upon the most Pious Emperour, * an Increase both of years and children, and renders his Government of the Nations upon Earth, fresh and flourishing, as if it had been but now begun.

* Or, Heritage.

† Or, Society.

* Or, Increases of Times, &c.

[b] Κατὰ μὲν τὸν πρῶτον τῆς βασιλείας δεκαετηρίδα, in the first Decade of his Imperial period. If we make a more exact enquiry into the thing, it will be found false, that Constantine Junior was created Cæsar by his Father, in the first Decennium [ten years] of Constantine's Empire. For Constantine Junior was created Cæsar by his Father, in the Consulate of Gallicanus and Bassus, on the Calends of March, in the year of Christ 317. This was the eleventh year of Constantine's Reigne. Wherefore, Constantine Junior was not created Cæsar within the first Decennium, but within the second rather. This place of Eusebius must therefore be favourably interpreted, and κατὰ τὸν πρῶτον δεκαετηρίδα, must be taken for ἀμφὶ τὸν, &c; about, &c. Vales.

[c] Ἤδη δὲ τῆς τετάρτης ἀνακυκλουμένης δεκαετηρίδος. The Emperour Constantine published his Tricennalia in the Consulate of Constantius and Albinus, on the eight of the Calends of August, which day began the thirtieth year of his Empire. From this day therefore, in the foresaid persons Consulate, on the year of Christ 335, began the fourth Decennalian period of Constantine's Empire, according to the computation of Eusebius: whereas nevertheless, it ought rather to begin from the following year, namely, his thirty first year. But these things are not wont to be so exactly cast up, by Orators. Vales.

[d] He means Dalmatius and Hannibalianus; the former of whom was declared Cæsar, the other King, by Constantine, in the thirtieth year of his Empire, on the fifteenth of the Calends of October, as it occurs in Idatius's Fasti. Saint Jerome (in the Chronicon) tells us, that Dalmatius was made Cæsar, in Constantine's Tricennalia. Where he has made use of the term Tricennalia, instead of the thirtieth year of his Empire: whereas nevertheless, Tricennalia is properly the first day of his thirtieth year. For the Roman Emperours celebrated their Quinquennalia, Decennalia, and Vicennalia, on the first day of the fifth, tenth, and twentieth year of their Empire. For these words signifie nothing else, but the Natalis [Birth-day] of the Empire, which was celebrated with the greatest Pomp and Festivity, every recurring fifth and tenth year. Now, this Festivity lasted one or two days, in which time the Ludi Circenses and Theatrales were exhibited. Therefore, whereas Dalmatius was not created Cæsar on the eighth of the Calends of August, which day began the thirtieth year of Constantine's Empire; Saint Jerome has expresst himself improperly, who has told us, that that Cæsar was created in Constantine's Tricennalia. Our Eusebius does here more truly place that, after his Tricennalia, the fourth Decennalian period of Constantine's Empire now beginning. For, after the celebration of the Tricennalia, they began a new period; as if the thirtieth year, which was but just begun, had been now finished. And, as Lawyers are wont to say, that in dignities, a begun-year is accounted for a compleat one: so also they were wont to do, in the Quinquennalia, Decennalia, and the other Festivals of this sort. Thus, the place in Amm. Marcellinus's fourteenth Book is to be understood; where he speaks concerning Constantius's Tricennalia in these words. Arelate hiemem agens Constantius, post Theatrales Ludos atque Circenses ambitioso editos apparatu die 6. idus Octobris, qui Imperii ejus annum tricesimum terminabat, &c. For Amm. Marcellinus has undoubtedly made use of the thirtieth year compleated, instead of the thirtieth year begun, on account of that very reason which I have mentioned. Vales.

[e] Περὶφ θείων. In the Fuketian Copy 'tis θείων προφητῶν. And, a little after, ὅπω δῆτα χρόνων, &c. This place, which Eusebius cites out of the Divine Prophets, occurs in the seventh Chapter of Daniel. Vales.

And

*And * he himself solemnizes this Festival [in honour] to Him; having made Him the Conquerour over all his Enemies and Adversaries; and exhibiting Him as the Pattern of true Piety, to all persons upon the Earth. But our Emperour, like the Light of the Sun, illustrates men, whose habitations are in places most remote from one another, with the glorious † Presence of His Cæsars, as 'twere by some Rayes transmitted from himself to the greatest distance. And on Us who inhabit the East, He hath bestowed a [f] Shoot truly worthy of himself: another of his Sons [he hath assigned] to another portion of men: and again, another [He has placed] otherwhere; like so many Lamps and Lights, which derive their Brightness from that Light diffused from Himself. Farther, having joyned together for himself, the Four most valiant Cæsars, like so many young Horses, * and fixt them under one Set of Harness belonging to the [g] Imperial Chariot, and fitted them with the Raines of Divine Concord and Unity; He Himself sits above, like the Charioteer, and puts them on; and drives over the whole world, wherever the Sun makes his Visits; and is personally present in all places, and inspects all affairs. Lastly, being adorned with a representation of the Celestial Empire, having His eyes fixt upon Heaven, He directs and manages the affairs of Mortals, in a conformity to that Original Draught; and is encouraged and strengthened by a resemblance of the Monarchy of God. For, this the [sole] King over all, hath bestowed on the Nature of Men only, [h] of all those Creatures which are on Earth, [that it should express a likeness of his Divine Monarchy.] [i] For, He is the Law of Imperial power, whereby 'tis Decreed, that all should be subject to the Empire of One. Moreover, Monarchy does far excell all other Constitutions, and Forms of Government whatever. For Polyarchy, which is opposed to it, being a sort of Regiment wherein many Govern with an equality of power and honour, ought rather to be termed Anarchy and Confusion. On which account, there is one God, not two, nor three, nor yet many. For, to assert a multitude of Gods, is plainly to affirm, that there is no God at all. One King: and [k] his Word and Imperial Law, One: which [Law] is not declared by words and syllables; nor is it written in Paper, or cut upon pillars, that it should be consumed by length of Time: but it is the living and self-subsisting * God the Word, who disposes and orders his Fathers Kingdom, to all those who are under Him, and after Him. Him the Celestial Hosts do surround, and Myriads of Angels which are the Ministers of God; and innumerable Troops of the Milice plac't above the World, and of invisible Spirits; who residing within the Inclosures of Heaven, use their utmost diligence about the Order and Administration of the whole World. Over all whom, the Royal † Logos is the Captain and Prince, as 'twere some Præfect of the Supream Emperour. The Sacred Oracles of Divines term Him, The Master of the Milice, and The Great High-Priest, and The Prophet of the Father, and The Angel of the Great Council, and The Brightness of His Father's Light, and The Only-Begotten Son; and [give Him] innumerable other such Titles as these. Whom when the Father had Constituted The Living Word, and The Law, and The Wisdom, and The Complement of all Good; He made a Present of [l] This Greatest Blessing, to all those who are Subject to His Empire. But, He pierces thorow all things, and goes every where, and in a plentifull manner displays His Father's Favours to all persons; and has stretcht forth the Resemblance of the Imperial Power, even as far as those rational Creatures which live on earth; having adorned the mind of man, which is framed according to His Own Likeness, with Divine * Faculties. Hence 'tis, that in the mind of man there is a participation of the other Virtues also, derived from a Divine Emanation. For, He only is wise, who is also the Sole God: He only is essentially Good: He only is strong and powerfull. And He is the Parent of Justice: the Father of Reason and Wisedom; the Fountain of Light and Life; the Dispenser of Truth and Virtue; and lastly, the Author of Empire it self, and of all Dominion and Power.*

* That is, God.

† Or, Splendours.

[f] Τὸν ἐπέξιον αὐτῷ καρπόν. He means Constantius Cæsar. For he had at first been sent by his Father, to Govern the Gallia's. But afterwards he was removed into the East; as Julian informs us in his first Oration de Laudibus Constantii, and Libanius in his Basilic. Vales.

* Or, To one Yoke of the Imperial Chariot; so Valesius.

[g] The Translatour saw nothing here; he has rendred this place, thus, Porro imperii quadrifariam dispertiti jugum, quasi quatuor equis, id est sibi, & tribus filiis Cæsaribus Fortissimis imponens. But Eusebius does expresly name four Cæsars, whom he compareth to four Horses, who being coupled together in one Yoke, drew the Imperial Chariot; over which Constantine presided, as Charioteer. Now, the four Cæsars were, Constantinus Junior, Constantius, and Constans, Sons of the Emperour Constantine; and Dalmatius the Son of Dalmatius; concerning whom we have spoken above. Vales.

[h] Τὸν ὅπῃ γῆς, μόνον. This place tortured me a long while. But at length I have found out the most undoubted Emendation of it. I write therefore; τοῦτο γὰρ ἦν ἀνθρώπων φύσει ἦν ὅπῃ γῆς μόνη, ἦν ἁπάντων δεδώρηται βασιλεύς. That is; For, this the [sole] King over all, &c. Euseb-is repeats the same hereafter, in chap. 4: where he reckons up the Favours, which mankind hath received from God the Word. Βασιλικόν τε τοῦτο τὸ ζῷον ἀπεργάζεσθαι, μόνον ἦν ὅπῃ γῆς βασιλεύειν καὶ βασιλεύεσθαι. τοῦτ' εἰδέναι ἀναδείξας. But the Translatour, instead of μόνον, seems at this place to have read νόμον. For thus he renders it. Istam enim imperii formam Lex, quæ rex omnium est, humano generi tribuit. Vales.

[i] Νόμον γὰρ θεοῦ. These words are spoken concerning the supream King and God; who really is the Law and Rule of Royal Power. The reading at this place might likewise be μόνον; that so the meaning may be this, that God only is possest of the Royal Power, in regard he alone rules over all, and holds the Monarchy. Therefore, in the foregoing period, it must, I think, be written in this manner, μόνη μόνου ἦν ἁπάντων δεδώρηται βασιλεύς. Nor do I think, that Eusebius wrote otherwise. For the sentence is most plain and elegant, if we read thus. And this period will excellently well cohere with the foregoing one. Vales.

[k] Ὁ τότε λόγος, καὶ νόμος βασιλικὸς εἷς. In the Fuketian Copy, the Comma is wanting, excellently well. For the Son of God is the Word and Law of God the Father, as Eusebius says a little afterwards. Vales.

* Θεὸς λόγος. Valesius renders it, Dei sermo, word of God.

† Or, Word.

[l] Μέγιστον ἀγαθὸν δῶρα. The term ἀγαθὸν must be expunged, or else the word δῶρα: for one of those words is superfluous. Yet I had rather blot out the latter. For so Eusebius expresses himself hereafter, in chap. 12. Vales.

* Or, Powers.

CHAP. IV.

*BUT, Whence has man the knowledge of these matters? Who hath declared these things in the hearing of Mortals? Whence has a Carnal tongue the Liberty, of uttering those matters, which are forreign both to flesh and body? Who ever saw the invisible King, and discovered these Excellencies in Him? 'Tis true, the Elements, which are joyned in an Affinity with Bodies, and the things made up of those Elements, are perceived by the * senses of the Body. But, no person hath boasted, that with the eyes of the Body He hath ever had a sight of that invisible Kingdom, by which all things are Governed: nor, has mortal Nature ever beheld the Beauty of Wisedom. Who hath seen the Face of Justice, with † eyes of flesh? Whence was the Notion of Legal Government and Royal Dominion*

* Or, Sense of Bodies.

† Or, The sense of flesh.

Dominion suggested to men? From whence could Imperial Power [be known] to man, who is made up of flesh and bloud? Who hath declared to those on earth, the invisible * Form, which can't be expres's't by any figure; and the incorporeal † Essence which wants all external Lineaments? Questionless, there was one Interpreter of these things, the Word of God who pierceth thorow all things. Who is the Father and Maker of that rational and intellectual substance which appears to be in men: who being the Only Person that is united to the Divinity of the Father, watereth his own Sons with his Fathers ‖ Effluxes. Hence have all men, Greeks and likewise Barbarians, those natural and self-learnt Reasonings: hence those Notions of Reason and Wisedom: hence the Seeds of prudence and justice: hence the † Inventions of Arts: hence the knowledge of Virtue * and the gratefull name of Wisedom, and the Venerable Love of Philosophick Learning. Hence the knowledge of all that is Good and Commendable: hence the Representation of God Himself formed in the mind, and a Course of Life fitly answering the divine worship. Hence is man furnished with a Royal Power, and with an invincible Empire over all things that are in the Earth. But, after The Logos, who is the Parent of Rational Creatures, had impreſt upon the mind of Man a Character agreeable to the Image and likeness of God, and had made Man a Royal Creature; (having conferred this on him only, of all those Creatures which are on Earth, namely that he should have a knowledge, both of Governing, and of being Governed; and also, that even from this Life he should [a] begin to meditate upon, and to fore-learn that promised Hope of the Celestial Kingdom; for the sake of which Kingdom, He Himself came, and, as a Father of His children, disdained not personally to enter into a Converse with Mortals:) [b] He Himself, cultivating His own Seeds, and renewing His heavenly Supplies and Favours, declared to all men, that they should partake of the Celestial Kingdom. And he invited all persons, and exhorted them, that they should be ready for their journey upwards, and should furnish themselves with a Garment befitting their calling. And by an unspeakable power he filled the whole world, which is enlightened by the Sun's Rayes, with his Preaching; by a likeness of the earthly Kingdom, expressing the Kingdom of Heaven. To which he incites and encourages the whole Body of mankind to hasten, having shewed all men this Confidence and good Hope.

* Or, Forms.

† Or, Substance.

‖ Outflowings.

† Καταλήψεις, Comprehensions.

* Σοφίας τε φίλον ὄνομα, καὶ σεμνὸς φιλοσόφου παιδείας ἔρως; which words Valesius renders thus, Et nomen Philosophiæ, & Venerandus amor Sapientiæ, and the name of Philosophy, and the Venerable Love of Wisdom.

[a] Μελετῶν τε καὶ προδιαζόμενος. It must, I think, be written προμελετῶν. For so Eusebius expresses himself in chap. 6. where he speaks thus concerning God the Word; μέτεστι τε ζωῆς πᾶς ὁ θνητὸν βαυύσι εἶον διαθεσμοθετήσας, προμελετᾶν ἐν τῷ δὴ τὸ προοίμιον τῆς ἐκεῖ τὸν νῦν αἰῶνα ζωῆς ἅπασιν ἀνθρώποις συνεχώρησε. The sentence is in both places the same. For, in the one place he speaks concerning the Celestial Kingdom; in the other, concerning Life eternal: and says, that some assays, proofs, and fore-exercises of each, are granted to men in this life, by the Divine Word. Wherefore I doubt not but Eusebius wrote in this manner, προμελετᾶν τε καὶ προοιμιαζόμενος ἐνδένδε τῆς, &c. And thus the sense is most perspicuous. But the word ἀναδείξας, which went before, must be understood. A long while after I had written this Note, having at length procured the Fuketian Copy, I found my conjecture confirmed by its authority, at least in part. For in that Manuscript the reading is, προμελετᾶν τε καὶ προδιαζόμενος, begin to meditate upon, and to fore-learn; incomparably well. Vales.

[b] Τὰ δ' αὐτῆς γεωργῶν. I had rather write, τὰ τε αὐτῆς. Further, this whole page of Eusebius's is put together very unfitly, by reason of the too great number of Verbs, which occur in the Imperfect Tense. Whence 'tis, that his Discourse becomes irksome and unpleasant. Vales.

OF Which hope, Our Emperour most dear to God, is even in this life made a partaker; in regard he is adorned by God with innate Virtues, and has received into his mind the Celestial Effluxes derived from that Fountain. For he is rational from that Universal Reason: wise, from a communication of that Divine Wisdom: good, from a participation of that Goodness. And he is just, by being a partaker of that Justice: and temperate, from that * Original of Temperance; and strong, by having that Supream Strength imparted to him. [a] He therefore may most truly be stiled Emperour, who hath fashioned his mind with Royal Virtues, to a likeness of the Celestial Empire. But, that person who is a stranger to these, and who has renounc't the King of this Universe; neither hath acknowledged the Celestial Parent of Souls; nor cloathed himself in a Garb befitting an Emperour; but hath * filled his mind with deformity and filthiness; and instead of Imperial Clemency, hath gotten the Rage of a Savage Beast; instead of an ingenuous disposition, the incurable poyson of improbity; in place of Prudence, Folly; instead of Reason and Wisedom, † a want of Reason and consideration, the foulest of all Vices: from which, as [b] from a bitter Root, most pernicious Sprouts do spring, namely, a sottish [c] and intemperate Life; Avarice; Murders; Fightings against God; Impieties: he [I say] who is addicted to all these Vices, though he may seem sometime to Govern by Tyrannick Violence, yet cannot deservedly and in reality be stiled an Emperour. For, how should he represent a likeness of the Monarchical power [of heaven,] who bears a thousand false and adulterate Resemblances of Dæmons, impreſt on his mind? How should he be a Prince and Lord over all, who hath procured for himself so infinite a number of Cruel and hard Masters? A servant to filthy pleasure; a servant to an excessive madness for women; a servant to money gotten by injustice; a servant of anger and rage; a servant of fear and dread; a servant of bloudy Dæmons; and [lastly] a slave to soul-destroying Spirits. Therefore, (Truth it self favouring us with its assent and Testimony,) this Emperour, dear to the Supream God, is the sole Person that can truly be styled an Emperour: who only is free; or rather, who really is Lord. Who is above the desire of money, and superiour to the Love of women: a Vanquisher of pleasures, even of them which Nature does allow of. Who is not overcome by anger and rage, but has those passions perfectly within his own power. He is really Emperour, and bears a Title [d] answerable to his practise: being [e] truely

CHAP. V.

* Exemplar, or, Pattern.

[a] Χρηματίσει ἄρ', He therefore will most truly be styled, &c. In the Fuketian Copy, the reading is, χρηματίσειεν ἄρ', He therefore may most, &c; which is far the better reading. Vales.

* Or, Hath bound up his mind in, &c.

† Or, The most filthy irrationality.

[b] Ὥσπερ ἀπὸ πικρᾶς ῥίζης πομάς, as from a bitter potion. The Translatour renders it, tanquam ex amarâ stirpe, as from a bitter Root. Which doubtless is more elegant. For πόμα and βλάστημα are not in the least suitable one to the other. Yet Eusebius seems to allude here, to the Cup of iniquity; concerning which 'tis said in the Psalmes, all the Sinners of the Earth shall drink out of it, &c. Vales.

[c] Καὶ σωφρ. I doubt not but Eusebius wrote καὶ ἄσωτος. For 'tis an elegant Paranomasia, εἰ ἀσωτος καὶ ἄσωτος, which the Latine tongue can't express. In the Fuketian Copy, these words καὶ σωφρ are wanting. Vales.

[d] Φερώνυμον τῇ πράξει. The two last words are wanting in the Fuk. Copy. Vales.

[e] Νικητὴς ἐτύμως. He alludes to Constantine's pronomen [forename.] For Constantine had taken to himself the Pronomen of Victor, as I have noted at The Books concerning Constantine's Life. Vales.

Victor;

Victor; for he has gotten the Victory over those Passions, which are wont to overpower and conquer the minds of men. Who is formed according to that Primitive * Idea of the supream Emperour; and in his mind, as in a glass, expresses those Rayes of Virtues darted from that Celestial Original. From which [Rayes] he is made temperate; Good; Just; Valiant; Pious; a Lover of God: [f] and, which is peculiar to him only, this our Emperour is really a Philosopher. For he is one that truly knows himself; and is sensible, that the supplies of every thing which is good, are bestowed on him from without, or rather from heaven. One who demonstrates the August Title of his Monarchical Power, by the Eximious Ornature of his Imperial Robe; and who is the [g] sole person, that is deservedly clothed with the Imperial Purple, which becomes him. This is the Emperour, who night and day invokes the Heavenly Father; who in his Prayers * implores his Assistance; who burns with a desire of the Celestial Kingdom. For, whereas he understands, that things present are in no wise † to be compared with God the supream King, (in regard they are mortal and frail, and, like a River, transient, and continually perishing;) therefore he desires the incorruptible and incorporeal Kingdom of God. That Kingdom he prayes that he may obtain; by a sublimity of thought, raising his mind above the Arch of Heaven, and being inflamed with an inexpressible desire of those Lights which shine there. In comparison with which Lights, he accounts the most valuable things of this life present, to be in nothing different from darkness. For he sees, that the dominion over men (in regard 'tis nothing else but a small and short administration of a mortal and temporary Life;) is not much better than the authority and power of Goatherds, Shepherds and Neatheards: yea rather, that 'tis more troublesome, or a Sovereignty over a [h] moroser sort of Cattel. And, as to the Acclamations of The Many, and the Voices of Flatterers, [i] he esteems them to be troublesome, rather than delightfull; by reason of * the solidity of his disposition, and the sincere discipline of his mind. Moreover, as often as he beholds the [k] dutifulness of His Subjects, his innumerable Forces, and those vast multitudes, as well of Horse as Foot, that are at his Beck and Command; he is not in the least stricken with admiration, nor does he swell with pride at his authority and power over them: but, turning his thoughts [l] upon himself, he * acknowledges, in himself also, the common nature of all men. He laughs at the Garment made of Cloth of Gold interwoven with a variety of flowers, at the Imperial Purple, and at the Diadem it self: when he beholds the multitude stricken with an admiration of these things, and, wholly like children, gazing on this glorious pomp, as on some Bug-bear. [m] But he himself is not in any wise so disturbed as they are; but does cloath his mind with the knowledge of God, as with a Garment Embroidered with Temperance, Justice, Piety, and the other Virtues; which is a dress that does really and truly become an Emperour. Besides all this, as for riches which are with so much earnestness desired by men; I mean Gold, and Silver, and whatever sorts of Stones are had in admiration; he understands them to be really Stones wholly unprofitable, and useless matter. Such therefore as they are in their own nature, such and so highly does he esteem them; as things that are not in the least conducive in order to the diverting of ills and calamities. For, of what prevalency are these things towards the removal of Diseases, or the avoiding of death? Nevertheless, although he knows these things accurately well, being instructed by the very use of them; [n] yet he is in no wise disturbed in his mind, at the decent Garb of his Subjects; but laughs at those persons, who by reason of their folly and simplicity † admire these things. Farther, he abstaines from surfeiting and drunkenness, and from exquisite dainties and delicate dishes; in regard they are the proper businesses of Gluttons: it being his Sentiment, that these things appertain to others, not to himself. For he is convinc't, that such debauches are extreamly hurtfull, and do cloud and darken the intellective faculty of the Soul. On account of all these reasons, the Emperour, instructed in the knowledge of Divine matters, and endued with a great mind, aspires after better things than those of this present life: calling upon the Celestial Father, and earnestly desiring His Kingdom; and performing all things with a singular piety; and Lastly, delivering the knowledge of the Supream God and Emperour, to all those Subject to his Empire, * whom, as the best of Masters, he has undertaken to instruct.

[f] Ὁ δὴ ᾧ μόνῳ φιλόσοφος. In the Fuketian Copy 'tis, ἀληθῶς δὴ ᾧ μόνῳ; which is truer. Vales.

[g] Some body will make an enquiry here, why Eusebius should say, that only Constantine was cloathed with the Imperial Purple. For, there were at that time four Cæsars, who wore the Purple. Indeed, Amm. Marcellinus informs us, that the Cæsars wore the Purple; in his Sixteenth Book, where he tells, how Constantius declared Julian, Cæsar. But it may be answered, that Eusebius does not say absolutely, that only Constantine was clothed with the Purple; but, that he alone deservedly wore the Purple. Vales.

* Or, Calls upon him.

† Or, Worthy of.

[h] Δυσκολωτέραν. I reade δυσκολωτέρων θρεμμάτων, a moroser sort of Cattel; which I wonder the Translatour saw not. For man is the moroseſt of all Creatures, and is governed with the greatest difficulty. Vales.

[i] Πρὸς ὄχλου πάθος. I write πάθεσι, as 'tis in the Fuketian Copy. The Translatour understood not this expression; which we may render into Latine word for word, in this manner: molestiæ potius deputat quàm voluptati, he places them to the account of trouble, rather than of pleasure. Vales.

* The Constancy of his Morals: so Valesius.

[k] Τὴν μὲν ὑπηκόων δορυφορείαν, the Guard of His Subjects. It must, I think, be written, δωροφορείαν. For, at this place Eusebius means two sorts of Subjects; namely, those in Arms, and the Provincials. Whereof the latter pay money and tributes to the Emperour; which Eusebius and Themistius do term δωροφορεῖν, with a soft word covering the bitterest thing of all. But, the former received money, as their Pay. Vales.

[l] Εἰς ἑαυτὸν. It must doubtless be written, εἰς ἀυτὸν, upon himself; which I admire the Translatour perceived not. Vales.

* Or, sees.

[m] Οὐδαμῶς αὐτὸς. The words are misplac't here, as it is plain to any one. I reade therefore, ἀδαμῶς δ' αὐτὸς τὰ ὅμοια πεπονθὼς, ὑπεξήμην τῇ θείᾳ, &c; But he himself, &c. In the Fuketian Copy, the reading is ill, δι' ὑπεξόμην τῇ θείᾳ, by reason of His knowledge of God. Vales.

[n] Ἀπαθεῖ λογισμῷ διατίθεται. 'Tis the same with what he has said above, ἀδαμῶς δ' αὐτὸς τὰ ὅμοια πεπονθὼς. Further, this whole passage is thus to be distinguished and explained; ὅμως δ' ἐν καίπερ ταῦτα εἰδὼς ὑπεξημένως αὐτῶν τῇ χρήσει, πρὸς εὐπρεπῆ μὲν ἀεχμάδων κόσμον ἀπαθεῖ λογισμῷ διατίθεται. That is, Nevertheless, although, &c. Which is the same as if he should say: he desires not the wealth or riches of His Subjects, nor does he envy them their comely garb and dress, as envious and covetous princes are wont to do. Such a one was Valentinianus the Elder, who hated all those that were rich and well-clothed, as Amm. Marcellinus relates. Constantine was not of that mind: for he both valued very little his own habit and dress; and also was not troubled, at his Subjects being gorgeously apparelled. I have therefore spent some words in explaining this passage; because it was both obscure, and also not understood by the Translatour. Vales.

† Or, Are astonished at, &c.

* Or, who are instructed by a good master as 'twere.

MOreover, God affording him, as an Earnest, some Pledges of a future Retribution, conferrs on him [a] Tricennalian Crowns, platted

CHAP. VI.

[a] Τειακονταετηρικὰς στεφάνους. He alludes to the Golden Crowns, which the Provincials were wont to present the Roman Emperours with, not only at their entrance upon the Empire, but in their Quinquennalia also, and Decennalia. Vales.

and

and made up of prosperous and happy Circles of years. And having now compleated three Cycles of ten years, he permits the whole Body of mankind to celebrate [b] publick, or rather universal Feasts. But, in the interim that Mortals rejoyce on earth, [crowned] with the flowers of the knowledge of God, it would not be absurd to imagine, that even the Quires in Heaven, incited by the Laws of Nature, do rejoyce likewise together with those that dwell on Earth. And ['tis probable,] that even the supream King himself, like an indulgent Father, is affected with Gladness, whilst He beholds Good Sons paying a due worship to God: and, that for this reason chiefly, He does honour the Prince and Authour of those * things, with many Circles of years. In so much that, he is not satisfied with giving him thirty years Reigne; [c] but extends it to the longest time, and perpetuates it to an immense Ævum. Now, entire * Ævum neither grows old at any time, nor does it dye: neither can the minds of mortals discern, either its Beginning or End. Nor does it suffer its own Center to be perceived, [d] nor that time which is termed its present, to be comprehended by † any one; [e] much less Time future, or Time past. For, this Latter is not, in regard 'tis [f] already gone. And the Time future is not yet come; wherefore, it is not. But, [that part of it] termed its Time present, flyeth away whilst we think or speak, yea sooner. Nor is it at all possible, that it should be apprehended as Time present: for we must of necessity, either expect things future, or contemplate things past. For [The present] slips away, and flies as quick as Thought. Thus therefore entire Ævum suffers not it Self to be subjected to the thoughts and accounts of men; but disdains to serve them. Nevertheless, it refuses not, to acknowledge [g] God its own King and Lord; and it carries Him sitting on its Back, priding it self in all those [h] Gayeties, [which it hath received] from Him. But God sitting above, and driving it on, has not bound it fast with a Golden chain, according to the fiction of the Poet; but, curbing and holding it in with the cords of an unspeakable wisdom, as 'twere with some Reins; with all imaginable Harmony he has constituted in it, Months and Times, Seasons and Years, and the interchangeable distances of Nights and Days; and has circumscribed it with various Limits and Measures. For, Ævum, of its own nature, is [i] direct or straight, and * reaches to an immensity; and has taken the name of Ævum, [k] as 'twere ἀεὶ ὤν [that is, always existing;] and is it self like its own parts; or rather, being void both of parts and distance, doth increase, being prolonged into † rectitude only. But God hath divided it by middle || Segments, and, like a right line stretch't into Longitude, hath severed it by points, and hath included in it a vast multitude.

[b] Παννήμους δὲ μᾶλλον. Any one may see, that it should be written thus, πανδήμους, μᾶλλον δὲ κοσμικὰς ἑορτάς. For Eusebius says, that these Feasts of The Tricennalia were celebrated, not onely by a numerous confluence of the people, but also by the common joy of the whole world. For some Feasts are publick, others private. Some are peculiar to Cities, others to a whole Province. Some are Feasts of the whole Roman world; as the Calends of January, the Birth day of the Emperours, their Quinquennalia, and the like. Indeed, in the Fuketian Copy I found it written as I had conjectured. Valesius.

* Or, Blessings.

[c] Μένειν δὲ αὐτῷ. This place, in my judgment, is to be restored thus: ὡς μὴ ἀπαρκεῖν τρεῖς ἐν δεκάσι πρὸς τὴν βασιλείαν νέμειν, αὐτὴν δὲ ὅπῃ μήκιστον καὶ εἰς μακρὸν προπέμπειν αἰῶνα; In so much that, he is not satisfied, &c. The mistake arose from the word νέμειν, which the Transcribers changed into μένειν, by an easie mistake. But, if any one has a mind to retain μένειν, then it is to be written προπέμπειν. Valesius.

[d] Οὐδὲ τὸ νῦν αὐτῷ λεγόμενον. Questionless it is to be written, οὐδὲ τὸ νῦν αὖτε λεγόμενον ἐφιεὶς τοῖς ἐθέλουσι δεχέσθαι. So the Translatour read also, and so we have rendred it. Eusebius himself confirms this emendation; for soon after this, he writes thus concerning the present time, τὸ δὲ γε νῦν αὖτε λεγόμενον, ἅμα νόημα, &c; But [that part of it] termed its time present, &c.

[e] Μήποτε τὸ μέλλον. The Translatour renders it, nedùm futurum Tempus aut præteritum; much less Time future, or Time past. Whence 'tis apparent, that he read μήποτιγε τὸ μέλλον, excellently well. In the Fuketian Copy 'tis, μή πως τὸ μέλλον. Valesius.

[f] Ὁ δὲ παρῆλθε. I write, ἤδη δὲ παρῆλθε, and have rendred it accordingly. For he speaks concerning the time past. A little after I read, οὐκ ἔστι δὲ ὅλως ὅπως λαβεῖν, Nor is it at all possible, &c. Valesius.

[g] Τὸν δ' αὖτε βασιλέα. In my judgment it should be, θεὸν δ' αὖτε βασιλέα; in which manner also the Translatour read; and we have rendred it accordingly. Eusebius alludes to a passage of Saint Paul the Apostle, who calls God βασιλέα τῶν αἰώνων, the King of Ages. Valesius.

[h] Τοῖς ἐξ αὖτε χαλλωπίσμασι. He means the days, months, and years; and the vicissitudes of seasons, &c; wherewith God hath adorned Ævum. Valesius.

[i] Εὐθυγωνὴς ὤν. I read εὐθυτενής. Valesius.

* Is extended, or, prolonged.

[k] Ὥσπερ ἀεὶ ὤν. Proclus (Book 4. on Plato's Timæus pag. 241;) produces the same Etymologie of αἰὼν; at which place he discourses at large concerning Ævum, according to the Opinion of the Platonists. See the same Authour, in chap. 53, and 54, of his Platonick Institutions. But Eusebius does partly follow Plato's Opinion, and partly recedes from it. For, whereas he says, that Ævum does neither grow old, nor dye; that 'tis uniform, and always like it self; that it wants parts, and distinction or difference; in that he agrees with Plato. But, when he affirms, that it goes on and increases; when he makes past, present, and future time, to be Species or, Kindes of it; in this he disagrees, both from Plato, and from himself. For, what ever proceeds on and increases, must of necessity have parts. In Plato, Ævum is nothing else but Eternity. For Plato makes Ævum immoveable; according to the likeness whereof, he affirms, that God created Time, which he gives this definition of, a moveable Image of an immoveable Ævum, proceeding on in number and order; as it occurs in his Timæus. Chalcidius, on Plato's Timæus, is right: temporis, says he, proprium progredi; ævi propria mansio, &c: 'Tis the property of Time to go forward: continuance is the property of Ævum, and a perseverance in being always the same. Also, there are parts of time, namely days, nights, and years: Ævum has no parts. Likewise, the Species of Time are several, past, present, future: the substance of Ævum is uniform, in the sole and proper Present. But Eusebius took Ævum for Sæculum, or rather, for the whole Mass and Collection of Times, as I may so say. For his words are, ὁ σύμπας αἰών. 'Tis certain, in the Sacred Scriptures, αἰὼν and αἰῶνες are taken for time. For Time is taken two ways. The one is Particular, which is attributed to things single or particular. The other general, which is not more agreeable to this thing, than to that. And This the Ancients termed Ævum, as Censorinus informs us in his Book de Die Natali, chap. 16. Where he defines Ævum in this manner; tempus unum & maximum, &c; one and the greatest Time, immense, without beginning, without end, which always was in the same manner, and always will be, nor does it belong more to any one man, than to another. Then he adds, that this Ævum is divided into three times, past, present, and future. In which he plainly agrees with our Eusebius. The same is likewise asserted by Marius Victorinus on Cicero's Books de Inventione Rhetoric. Chap. 75. But Gregorie Nazianzene, Orat. 35 and 42, takes Ævum for Eternity; where see what Psellus and Elias Cretensis have noted. Valesius.

† Or, Those that are desirous.

|| Pieces, or, Shreds.

* See note (k.) in this chapter.

† A straight, or right line.

And, whereas it was one, and exactly like an Unite; He hath bound it with a variety of numbers; and, from its being without Form, hath made in it * manifold and various Forms. For first of all, He framed in it matter void of Form, as some substance fit to receive all Forms. In the second place, He created Quality in matter, by the power of the number Two; making that beautifull, which before was void of all comelineſs. Afterwards, by [the help of] the number Three, He framed a Body, [l] compounded of Matter and Form, consisting of three Dimensions, namely, Latitude, Longitude, and Profundity. Then, from the number Two doubled, he devised † the Quaternion of the Elements; Earth; Water; Air; Fire; which he produced as some everlasting

* Or, A manifold variety of forms.

[l] Σύνθετον ἐξ ὕλης ἑποίν. It should, I think, be written, σύνθετον ἐξ ὕλης ἀποίης, καὶ εἴδους σῶμα. In the Fuketian Copy, the word ἑποίν is wanting; excellently well. Valesius.

† Or, The Elements which are four in number.

everlasting Fountains, in order to the * supply of this Universe. Farther, the number Four begets the number Ten. For, One; Two; Three; Four, make up the number Ten. The number Three † multiplied by the number Ten, hath || produced the space of a month. And a month by twelve Circuits or Turns, finishes the Course of the Sun. Hence the Circles of Years, and the changes of Seasons, have delineated and expreſt Ævum, which before was void both of Form and shape, as 'twere in a variety of Paint [made up] of many flowers; in order to the ease and delight of those, who therein * run over the Course of Life. For, as those persons (who in hope of winning Prizes, perform the Courses in a Race,) have the distances set out to them, by Stadia or determinate quantities of Ground: and as they who travel long journeys, find the publick Road † beset as 'twere, with some Mansions and Stages; least any person, by having his expectation drawn out to an immense length, should be quite tired, and abate of his alacrity and vigour of mind: after the very same manner also, God the Supream Emperour, having confined the whole Mass of Time within the Lines of Wisedom, leads and manages it; and like a Charioteer, governs it variously, according as it seems good to Himself. The same Moderatour of the Universe, having bedeck't Ævum, which before was void of figure, with beautifull colours and fresh flowers; has adorned the day with Brightness and the Rayes of the Sun: but, over the night he hath spread a || darker colour, and has made the Lights of the Stars to glister therein, like some Bits or Spangles of Gold. And having light up the bright Rayes of the Day-Star, and the various Splendour of the Moon, and the most resplendent Companies of the Stars; he has Crowned the whole Heaven, as 'twere some large Embroidered * Vesture, with the manifold Beauties of Colours. Also, when he had extended the Air from a vast height to a great depth, and by its help had [m] cooled the length and breadth of the whole world; he commanded it to be grac't with all sorts of Birds; having opened this vast Sea as 'twere, wherein all those [Creatures] which pass thorow the Air, as well the [n] invisible as visible, might swim. Lastly, having poyz'd the Earth in the middle like the Center, he encompassed it with the Ocean; [o] priding it self in that its green-coloured Mantle. And after he had made This the Residence, Nurse, and Mother of all Creatures that are therein; and had moystened it partly with showers, and partly with waters issuing from Springs; He commanded it to flourish and grow green with all sorts of Plants and beautifull flowers, in order to the delight and pleasure of humane Life. And having therein formed a most excellent and honourable Creature, dear to the Divinity it self, according to His own Image; namely * Man, endued with a mind and knowledge, and the Offspring of Reason and Wisedom; on him He conferred the Government and Empire over all the other Creatures, which creep upon the Earth and have their sustenance from it. For, of all the Creatures that are on the Earth, Man was the deareſt to God; and like an indulgent Father He permitted, that all sorts of irrational Creatures should pay their Service and Obedience to Him. ['Twas] man, for whose sake He made the Sea navigable, and Crowned the Earth with all manner of Plants. On him He bestowed knowing and intellective faculties and powers, in order to his being rendred capable of all manner of Learning and Sciences. Into his hands He hath delivered, as well those Creatures which swim in the Depths, as the fowls which fly in the Air. To him He hath laid open the knowledge and contemplation of things Celestial; and hath discovered [to him] the Courses of the Sun, and changes of the Moon, and the Circuits of the Planets and fixed Stars. [Lastly,] 'twas man alone, of all the Creatures that are on the Earth, to whom He gave order, that he should acknowledge the Celestial Father, and with Hymns should laud and praise the Supream Emperour of entire Ævum. Besides all these things, that Great Framer of the World, hath begirt immutable Ævum with four changes of the year; the Winter-season He has bounded with the Spring: [p] but the Spring, which is the beginning of the Seasons of the year, He has weighed as 'twere in an equal Ballance. Then, when He had Crowned Universal Ævum with the manifold fruits of the Spring, [q] He delivered it to the parching heat of the Summer. After this, having allowed a cessation from Labour as 'twere, He hath refresht it with the interval of Autumn. Lastly, when he has washt * it (being as 'twere some Royal Steed,) in the moyst Falls of Winter showers, and has rendred it Slick and Gay by the waters which flow from † above, and has sufficiently fatned it with the continual waterings of the Rain; He again places it at the fore-gates of the Spring. When therefore the Supream Emperour, had in this manner bound fast His own Ævum, within the Circle of the whole year, by such Reins of Divine wisedom as these; He delivered it to be managed by a [r] Greater Governour, namely, His own only-begotten Word; to whom, as being the common preserver of all things, He has committed the Reins of this Universe. But He, having

* Χορηγίαν; Valesius renders it, utilitatem, profit, or, service.

† Or, Joyned with.

|| Or, Found out the nature of, &c.

* Or, Ride.

† Limited, or circumscribed.

|| Or, Blacker.

* Veil, or Hood.

[m] Ψυχώσας δυνάμει. This whole passage is, in my judgement, to be read in this manner; μήκιστε καὶ πλάτη τῦ τότε ψυχώσας δυνάμει, and by its help or power had cooled, &c. In which manner the Translatour read. And so I found it written in the Fuk. Copy. Vales.

[n] He seems to mean the Aerial Dæmons, concerning whom he hath spoken above, in the beginning of this Oration. Farther, we may understand here as well the Good Dæmons, as the bad. For the good Spirits also, whom we term Angels, pass thorow the air; as 'twere some Embassadours and Interpreters, carrying our desires to God, and bringing to us answers, and favours from God. Of which, even the ancient Philosophers were not ignorant. But, the Translatour thought, that at this place Eusebius spake of fishes. Concerning the Aerial Dæmons, S[t] Austin (Epist. 49.) speaks thus. Quanto pernitiosius est sacrificare Dæmoniis, &c; How much more destructive is it to sacrifice to Dæmons, that is, to an ill Spiritual Creature, which dwelling in this neareſt and dark heaven, as in its Aerial prison, is predestinated to Eternal punishment. ——— Vales.

[o] Κυανῷ χρώματι καλλωπιζομένην. I write καλλωπιζομένην. He speaks elegantly, in saying that the Earth is clothed with the Ocean, as with a green Mantle. So David, Psalm 104. 6. Thou coveredst it with the Deep as with a Garment: namely the Earth, as Theodoret explains it, and S[t] Jerom on Haggai Chap. 1. Farther, those words [σμαραγεῖ δέ τε πόντος ἐπ' αὐτῷ] must be blotted out, as being superfluous, and wholly disagreeable to this place; wherefore we have omitted them in our Version. They are a piece of a Verse of Homer's, out of his Second Iliad. In the Fuketian Copy the reading is, σμαραγεῖ τε πόντος ἐπ' αὐτῇ τῇ τῆς θεοδόλης κυανῷ χρώματι καλλωπιζομένη. Vales.

[p] Ἔαρος δ' ἐνιαυσίαν ὥρᾶν ἀρχήν. I had rather write, ἦρ δέ, &c; and have rendred it accordingly. Vales.

[q] Τοῦτον μεθεμένδωκεν. Something seems to be wanting here, which we may make up in this manner; θέρους ἀκμῇ τοῦτο ἀμαθῶς μεθεμένδωκεν. But, upon a more diligent enquiry into the thing, I am of opinion, that nothing is wanting here. I reade therefore, θέρους ἀκμῇ τοῦτον παραμένδωκεν, He delivered it, &c; understand τὸ αἰῶνα, Ævum: nor did the Translatour reade otherwise. In the Fuketian Copy the reading is, θέρους ἀκοῇ τοῦτον μεταπαραμένδωκεν. Vales.

* That is, Ævum; as appears from the following period.

† Or, Himself.

[r] He terms the Son greater, not than the Father Himself; but means Him to be greater than all others. And perhaps any body would guess, that Eusebius had written, ὑπὸ μείονι, by a Less. Vales.

having

*having received an Inheritance as 'twere, from a most excellent Father; and having bound together all things, which are contained as well in the inner, as more outward Compass of Heaven, in one harmonious consent; [r] proceeds straight forward: and with all imaginable equity makes provision of those things that are of use to his rational Flocks on earth. And having appointed a certain and fixt space of living to Mortals, He has given all men leave, that even in this Life they should be exercised in the * preludes of a better and an eternal life. For He hath taught, that after the Term of this present Age, there is a Divine and happy Life; treasur'd up and reserved for them, who in the hopes of Celestial enjoyments, have undergone the Combat of this Life. And, that there shall be a Translation and Removal of those, who have spent their Lives soberly, modestly, and piously, from hence to a better allotment: but, for them, who shall have been detected of impieties in this Life, [He has given notice,] that there is an agreeable place provided. After this, (as 'tis wont to be in the distributions of Prizes and Rewards in the Games,) having with a loud voice pronounced various Crowns [to be due] to the Victors, He Crowneth [t] different persons with the different rewards of their Virtues. But, for a Good Emperour adorned with piety, he declares far greater and more valuable Rewards of his Conflicts to be provided. Some Beginnings whereof he permits to be celebrated even here, namely, a Festivity compoſed of perfect numbers; [u] of Tens trebled, and of Threes ten times repeated. Whereof the first * Ternary, is the Off-spring of an Unite: an Unite is the Mother of Numbers, and does preside over all Months, Seasons, and Years; and also, over all Circles of Times. Moreover, it may deservedly be styled the Beginning, the Foundation, and the Element of all Multitude; being termed μονὰς, from μένειν, to stay or continue. For, whereas all Multitude is lessened and increased, according to the diminution or addition of Numbers; an Unite alone has stability and firmness, as its allotment; being separated from all Multitude, and from those Numbers produc't from it self. And therefore it bears a lively Resemblance of that Indivisible † Essence, which is severed from all others; by the power and participation whereof, the nature of all things doth subsist. For, an Unite is the Framer of every Number; in as much as every Multitude does consist of a composition and addition of Unites. Nor is it possible, without an Unite, to have a conception in our thoughts of the substance of Numbers. But, an Unite it self, subsists without a Multitude; being separated at the greatest distance from, and far better than all Numbers; making and constituting all things; but, it self receiving an increase from none. Nearly related hereto is the* Ternarie, which in like manner can neither be cut in sunder, nor divided; and is the first of Numbers that are made up of Even and Odd. For the even number Two, having an Unite added to it, hath produced the Ternarie, which is the first of odd Numbers. Moreover, the Ternarie *first shewed [Men] Justice, by teaching them Equality: for it has a Beginning, Middle, and End, all equal. And these things give a representation of the Mystick, most Holy, and Royal Trinity: which though it consists in a nature that is void of Beginning and * Generation, yet containes in it Self the Seeds, and Reasons, and Causes of the Substance of all things which have Generation. And the power of the* Ternarie may deservedly be thought the Beginning of all things. But the number Ten, which containes the End or Term of all numbers, Stops and Bounds all things [proceeding] as far as it self: and 'tis with good reason styled full, and every way perfect: in regard it comprehends all the Species, and all the measures, of all Numbers, † Ratio's, Concords, and Harmonies. 'Tis certain, Unites being by composition increased, are terminated by the || Denarie: and having the Decade allotted to them, as their mother, [w] and fixt Boundary; as 'twere in the Cirque they run round this * Meta. Then, having performed a second Circuit, and again a third, and a fourth, and so on as far as Ten; of ten Tens they make up the Hundredth Number. After this they return to the first † Carceres. From whence they begin again, and proceed on to Ten; and having run round the Hundredth Number Ten times, going back again, they perform long Courses round the same Metæ; returning by a Circuit from themselves into themselves. For, of the number Ten, an Unite is the tenth part; and ten Unites make up one Denarie. But, a Denarie or Decade is the Limit, the [x] Meta, and the fixt and stated Boundary of Unites: the Meta *of the infinity of Numbers; but, * the End, that is, the perfection of Unites. Moreover, the* Ternarie joyned together with the Denarie, and having performed the third period of ten Circuits, produces that most natural Number, the Number Thirty. For, that which in Unites is the Ternarie, the same in Denaries is the Tricenarie or Thirtieth Number. And this is the firm and certain Limit of that great Luminary, which is the second from the Sun. For the Course of the Moon, from one conjunction with the Sun to the next, compleats the Circle of a Month: after which, She again receives a Beginning of Birth as 'twere, and does again begin new Light, and new Days: [y] being grac't with thirty Unites; honoured with three Decades; and beautified

[r] Εὐθείᾳ πρεαίνει. In the Fuketian Copy 'tis truer written, εὐδίᾳ; and after the verb πρεαίνει a middle distinction is placed. Vales.

* Or, Prefaces.

† Or, Substance.

[t] Ἄλλοις ἐφ' ἑτέροις. I doubt not but Eusebius wrote ἄλλως μὲν ἑτέροις ἀρετῶν βραβείοις στεφανοῖ, He crowneth different, &c: which writing the following words do manifestly confirm. In the Fuketian Copy 'tis written, ἄλλως ἐφ' ἑτέροις. Vales.

[u] Μονάδων δὲ τριπλασίονων. The first word is wanting in the Fuketian Copy; and the want of it is no fault, if I mistake not. But there is also another fault here. Wherefore this whole place is, in my opinion, thus to be corrected; ἐορτὴν ἤδη πανηγυρίζειν ἀριθμῶν ἐορτὴν τελείων ἐξ ἀριθμοῦ συγκειμένην. Δεκάδων μὲν τριπλασίονων, τριάδων δὲ δεκαπλασίονων, He permits to be celebrated, &c. Than which amendment there is nothing more certain. For the Festivity of the Tricennalia, concerning which Eusebius treats, consists of perfect numbers; to wit, Tens trebled, and Threes ten times repeated. Eusebius's following words, concerning The Denary, or Number Ten, do plainly confirm our Emendation. Vales.

* Or, Number Three.

[w] Πηξάμενον τέλος τερμόνα. It must, I think, be written, καὶ πηξάμενον, &c, and fixt Boundarie. So he calls the number Ten, because 'tis the Term and Meta of Numbers. But, by fetching an Elegant Metaphor from the Cirque, he says that Unites do run round the number Ten, as 'twere the Meta. Wherefore, ὥσπερ ἐν τῷ δρόμῳ was to have been translated tanquam in Circo, as 'twere in the Cirque. Hence 'tis, that a little after this, he names the Carceres also, where his words are, ἐπὶ τὸν πρώτον ἀνατρέχουσιν ἀφετηρίαν, they return or run back to the first Carceres. Vales.

* Goal, or, Limit.

† Place of setting out.

[x] Καμπὴν τελειωτικὸν. The words must, I think, be placed otherwise, and read thus, καμπὴν, ὅρον καὶ τελειωτικὸν, the Meta, and the fixt and stated Boundarie. 'Tis the same with what he says hereafter, ὅρον καὶ πάγιον, the firm and certain Limit. In the Fuketian Copy the reading is, ὅρον καὶ καμπήν. Vales.

* Or, The Limit and the End of Unites.

|| Or, Number Ten.

[y] Τριάκοντα μὲν κοσμηθεῖσα

σα μονὰς. tified with ten Ternaries. With the very ſame Doubtleſs [Graces] is the Empire of Our Victor Au-it muſt be guſtus, and Lord of the made μονάσι, unites; which I whole world, [z] adorned, by admire the Tranſlatour per- the Beſtower of all things ceived not, in regard the fol- that are good; and enters lowing words do plainly ſhew upon a beginning of new
it. Farther, that the Ancients bleſſings: having hitherto were wont to meaſure the Lunar accompliſhed the Tricenna-Moneth by thirty dayes, Euſebius lian Feſtivities only; but has informed us above in this O- now from hence forward en- ration; as alſo Geminus in his tring upon longer intervals of Iſagoge. The Fuketian Copy does Times; and * eſpouſing the hopes likewiſe confirm our Emendation. * Or, Promiſing. of future Bleſſings, in the Celeſtial King- Valeſ. dom. Where not one only
[z] Πρὸς τῶ πάντων ἀγαθῶν δοτῆρος τετιμημένῳ. It muſt be made τετιμηκότα, as may be plainly gathered from the following and preceding words. For it follows, ἐπληρώσατο, ἐφαπτόμενα, and προμηνύματα. And the foregoing words are, τὰ τῆς κοσμοκρατορικῆς ἀρχῆς. Which expreſſion ſeems to me rough and unpleaſant: and I ſhould chooſe barely to ſay, ἡ κοσμοκρατορικὴ ἀρχὴ τετιμημένη, &c. And this Emendation is likewiſe confirmed, by the Fuketian Copy. Valeſ.

[a] Ἡλίᾳ κρείττονα ἐπαλομένων. Perhaps it ſhould be ἐπαγομένων. So indeed I found it written in the Fuketian Copy. Valeſ.

[b] Ἐν ἀγαθῶν ἀκηράτοις χάλλεσιν. The Fuketian Copy has ἀκεράτοις, pure: perhaps Euſebius had written ἀοράτοις, inviſible. Valeſ.

Sun, but troops of innumerable Lights daunce about the Supream Emperour: every one of which [a] is far more Glorious than the Sun it ſelf; and do ſhine and gliſter, with the ſplendour of thoſe Rayes ſhot from that Eternal Fountaine [of Light.] Where [there is] a life of † Or, Soul. the † mind, in the [b] incorruptible Beauties of Goods: where [there is] a life, void of all grief and trouble: where [there is] an enjoyment of temperate and moſt holy pleaſure: Time without Time; a long and endleſs Ævum, enlarged to Spaces bounded by no Term: not any more [diſtinguiſhed] by the intervals of dayes and months; nor meaſured by the Circles of Years, and the periods of Seaſons and Times: but ſufficient for one life continued to an immenſity. Which is not enlightned by the Sun, nor illuſtrated by the multitude of the Stars, or * Splendour of the Moon: but has that Luminary it ſelf, God the Word, the only-begotten Son of the Supream Emperour. On which account, the Divine Diſcourſes of Myſtick Theology, do declare Him to be that Sun of Righteouſneſs, and a Light which far tranſcends all Lights. We do firmly believe, that the very ſame perſon does illuſtrate thoſe moſt bleſſed Powers, with the Rayes of Juſtice, and the beams of Wiſedom: and, that He does take the Souls of men, adorned with true Piety, not into the Circumference of Heaven, but into His own Boſom; and, that he does really confirm and fulfill His own promiſes. But the eye of Mortals hath not ſeen, nor hath any ear heard; neither can a mind cloathed with fleſh, be able to diſcern and look into thoſe things, which are prepared for them who have been adorned with Piety: as likewiſe for You alſo, Moſt Religious Emperour! To whom alone, of all perſons that ever were, God Himſelf the Supream Emperour of this Univerſe, has granted this, that You ſhould cleanſe and reform the Life of men. To whom alſo He hath ſhown His own Salutary Sign; by the power whereof having conquered Death, He [c] celebrated a Triumph over His Enemies. Which Trophy of Victory, and Amulet of Dæmons, when You had oppoſed againſt the Images of Errour; You [d] gained the Victory over all impious Enemies and Barbarians, as alſo over the Dæmons themſelves, who are another ſort of Barbarians.

* Or, Rayes.

[c] Ἧσειρε θρίαμβον, raiſed a Triumph.

He had better have ſaid, ἦγε, Lead, or celebrated. For 'tis not ſaid, ἐγείρειν θρίαμβον, but ἄγειν. Indeed, ἐγείρειν may properly be ſaid concerning a Trophy. Valeſ.

[d] Ἧσεν τὰ νίκη. Chriſtophorſon ſeems to have read, ἦρατο νίκας; and thought that theſe words were ſpoken concerning Chriſt. But, after I had lookt more narrowly into the thing, I perceived, that theſe words are ſpoken in the Second Perſon. For Euſebius ſpeaks to the Emperour himſelf. 'Tis certain, thoſe words καὶ πάντων ἀθέων πολεμίων τε καὶ βαρβάρων, over all impious Enemies and Barbarians, do evince that this is ſpoken concerning the Emperour. Valeſ.

CHAP. VII.

FOR, Whereas there are in us two * Subſtances conjoyned, namely, Soul and Body; whereof the Latter is expoſed to view, but the other remaines inviſible: againſt both theſe, two ſorts of Enemies and Barbarians, the one covertly, the other openly, have ſet themſelves in array. And, the one of them oppoſes Bodies againſt Bodies: but the other aſſaults man's naked Soul it ſelf, with all ſorts of incorporeal Engines. Farther, thoſe viſible Barbarians, like ſome ſavage [a] Nomades, in nothing different from wild-beaſts, make an attack upon the meek and gentle Flocks of Men; ruine and depopulate Countries; enſlave Cities; [ruſh] out of the Deſert, like fierce and furious Wolves, and fall upon the inhabitants of Cities; after which they deſtroy as many as they can. But the inviſible Enemies, I mean the Soul-deſtroying Dæmons, who are far more fierce and cruel than all Barbarians; flye about the Regions of this Air, and by the Engines of miſchievous Polytheiſme, had reduced all mankind under their power: in ſo much that, the true God was not by them any longer look't upon as God; but they wandred up and down in manifold errour, without any worſhip of the Deity. For, having procured for themſelves Gods from I know not whence, who have not any Being or Exiſtence in any place whatever; they wholly neglected and undervalued Him who is the only, and the true God, as if He were not. Hence it was, that the Generation of Bodies was by them reputed and worſhipt as a God; as alſo, a contrary Deity hereto, to wit, the deſtruction and diſſolution of Bodies. And the former of theſe Gods, in regard He was the Authour of Generation, was honoured with the Rites of Venus. But the Latter, becauſe He abounded with Riches, and in Strength excelled Mankind, was named Pluto and * Orcus. For, whereas the Men of that Age, acknowledged no other life, ſave that which takes its beginning from Generation; therefore they aſſerted the Cauſe and Origine of that Life to be a God. And, whereas they believed Men not to exiſt any more, after death; they declared Death to be the Vanquiſher of all, and a Great God. Then, concluding, that on account of that diſſolution by death, they were in no wiſe accountable hereafter for what was performed here; they reſolved upon living ſuch a life, as in effect was no life; perpetrating ſuch facts, as deſerved to be puniſhed with ten thouſand deaths. For, they had not their minds taken up, with the thoughts of God; they expected not

* Or, Death.

[a] Νομάδες πῶς. The Tranſlatour has done ill in rendring it, Paſtores, Shepherds. I would rather retain the Greek word, or elſe render it Vagos, Wanderers. For ſo the Latines termed thoſe Barbarians, who ſitting on their Horſes, or in Waggons, were carried this way and that way, without any Houſe or ſettled habitation. Such perſons as theſe, becauſe, in order to their getting food, they would range about to find places abounding with paſture; were termed νομάδες. A little after, in the Fuketian Copy the reading is, λυμβρόμενοι ὅσους ἂν δύνωνται, deſtroying as many as they can. Valeſ.

not the Tribunals of the Divine judgment; nor call'd to remembrance the * Nature of their own Souls: but acknowledging a subjection to one Cruel Patron, Death; and fully perswading themselves, that [b] the destruction of bodies effected by it, was the dissolution [and annihilation] of the whole man; they declared Death to be a great and a rich God; and for that reason gave him the name of Pluto or Dis. Death therefore was to them a God; and not he alone; but whatever else they accounted valuable in comparison of Death; namely, those things which were conducive, in order to the rendring their Lives pleasant and delicate. For, the pleasure of the † Body was by them accounted a God; nourishment was a God; the growth of those things [that produce nutriment,] a God; the fruit of Trees, a God; Drunkenness and Luxury, a God; the desire of || things Carnal, a God; the Pleasure of those things, a God. Hence [came] the Mysteries of Ceres and Proserpina; hence the Ravishment of the Virgin [Proserpina] by Pluto, and Her Restoration again. Hence Bacchus's Initiations and Ceremonies; and Hercules vanquished by drunkenness, as by a more powerfull God. Hence the adulterous Rites of Cupid and Venus. Hence Jupiter himself enraged with a Lust after women, and in Love with Ganymede: hence the fictions of Lascivious Fables, concerning Gods addicted to pleasure, Wantonness, and Luxury. With such therefore, and so many Darts of * impious superstition as these, the Cruel Barbarians, and profest Enemies to the Supream King, gaul'd the Inhabitants of the Earth; and at length reduc'd the whole Body of mankind to a Subjection to themselves; in so much that, Monuments of impiety were erected by them, in all parts of the earth; and Temples and Shrines of false Divinity, built in every Corner. Moreover, [c] those persons then thought to be in power, were so miserably enslaved to Errour, that they appeased their Gods, with the slaughters of their own Country-men and Relations; and sharpened their Swords against the defenders of Truth; and [commenc't] an implacable War, and lifted up impious hands, not against forreigne and barbarous Enemies; but against their Domesticks and Friends, and against their Brethren, Kinsmen and dearest Relations; who by a purity of Life and Sobriety, and with purposes of true Piety, had resolved to pay a worship and observance to the Deity. After this manner, these men, seized with a distraction of mind, sacrificed persons consecrated to the Supream King, to their own Dæmons. But They, in regard they were couragious Witnesses of true Piety, and had been accustomed to prefer a glorious death in defence of truth, before life it self; did not in the least value so severe a Tyranny: but rather, as it became the Souldiers of God, being fortified with the * Arms of Patience, they despised and laught at every sort of death; namely Fire, Sword, and the † piercings of Nails; the wild Beasts; the depths of the Sea; the cutting off, and afterwards searing of Limbs; digging out of Eyes; mutilations of the whole Body; and lastly, Famine, the Mines, and Bonds. All which, by reason of that Love and ardency of Affection they bore to their own King, they accounted sweeter than all the pleasures and enjoyments [of this life.] The minds likewise of the tenderer Sex were Valiant and Stout, endued with a Courage nothing inferiour to that of men; some of whom underwent the very same Combats with men, and obtained equal rewards of Valour. Others, when drag'd away to be ravished, sooner resigned their Lives to Death, [d] than their Bodies to ravishment. And vast other numbers of them, not enduring so much as to hear the Menaces of Ravishment, wherewith they were threatned by the Presidents of Provinces; with a valiant mind endured all sorts of Tortures, and [the Execution of] every Capital Sentence. In this manner the Vauntguard of the Supream Emperour, with an undaunted Courage of mind maintained the Fight, against their Army who paid a worship to many Gods. But the [Dæmons,] who are the adversaries of God, and enemies to the salvation of men; demonstrating more of Cruelty than any the most savage Barbarian, rejoyced in such Libations of humane bloud. And their Assistants and Ministers, quaff't to them such Cups as these, filled with blood unjustly shed; providing for them this direfull * and impious Banquet, to the ruine and destruction of humane kind. Affairs being in this posture; what ought to have been done by God, the King of those that were oppresst? Ought He to be careless of the safety of his dearest [Dependents,] and to neglect his own servants, when in this bloudy manner assaulted? [f] Doubtless, He can never be termed a prudent Pilot, who shall suffer his Vessel, together with the men on Board, to be sunk; without contributing any thing of his own assistance, in order to the preservation of the Ships-company. Nor, can that person be styled a [g] wary and provident General, who shall render up his Allies to the Enemy, unreveng'd and undefended. Neither will a good Shepherd be unconcerned for, and [h] careless of a Sheep straying from the rest of his flock: but will rather leave all the other, which are safe and in good condition; and will most readily suffer any thing whatever, on account of preserving that Sheep which has strayed; being ready, should there be a necessity, to encounter even with fierce and ra-

* Or, Substance.

[b] Καὶ ἡλῶ ἐκ τόπων ἧς σωμάτων φθορέν. At my peril write ἐκ τότε, by it; understand death. And so the reading is in the Fuketian Copy. A little before, the Genevamen had left out a word; which, from the Fuketian Copy, I have supplied in this manner, ἀξια δρώντες δίγον. Vales.

† Or, Flesh.

|| Or, Bodies.

* Or, God-opposing Errour.

[c] Οἱ γῶν τότε κρατεῖν νομιζόμενοι. By these words Eusebius either means the Emperours themselves, who had persecuted the Christian Religion; or else all the Heathens. For these prevail'd at that time, before the Christian Religion had obtained throughout the whole world. As therefore the Christian Religion was afterwards termed, ἡ κρατήσασα δόξα, and the Christians, οἱ κρατήσαντες; (as I have noted at the Books of Eusebius's Eccles. Histor.) so the Gentiles, as long as their superstition flourish't, are rightly termed οἱ κρατήσαντες. Yet below, at the beginning of the ninth Chapter, he has used τοῖς τότε κρατοῦσι to signifie the Emperours. Vales.

* Or, Virtue.

† See Pag. 150, note [*]

[d] Ἡ τὸ σῶμα φθορᾶς ἀγαπήσασι. In the eighth Book of his Eccles. History, chap. 14, whence this passage is taken almost word for word; the reading is truer, thus, ἢ τὸ σῶμα τῇ φθορᾷ παραδῶσαι, than expose their bodies to be defiled. Vales.

[e] Καὶ ἐυσεβῆ παρασκευάσαν. and pious banquet. I reade ἀσεβῆ, impious, with the Translatour; in the Fuketian Copy, 'tis written, δυσεβῆ. Vales.

[f] Οὔτε κυβερνήτης ἄν ποτ' ἂν λεχθείη. I should chooſe to write, ἄτε κυβερνήτης ὢν ποτ' ἂν, &c; Doubtless, He can never, &c. So in the following period, I think it should be mended, ἄτε στρατηγὸς ὢν ποτ' ἂν ψύχοιτο ἀφειδὴς, ὡς, &c; nor can that person, &c; where ὢν is put for ἐκεῖνον. Vales.

[g] Γένοιτο ἀφειδὴς. I know indeed, that a Commander who spares not his own Life, may be termed ἀφειδὴς. But, in regard this is a commendation befitting a Souldier, rather than a Commander; and because the term ἀφειδὴς is wont to be most commonly taken in an ill sense; therefore, at this place I would more willingly read εὐφειδὴς, that is, a wary and provident General. So Amm. Marcellinus, speaking concerning Corbulo the most fam'd Commander of the Romans, gives him this Elogy, Provinciarum fidus defensor & cautus, a faithfull and wary Defender of the Provinces. Nevertheless, if any one had rather retain the common reading, I will not gain-say it. Vales.

[h] Παιδοι ἀνδρέμμα. The amendment of this place was obvious. For who sees not that it should be, παιδοι ἂν δρέμμα in which manner I found it written in the Fuketian Copy, and have rendred it accordingly. Vales.

ging Beasts. But, the supream Moderator's care was not employ'd about a Sheep that wants reason; but He was highly concern'd for his whole Army; for the sake of those, who on his account were assaulted. Of whose Combats, and conflicts in defence of Piety, when he had approved; and had honoured them, who were now removed to him, with the rewards of Victory, [i] with himself; he enrolled them amongst the Angelick Quires in Heaven. But, others of them he continued still upon earth, as Seeds that might restore and give new life to Piety, for the good of posterity; that they should both be spectatours of his vengeance upon the impious, and might also become Relatours of those things which they had beheld with their own eyes. After this, when he had stretcht forth his right hand, in order to his being avenged of his Adversaries; by his very Nod, on a sudden he destroyed them; having first punished them with stripes inflicted on them from Heaven; and compell'd them, even against their wills, with their own lips to recant their own horrid wickednesses. But these, who were mean and contemned, and by almost all persons look't upon as forsaken and hopeless, he has raised from the ground, and highly exalted. And this, the supream Emperour [God,] effected from Heaven; when he had presented to us his own Servant, as some invincible Warriour. (For our Emperour, by reason of his transcendency of Piety, rejoyces in his being stiled The Servant of God.) Whom God has made Conquerour over all sorts of Enemies whatever, having raised up him alone, against many. For, they were numerous; and almost infinite, as [k] being the friends of many Dæmons. [l] Yea rather, they were nothing: whence it is, that at present they are nothing. But this One Emperour, [*is] of One, [and bears] the Image of That One Supream Emperour. They, [induced thereto] by an impious mind, destroyed pious men by bloudy Murthers. But he, imitating his own Saviour's example, and being only skilled in this; the preservation namely of men; has sav'd alive even the impious themselves, teaching them true Piety and Religion. Then, in regard he is really Victor, he hath vanquished that twofold sort of Barbarians: civilizing the fierce and untractable Tribes of men, by prudent and rational Embassies; compelling them to own, and * submit themselves to their Betters; and from a Lawless and brutish life, reducing them to Civility and Humanity. But, as for that cruel and enraged Sort of invisible Dæmons, he does really and manifestly [m] prove, that they were long since vanquished by God. For the Common Saviour of the Universe, had by an invisible Power routed those invisible Spirits. But this Our Prince, the Supream Emperour's Lieutenant-General as 'twere, [n] has pursued the vanquished; spoyling † those who were long since dead and consumed; and plentifully distributing the Booty amongst the Souldiers of [God] the Victor.

[i] Παρ' ἑαυτῷ. I reade παρ' ἑαυτῷ, with himself; in which manner Eusebius is wont to expresse himself. A little after, the reading should be ἐξησίλαι γνησιόμυοι, might also become Relatours: the Fuketian Copy confirms both these Emendations. Vales.

[k] Ἅτε καὶ δαιμόνων. This place is corrupted; in my judgment, it must be restored thus; οἱ μὲν γὰρ οὐδὲ μυεῖοι, πολλοί τε πολλῶν ἅτε δαιμόνων καὶ αὐτῶν φίλοι. That is, For they were almost innumerable and many in regard they were the friends of many Dæmons and of themselves. I have expunged the word καὶ, becaus it had crept in hither, from the upper line. And by those innumerable men, against whom God raised one single person, Constantine; Eusebius means Maxentius, Maximianus Herculius, Maximinus, and Licinius; to whom Diocletian and Galerius may be added. But, by those many friends, both of the Dæmons, and of themselves, he means the Presidents and Governours of Provinces, and the Commanders of the Milice; who, that they might curry favour with the Emperours, molested the Christians in all places. It may also be written, ἅτε ὂν δαιμόνων καὶ αὐτῶν φίλοι, in another sense; that is, many as being descended of many Dæmons, and the friends of those Dæmons. Which sense seems truer. For, it answers to these words which follow, ὁ δ' ἐξ ἑνὸς ἦν, &c; But, this One Emperour [is] of One. For Eusebius alludes to that passage in the Gospel; Ye are of your father the devil, Joh. 8. 44. In the Fuketian Copy, the reading of this place runs thus; οἱ μὲν γὰρ οὐδὲ μυεῖοι. πολλοί τε πολλῶν ἅτε φίλοι δαιμόνων; For they were infinite; and many as being the friends of many Dæmons. Which reading is purer and truer. Vales.

[l] Μᾶλλον δὲ οὐδὲν ἦσαν. οὕτω οὐδὲν εἰσίν. Eusebius here seems to have imitated Dionysius Alexandrinus; who in his Paschal Letter concerning the Tyranny of Macrianus, expresses himself in this manner, ὁ μὲν οὐκ ἔστιν, ἐπεὶ μὴ ἦν, &c. now is not, for he never was: which passage occurs in the seventh Book of his Eccles. Histor. Chap. 23. Vales.

* Or, Not to be ignorant of their, &c.

[m] Ἀπελέγχων, ὑπὸ τοῦ κρείττονος πάλαι νενικημένον. The Translatour hath placed a distinction after the term ἀπελέγχων; and renders the passage thus; Reipsa coarguit repressitque; utpote quod jam olim fuisset ab ipso Deo superatum, he really confuted and repress't it; in regard it had been long before vanquished by God Himself. But I have taken away the distinction, and rendred it thus; rebus ipsis convincens, jam pridem à Deo fuisse superatum, He does really, &c. The Reader may make choice of which rendition he pleases. For there is but little difference. How Constantine actually demonstrated, that the Dæmons were vanquished; Eusebius does presently declare; when he says, that their Temples were rifled by Constantine, and bestowed on the Christians. Vales.

[n] Τοῖς νενικημένοις ὑπεξήκ. It must be written, ἐπεξῆκ. Vales.

† Namely, the Dæmons; whose Temples Constantine destroyed, and melted down their Images.

FOR, Whereas he perceived, that the simple multitude, like children, in vain stood in fear of those Bug-bears of Errour, made of Gold and Silver; it was his Sentiment, that they ought wholly to be destroyed; in regard they would be like some pieces of Stones, cast before the feet of those who walk in the dark; [a] and because a smooth and plain passage thorow the Kings-high-way was in future to be open to all men. Having therefore diligently weighed these matters with himself, he was of opinion, that he stood not in need either of Military Forces or a numerous Army, in order to his giving Check to those things; but, that one, or two of those persons well known to him, were sufficient to effect this business: whom by one only Nod he dispatcht away into every Province. They, confiding in [the Emperour's] Piety, [and in their own Religiousness towards God,] made their way thorow the thickest crowds, and thorow infinite multitudes of people, and [b] fully discovered that ancient Errour [of Idolatry,] in all Cities, and throughout every Country. And in the first place, they commanded the Priests themselves, with much laughter and disgrace to bring forth their Gods, out of certain dark recesses. Then they divested [those Gods] of their outward dress, and exposed their inward deformity, which lay concealed under a painted shape, to the eyes of all men. Lastly, having scrap't off that matter which seemed to be usefull, and * cast it into the fire, and melted it down; [c] so much as by them was thought to be of use and necessary, they reserved, and put it up safe. But, whatever was superfluous and wholly useless, that they left with the superstitious, for a lasting monument

CHAP. VIII.

[a] Καὶ ὁμαλὴν τοῖς πᾶσιν. It must be made τοῖς πᾶσιν, to all men; from the Fuketian Copy, and from his Third Book concerning the Life of Constantine, Chap. 54; where this passage occurs word for word. Vales.

[b] Πλάνης ἐπιεῖσλο φῶτας. Doubtless it is to be written ἐπιεῖσλο φωτὸν, fully discovered; and thus it is to be mended in the Third Book of his Life of Constantine, Chap. 54; where the reading is ἐπιεῖσλο φθορὰν, totally destroyed. In the Fuketian Copy 'tis φῶτας. Vales.

* Or, tried it in the furnace and in the fire.

[c] Τὰ μὲν γὰρ λυσιτελῆ. The word γὰρ must be expunged; the Fuketian Copy acknowledges not that word. Vales.

ment of disgrace. Moreover, this admirable Emperour performed another thing like hereto. For, at the same time that those Idols of the Dead, made of pretious matter, were spoyled in that manner we have declared; he ordered the rest of the Images, consisting of Brass, to be brought together. Therefore, those Gods, [celebrated] in the doting Fables [of the Greeks,] having had ropes made of hair cast about them, were drag'd away bound. After these things, this great Emperour, having as 'twere light up a most bright Torch, lookt about with his Imperial Eye, if peradventure he could any where find, any Remains of Errour as yet lying concealed. And, as some most sharp-sighted Eagle, which has raised herself to Heaven on her wings, sees from above those things on the earth that are at the greatest distance: in the same manner he, whilst he †was resident in the Imperial Palace of his own most beautifull City, beheld as from a Watch-Tower, a certain pernicious snare of Souls, lying concealed in the Province of the Phœnicians. It was a Grove and a Temple, [not placed] in the midst of a City, nor in the Forums, or Streets; of which sort many are visible in Cities, most gloriously built for ornaments sake: but this [Temple] was out of the way, far distant from the common Road and beaten path, consecrated to that filthy Dæmon [termed] Venus, in part of the Top of [Mount] Libanus. This was a School of wickedness, [open] to all incontinent persons, and such as with all manner of dissoluteness had debauch't their own Bodies. For certain effeminate men, who ought to be termed women rather than men, having renounc'd the venerableness of their own Sex, appeased the Dæmon by suffering themselves to be made use of as women. Besides, unlawfull ‖ Coitions with women, and Adulteries, and other beastly and infamous facts were committed in that Temple, as in a place that was lawless, and without a Governour. Nor was there any one that might inspect what was done in that place, in regard no person of gravity or modesty durst go thither. But, the impieties committed there, could not lye concealed from this Great Emperour also. But, when he himself had look't into them with the eye of an Imperial providence, he judged such a Temple as this to be unworthy of being [enlightned with the Rayes] of the Sun it self, Wherefore he orders it to be totally demolished, together with [its Statues and] Consecrated Gifts. Immediately therefore, the Engines of this impudent and Libidinous Errour, were dissipated by an Imperial Order; and a Company of Souldiers gave their assistance in cleansing that place. And they who had hitherto been addicted to Lasciviousness, [being scar'd] by the Emperour's Menaces, in future learned modesty. When therefore the Emperour had in this manner [d] pull'd off those Vizards of abominable wickedness, which were visible in the Temple of that Dæmon the seducer of the people; and had exposed them to the view of all persons; he Preached his own Saviour in the presence of all.

* Or, Set upon the other Images, made of Brass.

† Walk't up and down in, or, was conversant in.

‖ Or, Copulations of women.

[d] Φάσματα κακίων ἀμφαν κατασκευῶ. I can't approve of the Translatour's Version, who has rendred this place thus; Ad hunc modum igitur Imperator, tum spectra illa improbitatis & nequitiæ, quæ hominum animi occæcati fuerant, palam sub omnium oculis subjecit, &c; In this manner therefore the Emperour, both exposed to publick view those Spectres of improbity and wickedness, wherewith the minds of men had been blinded, &c. But I had rather render it thus; Cùm flagitiorum larvas, quæ in Dæmonis illius populorum seductoris templo visebantur, detraxisset, &c. When therefore the Emperour had in this manner pull'd off, &c. Φάσματα κακιῶν (for so the Accentuation is to be restored,) are the integumenta vitiorum, the masks of vices, wherewith the Heathens covered their own uncleanness. So above, Eusebius speaking of the Images of the Dæmons, says, κἄπειτα ἀπεγυμνῶντες τὰ φάσμα[Θ], &c; Then they divested [those Gods] of their outward dress, and exposed their inward deformity, which lay concealed under a painted shape, to the eyes of all men. Farther, this place is thus to be mended from the Fuketian Copy, ὥδε κὴ τὰ τῆς λαοπλάνε φάσματα κακίας. Vales.

Nor was there any one who could defend or assist the persons detected; no Dæmon; no God; no Utterer of Oracles; no Diviner. Nor were the minds of men any longer wrap't up in thick and profound darkness: but being illustrated by the Rayes of unerring Piety, they condemned the ignorance of their Ancestours; and pityed their Blindness; and pronounc't themselves happy, in regard they were free'd from the cruel slavery of Errour. [c] Thus therefore in a moment, by the Will of the Great God, and the Emperour's Assistance and Ministery, all the kinds of Enemies and Adversaries, as well the visible as invisible, were totally destroyed: and in future, Peace, the best Educatrix of Youth, encompassed the habitation of all men. Nor were there any more Wars, because The Gods were not. Neither did there happen any Fights, either in the Countries or Cities, as there had been before, when the worship of Dæmons flourisht: nor were there any more effusions of bloud amongst men, such as had usually hapned, whilst the fury of Polytheisme was prevalent.

[c] Οὕτω δὴ τὰ ὑπ' ἀγαθοῦ θεοῦ βεβαχεῖ. Questionless it must be, ὅτω δ' ἐπὶ τὰ ὑπ' ἀγαθοῦ θεοῦ βεβαχεῖ Thus therefore in a moment. Presently, I read ἀσαθὴ κυβερνέφ[Θ], the best Educatrix [or Breeder] of Youth; without the particle κὴ. For Eusebius alludes to that Verse of Hesiod, in his Opera;

Εἰρήνη τ' ἀσαθὴ κυβερνέφ[Θ].

Vales.

CHAP. IX.

NOw therefore 'tis seasonable, to oppose the new Face of affairs to the old, and inspect the Change of matters made for the better, by comparing the worser with them; and to discern and perceive clearly, in what manner heretofore, Porches and Consecrated Plots of Ground; Groves and Temples, were [a] most elaborately founded and prepared for them; and how the Temples were * beautified with vast numbers of Consecrated Gifts. As for the Tyrants and those in whose hands the supream power then was, they had an high veneration for the Gods. The Nations also and people, in the fields and in all places, yea in their very Private dwellings, in their Store Houses namely and Bed-chambers, [b] honoured them with Statues, according to the Rites of their own Country. But, the fruit of their devotion, was not that mutual Peace, which we now behold with our eyes, but all things directly contrary hereto; to wit Wars, Fights, and Seditions; wherewith they were † sorely disquieted during the whole Course of their Lives, and filled their own Countries with bloud and intestine slaughters. Moreover, the Gods worshipt by them, with much flattery did indeed promise the then Emperours, Prophesies and Oracles, and predictions of things future.

* Or, crown'd.

† Worn out.

[a] Αὐτοῖς φιλοπόνως ἐξεκεῖτο. You must understand τοῖς δαίμοσι, for the Dæmons; or else τοῖς ἕλλησι, by the Heathens: for both may be meant: write also ἐξησκεῖτο, were elaborately founded, or, exquisitely prepared. In the Fuketian Copy, the beginning of this chapter, and the close of the foregoing one, is omitted, by the carelessness of the Transcriber. Vales.

[b] Καὶ ἀγάλμασιν ἐπίμων τὰ πάντα. This expression seems to me uncouth. For it can't well be said, πᾶν τὰ πάντα: nor can the term ἄγαλμα be well joyned with δαλάμους. Wherefore, I would more willingly reade this whole place, in this manner, ἔθνη τε κὴ δῆμοι κατ' ἀγρὸς κὴ πάντα τόπον, ἴδη τε κατ' οἴκους ἐν ἀυλοῖς αὐτῶν ταμείοις τε κὴ θαλάμοις, ἀγάλματον ἀυτοὺ ἐπίμων κατὰ τὰ πάτεια. The Nations also and people, &c. Vales.

But those very Gods [c] could not *foresee their own Ruine, and were altogether unable to foretell it to their own selves. Which is a most convincing Argument, in order to the manifestation of their cheat and imposture. 'Tis certain, none of those, heretofore admired for their Oracles, ever foretold the Glorious Coming of the Common Saviour amongst men, or the new Preaching of that divine knowledge, which was first delivered by him. Neither Pythius himself, nor any other of the Great Dæmons, was ever apprehensive of their own desolation: nor did he presage or propheſie, who should vanquish and destroy them. What Diviner or Soothsayer hath foretold, that the worship of the Gods should be extinguished by the Coming of a Certain † New Person into the world; and, that the knowledge and worship of the supream Mediator of all things, should be diffused amongst all men? Who hath foreseen this Holy and Religious Principality, and this Our Victor, and the Trophies which he has in all places of the earth erected against Dæmons, and the Ruine of the * High places? Which of the Hero's hath ever declared in expres words, that the lifeless Statues should be melted, and from an useless Form be changed into necessary uses? Which of the Gods hath ever made any mention, concerning their own Statues which are melted down, and with disgrace and laughter [d] cut into thinn plates? Where [I beseech you] were the Defenders of those [Gods,] that could not give assistance to the Monuments consecrated to them, which were ruined by Men? What is become of them, who heretofore raised Wars, and who now behold their own vanquishers living in a most calm and secure Peace? Where are those who put their trust in them, as in Gods, and elevated their own minds by a vain and fruitless confidence; [e] who, when they had raised the Errour [of their own superstition] to the highest pitch, and had commenc't an implacable War against the Defenders of Truth; Wretches as they were, perished in a most miserable manner? Where are those Troops of Gyants, fighting against God Himself? And the hissings of Dragons; Who have whet their Tongues, and have uttered impious Expressions against the supream King? Those persons, professt Enemies to the supream Emperour, confiding in a multitude of Gods, fell on with vast numbers of men in Arms; carrying before them as their defence, [f] Resemblances of dead persons, in Statues void of life. But Our Emperour, cloathed with the Coat of Mail of Piety, having opposed against the multitude of his Enemies, the salutary and vivifick Standard, as some affrightning spectacle, and potent Preservative against mischiefs; obtained the Victory, both over his Enemies, and over the Dæmons. After which, with a gratefull mind, he rendred a Thanksgiving-prayer to [God] the Authour of his Victory; and with a loud voice, and by the Monuments of Statues raised, he made known to all men the Triumphant Standard; erecting this Great Trophy against all his Enemies, in the midst of the Imperial City; and issuing out an Expres Command to all men, that they should acknowledge this salutary Standard (which no Age can deface,) as the Preservative of the Roman Government, that is, the Empire of the whole world. And herewith he acquainted all persons, but more especially the Milice. To whom [he gave this in charge,] that they ought not to * place their hopes in their Spears and Armour, nor in the strength of their Bodies; but should acknowledge God to be the Giver of all Good, and particularly of Victory it self. Thus the Emperour himself (strange and almost incredible!) was his own Armie's Instructer in their devotions; and delivered to them pious † prayers, which were agreeable to the Divine Laws and Institutions; that they should lift up their hands on high, towards Heaven; but should ‖ fix the eyes of their minds on the highest object, namely on the Celestial King; and in their prayers should invoke him, as The Giver of Victory, The Saviour, The Preserver, and The Assistant. Moreover, that they should esteem of a day, as convenient and fit for prayers; to wit, that day, which really is the Chief and § First of [c] Οὐκ ἔγνωσαν προγνῶναι. I read, οὐκ ἐδύναντο προγνῶναι, could not foresee, or, foreknow. Valesius.

* Foreknow.

† Νέου τινὸς; it may be rendred, of a certain new-born child.

* Τῶν ὑψηλῶν. 'Tis a term which occurs in sacred Scripture; see 1 Kings, chap. 12, and 13. The Images of Dæmons were so termed, because they were commonly worshipped in high places. Valesius.

[d] Εἰς λεπτὸν τε καταπτομένων. Doubtless, the reading must be κατακοπτομένων, cut; which Christophorson perceived not. Valesius.

[e] Οἷς τὸ μὲν πλέον. As far as this place, there was a Chasme in the Fuketian Copy; which Manuscript gives us this reading of this place; οἷς οἱ τὸ μὲν πλέον. I am of opinion, that the first word is to be blotted out. Valesius.

[f] Νεκρῶν εἴδωλα κεκμώντων. Write δανόντων, as the reading is in his Life of Constantine, Book 2. Chap. 16; where this passage occurs. A little after, write, χαεισήειον ὑποδὺς ἐυχὴν τὸ τῆς νίκης ὅπλον; as 'tis in his Life of Constantine, and in the Fuketian Copy. Valesius.

* Or, Hang their hopes on, &c.

† See his Life of Constantine, Book 4. Chap. 20.

‖ Or, Transmit the eyes — to the, &c.

§ Καὶ πρώτην οὖσαν. He terms the Lord's day, the first; not only because 'tis the first day of the week; but also, in regard it was the first day of the world. Whence it may deservedly be termed the Birth-day of the world. Farther, the Lord's Day is not only termed the first day, but the eighth also. St Austin's words (Book 1. Concerning the Lord's Sermon on the Mount, Chap. 11.) are these: Hæc octava Sententia quæ ad Caput redit, &c: This eighth Sentence which returns to the Head, and declares the perfect man, is perhaps signified by Circumcision also on the eighth day in the Old Testament; and by the Resurrection of the Lord after the Sabbath, which as 'tis the eighth, so 'tis also the first day. Before St Austin, Hilarius had said the same, in his Prologue to his Comments on the Psalms; where discoursing concerning the seventh Number, his words are these: Quem tamen octoas, quia dies eadem prima quæ octava, &c: which nevertheless, the number eight (because the first day is the same with the eighth,) being added in the last Sabbath according to the Evangelick fulness, doth compleat. See also his following words in that Prologue. Moreover, Theophilus Bishop of Alexandria, in his discourse when the day of the Theophania had fal'n on a Sunday, speaks concerning the Lord's day in this manner: ᾗ τὸ ἕβδομον ᾗ τὸ πρέπον ἡμᾶς ἀπαιτεῖ πᾶσαν κυριακὴν τιμᾶν, &c: Both Custome, and also duty doth require us, to honour every Sunday, and to observe that day as a Festival; in regard thereon our Lord Jesus Christ procured for us a Resurrection from the dead. Wherefore, in the sacred Scriptures, this day is both termed The first, as being the beginning of life to us; and also The eighth, in regard it surpasses the Sabbath of the Jews. These words of Theophilus are cited in the Typicon of St Saba, and by Balsamon in his Collection of Canons. To whom add Isidorus, and Beda in the Book de Divinis Officiis, where they treat concerning Sunday. Stephanus Gobarus writes the same, in his 29th Chapter. To this custom it is perhaps to be referred, that the Greeks most commonly reckon the days of the week, not to the Sunday which precedes, but to that which follows. For, after the Sunday of the Prodigal Son, which is the ninth Sunday before Easter, those dayes which followed immediately, namely the second, third, and fourth Feria, and so on, were by the Greeks termed, ἡ δευτέρα τῆς ἀποκρέω, ἡ τρίτη, &c; untill the following Sunday, which was termed Dominica τῆς ἀποκρέω, and this week was called ἑβδομὰς τῆς ἀποκρέω. [See Meursius's Glossary, in the word ἀπόκρεως.] But after the Dominica τῆς ἀποκρέω, the second Feria which followed next, was termed τῆς τυρινῆς or τυροφάγου, and so the other days of that whole week, unto the following Sunday, which was called by the same name, ἡ κυριακὴ τῆς τυρινῆς. The same may be observed in the other Sundays, untill Easter-day. For after the Dominica τῆς τυρινῆς, the second Feria was termed the second Feria of the Holy Fasts; and the whole week was called so, untill the following Sunday, which had the same name. Lastly, the ἑβδομὰς μεγάλη [the Great week, or, Passion-week] which we call the Holy Week, is reckoned to the following Sunday, namely Easter Day, as it appears appears from the Typicon of Saint Saba, Chap. 31. Cyrillus also, in his Paschal Sermons, always begins the week of Easter, which we now term The Holy Week, from the second Feria; and closes it with the following Sunday, namely Easter-Day. Nor does Theophilus do otherwise in his Paschal Epistles. Vales.

other days, and which is truly the [h] Lord's, and the Salutary Day: and which has its [i] name from Light, Life, Immortality, and from every thing that is good. Moreover, He [k] himself, becoming his own Teacher of such good things, pays an adoration to his Saviour in the most private Apartments of his Imperial Palace; and sometimes by praying fulfills the Divine Laws; at others, by hearing the sacred Scriptures read, he cultivates and instructs his own mind. Farther, persons consecrated to God, and who are adorned with holiness of Life and the other virtues, are his Servants and Ministers; and them he has appointed to be the * Controllers of his whole House. Lastly, his Protectors and trusty Guards, armed with the weapons of good affection, do acknowledge the Emperour as their Instructer in a pious Life.

[h] Κυριακὴν. This is the most ancient name of Sunday, whereby it was called even from the Apostles times. 'Tis certain, in the Revelation of Saint John, mention is made of the Lord's day: See Chap. 1. verse 10.

* Or, Keepers.

But, what Eusebius says here, and in the Life of Constantine; namely, that Sunday was consecrated and set apart for prayers and Ecclesiastick assemblies; this in my judgment, was instituted something later. For the first Christians, who had embraced the faith immediately after our Lords Ascent, met every day, always applying themselves to prayers, and all manner of Offices of Piety; as St Luke writes in the Acts of the Apostles. But afterwards, when the Heathens betook themselves in great numbers to the faith of Christ, and the Faithfull could not meet every day; it was appointed by the Apostles and their Successours, that at least on the Lord's Day, the Faithfull should meet together in the Church. Concerning which there is an eminent passage, in Justin the Martyr's second Apology, about the close of it. Τῇ τῶν ἡλίου λεγομένῃ ἡμέρᾳ, &c; On the day termed Sunday, all persons, as well those who dwell in the Country, as them in the City, meet together, &c. He has termed it Sunday, not the Lord's Day, because he spoke to the Roman Emperours, who were well acquainted with Sunday, but knew not the Lord's Day, which was an appellation proper to Christians. Justin repeats the same thing a little after, in the same Apology. Hereto likewise Pliny agrees in his Epistle to Trajan. Affirmabant, says he, hanc fuisse summam vel culpæ suæ, vel erroris, &c. They affirmed, that this was the Totall, either of their fault, or errour, that on a stated day they were wont to meet together before it was light, and sing an Hymn to Christ, as to God. Where, by a stated day he means The Lord's Day. Therefore, from this place of Pliny it may be gathered, that the Christians who then lived in Bithynia, met together on the Lord's Day only. Otherwise, Pliny, would have said, that they were wont to meet on stated days, not on a stated day. Although this is not so much the Testimony of Pliny himself, as the Christians own, who confest that before Pliny, as he himself attests. Besides the Lord's Day, Epiphanius (in the Epilogue to his Books against Heresies,) affirms that an Assemblie on the fourth and sixth Feria; and Clemens (in his Constitutions) says, that a meeting together on the Sabbath Day, was instituted by the Apostles. But, as to what belongs to the Stations of the fourth and sixth Feria, we are informed from Tertullian in his Book de Jejuniis, that they were meerly arbitrary and at will, not determined by any positive Law or Command. And although it was the Easterns usage to meet together on the Sabbath, yet 'tis manifest from Epiphanius, Socrates, and others, that in most Churches, Assemblies were not then held. There is an eminent passage of St Jerom's, on the Epist. to the Galatians, Chap. 4. Et ne inordinata congregatio populi fidem minueret in Christo, &c. And least a disordered Congregation of the people might lessen the faith in Christ, therefore some days are appointed, that we might all come together. Not that that day whereon we meet, is more solemn; but, that on whatever day there is an assembly, a greater joy may arise from the sight of one another. Vales.

[i] Φωτὸς καὶ ζωῆς ἐπώνυμον. He says, that the Lord's Day has its name from light, not because it was by the Heathens termed the day of the Sun, but because 'tis the day of the Lord, that namely whereon the Lord rose, and conferred on us Life and Light: and because on that day we received the Holy Spirit, the Enlightner of our minds. See Clemens Alexandrinus's Strom. Book 6. where speaking concerning the Sabbath, there occurs a most elegant passage, which for brevities sake I here omit. The Lord's Day therefore is the day of Light, both because on that day the Light was first created, and also in regard we on that day received the knowledge of the truth by the Holy Spirit, who fell upon the Faithfull under the form of fire, and without division was divided, as Clemens words it in the forementioned place. Vales.

[k] Αὐτὸς τε ἑαυτῷ διδάσκαλος. That is, not satisfied in his instructing others, he himself practises those things which he teacheth, according to the command of the Gospel. Vales.

But the Emperour himself pays an honour to this Victorious Banner, having experimentally found a Divine Efficacy inherent in it. For, by this [Standard] vast multitudes of the adverse Army have been put to flight; by it the Forces of invisible Dæmons have been subdued. By it, their insolence, who opposed God Himself, was repress't: by it, the tongues of slanderers and impious persons were silenced. By it the Barbarous Nations were vanquished. By it the frauds and mockery of Superstitious Errour were exposed and detected. Lastly, to it (which is the sum and perfection of all Goods,) the Emperour paying a due debt as 'twere, has erected Triumphal Arches in all places of the Earth. And with a bountifull and Royal hand [hath founded] Temples and Churches, in honour of it: and has issued forth an Order to all persons, that sacred Oratories should be built. In the very midst [l] therefore of the Provinces and Cities, eximious Monuments of his Imperial magnificence were forthwith raised; and in a short time they shined gloriously in every Country, and manifestly confuted and exposed the impiety of Tyrannick Government. For those [Tyrants] having by a madness of mind been a little before hurried on to wage a War against God; like mad dogs, vented their rage against the lifeless Structures, in regard they were unable to effect any thing against God Himself: and when they had thrown down the Oratories from their vast height to the very ground, and had dug up their very Foundations; they made them look like a City taken by the Enemy. Such was the Tragedy of wickednesses acted by them: wherein they attempted, as 'twere to assault the Deity it self; but were soon made sensible of their own madness. For a short space of time had scarce intervened, when a Storm poured on them from Heaven, swept them away and in one moment rendred them invisible: in so much that, neither kindred, nor issue, nor any the least relique of their memory, was left remaining amongst men; but, though they were numerous, yet in a minute, having first had stripes inflicted on them from Heaven, they all perished utterly, and became extinct. Such was the conclusion of these mens outragious Fury, whereby they had made an Insurrection against God. But this [Our Emperour,] who, armed with the Salutary Trophy, had alone fal'n upon the Enemies; (or rather, was not alone; for he who is the sole Emperour, was present with, and assisted Him;) hath built new Oratories far better than those which a little before had been demolisht; and hath made the latter much more magnificent, than the former were: one while adorning the City which bears his own name, with various Churches of God; at another time, honouring the chief [City] of Bithynia, with [m] a most stately and most beautifull [Church.] He hath likewise grac't the chiefest [Cities] of the other Provinces, with Ornaments of this nature. Moreover, when he had made choice of two eminent places in the East; the one in the Province of Palestine, because the vivifick Stream [of saving faith] has from thence, as from a Spring, diffused it self and overflowed

[l] Τὸ δὲ φθάσαν φάσμα. The reading must be ὑψηλὸν δὲ; and we have rendred it accordingly. Indeed, in the Fuketian Copy, 'tis ὑψηλότατον. Vales.

[m] Μείζονι πομπῇ καὶ σεμνολεσάτῳ. It must be, μείζονι πομπῇ καὶ σεμνολεσάτῃ. For ἐκκλησίᾳ, Church, is understood; as 'tis apparent from His third Book concerning the Life of Constantine, Chap. 50. From whence it must be also here corrected, κεφαλεσάσας, the chiefest [Cities;] as the reading likewise is in the Fuketian Copy. Vales.

flowed all Nations; the other in the Metropolis [n] of the whole East, [n] which graces the name of Antiochus: in this latter, as 'twere in the Head of all the Provinces of that Tract, he hath consecrated [to God] a * most glorious & matchless Structure, in respect both of its Largeness and Beauty. For he hath encompassed the whole Temple, with a large circuit on the out side: but within, he hath raised the Basilica it self to an immense height, and has built it in an Eight-square Figure, and has variously adorned it; and having surrounded it on all sides with many lodging Rooms and Exhedræ, has crowned it with a variety of Ornaments. In this manner were these [Edifices] compleated. But in the Province of the Palestinians, in that City heretofore the Royal Seat of the Hebrews, in the middle of the City, [o] at the very Martyrium of Our Saviour, [he has erected] a † Basilica of a vast bigness, and an Holy House in Honour of the Salutary Cross, and has beautified it richly, and with all manner of magnificence. And he hath grac't the Monument of the supream Saviour, (which deserves an eternal Memory,) and the Trophies that He raised against Death, with Ornaments that are inexpressible. And having selected three places in that Country, which are honoured with three Mystick Caves, He has beautified each of them with magnificent Structures: to [p] that Cave wherein [Our Saviour] first made his Divine appearance, he hath assigned a befitting honour: in the other, he has illustrated the memory of his last Assumption, in the Top of the Mount: but in that Cave, which is in the midst between the other two, he has extoll'd || the Combats and Victory of Our Saviour. All these [Caves] the Emperour has adorned magnificently, thereby declaring to all persons the Salutary Sign [of the Cross.] [q] Which [Sign] gives the Emperour the reward of his piety, increases his whole Family and the time [of his Reigne,] and confirms the Throne of his Empire by * many periods of years; reserving the Fruits and Rewards of Virtue, for His most excellent Children, and for [r] His own Kindred, and for their Descendants. And this is a most convincing argument of the power of that God, whom the Emperour does worship; that He hath poyz'd the Scale of Justice with equal weights on both sides, and has assigned to each Party a fit and proportionate Reward. For the punishment due to impiety, immediately seized those who had assaulted and demolisht the sacred Houses; and they were forthwith swept away, without any Stock or Kindred, without any House, or Family. But this [Our Emperour,] who by Acts of Piety of all sorts, pays an Honour to His Lord; and who one while erects Churches to Him; at another time, manifests and makes Him known to His Subjects, by those Sacred Gifts which he hath dedicated to Him in all parts of the world: is most certainly known to have Him, and that most deservedly, the Preserver and Keeper of his Family, Empire, and Race. In this manner have God's performances been made known, by the Divine power and Virtue of the Salutary Sign.

[n] Κοσμεῖ μεσοποτάμειον. In the third Book of his Life of Constantine, Chap. 50, instead of the verb κοσμεῖ, εἴληφεν is made use of. Indeed, this is a strange kind of an expression, μητροπόλεως ἣν τῶν ἐπώνυμον ἀντιόχου κοσμεῖ μεσοποτάμειαν. And at first blush it may seem to be an Enallage, instead of ἣ ἐπώνυμος ἀντιόχου κοσμεῖ μεσοποτάμεια, which [City] the Surname of Antiochus does grace. Yet, if any one shall inspect the matter more narrowly, he will confess, that this was spoken by Eusebius with a designe to greaten the thing. For such was the largness of the City Antioch, that it might seem rather to adorn its own Builder Antiochus, than to be adorned by his name. Vales.

* Or, Divine.

[o] Κατ' αὐτὸ δὴ τὸ σωτήριον μαρτύριον. That is, at the very place of Our Lord's Sepulchre. For so Eusebius is wont to call the Sepulchre of Our Lord, as 'tis apparent from his Life of Constant. Book 3. Chap. 33. Μαρτύριον does properly signifie a place where the Reliques of Martyrs are depositted. The Latines have in like manner termed it Confessionem, Confession; which is the same with μαρτύριον. For μάρτυς is in Latine call'd Confessor. Thus, in Anastasius, we reade the Confession of Saint Peter. Below, at Chap. 11, Eusebius calls it, τῆς σωτηρίας ἀθανασίας μαρτύριον. Vales.

† See Life of Constant. Book 3. Chap. 43. note (c.)

[p] Τῷ μὲν περὶ τῆς θεοφανείας ἄντρῳ. The reading must be, τῷ μὲν πρώτης θεοφανείας. For, it follows, τῷ δὲ τῆς ὑστάτης ἀναλήψεως, &c; and we have rendred it accordingly. Farther, in the third Book of his Life of Constant. Chap. 41; He makes mention but of two Caves; whereas here he reckons up three. His discourse there, was concerning Helena, who built Churches at Bethlehem and on the mount of Olives. But here he treats concerning Constantine, who erected a most magnificent Church in the place of Our Lord's Sepulchre: to whom also Eusebius with good reason ascribes those Churches built by Helena, in regard they had been raised by the Emperour's cost. Vales.

|| Or, The salutary Victories of his whole Agony.

[q] Τὸν δὲ τῆς εὐσεβείας. At my peril write τὸ δὲ; and understand σημεῖον, Signe. Which the Translatour having not perceived, made a notorious mistake. The Fuketian Copy confirms our Emendation. A little after, with the Translatour I reade χρόνον τε βασιλείας, &c, and the time of his Reigne &c; unless you would rather read, ὅλον ἅπαντα κὶ χρόνον αὔξει, θρόνον τε βασιλείας, &c, as we have rendred it; which to me seems righter. For θρόνον αὔξειν is not so elegant an expression. Vales.

* Or, Long.

[r] Καὶ αὐτῷ γένει. The reading must be ὠπῖ, his own. After the mention of Constantine's Children, Eusebius has, not superfluously, added his Stock or Kindred also: on account namely of Dalmatius and Hannibalianus, who were related to Constantine, being the Sons of his Brother. Vales.

CHAP. X.

CConcerning which [Sign] the Discourse might be large, wherewith they are well acquainted, [a] who have been initiated in those Mysteries delivered to them by divine persons. For, this * is that truly saving [Sign:] a thing wonderfull indeed to be related; but, far more admirable to be conceived: in what manner, as soon as it appeared on earth, That alone hath obscured all those Fables, many ages since invented concerning the Gods; and hath delivered up Errour, to darkness and oblivion; but hath discovered to all persons that Intellectual Light (which had illustrated the minds of men,) the One namely, and the true God. Therefore, all people, now changed to a better and more enlightened Condition, spit on the faces of their dead Idols; trample under foot the impious Rites of Dæmons, and deride that ancient Errour handed down to them from their Ancestours. And on the other side, men have every where founded Schooles of sacred Literature, and are all trained up as 'twere in the Precepts of the saving Discipline: to the intent that, they may no longer dread * things Created, which are visible to the eyes of flesh; nor lift up their eyes to the Sun, Moon, and Stars, and stop in an admiration of those Bodies: but may confess Him, who transcends all these, Him who can't be perceived by sight, or any sense; to be the Creator of all things; and may learn to worship Him alone. All which singular and extraordinary Blessings and Favours [conferred] on men, had their rise from this Great and admirable Signe. By the power and virtue whereof, all those Ills which were before, now are not: and those [Goods] which before were not, are † every where resplendent, [deriving their Lustre] from the Rayes of Piety. Also, Discourses, Precepts, and Exhortations to a Sober and Pious Life, are Preach't in the hearing of all Nations; yea, even the Emperour Himself Preaches. And this is the greatest wonder, that so mighty an Emperour, does with so loud a Voice call out to the whole world, like some Interpreter

[a] Μύσταις θεολόγων ἀνδρῶν. The Translatour renders it, iis qui se sacrarum literarum professioni consecraverint; which Version I don't approve of. Μύσται are the persons initiated, who were partakers of the Mysteries. But θεολόγοι are they who initiate other, and deliver the Mysteries to them. Vales.

* Or, Was.

* Or, The Creation, visible, &c.

† Or, Amongst all persons.

to

to God the Supream King; and does invite all those Governed by Him, to the knowledge of the true God. And that, in the midst of the Imperial Palace, [b] the trifling and ridiculous Compositures of impious men [are not recited,] as the usage was heretofore; but the Priests and Ministers of God, persons conspicuous for their Piety, with * Royal Hymns and Praises do celebrate the Festival. That, the sole God, He who is the Emperour of the Universe, is declared and set forth to all; and that the Evangelick Word [who promiseth us all things which are] good, does unite mankind to [God] the Supream King; shewing the glad tidings of His Celestial Father's being rendred propitious and benign to His Sons on earth. That, Quires do Laud Him with all manner of triumphant Songs; and, that the whole Body of mankind doth joyn in The Chorus together with the Angelick Companies in Heaven: and, that rational Souls, using those Bodies wherewith they are cloathed as some Musical Instruments, [do Laud] Him with befitting Hymns, and shout forth praises that are gratefull to him. That they who are Inhabitants of the East, together with those who dwell in the West, are instructed in His Precepts, at one and the same moment of time: and, that those who have received the Southern and Northern parts of the world as their allotment, do sing † to the same melodious Tune: studiously following a pious Course of Life, by the very same methods and precepts: conspiring in the praises of one God, who is Supream: admitting of one Saviour, His onely-begotten Son, the Authour of all Blessings: and [Lastly,] acknowledging one Moderatour and Emperour on Earth, and His Sons belov'd by God. Which Emperour, like some skilfull Pilot, [c] sits on high above the Rudder, and holding the Helm in his hand, Steers the Vessel in a straight Course; and by a prosperous gale of Wind, brings all those under his command, into a safe and calm Port. But God Himself, the Supream Emperour, stretches forth his right hand to Him from above, and hitherto constitutes Him the Conquerour of all his Enemies and Opposers; encreasing the Strength of His Empire by long periods of years. But will hereafter make Him a partaker of far more excellent Blessings, and will really fulfill his own Promises made to Him. Of which Promises the time present permits not a Rehearsal; but a departure out of this Life is to be expected: in as much as, 'tis not possible for things divine to be distinctly perceived and fully apprehended, by mortal eyes and corporeal ears.

[b] Οὐκ ἔτως ἔθος τὸ πεὶν. I write, ἂκ ἔθ' ὡς τὸ πεὶν ἀνδρῶν ἀθέων φλήναφοι; and have rendred it accordingly: He means the Pagan Sophistæ, who in such like Decennalian Festivities as these, spoke Panegyricks to the Emperours. Such a one was Nazarius's Panegyrick, spoken to Constantine, in his third Quinquennalia, (or on the fifteenth year of his Empire,) and in the Quinquennalia of the Cæsars. Such also was Themistius's Oration, in Valens's Quinquennalia. Moreover, Claudius Mamertinus had prepared an Oration in the Quinquennalia of Maximianus Herculius, as he himself attests. In the Fuk. Copy the reading is, ὂκ ἔθος τὸ πεὶν. Vales.

† Or, Concordant Songs.

[c] Ὑπερπεδᾶ ἀιωνυχέμβος. This is a most corrupt place, which nevertheless, I have, as I think, with ease amended. I write therefore, ὃ δ' ὃια σοφὸς κυβερνήτης ὑψίζυος ὑπὸ πηδαλίων ὀχέμβος, &c; that is, Sublimis supra gubernaculum sedens, Sits on high above the Rudder. But the Translatour dream't I know not what concerning Ævum. Presently, write ἐυθέα τε περαίνων, from the Fuketian Copy: for so Eusebius expresses himself hereafter. Vales.

CHAP. XI.

BUT, Come on, Victor Maximus Constantinus! [a] in this Imperial Book [written] concerning the Supream Emperour, let us now deliver to You * Secret and Mysterious Matters: not that we may teach You, who have been instructed by God: nor that we may disclose Secrets to You, to Whom God Himself, long before these our discourses, (not from men, neither by any man, but by the Common Saviour Himself, and by the Presence and Appearance of His own Divinity, which hath often shined upon You,) hath opened and revealed things secret that were hidden: but, that we may bring untaught men to the Light; and may suggest to the ignorant, the Reasons and Causes of Your Pious and Religious Works and Deeds. Indeed, those great Actions dayly performed [b] by Your Virtue, thorowout the whole habitable World, in order to the promoting the Worship and Honour of God the Supream King; are celebrated in the mouthes of all Mortals. But, the Monuments of Gratitude, which You have consecrated to Your Preserver and Saviour, in Our Country, (I mean in the Province of Palestine, and in that City, whence, as from a Fountain-head, the Salutary Word hath powred forth its refreshing streams upon all men;) and the Trophies of that Victory gained over Death, which You have erected in the Edifices of Oratories, and in the Dedications of Sacred Houses: [I say,] those Lofty and most beautifull Works of an Imperial Magnificence, Structures truly Imperial, erected [c] about the Salutary [Martyrium, a Monument that deserves] an Immortal Memory; contain a Reason [for their having been built,] which is [d] not equally apparent and manifest to all persons.

* See Chap. 11. note (a.)

* Or, The Mysterics of Secret Discourses.

[a] Ἐν τῷ βασιλικῷ

[b] Πρὸς τῆς ἀρετῆς. It must be, πρὸς τῆς σῆς ἀρετῆς, by your Virtue; and so the Translatour read. Vales.

[c] Ἀμφὶ τὸ σωτήριον τῆς ἀθανάτε μνήμης. It ought, I think, to be written, ἀμφὶ τὸ σωτήριον μαρτύριον, about the Salutary Martyrium, as Eusebius has expresst himself in the ninth Chapter: where see what we have observed, at note (o.) It might also be, ἀμφὶ τὸ σωτήριον μνῆμα, about the Salutary Monument. For, so it will be an elegant allusion, μνῆμα τῆς ἀθανάτε μνήμης, a Monument of an immortal Memory. And so Eusebius words it in the foresaid Chapter, μνᾶμά τε μνήμης ἀιωνίε χέμον, and the Monument ——which deserves an eternal Memory. Nevertheless I have observed, that τὸ σωτήριον is by Eusebius simply and absolutely taken to signifie the Salutary Signe of the Cross: δι' ἀνδὺς ἀρετῆς τῆ σωτηρίε, by the Divine Virtue of the Salutary Signe, as it occurs in the very close of the ninth Chapter: where nevertheless, the Fuketian Copy words it in this manner, σωτηρίε σημείε. Vales.

[d] Ὁ τοῖς πᾶσι. I don't doubt but it should be written, ὃ τοῖς πᾶσι περίδηλον ἔχει τὸν αἴτιον, contain a reason ——which is not equally apparent and manifest to all persons. Which Emendation is confirmed by the words of Eusebius that follow presently. All persons, says he, are not acquainted with the reasons of those Works, which You have with great magnificence built near the Sepulchre of Our Lord. For, the Christians do indeed know them, and on that account do greatly admire You. But the Heathens deride such works as those. The reading therefore in the Fuketian Copy is ill, thus, ἃ τοῖς πᾶσι, &c. Vales.

πᾶσι. The Greek Rhetoricians termed Orations concerning the praises of Emperours, βασιλικοὶ λόγοι; which the Latines are wont to call Panegyricas, Panegyricks. The method of these Orations is delivered by Alexander Rhetor, in his Book περὶ ἐπιδεικτικῶν, Chap. 1: the Title of which Chapter ought to be, περὶ βασιλικῶν λόγε. This Book is extant amongst the Greek Rhetoricians published by Aldus, pag. 613; but, which is ill done, 'tis confounded with Menander Rhetor's Book, which treats concerning the same Subject. Farther, in the foresaid Chapter of Alexander, there is cited an Oration of the most fam'd Sophist Callinicus, with this Title, τύσας βασιλικὸς, written, if I mistake not, in praise of the Emperour Philip. Which I guess at from hence, because Philip was an Arabian as well as Callinicus, and was of mean birth: which are the Qualifications of that Emperour, to whom Callinicus spoke this Oration, as Alexander attests. The time suits very well also; For Callinicus lived in the Reign of Gallienus, as Suidas does witness. There is also extant a Βασιλικὸς of Libanius's, written by him in honour of Constantius and Constans, when he was at Nicomedia. Eusebius therefore alludes to these Orations, and terms this Oration βασιλικὸν σύγγραμμα. So in the foregoing Chapter, he has made use of this expression, βασιλικοῖς ὕμνοις παντηγείσαι, in allusion to the same thing; which the Translatour understood not. Moreover, this is to be remark't, namely that this Oration is by Eusebius termed βασιλικὸν σύγγραμμα, that is, an Imperial Book. For, 'tis indeed liker a Book, than an Oration; because by its too great length it exceeds the measure of an Oration. Wherefore I can't perswade my self, that it was recited by Eusebius. Vales.

'Tis

'Tis certain, they who have been enlightened by the Celestial power and influence of the Divine Spirit, do know and understand [the true Cause of Your raising those Structures,] and on account thereof do deservedly admire You, and do stile that Your purpose of mind, a blessed resolution, as proceeding from no other than a divine impulse. But, those who are unskilled in matters divine, in a most immoderate manner deride, and scoff at that work, by reason of their blindness of mind: supposing it to be a mighty indecency, and a thing unbefitting [the Majesty of] so great an Emperour, to employ His care about the Monuments and Sepulchres of dead Bodies. For, would it not have been better (may some one of these persons say,) to observe and keep Our Ancestours Rites; and to appease the Hero's and Gods worshipt in each Province; and not to detest and abhor them, on account of such calamities as these? For, either they must be * affected with divine honours, in the same manner with [c] this person, by reason of that likeness there is in their miseries and infelicities: or else, if they are to be rejected, as being obnoxious to humane sufferings; 'tis just, that the very same sentence be pronounc't against Him also. These words will peradventure be said by some one of those persons, having first contracted His Brows, and in His own vain opinion thinking Himself wiser than others, and with much of gravity extolling his own arrogance. To whom nevertheless, a pardon of his ignorance is vouchsafed, (and [f] not to him only, but to every one who hath erred from the right way;) by the Gracious and mercifull Word of the Most Excellent Father; who hath Founded Schools and places of Instruction all over the whole world, in Countries and Villages, in fields and desert places, and in all Cities whatever; and freely invites [all persons] to learn the Divine Precepts: and like a most indulgent Saviour and Physitian of Souls, perswades both Greeks and Barbarians; Wise and Simple; Poor and Rich; Servants and Masters; Governours and the Governed; the impious; the unjust; the unlearned; the unclean; the blasphemous; to come, yea to hasten to a Divine Cure. With a loud voice therefore proclaiming to all persons oblivion of their former wickedness, thus He heretofore cryed out, saying; * Come unto Me all ye that labour, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. And again. I † am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance. And He adds the reason, saying: [‖ For] they that be whole, need not a Physician, but they that are sick. And [in another place,] I desire not the death of a sinner [so earnestly, as I desire] his repentance. Hence it is, that only that person who has been instructed in the knowledge of things Divine, (as soon as he shall have been acquainted with the reasons of that care and diligence imployed about the forementioned Works,) must of necessity acknowledge a far more excellent instinct than that which is meerly humane, to have been in our Emperour, and must admire His Pious disposition towards the worship of God; and must believe, that this Care and Sollicitude in reference to * the Monument of the Salutary Resurrection, was not exerted without Divine appoyntment; but was really the product of the inspiration of that God, whose faithfull servant and Minister of good things, [the Emperour] boasts Himself to be. Being fully perswaded, Greatest Emperour! that these things are truly gratefull and acceptable to You, I have taken a resolution, in this present Discourse to set forth to all persons, the Causes and [g] Reasons of Your Pious Fabricks: glorying in this, that I am as 'twere the Interpreter of Your Intention, and the Relatour of Your Pious mind: and that I teach all those things, which 'tis fit and agreeable every person should be instructed in, whose desire it is to understand the Reasons of the Power of God, and of Our Saviour: on account of which [Reasons] He who existed long before, and had the sole Care and management of the Universe, at length came down from Heaven to us: for which [reasons] he [h] cloathed Himself with the humane Nature: for which [Reasons Lastly,] He gave access even to death: moreover, [that I declare] the reasons of that immortal Life which followed hereupon, and of the Resurrection from the dead; and not the reasons only, but the most evident and rational demonstrations also, and the most indubitable Proofs, necessary to those who as yet stand in need of these things. But, now it is time, that we should here begin this our design'd discourse. They who have * ascribed the worship of God the Framer of the world and the supream Governour over all things, to those things created by Him; and have honoured the Sun and Moon, and the other parts of the world, and the first Elements [of all things,] Earth; Water; Air; Fire; with an appellation equal to their Maker and Framer: and have termed those things, Gods, which neither ever were, nor had subsisted, nor had had any name, unless they had been [i] present with and waited upon the Word of God who made the world: such persons, in my judgment, seem to differ very little from those, who † passing by the Architect of eximious Works in Imperial Palaces, greatly admire the Roofs and Walls, and

* Or, Deified.

[c] Ὁμοίως πρὸ ἡμῶν. He means Christ, as the Translatour has well noted at the margin. These words are spoken by Eusebius, with an intent to personate the Heathens, who (when the Christians objected to them, the Adulteries, quarrells, slaughters, death, and also Sepulchres of their Gods and Hero's) answered in this manner. If our Gods are to be rejected and despised on accounts of such humane Calamities as these, Your God is in like manner to be rejected also; whom you confess to have been condemned, to have been dead, and buried. Vales.

[f] Οὐ μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ πάντα. I should choose to write, ἃ μὲν ἀλλὰ καὶ πάντα πεπλανημένον, &c. For this seems to me more elegant. But the ordinary reading has the same sense; but 'tis not so expressive, nor so elegant. Nevertheless, he expresses himself so hereafter in this chapter. A little after I read διδασκαλεῖς καὶ διδασκαλεῖα, Schools and places of Instruction; not διδασκαλίας, Doctrines. Vales.

* Matth. 11. 28.

† Matth. 9. 13.

‖ Matth. 9. 12.

[g] Ἔργων τοῖς λόγοις. Without doubt it must be πρὸ λόγους; and a little after (as the words are plac't in the Greek,) εἰς πάντας ἀκοῦσαι βέλτιον: and so the Translatour seems to have read, who renders it thus: Rerum pie & religiosè abs te gestarum rationes Causasque hoc præsenti sermone explicare constitui. But he has rendred the word ἔργων ill, which does here signifie Fabricks or Edifices, which by the Latines are termed Opera, Works. For here Eusebius does manifestly treat concerning that Church, which Constantine had built at Jerusalem, in a most magnificent and admirable manner. Further, this passage does plainly confirm Our Emendation at note (d.) in this chapter, τοῖς πᾶσι περίβλεπτον ἔχει πρὸ ἀτιμίαν. In the Fuketian Copy, the reading is, ἔργων πρὸ λόγους καὶ τὰς αἰτίας παρών μοι λόγῳ τοῖς πᾶσιν ἀκοῦσαι βέλτιον. Vales.

[h] Ἀνθρωπείαν ὑπεδύσετο. You must add the word φύσιν, He cloathed Himself with the humane Nature: which word is ill placed in the foregoing line. This Emendation is confirmed by the Fuketian Copy. Vales.

* Changed, or, transferred.

[i] Τῷ Θεῷ λόγῳ παρέστη. The Translatour renders it, Nisi verbo Dei in Lucem editæ fuissent, unless they had been brought to light by the Word of God. But this rendition is not expressive enough of the propriety of the Greek Term. Wherefore, I would rather render it, Nisi verbo Dei adstitissent, unless they had stood by the Word of God. For 'tis a Metaphor taken from Servants, who, when their Lord calls, are at hand presently. Therefore this verb παρέστη is a fit word to be used concerning the Creation of the World. For the Lord said, Let there be made, and they were made. Farther, I have mended this place from the Fuketian Copy. For whereas the reading before was, καὶ ἐδαμῶν ἐδαμῶς ἦν, I have corrected it, ἃ ἐδαμῶν ἐδαμῶς ἦν. Vales.

† Or, Contemning, or, neglecting.

the

the Paintings thereon which consist of a variety of Flowers and Colours, and the Golden * Lacunaria, and the curious Workmanship thereon, and the Carv'd works of Stones; and to those very things, attribute the praise and name of the skill of the Artist: whereas, the Cause of the admiration ought not to be ascribed to those things visible to the eye, but onely to the Architect of those [curious pieces of work:] and in as much as 'tis to be acknowledged, that there are many works of great Art and Skill; but, that He only is wise and skillfull, who is the Authour of the Being of such Works as these, and of their being beheld by many. Nor, would they seem in any thing to differ from very young children, who should admire the Musical Instrument of the Harp it self, which consists of seven Strings; and not the Inventour Himself, and the person skilled in its Harmony, on account of this His knowledge: or they, who neglecting Him that had performed a brave piece of service in the Wars, should adorn the Spear, or the Shield, with Triumphant Crowns: or [Lastly] they, who should honour the Forums, the Streets, the Edifices, the lifeless Temples, and the † Gymnasia; in the same degree, with the Mighty Emperour, the Authour and Founder of the Great and Royal City: whereas 'tis not meet to admire the [Columns or] Stones, but rather the wise Builder Himself of this great Work, and Him by whose Laws and Sanctions it is Governed. In the very same manner also, they, who with the eyes of the Body behold this Universe, ought not to ascribe its Cause, either to the Sun, or Moon, or to any other of the Celestial Bodies: but must acknowledge all these to be the Workes of wisdom; being in the interim mindfull of the Maker and Framer of them, and preferring His Honour and Worship before all other things whatever. But, from a view of these very [Works,] with an entire affection of mind they must reverence and adore Him, namely the Word of God, the Supream Emperour [of this Universe,] who is not now to be perceived by the eyes of the body, but only by a pure and uncorrupt mind. For, in the Body of a man, no one hath ever termed the eyes, or head, or hands, or feet, or the rest of the members of a wise and knowing person, Wisdom; much less has any one termed the || Pallium within which such a person is wrapt, wise; or His house-hold-stuff, wise; or the Vessels necessary for a Philosopher's use, wise: but every prudent person admires the invisible and disappearing mind that is in man. In the same manner also, rather than [we should wonder at] the visible Works of this whole world, which are corporeal, and framed of one and the same matter; we ought to admire that undiscerned and invisible Word, the Framer and Beautifier of this Universe; Who is the onely-begotten [Son] of God: Whom the Maker of all things Himself, a Being that far transcends every substance, hath begotten of Himself; and hath constituted Him the Ruler and Governour of this Universe. For, whereas it was impossible, that the transient and frail substance of Bodies, and the Nature of rational Creatures which had been newly made, should approach God the Supream Rector, because of that infinity of distance whereby He excells them: (For He is unbegotten, plac'd above and beyond all things; inexplicable; incomprehensible; inaccessible; inhabiting Light that is not to be approach't, as the [k] sacred Oracles tell us: but they were produced out of nothing, and are vastly distant, and a long way separated from that unbegotten Nature:) with good reason therefore, the All-Good and Supream God, interposed as 'twere [l] the Middle, Divine, and Omnipotent Power of His own onely-begotten Word. Which [Power] is most intimately and most nearly conversant with the Father, and abides within Him, and enjoyes His Secrets: [m] nevertheless, it does most graciously condescend and let down it self, and in a manner adapts and fits it self to those, who are far distant from the Supream Height. For otherwise, it would be a thing neither pure nor holy, that He who is plac't above and beyond all things, should be joyned with corruptible matter and Body.

* Archt-Roofs.

† Places for Exercise, or, Schools.

‖ A long Garment worn by Philosophers.

[k] Οἱ ἱερεῖοι λόγοι. So also 'tis in the Fuketian Copy; instead of ἱεροὶ. Vales.

[l] Μέσην τινὰ προεμβάλλει. He terms the Son's power, a middle power between God the Father and things created, not that the Virtue and power of the Son is different from the Virtue and power of the Father. For Eusebius does plainly call it here, the Divine power of the Son. But He gives it the name of Middle, because the Father does nothing by Himself, but all things by the Son. Therefore ancient Divines attributed the Monarchy to the Father; but the Administration or οἰκονομία to the Son; as Tertullian informs us in his Book against Praxeas. See the Twelfth Chapter; where he does again term the Son, the Middle, and a certain Bond as 'twere, whereby things Created are coupled with the unbegotten Father. And least any one should think, that Eusebius deserves to be reproved here; Alexander Bishop of Alexandria (in his Epistle to Alexander Bishop of Constantinople,) expresses himself in the very same manner; ἀγνοοῦσιν οἱ ἀνάσκητοι, ὡς μακρὸν ἂν εἴη μεταξὺ πατρὸς ἀγεννήτου, καὶ υἱοῦ κτιστέντων ὑπ' αὐτοῦ δι' οὗ ἂν ὄντων, λογικῶν τε καὶ ἀλόγων, ὧν μεσιτεύσαι φύσις μονογενὴς, &c. Eusebius (Book 1. against Sabellius) declares the same thing at large. Non quia non sufficiebat Pater, ideo genuit Filium: &c. Not because the Father was not sufficient, therefore He begat the Son: but because those things which were made were not sufficient to bear the power of Him unborn. Therefore He speaks by a Mediatour. Why? Because we could not approach Him unborn. Nevertheless, Athanasius refutes these assertions incomparably well, in his third Oration against the Arians, pag. 397. Vales.

[m] Περιότατά γε. Doubtless it must be, περιότατα δὲ συσχεθῆσαι, καὶ ἀμωσγέπως; we have rendred it accordingly. Vales.

Therefore, the divine Word * came down and put Himself into this Universe; and having taken the Reins of the whole world into His hands, Governs it by an incorporeal and divine power; and, like a most wise Charioteer, manages it according as it seems good to Himself. Now, the demonstration of this Discourse is clear and perspicuous. For, if those parts of the world do subsist of themselves, which we have usually termed the first Elements, namely, Earth; Water; Air; and Fire; which consist of a nature void of reason, as we see with our own eyes: [or [n],] if there be one matter [or, substance] common to them all, which those persons skilled in such things as these, are wont to term the Receptacle, Mother and Nurse of all: and if that be without Form and Figure, wholly void of Life and Reason: whence [hath it hapned,] (will any one affirm,) that there is in it Beauty and Ornature? Whence [proceeded] the distinction of the Elements? Whence, † the concord and agreement of things contrary? Who hath commanded the heavy Element of Earth to be carried on the moist substance [of Water?] Who hath turned back the nature of Waters, which tends downward, and hath carried it about on high, in the clouds? Who hath bound the force of Fire, and [hath commanded it] to lie hid in wood, and to mix with things contrary to its nature? Who hath mingled the cold air with the hot nature of Fire, and [o] by putting an end to the mutual fight between them, hath reduced them to concord

* Or, descended and mixt Himself with this, &c.

[n] Εἰ μία τοῖς πᾶσιν. You will render this passage very clear and perspicuous, if you add a particle, in this manner; ἢ εἰ μία τοῖς πᾶσιν ὑπόκειται οὐσία; or, if there be, &c. The meaning is: For, whether the Elements have their proper substance, or whether there be one and the same matter in them all, &c. Vales.

† Or, The running together into one of, &c.

[o] Τῆς πρὸς ἄλληλα μάχης. I write, τίς τῆς πρὸς ἄλληλα μάχης αὐτὰ διαλύσας, &c: or at least, καὶ τῆς πρὸς ἄλληλα μάχης, &c; which latter reading we have followed. Vales.

cord and agreement? Who hath propagated mankind, by inventing the † benefit of succession, [and hath enlarged it] to the * long-continuing space of an immortal Life? Who hath formed the Male, and fashioned the Female, thus as we see them; and P having made them both up into one harmonious Composition, hath found out one common principle of Generation to all living Creatures? Who has changed the liquid nature of Sperm, which of it self is corruptible, fluid, and q void of sense; and hath made it prolifick and fit for the begetting of living Creatures? Who even at this very instant works all these things, and infinite others besides these, which are far above wonder, and superiour to all admiration? Who is it, that every day and hour effects the Generations [r and corruptions] of all these, by an undiscerned and invisible power? The Wonder-working Word of God, is most deservedly to be lookt upon as the Authour of all these things. For the truly-omnipotent Word of God, diffuses Himself over all things; and having in an incorporeal manner extended Himself, both upwards to an immense height, and also downwards to a vast depth; and containing within His large hands as 'twere, the s Latitude and Longitude of the Universe, He hath compacted and bound together this whole world. Which when He had made up into an Instrument containing in it self all sorts of Harmony, for His own use; with || Reason and Wisdom He began to play upon the matter of Bodies, which is of it self irrational, without Form, and void of Figure; t fitly setting together and composing the disjuncts with the Diatones. He likewise Governs the Sun and Moon, and the other Luminaries of Heaven, by measures not to be unfolded; and leades [them] in such a manner, as may be most usefull and beneficial to this Universe. The same Word of God let Himself down upon the Earth also, where He produced living Creatures of every kind, and the variously-shap'd Beauties of Plants. The very same Word of God penetrated into the deep Recesses of the Sea likewise, and u invented the Nature of Swimming Creatures: and there also He made infinite and innumerable Forms and Varieties of all sorts of living Creatures. He it is, who perfecting and compleating the † Fœtus's conceived in the Wombe, within in the very Work-house of Nature, gives them Life and Form. He also lifts up on high the fluid and heavy Nature of the moist substance, and afterwards, when by a change He has made it sweet, brings it down gently and moderately to the Ground: but at Stated Seasons He bestows it in a more plentifull manner. Then, like some skilfull and excellent Husband-man, having sufficiently watered the fields with it, by dividing it into various Streams, and conveying it in several channells; and having mixt the moist substance with the dry ground; He dresses and adorns the Earth in a different manner; sometimes, with beautifull flowers; W at others, with a variety of figures; one while, with fragrant scents; at another, with various sorts of Fruits: and at another time He affords all manner of enjoyments that are delicious to the Taste. x But, why do I presume to rehearse the * wonderfull works of the Word of God, and to attempt impossibilities? whereas his Efficiency does far surmount all humane thought. Indeed, some persons have term'd Him The Nature of the Universe; others, The Soul of the World; others, Fate. Others have asserted, that He is that Supream and most Transcendent Being, God; thereby confounding, in a manner to me unintelligible, things that are at the greatest distance one from another: whilst they debase and throw down even to the earth, the Ruler of all things Himself, and the Unbegotten and Supream Nature; and joyn it with a Body, and with corruptible matter; and affirm that 'tis † wrap't up in the midst, between Living Creatures that are rational and irrational, between substances mortal and immortal. Thus they.

* Or, Powers.

† Or, Roll'd up.

BUT, The Divine Doctrine does assert, CHAP. XII.
a that That which is the Supream Good it Self, and the Cause of all things, is far beyond all Comprehension: and therefore, that it is ineffable, and inexpressible, nor can have a name given it; and that 'tis not only above expression, but all thought also. That 'tis not to be contained in place, nor is in Bodies: that [it exists] not in Heaven; nor in the b Æther; a Ἀνώτατον αὐτὸ δή. The words seem to be misplaced, and are to be restored in this manner; ἡ δ' ἔνθεος διδασκαλία αὐτὸ δὴ τὸ ἀεὶ ἀσαθὲς ἀνώτατον, πάντων τ' ἄπιον, &c; But, the Divine Doctrine does assert, that &c. Valesius.

b The Ancients distinguished the Æther, from the heaven; and by that name of Æther, meant the Element of Fire. So Anaxagoras, as Aristotle tells us in his third Book de Cœlo: whom almost all persons did afterwards follow, except the Peripateticks. For the Peripateticks termed the substance of Heaven, Æther; (See Aristotle de Mundo;) and affirmed that was a fifth Element. The same is asserted by Heraclides, in Allegoriis Homeri. Peripatetici, says he, Aiunt naturam Cælestium corporum aliam esse ab igne, &c. The peripateticks do say, that the Nature of the Celestial Bodies is different from fire, and do term it κυκλοφορητικὴν (a nature that moves circularly,) and say that it is a fifth Element. For fire, which in Greek is αἰθὴρ, does naturally move upwards: but the Sun and Moon do not. But the Stoicks also themselves called the Element of fire, Æther; and thought that it was the principal part, (or the τὸ ἡγεμονικὸν,) of the whole world. Censorinus (or whoever else is the Authour,) speakes to this effect, in Chap. 1. de Naturali Institutione. Mundi Principale

† Or, Manner.

* Εἰς μακρὸν ἀιῶνα. I reade it in one word, thus, εἰς μακραίωνα ζωῆς ἀθανάτου βίον διεξήγαγε, and have rendred it accordingly. Eusebius makes use of the same word above. Valesius.

P Ἄμφω τε εἰς ἀρμονίαν συναγαγών. I had rather point it thus, ἄμφω τε εἰς ἁρμονίαν συναγαγὼν μίαν, and having made them both, &c; and have rendred it accordingly. Valesius.

q Καὶ ἀλογίστου, and void of reason. I would rather say, ἀναιθήτου; which I have followed in my Version. Valesius.

r Τὰς τῶν γενέσεις καὶ ὠδῖνας. The two last words must be expunged, which crept in hither from the upper line. It might also be written, γενέσεις καὶ φθορὰς, the Generations and corruptions. Valesius.

s Πλάτει τε καὶ μήκει. It must be, πλάτη τε καὶ μήκη τοῦ παντὸς ὠκοδόμησεν, &c. Which is required by the Rules of Syntax. Valesius.

|| Or, A most wise and rational power, or faculty.

t Τοῖς διατόνοις τὰ διεζευγμένα συνάπτων. They are terms properly belonging to Musick; concerning which, besides other Authours, see Boëthius de Musicâ, Book. 1. Chap. 24, and 25; where he treats concerning the Synaphe, and the Diazeuxis. But the Translatour has rendred it, Lapides frontatos, i. e. Stones that are smoothed on both sides. and are even with the thickness of the wall, and are seen on both sides. Than which rendition, there is nothing more absurd. Instead of the term διατόνοις, it should, I thinke, be τόνοις, Tones, or, Notes, I had almost forgot to give notice, that at the beginning of this period the reading should be, ἔρεισόν τε τοῦτο παναρμόνιον, &c. Valesius. Concerning the term Diatones, see Boëthius's foremention*ed Book, Chap.* 21; the Title of which chapter is, De generibus Cantilenarum.

u Νυκτὸς ἐπενόησε φύσιν. In the Fuketian Copy, the reading is truer, thus νηκτὸν ἐπενόησε φύσιν, invented the Nature of Swimming Creatures. Valesius.

† Children.

W Τότε δὲ χήμασι παντοίοις. The Translatour renders it, modo herbarum formis cujusquemodi illustrando, sometimes by illustrating it with all sorts of forms of herbs. Which Rendition I don't approve of. In my judgment, Eusebius does rather mean the various figures of Countries. For, Europe has one sort of figure, Asia another, Africa another. Now, in these parts of the world, all Provinces have their figures, which God the Framer of this Universe hath given them; having divided the world, like a most pleasant garden, into various Bedds. By this term may also be meant, the different Dresses and Garbs of the Earth. For sometimes the Earth is green with grass, at others 'tis yellow with Corn; here 'tis shady with woods; there, 'tis pleasant with Gardens. Valesius.

x Τί μὴ δεῖ. I think it must be, τί δέ μοι. That is, But, why do I presume, &c: which manner of Expression is very emphatical; when the Oratour does as 'twere stop and chide Himself. In the Fuketian Copy 'tis τί με δεῖ. Valesius.

Principale Solem quidam putant, ut Cleanthes,&c. Some think the Sun to be the Principal of the world, as Cleanthes: and Chrysippus, the Æther, by whose perpetual motion the things under it are held and administred. And the Æther it self suffers nothing. So also Eusebius uses it below in this chapter; and S^t Austin in his 147^th Sermon de Tempore. Vales.

or in any other part of the Universe: but, that 'tis wholly without all things, and hid within some secret Recess of the understanding. The sacred Oracles do teach, that He is to be acknowledged the [c] Onely True God; He who is separated from all Corporeal Substance and [d] forreigne to all Ministerial Oeconomie. Wherefore all things, are said to have existed from Him, but not by Him.

[c] Not that the Son is not the true God; but because the Name of God doth properly belong to the Father, in regard he is the Fountain and Authour of the Deity. But, whereas Our Eusebius (in his Epistle to Euphration) hath said, that the Son is not the true God, (as Athanasius and the Fathers of the seventh Synod do object against him;) that is in no wise to be born with. For, although the Father be properly termed God; so that, whenever God is simply and absolutely spoken, we presently understand the Father: nevertheless, the Son is no less truly God, than the Father; in regard the Divinity of the Father and of the Son, is one and the Same. 'Tis certain, Eusebius (in his First Book against Marcellus, de Ecclesiastica Theologia, Chap. 10.) has expressely affirmed that the Son is the true God. Although in the following Chapter, he does a little diminish from what he had said above. The words of Christ in S^t John's Gospel (Chap. 17. v. 3.) are these. This is Life eternal, that they might know Thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent. Vales. 'Tis the Learned Petavius's opinion, that the word [Onely] in that Text of S^t John, does in no wise exclude the Son. For (as he notes from S^t Basil, Epist. 141. p. 927,) the words εἷς and μόνος are made use of in scripture, only to distinguish and separate the false Gods; that they may be removed, who are not true Gods, and therefore are not Gods. See Petav. Dogm. Theolog. Tom. 2. De Trini. Lib. 2. Cap. 4. Sect. 14.

[d] Ὑπερτικῆς οἰκονομίας ἀλλότειον. We have shown above, that ancient Divines attributed the Monarchy to God the Father; but to the Son, the οἰκονομίαν or disposition. Indeed, 'tis the Father's property to reigne: but the Son's property, who is the wisdom of the Father, is to dispose or set in order all things. Wherefore they affirmed, that Rest and Beatitude was the Father's property: but Operation, the Son's. Not that the Father Himself does not work; but because the Father works things unknown and secret; but the Son, things more manifest to us; as Marius Victorinus makes it out, in his first book against the Arians. And the Ancient Divines, before the Nicene Council, termed the Son ὑπηρέτην and ὕπαρχον: but afterwards they avoided these Names, as 'tis apparent from S^t Chrysostome in his Sermon de Sigillis. Vales.

But He Himself, as The Emperour, within in secret and inaccessible apartments, inhabits Light that is always unapproachable, and by the sole power of His own Will does [every where] Determine and Command. For, from His being willing, proceeds the Existence of every thing that is; and He not being willing, it is not. Now, He wills all things that are good, because by His own Essence He is [c] Goodness it self. But God the Word, by whom are all things, issues from above [f] in a manner inexpressible, out of his Excellent Father, as out of an everlasting and immense Fountain, and flows forth like a River; * spreading his streames all abroad, in order to the common preservation of every thing. And (that I may make use of an instance taken from our selves,) as the invisible and undiscovered Mind in us, (which, what, and of what sort it is as to its Essence, no mortal ever yet knew;) residing like some Emperour within the private Apartments of his own Palace, does alone will, and conclude upon those things that are to be done: but Discourse, as 'twere the onely-begotten Son, begotten by the mind in a manner that is inexplicable, and by a power not to be expresst, proceeds out of its Bosome, as from its Parent; and is the first Messenger and Interpreter of its Parent's thoughts to all persons; and makes a publick declaration of those things which its Parent has concluded on in secret; and actually performs its Parents Resolves, conveying it self to the Ears of all men. Whence 'tis, that men receive benefit from Discourse: but no person has ever beheld with His eyes, the latent and invisible mind it self, which is the Parent of Discourse. In the very same manner, or rather in a manner far beyond all comparison and resemblance, the most Perfect Word of the Supream God, in regard He is the Onely begotten Son of the Father, not consisting of a power of pronunciation, nor as to His nature made up of syllables, names, and words; nor expresst by a voice which strikes through the air: but existing the Living and Operating Word of the Supream God, and subsisting personally, as being the Power of God, and the Wisdom of God; proceeds from His Father's Divinity, and [comes forth] out of his Kingdom. And, in as much as He is the Good Off-spring of the Good Father, and the Common Saviour of all things, He [g] passes thorow, and derives a moysture upon all [living Creatures:] and by reason of His own fulness of Reason, Wisdom, Light, and of all Goods, He diffuses Himself over all things, not only those that are at hand and near, but them also that are at the remotest distance, whether on the Earth or in the Sea, or where ever else; if besides these there be in nature any other Seat or Habitation allotted to things. To all which, with the greatest equity and justice He appoynts Limits, and * Regions, and Laws, and stated Inheritances; and by his Royal power bestows upon, and supplies each of them with those things that are fit and agreeable. And to some of them he assignes [for their place of Residence,] those Arches that are above the world; [h] again, to others [He appoints] The Heaven for their Habitation; to others, Ætherial Mansions; to others, the Air; to others, the Earth. And afterwards, He does again remove them from hence to other places; and makes an exact enquiry into the lives of every one of them, and rewards their Morals, Behaviour, and Conversation. He likewise provides food and nourishment, not only for Creatures endued with reason, but for those that are irrational also, which are of use to men: [i] and to these Latter, He affords the enjoyment of a mortal and temporary Life; but to the Former, a participation of [a Life] immortal. In fine, He Himself, as being the Word of God, effects all things, is every where present, and by His rational power does penetrate and pass thorow all things. And looking up to His own Father, agreeably to His will and appointment, He governs and manages all [k] inferiour things, and which are consequent to Him, in regard He is the Common Saviour of all: existing in a manner The Middle [between both,] and joyning that Substance which has an Original, with [c] Καὶ αὐτοαγαθὸν. 'Tis plain that it should be αὐτὸ ἀγαθόν. In the Fuketian Copy the reading is αὐτοαγαθόν, in one word. Vales.

[f] Ἀνομβρῶν λόγῳ ἀῤῥήτῳ. Doubtless it must be λόγοις ἀῤῥήτοις, or λόγῳ ἀῤῥήτῳ, in a manner inexpressible; as Eusebius says a little lower. Vales.

* Or, Wholly overflowing, in order, &c.

[g] Ἐπιχεῖ τὰ σύμπαντα ζῶν. The last word must be expunged; unless you would rather write ζῶα, living Creatures. For at this place He speaks chiefly concerning living Creatures. Vales.

* Or, Places.

[h] Τοῖς δ' αὐτὸν ἔφαγον οἰκεῖν. Write it in words disjoyned, thus, τοῖς δ' αὖ τὸν ἔφαγον οἰκεῖν, τοῖς δ' ἄυ διθείας διατιθεὰς, τοῖς δ' ἄυ ἀέρα: again, to others [He appoints,] &c. Vales.

[i] Καὶ τοῖς μὲν θνητοῖς. I doubt not but Eusebius wrote, καὶ τοῖς μὲν θνητῆς καὶ φθαρτοῖς ζωῆς ἀπόλαυσιν, τοῖς δὲ ἀθανάτου μετουσίαν παρέχων; in which manner the Translatour seems to have read; and we have rendred it accordingly. Vales.

[k] Τὰ κάτω, καὶ μετ' αὐτὸν ἀκόλουθος. At this place the words seem to be transpo-fed; which I thus set in order; τοῖς ἐκείνου νεύμασιν ἀκολούθως, τὰ κάτω ἢ μεθ' αὐτὸν διακυβερνᾶ, agreeably to his will and appointment, &c. A little after where the reading is, δεσμός τις μέσῳ ἕωτ, the word μέσῳ must be blotted out, in regard it occurs presently. Valef.

with the unbegotten [Father.] For the Word of God is a most firm middle Bond, which does bind together things distant one from another, and suffers them not to depart far asunder. He is that Providence which Governs the Universe: He it is, who takes care of, Composes, and Corrects all things. He is the Power of God, and the Wisdom of God. Lastly, He is the * Onely begotten Word, God begotten of God. For, † In the Beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. All things were made by Him; and without Him was not any thing made that was made: as the sacred expressions of Divine men do inform us. He is the Common Planter of all things, by whose assistance the substance of all things does sprout and flourish; being continually watered by showers from Him, and always [enlivened] with new Vigour, and every day endued with Comelines and Beauty. He holds the Reines [of the Universe in his hand,] and directs all things in a straight Course, and by the arbitrement of his Father, manages the Helm of that vast Ship of the whole World. Such an incomparable Artist as this, the Onely-Begotten Son namely, when He who is God over all, [1] as being the [most excellent] Father of the most excellent * Offspring. Fœtus, had begotten of Himself; He bestowed Him on this World as the chiefest Good: [m] and having infused Him as the Soul and Life into a Body inanimate, and [mixt] His own Word [and Reason] with the irrational Nature of Bodies; by the Divine power of His own Word He enlightened and gave life to formless Matter, which was without shape, life, and figure. Whom we ought to acknowledge and contemplate, as continually and in all places present in Matter, and in the Elements of Bodies; and as the Begetter of all Creatures endued with Life: and [must own] Him to be The Light; and the Intellectual Product of inexplicable Light. Who, as to Essence, is One; because begotten of One Father: but contains in Himself many powers and faculties. For, because there be many parts of the world, [n] we must not for that reason think that there are many Powers: nor, because many things have been made, is it therefore fit we should determine, that there be many Gods also. [o] Indeed, those Sons of persons that were worshippers of many Gods, in regard as to their minds they were childish and simple, have err'd miserably; whilst they Deified the Parts of the Universe, and divided the world, which in it self was one, into many. 'Tis the same, as if any person should take the eyes of one entire man, by themselves, and should say that they were one Man; and again, the ears, another man; and in like manner, the head, [another:] as also the neck, and the breast, and the shoulders, and the feet, and the hands; and having thus divided the rest of the members into pieces; and Lastly, by a mental abstraction, severed the Faculties of the Senses; should affirm Him, who is really but one, to be a great many men. [He that should proceed thus,] would do nothing more than expose his own madness to be laught at by men of sense. Exactly such a one is he, who forms to himself an infinite number of Gods, out of the parts of one world; or who supposes, that the world it self, which has both a Beginning, and also consists of many parts, is a God; and who does not understand, that 'tis no way possible, that the Divine Nature should consist of parts. For, should it be compounded, it would want some other thing, which might compound it: [p] nor again, could that in any wise be divine, which should consist of many parts. For, how [should it be divine,] whenas it would consist of [things] unlike and different, and of worse and better? But, [the Nature of God] is simple, indivisible, and uncompounded; and is far beyond all this visible constitution of the world. Wherefore, [q] that Preacher of Truth, has cryed out with a loud voice, plainly expressing Himself in this manner. 'Tis certain, the Word of God, who [existed] before all things, is the only Saviour of all rational Creatures. [r] But God who is above all, the Authour of the Generation of the Word; in regard He alone is the Cause of all things, is properly styled the Father of His own Word, as of His Onely-Begotten: but He Himself acknowledges no superiour Cause. Therefore, He Himself is the Onely God: but the Onely-Begotten proceeds from Him; He is the Saviour of all, the One Word of God, who [pierces] thorow all things. [s] Indeed, this sensible World (as 'twere some many-string'd Harp, made up of dislike chords, whereof some are sharp, others flat, some

[1] Οἷα πατὴρ ἀγαθόν. It will be far more elegant, if you add a word, in this manner, οἷα πατὴρ ἀγαθὸς, ἀγαθὸν, &c. as being the most excellent, &c. I don't doubt but Eusebius wrote thus: for he has often expresst himself so above. Valef.

[m] Ἅτε ψυχὴν καὶ σώματι ἀψύχῳ. Here also the particle is misplac't. Write therefore, ἅτε ψυχὴν σώματι ἀψύχῳ, καὶ τῇ ἄλλῃ σωμάτων, and having infused him as the soul and life, &c. Unless you had rather wholly expunge that particle. 'Tis indeed wanting in the Fuketian Copy. Valef.

[n] Πολλὰς δυνάμεις ὑπολητέον. The Translatour has done ill in rendring it Facultates, Faculties. For, those which Eusebius does here term δυνάμεις, in the following member of the period he calls Gods. It ought therefore to have been rendred Potestates. For so the Latines do term Dæmons, whom the Greeks are wont to stile δυνάμεις. Servius in B. 3. Æneid. Nam potestates, says he, aliæ Cælestes sunt, &c. For some powers are Celestial, others Terrene, others mixt. And in B. 4. Nam potestates aut terrenæ sunt, &c. For the powers are either Terrene, or Aerial, or Ætherial. Chalcidius on Plato's Timæus, pag. 97; Quæ potestates, says he, Ætherii, aerique sunt Dæmones, &c. Which powers are Ætherial and Aerial Dæmons, removed from our sight, and our other senses. St Austin uses the same term, in his tenth Book de Civitate Dei, Chap. 26: and in his Epistle to Volusianus. Apuleus in his Apology. Longinianus in his Epistle to Augustinus. And Amm. Marcellinus, Book 21. Amongst the Greeks, nothing occurs more frequently. St Jerom on the 2d Chapter of Joël: A dextris, says he, & à sinistris virtutes & fortitudines Dei legimus; quas Græci δυνάμεις Vocant, &c. Valef.

[o] Δεῖ μὲν δὲ οἷα νήπιοι. At my peril write, οἱ μὲν δὴ, οἷα νήπιοι πολυθέων ἀνδρῶν παῖδες, &c. Which is the same as if he would have said, οἱ μὲν δὴ πολύθεοι, Indeed, those Superstitious Worshippers of many Gods. In the Fuketian Copy, the reading is, δεινὴν δὲ οἷα, &c. πλάνην ἐπλανήθησαν. Excellently well. Valef.

[p] Οὐδ' ἂν πολυμερὴς ἴσοι. It must be οὐδ' ἂν πολυμερὴς, &c: nor again, could, &c. Presently, after those words πῶς γὰρ must be set a point of Interrogation; which the Translatour perceived not. Valef.

[q] He means St John the Evangelist, whose words he had cited a little before, In the beginning was the Word, &c. Which words Eusebius does now expound by way of paraphrase. Valef.

[r] Θεὸς δὲ ὁ ἐπέκεινα λόγου γεωσιάρχης. The Translatour construed the words thus, ὁ ἐπέκεινα λόγου. For he renders it, Qui dicendo exprimi nequit, who can't be expresst in words. Which rendition don't please me. I should therefore choose to construe the words another way, so as that it may be said, γεωσιάρχης λόγος, that is, the Origine and Authour of the Word. 'Tis certain, Eusebius is wont to term God the Father, τὸν ἐπέκεινα πάντων, Him who is above all. Indeed, at this place he compares The Word to The Father. And he says, that The Word is πρὸ πάντων, before all things: but the Father, He says, is ἐπέκεινα πάντων, beyond, or superiour to all things: every where attributing more to the Father. Valef.

[s] Ὡς μὲν ἓν ὁ αἰσθητὸς κόσμος, &c. Doubtless it must be, ὁ μὲν ἓν αἰσθητὸς κόσμος; Indeed, this sensible world. Which is made apparent from the following words. Valef.

some

some slack, others strain'd, and otherſome betwixt both; but all well fitted and proportion'd, according to the Rules of the Art of Muſick: in the ſame manner this world) conſiſting of many parts, and compounded in a various manner; of Cold namely and its contrary Heat; and again, of a moyſt ſubſtance, and dry the contrary thereto; and of all theſe making up one Harmony, may fitly be ſtyled the Great Muſical Inſtrument and Compoſure of the Great God. But the Divine Word, who neither conſiſts of parts, nor is made up of Contraries, but is indiviſible and uncompounded, with great art and skill does play upon [this muſical Inſtrument] the Univerſe; and makes ſuch a melody as is * gratefull to his Father the ſupream King, and befitting Himſelf. † For, as in one Body, the Members and parts, the Bowels, and almoſt innumerable Entrails, are compacted and ſet together; but one inviſible ſoul is diffuſed through all its parts; & one mind, which is indiviſible and incorporeal: ſo alſo in this Univerſe, the World it ſelf, conſiſting of many parts, is made up into one; but the Word of God, whoſe power is manifold and Omnipotent, is in like manner One; and paſſes through all things, and is ‖ without wandring diffuſed and ſpread over all things, and is the cauſe of all things that are made in them. Do you not with your eyes ſee this whole world? How one Heaven containes ‖ innumerable * Quires of Stars which go their Rounds about it. Again, how One Sun [leads up] the many other [Daunces of the Stars,] and by the tranſcendency of His Own Light, obſcures the ſplendour of all the reſt. In the ſame manner, the Father being One, his Word muſt be One alſo, as being the excellent [Off-ſpring] of the excellent Father. But, ſhould any perſon complain, becauſe there are not more; ſuch a One has as good reaſon to find fault, becauſe there are not more Suns, more Moons, more Worlds, and a thouſand things beſide; whilſt like a mad man, he attempts to ſubvert and diſcompoſe thoſe things, which are right and well-conſtituted by Nature. For, as in things viſible, One Sun does enlighten this whole Senſible World: ſo in things intelligible, One Almighty Word of God illuminates all things, in a manner to us unknown and inviſible. For, even in Man himſelf, one Soul and one Faculty of reaſoning, is the Framer of many things all under one: for, one and the ſame mind, having been inſtructed in the knowledge of many matters, attempts both to till the Ground, and to build a Ship, and to ſteer it, and to ſet up an Houſe. Alſo, one mind and reaſon in man, is capable of numerous Sciences. For, one and the ſame mind is skill'd in Geometry, and in Aſtronomy; and delivers the rules of Grammar, and Rhetorick, and Phyſick: nor is [the mind] Miſtreſs of theſe Liberal Sciences only, but of Arts Manual alſo. And yet no man was ever hitherto of Opinion, that there are many [Rational] ſoules in one body: nor hath any one admired or had a ſuſpicion of many ſubſtances in the ſame man, becauſe he is capable of being skill'd in many Sciences. Let us ſuppoſe any one to have found an unform'd Lump of clay; and, (after He has ſoftened it with his hands) to have faſhioned it into the ſhape of a living Creature; the head in one figure: the hands and feet in another; and again the eyes in another, as alſo the cheeks in another; and likewiſe † by the Art of a Potter to have formed the ears, mouth, noſe, breaſt, and ſhoulders. Although there are many figures, parts and members formed in this one Body; yet it muſt not therefore be thought, that there were as many Framers of this Work: but we muſt acknowledge the Artiſt of the whole work to be but one; and muſt neceſſarily commend that ſingle perſon, who by the help of one Reaſon and one Faculty, has framed the whole Work. The ſame is to be thought concerning this whole world; which although it be one, yet conſiſts of many parts. Nor muſt we therefore ſuppoſe many framing Powers; or name many Gods: but muſt attribute the appellation of Divinity to the true God's One power and wiſdom, which is compleatly furniſhed with all manner of ſagacity, and with the perfection of Harmony: which by One and that a ſingular power and virtue, paſſes thorow all things; and goes through the whole world; and conſtitutes and enlivens all things; and laſtly × from it ſelf gives a various ſupply to all and ſingular Bodies and Elements. So alſo, one and the ſame impreſſion of the Solar Light, at one and the ſame inſtant illuſtrates the air; enlightens the eyes; heats the [ſenſe of] touching; fattens the earth, and gives increaſe to plants: beſides, it conſtitutes Time; rules and leades the Stars; goes round Heaven; beautifies the world; and renders the power of God, manifeſt and apparent to every one: and all theſe things it performs, by one and the ſame force of its own Nature. In like manner, the Nature of Fire, refines gold, melts lead; diſſolves wax; dries clay; and burns wood: ſo many, and ſuch great things it performs by one power and faculty, that namely of burning. In the very ſame manner, the Word of God, the ſupream Moderatour of all things, who paſſes through all things, exiſts in all things, and ‖ overſpreads all things, as well Celeſtial as Terreſtrial; governs things inviſible and viſible, and by ʸ unſpeakable powers rules the Sun Himſelf, Heaven, and the whole world; is preſent with all things by his active power, and goes thorow all things. And on the Sun Himſelf, and on the Moon, and the Stars, He ſheads forth a perpetual light out of His own Fountain of light. The Heaven, which He hath made as the moſt fit reſemblance of His own Greatneſs, He does for ever govern. But the Powers which are beyond Heaven and the world it ſelf, namely the Angels and Spirits, and the intelligent and rational ſubſtances; are by Him filled and enricht, with life and light, and wiſdom, and all manner of Virtue, and Beauty, and Goodneſs, out of his own Treaſures. Laſtly, by one and the ſame framing Faculty, He never ceaſes from furniſhing the Elements with ſubſtance, and Bodies with mixtures and Temperaments; and moreover, with Forms, and Figures, and innumerable Qualities;

* Or, Due.

† Ὡς ὑφ' ἑνὶ σώματι. There is a particle wanting here; which I put in thus; ὡς μὲν ἓν ὑφ ἑνὶ σώματι, for, as in one body. It may alſo be, ὡς δὲ ὑφ' ἑνὶ, But, as in one, &c. Valeſ.

‖ Ἁπλανῶς ἐφιπτωμένου. Perhaps it ſhould be ἀφανῶς, inviſibly. For, The Word of God in an inviſible manner is diffuſed through all things. But the common reading is not raſhly to be rejected. For Euſebius means, that the Word of God is infuſed into all things, not as a ſpirit, which in a wandring motion paſſes thorow all things, and is carried ſometimes this way, another while that way; but as a Soul, which is ſpread into all the members at once, and wanders not from theſe, to thoſe. The Tranſlatour renders ἁπλανῶς, reverà, really. Valeſ.

‖ Ἀμφὶ μυείας. Any one may perceive, that the words are miſplac't here alſo. Write therefore, χωρείας ἄνεφεν ἀμφὶ τῶν πολύσημ; and we have rendred it accordingly. A little after, I read, ἥλιον εἷς, ἀλλ' ὃ πλείους, ὡς κ, &c. Again, One Sun, but not more; ſo that even by the tranſcendency ——He obſcures—— &c. Valeſ.

* Or, Daunces.

× Ποικίλην τῆς ἐξ αὐτῆς χορηγίαν πομπήν. The article muſt be blotted out; or at leaſt it muſt be πᾶσι ἐξ αὐτῆς, as 'tis in the Fuketian Copy. Preſently, where the reading is φωτὸς ἡλίου θερμόλη, I had rather read θερμόλη, as 'tis in the Fuketian Copy. Valeſ.

† In Potters-work. So Valeſius.

‖ Or, Runs over.

ʸ Ἀῤῥήτοις δυνάμεσιν. It muſt, I think, be, ἀῤῥήτων λόγων δυνάμεσιν ἐνισχεῖ; or elſe, as 'tis in the Fuk. Copy, ἀῤῥήτοις δυνάμεσιν, by inexpreſſible or unſpeakable powers. A little after, where the reading is, εἴτε αὖπω μὲν ἡλίῳ; the Tranſlatour ſeems to have read, εἶτα moreover. But it would be better, were it writen thus, ἐν αὐτῷ μὲν, &c; and on the Sun Himſelf, &c. Valeſ.

z Ἔν τε ζώοις καὶ φυτοῖς. In the Fuk. Copy, these words ἔν τε are wanting; they don't indeed seem very necessary. Vales.

z as well in living creatures as plants; not only in rational Beings, but in Brutes; differencing and distinguishing all things with an admirable variety, and by one and the same power plentifully supplying all things with all things: hereby most clearly demonstrating, that not an Harp consisting of seven Chords, but this one all-Harmonious World, is the work of The One World-creating Word.

CHAP. XIII.

a Λέγω μὴ δὴ τὰ ἑξῆς καὶ διασαφῶ μοι. It must be written in conjoyned words, thus λέγωμὴ δῆτα ἑξῆς καὶ διασαφῶμοι, as 'tis in the Fuketian Copy. Vales.

a PRocced we therefore in the next place to unfold the reason, which moved this Almighty Word to make His descent into this world. A sort of ignorant and unthinking men, not apprehending that this Word of God has the Presidency over Heaven and Earth, that He was begotten of His Father's Divinity, [the stream] as 'twere from that supream Fountain it self, and is always present and conversant with this world; and that He exhibits most apparent and manifest Indications of His own Providence and Care in reference to men: have given the adorable name [of God] to the Sun and Moon, and to the Heaven it self and the Stars. Nor have they stop't here: but have likewise deified a terrene Nature, and the Fruits produc'd from the Earth, and all manner of nourishment of Bodies: framing for themselves Images of Ceres, of Proserpina and Bacchus, and of infinite other such like [Deities.] Neither has it sufficed them to proceed thus far: but they have not been afraid of declaring the thoughts of their own minds, and Speech it self the Interpreter of those thoughts, to be Gods: terming the mind, Minerva; and Speech, Mercurius: they have likewise named those faculties of the mind, whereby Arts and Sciences are acquired, * Moneta and The Muses. Nor have they stop't here: but making every day new accessions to their absurdities, by reason of their transcendent impiety, they have deified their own Commotions and perturbations of mind, which they ought to have had an aversion for, and to have cur'd by the Prescripts of Temperance. And even to their very Lust it self, and to the Mischievous and unruly disease of their Souls, and to those parts of the Body that are the Incentives to obscenity; b and moreover, to that intemperance excessively prone to filthy pleasures, they have given the names of Cupido, Priapus, and Venus, and other such like appellations as these. Nor have they stopt here: but debasing themselves to the Generations of Bodies, and to this mortal life here below, they have deified mortal men, and after death which is common to all, have termed them Hero's and Gods; imagining that the immortal and divine Nature does * wander about Tombes and Sepulchres. Nor has this put a stop to their madness: but they have honoured all sorts of irrational Creatures, and the most noxious kinds of Creeping things, with the venerable Title [of Divinity.] Neither were they satisfied herewith: but they have cut down Trees, and hew'd out Stones, and have dug forth the Mettals of the earth, Brass, Iron, and other matter; whereof they have form'd Resemblances of women and shapes of men, and figures of wild beasts and creeping things: and afterwards paid them a divine worship and honour. Nor have they put an end to their madness here: but have given the Name of Gods to those malignant Dæmons, which had hol'd in Images, and lay lurking within obscure and dark Recesses, and who with greediness gap'd after and swallowed Libations, and the stinking savours of sacrifices. Nor did they stop here: but c by certain Ligatures of forbidden Craft, and by d wicked and compulsory enchanting Verses and charms, they allured and enticed those Dæmons and invisible powers which fly about the Air, to be their e Assistants and Familiars. f Moreover, some mortal men were deified by one sort of people; others, by another. For the Greeks honoured Bacchus, and Hercules, and Æsculapius, and Apollo, and some other men, with the name of Hero's and Gods. But the Egyptians esteemed Horus, and Isis, and Osiris, and other such like men as these, to be Gods. And these persons, who on account of their transcendent sagacity, boasted of the Invention of Geometry, Astronomy, and Arithmetick; understood not, nor were so well skilled, (though in g their own judgments they lookt upon themselves to be such wise and knowing men;) as to weigh and consider, the measures of the power of God, and [to examine] how great a difference there is between His, and a mortal and brutish Nature.

* Or, Mnemosyne, that is, the Mother of the Muses.

b Καὶ ὅπῃ τῇ περὶ ἀφροδίτων ἡδονῶν ἀκρασία. It is to be made, καὶ ἔτι πλὴν περὶ ἀφροδίτων ἡδονῶν ἀκρασίαν, &c. and moreover, &c; for 'tis referred to the word ἀνεπόνλες. Eusebius says, that unchast passions were consecrated by men. For they called their Lust by the name of Cupid; and the members wherewith acts of obscenity were performed, Priapus; and that intemperance which spreads it self into filthy pleasures, they termed Venus. This is the meaning of this place, which the Translatour perceived not. Vales.

* Roll, or, Tumble.

c Καταδέσμοις πολλὴν ἀπειργημένης γοητείας. καταδεσμὸς is a proper Term of Magick Art. Artemidorus (B. 1. C. 79.) joyns φαρμακείας and καταδέσμους together. Plato (B. 11. De Legibus, pag. 933.) has used καταδέσεις to signifie the same. See Harpocration in the verb καταδεῖδαι. The Latines call them Ligaturas, Ligatures. S^t Austin's words, in his seventh Tractate on S^t John, are these. Usque adeo, fratres mei, &c. In so much, my Brethren, that those very persons, who seduce by Ligatures, by charms, by the deceits and engines of the Enemy, mix the name of Christ with their own Charms. Orosius (B. 4. C. 13.) calls it obligamentum magicum, a Magick Bond or Tye. Vales.

d Ἐκθέσμοις τε καὶ ἐναγέσιν ᾠδαῖς. It must be made ἐπαναγκάσιοις, compulsory; from the Fuk. Copy. Vales.

e Παρέδρους. Tertullian in his Book De Anima, has termed them in Latine Paredros Spiritus, which he joyns with the Catabolick and Pythonick Spirits, who were put into men by Magicians. Now, they were called Paredri Dæmones, who assisted men, and kept off diseases and unhappy accidents from them. This we are told by Tertullian (in his Apolog. Chap. 23.) in these words. Si & somnia immittunt, habentes simul invitatorum angelorum & Dæmonum adsistentem sibi potestatem. For Magicians had Dæmons that assisted and obeyed them, who were their Paredri, Familiars; by whose help they performed many miracles. Besides, they put such Spirits into others, that they might either infuse dreames into them, or be always present with them in order to their defence. The former sort of Spirits they termed ὀνειροπομπὰς, senders or causers of Dreames: the Latter they call'd παρέδρους, Assistants or Familiars. Sometimes also, by Magick charms they threw boys against the ground, who being afterwards raised, as 'twere from a Fit of the falling-sickness, foretold things future to those that consulted them. Which thing they performed by Catabolick Spirits, as Heraldus has rightly remark't at Tertullian's Apology. From hence Salmasius's mistake is made apparent, who (in his notes on Spartianus, pag. 40,) affirms, that those were termed Paredri, who from being men were reckoned amongst the Gods, and were made Assessors to the Gods. Which opinion of Salmasius's, Gothofred has embraced, in his notes on Tertullian's second Book ad Nationes. Turnebus (B. 26. Adversar.) is much righter; save that he renders it malos genios, evil Genii: whereas notwithstanding, the Good Genii, and ἀλεξίκακοι were so termed, as Lucian writes concerning Hephæstion. Lastly, they usualy termed the Infernal Gods, not the Celestial, Paredri; which being not observed by Salmasius, was the occasion of his mistake. See Demosthenes in Orat. Funebr. about the close: and Diodorus Siculus, B. 1. pag. 45: and lastly Rufinus's Eccles. Histor. B. 2. Chap. 13. From which Authours 'tis plain, that the Infernal Gods were termed Paredri. Vales.

f Θυηλάς τε μὴ. I read θυηλάς γε μὴν ἄνθρας; Moreover, &c. Which though a small fault, yet ought not to have been omitted. Vales.

g Παρ' ἑαυτῆς οὐκ ἔγνωσαν. Here the words seem to be misplac't. I read therefore, οὐκ ἔγνωσαν, οὐδὲ σωφῆκαν οἱ παρ' ἑαυτοῖς σοφοὶ, &c. Which way of writing this place, we have followed in our Version. In the Fuk. Copy, this passage is written thus, γεωμετρίας πλὴ εὑρεσιν, ἀστρονομίας τε καὶ ἀριθμητικῆς αὐξοντες, παρ' ἑαυτοῖς οὐκ ἔγνωσαν, &c. Which reading I don't approve of. Vales.

Hence

Hence it was, that they were not ashamed of deifying every sort of filthy and ill-favoured Beasts, and all manner of living Creatures, and venomous Serpents, and savage Beasts. Also, the Phœnicians gave the Title of Gods to [h] Melcatharus and Usorus, and to some other obscure persons, who had heretofore been men. And so did the Arabians, to one [i] Dusares and Obadas; [k] and the Getæ, to Zamolxis; and the Cilicians, to Mopsus; and the Thebæans, to Amphiareus: and again some [made Gods] of these, others of those; persons in nothing different from a mortal nature; but such as in reality were meer men. All the Egyptians by a general consent, the Phœnicians, the Greeks, and in short the whole Body of mankind which the Rayes of the Sun do enlighten, [have attributed divine honours] to the parts of the world, and to the Elements, and to [l] the fruits which spring out of the Earth. And which is yet more strange, although they acknowledge their adulteries, their Sodomies, and their Ravishments of women; nevertheless they have filled all Cities and Towns and Countries, with their Temples and Statues and Shrines; and in a conformity to the Morals of their Gods, they have totally ruined their own Souls. Indeed, in words and expressions you might frequently hear Gods named amongst them, [m] and Sons of Gods, also Heroes, and Good Genii: But the thing it self was quite different and contrary. For they grac't contrary things with contrary names: in the same manner as if a man desirous to shew another the Sun and the Luminaries in the Heaven, should not lift up His eyes thither; but should cast his hands downwards toward the earth, and throwing them on the ground, grope for the Celestial Powers in the dirt and mire. Thus mankind, [induced thereto] by a stupidity of mind, and the fraud of mischeivous Dæmons, was fully perswaded, that the intelligible Nature of God, which does far transcend Heaven and the world it self, resided below in the Generation of Bodies, in the * Affections of mortals, and in † death. Further, men were arrived at such an height of madness, that they sacrificed their dearest Pledges to them; nor would they spare even Nature it self; but, out of fury and a distraction of mind, murdered their only-begotten, and the dearest of their children. For, what can be supposed a madder action than this, to sacrifice men; and to pollute all Cities, and their own houses with intestine murders? Doe not the Greeks themselves give testimony to these matters? Is not every History fill'd with the rehearsall of these things? The Phœnicians did every year sacrifice their most beloved and only begotten children, to Saturn. [n] To the very same [God,] in [the Island] Rhodes, on the sixth day of the month Metageitnion, they offered men in sacrifice. Also at Salamis, in a Temple of Minerva Agraulis and Diomedes, 'twas the custom, that a man, pursu'd by others should run round about the Altar thrice; after which the Priest stab'd him into the stomack with a Launce; and thus he laid him on a pile of wood set on fire, and wholly consumed him. In Egypt likewise, innumerable slaughters of men were committed. For at Heliopolis, three men were every day sacrificed to Juno: the barbarousness of which thing, King [o] Amoses having look't into and rightly considered, ordered the like number of men made up of wax, to be substituted in their room. Also in [the Island] Chius they sacrificed a man to Bacchus Omadius; and they did the like in Tenedos. In Lacedæmon they performed a sacrifice to Mars by [offering] men: and they did the very same in Crete, where they sacrificed a man to Saturn. At Laodicea in Syria, a Virgin was every year sacrificed to Minerva; in place of whom a Hart is now offered. Moreover, the Libyans and Carthaginians appeased their own Gods with humane sacrifices. [p] Also, the Dumateni of Arabia offered a Boy in sacrifice yearly, whom they were wont to bury under the Altar. History does inform us, that all the Greeks in general, before they marched out to war, usually sacrificed a man: and the Thracians and Scythæ are recorded to have done the like. The Athenians mention [q] the Virgins

[h] Μελκάνθαρον, Melcantharus. Eusebius (book 1. De Præparat. chap. 10; where he sets forth the Theology of the Phœnicians:) terms the one of these Gods, Melicarthus the son of Demaron, the Grandchild [or, Nephew] of Cælus: the other he calls Usous Brother to Hypsuranius, who was the first that found out the Coverings of skins. In the Fuketian Copy, the reading is μελκάθαρον καὶ ὔσωον, Melcatharus and Usorus. Vales.

[i] Δύσαρίν τινα καὶ ὄβοδον. The reading must be καὶ ὀβόδαν, and Obodas. For the Arabians worshipped Obodas and Dusares, as Tertullian tells us, Book 2. ad Nationes, Chap. 8. Concerning Obodas see Uranius in his fourth Book of Arabick Antiquities. Obodas was a most ancient King of the Arabians, who was buried amongst the Nabathæi, and had divine honours paid him by them; as Stephanus relates in the word ὀβόδα. From him many Kings of Arabia were afterwards called by the name of Obodas; two of whom Josephus mentions; the one in the times of Alexander King of the Jews; the other, in the Reign of Herod. Strabo also makes mention of the latter. Further, as far as may be conjectured from Histories, the Arethæ and Obodæ Reigned by turns amongst the Arabians: so that, after an Arethas, succeeded an Obodas; and after an Obodas, an Arethas. And this seems to have continued a long while. The Nabathæi worshipped Dusares also, by which name they meant Bacchus, as Isidorus in Hesychius informs us. Stephanus in the word Δυσάρειοι, speaks concerning this God also. In the Fuketian Copy, the reading here is, Δύσαρίν τινα ὄβοδον. Vales.

[k] Καὶ ὁπηγκτὸν. It must be written, καὶ οἱ γετῶς; understand παῖδες; and we have rendred it accordingly. Zamolxis is a known God of the Getæ. Presently, the reading must be, καὶ τὸν μόψον κίλικες, καὶ τ' ἀμφιάρεω θηβαῖοι. καὶ πάλιν ἕτεροι ἄλλος, ἄλλοι πάλιν ἑτέρους, &c; and the Cilicians, to Mopsus, &c. In the Fuketian Copy the reading is, καὶ παρ' ἑτέροις, ἄλλοι πάλιν ἑτέρους. Vales.

[l] Βλασθήτας καρπὲς λείπ. The last word was added by the Transcriber of this Book, to the intent he might thereby shew, that there is an imperfection here. Indeed, at this place some words seem to be wanting. Unless you have a mind to understand these words in common, θεὲς ἀπηρίθμησαν gave the Title of Gods, which are made use of a little before. In the Fuketian Copy, that word λείπει occurs not; but after the word καρπὲς a point is set. Vales.

[m] Καὶ θεῶν πάλας. I think it should be, καὶ θεῶν παῖδας, and the Sons of Gods. In the Fuketian Copy 'tis πάλας. Vales.

* Dispositions, or, passions.

† Or, Deaths.

[n] Τὸ δ' αὐτὸ τοῦτο καὶ ἐν ῥόδῳ. From Porphyrius it must be made πῷ δ' αὐτῷ τότῳ, to the very same; understand κρόνῳ, Saturn. Vales.

[o] Ἀφ' ὧν ἐμώσης. Doubtless it must be made ἀπ' ὧν, from Porphyrius's Second Book de Abstinentia; whom our Eusebius has transcrib'd here, almost word for word. And so the reading is in the Fuketian Copy; agreeably whereto we have rendred it. Vales.

[p] Καὶ δ' ἔ μάτῳ, οἱ δὲ τῆς ἀ- εβείας. I reade καὶ δουματίωοι δὲ, Also, the Dumateni; from Porphyrius in the forecited place: although in Porphyrius, the ordinary reading is δουμάτιοι Dumatii. Nor is it otherwise written in Eusebius's fourth Book De Præparatione, chap. 16. But Dumateni, as I have said, pleases me best. Stephanus's words are these: δ'ουμαθὰ, πόλις ἀραβίας. ὁ πολίτης δουμαθηνὸς, ὡς γλαῦκος ἐν β. ἀραβικῆς ἀρχαιολογίας; that is: Dumatha, a City of Arabia: a Citizen [whereof is termed] Dumathenus, as Glaucus, [says] in the Second Book of his Arabick Archæology. Indeed the Arabians in their Patronymicks, most commonly have this termination. Vales.

[q] Τὰς λεωκόρους. These words are wanting in Porphyrius, which our Eusebius has added of his own. Indeed Porphyrius, in regard he treated concerning humane Victims, and spake of the Athenians, ought not to have omitted this instance. There was heretofore one Leus Amongst the Athenians, the son of Orpheus, as Suidas says; who (when Athens was afflicted with famine, and an answer had been given by Apollo Delphicus, that the City should no otherwise be preserved, unless some one of the Citizens would offer their daughters in sacrifice to the Gods;) delivered up his three daughters, Phasithea, Theope, and Eubule, to be sacrificed for the safety of the City. Ælianus Book 12. Variæ Historiæ, Chap. 28;) instead of Phasithea, names her Praxithea. Nothing occurs more frequently amongst the Greek Orators, than the mention of these three daughters of Leus; as in Aristides's Panathenaicus, in Libanius's thirteenth Declamation. Demosthenes or whoever else is the Authour, in the Oration entitled Ὑπαφιῶς, reckons this Leus amongst the ἐπώνυμοι, or Founders of the Tribes;

Tribes; from whom the Tribe of Leon took its name. For theſe are his words: ἡκηκόεσαν οἱ λεοντίδαι μυθολογημένας τὰς λέω κούρας, ὡς αὐτὰς ἔδοσαν σφάγιον τοῖς πολίταις ὑπὲρ τῆς χώρας. Clemens Alexandrinus does likewiſe mention him, in his Protrepticon; and Gregory Nazianzene in his Poem De Virtute; and amongſt modern writers, Leopardus in his nineteenth Book, in the laſt chapter ſave one. Valeſ.

[r] Erechtheus the ſon of Pandion, had ſix daughters; Protogenia, Pandora, Procris, Creuſa, Orithia, and Chthonia.

daughters of Leus, [r] and the daughter of Erechtheus, as offered in ſacrifice amongſt them. And who is ignorant, that even at this preſent, [s] in the City Rome, on the Feaſt of Jupiter Latiaris, a man is ſacrificed? The moſt approved perſons amongſt the Philoſophers, have by their own teſtimony evidenced, that theſe things are thus. Moreover, Diodorus, who compoſed an Epitome of Libraries, ſays that the Africans offered as a publick ſacrifice, two hundred of their nobleſt Boyes to Saturn; and that [t] three hundred other perſons voluntarily preſented their own ſons, not fewer in number, to be ſacrificed. But Dionyſius, the Writer of the Roman Hiſtory, does relate, that Jupiter himſelf in [u] his own name, and Apollo, required Humane ſacrifices in Italy, from thoſe termed The Aborigines: and ſays farther, that thoſe perſons from whom theſe ſacrifices had been required, offered a portion of all manner of Fruits to the Gods: but, becauſe they did not ſacrifice men alſo, [he adds] that they fell into all ſorts of Calamites; and, that they could not procure a relaxation from theſe miſchiefs, till ſuch time as they had * Decimated themſelves. And that, being in this manner compelled to take off every tenth man by offering him in ſacrifice, they became the Occaſioners of the depopulation of their own Country. With ſo many and ſuch great Calamities was the whole Body of mankind heretofore afflicted. Nor yet was this the only unhappineſs wherewith men were attended: but they were ſlaves to infinite other, and thoſe deplorable and incurable miſchiefs. For all the Nations diſperſt thorowout the whole world, both Greeks and Barbarians, ſtirred up as 'twere and provok'd by a deviliſh impulſe, were ſeized with the horrid and moſt ſore diſeaſe of Sedition; in ſo much that, the Sons of Men were unſociable, and irreconcileable one to another; the great Body of Common Nature was torn piece-meal [and its members ſcatter'd] here and there; and in every corner of the Earth men † were diſ-united, and ſtrove with one another on account of their different Laws and Forms of Government. And not only this; but being enraged by frequent commotions and inſurrections, they made attacks upon one another: ſo that, they ſpent their whole lives in continued fights and inteſtine wars; nor durſt any one, unleſs arm'd at all points like a warriour, ſtir abroad and travel whither he had a mind to go. Moreover, throughout all Countries and in the Villages, the || Boors [w] wore ſwords; and poſſeſt themſelves of proviſions of Arms, rather than of Tools and furniture to till the ground: and to pillage and make ſlaves of ſuch of the neighbourhood as they had taken Priſoners, was by them placed to the account of valour. Nor were they ſatisfied only with this; but taking an occaſion of leading unclean and wicked lives, from thoſe Fables which they themſelves had coyn'd concerning their own Gods; they ruined their own ſouls as well as bodies, by all the ways and methods of intemperance. Nor did

[s] Κατὰ τὸν μεγάλην πόλιν, in the great City. The Tranſlatours have done ill in rendring it Megalopolis. For Porphyrius, whoſe words Euſebius makes uſe of here, gave Rome that name, according to the uſage of his own age; as it has been long ſince remark't by Joſeph Scaliger in his Animadverſions on Euſebius, pag. 53. 'Tis certain, Libanius in his Oration entitled βασιλικὸς, does ſo term the City Rome. Farther, what Porphyrius ſays, (namely, that at Rome, on the Feſtival of Jupiter Latiaris, ſtill in his age a man was ſacrificed;) is confirmed by Lactantius, Book 1. chap. 21. Siquidem, ſays he, Latiaris Jupiter & nunc ſanguine colitur humano; for Jupiter Latiaris is even at this preſent worſhipt with humane bloud. Prudentius's words in his firſt Book againſt Symmachus, are theſe:

Funditur humanus Latiari in munere ſanguis.

Dion Caſſius ſpeaks concerning this Feaſt, in his fourty third Book, pag. 351. Now, the Latiaria were celebrated in December, as I think. For in that month the Gladiators Show was exhibited, as we are informed from Hemmartius's Calendarium. In the Latiare Sacrum the uſage was, that the bloud of that Gladiator who had been killed in the encounter, ſhould whilſt it was warm be offered to Jupiter, and as it were flung in his face; as Cyprian relates in his Book De Spectaculis, and Tertullian in his Apologetick, Chap. 9. There is an eminent paſſage in Juſtin the Martyr's Apology to the Senate, where he ſpeaks concerning this ſolemnity. His words are theſe. —— τὰ ἴσα τῷ παρ' ὑμῖν πιαινομένῳ εἰδώλῳ. ὧν ὁ μόνον ἀλόγων ζώων αἵματα προσφέρεται, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀνθρώπεια, ἅπερ τὸ παρ' ὑμῖν ὁπλιτοτάτῳ καὶ εὐγενεστάτῳ ἀνδρὶ τῷ προέχοντι τῆς ἡγεμονεύοντος αἵματι σπονδὴν ποιεῖσθε. —— Doing the ſame things that are done by you to an Idol you worſhip. On which is ſprinkled not only the bloud of irrational Creatures, but humane Bloud alſo, by the eminenteſt and moſt noble perſonage amongſt you, who makes this Libation of the Blood of thoſe ſlain. From which place we gather, that the Prætor of the City performed this ſacrifice: and that a man was not ſacrificed to Jupiter, as Porphyrius ſays; but only, that the bloud of a Gladiator killed in the Theater, was offered to Jupiter. Valeſ.

[t] Τριακοσίους ἑτέρους. The Tranſlatour has not hit the meaning of this place; he renders it thus: Et nihilominus trecentos alios ſacrificio addidiſſe, and nevertheleſs added three hundred more to the ſacrifice. But ἐπιδιδόναι is a proper term uſed concerning thoſe Fathers, who deliver up their children to be ſacrificed to the Gods, as we have ſeen above concerning Leus the Athenian. When therefore the Nobles in Africa had preſented three hundred Boyes to be ſacrificed to the Gods, Diodorus ſays, that three hundred other Boyes were in like manner preſented by other perſons; that they might ſhew their piety towards the Gods, no leſs evidently than the former had done. But I had rather read διακοσίους two hundred, inſtead of τριακοσίους three hundred. Queſtionleſs, it muſt either be διακοσίους two hundred, here; or elſe above, inſtead of διακοσίους two hundred, it muſt be made τριακοσίους three hundred. Valeſ.

[u] Αὐτῷ ὀνόματι. I think it muſt be αὐτῷ ὀνόματι αὐτοῦ τοῦ Διός; which reading I have followed in my rendition. But our Euſebius is miſtaken. For Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus (pag. 16.) relates, that the Gods required that of the Pelaſgi, not of the Aborigines; and that the men were not ſlain by them, but baniſht out of their Country. In the Fuketian Copy the word αὐτῷ is wanting. Valeſ.

* That is, Offered every tenth man of themſelves in ſacrifice.

† Or, Rebell'd.

|| Or, Tillers of the Ground.

[w] Indeed, about the beginning of Diocletian's Reign, the Boors in Gallia, having entred into a Combination amongſt themſelves, took up arms, and infeſted the High-ways, giving themſelves the name of Bacaudæ; as we are told by Oroſius, Eutropius, and Mamertinus in Maximianus's Panegyrick. Farther, from this paſſage of Euſebius we are informed, that that ſort of Robbery was practiſed almoſt throughout the whole Roman world. Valeſ.

did they acquiesce herein; but passing those Bounds and Limits which Nature has set, they proceeded farther, and abused one another by the commission of such acts of Obscenity, as are as unfit to be declared, as incredible: And * men with men wrought that which is unseemly, and received in themselves that recompense of their errour which was meet, as the Sacred Scriptures do express it. Nor were they satisfied herewith; but having depraved those Notions concerning God, infused into them by nature, they lookt upon all affairs here below, as not managed with any thing of Care and Providence; but ascribed the Origine and Constitution of this Universe to † rash and fortuitous Chance, and to fatal Necessitie. Neither did they end here: but supposing their souls to perish together with their Bodies, they lead a brutish and lifeless life; not searching into the nature of the soul; not expecting the Tribunals of Divine judgment; not weighing in their minds the rewards of virtue, or the punishments of an unrighteous and wicked life. Moreover, whole nations, [enslaved] to various sorts of impiety, consumed away in a brutish course of life, as if rotted by some inveterate disease. For some made horrible and most unnatural Mixtures with their own Mothers: others married their own Sisters; others debauch'd their own daughters. And some murdered strangers, who had come to them: others fed upon humane flesh: others strangled their aged people, and afterwards feasted on them: others cast them to dogs, whilst they were yet living, to be devoured by them. The time would fail me, should I attempt to give a particular Narrative of all those mischiefs, of that complicated and inveterate disease, which had seized the whole Body of mankind. These, and ten thousand more of the same nature with these, [were the calamitous distempers;] on account whereof the most Gracious Word of God, compassionating [x] His own Rational Flock (heretofore by some of His Prophets, and long after that by other pious men, and then by those famous and illustrious persons who lived in the following ages,) incited those that were despair'd of and lost, to their own Cure: and partly by Laws, partly by various exhortations, and partly by all manner of instructions, He infused into men the Beginnings and first Rudiments of Divine Worship. [y] But when Mankind stood not any longer in need of humane power, but wanted an Assistant far superiour and more powerfull than man was; in regard the Sons of men wandred in errour this way and that way, and were most cruelly torn in sunder, not by wolves and fierce wild-beasts, but by terrible and raging Dæmons, and by furious and soul-destroying Spirits: at length The Word of God, in Obedience to His most Excellent Father's Command, with all imaginable willingness came to us Himself, and entred Our Tents. Now, the reasons of His descent hither, were the same with those I have mentioned above. [z] On account therefore of all which, when He was come to the converse of Mortals, He performed not that which had been usual and customary to Him; for He was incorporeal, and in an invisible manner could pass thorow the whole world, and by His Works themselves demonstrated the Greatness of His own power, to the Inhabitants as well of Heaven, as Earth. ὧν δὴ ἕνεκα πάντων εἰς ἀνθρωπίνην ὁμιλίας, on account therefore of which, when He hastned to the converse of Mortals; or else παρεὼν, when he was come; which conjecture seems to me most certain. For though the same sense might be extracted from the ordinary reading, yet if we should retain that, I don't see whither these words εἰς ἀνθρωπίνην ὁμιλίας can be referred. But at length the Fuketian Copy hath confirmed our Conjecture, wherein the reading is, ὧν δὴ ἕνεκα, πάντων εἰς ἀνθρωπίνην ὁμιλίας παρεὼν. Valesius.

But He * made use of a new and unusual manner of acting. For, having assumed a mortal Body, He vouchsafed to discourse and converse with men; with this design, that He might save Mankind by its like.

BUt come on, in the procedure we will declare, on what account the Incorporeal Word of God, having * assumed a Body as an instrument, was present and conversant with men. And, by what other method could the Divine Essence (which can't be touched, is immaterial, and invisible,) shew it self to those, who seek for God in matter and below on the ground, [a] and who any other way were unable, or at least unwilling, to inspect the Parent and Maker of all things; unless He had exposed Himself to view under an humane Form and Shape? Hence it was, that by the most agreeable assistance of a mortal Body, He descended to a Converse with men, because such a Body was familiar and acceptable to them. For, as the common proverb assures us, Like loves its Like. [b] In the same manner therefore, the Word of God shewed Himself to those, who * were lead by a sense of things Visible, and who sought Gods in Statues and Sculptures of lifeless Images, and fancied that the Deity dwelt in matter and in a Body; and lastly, who termed mortal men, Gods. On this account He procured Himself † the Instrument of a Body, as some most holy Temple; the sensible habitation of a rational Faculty; a venerable and most sacred Statue, of far greater worth and value than every inanimate Image. For an Image consisting of lifeless matter, which has been form'd into an humane shape by the hands of sordid and mean Mechanicks, the substance Whereof is either Brass or Iron, Gold or Ivory, Stones or Wood; is a most fit and commodious Mansion for Dæmons. But that Divine Statue, fram'd and polisht by the ‖ Omnipotent industry of Divine Wisdom, was a partaker of Life and an intellectual substance. A Statue that was filled with all manner of Virtue: a Statue that was the Residence of God the Word, and a holy Temple of the most Holy God. The Inhabitant whereof [God] The Word, was conversant amongst, and became acquainted with mortals, by means of an Instrument that was familiar and of kin to them: nevertheless, He submitted not himself to the like passions with men; neither, as an humane mind is, was He bound * by the Bonds of the Body; nor, being made worse than Himself, did He change His own Divinity.

For,

* Rom. 1. 27.

† Or, Irrational and fortuitous Nature.

[x] Τῆς ἐναρίοις λογικῆς ἀγέλης. The Translatour seems to have read τῆς ἐν ἀνθρώποις λογικῆς ἀγέλης his rational Flock amongst men. But I had rather read, τῆς ἑαυτῆ λογικῆς ἀγέλης, his own rational Flock. For so Eusebius is wont to call God the Word, namely the Pastour of His rational Flock. Nevertheless in the Fuketian Manuscript 'tis τῆς ἐν ἀνθρώποις, written in a contracted manner. Valesius.

[y] Ὡς ἂν ἐκέτ' ἀνθρωπείας. It must be ὡς δὲ ἐκέτ' ἀνθρωπείας, &c, But when, &c: or else, as 'tis in the Fuketian Copy, ὡς ἔν, when therefore, &c. Valesius.

[z] Ὧν δὴ ἕνεκα πάντων. I had long since guess'd, that the reading should be, ὧν δὴ ἕνεκα πανσόφων εἰς ἀνθρωπίνην ὁμιλίας παρεὼν.

[a] Ἄλλως θεῷ δυναμένοις. This whole place is thus to be mended; ἄλλως τε ὃ δυναμένοις ἢ μὴ βουλομένοις, τὸν πατέρα τῶν ὅλων ἀφικνεῖσθαι τε καὶ ποιεῖσθαι ὑποπτεύειν, εἰ μὴ δι' ἀνθρωπείας σχήματός τε καὶ εἴδους, ἑαυτὸν ἔφηνεν, and who any, &c. In the Fuk. Copy the reading is ἄλλως πως ὃ δυναμένοις. Valesius.

[b] Καὶ ταὐτὰ τοῖς. Without doubt it must be καὶ ταὐτὰ τοῖς, In the same manner; so the reading is in the Fuketian Copy. Valesius.

* Or, Rejoyce in a sense, &c.

† Or, A Bodily Instrument.

‖ Or, Power &c.

* Or, To the Body.

* Or, Chang'd His usual manner, for a newer.

CHAP. XIV.

* Or, Made use of.

*For, as the Rayes of the Sun (which though they fill all places, and touch Bodies that are dead and impure, yet) suffer nothing therefrom: so, and in a far more excellent manner also, the incorporeal Power of God The Word, neither suffers any thing, nor is He sensible of any detriment in reference to His own Essence, nor does That ever exist worse than It Self, * when, being Spiritual, It touches a Body. In this manner therefore the Common Saviour of all, exhibited Himself Beneficent and Salutary to all: demonstrating His wisdom by the Instrument of an humane Body which he had assumed, no otherwise than a Musician [does shew His skill] by an Harp. We are told in the Fables of the* Greeks, that Orpheus by melody appeased all sorts of wild beasts, and mitigated the rage of savage monsters, by His skilfull strokes on the Chords of his Instrument. And this is both commonly reported amongst the Greeks, and also believ'd to be true; namely, that the lifeless Harp tam'd the wild-beasts; and [c] moreover, that it removed the Oakes, which were ravisht by its Musick. But the all-wise and all-harmonious Word of God, when He would administer all methods of cure to the souls of men, which were depraved by a manifold improbity; took into his hands a Musical Instrument, [d] the composure of his own wisdom, namely the Humane Nature; on which instrument He play'd Tunes, and by it did not charm [e] Brutes [as Orpheus did,] but Creatures endued with reason; civilizing the Morals of all persons, as well Greeks as Barbarians; *and healing the outragious and brutish perturbations of their minds, by the Remedies of His Divine Doctrine. And, like some expert and knowing Physitian, applying to those sick minds, which sought the Deity in matter and in Bodies, a Natural, apposite, and fit * Medicament; He shewed God in Man. After this, in regard He manifested no less care towards Bodies, than towards Souls; even the eyes of flesh beheld some stupendious miracles, and divine Wonders, and Works of His own omnipotence. But in the interim, by a corporeal mouth and Tongue He desisted not from instilling saving Precepts, into the ears of flesh. In fine, He performed all things by the Humanity which He had assumed, on their account, who could no otherwise, than only by this means, be made sensible of * His Divinity. And these things He performed in obedience to His Father's Counsels,* [f] *Himself continuing the same that He was before with the Father: neither changing His Essence; nor * looſing His own Nature: not bound with the Bonds of flesh; nor making His abode in that place where His Humane Vessel was; and altogether hindred from being present in other places. But, during that very interim wherein He was conversant with men, by His presence He filled all things, and was with the Father, and was in the Father; and in that very instant took care of all things together, as well those which are in Heaven, as them on earth. Neither was He excluded, in the same manner that we are, from being present every where; nor hindred from performing divine works, according to His usual manner. But those things which were of Himself, He delivered to the Humane Nature; but, on the other hand, He received not those things which were of the Mortal Nature it self. He did indeed confer Divine power on mortal Nature: but, on the contrary, He drew nothing from a participation of the Mortal Nature. Therefore, neither was He any way polluted, at such time as His Body was born; nor again, at such time as His mortal Body was* [g] *dissolved, did He, in regard He is impassible, suffer any thing in reference to His Essence. For neither, if an Harp should by accident be broken, or the Chords thereof burst; is it * necessary that He Himself should suffer any thing, who playes upon the Harp. Nor, if the Body of any wise man happen to be punished, is there any reason we should affirm, that the wisdom in that wise man, or the Soul in that Body, is either mangled or burnt.* [h] *In the very same manner, and on a far better account, 'tis agreeable to reason we should assert, that the Power of the Divine Word received no dammage, from the * sufferings of the Body: in as much as, neither that instance of Light, which we have already made use of, does any ways permit the Solar Rayes, which are shot from Heaven upon the earth, and do touch dirt and mire and all manner of filth, to be polluted. For, though nothing hinders us from affirming, that even these things are illustrated by the Rayes of Light; yet we do not therefore [say,] that the Light it self is also bemired, or that the Sun is defiled by the mixture of Bodies: albeit these things are not wholly disagreeable to Nature it self. But, whereas that Saviour and incorporeal Word of God,* [i] is The Life it self and the intellectual Light it self; whatsoever thing He shall have toucht by His divine and incorporeal Virtue, that thing must afterwards of necessity live, and be conversant in rational Light. [k] In like manner also, whatever Body He shall have toucht, that Body is forthwith sanctified and illuminated: and immediately every disease, sickness, and Trouble departs from it. And those things which before were empty, receive some portion from His Fulness. Wherefore, He spent almost the whole Course of His Life in such a manner, that He might sometimes shew His own Body to be lyable to the same passions that we are; but at others, that he might declare

* Or, When It incorporeally touches a Body.

[c] Καὶ δὴ καὶ τὰ δένδρα τὰς φύσεις μεταβάλλειν, μουσικῇ ἐικοντα. Which words Valesius renders thus, Et quercus Suavitate Cantûs delinitas immutasse, and that it changed the Oakes ravisht with the sweetness of its melody. Christophorson and Curterius render this clause thus, tum arbores (quæ fagi vocantur) musicæ suavitate delinitæ, situs suos mutare solent, also the Trees (which are termed Beeches) pleased with the sweetness of its Musick, are wont to change their Sites. Perhaps the reading should be, καὶ δὴ τὰ δένδρα καὶ τὰς φύσεις, &c.

[d] Αὐτὸ ποίημα σοφίας ἢ ἄνθρωπον. Eusebius terms the Humane Nature which Christ assumed, ἢ ἄνθρωπον; in the same manner that the Latine Fathers are wont to speak concerning Christ, that He assumed Hominem, man. So Eusebius uses it a little above, where His words are, δι' ὀργάνου ᾧ προσέλαβε ἀνθρώπου, by the instrument of an humane Body which he had assumed. It occurs hereafter also. Vales.

[e] Ἀλλ' οὐκ ἀλόγοις. These words are wanting in the Fuketian Copy; and seem to me to have been added by a Scholiast. Vales.

* Or, Help.

* Or, Such a Divinity.

[f] Μένων αὐτὸς πάλιν. Although this place be faultless, yet I can't omit that reading which I found in the Fuketian Copy, μένων αὐτὸς πάλιν ἄὐλος, οἷος, &c: which reading I think to be truer. A little after, where the reading is ἔνθα ἦν τὸ ἀνθρώπειον σκεῦος, I have added a word from the Fuk. Copy; where 'tis thus worded, ἔνθα ἦν αὐτῷ τὸ, &c, where His humane Vessel was. Vales.

* Or, Destroying.

[g] Διαιρεμβύε. It must be made διαιρεθύε, was dissolved; as the reading is in the Fuketian Copy. Vales.

* Or, Likely.

[h] Ταύτη τε πολὺ πλέον. I write ταύτη γε καὶ πολὺ πλέον; and have rendred it accordingly. In the Fuketian Copy the reading is ταύτη πολυπλέον. In this manner Eusebius has expresst Himself a little above. Vales.

* Or, Affections.

[i] Αὐτὸ ζωὴ πυρφόρον. The word αὐτὸ ζωὴ, and that which follows αὐτὸ φῶς, must in writing be joyned together, as one word, that is, as Græcians term it, ὑφ' ἕν. Farther, in the Geneva-Edition, this place was confused by the Printers fault; which we have restored thus, παντὸς ἃ ἂν ἐφάψαιτο, whatsoever thing He shall have toucht. And so the reading is in the Fuketian Copy. Vales.

[k] ταύτη τὸ καὶ σωμαθ. Without doubt it must be worded thus, ταύτη τοὶ καὶ σώμαθ, ἃ ἂν ἐφάψαιτο, &c; and we have rendred it accordingly. Nothing is more certain than this Emendation. For the following words do plainly shew, that Eusebius speakes here concerning a Body. And thus I found it written in the Fuk. Copy. Vales.

clare Himself to be God The Word: whilst He performed Great and Wonderfull Works, as God, and foretold things future long before they hapned; and demonstrated the word of God, (who was not seen by many,) by the things themselves; namely, by prodigious Works, Miracles, Signes, and Stupendious Powers; [1] and moreover, by Divine Doctrines, whereby He incited the minds of men, that they should prepare their souls for [the Blessedness] of that supernal Habitation which is beyond Heaven.

[1] Καὶ μὴν καὶ διδασκαλίαις. I read ναὶ μὴν καὶ διδασκαλίαις, &c, and moreover, &c. For so Græcians are wont to expres themselves. And thus 'tis in the Fuketian Copy. Vales.

CHAP. XV.

WHat remains now, but that we give an account of the cause and reason of that thing, which is the chief and principal of all: I mean the much-talk't-of End of His Life, and the manner of his Passion; and the grand Miracle of his [a] Resurrection after death. After an explication of which [particulars] we will confirm the demonstrations of them all, by most manifest Testimonies. [The Divine Word] therefore, having, on account of those reasons mentioned by us, [b] made use of a mortal instrument, as of a * Statue most becoming the Majesty of God; and, in regard He is the Great Emperour, having by its Ministery, as 'twere by that of an Interpreter, † been conversant amongst men; He performed all things in such a manner as became the Divine Power. Now, if, after that life spent amongst men, He had by some other means [c] become invisible on a sudden and gone away; if He had conveyed away His Interpreter privately, and by a flight had endeavoured to rescue His own Statue from the danger of death; and if afterwards, of Himself He had adjudg'd that very mortal Body to death and corruption: doubtless, all men would have believed Him to have been a meer Apparition or Ghost. [d] Nor would He Himself have performed those things which became Himself; in regard (although He was The Life, and The Word of God, and The Power of God; yet) He would have delivered up His own Interpreter to death and corruption. Nor would those things which He had performed against the * devil, have been terminated by an illustrious conflict and Combat with Death. Nor could it have been accurately known whither He had withdrawn Himself: nor would He have been believed by those, who had not seen Him with their eyes: nor could it have been made apparent, that He has a nature superiour to Death: nor could He have freed Mortal Nature from [the infirmity of] its own condition: nor would He have been † fam'd thorowout the whole habitable world: nor could He have prevailed upon His own disciples to contemn death: nor would He have procured for those who are followers of His doctrine, the Hope of a life with God after death: nor would He have fulfilled the Promises of His own Discourses: nor would He have exhibited agreeable Events to the Prophetick Predictions concerning Himself: nor [in fine,] would He have undergone the last Combat of all; which was against Death it self. On account therefore of all these particulars, in as much as 'twas wholly necessary, that His mortal Instrument, after that sufficient service which it had performed to the Divine Word, should have an end befitting God allotted to it; therefore [I say] His death is in this manner dispenc'd and ordered. [c] For, there remaining two things [to be done by Him] at the end of His Life; either that He should surrender up His whole Body to Corruption and Ruine, and so close His whole Life, [f] like a Play as 'twere, with a most disgracefull Catastrophe; or else, that He should manifest Himself to be superiour to Death, and by the assistance of Divine Power should render His mortal Body, immortal: the first of these two was repugnant to His own Promise. (For, 'tis not the property of fire, to cool; nor of light, [g] to darken. So, neither is it the [property] of Life, to die; nor, of the Divine Reason, to act contrary to reason.) For, how is it agreeable to reason, that He who had promised life to others, should be so negligent, as to suffer His own instrument to be corrupted, and should surrender up His own Image to destruction; and, that he who promised immortality to all that addres's themselves to Him, should by Death ruine the Interpreter of His own Divinity? The second thing therefore was necessary; I mean, that He should manifest Himself to be superiour to Death. In what manner then was that to have been done? Covertly and by stealth, or * openly and in the view of all? But, so glorious an Atchievement, had it been performed by Him in the dark and in secret, and had it been unknown to any one, would have been advantagious to no body. But when divulged and † fam'd amongst all persons, it would redound to the benefit and advantage of all, by reason of the miracle of the thing. Whereas then it was necessary, that his Instrument should be manifested to be above Death, and whereas

[a] Ἀναμνήσεως, remembrance. It must be made ἀναβιώσεως, resurrection, as the Translatour seems to have read. Presently, the reading must be μετὰ τῶν τούτων θεωρείαν, after an explication, or consideration of which [particulars;] as 'tis in the Fuketian Copy. Vales.

[b] Κεχρημένῳ τε, τοῦτο αὐτό. The words are misplac't here, a thing which has frequently hapned in these Books, as I have already told you. I write therefore, κεχρημένῳ, αὐτῷ τε τούτῳ οἷα μέσας βασιλεύς, &c; and have rendred it accordingly. In Fuket's Copy 'tis κεχρημένῳ, τούτῳ αὐτῷ, &c. Vales.

* Or, Image.

† Or, Lived an humane Life.

[c] Ἀφανὴς ὢν γεγονώς. One of the two last words must be expunged. Vales.

[d] Καὶ ὅταν αὐτὸς ἑαυτοῦ. Questionless it must be written thus, καὶ ὅτ' ἂν αὐτὸς ἑαυτῷ τὰ πρέποντα διεπράξατο. Nor would He Himself, &c; the necessity of which emendation is plainly confirmed by the following words, Vales.

* Or, Devils.

† Or, Heard of.

[c] Δυοῖν γὰρ λειπομένων τῷ τέλει. I don't approve of the Translatour's rendition, who translates this place thus: Nam cùm duæ rationes abeundi ex hâc vitâ sibi reliquæ essent, For whereas two reasons of departing out of this Life were remaining to Him. As if in the Greek the reading were, τῶν τελοῦν. Eusebius's meaning therefore is this; whereas the one of two things was of necessity to be done by Christ in the close of His Life, namely, that He should either yield up His Body to be wholly consumed by death, or else should declare Himself to be superiour to death, &c. You see how different this meaning is, from that of the Translatour. For Christ had not a two-fold reason for departing out of this life, but one only; namely, Death. For, as the Poet says, Omnes una manet mors, one Death awaits all persons. But in death, one of these two things remained to be performed by Christ, that he should either wholly submit to death, and deliver up His Body to it as some rich Spoyles, or else should shew Himself to be above Death, and should rescue His Body, as a prey, out of the jaws of Death. Besides, Eusebius has shown a little before, that death was necessarily to have been undergone by Christ. For, had He been minded to withdraw His Body privately, and as 'twere by Stealth, out of this life; without doubt all persons would have believed Him to have been a Ghost or Apparition, not a true and real man. He produces other reasons also, whereby He may confirm this. Which when He had set forth, at length He concludes in this manner. On account of all these reasons, says He, in as much as 'twas wholly necessary, that His Body should have an end befitting God allotted to it, Christ thus dispenc'd His own death. The one of these two things was to be done by Him in the end of this His Life, &c; as I have said already. And these words hang together excellently well. But the Translatour's exposition differs widely from Eusebius's meaning, in regard Eusebius would demonstrate, that a single, not a double reason for departing out of this life was left remaining to Christ. Vales.

[f] Καὶ τῷ παντὶ δράματι. I should chuse to write, καθάπερ δράματι διαθεῖναι ποιησάντι πῶς τὸ παυλὸς βίου κατασχόντι, and as of a Play, make a most reproachfull Catastrophe [or, calamitous conclusion] of His whole Life. Vales.

[g] Οὐδὲ φωτὸς τὸ κηλεῖν. It must be τὸ σκοτίζειν, to darken; as 'tis in the Fuketian Copy. Vales.

* Or, With the greatest decency.

† Or, Heard.

whereas this was not to have been performed in secret, but in the view of men; on account hereof it was, that He avoided not Death. For, had He done that, He would have been look upon as a Coward, and inferiour to Death. But by His conflict with death as with an Adversary, He rendred that Body which was mortal, immortal; after He had undergone that Combat for the Life, Immortality and salvation of all persons. And as, should any one have a mind to shew us a [h] Vessel that can't be burnt, and which is above the power of fire, He could by no other means * make out the strangeness of the thing, than by taking the Vessel into His hands, by casting it into the fire, and afterwards by pulling it out of the flames entire and unconsum'd: in the very same manner, the Word of God who confers life on all, desirous to demonstrate that mortal instrument, which He had made use of in order to the salvation of men, to be superiour to Death; and to render it a partaker of His own life and immortality; [i] underwent a most usefull and advantagious dispensation: [k] forsaking His Body during a very short time, and surrendring up to Death that which was mortal, that its own nature might hereby be proved: then soon after rescuing it from Death again, in order to the manifestation of His Divine Power; by which [power] He made it [l] apparent, that that Eternal Life which He had promised, was superiour to all [the force of] Death. Now, the reason of this thing is evident and perspicuous. For, whereas it was altogether necessary for His disciples, that with their own eyes they should see a manifest and undoubted Reparation of life after death; in which [life] He had taught them to place their Hopes; in regard His design was, to render them Contemners and Vanquishers of death: not without reason it was, that He would have them behold this with their own eyes. [m] For it behoved such persons, who were about entring upon a pious Course of life, by the clearest view to behold and imbibe this first and most necessary Lesson of all: and much more those, who were forthwith to Preach Him thoroughout the whole world, and to declare to all men the [n] knowledge of God, the foundation of which knowledge had before been laid by Him amongst all Nations. Which persons ought to rely and ground upon the [o] firmest and most undoubted perswasion of a life after death; to the end that without any fear or dread of Death, they might with alacrity undertake the Combat, [p] against the errour of the Nations who worship many Gods. For, unless they had learnt to dispise Death, they would never have been provided against those perils [they were to undergo.] Wherefore, when, as 'twas requisite, He would arm them against the power of Death, He did not deliver them a Precept in naked words and bare expressions, nor, as the usage of men is, did He compose an Oration concerning the immortality of the soul, made up of Perswasives and Probabilities: but really and actually shewed them the Trophies erected against Death. This then was the first and most Cogent reason, of Our Saviour's engagement with Death. For He shewed His disciples, that death, which is formidable to all, was nothing; and by a clear view rendred them eye-witnesses of [q] that Life promised by Him: which very [life] He made the First-Fruits of our common hope, and of a future life and immortality with God. A second reason of His Resurrection was, the demonstration of that Divine Power which had dwelt in His Body. For, in regard men had heretofore deified mortal persons who had been vanquished by Death, and had usually termed them Heroes and Gods, whom Death had subdued; on this very account the most Compassionate Word of God, did even here manifest * who He was: shewing men, [that His own] nature was above Death. And He not only raised His Mortal Body, after 'twas separated from His Soul, to a second Life; but proposed that Trophy of immortality, which by His conquest of Death He had erected, to be viewed by all: and in His very death taught, that He alone was to be acknowledged the true God, who had been crown'd with the Rewards of Victory over Death. I could also assign you a third reason of Our Lord's death. He was a Sacred Victim, offered up for the whole Race of mankind, to God the Supream King of the Universe. A Victim sacrificed † instead of the Flock of men: a Victim which routed and destroyed the Errour of Diabolical Superstition. For, after that one Victim ad eximious sacrifice, namely the most Holy Body of Our Saviour, was slain for mankind,

[h] Εἴ τις ἄκαυστον. Something must of necessity be added, thus, ἄκαυστόν τι σκεῦος, some Vessel that can't be burnt. 'Tis certain, in the Fuketian Copy the reading is, εἴ τις ἄκαυστον ἡμῖν καὶ πυρὸς κρεῖττον σκεῦός τι; in which manner Christophorson read. A little after, in the Fuketian Manuscript 'tis thus worded, σῶον καὶ ἀδιάφθορον ἐξελὼν τοῦ πυρός, pulling it out of the flames entire and unconsum'd; not as the reading is in the Geneva-Edition, διάφορον τοῦ πυρός. Valesius.

* Or, Gain a belief of the Miracle; so Valesius.

[i] Εὖ μάλα χρησίμως ὑπέστη τὴν οἰκονομίαν. At this place οἰκονομία seems to be taken by Eusebius, for the death or passion of Christ. So he has said above in this chapter concerning Christ, ταύτη πη καὶ αὐτῷ ὁ θάνατος οἰκονομεῖται, therefore [I say] His death is in this manner dispenc't and ordered. See what I have noted at the First Book of his Eccles. Histor. Chap. 1. Note (b.) 'Tis certain Epiphanius calls the Sacrament of the Eucharist, λατρείαν τῆς οἰκονομίας, that is, the worship of the Lord's Passion. ——— Valesius.

[k] These words must be helpt by a favourable interpretation. For Christ left not His own Body during the least moment of time. In regard, as 'tis wont commonly to be said, that which he had once assumed, he never parted with. But He suffered His own Body to be for some time destitute of the Company of His Soul. Presently, in the Fuketian Copy the reading is, καὶ τοῦ ὄντος θανάτου φθαρῇς. But I would rather write, καὶ τὸ ὂν τοῦ θανάτου φθαρῇς, and surrendring up to death that which was mortal. Valesius.

[l] For Christ rising from the dead, plainly declared that eternal life, which He had preacht to all men, to be superiour to every death. And this the Translatour understood not; who, though his Version be otherwise elegant enough, yet frequently wanders from the true sense: in so much that in this particular, the Version of this Panegyrick may seem far meaner than the Translation of the Ecclesiastick History. Valesius.

[m] Χρὴ γὰρ τοὺς μέλλοντας. I had rather write χρῆν, that is, it behoved. Which reading the Translatour seems to have followed. Valesius.

[n] Ὑπ' ἀυτῆς τοῖς ἔθνεσι καταβληθείσης γνώσεως. What Eusebius says, namely that Christ before He dyed had sprinkled some seeds of the knowledge of God amongst the Nations, may be understood two ways. For either He means the seeds which were by nature put into mens minds, whereby they are instructed in the knowledge of God; or else He means the preaching of Christ, who when conversant on earth, had declared the worship of the true God, not only to the Jews, but to the Gentiles also. Valesius.

[o] Πεῖσμα μέγιστον. Here Eusebius has made use of πεῖσμα, instead of πεῖσις, or perswasion; whereas nevertheless, πεῖσμα is wont to be more frequently used to signifie the greater Cable of a Ship. In the same sense with that here, he has made use of this word in his Book concerning the Martyrs of Palestine, Chap. 13; σαφὲς τε πεῖσμα καὶ βέβαιον, a firm and most evident instance to perswade me to believe. Clemens Alexandrinus uses the same word frequently. Chrysostome (in Hom. 1. On the Epistle to the Ephesians,) notes, that this is a common but homely term, whereby is meant a certain vehemency and eagerness of will: his words are these, ὅπερ καὶ ἡμεῖς πολλάκις ἐπίτασιν τοῦ θελήματος δηλοῦντες, καὶ τὸ πεῖσμα ἡμῶν λέγομεν. Valesius.

[p] Κατὰ τῶν ἐθνῶν. It must be, καὶ τῆς τῶν ἐθνῶν πολυθέου πλάνης, &c, against the Errour, &c. A little after I read, ὑπεδείκνυς ἀυτοῖς τρόπαια, shewing them the Trophies. The Fuketian Copy confirms both Emendations. Valesius.

[q] Ἐπηγγελμένην παρὰ αὐτῷ ζωήν. This place is not a little difficult. For how can what Eusebius says be understood, that that life namely which Christ has promised, is the first-fruits of a future Life with God? Questionless, by the Life promised to us by Christ, Eusebius means the Resurrection, which is as 'twere the Entrance and Beginning of that eternal Life with God. Or rather he means the Resurrection of Christ's Body, which was the first-fruits and pledge as 'twere, of our hope and Resurrection, as Eusebius tells us in the close of this Chapter. Valesius.

* Or, Himself.

† Ὑπὲρ τῆς τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἀγέλης. See Grotius De Satisfac. Christi. Chap. 9.

kind, and offered up as the [r] Substitute to ransome the Life of all Nations, [s] who, being before bound by the impiety of Diabolical Errour, stood convict of Treason as 'twere; thenceforward all the power of [t] impure and profane Dæmons became extinct; and all manner of terrestrial and fraudulent Errour was forthwith weakened, dissolv'd and confuted. The [u] Salutary Sacrifice therefore, [taken] from among men, namely the * very Body of the [Divine] Word, was sacrificed in place of the whole Flock of men.

* Or, Bodily Instrument.

[r] Ἀντίψυχον. An elegant term, taken from the secretest mysteries of Magicians and Conjurers, who asserted that men were to be sacrificed, to the end the life of others might be redeemed. So Antinous was sacrificed instead of the Emperour Hadrian, that He might defer His Fate; as 'tis related by Aurelius Victor, and others. This is ἀντίψυχον, or ψυχὴ ἀντὶ ψυχῆς, Life for Life, as Aristides expresses Himself in his Fifth Sacred Oration. Farther, 'twas necessary, that He who was in this manner sacrificed, should voluntarily offer Himself to be slain. Which may be gathered both from Aristides, and from Aurelius Victor: in which Authour the words are these, Cùm voluntarium ad vicem magi poposcissent. Moreover, that custom of the Romans, who bequeath'd themselves to death for the safety of the Emperour, doth clearly shew this very thing. Vales. Whom the Greeks call'd ἀντίψυχοι, the Latines termed Vicarii; so Stephens in his Latine Thesaurus, in the word Vicarius. Vicarii, says he, etiam interdum sunt, &c. Vicarii also are sometimes those, who bequeath themselves to destruction and death, that they may bring those mischiefs on their own heads, which were about to befall others. Hence 'tis that Valesius does here render ἀντίψυχον, Vicarium.

[s] Τῶν πεὶν ἀσεβείας. I doubt not but Eusebius wrote, ἀσεβείας δαιμονικῆς πλάνης ἐνεσχημένων, who, being before bound, &c. For he alludes to the Crime of Treason, which the Greeks are wont to term ἀσεβείας ἔγκλημα, as 'tis apparent from Dion Cassius, in several places. Vales.

[t] Ἀνοσίων καὶ ἀνιέρων δαιμόνων. It must be made ἀνάσιων, impure; we have already taken notice of a mistake like this above. 'Tis certain, in the Fuketian Copy the reading is ἀνάσιον; and a little after, in the same Copy 'tis ἐλέλυτό τε καὶ παρεῖτο. Vales.

[u] Σωτήριον θαῦμα, the salutary miracle. It must be θῦμα, sacrifice; which I wonder Christophorson perceived not. So Eusebius has said a little above, ἱερεῖα δύτα ἑνὸς καὶ μεγάλε θύματος, For, after that one Victim and eximious sacrifice, &c. Vales.

And this was the Victim delivered unto death, concerning which mention is made in the Expressions of the Sacred Scriptures; which are sometimes worded in this manner, † Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world: sometimes they run thus, ‖ as a sheep He was led to the slaughter, and as a Lamb before His Shearer [He was] dumb. And they likewise tell us the reason, by adding these words, He bears our sins, and is tortured with pain for us: and we esteemed Him to be in labour and in stripes and in affliction. But He was wounded for our sins; and He was bruised by reason of our iniquities. The chastisement of our peace [was] upon Him; with His stripes we are healed. All we like sheep have gone astray; every one has wandered in His own way: and the Lord hath delivered Him for our sins. For these reasons therefore, the Humane Instrument of God the Word was sacrificed. But this Great High-Priest consecrated to God the Chief Governour and Supream King, being something else besides a Victim; namely, The Word of God; The Power of God, and The Wisdom of God; soon recalled His mortal [Body] from death; and presented it to His Father, as the First-fruits of Our common Salvation; having erected this for all mankind, as the Trophy of that Victory which He had gain'd over Death, and over the Army of Dæmons, and [made it] the final Abolishment of those humane Victims which of old had been usually offered in sacrifice.

† John 1. 29.

‖ See Isa. ch. 53. v. 7, 4, 5, 6. according to the Septuagint Version.

CHAP. XVI.

BUT whereas these things are thus, 'tis now seasonable we should come to the demonstrations: if indeed [a] the truth of these matters has any need of demonstration, and if it be indeed necessary, to produce testimonies in confirmation of deeds that are manifest and evident. Take therefore these demonstrations, having first prepared * your ears in order to a candid hearing of our discourse. All Nations upon the Earth were heretofore divided, and the whole Race of men [b] was minc't into Provinces, into various dominions over each Nation and place, into Tyrannies, and manifold Principalities. On which account, fights and continued Wars, Depopulations and Captivities, as well in the Countries as Cities, never left them. Hence the numerous Subjects of Histories, Adulteries and Rapes of women: [c] hence the calamitous destruction of Troy, and those Tragedies of the Ancients, whereof mention is made amongst all men. The Causes of which [calamities] should any one ascribe to their errour in worshipping many Gods, 'tis my sentiment He would not be mistaken. But, after the Salutary Instrument, namely the most Holy Body of Christ, (which appeared superiour to all Diabolical fraud [and] Force, and was a stranger to every fault, as well in deeds as words;) was erected against the Dæmons, as [d] some Trophy of Victory, and the Abolishment of ancient Mischiefs; immediately all the works of Dæmons were dissolved and dissipated: nor were there Dominions of places any more, nor manifold Principalities, nor Tyrannies, nor † Democracies, nor (which were wont to arise from thence,) Depopulations of Countries, and Sieges of Cities. But, [e] one God was Preach't amongst all men; and at the same time, one Empire also, that of the Romans, flourished over all; and that [f] irreconcileable and implacable hatred, which the Nations had born one to another almost from the remotest Date of time, became forthwith utterly extinct. And as the knowledge of one God was delivered to all men, and one way of Religion and Salvation, [namely] [g] the Doctrine of Christ, was delivered to men.

* Or, A candid ear for our discourse.

† Or, Republicks; so Valesius.

[a] Τῆς τῶν ἀλη-θείας. This whole place is, in my judgment, thus to be restored; εἰ δὴ ἀποδείξεως δεῖ τὰ τῆς τῶν ἀληθείας, καὶ εἰ δὴ ἐνωρῶν πρεσμάτων, &c; if indeed the truth, &c. Vales.

[b] Κατετέμνε. It must be made κατατεμνόμενον, was minc't, or cut. In the Fuketian Copy, the reading of this whole place runs thus; διήρητο μὲν πάντα τὰ πάλαι ὅπῃ γῆς ἔθνη, καὶ τὸ πᾶν ὅλως ἀνθρώπων γένος, εἰς ἐθναρχίας καὶ τοπαρχίας, τυραννίδας τε καὶ πολυαρχίας κατετέτμητο. Vales.

[c] Ἔνθα τὰ ἰλίε κακά. I should rather write ἔνθεν. A little after I read, κρεῖττον πάσης δαιμονικῆς ἐνεργείας ὀφθὲν, &c; which appeared superiour to all Diabolical Energy or Force; the word πλάνης, fraud, being expunged as superfluous. Unless you would word it, as the Fuketian Manuscript does, πλάνης καὶ ἐνεργείας, fraud and force. Vales.

[d] Τρόπαιόν τε παλαιῶν κακῶν. Questionless 'tis to be written, νικητήριον τρόπαιον καὶ δαιμόνων, παλαιῶν τε κακῶν ἀποτρόπαιον, &c; which reading I have followed in my Version. Thus Eusebius has expresst himself a little above, in the close of the foregoing chapter; where speaking concerning the Body of Christ rais'd from the dead, his words are these: τρόπαιον ὁπλίκιον καὶ τῶν θανάτε καὶ τῆς δαιμονικῆς ὅλως πλάνης. ἅμα τε παλαιῶν ἀνθρωποθυσιῶν ἀποτρόπαιον, τοῦτ' ὑπὲρ πάντων ἀνθρώπων ἀνεσείας· as the Trophy of that Victory, &c. Which place casts no small light on this we have before us. For Eusebius says the same thing in both places. For he compares the Body of Christ, raised from death to life, and taken up into Heaven, to a Trophy which is erected over Enemies Vales.

[e] Θεὸς μὲν εἰς πάντας. It must be, θεὸς μὲν ἦς εἰς πάντας ἐκηρύπετο; But, one God was Preach't amongst all men; which is confirmed by the following words. Vales.

[f] Ἄπες. I read ἄσπεις καὶ ἀκατάλλακ—ἔχθρα, irreconcileable and implacable hatred. And so the Translatour seems to have read. So Eusebius expresses himself a little after this, ὁμοῦ καὶ ἡ ἐξ αἰῶνος ἔχθρα καὶ μάχη πρὸς ἀλλήλους; and at the same time that Hatred and Strife, which, &c. I write also, ἀνήρητό τε, as 'tis in the Fuketian Copy. Vales.

[g] Σωτήρεός τε ἡ χεις. This place must, in my judgment, be written in this manner; καὶ τρόπος εἰς εὐσεβείας σωτηρίας τε, ἡ χεις διδασκαλία: which reading I have followed in my Version. One way of Religion and Salvation, says he, namely the Doctrine of Christ, was delivered to men. Vales.

whereas this was not to have been performed in secret, but in the view of men; on account hereof it was, that He avoided not Death. For, had He done that, He would have been lookt upon as a Coward, and inferiour to Death. But by His conflict with death as with an Adversary, He rendred that Body which was mortal, immortal; after He had undergone that Combat for the Life, Immortality and salvation of all persons. And as, should any one have a mind to shew us a [h] Vessel that can't be burnt, and which is above the power of fire, He could by no other means * make out the strangeness of the thing, than by taking the Vessel into His hands, by casting it into the fire, and afterwards by pulling it out of the flames entire and unconsum'd: in the very same manner, the Word of God who confers life on all, desirous to demonstrate that mortal instrument, which He had made use of in order to the salvation of men, to be superiour to Death; and to render it a partaker of His own life and immortality; [i] underwent a most useful and advantagious dispensation: [k] forsaking His Body during a very short time, and surrendring up to Death that which was mortal, that its own nature might hereby be proved: then soon after rescuing it from Death again, in order to the manifestation of His Divine Power; by which [power] He made it [l] apparent, that that Eternal Life which He had promised, was superiour to all [the force of] Death. Now, the reason of this thing is evident and perspicuous. For, whereas it was altogether necessary for His disciples, that with their own eyes they should see a manifest and undoubted Reparation of life after death; in which [life] He had taught them to place their Hopes; in regard His design was, to render them Contemners and Vanquishers of death: not without reason it was, that He would have them behold this with their own eyes. [m] For it behoved such persons, who were about entring upon a pious Course of life, by the clearest view to behold and imbibe this first and most necessary Lesson of all: and much more those, who were forthwith to Preach Him thoroughout the whole world, and to declare to all men the [n] knowledge of God, the foundation of which knowledge had before been laid by Him amongst all Nations. Which persons ought to rely and ground upon the [o] firmest and most undoubted perswasion of a life after death; to the end that without any fear or dread of Death, they might with alacrity undertake the Combat, [p] against the errour of the Nations who worship many Gods. For, unless they had learnt to dispise Death, they would never have been provided against those perils [they were to undergo.] Wherefore, when, as 'twas requisite, He would arm them against the power of Death, He did not deliver them a Precept in naked words and bare expressions, nor, as the usage of men is, did He compose an Oration concerning the immortality of the soul, made up of Perswasives and Probabilities: but really and actually shewed them the Trophies erected against Death. This then was the first and most Cogent reason, of Our Saviour's engagement with Death. For He shewed His disciples, that death, which is formidable to all, was nothing; and by a clear view rendred them eye-witnesses of [q] that Life promised by Him: which very [life] He made the First-Fruits of our common hope, and of a future life and immortality with God. A second reason of His Resurrection was, the demonstration of that Divine Power which had dwelt in His Body. For, in regard men had heretofore deified mortal persons who had been vanquished by Death, and had usually termed them Heroes and Gods, whom Death had subdued; on this very account the most Compassionate Word of God, did even here manifest * who He was: shewing men, [that His own] nature was above Death. And He not only raised His Mortal Body, after 'twas separated from His Soul, to a second Life; but proposed that Trophy of immortality, which by His conquest of Death He had erected, to be viewed by all: and in His very death taught, that He alone was to be acknowledged the true God, who had been crown'd with the Rewards of Victory over Death. I could also assign you a third reason of Our Lord's death. He was a Sacred Victim, offered up for the whole Race of mankind, to God the Supream King of the Universe. A Victim sacrificed † instead of the Flock of men: a Victim which routed and destroyed the Errour of Diabolical Superstition. For, after that one Victim ad eximious sacrifice, namely the most Holy Body of Our Saviour, was slain for mankind,

[h] Εἴ τις ἄκαυστον. Something must of necessity be added, thus, ἄκαυστόν τι σκεῦος, some Vessel that can't be burnt. 'Tis certain, in the Fuketian Copy the reading is, εἴ τις ἄκαυστον ἡμῖν καὶ πυρὸς κρεῖττον σκεύός τι; in which manner Christophorson read. A little after, in the Fuketian Manuscript 'tis thus worded, σῶον καὶ ἀδιάφθορον ἐξελὼν τοῦ πυρός, pulling it out of the flames entire and unconsum'd; not as the reading is in the Geneva-Edition, διάφορον τοῦ πυρός. Valesi.

* Or, Gain a belief of the Miracle; so Valesius.

[i] Εὖ μάλα χρησίμως ὑπὲρ τῆς οἰκονομίας. At this place οἰκονομία seems to be taken by Eusebius, for the death or passion of Christ. So he has said above in this chapter concerning Christ, ταύτῃ πη καὶ αὐτῷ ὁ θάνατος οἰκονομεῖται, therefore [I say] His death is in this manner dispenc't and ordered. See what I have noted at the First Book of his Eccles. Histor. Chap. 1. Note (b.) 'Tis certain Epiphanius calls the Sacrament of the Eucharist, λατρείαν τῆς οἰκονομίας, that is, the worship of the Lord's Passion.——— Valesi.

[k] These words must be helpt by a favourable interpretation. For Christ left not His own Body during the least moment of time. In regard, as 'tis wont commonly to be said, that which he had once assumed, he never parted with. But He suffered His own Body to be for some time destitute of the Company of His Soul. Presently, in the Fuketian Copy the reading is, καὶ τῷ ἴσῳ τοῦ θανάτου θνητὸν ἀφιέντος. But I would rather write, καὶ τὸ ἴσον τῷ θανάτῳ θνητὸν ἀφιέντος, and surrendring up to death that which was mortal. Valesi.

[l] For Christ rising from the dead, plainly declared that eternal life, which He had preacht to all men, to be superiour to every death And this the Translatour understood not; who, though his Version be otherwise elegant enough, yet frequently wanders from the true sense: in so much that in this particular, the Version of this Panegyrick may seem far meaner than the Translation of the Ecclesiastick History. Valesi.

[m] Χρὴ γὰρ τοὺς μέλλοντας. I had rather write χρῆν, that is, it behoved. Which reading the Translatour seems to have followed. Valesi.

[n] Ὑπ' ἀνθρώπων τὸ τοῖς

[o] Πεῖσμα μέγιστον. Here Eusebius has made use of πεῖσμα, instead of πεῖσις, or perswasion; whereas nevertheless, πεῖσμα is wont to be more frequently used to signifie the greater Cable of a Ship. In the same sense with that here, he has made use of this word in his Book concerning the Martyrs of Palestine, Chap. 13; σαφὲς τε πεῖσμα καὶ βέβαιον, a firm and most evident instance to perswade me to believe. Clemens Alexandrinus uses the same word frequently. Chrysostome (in Hom. 1. On the Epistle to the Ephesians,) notes, that this is a common but homely term, whereby is meant a certain vehemency and eagerness of will: his words are these, ὅπερ γὰρ καὶ ἡμεῖς τὸν ἐπίτασιν τῆς θελήσεως δηλοῦντες, καὶ τὸ πεῖσμα ἡμῶν λέγομεν. Valesi.

[p] Κατὰ τῶν ἐθνῶν. It must be, καὶ τῆς τῶν ἐθνῶν πολυθείας πλάνης, &c. against the Errour, &c. A little after I read, ὀδηγοῦσι ἀνθρώποις τρόπαια, shewing them the Trophies. The Fuketian Copy confirms both Emendations. Valesi.

[q] Ἐπαγγελλόμενον πρὸς αὐτῆς ζωήν. This place is not a little difficult. For how can what Eusebius says be understood, that that life namely which Christ has promised, is the first-fruits of a future Life with God? Questionless, by the Life promised to us by Christ, Eusebius means the Resurrection, which is as 'twere the Entrance and Beginning of that eternal Life with God. Or rather he means the Resurrection of Christ's Body, which was the first-fruits and pledge as 'twere, of our hope and Resurrection, as Eusebius tells us in the close of this Chapter. Valesi.

* Or, Himself.

† Ὑπὲρ τῆς τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἀγέλης. See Grotius De Satisfac. Christi. Chap. 9.

kind, and offered up as the [r] Substitute to ransome the Life of all Nations, [s] who, being before bound by the impiety of Diabolical Errour, stood convict of Treason as 'twere; thenceforward all the power of [t] impure and profane Dæmons became extinct; and all manner of terrestrial and fraudulent Errour was forthwith weakened, dissolv'd and confuted. The [u] Salutary Sacrifice therefore, [taken] from among men, namely the * very Body of the [Divine] Word, was sacrificed in place of the whole Flock of men. the end the life of others might be redeemed. So Antinous was sacrificed instead of the Emperour Hadrian, that He might defer His Fate; as 'tis related by Aurelius Victor, and others. This is ἀντὶ ψυχῶν, or ψυχὴ ἀντὶ ψυχῆς, Life for Life, as Aristides expresses Himself in his Fifth Sacred Oration. Farther, 'twas necessary, that He who was in this manner sacrificed, should voluntarily offer Himself to be slain. Which may be gathered both from Aristides, and from Aurelius Victor: in which Authour the words are these, Cùm voluntarium ad vicem magi poposcissent. Moreover, that custom of the Romans, who bequeath'd themselves to death for the safety of the Emperour, doth clearly shew this very thing. Vales. Whom the Greeks call'd ἀντίψυχοι, the Latines termed Vicarii; so Stephens in his Latine Thesaurus, in the word Vicarius. Vicarii, says he, etiam interdum sunt, &c. Vicarii also are sometimes those, who bequeath themselves to destruction and death, that they may bring those mischiefs on their own heads, which were about to befall others. Hence 'tis that Valesius does here render ἀντίψυχον, Vicarium.

[r] Ἀντίλυτρον. An elegant term, taken from the secretest mysteries of Magicians and Conjurers, who asserted that men were to be sacrificed, to

* Or, Bodily Instrument.

[s] Τῶν πεὶν ἀσεβείας. I doubt not but Eusebius wrote, ἀσεβείας δαιμονικῆς πλάνης ἐνεσχημένων, who, being before bound, &c. For he alludes to the Crime of Treason, which the Greeks are wont to term ἀσεβείας ἔγκλημα, as 'tis apparent from Dion Cassius, in several places. Vales.

[t] Ἀνάγνων καὶ ἀνιέρων δαιμόνων. It must be made ἀνάγνων, impure; we have already taken notice of a mistake like this above. 'Tis certain, in the Fuketian Copy the reading is ἀνάγνων; and a little after, in the same Copy 'tis ἐλέλυτό τε καὶ παρεῖτο. Vales.

[u] Σωτήριον θαῦμα, the salutary miracle. It must be θῦμα, sacrifice; which I wonder Christophorson perceived not. So Eusebius has said a little above, ἱερεῖς δύτα ἐνὸς καὶ μεγάλου θύματος, For, after that one Victim and eximious sacrifice, &c. Vales.

And this was the Victim delivered unto death, concerning which mention is made in the Expressions of the Sacred Scriptures; which are sometimes worded in this manner, † Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world: sometimes they run thus, ‖ as a sheep He was led to the slaughter, and as a Lamb before His Shearer [He was] dumb. And they likewise tell us the reason, by adding these words, He bears our sins, and is tortured with pain for us: and we esteemed Him to be in labour and in stripes and in affliction. But He was wounded for our sins; and He was bruised by reason of our iniquities. The chastisement of our peace [was] upon Him; with His stripes we are healed. All we like sheep have gone astray; every one has wandered in His own way: and the Lord hath delivered Him for our sins. For these reasons therefore, the Humane Instrument of God the Word was sacrificed. But this Great High-Priest consecrated to God the Chief Governour and Supream King, being something else besides a Victim; namely, The Word of God; The Power of God, and The Wisdom of God; soon recalled His mortal [Body] from death; and presented it to His Father, as the First-fruits of Our common Salvation; having erected this for all mankind, as the Trophy of that Victory which He had gain'd over Death, and over the Army of Dæmons, and [made it] the final Abolishment of those humane Victims which of old had been usually offered in sacrifice.

† John 1. 29.

‖ See Isa. ch. 53. v. 7, 4, 5, 6. according to the Septuagint Version.

CHAP. XVI.

BUT whereas these things are thus, 'tis now seasonable we should come to the demonstrations: if indeed [a] the truth of these matters has any need of demonstration, and if it be indeed necessary, to produce testimonies in confirmation of deeds that are manifest and evident. Take therefore these demonstrations, having first prepared * your ears in order to a candid hearing of our discourse. All Nations upon the Earth were heretofore divided, and the whole Race of men [b] was minc't into Provinces, into various dominions over each Nation and place, into Tyrannies, and manifold Principalities. On which account, fights and continued Wars, Depopulations and Captivities, as well in the Countries as Cities, never left them. Hence the numerous Subjects of Histories, Adulteries and Rapes of women: [c] hence the calamitous destruction of Troy, and those Tragedies of the Ancients, whereof mention is made amongst all men. The Causes of which [calamities] should any one ascribe to their errour in worshipping many Gods, 'tis my sentiment He would not be mistaken. But, after the Salutary Instrument, namely the most Holy Body of Christ, (which appeared superiour to all Diabolical fraud [and] Force, and was a stranger to every fault, as well in deeds as words;) was erected against the Dæmons, as [d] some Trophy of Victory, and the Abolishment of ancient Mischiefs; immediately all the works of Dæmons were dissolved and dissipated: nor were there Dominions of places any more, nor manifold Principalities, nor Tyrannies, nor † Democracies, nor (which were wont to arise from thence,) Depopulations of Countries, and Sieges of Cities. But, [e] one God was Preach't amongst all men; and at the same time, one Empire also, that of the Romans, flourished over all; and that [f] irreconcileable and implacable hatred, which the Nations had born one to another almost from the remotest Date of time, became forthwith utterly extinct. And as the knowledge of one God was delivered to all men, and one way of Religion and Salvation, [namely] [g] the Doctrine

* Or, A candid ear for our discourse.

[a] Τῆς τῶν ἀληθείας. This wholeplace is, in my judgment, thus to be restored; εἰ δὴ ἀποδείξεως δεῖ τὰ τῆς τῶν ἀληθείας, καὶ εἰ δὴ ἐναργῶν πραγμάτων, &c; if indeed the truth, &c. Vales.

[b] Κατετέμνετο. It must be made κατατεμνόμενον, was minc't, or cut. In the Fuketian Copy, the reading of this whole place runs thus; διήρητο μὲν πάντα τὰ πάλαι ὅπῃ γῆς ἔθνη, καὶ τὸ πᾶν ἅπᾶ ἀνθρώπων γένος, εἰς ἐθναρχίας καὶ τοπαρχίας, τυραννίδας τε καὶ πολυαρχίας κατετέτμητο. Vales.

[c] Ἔνθα τὰ Ἰλίου κακά. I should rather write ἔνθεν. A little after I read, κρεῖττον πάσης δαιμονικῆς ἐνεργείας ὀφθέν, &c; which appeared superiour to all Diabolical Energy or Force; the word πλάνης, fraud, being expunged as superfluous. Unless you would word it, as the Fuketian Manuscript does, πλάνης καὶ ἐνεργείας, fraud and force. Vales.

[d] Τρόπαιόν τε παλαιῶν κακῶν. Questionless 'tis to be written, νικητήριον τρόπαιον καὶ δαιμόνων, παλαιῶν τε κακῶν ἀποτρόπαιον, &c; which reading I have followed in my Version. Thus Eusebius has exprest himself a little above, in the close of the foregoing chapter; where speaking concerning the Body of Christ rais'd from the dead, his words are these: τρόπαιον ὁπηνίκιον καὶ τῦ θανάτυ καὶ τῆς δαιμονικῆς ἀβρᾳτάξεως. ἅπᾶ τε παλαιῶν ἀνθρωποθυσιῶν ἀποτρόπαιον, ὧδ' ὑπὲρ πάντων ἀνθρώπων ἀνενεγκάμενος· as the Trophy of that Victory, &c. Which place casts no small light on what we have before us. For Eusebius says the same thing in both places. For he compares the Body of Christ, raised from death to life, and taken up into Heaven, to a Trophy which is erected over Enemies Vales.

† Or, Republicks; so Valesius.

[e] Θεὸς μὲν εἰς πάντας. It must be, θεὸς μὲν εἷς εἰς πάντας ἐκηρύττετο; But, one God was Preach't amongst all men; which is confirmed by the following words. Vales.

[f] Ἄσπεισον καὶ ἀκατάλακτον — ἔχθρα, irreconcileable and implacable hatred. And so the Translatour seems to have read. So Eusebius expresses himself a little after this, ὁμοῦ καὶ ἡ ἐξ αἰῶνος ἔχθρα καὶ μάχη ἅπᾶ ἐθνῶν διελύετο; and at the same time that Hatred and Strife, which, &c. I write also, ἀνήρητό τε, as 'tis in the Fuketian Copy. Vales.

[g] Σωτήριός τε ἡ χρεία. This place must, in my judgment, be written in this manner; καὶ τρόπος εἰς εὐσεβείας σωτηρίας τε, ἡ χρεία διδασκαλία: which reading I have followed in my Version. One way of Religion and Salvation, says he, namely the Doctrine of Christ, was delivered to men. Vales.

ctrine of Christ; so also, at one and the very same time, in regard One Monarch was constituted over all the whole Roman Empire, a most profound peace * prevailed over the whole world. Thus by the appointment of One God, two signal Blessings, as 'twere two Branches, shot forth at one time amongst men; to wit the Empire of the Romans, and the † Doctrine of Christian piety. Before that [Empire,] some in a separate and particular manner Governed Syria; others Reigned over Asia; others, over Macedonia. Also some were in possession of Egypt severed from the other [Provinces;] and in like manner others, of the Country of the Arabians. Moreover, the Nation of the Jews had reduced Palestine under their jurisdiction and power. In every Village and City, and in all places, men were seiz'd with a kind of a madness as 'twere, and being really agitated by the Devil, committed murders one upon another, and made Wars and Fights their chief business. But two mighty Powers starting together, from the || same Barriers as 'twere, on a sudden made all things calm, and reduced them to an amicable Composure: I mean, the Empire of the Romans, which from that time was under the Government of a single person; and the Doctrine of Christ: which two [Powers] flourisht together, at one and the same time. Our Saviour's Power utterly destroyed those manifold Principalities and numerous Deities of Dæmons; publishing and declaring One Kingdom of God to all men, as well Greeks as Barbarians, even to those who inhabit the remotest Regions of the Earth. But the Empire of the Romans, in regard the Causes of many Principalities were * before hand taken away, reduced those [Principalities] which as yet remained visible, under its own Dominion; making this its chief business, to joyn together the whole Body of mankind in one common union and agreement. And it hath already reconciled and knit together in one, most Nations: but within a short time it will reach even as far as the utmost Confines of the Earth: in regard the Salutary Doctrine [of Christ] joyned with a Divine Power, does before hand make all things easie to it and renders them smooth and plain. Doubtless, this will be acknowledged a great Miracle by them, who, induced thereto by a love of truth, shall with attention weigh the thing, and shall not be desirous of detracting from, and reviling the eminentest † Blessings. For, at one and the very same juncture, the Errour of Dæmons was confuted; and at the same time that hatred and strife, which from remote ages had raged amongst the Nations, had an end put to it: and again, at the same time One God, and One knowledge of that God was Preacht amongst all; and at the same time One Empire was establisht amongst men; and at the same time the whole race of men was || reduced to peace and friendship; and all persons mutually profest themselves Brethren, and acknowledged their Own Nature. Immediately therefore, being as 'twere children [h] begotten by the same Father, to wit one God, and born of the same Mother, namely true piety, they began to salute and receive one another peaceably and affectionately: in so much as from that time the whole world seem'd in no point to differ from one well-governed House and Family; and any one might make a journey whither he listed, and travel to what place he pleased, withall imaginable security: and some might without danger pass from the Western to the Eastern Parts; again others might go from hence thither, as 'twere to their own Country: And the Responses of the ancient Oracles were fulfilled, as likewise numerous other predictions of the Prophets, which at present we have not leisure to cite: and moreover, those [Expressions] concerning the Divine Word, which run thus. * He shall have dominion from Sea to Sea, and from the River, unto the ends of the Earth. And again, † In His days righteousness shall rise, and abundance of peace. [And in another place:] || And they shall beat their swords into plow-shares, and [their] spears into pruning-hookes; and nation shall not lay hand on sword against nation, and they shall not learn war any more. These things were predicted, and many ages since proclaimed in the Hebrew tongue: which appearing to be actually accomplished in Our days, do confirm the Testimonies of those ancient Oracles. But if, besides these, you desire plenty of other demonstrations, take them, not in words, but in deeds, and realities. Open the eyes of your own mind, and set open the Gates of thought. Forbear speaking for some time, and consider with your self. Ask your self, and enquire as 'twere of some other person, and make researches into the Nature of affairs in this manner. What King from the utmost memory of men; or Prince; or Philosopher; or Law-giver; or Prophet whether Greek or Barbarian, ever attained to so much power and authority, (I do not say after death, but whilst He was yet living, and breathing, and was able to perform many things;) as to fill the ears and tongues of all men upon earth, with [the Glory] of His own name? 'Tis certain, no person hath performed this, except only Our One Saviour, after that Victory gain'd over Death: when He both * gave His disciples a Command in words, and also afterwards actually accomplished it. † Go therefore, said He to them, make disciples of all nations in my name. And when He had foretold and affirmed to them, that His Gospel should be Preacht thorowout the whole world, for a Testimony to all Nations; to His words He forthwith added the actual completion of the thing. Immediately therefore, and not after a long interval of time, the whole world was filled with His Doctrine. What then has He to return in answer hereto, who at the beginning of this Oration blamed us; especially in regard the Testimony || of the eyes is superiour to all manner of * reasoning? But, who hath chased away that always-noxious and destructive Tribe of Dæmons (which heretofore prey'd upon the whole † Body of mankind, and by the motion and impulse of images shewed many Impostures and delusions amongst men;) by an invisible and potent hand, being as 'twere fierce and raging wild-beasts, from the Flock of men? What other person besides Our Saviour, by an invocation of Himself, and by the purest prayers in His Name put up to the Supream God, hath given a power of driving away the Remains of evil Spirits from among men, to those who with purity and sincerity would follow || that Rule of Living and discipline delivered by Him?

* Or, Embraced all things.

† Or, Pious Doctrine.

|| Ἀπὸ νύσσης μιᾶς. Valesius renders it ex unâ Transennâ. Νύσσα does properly signifie Meta, the Goal of a Race.

* That is, by the Doctrine of Christ which asserted God's Monarchy.

† Or, Goods.

|| Fitted or, made up into peace, &c.

h Ἐξ ἑνὸς φύντες πρὸς. Without doubt it must be written thus, ὑξ ἑνὸς φύντες παῖδες, begotten by one or the same father. The mistake arose from the contracted way of writing. Vales.

* Psal. 72. 8.

† Psal. 72. 7.

|| Esai. 2. 4.

* Or, Spake a word to His Confidents.

† Matth. 28. 19.

|| Or, Which is by sight.

* Or, Reason.

† Or, Nature of men.

|| Or, The Life of that Philosophy delivered, &c.

What

[i] Τίς μόνος ὁπλεῖν. The word μόνος can't have a place here. I write therefore from the Fuketian Manuſcript, τίς ὅτι τελεῖν παρέδωκεν ἄλλος. ἢ μόνος, &c; what other perſon, ſave only, &c. Preſently, the reading muſt be, διὰ δὴ τοῦ ἡμῖν καθ' ὅλης οἰκουμένης ἀνθρώπων; or elſe, as 'tis in the Fuketian Copy, διὰ ἐπὶ τῆς καθ' ὅλης ἀνθρώπων οἰκουμένης, on which account, ——— thorowout the whole world. For ſo Euſebius is wont to expreſs himſelf, as in the end of Chap. 13. Valeſ.

[i] What other perſon, ſave onely our Saviour, hath taught his followers to offer unbloudy and rational ſacrifices, which [are performed] by prayers and * Θεολογίας, diſcourſe concerning God. a myſterious * naming of God? On which account, Altars have been erected thorowout the whole world, and Churches Conſecrated: [k] and Divine Miniſtrations of intellectual and rational ſacrifices, are offered up by all Nations to the Only God the Supream King. Who by a ſecret and inviſible power, hath cauſed thoſe ſacrifices, which were uſually [l] performed by Bloud and Gore, ſmoak and fire; as likewiſe thoſe cruel and furious ſlaughters of men, and humane Victims, to be aboliſhed and wholly extinguiſhed? In ſo much that, this thing is atteſted even by the very Hiſtories of the Heathens themſelves. For, all thoſe ſacrifices of men in all places of the Earth, were not aboliſhed till after [the publication of] Our Saviour's Divine Doctrine, [namely] [m] about the Times of [the Emperour] Hadrian. Whereas therefore, ſo many cogent arguments and evident demonſtrations do give confirmation to Our Saviour's Might and Power after His death, who is ſo iron-minded, as not together with others to give evidence to the Truth, and not to acknowledge His life [to be] divine? For great Atchievements [are the performances] of the Living, not of the dead: and thoſe things which we ſee, do furniſh us with a knowledge of things hidden. Not long ſince indeed, yeſterday as 'twere, a Race of men who fought againſt God; diſturbed the Life of men; turned all things upſide down, and were poſſeſt of great power and ſtrength. But when they were departed from among men; thenceforward they lay upon the earth, [n] more contemptible than dung; without breath; without motion; without voice. Nor is there now any account, or any mention made of them. For this is the * allotment of the dead. And He that is no longer, is no Body. But, [o] what can He do, who is no Body? But on the contrary, He who acts and works, and who is more powerfull than thoſe that are alive, how can He be ſuppoſed not to be? And although He be inviſible to eyes of fleſh, nevertheleſs the [p] faculty of judging conſiſts not in ſenſe: nor do we by the ſenſes of the Body perceive the reaſons and Rules of Arts, or Speculations of Sciences. Neither did ever any with His eyes ſee the mind that is in men, much leſs the ſtrength and power of God: but things of this nature are wont to be known and perceived by the works themſelves. Wherefore in our Saviour alſo, 'tis fit we ſhould inſpect and * diſcern His inviſible Power and Strength from His Works: namely, whether thoſe many illuſtrious Acts, which even till this preſent time are done by Him, muſt be acknowledged [the performances] of a perſon living; or whether 'tis to be ſaid, that they are the works of One who is not; or rather whether this queſtion be not altogether fooliſh and † incoherent. For, how can any one with reaſon affirm Him to be, who is not? In regard 'tis manifeſt by the conſent and ſuffrages of all, that that which is not, neither has any ſtrength, nor can it act, or operate. [q] For this is the Nature of the Living: but [the Nature] of the dead is contrary.

* Or, Nature.

* Conſider, or, determine of.

† Or, Inconſiſtent.

[k] Valeſius in his note at this place tells us, that the Geneva-Printers deſignedly left out this clauſe [νοερῶν τε καὶ λογικῶν θυσιῶν ἱερουργικὰς λειτουργίας, and Divine Miniſtrations of intellectual and Rational ſacrifices] becauſe, ſays he, it contained an illuſtrious Teſtimony concerning the unbloudy ſacrifice of the Maſs. But 'tis our Senſtiment, that Valeſius had as little ground for this aſſertion, from there words; as the Geneva-men had reaſon for that their omiſſion. Our Church in one of its prayers after the celebration of the Euchariſt, makes mention of a ſacrifice of praiſe and thanksgiving. And I verily believe, Euſebius means no other ſacrifice than that here; witneſs the two Epithets He gives theſe ſactifices, namely νοερῶντε καὶ λογικῶν, intellectual and rational.

[l] Καπνῷ τε περιστελλομένας θυσίας. I don't doubt but Euſebius wrote καπνῷ τε καὶ πυρὸς ὁπτελομένας θυσίας. τάς τε ὠμὰς, &c; ſacrifices ——— performed by bloud and gore, ſmoke and fire; as likewiſe thoſe cruel, &c. Than which emendation there is nothing more certain. Valeſ.

[m] Euſebius took this paſſage out of Porphyrius's ſecond Book de Abſtinentia, where he writes thus. καταλυθῆναι δὲ τὰς ἀνθρωποθυσίας φασὶν τὰς ὑπὸ πάσι φησὶ πάλλας, ὁ ἄειρα τὰ περὶ τοῦ μίθρα συγγραφὰς μυσηείων, ἐφ' ἁδριανοῦ τοῦ ἀυτοκράτορος. That is, But Pallas, who wrote beſt of all concerning the myſterious Rites of Mithra, ſays that humane Victims were almoſt every where aboliſhed, in the Reign of the Emperour Hadrian. Which Lactantius does likewiſe confirm, in the Firſt Book of his Divine Inſtitutes, Chap. 21; in theſe words. Apud Cyprios, [In Thyſius's Edition 'tis Apud Cypri Salaminem, At Salamine [a City] of Cyprus.] Humanam hoſtiam Jovi Teucer immolavit; idque ſacrificium poſteris tradidit: quod eſt nuper Hadriano imperante ſublatum. Amongſt the Cypriots, Teucer offered an humane ſacrifice to Jupiter; and delivered that ſacrifice down to poſterity: which was lately aboliſhed in the Reign of Hadrian. Tertullian in the ninth Chapter of his Apology relates, that in Africa infants were publickly offered in ſacrifice to Saturn, untill Tiberius's Proconſulate, who for that reaſon crucified the Prieſts of Saturn. And he adds, that the Milice of his own Country (or, as ſome Copies have it written, Patris ſui, of his own father;) which executed that very office under Tiberius the Proconſul, were witneſſes of this thing. Whence it appears that the memory of this matter was as yet freſh. For why ſhould he cite the Souldiers or Apparitors of the Proconſular Office as witneſſes, unleſs ſome of thoſe had been yet alive, or could have been produced, who had attended upon the Proconſul Tiberius, at ſuch time as he crucified thoſe Prieſts. Wherefore, that Proconſulate of Tiberius might be fitly placed upon the times of the Emperour Hadrian; eſpecially in regard both Porphyrius and Lactantius do perſwade us to think ſo. Further, whereas Pallas only ſays, that they left off ſacrificing men almoſt every where; Euſebius without any exception affirms, that this cuſtom was aboliſhed amongſt all Nations whatever. Which I can ſcarce be induced to believe. For, both Porphyrius and Lactantius, in their fore-cited books, do atteſt, that Jupiter Latiaris was ſtill in their age worſhipped with humane Bloud at Rome. Beſides, Tertullian witneſſeth in his Apology, that in his age Infants were in ſecret ſacrificed to Saturn. Valeſ.

[n] Σκυβάλων ἐνθλιπτότερον. Euſebius alludes to that famous ſaying of Heraclitus, νέκυες κοπρίων ἐνθλιπτότεροι, the dead are more deſpicable than muck; of which ſaying Strabo makes mention in the end of his ſixteenth book, and Origen in his fifth book againſt Celſus. From whence came this proverbial expreſſion, κοπρίων ἐνθλιπτότερος, ſpoken concerning a man of no value. Pollux, book 5. chap. 46, κοπρίαν ἐνθλιπτότερος, εἰ χρὴ καθ' ἡράκλειτον λέγειν, more contemptible than dung, if we ſhould ſpeak after the manner of Heraclitus. Julian in his Oration againſt Heraclius the Cynick, pag. 421, makes uſe of the ſame ſaying of Heraclitus, in theſe words: ὀλιγωρεῖν δὲ πάντη τοῦ σώματος, καὶ νομίζειν αὐτὸ, καὶ τὸν ἡράκλειτον, καὶ κοπρίων ἐνθλιπτότερον. ὅπως δὲ ῥᾴστα δὲ αὖπω τὰς θεραπείας ἀπαλλαγῶν, ἕως ἂν ὁ θεὸς ὥσπερ ὀρθόνῃ τὸ σῶμα χρῆσθαι ὀπτάνῃ: but wholly to deſpiſe the Body, and to account it according to Heraclitus, even more contemptible than dung. But with the greateſt eaſe to perfect its cure, as long as God ſhall order the Body to be uſed as an inſtrument. Which place I have mended and ſupplied, from Suidas in the word ἡράκλειτος. For in the ordinary Editions, this paſſage is corrupt and imperfect. Valeſ.

[o] πράξει ἔτι. It muſt be written with an interrogation, thus, ὁ δὲ μηδεὶς ὢν πράξειε τί; But, what can He do, who is no Body? And ſo Chriſtophorſon ſeems to have read. Indeed, in the Fuketian Manuſcripts the reading is, πράξειέ τι. Valeſ.

[p] Οὐκ ἐν αἰσθήσει τὸ κριτήριον. 'Tis apparent that the reading ſhould be, ἐκ ἐν αἰσθήσει, that is, judgment is not placed in ſenſe. Therefore the verb ἐστὶ muſt be underſtood here; which Chriſtophorſon apprehended not; for he hath erroneouſly joyned theſe words with the following. There was a great diſpute amongſt the old Philoſophers περὶ κριτηρίου. So they termed the Rule, whereby the truth of things is judged of by men. The moſt ancient Philoſophers did not place that power or faculty in the Senſes, but in the Reaſon; as Sextus Empiricus informs us in his ſeventh book againſt the Mathematici. Farther, κριτήριον is taken two ways, either for the faculty it ſelf, whereby truth is diſcerned; or elſe for the inſtrument of that faculty. Potamo the Philoſopher termed the firſt, ὑφ' ὅ, from which; the ſecond, δι' ὅ, by which; as Laërtius tells us, in the Proëme of his own work. Valeſ.

[q] Αὕτη γὰρ φύσις νεκρῶν, For this is the nature of the dead. The words are miſplaced here; a thing which, as I have already advertized, does frequently happen in theſe Books. I write therefore, αὕτη γὰρ φύσις ζώντων. νεκρῶν δὲ ἡ ἐναντία. For this is the Nature of the Living: &c. A little before, ſome words are ill repeated, which fault the ſtudious Reader will eaſily mend of himſelf. Valeſ.

CHAP. XVII. BUT 'tis here seasonable, that we should inspect the Performances of our Saviour in this our age; and should contemplate the living works of the living God. [a] For how should such Glorious Atchievements as these, not be the living Works of a living person, and of One who truly lives the Life of God? But, do You enquire what those are? Hear them. Not long since, some persons who had proclaimed war against God, with great obstinacy, and no less Power and Military Force, ruined and dug up from their very foundations, the Edifices of his Oratories; and resolved upon rendring His Churches wholly invisible; and with all imaginable Engines and Stratagems fought against Him who is not to be seen with eyes; casting and throwing against Him * the darts of impious Expressions. But the invisible God was avenged on them in an invisible manner. Immediately therefore, by one only Nod of the Deity, they became extinct; [those persons I mean] who a little before lived delicious and pleasant lives and were thrice-happy; who were celebrated amongst all men, as equal with the Gods; who during many periods of years [b] had Governed the Empire gloriously and happily, as long, namely, as there was peace and friendship between them and Him whom they afterwards opposed. But when they changed their minds, and were so audacious as to engage in an actuall war with God; and set their Gods in array against Ours, as their * Leaders and Defenders: immediately, in one moment of time, and by the Beck and Power of that God whom they opposed, they all underwent the deserved punishments of their audacious attempts. In so much that, giving ground to Him with whom they were engaged in war, and turning their Backs upon Him, they acknowledged His divinity as others had done; and hastned to grant and permit the clean contrary to those things, which a little before they had attempted. But our Saviour forthwith erected Victorious Trophies in all parts of the Earth; and did again adorn the whole world afresh, with holy Temples and † Consecrated Oratories: and in every City and Village, in all Countries, and in the desart places of the Barbarians, [c] He dedicated Churches and Temples, to one God the Supream King and Lord of all. Hence also 'tis, that those consecrated places are vouchsafed the name of the Lord; and take their appellation not from men, but from the Supream Lord Himself. For, from Him [d] they have the name of Churches.

[a] Εἰ γὰρ ἐ ζῶντ☩. It must, I think, be worded thus, πῶς γὰρ ἔ ζῶντ☩, with an interrogation; which reading I have followed in my Version. Vales.

* Or, Numerous darts of words.

[b] Τὴν εὐχὴν εὐδύναντες ὅτε ἦν τε. This place is corrupted with a double fault: nevertheless 'twas easie to restore it in this manner: διαπρεπῶς πάνυ ἀρχὴν εὐδύναντες ὅτε μὲν τὰ πρὸς τὸν ὕστερον πολεμηθέντα φίλα τε ἦν αὐτοῖς, &c; had governed the Empire, &c. Eusebius means Diocletian and his Colleagues, who (says he) had governed the Republick gloriously and happily, as long as they maintained a peace with God and with the Churches. But after they attempted to bring a war upon God, and to persecute His most Holy worshippers; immediately all affairs were altered, and put into a worse posture. Eusebius says the same in the end of his eighth Book. Vales.

* Champions.

† Or, Splendid Consecrations of Oratories.

[c] Δεσπότῃ καθιερῶσε. It must, I think, be δεσπότῃ καθιερώσας. ἔνθεν γε, &c. And we have rendred it accordingly. Vales.

[d] Κυριακῶν ὀνομάτων τὴν ἐπωνυμίαν. I had rather read τῆς ἐπωνυμίας, the name. Nothing occurs more frequently in Ecclesiastick writers, than the name of κυριακὰ or Dominica. Nor have only the Greeks termed Churches thus, but the Germans also have borrowed this name from the Greeks, as Walafridus Strabo informs us in his Book de Rebus Ecclesiasticis, Chap. 7. Vales. Hence likewise we have our name for them in English, to wit Churches; and hence 'tis that the Scots call them Kirks.

Let Him therefore that has a mind to it, come forth and inform us, who, after so great a Ruine and Devastation, hath raised the sacred Houses from their foundations to so vast an height? Who [hath bestowed a Resurrection] upon those [Structures,] † wholly despair'd of as to their being rebuilt, and has vouchsafed them a Re-edification, whereby they are become far more splendid and stately, than they had been before? * and, which is most to be admired, hath not new-built them after the death of those Enemies of God; but whilst those very persons were yet alive, who had demolished them: in so much that, they themselves with their own mouthes, and by their own Letters recanted their bold attempts: and this they did, not whilst they were surrounded with the delights and pleasures of Life, (for thus any one might perhaps suppose, that they performed this [c] with a regard to kindness and clemency;) but at such time as they were pursued with stripes inflicted on them from Heaven. Who, after so many and such impetuous storms of Persecution, and in the very heat and extremity of dangers, thorowout the whole world kept fixt to the Precepts of His Divine Doctrine, infinite numbers of men that were zealous followers of a Philosophick Life, and strict worshippers of the Deity, [f] also women that were in Holy Orders, and Quires of Virgins which Dedicated the whole time of their Lives to a perpetual chastity of body and mind: and taught them abstinence from food, and most willingly to continue without meat and wine during the space of many days, and to † lead a hard and austere course of life, with a singular modesty and temperance? Who hath so far prevailed upon women, and numerous multitudes of men, that they should exchange the food of their Bodies, for that rational food that agrees with their rational souls, [which food is gotten] by ‖ a perusal of Divine Lessons? Who hath taught Barbarians and Peasants, women, children and servants, and innumerable multitudes of all Nations, to despise Death; and to perswade themselves, that their Souls are immortal, and that [g] there is an Eye of justice which inspects humane affairs; and that they should expect a future judgment from God [to pass upon] the pious and the impious; and that for that reason, they ought to lead just, holy, and sober lives?

† Or, Deprived of all hope.

* Καὶ ἀνενεώσατο αὐτά. In the Fuketian Copy the reading is, αὐτὰ δὴ τὸ τῷ λόγῳ μέγιστον θαῦμα. which we follow. Vales.

[c] Φιλανθρωπίας λογισμῷ. Any one will easily perceive, though I hold my peace, that some words are wanting here. I write therefore, ὅπῃ γὰρ φιλανθρωπίας λογισμῷ τοῦτο πεφύκαι ἀνηρ τάχα ἂν τις νομίσειε, for thus any one, &c; which words must be included in a Parenthesis. Indeed Christophorson seems to have read so, as it appears from his Version. Vales.

[f] Γυναικῶν δὲ ἱερείας καὶ χορὸς ἀειπαρθένων. Christophorson joyned the word γυναικῶν with the term ἀειπαρθένων, which I don't approve of. For, by the term γυναικῶν, Eusebius means those women, who having been deprived of their husbands, consecrated their widowhood to God; and he distinguishes these from the Quires of Virgins. Farther, out of the number of widows, Deaconnesses and Presbytereſſes were wont to be chosen, as Epiphanius attests in the Heresie of the Collyridiani, and in the Epilogue of his Books against Heresies. Whence 'tis, that at this place Eusebius terms them ἱερείας. For those women did in a manner perform the Office of Priests; in regard they instructed women that were to be baptized. But the reading must be, γυναικῶν τε ἱερείας, also women that were in Holy Orders; and so 'tis in the Fuketian Copy. These women, before they could be chosen Deaconnesses, were wont to be examined. Amongst other things, they were asked, whether they had washed the Saints feet; as Origen informs us in his thirty second Tome on Saint John's Gospel. Vales.

† Or, To make use of the consuinence and strength of a hard life, with, &c.

‖ Or, Divine Readings.

[g] Καὶ δίκης ὀφθαλμὸν ὑπάρχειν. Who sees not that the reading should be δίκης ὀφθαλμὸν ὑπάρχειν, there is an eye of Justice. For the the ancients believed, that Justice had a most quick and sharp eye, which inspected all things that were done by men, and would never wink: which eye they appealed to as a witness, who had been any wayes injured. Nothing occurs more frequently, both amongst the Grecks and Latines. The old Poets words in Stobæus are these.

Ἐστὶν δίκης ὀφθαλμὸς, ὡς δὶ ἦπ' ἔχε
Λεύσσων πρησσόντα, πάνθ' ὅμως ἀεὶ βλέπει.

We have not leisure to produce more authorities; nor is it at all necessary, in regard the thing is so well known. Yet Christophorson saw not the Emendation of this place. Vales.

For 'tis in no wise possible, that those who are not thus disposed, should submit themselves to the yoke of piety. All which egregious performances, are even at this present accomplished, only by Our Saviour. But let us omit these things. Come on, we will now apply our selves to [a conviction of] Him whose mind is as hard as flint, by such interrogatories as these. Tell me, Friend! and utter words that are rational; * Let your expressions be the products, not of a foolish and stupid heart, but of a soul endued with reason and understanding. Tell me [I say,] after you have often and duely weighed the matter with your self. Which of all the Sages who in times past have been famous, was known in the same manner with Our Saviour, and † proclaimed so infinite a number of ages since, by the Oracles of the Prophets, amongst the children of the Hebrews, anciently God's beloved people? Who in their minds had a fore-knowledge of the place of His Birth, and of the times of His Coming, and of His manner of Life; of His Miracles likewise, of His Discourses, and of His famous actions; and left them on record in the sacred Volumns. h Who hath shown Himself so swift a Revenger, of those audacious Attempts against Himself? that, immediately after that impious fact committed against Himself, the whole Nation of the Jews should be pursued and punished by an invisible Power, and their Royal Seat utterly demolished and overthrown from its very foundations, and the Temple, together with all the Ornaments and rich furniture therein, levell'd with the Ground. Who hath uttered predictions, i both concerning those impious men, and also in reference to the Church founded by Him over the whole world, exactly correspondent to the affairs themselves, and hath actually demonstrated and confirm'd the truth of those Predictions, in such a manner as Our Saviour hath done? Concerning the Temple of the Impious He had said, *Matth. 23. 38. † See Matt. 24. 2. Behold, your house is left to you desolate, and, † there shall not remain a stone upon a stone in this place, which shall not be thrown down. But concerning His own Church [He spake in this manner,] ‖ I will build my Church upon a rock, and the Gates of Hell shall not prevail against it. ‖ Matt. 16. 18. k To have brought at first from fishing, men that were contemptible and * illiterate; and afterwards to have constituted them Law-givers, and Teachers to the whole world; what, and how mighty a thing does this seem to You? As for His promise to them, that He would make them Fishers of men, He not only uttered it in words, but performed it actually and abundantly: and conferr'd on them so great a degree of strength and power, that they composed writings, and published Books: and the authority of all those Books was so great, that being rendred into all Languages, as well of Greeks as Barbarians, thorowout the whole world, they are studiously read by all Nations; and the Contents of them are believed to be divine Oracles; of how mighty a prevalency is this, in order to a clear demonstration of His Divinity? How considerable likewise is that, namely that He foretold things future, and, long before it hapned, assured His disciples, that they should be brought before Kings and Princes, and should be punished, and undergo the extreamest of Torments, not for any foul act of their own, but only on account of their confession of His Name? Moreover, that He fitted and prepared them chearfully to endure these things; and so fortified them with the Arms of Piety, that in their Conflicts with their adversaries, their minds appeared firmer than an Adamant; what powerfulness of expression is it, which that matter does not exceed? Likewise, that not only those who had followed Him, but their successours also, and again they who immediately succeeded them, and at length such as have lived in this our present age, should with so undaunted a resolution * unite the Forces of their minds; that although they had done nothing worthy of death, yet with pleasure would endure all manner of punishments, and every sort of Torture, on account of their eximious Piety towards the supream God; what degree of admiration does not this surpass? What King did ever continue His Reign during so vast a number of Ages? Who does thus wage war after death, and does erect Trophies over His Enemies; and does subdue every place, Country, and City, as well Grecian as Barbarian; and does vanquish His Opposers by an invisible and latent † Hand? And, which is the chiefest thing of all that hath been hitherto rehearsed, l that Peace * by His Power procured for the whole world, concerning which we have already spoken what we judged agreeable, how should it not stop the mouthes of all slanderers? In as much as, the Unity and Concord of all Nations, did really concur in time with the Preaching of Our Saviour, and with the Doctrine by Him disseminated over the whole world: and in regard [both of them] had long before been foretold by the Prophets of God, I mean the † Universal Peace of the Nations, and the Doctrine delivered by Christ to the Nations. The whole length of the day would be insufficient for me, ‖ Dread Sir! should I attempt to sum up in one, those most clear and cogent arguments of Our Saviour's Divine Power, drawn from the things which are at this present Visible. For no man since the Creation, either amongst the Grecians or Barbarians, hath ever exerted such mighty Efforts of a Divine Power, as Our Saviour has done. m But why do I say men? when as, even they who amongst all Nations are styled Gods, have not been endued with such a mighty power upon Earth.

h Ἦπις ὠπῶ ταχὺς. Doubtless the reading must be, πῖς ὅπω ταχὺς; in which manner also Christophorson seems to have read; and we have rendred it accordingly. Vales.

i Ἀυπρὶ τε πρὸι. It must be written πέρι, with the accent cast back to the first syllable; which is done, as often as the preposition is set after the word. Presently the reading must be, καταλλήλως τοῖς πράγμασι, correspondent to the affairs themselves. For 'tis referred to the word προρρήσεις, predictions. In the Fuketian Copy 'tis καταλλήλως. Vales.

k Ἐξ ἁλείας μεταλαβεῖν πρὸ ἀρχήν. 'Tis a mistake of the Printer, I think, instead of μεταλαβεῖν, to have brought: so 'tis in the Fuketian Copy. Vales.

* Or, Rusticks.

* Or, Bring forth fruit, not out of &c.

† Prefignified, or, declared.

* Τὰς ψυχὰς νευρώσαι τὰς δυνάμεις, make the Forces of their minds nervose, or sinewie.

† Or, Right-hand.

l Πεπαυσθεῖσαν εἰρήνην. He means the Peace which Christ, at His Birth, bestowed on the Roman world. Vales.

* Or, Which by his power reignes over the whole &c.

† Or, Worldly.

‖ Emperour.

m Τί δὲ λέγω ἀνθρώπων. In the Fuketian Copy 'tis ἀνδρῶν; and just before, the reading is, ὅσην ὁ σωτὴς ἡμῖν; not, ὅσην ὁ σωτὴς ὁ ἡμέτερος. Vales.

*Or if the thing be otherwise, let Him that is desirous, make it out to us. Let * any of the Philosophers come forth and inform us, what God or* Hero was ever heard of, from the very first Beginning of Time, who hath delivered to men the Doctrine of an Eternal Life and a celestial Kingdome, in such a manner as Our Saviour hath done: who has induced innumerable multitudes of men thorowout the whole world, to live in a conformity to the Precepts of a Celestial Philosophy; and has perswaded them, that they should † aspire to Heaven, and hope for those Mansions there provided for Pious Souls? What person, whether God, [n] or Hero, *or man, hath ever * overspread and enlightened the [whole world,] from the rising as far as the setting Sun, with the brightest Beames of His Own Doctrine; running in a manner the same Course with the Sun: in so much that, all Nations where ever inhabiting, perform one and the same worship, to The One God? Who, whether God or* Hero, hath crush't all the Gods and Hero's both Grecian and Barbarian, and hath made a Law, that no one of them should be esteemed a God; and hath so far prevailed, that this His Law should obtain every where: after which, when He was opposed by all, He Himself, being but One, hath routed the whole Force of His Adversaries, hath vanquished all those who had always been accounted Gods and Hero's, and hath brought the matter to this Issue, that all over the whole world, even from its remotest Limits, He Himself should alone be termed The Son of God by all Nations? Who hath commanded them who inhabit this vast Element of the Earth, as well those in the Continent, as them that live in the Isles, that meeting together [every week,] they should observe that termed the Lord's day, and celebrate it as a Festival: [o] and that they should not feed fat their own Bodies, but should make it their business, to enliven and cherish their Soules with Divine instructions? What God or Hero, *so opposed as Our Saviour hath been, hath erected Victorious Trophies over His Enemies? for from * the first Times hitherto, they have not ceased their Hostilities, both against His Doctrine and People. But He being invisible, by an undiscern'd Power hath advanced His own Servants, together with the Sacred Houses, to the height of Glory. But what necessity is there, with so much of earnestness to attempt a Narrative, of Our Saviour's Divine Performances, which exceed all manner of expression? In as much as, though we be silent, the Things themselves do cry aloud to those, who are possest of Mental Ears. Undoubtedly, this is a new and wonderfull thing, and which was once only seen amongst the Race of mankind; that such signal Blessings as these should be [p] conferred on men; and, that He who really is the only Son of God from all eternity, should be visible on earth.*

CHAP. XVIII. [a] BUT these things which You have heard from us, will perhaps be superfluous to [a] Τὰ δὲ You [Great Sir!] *Who by experience it Self have frequently been made sensible [of the presence] of Our Saviour's Divinity, and who, not so much in words as deeds, have approved Your Self a Preacher of the Truth to all men. For You Your Self, Dread Sovereign! When You shall have leisure, can relate to us, if You please, innumerable Appearances of Our Saviour shewing You His Divinity; innumerable Visions in Your sleep: I mean not those Suggestions of His to You, which to us are secret and inexplicable; but those divine Councils and Advises infused into Your mind, and which are productive of matters universally advantagious, and every way usefull, in reference to the Care and Providence of Humane affairs. You will likewise unfold to us, in such a manner as they deserve, the apparent assistances of God Your Defender and Keeper in Your Wars: the Ruine of Your Enemies, and those that combin'd and plotted against You: Your Rescues in dangers: Your ready and expedite knowledge in difficulties: Your defence in Solitudes: Your * industry and readiness in straits and distresses: Your fore-knowledges of things future: Your Provident Care in reference to the whole of affairs: Your deliberations concerning matters uncertain and obscure: Your undertakings in relation to the most momentous Things: Your Administration of Civil matters: Your Ordering of Your Military Forces: Your † Reformations every where: Your Constitutions in reference to publick Right: Lastly, Your Laws, which are of singular use to the Lives of men. You will likewise without any Omission recount each of those matters, which are obscure to us, but most apparently manifest to Your Self alone, and are kept deposited in Your Imperial Memory, as in some secret Treasuries. In regard to all which particulars, as 'tis likely, when You had made use of the very same clear and cogent Arguments of Our Saviour's [Divine] Power, You raised a ‖ Basilica, as a Trophy of His Victory gain'd over Death, a Fabrick which You design'd all should view, as well the Faithfull as Infidels; and an Holy Temple of the Holy God; and most stately, splendid, and glorious Monuments of an immortal Life and a divine Kingdom; and [You gave] sacred Gifts [in memory] of the Victory of Our Saviour the Supream King, [Gifts] that are every way suitable to the Donour, and which do most exactly [b] befit an Emperour [who is a* Victor.] Wherewith You have adorned that Martyrium and Monument of immortal Life, that [c] in Royal Characters You might express and represent the Celestial Word of God to be the Victor and Triumpher, [d] to all Nations; and, as well really as verbally, might publish a Pious and Religious Confession of God, in expressions which are clear, and that can't be obscur'd.

[n] Ἢ ἡ ἥρως ἄλλος ἀνθρωπος. Christophorson has expung'd the last word, which is not ill done. Nevertheless it may be read, ἢ ἡ ἀνθρωπος, or man. Or else, μᾶλλον ἀνθρωπος, much less man. Valesius.

[o] Καὶ αὐτὰ σώματα παίνειν, and to fatten their own Bodies. I know indeed, that it was the Christians usage to feast more plentifully and splendidly on Sundays. But the word παίνειν, to fatten, or feed fat, is no fitting term to be used concerning Christians. Wherefore I doubt not but Eusebius wrote, ἡ τὰ σώματα παίνειν, and that they should not, &c. Valesius.

[p] Τὸ ἀνθρώπων ἐυηνοχέναι. Christophorson seems to have read ἀνθρωπον, as it appears from his Version, which runs thus, Ut Homo tam egregia facinora ederet, that a man should perform such signal and extraordinary Actions. But the Fuketian Copy hath opened to us the true reading of this place; which runs thus, τὸ, ἀνθρώποις ἐυηνοχέναι τὰ τοιαδὶ, ἡ τὸν ἀληθῶς, &c; that such signal Blessings, &c. For Eusebius means all those Blessings, which he has particularly reckoned up above: all which were conferred on men by Christ's coming down upon earth. Valesius.

[a] Τὰ δὲ

ἂν ἡ ἄλλως εἴη. Some words are wanting here; which we may supply thus, σοὶ βασιλεῦ, to You O Emperour! But the Fuk. Copy hath given us the true reading: where 'tis thus worded; ᾠετο δ' ἂν ἡ ἄλλως εἴη τὰ παρ' ὑμῶν σοὶ ἀκκόμοθα, and we have rendred it accordingly. Valesius.

* Searches, or, discoveries.

† Or, Emendations in each particular.

‖ See His Life of Constant. B. 3. chap. 43. note (c.)

[b] Ὅτι εἰκὸς βασιλεῖ. I am of opinion, that the word νικητῇ, Victor, is to be added after these words; not for this reason only, because Constantine had the surname of Victor given him; but also, in regard this word makes a great elegance here. For Eusebius says, that those sacred Gifts which Constantine gave to the Jerusalem-Church, (because they are the monuments of the Victory of Christ the Supream King,) do incomparably well befit an Emperour that is a Victor. Valesius.

[c] Βασιλικοῖς χαρακτῆσιν. I have rendred it Regios Apices, Royal Letters or Characters. For so Eusebius is wont to express himself as I have remark'd otherwhere. He says therefore, that Constantine, by that most magnificent Fabrick, and those most rich sacred Gifts, wherewith he had adorned the Sepulchre of Christ, (as 'twere by Royal Letters set up in some publick place,) had proclaimed Christ the Victor and Triumpher to all people. Valesius.

[d] Πᾶσι τοῖς ἔθνεσι. With these words the Fuketian Copy does close Eusebius's Panegyrick. 'Tis certain, the words which follow, are but little necessary, nor do they seem to me to be Eusebius's. Valesius.

THE END.

THE

THE INDEX

Of the Chief Matters contained in the Text of theſe

HISTORIANS.

The Firſt Number ſhews the Page; the Second, the Column.

A.

Abari or Abares, a Scythick Nation, being heavily oppreſt by the Turks, leave their habitation, and come to the Boſphorus. 500. 1. at length lodge themſelves on the banks of the Danube. ibid. They make an excurſion as far as the Long Wall, and take many Cities. 519. 2.

Abaſgi embrace the Chriſtian faith under Juſtinian. 486. 2.

Abdas Biſhop of Perſia. 373. 1.

Abdus ſon of Abdus, and Edeſſen, cured by Thaddæus. 15. 1.

Abgarus or Agbarus King of the Edeſſens, ſends a Letter to Chriſt. 14. 1. Chriſt's anſwer to Abgarus. ibid.

Ablabius a Rhetorician and a Biſhop. 374. 2.

Abramius Biſhop of Urimi. 304. 1.

Acacius Biſhop of Amida melts down the ſacred Veſſels, and with their price redeems captives. 379. 2.

Acacius Biſhop of Beræa in Syria. 365. 2.

Acacius Biſhop of Cæſarea. 247. 1. His draught of the Creed 279. 1. He is depoſed in the Synod of Seleucia. 282. 2. He wrote Euſebius Pamphilus's Life. 247. 1.

Acacius, after Gennadius, is ordain'd Biſhop of Conſtantinople. 433. 1. He is termed Patriarch and Arch Biſhop in the Emperour Baſiliſcus's Conſtitution. 452. 2. Alſo, in the Penitentiary-Libell of the Biſhops of Aſia. 453. 2. what was tranſacted in his condemnation and depoſition. 459. 1, 2.

Acacius Biſhop of Melitina declares Neſtorius's Blaſphemy in the Epheſine Synod. 404. 2.

Acacius Biſhop of Ariarathia. 438. 1.

Acacius and Strategius, Comites. 607. 2.

Aceſius Biſhop of the Novatianiſts. 215. 1.

Achillas Biſhop of Alexandria. 211. 1.

Achior the Ammonite. 10. 1.

Acœmeti, Monks ſo called. 459. 2.

Acts of Pilate. See Pilate.

Adaarmanes General of the Perſians, is by Choſroes ſent with an Army. 505. 1. beſieges Antioch. 505. 2. burns Heraclea and Apamia. ibid. is vanquiſhed by Mauricius. 512. 1.

Adamantius a Jewiſh Phyſician. 375. 2.

Adauctus a Martyr. 146. 1.

Addæus and Ætherius Senators, puniſhed with death. 500. 2.

Adrian. See Hadrian.

Adrianus and Eubulus Martyrs at Cæſarea in Paleſtine. 169. 1.

Ædeſius Brother to Apphianus, a Martyr at Alexandria. 161. 2.

Ædeſius a Tyrian. 231. 2.

Ælia, that City heretofore term'd Jeruſalem. 21. 1. 52. 1.

Ælius Publius Julius Biſhop of Develtum. 84. 1.

Æmilianus Præfect of Egypt. 122. 1, 2.

Æmilius Frontinus Proconſul of Aſia. 83. 2.

Æſculapius's Temple at Ægæ in Cilicia. 597. 2.

Aëtius an Heretick ſurnam'd Atheus. 270. 2. He is made Deacon by Leontius. ibid.

Aëtius Arch-Deacon of the Conſtantinopolitan Church. 446. 2. Primicerius of the Notaries. 439. 2.

Ævum has neither beginning, nor end. 671. 1. whence ſo called. ibid.

Africanus's Opinion concerning the diſagreement of the Goſpels in reckoning up our Saviour's Genealogy. 9. 1, 2. concerning the Hiſtory of Suſanna. 106. 2. His Books of Chronography, or Annals. ibid. A moſt learned man. 271. 1.

Agabus a Prophet. 17. 2. His prediction concerning the famine was compleated under Claudius. 19. 2.

Agapius Biſhop of Cæſarea in Paleſtine. 138. 1.

Agapius and Thecla Martyrs of Paleſtine. 159. 1, 2.

Agapius and Dionyſius, Martyrs at Cæſarea in Paleſtine. 159. 2.

Agathias the Rhetorician, His Hiſtory. 487. 1.

Agathobulus, two of that name, ſurnam'd the Maſters. 137. 1, 2.

Agbarus. See Abgarus.

Agelius Biſhop of the Novatianiſts. 279. 1. 309. 1. 334. 2. 335. 1.

Agrippa made King of the Jews by Caius. 17. 2. He was alſo called Herod. ibid. and 19. 2. He kills James the Brother of our Lord. 19. 2. His death. 20. 1, 2.

Agrippa Son of King Agrippa, made King of Judæa by Claudius. 25. 2.

Agrippa Caſtor wrote againſt Baſilides. 52. 2.

Agrippinus Biſhop of Alexandria. 62. 2.

Alamundarus Governour of the Saracens. 378. 1.

Alamundarus King of the Saracens. 483. 2. Refuſes to give aſſiſtance to the Romans, though confederates. 512. 1. Is baniſhed by Mauricius into the Iſland Sicilie. 516. 1.

Alarichus King of the Goths, takes Rome. 373. 2. makes Attalus Emperour. ibid.

Albinus Procurator of Judæa. 28. 2.

Alcibiades a Martyr of Lyons. 75. 1.

Alexander, the fifth Biſhop of Rome after the Apoſtles. 50. 1.

Alexander a Native of Phrygia, a Martyr at Lyons. 73. 1.

Alexander a Montaniſt, condemn'd for Robberies. 83. 1.

Alexander was Coadjutor to Narciſſus Biſhop of Jeruſalem. 95. 2. and 96. 2. He founded an Eccleſiaſtick Library. 102. 2. He is crown'd with Martyrdom. 108. 2. 116. 2.

Alexander Biſhop of Alexandria. 211. 2. Having convened a Synod at Alexandria, condemns Arius and his followers. 211. 2. ſends his Synodick Letter to all the Biſhops. ibid. His Elogie. 220. 2.

Alexander Biſhop of Antioch. 373. 1.

Alexander Biſhop of Conſtantinople. 242. 2.

Alexander a Native of Paphlagonia, a Novatianiſt. 276. 1, 2.

Alexandrian Church, its Cuſtome. 347. 1.

Alexandrians, their humour Seditious and heady. 429. 2.

Allegorical Expoſitions of Sacred Scripture. 24. 1.

Alphæus and Zacchæus Martyrs of Paleſtine. 154, &c.

Amachius Preſident of the Province of Phrygia. 296. 1.

Ambroſius converted to the true faith by Origen. 100. 1. invites Origen to write, and ſupplies him with Notaries. 103. 1. was a Confeſſour under the Emperour Maximinus. 105. 2.

Ambroſius is ordained Biſhop of Millain. 324. 2.

Amida a City of Meſopotamia, taken by the Perſians. 470. 1.

Ammia, a Propheteſs. 82. 2.

Ammon, Zeno, Ptolemæus, Ingenuus, and Theophilus Martyrs at Alexandria. 111. 2.

Ammon, Father of the Monks of Egypt. 316. 2.

Ammonarium two women of that name, Martyrs at Alexandria. 111. 1.

Ammonius was a Chriſtian Philoſopher. 101. 2. His Book concerning the agreement of Moſes and Chriſt. ibid.

Ammonias Biſhop of Laodicea in Piſidia. 365. 2.
Ammonius, Dioſcorus, Euſebius, and Eusbymius, Monks commonly called The Long Monks. 357. 2. they come to Conſtantinople. 359. 2.
Ammonius a Monk. 319. 1.
Ammonius a Poet. 357. 1. He recited his Poem before the Emperour. ibid.
Amphilochius Biſhop of Iconium. 334. 1.
Anaſtaſian and Caroſian Baths at Conſtantinople, whence ſo termed. 309. 1.
Anaſtaſius Biſhop of Rome. 373. 2.
Anaſtaſius a presbyter, Neſtorius's Companion and Confident. 402. 2.
Anaſtaſius Biſhop of Jeruſalem after Juvenalis, ſubſcribes to Baſiliſcus's Circular Letters. 450. 2.
Anaſtaſius is choſen Emperour from being a Silentiarius. 464. 2. would ſuffer no innovation to be made in reference to the conſtitution of the Church. 465. 1. Ejects Euphemius and Macedonius Biſhops of Conſtantinople. 465. 2. His name, after his death, was raſed out of the ſacred Diptychs, or Tables. 469. 2. whilſt alive, he was Anathematized at Jeruſalem. ibid. He ordered theſe words to be added to the Hymn termed The Triſagium; Who haſt been crucified on our account. 476. 1.
Anaſtaſius ſucceeds Domninus in the Biſhoprick of Antioch. 497. 2. His Character. 498. 1. His anſwer to the Emperour Juſtinian. 498. 2. Alſo, his Letter to the Monks of both the Syria's concerning the faith. ibid. His Fare-well-Speech to the Antiochians. ibid. He is ejected out of his See. 502. 2. He is reſtored. 526. 1.
Anathematize, what it is. 387. 2.
Anatolius Biſhop of Laodicea. 136. 1. His Book concerning Eaſter. 137. 1. He is firſt made Coadjutor by Theotecnus Biſhop of Cæſarea. 137. 2.
Anatolius Biſhop of Beræa. 304. 2.
Anatolius Maſter of the Milice throughout the Eaſt, builds Anatolius's Porticus at Antioch. 415. 2.
Anatolius Senator, a wicked man, is convicted to have ſacrificed to Dæmons. 510. 1. He is caſt to the wild Beaſts in the Amphitheatre at Conſtantinople. 510. 2.
Anazarbus the Metropolis of the Second Cilicia, is ruined by an Earthquake. 481. 1. Being rebuilt by Juſtinus Senior, it is named Juſtinopolis. ibid.
Andreas the Apoſtle, Preaches the Goſpel in Scythia. 30. 1.
Androgyni the Prieſts of the Nile, deſtroyed by Conſtantine. 614. 2.
Anencletus Biſhop of the Roman Church. 38. 2.
Anicetus Biſhop of Rome. 54. 2. How highly he honoured Polycarp. 89. 1.
Annianus the firſt Biſhop of Alexandria. 38. 2.
Annianus is ordained Biſhop of Antioch by the Synod of Seleucia. 280. 2.
Anniverſary or Nativity of the Publick Genius of the City Cæſarea. 169. 1.
Anomœi, Hereticks. 304. 1.
Anomœi and Exucontii. 283. 2. 284. 1.
Anteros Biſhop of Rome. 106. 1.
Anthemius is made Emperour of the Romans by Leo Auguſtus. 435. 2.
Anthemius Præfect of the Prætorium. 369. 2.
Anthimus Biſhop of Conſtantinople, an Eutychian. 481. 2. By Severus's perſwaſion he leaves the See of Conſtantinople. 482. 1. His Letters to Theodoſius. ibid. is ejected out of his See by Juſtinian. ibid.
Anthimus Biſhop of Nicomedia, is crowned with Martyrdom. 142. 2. 147. 2.
Anthropomorphitæ, Hereticks. 357. 2. 358. 2.
Antinous Servant to the Emperour Hadrian. 53. 1. Hadrian builds a City in honour of him, and inſtitutes Games. ibid. He is deified. 303. 1.
Antioch termed Theopolis. 403. 2. 480. 1. Colonies from the Greeks carried thither. 416. 2. was ſhaken by a terrible Earthquake in the Reign of Leo Auguſtus. 433. 2. The Tetrapylum of Antioch. 434. 1. The Palace alſo and the Nymphæum. ibid.
Antiochus Biſhop of Ptolemais, by Preaching gathers a vaſt ſum of money. 360. 2.
Antipater Son of Herod the Aſcalonite, 8. 2. 10. 1. made Procurator of Judæa by Hyrcanus. 10. 1.
Antipater Biſhop of Rhoſus. 304, 1.
Antoninus, Zebinas and Germanus, Martyrs in Paleſtine. 165. 1, 2.
Antonius Biſhop of Germa. 385. 2. is killed by the Macedoniani. ibid.
Antonius a Monk. 233. 2 His Apophthegme, 318. 1.
Anulinus Proconſul of Africa. 193. 2.
Apelles, an Heretick. 79. 2.
Aphaca a place in Phœnice, infamous for the worſhip of Venus. 597. 1. 677. 1.
Apianus, a writer of the Roman Affairs. 513. 2.
Apion, wrote upon the Six-days-work. 89. 2.
Apocalypſe, whether written by Saint John the Evangeliſt, or by another. 130, &c.
Apollinaris Biſhop of Hierapolis. 66. 2. 290. 1. His Books. ibid. and 67. 1.
Apollinares, two Laodiceans, Father and Son, 284. 1, 2. their Hereſie. ibid. Their Books. 296. 1, 2.
Apollinaris is ordained Biſhop of Alexandria after Zoilus. 495. 1. He was preſent at the fifth Conſtantinopolitan Synod. 495. 2.
Apollonia a Virgin of Alexandria, is made a Martyr. 110. 1.
Apollonides an Heretick, corrupted the Books of Sacred Scripture. 90. 2.
Apollonius, an Eccleſiaſtick Writer. 82. 2.
Apollonius underwent an illuſtrious Martyrdom at Rome. 85. 1, 2.
Apollophanes, a Philoſopher. 101. 1.
Apoſtles, many termed ſuch, beſides the twelve. 13. 2.
Apoſtles and Chriſt, their images carefully preſerved. 126. 1, 2.
Apoſtles and Evangeliſts, determined nothing concerning the Feaſt of Eaſter. 345. 1.
Apphianus a Martyr in Paleſtine. 159. 2, &c.
Aquila of Pontus, rendred the Books of the Old Teſtament into Greek. 77. 2.
Aquila Præfect of Alexandria. 92. 2. 94. 1.
Arabianus Biſhop of Antros. 304. 1.
Arabianus an Eccleſiaſtick Writer. 89. 2.
Arcadius is proclaimed Auguſtus. 334. 2.
Archelaus Son to Herod. 12. 1.
Archelaus's diſputation againſt Manichæus. 234. 2.
Archelaus, Conſularis of Phœnice. 239. 1.
Ardaba, a Town of Phrygia, Montanus's Country. 81. 1.
Ardaburius Maſter of the Eaſtern Milice. 411. 2.
Ardaburius, a General of the Romans. 378. 1.
is ſent into Italy. 381. 2.
Areobindus, a General of the Romans. 378. 2. vanquiſheth the Perſians. ibid.
Ares, Probus, and Elias, Egyptians, Martyrs in Paleſtine. 166. 1.
Arians were wont to call the Catholicks Sabellians. 235. 1.
Arians were termed Porphyrians. 221. 2.
Ariſtides wrote an Apology in defence of the Chriſtians. 51. 1.
Ariſtion and John the Presbyter or Elder, Diſciples of our Lord. 49. 2.
Ariſtobulus, King and High-Prieſt of the Jews. 8. 2.
Ariſtobulus, one of the Seventy Tranſlatours. 137. 2.
Ariſtonicus Biſhop of Seleucia upon Belus. 304. 1.
Ariſtotle's Book, entitled Peplum. 302. 2.
Arius and Euzoius preſent a Libell of faith to Conſtantine. 237. 1.
Arius aſſerts a new Opinion. 211. 1, 2. His followers. 212. 1. Their aſſertions. ibid. He writes a Book entitled Thalia. 221. 1. His Books are ordered to be burned. 221. 2. His fraud in ſubſcribing. 243. 1. His death. ibid.
Armatus kinſman to Verina Auguſta, is ſlain by Zeno Auguſtus. 462. 2. His Son Baſiliſcus, from being Cæſar, is by Zeno compelled to be made a Presbyter. ibid.
Arſacius, Chryſoſtome being ejected, is ordained Biſhop of Conſtantinople. 366. 2.
Arſenius a Biſhop of the Melitians. 238. 2. Subſcribes to Athanaſius's depoſition. 240. 1, 2.
Arſenius a Monk. 317. 1.
Arſenius is by Zeno advanced to be Auguſtalis and Dux of Egypt. 461. 2.
Artemon's Hereſie. 89. 2. The Authour thereof was Theodotus a Tanner. 90. 1.
Aſcholius Biſhop of Theſſalonica. 331. 2.
Aſclepas Biſhop of Gaza. 251. 2. 261. 2.
Aſclepiades Biſhop of Antioch. 96. 2.
Aſclepiadotus an Heretick, diſciple to Theodotus. 90. 2 He mended the Books of Sacred Scripture. ibid.
Aſclepius a Biſhop of the Marcionites, was burnt for the faith of Chriſt. 166. 1.
Aſiaticus Dux of Phœnice Libanenſis. 469. 2.
Aſinius Quadratus, a Writer of Roman-affairs. 513. 2.
Aſpar Son to Ardaburius. 381. 2. He, together with his Sons, is ſlain by Leo Auguſtus. 436. 1.
Aſterius a Sophiſt. 242. 1. Marcellus Biſhop of Ancyra wrote againſt him. ibid.
Aſterius Comes of the Eaſt, quarrells with Gregory Biſhop of Antioch. 517. 2. He is killed in the Earthquake which ruined Antioch. 519. 1.
Aſturius a Martyr. 125. 2. 126. 1.
Ater a Martyr of Alexandria. 111. 1.
Athalaricus Son of Theodoricus King of the Goths. 486. 1.
Athanaſius Deacon of the Alexandrian Church. 216. 2. He is made Biſhop of Alexandria. 229. 1. He is calumniated by the Euſebians. 237. 2. is baniſhed into the Gallia's. 242. 1. Goes to Rome. 250. 1. is reſtored in the Serdican Synod. 257. 2. Returns to Alexandria. 260. 1. dyes. 315. 2.
Athanaſius's Book of Synods. 227. 1. His Book concerning the Life of Saint Anthony. 233. 2. 317. 1. His Letter to his Acquaintance. 272. 2, &c. His Apologetick concerning his own flight. 291. 2.
Athanaſius Biſhop of Ancyra. 304. 2.
Athanarichus King of the Goths. 326. 1. He ſurrenders himſelf to Theodoſius. 334. 2.
Attalus of Pergamus, a Martyr at Lyons. 70. 1, &c.

The INDEX.

Atticus Bishop of Synnada in Phrygia. 102. 1.
Atticus is ordained Bishop of Constantinople. 367. 1. His Character. 370. 1. He puts Chrysostome's name into the Dyptycks again. 382. 1.
Atticus Bishop of Nicopolis. 443. 2.
Attis the same with Adonis and Bacchus. 302. 2.
Augustus Reigned seven and fifty years. 12. 1.
Avilius Bishop of Alexandria. 38. 2.
Avitus Reigned eight months. 428. 2.
Aurelianus preparing for a Persecution, is smitten by Divine Vengeance. 135. 1. 660. 1.
Ause the name of Joshua the son of Nave. 5. 1.
Auxentius an Arian, Bishop of Millain. 272. 1. 274. 1. 324. 2.
Auxentius a Martyr in Palestine. 163. 1.

B.

Babylas Bishop of Antioch. 106. 1. He dyed in prison. 108. 2. His Reliques translated. 298. 1. 414. 2. A Church built in honour of the Martyr. ibid.
Bacchylides and Elpistus. 64. 1.
Bacchyllus Bishop of the Corinthians. 86. 1.
Bacurius an Iberian, Dux of Palestine. 233. 2. Master of the Milice. 351. 1.
Baptism the Seal of Christ. 40. 2.
Baptism of the sick in bed. 113. 2. persons so baptized, were not promoted to be Clergy-men. 114. 1.
Baradatus a famous Monk. 432. 1.
Barba Bishop of the Arians at Constantinople. 372. 1.
Barchochebas Leader of the Jews. 51. 2. 53. 2. Persecuted the Christians. 53. 2.
Bardesanes a Syrian. 67. 2.
Barlamenus Bishop of Pergamus. 304. 1.
Barnabas, one of Christ's 70 Disciples. 13. 2. His Epistle Apocryphal. 43. 1.
Barsanuphius, a famous Monk. 493. 1.
Barsumas a Monk, raises Sedition in Syria. 445. 2.
Bartholomew Preaches the Gospel to the Indians. 78. 2.
Basilicus a Marcionist. 79. 2.
Basilides a Martyr. 94. 1.
Basilides an Arch-Heretick. 52. 1. He wrote four and twenty Books on the Gospel. 52. 2. He counterfeited two Prophets, Barcabas and Barcoph. ibid.
Basilidians, Hereticks. 63. 2.
Basiliscus the Brother of Verina wife to Leo Augustus, seizes the Empire, and makes his Son Marcus Cæsar. 449. 1. His Circular Letter against the Chalcedon-Synod. 449. 2. His Anti-Circular Letter. 452. 2.
Basilius Bishop of Ancyra. 266. 1. disputes against Photinus. 269. 1. is deposed. 282. 1. 303. 2. 321. 1. &c.
Basilius Bishop of Cæsarea in Cappadocia. 310. 1. was a pillar of Truth. 318. 2.
Bassitius Bishop of Seleucia in Isauria was present at the Second Ephesine Synod. 424. 2.
Bassianus and Stephanus Bishops of Ephesus are deposed, and another chosen in their place. 447. 2.
Belisarius Master of the Milice in the East, vanquishes the Persians. 483. 2. takes Carthage. 485. 1. takes Rome. 486. 1. Triumphs at his return out of Africa. 485. 2. Takes Rome again. 486. 2.
Bells made use of in the Stews at Rome. 341. 1.
Benjamin Bishop of Jerusalem. 51. 2.
Beryllus Bishop of Bostri. 102. 2. 107. 1.
Beryllus Bishop of Philadelphia in Arabia. 290. 1.
Berytus, Biblus, and Tripolis, Sea-port Towns in Phœnice, are ruined by an Earthquake. 493. 2.
Besas a Souldier, a Martyr at Alexandria. 111. 1.
Bethera a very smal City of Judæa. 51. 2.
Biblias a Martyr at Lyons 70. 2.
Bishop's Chair. 106. 1.
Bishops and Clergy ought to give the people a good example. 134. 2.
Bishops are to be preferred before any Judge. 615. 2.
Bishop of Rome, his autority. 248. 1. 253. 2.
Bishops of Rome, their power. 374. 1.
Bishops usually wore a black Garment. 367. 2.
Bitus Bishop of Carræ. 304. 2.
Bizua a Town of Thracia. 314. 1.
Blandina a Martyr at Lyons. 70. 1. 72. 1. 73. 2.
Blastus an Heretick. 80. 1. 84. 2.
Boane a Lake near Nicomedia. 435. 2.
Bonifacius Bishop of Rome. 374. 1.
Bonosus Bishop of Rome. 509. 2.
Boscі, a sort of Monks in Palestine that fed on the ground as Beasts do. 418. 1.
Briso Bishop of Philippopolis in Thracia. 365. 2.
Briso Eunuch to Eudoxia Augusta. 364. 2.
Bryssia, places near Antioch. 518. 2.
Buddas, termed also Terebinthus. 234. 1. He wrote four Books. ibid.
Burgundions converted to the faith of Christ. 385. 1, 2.

C.

Cabaones a little King of the Moors near Tripoly. 484. 1. in what manner he vanquished the Vandals in Africa. ibid.
Calestinus See Celestinus.
Cæsarea Philippi, is by the Phœnicians called Paneas. 125. 2. a Statue erected there to Christ by a woman whom Christ had cured. 126. 1.
Caius the Emperour, persecuted the Jews most severely. 18. 2. He seized upon their Proseuchæ. ibid.
Caius an Ecclesiastick Writer flourished under Pope Zephyrinus. 29. 2. His disputation against Proclus 102. 2.
Caius and Alexander, Martyrs at Apamea. 82. 1.
Caius Bishop of Jerusalem. 79. 2.
Caius Bishop of Rome. 135. 2.
Caius a Bishop. 272. 2, &c.
Callicrates Bishop of Claudiopolis. 303. 2.
Callinicus a Melitian. 238. 1.
Callendion is ordained Bishop of Antioch. 453. 2. writes Letters to Zeno and Acacius against Peter Mongus. 456. 2. is banished to Oasis. 457. 1.
Callirhöe a place in Judæa, famous for warm-waters. 11. 2.
Callistus wrote the Actions of Julian Augustus in Heroick verse. 299. 2.
Callistus Governour of Antioch under Theodosius Junior, built Callistus's Porticus. 415. 2.
Candidus wrote upon the Six-days-work. 89. 2.
Capito Bishop of Jerusalem. 79. 2.
Carbuncle during the Reign of Maximinus, deprived many persons of their sight. 175. 2.
Carpocrates Founder of the Sect of the Gnosticks. 52. 2.
Carpocratians. 63. 2.
Carya a house at Constantinople. 368. 1.
Cassianus Bishop of Jerusalem. 79. 1.
Cassianus's Chronographie. 97. 2.
Cassius Bishop of Tyre. 89. 1.
Cataphrygæ, Hereticks. 67. 1. the same with the Montanistæ. 273. 2.
Catholick Church is one, and always like and constant to it self. 53. 1. It's accomplishments. ibid.
Cavades King of the Persians, breaks the League which the Persians had made with the Romans in Theodosius Junior's Reign. 470. 1. He is desirous to give his Kingdom to Chosroes his youngest Son. 483. 1.
Cecropius Bishop of Sebastopolis. 442. 1.
Celadion Bishop of Alexandria. 54. 2.
Celerinus a Confessour, at first a follower of Novatus. 113. 1.
Celestinus Bishop of Rome. 374. 1. His Letter to Cyrillus, Johannes and Rufus. 391. 2. and to Nestorius. 403. 1.
Celsus Bishop of Iconium in Pisidia. 102. 1.
Cephas, one of the 70 Disciples of Christ. 13. 2.
Cerdo Bishop of Alexandria. 40. 1.
Cerdo, an Heretick, flourished at Rome. 54. 2.
Ceras a Bay of the Pontick Sea. 276. 2.
Cerinthus an Arch-Heretick. 44. 1. 130. 1. Saint John the Apostle avoids his company. 44. 2.
Charemon a Philosopher. 101. 2.
Charemon Bishop of the City Nile. 111. 2.
Chalcedon-Council. See Council.
Chalcedon, its walls demolished by Valens Augustus's Order. 308. 1. The Bishop thereof is made a Metropolitane. 446. 2.
Charax a Writer of Grecian History. 513. 2.
Chief-Priest. See Pontif.
Christ, His Divinity. 2. 2. In Christ two Natures. ibid. and 692. 1, 2. Christ was acknowledged and worshipped by all the Prophets and just men. 2. 2. Christ, under the shape of man, appeared to Abraham, Jacob, Joshua. 3. 1. Christ's Kingdom is foretold by Daniel, that it should come after the end of the world. 4. 2. The Name of Christ Venerable in ancient Times. 5. 1. Christ, the name of the Jewish High-priests and Kings. ibid. Christ's Priesthood. 6. 1. Christ's Birth under Augustus. 7. 2. His Genealogy, as 'tis drawn by Saint Matthew and Saint Luke, reconciled. 9. 1. His Baptism under Tiberius. 12. 1. why he would dye. 693. 1, 2. He is very God. 694. 2.
Christian Religion was educated and flourisht together with the Roman Empire. 66. 1. It conferred prosperity upon the Roman world. ibid.
Christians, their name foretold by the Prophets. 6. 2. Their Religion very ancient. ibid. and 569. 1. A Christian described. 6. 2. Name of Christians began first at Antioch. 17. 2. whence arose the Crime of Incest and killing infants, which was charg'd upon the ancient Christians. 52. 2, &c. Name of Christians common to Hereticks also. 55. 1.
Chosroes King of the Persians, besieges Antioch and other Cities of Syria 487. 2. At the close of his Life he is Baptized. 490. 1. He burns Melitina. 509. 1.
Chosroes Son of Hormisda, is chosen King of the Persians. 522. 2. He flies to the Romans, and is adopted by the Emperour Mauricius.

ricius. ibid. He is carried back to his Kingdom by the Romans. 523. 1. He gives a Golden Croſs to the Church of Saint Sergius the Martyr. 523. 2. He marries Sira a Chriſtian woman, contrary to the Perſian Laws. 524. 1.
Chryſanthus Biſhop of the Novatianiſts at Conſtantinople. 372. 1. 374. 1.
Chryſaphius Protector to Theodoſius, an enemy to Flavianus Biſhop of Conſtantinople. 408. 2. 421. 2. why he was angry with Flavianus. 421. 2.
Chryſargyrum, a Tax aboliſhed by the Emperour Anaſtaſius. 470. 2, &c. It was paid by common whores every fourth year. ibid. Zozimus affirms this Tax to have been begun by Conſtantine the Great. 472. 1. Evagrius denies it. 472. 2, &c.
Chryſopolis, a City of Bithynia, a Sea-port of the Chalcedonians. 382. 2. 211. 1.
Chryſotelia, that is a Golden Tax, firſt brought up by Anaſtaſius. 474. 2, &c.
Church, its Gifts. 77. 1. 82. 2.
Churches, very large and ſpatious built by the Chriſtians before Dioclesian's Perſecution. 140. 1.
Church of Acacius the Martyr at Conſtantinople. 368. 1.
Church at Alexandria termed Cæſarcum. 376. 2. another Church there, called Alexander's. 375. 1.
Church Anaſtaſia at Conſtantinople. 331. 1.
Church of the Goths at Conſtantinople 356. 2.
Church is not wont fiercely to perſecute Hereticks. 370. 2.
Church, the diſturbance thereof is uſually accompanied with Tumults in the State. 329.
Church, its affairs depend on the will and appointment of the Emperours. ibid.
Church of Rome, its priviledge. 251. 2.
Church of the B. Virgin Mary at Antioch, was called Juſtinian's Church, from the Builder's name. 512. 1. 518. 2.
Church Library firſt founded by Alexander Biſhop of Jeruſalem. 102. 2.
Circeſium, a Caſtle which is begirt by the Rivers Euphrates and Abora. 505. 1.
Clarus Biſhop of Ptolemais in Syria. 89. 1.
Claudianus, a Noble Poet. 416. 1.
Clearchus Præfect of Conſtantinople. 308. 2.
Clemens, Saint Paul's companion, the third Biſhop of Rome. 32. 1. 38. 2. His Epiſtle to the Corinthians. 39. 1. 48. 2. He rendred Saint Paul's Epiſtle to the Hebrews into Greek. ibid.
Clemens Alexandrinus. 78. 2. 271. 1. 290. 1. was Maſter of the Catechetick School at Alexandria. 94. 2. 96. 2. His Books. 97. 2.
Cleobians, Hereticks amongſt the Jews. 63. 2.
Cleomedes is Deified. 302. 2.
Clopas or Cleophas was the Brother of Joſeph. 38. 1.
Cœle-Syria, afterwards named Syria Secunda. 467. 2.
Cœmeteries of the Chriſtians. 122. 2. 125. 1. Aſſemblies wont to be held in them. 172. 2.
Comentiolus by the Emperour Mauricius is ſent Maſter of the Milice into the Eaſt. 522. 1.
Comites of the firſt and ſecond Order. 606. 2.
Communion of the Laicks. 113. 2.
Conon, from being Biſhop of Apamia, becomes a Souldier in the Army of the Iſauri. 469. 2.
Conon Abbot of the Monaſterie of Saint Saba in Paleſtine. 495. 2.
Conſtantia wife to Licinius, Siſter to Conſtantine the Great. 236. 1.
Conſtantianæ, Baths ſo called at Conſtantinople. 308. 1. 366. 2.
Conſtantinus Junior's Letter to the Alexandrians 246. 2. His death. 247. 1.
Conſtantine ſaluted Auguſtus by the Souldiers. 149. 1. 209. 2. Sees the ſign of the Croſs in the Heavens. 210. 1. 540. 2. Erects the ſigne of the Croſs in Rome. 177. 2. 544. 1. Invites his Subjects to Embrace Chriſtianity. 567. 1, &c. His Empire was not Bloudy. 576. 1. He entertains the Biſhops at a Banquet. 581. 1. He forgives his Subjects the fourth part of the Tribute. 607. 1. On Eaſter-day he beſtows Alms on all perſons. 613. 2. He aboliſhes the penalties of Single-life and want of Children. 614. 2, &c. during his Reign two Vices prevailed, Covetouſneſs and Hypocriſie. 624. 2. He is Baptized at Nicomedia. 628. 1. 243. 2. He dyes on the day of Pentecoſt. 629. 2. His Funeral very ſplendid. 630. 1, &c. He was buried in the Church of The Apoſtles, 631. 2.
Conſtantine built two Churches at Conſtantinople, the one called Irene, the other The Apoſtles. 229. 2. 253. 1.
Conſtantius Chlorus Father to Conſtantine the Great, a moſt Religious Prince. 149. 1. He did not perſecute the Chriſtians. ibid. and 535. 1. His Clemency towards his Subjects. 535. 1. how he tryed their zeal for the Chriſtian Religion. 536. 2. when he dyed. 209. 2.
Conſtantia a Mart-Town of the Gazæi. 618. 2.
Conſubſtantial, in what ſenſe to be taken. 304. 1.
Conſulate of Paulinus and Julianus. 227. 2. of Felicianus and Titianus, 244. 1.
Conſulate of Acindynus and Proculus. 247. 1. of Marcellinus and Probinus. 248. 1. of Conſtantius III. and Conſtans II. 250. 2. of Euſebius and Rufinus. 257. 1. of Sergius and Nigrinianus. 264. 1. 266. 1. of Conſtantius Aug. VI. and Gallus II. 269. 2. of Conſtantius VII. and Gallus III. 270. 1. of Arbetion and Lollianus. ibid. of Dacianus and Cerealis. 278. 1. Of Euſebius and Hypatius. ibid. of Conſtantius X. and Julian III. 282. 2. of Taurus and Florentius. 283. 2. and 284. 2.
Conſulate of Julian Aug. IV. and Saluſtius. 299. 2.
Conſulate of Jovian Aug. and Varronianus. 304. 2.
Conſulate of Valentinian Aug. and Valens Aug. I. 306. 1, 2. of Gratianus and Dagalaiſus. ibid. of Lupicinus and Jovinus. 310. 1. of Valentinian II. and Valens II. ibid. of Valentinian III. and Valens III. 313. 2. of Gratianus II. and Probus. 315. 2. of Valens Aug. V. and Valentinian Junior I. 327. 1. of Valens VI. and Valentinian Junior II. 328. 1.
Conſulate of Auſonius and Olybrius. 330. 1. of Gratianus Aug. V. and Theodoſius I. 331. 1. of Merobaudes and Saturninus. 337. 1. of Richomeres and Clearchus. 337. 2. of Arcadius Aug. and Bauton. ibid. of Theodoſius Aug. II. and Cynegius. 338. 1. of Tatianus and Symmachus. 341. 1. of Theodoſius III. and Abundantius. 350. 2. of Arcadius III. and Honorius II. 351. 1. of Olybrius and Probinus. ibid.
Conſulate of Cæſarius and Atticus. 352. 2. of Honorius IV. and Eutychianus. 353. 1. of Stilichon and Aurelianus. 367. 1. of Honorius VI. and Ariſtænetus. 366. 2 of Stilichon II. and Anthemius. 367. 1. of Arcadius Aug. VI. and Probus. ibid. of Honorius VII. and Theodoſius II. 367. 2. 372. 1. of Baſſus and Philippus. 368. 2. of Honorius IX. and Theodoſius Junior V. 372. 1. of Honorius X. and Theodoſius VI. 376. 2. of Monaxius and Plintha. 377. 1. of Honorius XIII. and Theodoſius X. 379. 2. of Aſclepiodotus and Marinianus. 381. 1.
Conſulate of Theodoſius Junior XI. and Valentinianus Cæſar. I. 383. 2. of Theodoſius Junior XII. and Valentinianus Aug. II. 383. 2. of Hierius and Ardaburius. 384. 2. of Felix and Taurus. ibid. of Theodoſius Junior XIII. and Valentinianus III. 385. 2. of Baſſus and Antiochus. 387. 2. of Theodoſius XIV. and Maximus. 391. 1. of Areobindus and Aſpar. ibid. of Iſidorus and Senator. 393. 1. of Theodoſius XVI. and Fauſtus. 393. 1. and 357. 1. of Theodoſius XVII. and Feſtus. 394. 2.
Coracio an Egyptian, confuted by Dionyſius Alexandrinus. 130. 1.
Cornelius a Centurion, the firſt of the Gentiles that was baptized by Peter. 17. 2.
Cornelius Biſhop of Antioch. 63. 1.
Cornelius Biſhop of Rome. 108. 2. His Letter againſt Novatus. 223. 1.
Cornelius Gallus the firſt Præfect of Egypt 473. 2.
Cornutus a Philoſopher. 101. 2.
Coſmas Biſhop of Epiphania in Syria, refuſing to conſent to Severus's Synodick Letters, ſeparates from his communion, and ſends him a Libel of depoſition. 469. 1.
Councils always ſummoned by the Emperours autority, ſince they became Chriſtians. 329.
Councils in Aſia againſt Montanus's Hereſie. 81. 2.
Councils, their uſefulneſs and neceſſity. 547. 2.
Council in Paleſtine concerning the celebration of Eaſter-day. 86. 2.
Council at Rome under Pope Victor, concerning the ſame queſtion. ibid.
Council of the Biſhops of Pontus about the ſame affair. ibid.
Council of the Biſhops in Gallia about the ſame thing. ibid.
Council of the Churches of Oſdroena and Meſopotamia. ibid.
Council in Arabia againſt the Errours of Beryllus. 107. 1. Another Council in Arabia. 108. 1.
Council at Rome againſt Novatus. 112. 2.
Council of Africk againſt Novatus. ibid.
Council at Antioch about the Lapſed, and concerning Novatus's Opinion. 116. 1, 2.
Council at Iconium and Synnada concerning re-baptizing Hereticks 119. 2.
Council of Antioch againſt Paul of Samoſata 132. 2.
Council at Rome about the Cauſe of Cæcilianus. 194. 2.
Council at Orleance concerning the ſame matter. ibid.
Council at Alexandria under Athanaſius. 290. 1.
Council at Alexandria under Theophilus, againſt Origen's Books. 360. 1.
Council at Antioch. 248. 1. Draught of the Creed publiſhed there. 249. 1.
Council at Antioch, celebrated by Acacius. 283. 2.
Council at Antioch under Jovianus. 303. 2.
Council of Ariminum. 271. 2.
Council of Conſtantinople. 242. 1.
Council of Conſtantinople under Conſtantius. 281. 1.
Council of Conſtantinople under Theodoſius. 331. 2, &c.
Council of Conſtantinople againſt John Chryſoſtome. 365. 2.
Council of Epheſus againſt Neſtorius. 387. 1. 403. 1, &c.
Council at Jeruſalem. 240. 2. A ſecond Council at Jeruſalem, 263. 1.
Council of the Macedoniani at Antioch. 330. 2.
Council of the Macedoniani at Lampſacus. 306. 1.
Council at Millain. 271. 1.
Council of Nice, or Nicæa. 577. 2, &c. two reaſons thereof. 215. 2. the Canons. 227. 1. Subſcriptions of the Biſhops, day and year when held. ibid. its Synodick Letter. 219. 1, &c.

Council at Nice in Thracia. 275. 2.
Council of Novatians in the Village Paxum. 324. 1.
Council of Novatians at Sangarum. 344. 1.
Council at the Oak againſt John Chryſoſtome. 363. 2.
Council at Seleucia in Iſauria. 278. 1. it was divided into two parts, as was the Ariminum-Council. 278. 2.
Council at Serdica. 256. 2.
Council of the Biſhops of Sicilie. 312. 2.
Council of Sirmium, 266. 1. Draught of the Creed publiſhed there. 266. 2, &c.
Council of Tyre. 239. 1. Depoſes Athanaſius. 240. 1.
Council of Conſtantinople under Juſtinian, on what account convened. 495. 2. The matters tranſacted therein. 496. 1, &c.
Council at Epheſus, the ſecond there, over which Dioſcorus Biſhop of Alexandria preſided. 408. 2. therein Eutyches is reſtored, and Flavianus condemned. 409. 1.
Council at Chalcedon, and the affairs tranſacted there. 421. 2. 423, &c. the Draught of the Creed publiſhed there. 425. 1, 2. An Epitome of the Acts of that Council. 437, &c.
Council of the Biſhops of Aſia in the City Epheſus under Baſiliſcus. 451. 1. the ſupplicatory-Libel preſented by them to Baſiliſcus. ibid.
Creed, the Draught of that publiſhed in the Nicene Council. 217. 1. 218. 2.
Creeds, how many were ſet forth. 281. 2.
Creſcens is ſent into the Gallia's by Saint Paul the Apoſtle. 32. 1.
Creſcens a Cynick Philoſopher. 60. 1, 2.
Cronius a Philoſopher. 101. 1.
Croſs, the ſigne thereof ſalutary and vivifick. 556. 2. 678. 1. Conſtantine uſed to ſeal his face with the ſigne thereof. 576. 2. He ſet up the ſigne of the Croſs in the palace. 593. 2. Signe of the Croſs, the Defence and Guard of the Empire. ibid. the Amulet of Dæmons. 674. 1. its power and efficacy. 679. 2, &c.
Croſſes of Sylver in the Church. 359. 1.
Croſs, the ſalutary and vivifick wood thereof, in the City Apamia. 488. 1.
Cubit of the Nile carried to Serapis's Temple. 230. 2. Conſtantine orders it to be carried into the Church. ibid.
Culcianus a fierce perſecutor of the Chriſtians, is ſlain. 181. 2.
Cars a Scythian, commands the right-wing of the Roman Army, and routs the Perſians. 508. 1. He makes an irruption into the Perſians Country, and winters there. 509. 1.
Cynegica, a Region not far from Antioch. 467. 2. 497. 2.
Cypriana, ſo the Carthaginians termed the Feaſt-day of Saint Cyprian. 485. 1.
Cyprianus the Biſhop. 112. 2. was of opinion that Hereticks ought to be re-baptized. 117. 2, &c.
Cyrillus Biſhop of Antioch. 135. 2.
Cyrillus is ordained Biſhop of Alexandria. 372. 2. His power more than Sacerdotal. ibid. He drives the Jews out of Alexandria. 375. 2. He writes to Neſtorius. 405. 1. He preſides in the Synod of Epheſus. 404. 1. His Letter to John Biſhop of Antioch. 405. 1.
Cyrillus is ordained Biſhop of Jeruſalem. 276. 1. being depoſed, appeals to a greater Synod. 280. 1.
Cyrinus Biſhop of Chalcedon. 363. 2. dyes by a putrified wound. 366. 2, &c.
Cyrus King of the Perſians. 532. 1.
Cyrus Biſhop of Beræa. 235. 2.
Cyrus Præfect of the Prætorium, famous for his Poetry. 416. 1.

D.

Dacidizus, a Sea-port. 314. 2.
Dadaſtana a place in the Confines of Galatia and Bithynia. 304. 2.
Dalmatius the Cæſar. 263. 2.
Dalmatius the Cenſor, Son to Conſtantine's Brother. 238. 2.
Damas Biſhop of Magneſia. 47. 2.
Damaſus is ordained Biſhop of Rome. 324. 1.
Damophilus or Demophilus what He wrote concerning the City Rome. 515. 2.
Daniel the Prophet, his praiſe. 651. 2, &c.
Daras in Meſopotamia, is built by the Emperour Anaſtaſius, in the Frontiers of the Perſians and Romans. 470. 1, 2. is beſieged by Choſroes. 505. 2, &c. and is taken. 506. 1. is reſtored to the Romans. 523. 1.
Deacons, ſeaven of them ordained by the Apoſtles. 15. 2.
Decius the Emperour's Edict againſt the Chriſtians. 110. 2. His death. 660. 1.
Decuriones enrolled in the Regiſters of the Curia, were Senators as 'twere. 475. 1.
Dedication of the Martyrium, or Jeruſalem Church. 621. 2.
Demetrianus Biſhop of Antioch. 116. 2. 118. 1.
Demetrius Biſhop of Alexandria. 86. 1.
Demophilus. See Damophilus.
Demophilus a Biſhop. 272. 1. 273. 2.
Demophilus is made Biſhop of Conſtantinople. 313. 2. is ejected by Theodoſius. 331. 2.
Deſcription of the Church at Tyre. 188, &c.
Deſcription of the Jeruſalem Church. 589, &c.
Deſcription of the Dominicum at Antioch. 594. 1. 680. 1. of the Church of the Apoſtles at Conſtantinople. 626. 1.
Deſpoſyni, by that name the kindred of our Saviour were called, as were likewiſe thoſe deſcended from them. 10. 1. They came from Nazara and Cochaba. ibid.
Dexippus an Hiſtorian, wrote the wars of the Scythians. 513. 2.
Didymus a blind man. 320. 1. Three Books of his concerning the Trinity. 320. 2.
Didymus a Monk. 317. 1.
Digamiſts by ſome not admitted to the Sacrament. 348. 1.
Diocæſarea a City of Paleſtine. 270. 1.
Dio Caſſius brought down the Roman Hiſtory as far as the Empire of Antoninus Elagabalus. 513. 2.
Diocletian's Edicts againſt the Chriſtians. 141. 1. 143. 2. 154. 1. He and Maximianus Herculius reſign the Empire. 209. 2. Diocletian runs mad. 148. 2. 660. 1. He dyes at Salona. 210. 2.
Diodorus Siculus an Hiſtorian, continued his Hiſtory to the Times of Julius Cæſar. 513. 2. He wrote an Epitome of Libraries. 690. 1.
Diodorus Biſhop of Tarſus. 334. 1.
Diodorus from being a Monk is made Biſhop of Tarſus. 354. 1.
Diogenes Biſhop of Cyzicus, was preſent at the ſecond Epheſine Synod. 438. 1.
Diomedes the Silentiarius. 432. 1.
Dionyſia a Martyr of Alexandria. 111. 1.
Dionyſius Areopagita, the firſt Biſhop of Athens. 32. 1.
Dionyſius Biſhop of Corinth. 64. 1. His Catholick Epiſtles. ibid.
Dionyſius Biſhop of Rome. 120. 1. 132. 1.
Dionyſius the Ex-conſularis 620. 2.
Dionyſius Halicarnaſſenſis. 513. 2. 690. 2.
Dionyſius Alexandrinus, Origen's diſciple, was maſter of the Alexandrian School. 106. 1. is ordained Biſhop. 107. 2. for the faith of Chriſt is baniſhed to Tapoſiris. 109. 1. His Books. 116. 1, 2. 126. 2. 132. 1. He is baniſhed to Cephro. 122. 2. He dyes in the Reign of Gallienus. 123. 1.
Dionyſius's Book entitled Corona. 302. 2.
Dionyſius Biſhop of Alba in Italy. 271. 1.
Dioſcorus a Confeſſour. 111. 1.
Dioſcorus a Presbyter of the Alexandrian Church. 124. 1.
Dioſcorus Biſhop of Alexandria, preſided at the ſecond Epheſine Synod. 408. 2. He depoſes Flavianus and Euſebius. 409. 1. He is condemned in the Chalcedon Council. 424. 2. He is baniſhed to Gangra. 426. 2. A Libel of depoſition is ſent to him. 441. 2. He was not depoſed on account of the faith. 446. 1.
Diſciples of Chriſt, their order and names are no where found written. 13. 2.
Dius Biſhop of Jeruſalem. 96. 1.
Dius, Fauſtus, and Ammonius Presbyters of the Alexandrian Church, Martyrs. 148. 1.
Docetæ, Hereticks. 97. 1.
Doctrines, or Inſtitutions of the Apoſtles, an Apocryphal Book. 43. 1.
Dolichianus Biſhop of Jeruſalem. 76. 2.
Dominica, ſo the Churches conſecrated to the Lord Chriſt are named. 698. 1.
Dominica Auguſta, Valens's wife. 322. 1. 329. 2.
Domitian, the ſecond Perſecutor of the Chriſtians. 39. 1. He iſſued out an Edict, and ceaſed the Perſecution. 40. 1.
Domitianus Biſhop of Melitina, kinſman to the Emperour Mauricius. 523. 1. His commendation. ibid.
Domitilla for the faith of Chriſt is baniſht into the Iſland Pontia. 39. 1.
Domninus a Martyr. 163. 1.
Domninus ſucceſſour to Ephræmius in the Biſhoprick of Antioch. 495. 1. was preſent at the Fifth Conſtantinopolitane Synod. 495. 2.
Domnus Biſhop of Cæſarea in Paleſtine. 125. 1.
Domnus Biſhop of Antioch. 134. 2.
Domnus ſucceſſour to Johannes in the Biſhoprick of Antioch, is depoſed in the Second Epheſine Synod. 409. 2. comes to Symeones the Stylite. 410. 2.
Dorotheus a Presbyter of the Antiochian Church. 135. 2.
Dorotheus, one of the Bed-chamber to the Emperour. 139. 2. 142. 1. is crowned with Martyrdom. 142. 2.
Dorotheus Biſhop of the Arians at Antioch. 330. 1. is tranſlated to Conſtantinople. 337. 2.
Doſitheus Founder of the Sect of the Doſitheans. 63. 2.
Doſitheus Biſhop of Selecucia, then of Tarſus. 389. 1.
Dracilianus Vicarius to the Præfecti Prætorio. 224. 1. 587. 2.
Dracontius Biſhop of Pergamus. 282. 1.
Duſares and Obadas, Gods of the Arabians. 689. 1.
Dux of Phœnices. 173. 2.
Dyrrachium, anciently called Epidamnus, is ruined by an Earth-quake. 481. 1.

E.

Eaſter, obſerved by thoſe of Aſia, on the fourteenth day of the Moon. 86. 1, 2. the Diſſenſion concerning the Celebration of Eaſter continued tinued till the Nicene Council. 577. 1. The Nicene Council's Decree concerning Easter-day. 582. 2. Easter-day was kept by the Ancients, from usage and custome. 346. 1.

Ebionites, Hereticks, who they were. 43. 2, &c. why so called. ibid.
Ecclesiasticks, their degrees of Deacons, Presbyters, and Bishops. 24. 1. 143. 1. of Readers and Exorcists. ibid.
Ecebolius the Sophist. 285. 2. His Levity in changing his Religion. 295. 1. He is termed an ill Sophist by Libanius. 300. 2.
Edessa a most Christian City. 16. 1.
Edessa a City of Mesopotamia. 314. 2.
Edessa a City of Osdroena, is drowned by the overflowing of the Scirtus. 481. 1. is rebuilt by Justinus Senior, and named Justinopolis. ibid. An Image of Christ, not made with hands, is kept there. 489. 1.
Egyptians do boast, that Geometry, Astronomy, and Arithmetick were first found out amongst them. 688. 2.
Elæa a Village, in the Suburbs of Constantinople. 383. 2.
Elephantina a Town in the Frontiers of Thebais. 407. 2.
Eleusinus Bishop of the second Cappadocia. 466. 1.
Eleusius Bishop of Cyzicus 276. 1. 279. 2. is deposed in the Constantinopolitan Synod. 282. 1.
Eleutherus Bishop of Rome. 68. 75. 1. 76. 2.
Elpidius Bishop of Satala. 282. 1.
Empire of Rome when first divided. 148. 2. 171. 1.
Emperour's Office, what it is. 448. 1.
Encratitæ, their Heresie. 67. 1.
Ennathas a Virgin, Martyr'd in Palestine. 165. 2.
Enoch, his Apocryphal Book. 137. 2.
Ephorus and Theopompus, Writers of Græcian History. 513. 2.
Ephræmius Comes of the East under Justinus. 480. 1. He is chosen Bishop of Antioch by the Citizens, to whom he came in the time of the Earth-quake. ibid. and 487. 2. 494. 2.
Ephres Bishop of Jerusalem. 51. 2.
Epimachus and Alexander, Martyrs at Alexandria. 111. 1.
Epimenides the Cretian, an Initiator. 297. 1.
Epiphanius's Book, entitled Ancoratus. 350. 1.
Epiphanius Bishop of Cyprus, having assembled a Synod of Bishops, condemns Origen's Books. 360. 1. comes to Constantinople. 361. 2. Holds assemblies, and ordains there, without the consent of John Chrysostome. ibid.
Epiphanius Bishop of Tyre, refuses subscribing to Severus's Synodick Letter. 468. 2.
Epiphanius Bishop of Constantinople. 482. 2. 485. 1.
Episcopal Jurisdiction. 390. 1.
Epistle of the Monks of Palestine, to Alcison the Bishop. 427. 2. 465. 2. 468. 2.
Eros Bishop of Antioch. 63. 1.
Eruli converted to Christianity, under Justinian 486. 2.
Essæans, Hereticks of the Jews. 63. 2.
Estha first of all married to Mathan, then to Melchi. 9. 2.
Evagrius is ordained Bishop of Antioch. 338. 2.
Evagrius Bishop of Constantinople. 313. 2. is banished. 314. 1.
Evagrius Bishop of Mytilene. 280. 2.
Evagrius Bishop of Siculi. 304. 1.
Evagrius a Monk. 291. 1. 317. 2. wrote two Books, the one entitled The Monk, the other The Gnostick. ibid. His Book entitled The Practick. 318. 2. A passage quoted out of that Book termed The Gnostick. ibid.
Evarestus Bishop of Rome. 47. 1.
Eucharist, those that received it, said Amen. 114. 2. what was left of it, at Constantinople was given to Boys, to be eaten and drank. 494. 2.
Eudæmon a Melitian. 238. 1.
Eudæmon a Presbyter. 342. 2.
Eudocia an Athenian, wife to Theodosius Junior. 380. 1. 416. 1. She wrote Poems. 380. 1. She comes to Antioch. 416. 2. The Antiochians bestow a Brazen Statue on her. 417. 1. She goes to Jerusalem, to pay her Vow. 417. 1. She converses with the Monks that lived there. 419. 2. She builds Saint Stephen's Church at Jerusalem. ibid.
Eudocia Junior, daughter to Valentinianus Placidus and Eudoxia, marries Hunericus Son to King Geizericus. 428. 2.
Eudoxia Theodosius Junior's daughter. 392. 2. 416. 2. She marries Valentinianus Placidus. 392. 2. 416. 2. After Valentinian's death she marries Maximus. 428. 2. She calls Geizericus out of Africk. ibid.
Eudoxia Augusta, her Silver Statue. 365. 1.
Eudoxius Bishop of Germanicia. 254. 2. Seizes upon the Bishoprick of Antioch. 271. 2. is deposed. 280. 2. is ordained Bishop of Constantinople. 282. 2. dyes. 313. 2.
Euelpis a Laick, Preaches in the Church. 102. 1.
Evethius a Bishop. 311. 2.
Eugenius sets up for a Tyrant in the West. 350. 1. is slain. 351. 1.
Eulogius, after Johannes, is ordained Bishop of Alexandria. 509. 2. 526. 1.
Eumenes Bishop of Alexandria. 51. 2.
Eunomians don't baptize into the Trinity, but into the death of Christ. 350. 1.
Eunomius, Aëtius's Notary. 271. 1. is made Bishop of Cyzicus. 307. 1. writes Comments on Saint Paul's Epistle to the Romans. ibid. Separates himself from Eudoxius. 313. 1.
Eunomius Bishop of Nicomedia contends with Anastasius Bishop of Nicæa about some Cities. 447. 2.
Eunuch to Queen Candace, was the first that Preach'd the Gospel to the Ethiopians. 16. 2.
Eunus, call'd also Cronion, a Martyr at Alexandria. 110. 2.
Euodius the first Bishop of Antioch after Saint Peter. 40. 1.
Euphemia the Martyr's Church at Chalcedon. 356. 1. is described. 422. 1, &c. two Miracles performed there. ibid.
Euphemius, after Fravita, is ordained Bishop of Constantinople. 462. 1. He is banished. 465. 2.
Euphrasius is ordained Bishop of Antioch. 479. 1. He is buried in the Earth-quake at Antioch. 479. 2.
Euphronius a Presbyter, born at Cæsarea in Cappadocia. 602. 2.
Euphronius is ordained Bishop of Antioch. 236. 2.
Euprepius's Monastery near Antioch. 406. 1.
Eusebius a Deacon of the Alexandrian Church, afterwards Bishop of Laodicea. 124. 2. 136. 1.
Eusebius Pamphilus Bishop of Cæsarea, his Letter to the Cæsareans concerning the Nicene Synod. 217. 2, &c. He drew up a Draught of the Creed, and proposed it to the Nicene Synod. 218. 1. How he explains the term Homoousios. 218. 2. He wrote three books against Marcellus. 258. 1. He was no Arian. ibid. &c. He wrote the History of the Church from the Apostles times, to those of Constantine. 472. 2. He made a Speech in the Nicene Synod, in praise of Constantine. 529. 1, 2. He spake another Oration in the Palace to the Emperour Constantine, on his Tricennalia. ibid. and 622. 1. The Antiochians invite him to be their Bishop. 599. 2. Constantine commends him for refusing that Bishoprick. 602. 1. He recited an Oration before Constantine in the Palace. 617. 1. He wrote against Porphyrius.. 302. 1. and Constantine's Life. 209. 1. and 345. 2.
Eusebius Emisenus. 248. 2.
Eusebius Bishop of Samosata. 304. 1.
Eusebius Bishop of Nicomedia, writes Letters to many Bishops, in favour of Arius and his followers. 211. 2. He is angry with Alexander Bishop of Alexandria. 213. 2. He is translated to the Bishoprick of Constantinople. 247. 2. He dyes. 250. 2.
Eusebius Provost of the Bed-chamber to the Emperour, favoured the Arians. 246. 1. He is put to death. 287. 1.
Eusebius Scholasticus, Scholar to Troïlus the Sophist. 357. 1.
Eusebius Bishop of Vercellæ. 271. 1. 289. 2. a defender of the true Faith. 293. 2.
Eusebius and Theognius subscribed to the Nicæne Creed, but would not subscribe to the Anathematism. 228. 2. being banished on that account, they presented a penitentiary Libel to the Bishops. 228, 1.
Eusebius Bishop of Dorylæum, accuses Eutyches. 408. 1. His Libel presented to the Emperour against Dioscorus. 423. 2, &c.
Eusebius Bishop of Ancyra, was present at the second Ephesine Synod. 424. 2.
Eusebius, a Writer of the Roman History, from Augustus to the death of the Emperour Carus. 513. 2.
Eustathius Bishop of Antioch, ordains Evagrius Bishop of Constantinople. 313. 2. He is banished by Valens. 314. 1.
Eustathius Bishop of Antioch accuses Eusebius Bishop of Cæsarea. 235. 2. He is deposed in the Synod at Antioch. ibid. He is accused by Cyrus Bishop of Berœa. ibid.
Eustathius Bishop of Antioch, finds fault with Origen. 362. 1.
Eustathius Bishop of Sebastia. 278. 2. is suspended from Communion. 280. 2. He is deposed in the Constantinopolitan Synod. 282. 1, &c.
Eustathius Epiphanienſis, a writer of History. 514. 1. He closes his History on the 12th year of the Emperour Anastasius. 470. 1.
Eustathius Bishop of Berytus, wrote a Letter to Johannes a Bishop, concerning the affairs transacted in the Chalcedon Synod. 421. 2. He was present at the second Ephesine Synod. 424. 2.
Eustochius Bishop of Jerusalem. 493. 1. He succeeded Macarius. 495. 1. He drove the Origenists out of the New Laura. 495. 2.
Eutychius, a Bishop. 280. 2.
Eutyches. 408. 1.
Eutychianus Bishop of Rome. 135. 2.
Eutychianus, a Novatian Monk. 226. 2. His Miracles. ibid.
Eutychian Hereticks have corrupted many books of the Ancient Fathers, and have fathered many of Apollinaris's Books, on Athanasius, Gregory Thaumaturgus, and Julius. 466. 2.
Eutychius disciple to Eunomius, coyn's a new Opinion. 350. 1.
Eutychius, after Menas, is ordained Bishop of Constantinople. 495. 1. He had before been Apocrisarius to the Bishop of Amasia. 496. 1. He is ejected out of his See. 497. 2. He is restored. 509. 2.
Eutropius Præfect of the Imperial Bed-chamber. 355. 1. the first and the onely Eunuch that was ever made Consul. ibid.
Eutychius is made Bishop of Antioch. 283. 1. is sent to Alexandria. 316. 1. He dyes. 327. 1.

F.

Fabian Biſhop of Rome. 106. 1.
Fabius Biſhop of Antioch. 108. 2.
Fadus Procurator of Judæa. 20. 2.
Familiar-ſpirits, or paredri. 52. 2.
Famine takes away baſhfulneſs. 33. 1.
Fate and Fortune, empty names onely. 639, 2. 641. 1.
Fauſtus, Euſebius, and Charemon, Deacons of the Alexandrian Church. 122. 1.
Fauſtus a Martyr under Diocletian. 124. 2.
Feaſt of Our Lord's Aſcenſion. 383. 2.
Feaſt of Our Lord's Nativity. 365. 2.
Felix Procurator of Judæa. 25. 2.
Felix Biſhop of Rome. 135. 2.
Felix, from being a Deacon, is ordained Biſhop of Rome. 275. 2.
Felix the Pope, ſucceſſour to Simplicius, ſends a Depoſition to Acacius. 459. 1. Acacius did not acknowledge that depoſition. 459. 2. He ſends Vitalis and Miſenus Legates to Zeno Auguſtus. ibid.
Feſtus Procurator of Judæa. 26. 2.
Firmilianus Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia. 105. 2. 116. 1. 118. 1.
Firmilianus Preſident of Paleſtine. 163. 2. is beheaded. 169. 1.
Firmus Biſhop of Cæſarea in Capadocia 394. 2.
Flaccillus, or Placitus Biſhop of Antioch. 248. 1.
Flavianus Preſident of Paleſtine. 154. 1.
Flavianus is ordained Biſhop of Antioch. 334. 2. a difference amongſt the Biſhops on account of his Ordination. 336. 2. He appeaſes the anger of Theophilus of Alexandria. 338. 2.
Flavianus, after the death of Proclus, is ordained Biſhop of Conſtantinople. 408. 1. He condemns Eutyches in a Synod aſſembled at Conſtantinople. ibid.
Flavianus is ordained Palladius's ſucceſſour in the Biſhoprick of Antioch. 462. 2. He is ejected by the Emperour Anaſtaſius. 465. 2. He is baniſhed to Petræ a Town in Paleſtine. 467. 1, 2.
Florentius Biſhop of Sardis. 442. 1.
Florinus a Presbyter of the Church of Rome, falls into Hereſie. 80. 1. 84. 2.
Florus Procurator of Judæa. 30. 2.
Florus Dux and Prefect of Alexandria. 426. 2.
Fravita is ordained Acacius's ſucceſſour in the See of Conſtantinople. 461. 2.
Fravitus a Goth, a perſon of great valour. 357. 1.
Fritigernes, Leader of the Goths. 326. 1.
Frumentius is created the firſt Biſhop of the Indians. 232, 1, 2.

G.

Gainas General of the Souldiers. 356. 1. endeavours to turn Tyrant. ibid. He is declared a publick enemy. 356. 2.
Galates Son to Valens Auguſtus. 322. 1.
Galilæans, their Sect. 8. 1.
Galla the wife of Theodoſius. 325. 2. the mother of Placidia. ibid.
Gallus is created Cæſar. 265. 2. He is ſlain. 270. 1.
Geioræ or Geöræ, whom the Jews called by that name. 10. 1.
Gelimeres King of the Vandals, is taken by Beliſarius. 485. 2. lying proſtrate before Juſtinian ſitting in his Throne in the Cirque, what he ſaid. ibid.
Gennadius ſucceeds Anatolius in the Conſtantinopolitan See. 433. 1.
Georgius made Presbyter of Alexandria by Alexander. 603. 1.
Georgius is made Biſhop of Alexandria. 251. 1. His cruelty. 264. 2, &c. He is killed. 288. 1.
Georgius Biſhop of Laodicea, wrote a Commendation of Euſebius Emiſenus. 235. 1. 248. 2.
Germanicus a Martyr at Smyrna. 56. 2.
Germanio Biſhop of Jeruſalem. 96. 1.
Germinius Biſhop of Sirmium. 272. 1, 2. 273. 2.
Gladiators, their Shows forbid by Conſtantine. 614. 1.
Glycerius, after Olybrius, is made Emperour of Rome. 436. 1. He is ordained Biſhop of Salonæ. ibid.
Golanduch, an holy woman. 523. 1.
Gordius Biſhop of Jeruſalem 96. 1.
Gorgonius, of the Bed-chamber to the Emperour. 139. 2. He is crowned with Martyrdom 142. 2.
Gortheus Founder of the Sect of the Gortheans. 63. 2.
Goſpel according to the Hebrews. 43. 1. 44. 1. 50. 2. 63. 2. Goſpel Syriack. 63. 2.
Goſpel termed Diateſſaron, made up of the four Evangeliſts. 67. 2.
Goths divided into two parties. 326. 1. why they became Arians. ibid.
Gratian is proclaimed Emperour. 310. 1. His Law againſt the Photinians, Eunomians, and Manichæans. 330. 1.
Grecian Learning was not forbidden to the Chriſtians, either by Chriſt, or his Apoſtles. 296. 2. the Advantage and uſefulneſs thereof. ibid. and 297. 1.
Gregorius Thaumaturgus, diſciple to Origen. 106. 1. His Oration in praiſe of Origen. 322. 2.
Gregorius Biſhop of Alexandria. 248. 2. 256. 1.
Gregorius Biſhop of Nazianzum. 310. 1. 321. 2. He is made Biſhop of Conſtantinople. 322. 1. 330. 2. His Oration againſt the Gentiles. 301. 1.
Gregorius Nyſſenus, Brother to Baſil the Great. 322. 2.
Gregorius from being a Monk is ordained Biſhop of Antioch. 503. 1. His Character. 503. 2. He is accuſed for having been preſent at the ſacrifices to Dæmons. 510. 1. He is accuſed a ſecond time, of Inceſt, and becauſe he had burnt the Annona. 518. 1. He is acquitted in a Synod at Conſtantinople. ibid. His Speech to the Roman Souldiers who had made a Mutiny. 520. 1, &c. He reconciles the Roman Souldiers to the Emperour, and to their Commander. 521. 1. and frees them from the raſh Oath they had taken. ibid.
Gregorius is ordained Biſhop of Rome after Pelagius. 525. 2.

H.

Hadrian the Emperour, his Reſcript to Minucius Fundanus in favour of the Chriſtians. 53. 2.
Hegeſippus when he flouriſhed. 53. 1. His Books. 63. 1, 2.
Helcefaits, Hereticks. 108. 1.
Helena Queen of the Adiabeni furniſhes the Jews with Corn. 21. 1. Her Sepulchre near Jeruſalem. ibid.
Helena a whore, Simon Magus's Companion. 21. 2.
Helena Auguſta Mother to Conſtantine, goes to Bethlehem to pray. 591. 1. comes to Jeruſalem. 229. 1. builds two Churches there. 591. 2. Her piety and bountifulneſs. 592. 1. She finds the Sepulchre and Croſs of our Lord. 229. 2. 230. 1. She builds three Churches in honour of Our Lord. 230. 1. Her death and burial. 592. 2, &c. 230. 2. Drepanum is from her termed Helenopolis. 229. 1.
Helenus Biſhop of Tarſus. 118. 1.
Helius ſucceeds Saluſtius in the Biſhoprick of Jeruſalem. 495. 1.
Helion is ſent Embaſſadour to the Perſians. 379. 1. He is ſent into Italy. 382. 1.
Heliodorus Biſhop of Laodicea in Syria. 118. 1.
Heliodorus Biſhop of Trica in Theſſalia. 347. 2.
Heliopolites, their Law. 231. 1.
Helladius and Ammonius, Alexandrians, Grammarians. 339. 1, 2.
Helladius Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia. 333. 2.
Hemerobaptiſts, an Hereſie amongſt the Jews. 63. 2.
Heraclas, Origen's diſciple. 92. 2. Origen chuſes him his Aſſiſtant and Companion in teaching. 96. 1. He ſtudied Philoſophy and Grecian Learning. ibid. and 101. 2.
Heraclas a Presbyter wore a Philoſophick Pallium. 101. 2. He is made Biſhop of Alexandria. 105. 2. His Fame. 106. 2. His Rule about receiving Hereticks. 119. 2.
Heraclea a City of Syria, formerly called Gagalice. 505. 2.
Heraclides Origen's diſciple, a Martyr. 93. 2.
Heraclides Deacon to John Chryſoſtome, is preferred to the Biſhoprick of Epheſus. 361. 1.
Heraclius wrote Comments on the Apoſtle. 89. 2.
Heraclius Biſhop of Jeruſalem. 284. 1.
Herais a Catechumen, ſhe was a Martyr. 93. 2.
Herennius Biſhop of Jeruſalem. 284. 1.
Hereticks were not ſo bold as to broach their Errours till after the death of the Apoſtles. 46. 2. they are divided into manifold kinds of Errours. 53. 1. The Sects of Hereticks deſtroy one another. ibid. Their Converſe is to be avoided. 56. 1. Hereticks have corrupted the Books of Sacred Scripture. 90. 2. Their Books muſt be read with Caution. 119. 1.
Hermas's Book called Paſtor. 31. 2. 43. 1. 77. 2.
Hermogenes Maſter of the Milice is ſlain at Conſtantinople. 250. 2.
Hermon Biſhop of Jeruſalem. 138. 2.
Hermogenes an Heretick. 65. 1.
Hermophilus an Heretick, mended the Books of Sacred Scripture. 90. 2.
Herod the Great, no Jew but a Forreigner. 8. 1. by Father's ſide an Idumæan, by his Mother's, an Arabian. 8. 2. made King of the Jews by the Roman Senate and Auguſtus. ibid. and 10. 1. burnt the Jews Genealogies, and why. ibid. ſlays the infants of Bethlehem. 10. 2. His diſeaſe deſcribed. 11. 1. His Largeſs to his Souldiers. 11. 2. orders his Siſter Salome to kill the chief of the Jews whom he had impriſoned, at his death. ibid. puts three of his own Sons to death. ibid. Reſolves to kill himſelf. ibid. His death. ibid.
Herod Junior, Son to Herod the Great, kills John the Baptiſt. 13. 1. He and his Wife Herodias are baniſht by Caius. 17. 2. He was preſent at Our Saviour's Paſſion. ibid.
Herod Eirenarch of Smyrna, Son to Niceres. 57. 2.
Herodian a Writer of Roman Hiſtory. 513. 2.
Heron, Origen's diſciple, a Martyr. 93. 2.
Heron and Iſidorus, Egyptian Martyrs. 111. 1.
Heros Biſhop of Antioch. 48. 1.
Heſychius, Pachumius, and Theodorus, Biſhops and Martyrs. 148. 1.
Hierapolis the Metropolis of the Province Euphratenſis. 523. 1.
Hieroglyphick Letters found in Serapis's Temple. 339. 2.
Hierophilus Biſhop of Plotinopolis. 389. 1.
Hilarius Biſhop of Jeruſalem. 284. 1.
Hilarius Biſhop of Poictiers. 293. 2.

Hippolitus a Biſhop. 102. 1, 2. His Books. 103. 1.
Holy Ghoſt. See Spirit.
Homonœa or Concordia, the name of a Church at Conſtantinople. 435. 1.
Honoratus Præfect of Conſtantinople. 281. 1.
Honorius is proclaimed Auguſtus. 350. 2.
Hormiſda Son to Choſroes, ſucceeds his Father in the Kingdom. 509. 1. The Perſians headed by Varamus conſpire againſt him. 522. 2.
Hoſius Biſhop of Corduba. 195. 1. 214. 1. 266. 1. 269. 1, 2. was preſent at the Nicene Council. 578. 1.
Hunericus or Onorichus King of the Vandals, perſecutes the Catholicks in Africk. 460. 1. 483. 2.
Hunni deſtroy Armenia. 352. 1.
Hunni heretofore called Maſſagetæ. 449. 1.
Hyginus Biſhop of Rome. 54. 1. the ninth ſucceſſour of the Apoſtles. ibid.
Hymenæus Biſhop of Jeruſalem. 125. 1. 133. 1.
Hypatia a Philoſopheress. 376. 1. She is barbarouſly murdered. 376. 2.
Hypatianus Biſhop of Heraclea. 266. 1.
Hyperechius a Biſhop. 311. 2.
Hypoſtaſis and Ouſia, how they may be ſpoken concerning God. 390. 2, &c.
Hyrcanus Prince of the Jews taken by the Parthians. 8. 2.

I.

James the Brother of Our Lord, one of the 70 diſciples. 13. 2. 16. 1. is created Biſhop of Jeruſalem. 16. 1. ſurnamed James the Juſt. ibid. alſo ſurnamed Oblias. 27. 2. His Martyrdom. ibid. His Catholick Epiſtle. 29. 1. His Chair kept with great care. 126. 2.
Iberians converted to the Chriſtian faith, when and how. 232. 2.
Jeruſalem-Church was termed a Virgin. 63. 2.
Jeruſalem, its laſt Siege and Famine deſcribed. 32, &c.
Jews firſt under Judges, after that under Kings; after the Captivity they were an Ariſtocracy with an Oligarchy: at length became Tributaries to Rome. 8. 2. They had the names of their Anceſtours written out in ancient Rolls. 10. 1. They had a ſacred Treaſury called Corban. 19. 1. Their Seaven Sects. 63. 2. the deſtruction of the Jews under Veſpaſian. 35. 1. They endeavour to rebuild their Temple. 298. 2. Hadrian forbids them to enter Jeruſalem. 52. 1.
Ignatius the ſecond Biſhop of Antioch after Saint Peter. 40. 1. 47. 1. His Epiſtles are reckoned up. 47. 2. He ſuffered Martyrdom at Rome. ibid. By Theodoſius Junior's order, his Reliques are removed into the City Antioch. 413. 2.
Illus and Leontius rebell againſt Zeno. 464. 1.
Index of the Books of the Old Teſtament. 66. 2. 104. 1, 2.
Indians converted to the faith of Chriſt, when, and how. 231. 2.
Inneſtar, a place in Syria 377. 1.
Innocentius Biſhop of Rome. 373. 2.
Johannes, or John, two of them lived at the ſame time in Aſia. 49. 1, 2.
John the Apoſtle Preach'd in Aſia. 30. 1. dyed at Epheſus. ibid. was baniſhed into the Iſland Patmos. 39. 1. returned from thence after Domitian's death, and governed the Churches of Aſia. 40. 1, 2. for what reaſon he wrote his Goſpel. 42. 1, 2. 105. 1. He wore a plate of Gold. 87. 1.
Johannes a Reader, is beheaded for the faith of Chriſt. 170. 1. His wonderful memory. ibid.
Johannes a Presbyter of the Church of Antioch. 352. 1. is ordained Biſhop of Conſtantinople. 353. 1. His deſcent and education. ibid. and 353. 2. His courſe of Life and diſpoſition. 354. 2. He was wont to Preach ſitting in the Pulpit. 355. 2. His death. 367. 1.
Johannes is ordained Biſhop of Jeruſalem. 338. 2.
Johannes Biſhop of Proconneſus. 389. 1.
Johannes the Chief of the Notaries, ſets up for a Tyrant. 381. 2.
John the Apoſtle's Church ſeaven miles from Conſtantinople. 356. 2.
John Chryſoſtoms Opinion concerning the Admiſſion of Penitents. 367. 2.
Johannitæ, ſo they were called who took John Chryſoſtom's part. 366. 2. at length they were re-united to the Church by Proclus. 393. 1.
Johannes Biſhop of Antioch. 387. 1. 403. 2. coming to the Council the fifth day after Neſtorius's Condemnation, aſſembles a Synod, and depoſes Cyrillus. 404. 2. is reconciled to Cyrillus 405. 1.
Johannes the Rhetorician an Hiſtorian. 413. 2. 434. 1. 464. 2. cloſed his Hiſtory under Juſtinus Senior. 479. 2.
Johannes from being Steward is ordained Biſhop of Alexandria. 455. 1. is ejected by Zeno Auguſtus's order. ibid. flyes to Rome to Pope Simplicius. 456. 2.
Johannes, after Athanaſius, is ordained Biſhop of Alexandria. 462. 2
Johannes Biſhop of Paltum, a Defender of the Chalcedon Synod, is baniſhed. 467. 1.
Johannes Scytha and Johannes Gibbus, Maſters of the Milice, vanquiſh the Iſauri. 469. 2.
Johannes the Chuzibite a Monk in Paleſtine. 480. 2.
Johannes Scholaſticus, Eutychius being ejected, is ordained Biſhop of Conſtantinople. 497. 2.
Johannes Biſhop of Jeruſalem. 526. 1.
Johannes called Catelinus, ſucceſſour to Vigilius in the Biſhoprick of Rome. 497. 2.
Johannes ordained Appollinaris's ſucceſſour in the See of Alexandria. 509. 2.
Johannes ſucceeds Macarius in the See of Jeruſalem. ibid.
Joſephus the Hiſtoriographer. 36. 2. His Books. 37. 1, 2.
Joſeph Biſhop of Jeruſalem. 51. 2.
Jovianus is choſen Emperour. 299. 2. makes a peace with the Perſians. 300. 1. dyes. 304. 2.
Irenæus a Presbyter of Lyons. 75. 1. is made a Biſhop. 76. 1. His Books. 84. 2. 89. 1. when a youth he was an Hearer of Polycarp at Smyrna. 85. 1. He writes to Pope Victor. 87. 2. 345. 1.
Irenæus a Grammarian Wrote a Lexicon. 291. 2.
Irenæus of Tyre, and Aquilinus of Biblus, Biſhops, are depoſed in the ſecond Epheſine Synod. 409. 1.
Irenæus Comes of the Eaſt under Juſtinus Senior. 479. 1.
Irenius Biſhop of Gaza. 304. 2.
Iſacoces Biſhop of Armenia the Great. 304. 1.
Iſaurica, Donatives which the Emperour gave yearly to the Iſaurians. 470. 1.
Iſchyras aſſumes to himſelf the Office of a Presbyter. 238. 2. is made a Biſhop by the Arians. 257. 1.
Iſchyrion is killed for the faith of Chriſt. 111. 2.
Iſdigerdes King of the Perſians. 373. 1. Father to Vararanes. 415. 2.
Iſidorus a Presbyter of Alexandria. 353. 1. hated by Theophilus, and why. 359. 2.
Iſidorus Peluſiota. 413. 1.
Iſion a Melerian. 238. 1.
Judas of Galile or Gaulanites. 8. 1.
Jude one of the Brethren of Chriſt. 39. 2.
Judas Biſhop of Jeruſalem. 51. 2.
Judas an Eccleſiaſtick Writer. 94. 2.
Julianus Biſhop of Alexandria. 78. 2.
Julianus Biſhop of Apamia. 82. 1.
Julianus a Martyr at Alexandria, under Decius. 110. 2.
Julianus a Martyr with Pamphilus. 168. 2.
Julianus created Cæſar. 270. 1. He is Saluted Auguſtus. 286. 2. 284. 2. His Education. 286. 1. He recites his Orations in the Court. 287. 2. wrote againſt the Chriſtians. ibid. His Book entitled The Cæſars. ibid. perſecutes the Chriſtians. 295. 1. His Miſopogon or Antiochicus. 298. 1. His Book concerning the Cynick Philoſophy. 301. 2. He is ſlain. 299. 2.
Julianus Biſhop of Lebedus. 438. 1.
Julianus Biſhop of Boſtri, refuſes ſubſcribing to Severus's Synodick Letters. 469. 1.
Julius Cæſar takes five hundred Cities. 473. 1.
Julius Biſhop of Rome, wrote a Letter to the Eaſterns. 253. 2. His Letter to the Alexandrians. 260. 2. &c. Sate Biſhop fifteen years. 270. 2.
Juſtina Auguſta, Mother to Valentinian Junior, favours the Arians. 337. 1.
Juſtinianus, Sister's ſon to Juſtinus, is by him proclaimed Auguſtus. 481. 2. a defender of the Chalcedon Synod. ibid. His wife Theodora is an Enemy to that Synod. ibid. His Conſtitution, wherein he Anathematizes Anthimus and Severus and their Aſſociates. 483. 1. deſtroys the Kingdom of the Vandals in Africk. 485. 1. His inſatiable covetouſneſs. 491. 2. He favours the Faction of the Veneriani, and perſecutes the Praſiani. 492. 2. He falls into the Hereſie of the Aphthartodocetæ. 497. 2.
Juſtinianus Brother to Juſtinus, is ſent Maſter of the Milice againſt the Perſians. 508. 2. He is turned out of Commiſſion by Tiberius. 511. 1.
Juſtinus the Philoſopher. 53. 2. His Martyrdom. 60. 1, 2. His Books. 62. 1, 2.
Juſtinus Senior, after the death of Anaſtaſius, is proclaimed Emperour. 477. 1. He orders the Chalcedon Synod to be aſſerted and maintained throughout all Churches. 481. 2.
Juſtinus Junior, Juſtinian's Sister's ſon, from being Curopalates is made Emperour of the Romans. 499. 1. an effeminate and diſſolute perſon, and inſatiably Covetous. 499. 2. His wife Sophia Auguſta. 500. 2. He kills his kinſman Juſtinus, ibid. his Edict to all Chriſtians concerning the Faith. 501, 1, &c. He runs mad. 506. 1.
Juſtus Tiberienſis, an Hiſtorian. 37. 2.
Juſtus Biſhop of Jeruſalem. 47. 1. Another Juſtus Biſhop of the ſame place. 51. 2.
Juſtus ſurnamed Barſabas. 49. 2.
Juſtus Biſhop of Alexandria. 49. 2.
Juvenalis Biſhop of Jeruſalem. 387. 1. was preſent at both the Epheſine Synods. 408. 2. He was preſent at the Chalcedon Synod. 413. 1.

The INDEX.

L.

Labarum described. 541. 1, 2. fifty Souldiers were appointed to to guard it. 554. 2.
Lætus Præfect of Egypt. 91. 2.
Laicks, the Bishops entreating them, did sometimes Preach in the Church. 102. 1.
Lamydrion a Presbyter. 304. 2.
Laodicea in Asia was the place where the question about Easter was started. 65. 2.
Latronianus Corrector of Sicily. 194. 2.
Lauræ and Monasteries in Palestine. 417. 2. the Monks manner of living there. ibid.
Lauricius Commander in chief of the Souldiers in Isauria. 278. 1.
Legio fulminea, or Thundring Legion, whence it had that name. 75. 2, &c.
Leonas Comes of the Palace. 278. 1.
Lent-Fast variously observed amongst the Ancients. 88. 1. 2. 346. 1. 2.
Leonides a Martyr, Origen's Father. 91. 1.
Leontius Bishop of Ancyra. 365. 2,
Leontius Bishop of Antioch. 264. 1.
Leontius Bishop of Comani. 303. 2.
Leontius Bishop of Tripolis. 280. 2.
Levi Bishop of Jerusalem. 51. 2.
Libanius and Julianus the eminentest of all Sophists. 417. 1.
Libanius the Sophist teaches Rhetorick at Constantinople and Nicomedia. 285. 2. Two Orations of his. 297. 2. His Funeral Oration upon Julian. 300. 1.
Libel supplicatory presented to Leo by the Bishops of Egypt and Clergy of Alexandria, against Timotheus Ælurus. 430. 1, &c.
Liberius Bishops of Rome. 270. 2. is banished. 275. 2. His Letter to the Bishops of the Macedoniani. 311. 2, &c.
Licinius raises a war against Constantine. 196. 1. 547. 2. persecutes the Christians. 196. 1. 551. 2. His Coveteousness. 196. 2. 549. 1. He is vanquished by Constantine and Christ. 197. 2. 556. 2. He prohibites the Synods of Bishops. 547. 2.
Licinius is made Emperour by Galerius. 210. 1. Constantine marries his Sister to him. 210. 2. He persecutes the Christians in the East. ibid. He is vanished by Constantine, and soon after slain. 211. 1.
Linus the first Bishop of Rome. 31. 1. 32. 1.
Litarba a place three humdred furlongs distant from Antioch. 520. 1.
Longinus a Philosopher. 101. 1.
Longinus an Isaurian, rebels against the Emperour Anastasius. 469. 2.
Longinus Selinuntius chief of the Isauri. ibid.
Long-wall of the Cherronesus falls down by an Earthquake. 414. 2.
Long-wall built by the Emperour Anastasius. 470. 2.
Lucianus a Presbyter of Antioch. 147. 2. a Martyr. 174. 1.
Lucianus Bishop of Arces, or Arcenus. 304. 2.
Lucifer Bishop of Caralis. 289. 2. He founds a Schisme and an Heresie of his own name. 293. 1.
Lucius a Martyr at Rome under Pius. 62. 1.
Lucius Bishop of Rome. 117. 2.
Lucius is by the Arians made Bishop of Alexandria. 289. 2.
Lucius Bishop of Hadrianople. 251. 2. 264. 1.
Lucuas Leader of the Jews. 50. 2.
Lupus Præfect of Egypt. ibid.
Lusius Quietus having vanquished the Jews, obtains the Government of Palestine. ibid.

M.

Macar a Martyr at Alexandria. 111. 1.
Macarius an Egyptian Monk, a different person from Macarius of Alexandria. 217. 2.
Macarius of Alexandria a Monk. ibid.
Macarius a Presbyter of Alexandria. 238. 1.
Macarius is ordained Peter's successour in the See of Jerusalem. 495. 1. He is ejected out of that See, on account of Origen's doctrine. ibid. He is restored. 497. 2.
Macedoniani, Hereticks, assemble Synods often. 293. 2. Their Embassy to Liberius Bishop of Rome. 310. 2. The Libel of faith which they presented to him. 311, &c.
Macedonius is ordained Bishop of Constantinople by the Arians. 247. 2. His bloody Installation. 252. 2. He persecutes the Orthodox. 264. 2. He removes the Emperour Constantine's Reliques into another Church. 277. 2. Whereupon hapned a Sedition at Constantinople. ibid. He is deposed in a Synod at Constantinople. 282. 1. He founds a Heresie called by his own name. 382. 1, 2.
Macedonius Bishop of Mopsuestia. 254. 2.
Macedonius, Theodulus, and Tatianus Martyrs in Phrygia. 296. 1.
Macedonius Bishop of Constantinople. 465. 2. 467. 1. He is ejected. 467. 2. 476. 2.
Macrianus the Emperour Valerian's Præfect. 121. 1. turns Tyrant. 129. 1.
Magi a sort of people in Persia. 372. 2.
Magnentius turns Tyrant. 263. 2. being worsted kills himself. 269. 2.
Magnus, made master of the Milice, is sent against the Persians. 506. 1.
Magnus Bishop of Chalcedon, or Chalck. 433. 1.
Magnus Comes of the sacred Largesses, or Treasurer. 304. 1.
Majorianus Emperour of Rome. 429. 1. is slain by Recimeres master of the Milice. ibid.
Malchion a Presbyter of Antioch, disputed against Paul of Samosata. 133. 1.
Mammianus, from being a Sedentary Mechanick becomes a Senator. 464. 2. is termed a Lover of the City, on account of his Structures. ibid.
Mancipes, so the Romans termed the Præfects of the Pistrina. 340. 2.
Manes. 135. 2. called also Cubricus. 234. 1. His Tenets. ibid.
Manichæans, their Heresie. 135. 2. They and the Montanists take away the subsistence of The Word. 387. 1.
Manlius Torquatus kills his own son, who had disobeyed command. 520. 2.
Manna fell from heaven in the time of a famine. 428. 1.
Mantinium a Town of Paphlagonia. 277. 1.
Marathonius Bishop of Nicomedia. 276. 1. 283. 2, &c.
Marcelliani, Hereticks. 311. 1.
Marcellinus Bishop of Rome. 135. 2.
Marcellus Bishop of Ancyra. 248. 1. His opinion. ibid. and 255. 2. He is restored in the Synod of Serdica. 256. 2.
Marcianus Bishop of the Macedoniani at Lampsacus. 332. 1.
Marcianus Bishop of the Novatianists at Constantinople. 394. 1.
Marcianus a Novatian Presbyter. 309. 1. taught Valens's daughters. ibid. Bishop of the Novatianists at Constantinople. 343. 2.
Marcianus the Emperour, a Native of Thracia, the signes of his being Emperour. 420. 1, 2. His commendation. 421. 1. He is chosen Emperour by the perswasion of Pulcheria Augusta. ibid.
Marcianus Son to the Emperour Anthemius sets up for a Tyrant aganst Zeno. 463. 2. He is banished to Cæsarea in Cappadocia, and afterwards to Tarsus, and being shaven is ordained a Presbyter.
Marcianus by Justinus Junior is sent Master of the Eastern Milice against the Persians. 504. 2. besieges Nisibis. ibid.
Marcion of Pontus an Arch-heretick. 54. 2. Marcionists. 63. 2.
Mark Companion to Peter, wrote His Gospel at Rome. 22. 2. 98. 2. that Gospel was afterwards approved of and confirmed by Saint Peter. ibid. Mark goes into Egypt and Preaches the Gospel there. ibid. He was Interpreter to Saint Peter. 49. 2. He was the first Bishop of Alexandria. 29. 1. He wrote his Gospel after Saint Peter's death. 77. 1, 2.
Marcius Turbo vanquishes the Jews in many fights. 50. 2.
Marcus Bishop of Jerusalem. 52. 1.
Marcus and Heretick. 54. 2.
Marcus Bishop of Alexandria. ibid.
Marcus Bishop of Arethusa. 254. 1. 266. 2.
Mareotes a region Subject to the Bishop of Alexandria. 238. 1.
Maria a Lake near Alexandria. 23. 1.
Marianæ a Suburb near Constantinople. 364. 2.
Mary of the same Tribe with her husband Joseph. 10. 2.
Mary a Jewish woman, eats her own son in the Siege of Jerusalem. 34. 2.
Marinus Bishop of Tyre. 118. 1.
Marinus a Martyr at Cæsarea. 125. 1.
Marinus Bishop of Berytus. 468. 2.
Marinus a Syrian, Præfect of the Prætorium under Anastasius, vanquishes Vitalianus in a Sea-fight. 475. 2.
Maris Bishop of Chalcedon. 237. 2. 250. 2. 254. 1. 281. 1. 294. 2.
Martyr, that name due onely to Christ. 74. 2. Martyrs were disciples and followers of Christ. 59. 2. the honours of Martyrs. 647. 2. Martyrs honoured by Christians. 57. 2. their Reliques carefully preserved. ibid. Their Birth-day celebrated yearly. ibid. they are Christ's Assessours. 112. 1. the humility of the Martyrs. 74. 2. their kindness towards the lapsed. ibid.
Martyrs amongst the Hereticks. 82. 1.
Martyrs spoke when their tongues were cut out. 484. 1.
Martyrius Bishop of Antioch. 411. 2.
Martyrius Bishop of Jerusalem, sent Synodick Letters to Petrus Mongus. 457. 2.
Martyropolis delivered up to the Persians. 521. 2. it is restored to the Romans, together with its Betrayer Sittas. 523. 1.
Maruthas Bishop of Mesopotamia. 363. 2. 372. 2. is sent Embassadour to the King of the Persians. ibid.
Masbotheus Founder of the Sect of the Masbothæans. 63. 2.
Mathew wrote a Gospel to the Hebrews in their own language. 42. 1. 50. 2. 77. 1. 78. 2. 104. 2 He Preached in Æthiopia. 231. 2.
Matthias the Apostle, one of Christ's Seventy disciples. 13. 2. 15. 1. His Preaching and Doctrine. 45. 1.
Matthias Bishop of Jerusalem. 51. 2.
Maturus a Neophyte, Martyred at Lyons. 70. 1.
Mavia Queen of the Saracens. 327. 1. 329. 2.
Mauricius made Master of the Milice by the Emperour Tiberius, is sent against the Persians. 511. 1. born at Arabissus a City of Cappadocia. ibid. His Morals and disposition. ibid. The signes of his being made Emperour. 512. 1. He is created Emperour by Tiberius. 512. 2. from the Emperour Tiberius, he is named Tiberius, and his wife is called Conſtantina. ibid. His wedding is deſcribed. 515. 1, 2.

Maxentius turns Tyrant at Rome. 149. 2. 210. 1. at the beginning of his Empire, by an Edict he ſtops the perſecution of the Chriſtians. ibid. His wickedneſs and cruelty. ibid. and 210. 2. and 542. 1. He is vanquiſhed by Conſtantine. 177. 1, 2. 210. 1.
Maximianus Galerius the Authour and Beginner of the Chriſtians perſecution. 151. 2. 153. 2. 549. 2. In what manner he was ſmitten by divine Dengeance. 151. 2. His Retractation, or Edict about reſtoring Peace and Liberty to the Chriſtians. ibid. His death. 153. 1. creates two Cæſars, Severus and Maximinus. 209. 1. Proclaims Licinius Auguſtus. 210. 1.
Maximianus Herculius hang'd himſelf. 149. 1.
Maximianus is ordained Biſhop of Conſtantinople. 388. 1.
Maximinus's Drunkenneſs and Luſt. 150. 1, 2. the bloudieſt of all the perſecutors. 159. 2. 181. 1. He waged a War with the Armenians. 175. 2. is vanquiſhed by Licinius. 179. 2. He declares himſelf Auguſtus. 149. 1. is very ſuperſtitious and fearfull. 150. 1, 2. covetous alſo and prodigal. ibid.
Maximius Biſhop of Antioch, the ſeventh Biſhop there from the Apoſtles. 65. 1.
Maximus an Eccleſiaſtick Writer. 89. 2.
Maximus a Presbyter of the Roman Church, and a Confeſſour. 113. 1.
Maximus a Presbyter of the Alexandrian Church. 122. 1. 124. 2. afterwards Biſhop of Alexandria. ibid. and 133. 1.
Maximus Biſhop of Boſtra. 132. 2.
Maximus Biſhop of Jeruſalem. 248. 1. ſubſcribes to Athanaſius's depoſition in the Council of Tyre. ibid.
Maximus Biſhop of Seleucia in Iſauria. 353. 2.
Maximus a Philoſopher of Byzantium, father to Euclid. 286. 1.
Maximus an Epheſian Philoſopher, Julian's maſter. ibid.
Maximus turns Tyrant in the Gallia's. 336. 2. ſlays Gratianus. 337. 1. is killed. 338. 1.
Maximus Biſhop of Antioch, was preſent at the Chalcedon Council. 423. 1.
Mazabanes Biſhop of Jeruſalem. 108. 2. 118. 1.
Mazices, Barbarians. 407. 1.
Melcarthus and Uſous, Gods of the Phœnicians. 689. 1.
Melchiſedech Prieſt of the moſt high God. 6. 1.
Meletina a Region of Armenia the Leſs. 142. 2.
Meletius Biſhop of the Churches of Pontus. 138. 2.
Meletius Biſhop of Sebaſtia in Armenia. 282. 1. is tranſlated to Antioch. 283. 2. 293. 1. 303. 2. dyes at Conſtantinople. 334. 2.
Melitius a Biſhop of Egypt, being condemned by Peter Biſhop of Alexandria, makes a Schiſm. 213. 2. is condemned in the Nicane Council. 219. 2.
Melito Biſhop of Sardis. 56. 1. 65. 1. His Books 65. 2. 90. 1. He was an Eunuch. 87. 1.
Memnon Biſhop of Epheſus. 387. 2. 404. 2.
Memnonius Governour of the City Antioch under Theodoſius Junior. 415. 1. He built the Pſephium at Antioch. ibid.
Men heretofore uſually offered in ſacrifice, as well amongſt Greeks as Barbarians. 689. 2. That uſage aboliſhed by Hadrian the Emperour. 697. 1.
Men that are diſſolute, are both ſlothfull, and confident. 499. 2. 505. 1.
Menander an Arch-Heretick. 43. 2. Menandrians, his followers. 63. 2.
Menas is ordained Biſhop of Conſtantinople. 494. 2.
Mercuria a Martyr at Alexandria. 111. 1.
Meropius the Philoſopher, travels into India. 231. 2.
Merus a City of Phrygia. 296. 1.
Meruzanes Biſhop of the Armenians. 116. 1.
Methodius Biſhop of Olympus in Lycia. 362. 1. His dialogue entitled Xeno. 362. 2.
Metras a Martyr at Alexandria. 110. 1.
Metrodorus a Presbyter of the Marcionites, is burnt for the faith of Chriſt. 60. 1.
Metrodorus a Philoſopher, travels into India. 231. 2.
Miltiades an Eccleſiaſtick Writer. 82. 1, 2. 90. 1.
Miracles wont to be wrought in the Church. 77. 1.
Miracle of a gliſtering Star. 412. 2, &c.
Miracle of the B. Virgin Mary. 510. 1, 2.
Mithra's Temple at Alexandria. 288. 1. 339. 1.
Moderatus a Pythagorean Philoſopher. 101. 2.
Modeſtus Præfect of the Prætorium. 314. 1.
Montanus, with Priſcilla and Maximilla, the founder of the Sect of the Cataphrygæ. 75. 1. 80. 1. His Life. 81. 1, 2. His death. ibid. His ſordidneſs and avarice. 83. 1.
Moors originally came from Paleſtine. 485. 2.
Mopſus in Cilicia, worſhipped for a God. 689. 1.
Moſes a Presbyter of the Roman Church, a Martyr. 114. 2.
Moſes the ancienteſt of all the Prophets. 2. 2. the great Servant of God. ibid. bred in the Court of Tyrants. 534. 2. conſtituted Leader of the people by God. ibid. was the firſt that wrote the ſacred Hiſtory, as he had been inſtructed by God. 513. 2. his commendation. 651. 1, 2.
Moſes a Monk, is made Biſhop of the Saracens. 327. 1.
Mountain Selucus in Gallia, near Lyons. 269. 2.
Murſa a Fort of Gallia. ibid.
Muſanus an Eccleſiaſtick Writer. 67. 1.
Muſeus a Jewiſh Writer. 137. 1.

N.

Naamanes a Saracen ſon to Alamundarus, is kindly uſed by Mauricius. 516. 1. He leaves the worſhip of Dæmons, and is converted to the Chriſtian faith. 524. 2.
Narciſſus Biſhop of Jeruſalem. 79. 1. His miracles. 95. 2.
Narciſſus a Biſhop. 248. 2. 254. 2. 264. 1.
Narſes being ſent into Italy by Juſtinian, vanquiſhes Totila and Teia Kings of the Goths, 487. 1. His piety towards God. ibid.
Natalis a Confeſſour at Rome, impoſed upon by Hereticks. 90. 1. at length returns to the Church. 90. 2.
Nectarius is ordained Biſhop of Conſtantinople. 332. 1.
Nemeſion an Egyptian. 111. 1.
Neon Biſhop of Laranda. 102. 1.
Neonas Biſhop of Seleucia in Iſauria. 282. 1.
Nephalius a Monk of Syria. 461. 2. is by the Emperour Zeno ſent to Alexandria, to reſtore vnity. ibid. Ejects Severus out of his Monaſtery. 468. 2.
Nepos Biſhop of Egypt. 129. 1, 2.
Nepos is made Emperour of Rome. 436. 1.
Nepotianus ſeizes the Empire of Rome. 263. 2.
Nero the firſt Roman Emperour that perſecuted the Chriſtians. 29. 1.
Neſtorius is ordained Biſhop of Conſtantinople. 384. 2. perſecutes the Hereticks. ibid. His opinion concerning Chriſt. 386. 1. His ignorance and pride. 386. 2. He broaches a new Hereſie. 403. 1. He is condemned in the Epheſine Synod. 404. 2. is baniſhed to Oaſis. 406. 1. His Letter to the preſident of Thebais concerning his Exile. 407. 1, 2. He is taken and let go by the Blemmyæ. 406. 2. His tongue is eaten out with worms, which kills him. 408. 1.
New-Teſtament, the Books thereof. 42. 2, &c.
Niceas, father to Herod the Eirenarch. 59. 2.
Nicias Biſhop of Laodicea in Syria, an Oppoſer of Flavianus's. 466. 1.
Nicolaites, their Hereſie. 44. 2, &c.
Nicomachus a Pythagorean. 101. 2.
Nicomedia, ruined by an Earthquake. 277. 2.
Nicomas Biſhop of Iconium. 132. 2.
Nicoſtratus a Sophiſt of Trapezus, writes an Hiſtory from the beginning of the Emperour Philip's Reign, to the death of Valerian. 513. 2.
Nitria, a mountain. 316. 2.
No Body is condemned out of his own Books. 280. 1.
Nocturnal and Morning Hymns were wont to be ſung alternatively or by ſides in the Church. 359. 1.
Novatus's Hereſie. 112. 2. Novatus the Founder of the Sect of the Cathari or Puritans. ibid. why he made a Schiſm. 323. 1. He was Martyred under Valerian. 323. 2.
Novatus or Novatianus is deſerted by the Confeſſours. 113. 1. He thruſts himſelf into the Biſhoprick of Rome. ibid. His Character. 120. 1.
Novatiniſts celebrated the Feſtival of Eaſter indifferently. 344. 1.
Novatianiſts Church at Conſtantinople was pull'd down, and removed to another place. 276. 2.
Numenius a Philoſopher. 101. 2.

O.

Oak of Mamre. 595. 1, 2. The Miracles performed in that place. 596. 1. a Church built their by Conſtantine. ibid.
Oaſis by another name called Ibis. 407. 1.
Ochas a very ſtrong Caſtle over againſt Martyropolis. 522. 1.
Odænathus and Apollonius beat the Perſians. 473, 2.
Odoacer ſeizes the Kingdom of Italy. 436. 2.
Oenomaus a Cynick Philoſopher. 303. 1.
Olybrius is made Emperour of Rome by Recimeres. 436. 1.
Oneſimus Biſhop of Epheſus. 47. 2.
Oneſimus a pious and ſtudious man. 66. 2.
Opportunity how deſcribed by Painters. 463. 2.
Optar King of the Hunni. 385. 2.
Optatus Præfect of Conſtantinople. 366. 2.
Optimus Biſhop of Antioch in Piſidia. 334. 1.
Oracle found in a ſtone in the walls of Chalcedon. 308. 1, 2.
Oracle given to the Rhodians. 302. 3.
Oreſtes Præfect of Alexandria. 375. 1.
Origen's Education from a child. 91. 2, &c. He teaches Grammar. 92. 2. when eighteen years old he is choſen Catechiſt of the Alexandrian Church. ibid. His abſtinence. 93. 1, 2. Demetrius's envy againſt him. 95. 1. He was called Adamantius alſo. 98. 2. He comes to Rome in Pope Zephyrinus's times. ibid. He was a perſon person of eminent Learning. 271. 1. He made the Hexapla and Tetrapla. 99. 2. He brought up the allegorical interpretations of Scripture. 101. 2. Mamea Augusta sends for him. 103. 1. He is made Presbyter at Cæsarea. 103. 2. His Books, 104. 1. 106. 2, &c. 107. 2. He is tortured for the faith of Christ. 108. 2. He dyes in the seventieth year of his age. 117. 1.

Origen asserts the Son to be Coeternal with the Father. 372. 1.
Origen's first Tome of Comments on Saint Paul's Epistle to the Romans. 386. 2.
Origen's detracters who, and how many. 362. 1. His defence. ibid. Theophilus's judgment concerning his Books. 365. 1.
Origen recited his Homilies on the fourth and sixth Feria, in the Church of Alexandria. 347. 1.
Ostracine a Region of the City Antioch. 434. 1. 518. 2.
Otreius Bishop of Melitina. 334. 1.

P.

Palestines, three of them subject to the See of Jerusalem. 447. 1.
Palladius the Courier. 378. 2.
Palladius Bishop of Helenopolis, and afterwards of Aspuna. 389. 1.
Palladius a Monk, Evagrius's Scholar. 319. 2. wrote the Historia Lausiaca. ibid.
Palladius Præfect of Egypt. 316. 1.
Palladius is ordained Petrus Fullo's successour in the See of Antioch. 462. 2.
Palma Bishop of Amastris. 64. 1. 86. 2.
Pambos a Monk. 317. 1.
Pamphilus a Presbyter of the Church of Cæsarea. 138. 1. 166. 2. He is crowned with Martyrdom. 148. 1. 163. 1. He collected an Ecclesiastick Library. 107. 1. He and Eusebius club'd in writing An Apologetick for Origen. 290. 2.
Pancratius Bishop of Peluſium. 266. 1.
Panopolis a City of Thebais. 407. 2.
Pantænus Master of the Alexandrian School. 78. 2. 101. 2.
Paphnutius Bishop of Egypt, was present at the Nicene Council. 216. 1. 225. 2.
Papias Bishop of Hierapolis. 47. 2. His five Books. 49. 1. He was a person of but mean understanding. ibid. He was the first Chiliast ibid.
Papirius a Martyr. 87. 1.
Paschasinus and Lucentius are by Pope Leo sent to the Chalcedon Council. 421. 2. They condemn Dioscorus. 424. 2.
Pasinicus Bishop of Zelæ. 303. 2. 311. 2.
Patriachs constituted in the Constantinopolitane Council. 332. 2.
Patricius Bishop of Paltus. 304. 2.
Patropassians, Hereticks whom the Greeks term Sabelliani. 255. 2. 312. 2.
Patrophilus a Bishop. 241. 2. is deposed in the Synod of Seleucia. 280. 2.
Patermuthius burnt for the faith of Christ. 170. 1.
Paulinus Bishop of Tyre. 183. 1. built a stately Church in that City. 184. 2.
Paul is made an Apostle. 16. 2. He is carried bound to Rome. 26. 2. is a second time carried to Rome, and Martyred. ibid. beheaded under Nero. 29. 2. His Epistles. 31. 2. Acts of Paul, an Apocryphal Book. ibid. and 43. 1. His Epistle to the Hebrews written in Hebrew. 98. 1. The Roman Church don't believe it to be his Epistle. 102. 2.
Paul of Samosata. 132. 2. attempts to revive Artemon's Heresie. 89. 2. 135. 2. is confuted by Malchion the Presbyter. 133. 1. His avarice and pride. 133. 2. &c. He is deposed in the Antiochian Synod. 134. 2. His Heresie. 255. 1.
Paulus a Martyr in Palestine. 164. 2. His pious and Christian prayer before his death. ibid. Another Paulus, Martyred with Pamphilus. 166. 2.
Paulinus is ordained Bishop of Antioch by Lucifer. 289. 2. 293. 1. He and Meletius come to an agreement. 330. 2.
Paulinus Bishop of Triers. 271. 1.
Paulus Bishop of the Novatians at Constantinople. 377. 1. His Commendation. ibid. and 385. 1.
Paulus Bishop of Tyre. 239. 2.
Paulus a Presbyter at Constantinople. 247. 2. is ordained Bishop. ibid. He is ejected. ibid. restored. 250. 2. His death. 264. 1. His Reliques are removed to Constantinople. 334. 1.
Paulus Bishop of Emisa, is sent to Cyrill Bishop of Alexandria by Johannes Bishop of Antioch. 405. 1.
Paulus is ordained Bishop of Ephesus. 450. 2. He is put out of his See by Zeno Augustus. 453. 1.
Paulus, after Severus's Ejectment, is ordained Bishop of Antioch. 471. 1.
Peace termed The Interminate peace, made with the Persians by Justinian. 483. 2. is broken by the Persians. 487. 2.
Pelagius Bishop of Laodicea. 304. 1.
Pelagius successour to Johannes in the Bishoprick of Rome. 509. 2.
Peleus and Nilus, Egyptian Bishops, crowned with Martyrdom. 148. 1. 170. 1.
Pella a town beyond Jordan. 32. 2. The Christians remove thither, before the siege of Jerusalem. ibid.
Penitentiary-Presbyters. 341. 1, 2. abolished by Nectarius Bishop of Constantinople. ibid. &c.
Perigenes Bishop of Corinth. 388. 2, &c.
Pers-Armenia, so Armenia the Great was called; from the times of the Emperour Philip, it was subject to the Persians. 504. 1. the inhabitants thereof revolt to the Romans in Justinus Junior's Reign. ibid,
Persecution of Diocletian lasted ten years. 151. 1.
Persians worship Fire. 372. 2.
Pestilens disease destroys almost the whole world in Justinian's Reigne. 490. 1, 2. it raged two and fifty years. ibid.
Peter the chief of all the Apostles. 22. 1. comes to Rome to preach the word of God there, and to oppose Simon Magus. ibid. is crucified at Rome in Nero's time. 29. 2. 31. 1. Preached the Word of God to the Corinthians. 30. 1. was Preacher to the Jews that were dispersed. 30. 2. His Epistles. 31. 1. His Acts, Gospel, Preaching, Revelation are Apocryphal Books. ibid. His wife was Martyred. 45. 1.
Petrus Bishop of Alexandria. 138. 2. is crowned with Martyrdom in the ninth year of the persecution. 139. 1.
Petrus, of the Bed-chamber to the Emperour, is crowned with Martyrdom. 142. 1.
Petrus, called also Apselamus, a Martyr in Palestine. 166. 1.
Petrus is ordained Bishop of Alexandria. 315. 2. He is put into prison. 316. 1. He returns to Alexandria. 327. 2.
Petrus chief Presbyter of the Alexandrian Church. 359. 2.
Petrus Bishop of Sippi. 304. 1.
Petrus the Hiberian is ordained Bishop of Majuma. 427. 2. He was present at Timotheus Ælurus's Ordination. 430. 1. He is banished with him. 468. 1.
Petrus Fullo Bishop of Antioch, subscribes to Basiliscus's Circular Letters. 450. 2. Zeno ejects him out of the See of Antioch. 453. 1. He restores him again. 457. 1.
Petrus Mongus is chosen Bishop of Alexandria after Ælurus's death. 454. 1. He does in publick anathematize the Chalcedon Synod. 457. 2. a man of a crafty disposition. ibid. His Letter to Acacius Bishop of Constantinople. 458. 1, 2.
Petrus Bishop of Damascus, refuses his consent to Severus's Synodick Letters. 469. 1.
Petrus successour to Helias in the See of Jerusalem. 495. 1.
Pharisees, Hereticks amongst the Jews. 63. 2.
Pharmaceus, a Port in the mouth of the Euxine Sea. 382. 2.
Phileas Bishop of the Thmuitæ, a Martyr. 144. 2, &c. 148. 2.
Philetus Bishop of Antioch. 102. 2.
Philip the Apostle had a wife, and children by her. 45. 1, 2. dyed at Hierapolis. ibid. His daughters were Prophetesses. ibid. and 87. 1. His daughters lived at Hierapolis. 49. 2.
Philip Bishop of Jerusalem. 51. 2.
Philip the Asiarch. 58. 2.
Philip Bishop of Gortina. 64. 1. His Book against Marcion. 65. 1.
Philippus the Emperour was a Christian. 107. 2.
Philippus Præfect of the Prætorium, ejects Paul the Bishop out of his See. 252. 1.
Philippus a Presbyter of Side. 384. 1. wrote an Ecclesiastick History. ibid. Socrates's judgment concerning Philip's History. ibid.
Philippicus is made Master of the Eastern Milice by Mauricius. 516. 1. He is sent a second time into the East, to quiet a Mutiny of the Souldiers. 517. 2.
Philo the Jew, a famous man, is sent Embassadour to Caius. 18. 1. His Books are reckoned up. 24. 2. and put into the publick Library at Rome. 25. 1.
Philoromus a Martyr. 144. 2.
Philostratus writes, that in his time a Pestilence raged fifteen years. 491. 1.
Phlegon, an Historian. 416. 2.
Phœbus a Bishop. 280. 2.
Photinians, Hereticks. 311. 1.
Photinus Bishop of Sirmium, founded an Heresie called by his own name. 254. 2. His opinion. 255. 2. He is deposed. 266. 1. He wrote against all Heresies. 269. 1.
Phrygians are naturally temperate. 323. 1.
Picentius, Maximinus the Emperour's Favorite, is slain. 181. 2.
Pierius a Presbyter of the Alexandrian Church. 138. 2.
Pilate when made Procurator of Judæa, and how long he continued so. 12. 1. Those called Pilate's Acts forged long since his time. 12. 1. and 173. 2. He sends a Relation to Tiberius concerning Christ's Miracles. 16. 2. He laid violent hands on himself. 19. 1, 2.
Pilgrimage to places of the Holy Land. 96. 2. 591. 1.
Pinytus Bishop of Creet. 63. 1.
Pionius's Martyrdom in Smyrna. 60. 1.
Pisander a Poet. 416. 2.
Piso Bishop of the Adani. 304. 2.
Piso Bishop of Augusta. ibid.
Pisterus or Petiros a Monk. 317. 2.
Pius Bishop of Rome. 54. 2.
Plato the Philosopher praised. 642. 2. what he thought of the Second and Third cause. 372. 1.

Placidia, daughter to Valentinian and Eudoxia, married Olybrius. 428. 2.
Placidiana, an Imperial Palace at Conſtantinople. 364. 2.
Plintha Maſter of the Milice and Conſul. 349. 2.
Plutarchus, Scholar to Origen, a Martyr. 92. 2. 93. 2.
Pneumatomachi, ſo the Macedoniani were termed. 283. 2.
Polybius Biſhop of the Church at Trallis. 47. 2.
Polybius of Megalopolis brought down his Hiſtory to the deſtruction of Carthage. 513. 2.
Polycarp Biſhop of Smyrna. 47. 1. 345. 1. comes to Rome on account of the Controverſie concerning Eaſter, and conferred with Anicetus. 56. 1. 88. 2. Avoids the meeting and ſalutation of Marcion the Heretick. 56. 1. His Epiſtle to the Philippians. 56. 1. His Martyrdome. 56. 2, &c. His prayer for the Catholick Church. 59. 1.
Polycarpus Biſhop of Nicopolis in Thracia. 389. 1.
Polycrates Biſhop of Epheſus. 86. 2. His Epiſtle to Pope Victor. ibid.
Pontianus Biſhop of Rome. 103. 2.
Ponticus, Blandina's brother, a Martyr. 73. 2.
Pontifs, or Chief Prieſts, of the Jews, were heretofore perpetual, and enjoyed that Office by Inheritance. 12. 2. The Sedition of the Chief Prieſts againſt the Prieſts. 26. 1. Chief Prieſt's Robe lockt up by Herod. 8. 2.
Porphyrius, ſervant to Pamphilus, is crowned with Martyrdom. 168. 1.
Porphyrius Biſhop of Antioch. 373. 1.
Porphyrius a Philoſopher, in love with Scoffing. 300. 2. He wrote Books concerning the Hiſtory of Philoſophy. ibid. He renounced the Chriſtian faith. 302. 1.
Potamiæna, a Martyr. 94. 1, 2.
Pothinus Biſhop of Lyons, a Martyr. 71. 1.
Potitus a Marcioniſt. 79. 2.
Prayer that is fervent has an invincible power. 652. 1. 662. 2.
Prayer for the dead. 631. 2.
Primus Biſhop of Alexandria, the fourth from the Apoſtles. 50. 1.
Primus Biſhop of Corinth. 63. 1.
Priſcus, Malchus, and Alexander, Martyrs under Valerian. 124. 2.
Priſcus the Rhetorician, wrote an Hiſtory of the War waged by Attila againſt the Romans. 414. 2. 426. 2. 436. 1. 514. 1.
Priſcus is ſent Maſter of the Milice into the Eaſt. 516. 2. His pride. ibid. a Mutiny of the Souldiers againſt him, and againſt the Emperour Mauricius. ibid.
Probus Præfect of the Prætorium. 336. 2.
Proclus is ordained Biſhop of Cyzicus. 384. 1. is not admitted by the Inhabitants there. 384. 2. is ordained Biſhop of Conſtantinople. 391. 2. His Character. ibid. He cauſes John Chryſoſtome's Body to be conveyed to Conſtantinople. 393. 1, 2.
Proclus Quæſtor of the ſacred Palace under Juſtinian. 483. 1.
Procopius, the firſt Paleſtinian Martyr in Diocletian's perſecution. 154. 1.
Procopius Maſter of the Milice. 379. 1.
Procopius ſets up for a Tyrant. 306. 1. He is ſlain. 307. 1.
Procopius the Rhetorician, his Epitome of Hiſtories. 483. 1, 2. 484. 1.
Proterius is ordained Biſhop of Alexandria, in the place of Dioſcorus, by the common vote of the Biſhops of the Alexandrian Synod. 426. 2. He is murdered by the people of Alexandria. 430. 1.
Proterius Biſhop of Smyrna was preſent at the Chalcedon Synod. 441. 1.
Protogenes Biſhop of Sardica. 257. 2.
Pſalmodie of the Ancient Chriſtians, what it was. 24. 1. Pſalms made by the Chriſtians. 90. 1. 134. 1.
Pſamathia, a Village near Nicomedia. 238. 1.
Pſathyriani, Hereticks. 349. 1, 2.
Ptolemæus a Martyr at Rome. 61. 2.
Publius Biſhop of Athens, a Martyr. 64. 1.

Q.

Quadratus eminent for the gift of Prophecy. 48. 1. 82. 2. He preſented an Apology to the Emperour Hadrian, in defence of the Chriſtians. 51. 1.
Quadratus Biſhop of Athens. 64. 1.
Queſtions concerning things that are ſacred and obſcure, are not to be committed to the Ears of the Vulgar. 572. 2.
Quartodecimani were excommunicated by Pope Victor. 87. 2. 345. 1. They derived their tradition from Saint John the Apoſtle. 346. 1.
Quinta, an Alexandrian woman, a Martyr. 110. 1.
Quintus a Native of Phrygia, who had voluntarily run to Martyrdom, on ſight of the Torments, renounced the faith. 57. 1.
Quirinius, or Cyrenius, Preſident of Syria. 7. 2.

R.

Reginus's Book entitled Polymnemon. 302. 1.
Religious Aſſemblies variouſly celebrated amongſt the Ancients. 346. 2. 347. 1.
Repentance, another Baptiſm. 41. 2. an Example of ſincere Repentance. ibid. 'Tis the Trophy of the Reſurrection. ibid.
Reticius and Maternus Biſhops of the Gallia's. 194. 1.
Reverentius Biſhop of Tyre. 389. 1.
Rhodes ruined by an Earthquake. 476. 1.
Rhodon Scholar to Tatianus. 79. 2.
Rhoſſe a Town in Syria. 97. 1.
Rohas or Rougas a little King of the Barbarians. 392. 2.
Roman Church, its bounty and antiquity. 98. 2. it had forty ſix presbyters, and ſeven Deacons. 113. 2.
Roman Biſhops, their Letters with what reſpect received heretofore. 64. 2.
Romans faſt every Sabbath or Saturday. 348. 1. They faſt three whole weeks before Eaſter. 346. 1.
Romanus a Deacon, a Martyr at Antioch. 158. 1, 2.
Romulus, ſurnamed Auguſtulus, Son to Oreſtes, the laſt Emperour of Rome. 436. 2.
Rufinus's Books of Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory. 226. 1. 229. 1. 232. 2. 233. 2. His miſtake is noted. 245. 1.
Rufinus the Præfect of the Prætorium, is ſlain. 352. 1.
Rufinus Biſhop of Samoſata. 440. 2.
Rufus Præfect of Judæa, killed vaſt numbers of the Jews. 51. 2, &c.
Rufus Abbot of Theodoſius's Monaſtery in Paleſtine. 495. 2.

S.

Sabbatius a Novatianiſt, makes a Schiſme amongſt the Novatianiſts. 343. 2. He is made Biſhop over part of the Novatianiſts. 344. 1. 374. 1. is baniſhed to Rhodes and dyes there. 382. 2.
Sabellius the Heretick, his opinion. 119. 1.
Sabinianus Biſhop of Zeugma. 304. 2.
Sabinus Præfect of Egypt under Decius. 109. 1. 123. 2.
Sabinus, Præfect of the Prætorium to Maximinus. 171. 2.
Sabinus a Macedonian Heretick, what he wrote concerning the Biſhops convened at Nicæa. 217. 1. was Biſhop of Heraclea in Thracia. ibid. He wrote a Collection of Synodal Acts. ibid.
Sacred Veſſels of the Church, melted down to redeem Captives. 379. 2. given for the Redemption of a City. 483. 2.
Sacrifice [of the Chriſtians] myſtical and without bloud. 621. 2. 697. 1.
Sadduces, an Hereſie among the Jews. 63. 2.
Sagaris a Biſhop and a Martyr. 65. 2. 87. 1.
Salonæ, or Salona, a City of Dalmatia. 381. 2.
Saluſtius Præfect of the Prætorium. 298. 1.
Saluſtius is choſen Succeſſour to Martyrius in the See of Jeruſalem. 495. 1.
Samarites, an Hereſie amongſt the Jews. 63. 2. Samaritanes when they kept Eaſter. 348. 2.
Sanctus a Deacon of Vienna. 70. 1. 72. 1.
Sangarius, a River. 324. 1.
Sangarum, a Mart-town in Bithynia. 344. 1.
Sapor King of the Perſians, Conſtantine's Letter to him. 609. 1, 2.
Saracens. 112. 1.
Saturninus an Arch-Heretick in the Reign of Hadrian. 52. 1.
Saturnilians. 63. 2.
School at Alexandria. 78. 2.
Scythianus a Saracen. 234. 1.
Sedition at Conſtantinople termed Nica. 483. 2.
Sejanus a cruel Enemy of the Jews. 18. 2.
Selenas Biſhop of the Goths. 349. 2.
Seneca Biſhop of Jeruſalem. 51. 2.
Septuagint, or Seventy Tranſlators. 78. 1.
Sepulchre of Our Lord covered with an heap of Earth by the Heathens, and polluted with an image of Venus. 586. 1.
Serapion Biſhop of Antioch. 84. 1. 290. 1. His books. 97. 1.
Serapion a Martyr of Alexandria. 110. 1.
Serapion Deacon to John Chryſoſtome. 355. 1.
Serapion Biſhop of the Thmuitæ. 319. 1.
Serenius Granianus Proconſul of Aſia. 53. 2.
Serenus, Origen's Scholar, a Martyr. 93. 2.
Serenus, another of Origen's Scholars, a Martyr. ibid.
Sergiopolis a City of Syria, wherein are kept the Reliques of the Martyr Sergius. 489. 2.
Severa Auguſta, wife to Valentian the Elder. 325. 2.
Severiani, Hereticks which had their name from Severus. 67. 2.
Severianus Biſhop of Gabala. 360. 2.
Severianus Biſhop of Arethuſa, ſends a Libel of depoſition to Severus Patriarch of Antioch. 469. 1.
Severus Reignes at Rome after Majorianus. 429. 1.
Severus, after the Ejectment of Flavianus, is ordained Biſhop of Antioch. 467. 2. His Life and Studies. 468. 1. He Anathematizes the Chalcedon Council in his Synodick Letters. 468. 2. His Letter to Soterichus 476. 1. His enſtalling Letters. 478. 2. He is baniſhed by the Emperour Juſtinus. ibid. His Letters to Juſtinianus and Theodora. 482. 1.
Sextus wrote concerning the Reſurrection. 89. 2.
Sibylla Erythræa. 652. 2. Her Verſes concerning the Comeing of Chriſt. 653. 1, 2. In what words ſhe addreſſes her ſelf to God. 657. 2.
Signes which preceded the deſtruction of Jeruſalem. 35. 2. &c.
Signe of the Croſs ſeen in the Eaſt. 265. 2.
Silvanus Biſhop of Emiſa, a Martyr. 147. 2. 174. 1.
Silvanus Biſhop of Gaza, a Martyr. 147. 2. His Character. 170. 1.

Silvanus Biſhop of Tarſus. 303. 2.
Silvanus Biſhop of Troas. 389. 1, 2. He had before been Biſhop of Philippopolis. ibid.
Silvanus a Tyrant in the Gallia's. 270. 1.
Silverius Biſhop of Rome, opens the Gates of that City to Beliſarius. 486. 1. He is depoſed by Beliſarius, and Vigilius is put into his place. 486. 2.
Simon Magus is baptized by Philip. 16. 2. comes to Rome, and there deceives many by his Impoſtures. 21. 2. He was the Captain and chief of all Hereticks. ibid.
Siricius Biſhop of Rome. 373. 2.
Sirmium is taken by the Gepidæ. 507. 1. taken again by thoſe Barbarians termed Abares. ibid.
Siſinnius is ordained Biſhop of Conſtantinople. 383. 2. His Character. 384. 2.
Siſinnius a Novatianiſt. 335. 1. He was a Learned man. ibid. ordained Biſhop of the Novatianiſts at Conſtantinople. 343. 2. 352. 2. His book againſt John Chryſoſtome. 367. 2. His witty ſayings. ibid, &c.
Socrates Biſhop of Laodicea. 136. 1.
Socrates why put to death by his own Citizens. 642. 1.
Socrates Scholaſticus learnt Grammar at Conſtantinople, of Helladius and Ammonius. 339. 1. Born and bred at Conſtantinople. 350. 1. dedicates his work to Theodorus. 351. what ſtyle he followed. ibid.
Socrates's Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory. 401. His miſtake in his accounts of the Epheſine Synod. 404. 2. He is cited. 416. 1.
Sophia, the great Church at Conſtantinople. 253. 1. is conſecrated by Eudoxius. 282. 2.
Sophia, a Church built by Juſtinian, is deſcribed. 491. 2, &c.
Sophronius Biſhop of Pompeiopolis. 278. 2. 279. 2. is depoſed in a Synod at Conſtantinople. 282. 1. 294. 1. 303. 2.
Soſthenes one of Chriſt's Seventy Diſciples. 13. 2.
Sotas Biſhop of Anchialus. 84. 1, 2.
Soter Biſhop of Rome. 62. 2. His commendation. 64. 2.
Spirit, or Holy Ghoſt, is infuſed by Ordination. 280. 1.
Spyridon from being a Shepherd, is made a Biſhop. 226. 1. He fed Sheep whilſt he was a Biſhop. ibid. His miracles. ibid.
Stephen Biſhop of Rome. 117. 2.
Stephen the Deacon, firſt Martyr of Chriſt. 15. 2.
Stephen Biſhop of Laodicæa. 138. 1.
Stephanus Biſhop of Antioch. 264. 2.
Stephanus Biſhop of Epheſus was preſent at the Chalcedon Council. 438. 1.
Stephanus is Ordained Biſhop of Antioch. 453. 2. He is barbarouſly murdered by the Boys of Antioch. ibid.
Stephanus Biſhop of Hierapolis, wrote the Life of Saint Golanduch. 523. 1.
Succi, a Mountain that divides the Weſtern Churches from the Eaſtern. 259. 2.
Sunday and Friday kept holy by Conſtantine's order. 611. 2. 613. 1. 679. 1. Sunday celebrated as a Feſtival, by Chriſt's own command. 700. 1.
Symeon, Son of Clopas or Cleophas, Biſhop of Jeruſalem. 38. 1. after ſeveral Tortures, he is crucified. 46. 1, 2.
Symeon, or Symeones, the Stylite, flouriſhed under Theodoſius Junior. 410. 2. He ſpent Six and fifty years in Monaſtick Exerciſes and Severities. 411. 2. His dead body is with great honour conveyed to Antioch, in Leo's Reign. ibid. He was the firſt that found out the way of ſtanding upon a pillar. 432. 1. His Letter to Leo Auguſtus. 432. 2. and another Letter of his, to Baſilius Biſhop of Antioch. ibid. His Mandra is deſcribed. 412. 1.
Symmachus the Ebionite. 99. 2. His books. ibid.
Symmachus a Senator of Rome. 338. 2.
Syneros an Heretick. 79. 2.
Syneſius is preferred to the Biſhoprick of Cyrene, whilſt he was entangled in the Errours of Gentiliſm. 413. 1, 2. His Epiſtles, and Oration to the Emperour Theodoſius. ibid.
Synnada a City of Phrygia Pacatiana. 370. 2.

T.

Tablets, or Title of Criminals, who were led about in the Amphitheatre. 72. 2.
Tam-Choſroes General of the Perſians, is ſlain in battel by the Romans. 512. 1.
Tanais, ſo the Barbarians call the Stream of the Lake Mæotis into the Euxine Sea. 487. 1.
Tatianus Founder of the Sect of the Encratitæ. 60. 2. 67. 1. His Books. 67. 2. He is reckoned amongſt the Catholick Writers. ibid.
Teleſphorus Biſhop of Rome, the ſeventh from the Apoſtles. 51. 2.
Temples of the Heathens demoliſhed at Alexandria. 339. 1.
Tertullianus eminently skilfull in the Roman Laws. 17. 1.
Thaddæus one of Chriſt's Seventy diſciples. 14. 1. is ſent to Edeſſa by Thomas the Apoſtle. ibid. cures Agbarus by laying his hand on him. 15. 1. Preaches the Goſpel of Chriſt to the Edeſſens. ibid.
Thalaſſius, Præfect of the Prætorium, is ordained Biſhop of Cæſarea by the Patriarch Proclus. 394. 2.
Thalaſſius Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia, together with Dioſcorus Biſhop of Alexandria, preſided at the Second Epheſine Synod. 424. 2.
Thebuthis the firſt that made a Schiſm in the Church of Jeruſalem. 63. 2.
Thecla the protomartyr, appears to Zeno in his ſleep. 453. 1. in honour of her, Zeno builds a moſt ſplendid Church in the City Seleucia. ibid.
Thelymidres Biſhop of Laodicea. 116. 1.
Themiſon a Montaniſt. 82. 1.
Themiſtius the Philoſopher. 304. 2. His Oration to Valens. 326. 1.
Theoctiſtus Biſhop of Cæſarea in Paleſtine. 105. 2. 116. 1, 2.
Theodoricus King of the Goths, reſignes his Kingdom. 486. 1.
Theodoricus a Goth rebells againſt Zeno. 463. 1. He dyes, being wounded by the point of his Javelin. ibid.
Theodoricus Valamer is by Zeno ſent againſt Illus and Leontius. 464. 1. He leaves the Eaſt, and goes into Italy, and having vanquiſhed Odoacer there, poſſeſſes himſelf of the Kingdom of Italy. ibid. his wife Amalaſuntha. 486. 1.
Theodoricus King of the Goths has a Military Command in the Roman Army. 512. 1.
Theodoritus Biſhop of Cyrus, his Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory. 401. 473. 1. He is depoſed by Dioſcorus in the ſecond Epheſine Synod, together with Ibas Biſhop of Edeſſa, and Daniel Biſhop of Carræ. 409. 1, 2. He is reſtored in the Chalcedon Council. 426. 1. 447. 1.
Theodorus Biſhop of Heraclea in Thracia. 250. 2. 254. 1.
Theodorus Biſhop of Mopſueſtia in Cilicia. 353. 2.
Theodorus, a man of God. 245. 2.
Theodorus is cruelly tortured for the faith of Chriſt. 298. 1, 2.
Theodorus ſurnamed Aſcidas, Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia. 495. 2. a favourer of Origen. ibid. and 497. 1.
Theodoſia a Virgin, Martyred at Cæſarea. 162. 2.
Theodoſiopolis a City beſieged by the Perſians. 470. 1.
Theodoſius Biſhop of Philadelphia. 280. 2.
Theodoſiolus is killed by Valens. 315. 2.
Theodoſius the Great is created Emperour. 330. 1, He is baptized by Aſcholius. 331. 1. dyes. 351. 2.
Theodoſius Junior is born. 357. 1. His Commendations. 380. 1, 2. 392. 1. His Law againſt Neſtorius, extant in the Code. 410. 2.
Theodoſius Biſhop of Synnada. 370. 2. in what manner he loſt his Biſhoprick. 371. 1.
Theodoſius is ordained Biſhop of Jeruſalem, contrary to the Canons. 427. 1.
Theodoſius Biſhop of Alexandria, a Reviler of the Chalcedon Synod. 481. 2. Severus writes a Letter to him. 482. 1. His Letters ſent to Anthimus and Severus. ibid. He is ejected out of his See by Juſtinian. ibid.
Theodotion the Epheſian turned the Old Teſtament into Greek. 77. 2.
Theodotus a Montaniſt. 75. 1. 81. 2.
Theodotus the Tanner, Excommunicated by Victor. 90. 1.
Theodotus Biſhop of Laodicea. 138. 1.
Theodotus Biſhop of Laodicea. 284. 2.
Theodotus Biſhop of Ancyra, accuſes Neſtorius in the Epheſine Synod. 404. 2.
Theodotus Biſhop of Joppa. 452. 1.
Theodulus a Martyr with Pamphilus. 168. 2.
Theodulus Biſhop of Chæretapi. 280. 2.
Theodulus and Olympius, Biſhops. 264. 1.
Theodulus's Letter concerning Neſtorius, and his Hereſie. 403. 1.
Theonas Biſhop of Alexandria. 138. 2.
Theonas Biſhop of Marmarica, and Secundus Biſhop of Ptolemais, are Anathematized by the Nicene Synod. 219. 2.
Theophilus Biſhop of Antioch, the ſixth from the Apoſtles. 63. 1. His Books. 65. 1.
Theophilus Biſhop of Cæſarea in Paleſtine. 86. 1.
Theophilus is ordained Biſhop of Alexandria. 337. 2.
Theophilus Biſhop of Caſtabali. 303. 2.
Theophilus Biſhop of the Goths, ſubſcribed to the Nicene Council. 281. 2.
Theophronius a Cappadocian, Ennomius's Scholar, coyns a new Hereſie. 349. 2.
Theotecnus Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia. 125. 2. 133. 2.
Theotecnus Curator of the City Antioch. 172. 2. the Authour and Incentive of the Chriſtians perſecution. ibid. He is executed by Licinius's order. 182. 1.
Theotimus Biſhop of the Arabi. 304. 2.
Theotimus Biſhop of Scythia, what his ſentiments were concerning Origen's Books. 362. 1.
Therapeutæ, why ſo termed. 23. 1. Their Monaſteries and courſe of Life. ibid, &c.
Theudas an Impoſtour. 20. 2.
Thomas the Apoſtle, called Judas alſo. 14. 2. He preached the Goſpel to the Parthians. 30. 1. 231. 2. a great Church dedicated to him in the City Edeſſa. 314. 2.
Thomas Biſhop of Apamia. 487. 2. He is a ſpectatour of the Equeſtrian Sports, contrary to the uſage of the Church. ibid.
Thomas a Monk in Syria, feigned himſelf a fool. 494. 1.
Thraſeas a Martyr. 84. 1. Biſhop of Eumenia. 87. 1.
Thraſamundus King of the Vandals in Africa. 484. 2.

Tiberiopolis a City of Phrygia. 394. 1.
Tiberius Auguſtus how affected at Pilate's Relation concerning the Reſurrection of Chriſt. 16. 2, &c.
Tiberius, after Juſtinus Junior became craz'd, managed the Empire together with Sophia wife to Juſtinus. 506. 1, 2. He is declared Cæſar by Juſtinus. 507. 1. His Character. 517. 2.
Tigris an Eunuch, and a Presbyter. 364. 1.
Timæus Biſhop of Antioch. 135. 2.
Timolaus, Dionyſius, Romulus, Pauſis, Alexander, and another Alexander, Martyrs in Paleſtine. 159. 2.
Timotheus, Saint Paul's diſciple, the firſt Biſhop of the Epheſians. 31. 2.
Timotheus a Martyr in Paleſtine. 159. 2.
Timotheus is ordained Biſhop of Alexandria. 327. 2. 330. 1. 331. 2.
Timotheus Ælurus is choſen Biſhop by the Alexandrians whilſt Proterius was living. 430. 1. He was ordained but by two Biſhops. 430. 2. He wrote a Letter to Leo Auguſtus concerning his own ordination. 431. 1. He is baniſhed to Gangra. 433. 1. He is recalled by the Emperour Baſiliſcus. 449. 2.
Timotheus Salofaciolus, after Ælurus's ejectment, is ordained Biſhop of Alexandria. 433. 1. He flyes to Canopus. 454. 1. By Zeno's order he recovers his See. ibid.
Timotheus, after Macedonius's ejectment, is ordained Biſhop of Conſtantinople. 468. 2.
Titus diſciple to Saint Paul, Biſhop of the Cities of Creet. 31. 2.
Titus Biſhop of Boſtra. 304. 1.
Tobias ſon of Tobias, an Edeſſen. 14. 2.
Tobias Biſhop of Jeruſalem. 51. 2.
Tranſlations of Biſhops forbidden. 388. 1. ſometimes uſed on account of the Church's neceſſity. ibid. Inſtances of ſuch Tranſlations. 389. 1. They were forbidden by Conſtantine. 599. 2.
Tribigildus a Tribune of Souldiers. 356. 1.
Tripolis a City of Phœnice, wherein was the Church of Saint Leontius the Martyer. 468. 1.
Troilus the Sophiſt a prudent man. 370. 1. a Native of Side in Pamphylia. 384. 1.
Tychæum of Antioch, that is, the Temple of the publick Genius, conſecrated in honour of the Martyr Ignatius. 414. 1.
Tyrannio Biſhop of Tyre, a Martyr. 147. 2.
Tyrannus Biſhop of Antioch. 136. 1.

V.

Valens Biſhop of Jeruſalem. 79. 2.
Valens a Deacon of Ælia, is Martyred. 166. 2.
Valens the Emperour being baptized by Eudoxius the Biſhop, becomes an Arian. 305. 1. He perſecutes the Orthodox. 306. 1. He builds an Aquæduct at Conſtantinople. 308. 2. He dyes. 328. 2.
Valentinianus is choſen Emperour. 305. 1. chuſes Valens to be his Colleague in the Empire. ibid. dyes. 325. 1. had two wives at the ſame time. 325. 2.
Valentinianus Placidus, ſon to Conſtantius and Placidia. 382. 1. is proclaimed Cæſar by Theodoſius. ibid. is declared Auguſtus. ibid.
Valentinianus Juniour is created Emperour. 325. 1. He was Juſtina's ſon. ibid.
Valentina a Virgin, Martyred. 164. 1.
Valentinus an Arch-Heretick, flouriſhed at Rome. 54. 2. Valentinians, Hereticks. 63. 2.
Valerianus at the beginning of his Reign, favoured the Chriſtians. 121. 1. His ignominious ſlavery and captivity in Perſia. 660. 1.
Valerius Gratus Procurator of Judæa. 12. 2.
Varanes King of the Perſians. 377. 2. perſecutes the Chriſtians. ibid.
Various uſages and rites in divers Churches. 346. 1, &c.
Ventidius and Corbulo, Romans, conquered the Parthians. 473. 2.
Vetranio turns Tyrant. 263. 2. afterwards he became a private man. 265. 2.
Vettius Epagathus, a Martyr at Lyons. 69. 2.
Victor Biſhop of Rome. 87. 2. excommunicates the Churches of Aſia. ibid. He is diſſwaded therefrom by Irenæus. ibid.
Victor Maſter of the Milice. 327. 2.
Vigils of the Chriſtians, and their faſts before the Feaſt of Eaſter. 24. 1.
Vigil of Eaſter. 95. 2. obſerved by the Emperour Conſtantine. 613. 1.
Vigilius Biſhop of Rome, refuſes to come to the fifth Synod. 496. 1.
Vindices, Officers made in every City by the Emperour Anaſtaſius. 475. 1.
Vine, the Badge of a Centurion's office. 125. 1.
Virgil's Verſes concerning Chriſt. 654. 1, &c.
Virgins of the Chriſtians. 24. 1. 161. 2. they were regiſtred in the Matricula or Roll of the Church. 230. 1.
Vitalianus rebels againſt Anaſtaſius. 475. 2. takes Hypatius and Cyrillus Commanders of the Romans. ibid. being made Maſter of the Milice and Conſul by Juſtinus, he is ſlain. 478. 1.
Vitalis and Miſenus, Legates of the See of Rome, are condemned in a Synod at Rome for ill-management of their Embaſſie. 460. 2.
Ulfila Biſhop of the Goths. 281. 2. 326. 2.
Ulpianus a Martyr at Tyre. 161. 2.
Ulpianus a Sophiſt, wrote an Oration in commendation of Antioch. 417. 1.
Uranius Biſhop of Apamea. 304. 1.
Uranius Biſhop of Meletina. ibid.
Uranius Biſhop of Tyre. 278. 2. is depoſed. 280. 2.
Urbanus Biſhop of Rome. 102. 2.
Urbanus preſident of Paleſtine. 159. 1. is put to death. 163. 2.
Urbanus, Theodorus, Menedemus, and ſeventy other Presbyters, who had been ſent Legates for the Catholicks to Valens, are barbarouſly murdered. 314. 1, 2.
Urbicius, or Urbicus, Præfect of Rome. 61. 2.
Urſacius and Valens, Arian Biſhops. 250. 2. condemned in the Sardican Synod. 257. 2. preſent a Penitentiary-Libel to Pope Julius. 263. 1. they are depoſed in the Synod of Ariminum. 273. 2..
Urſinus a Deacon of the Roman Church. 324. 1.

W.

Weſtern Church when ſevered in Communion from the Eaſtern. 259. 2.
Wiſedom of Solomon, ſo the Book of Proverbs was called. 64. 1. 66. 2.
Woman of Alexandria, her chaſtity. 150. 2.
Women that were adultereſſes, how puniſhed by the Romans. 341. 1.
Word of God, His Nature, Proprieties, and Operations. 683. 1, &c. He is God of God, and light of Light. 686. 1. the reaſon of His Incarnation. 691. 2. &c.

X.

Xenaias a great ſtickler againſt Flavianus Biſhop of Antioch. 466. 1. He is made Biſhop of Hierapolis. 467. 2. by a Greek name he was termed Philoxenus. ibid.
Xorolophus a place in Conſtantinople. 371. 2.
Xyſtus Biſhop of Rome. 51. 1.
Xyſtus, another Biſhop of Rome. 118. 2.

Z.

Zambdas Biſhop of Jeruſalem. 138. 2.
Zacchæus Biſhop of Jeruſalem. 51. 2.
Zacharias the Rhetorician, an Hiſtorian, favoured Neſtorius. 421. 2. blames Proterius falſely. 431. 1. He favoured Eutyches's party. 452. 2. Evagrius reproves him for his careleſneſs in writing his Hiſtory. 459. 2.
Zamolxis a God of the Getæ. 689. 1.
Zebinus Biſhop of Antioch. 103. 2.
Zeno at firſt named Aricmeſius, marries Leo Auguſtus's daughter. 435. 2. is created Emperour of the Romans. 436. 2. His wicked Life. 448. 1, 2. His Henoticon, or uniting-Edict. 455. 1, 2. His Letter to Pope Felix. 460. 1.
Zenobius a Presbyter of the Church at Sidon, Martyred. 147. 2.
Zephyrinus Biſhop of Rome. 90. 1.
Zeuxippus's Bath. 252. 2.
Zoïlus Biſhop of Ariſſa. 304. 1.
Zoïlus Governour of Antioch under Theodoſius Junior, what Buildings he erected at Antioch. 415. 2.
Zoïlus is made Biſhop of Alexandria, after Theodoſius's ejectment. 482. 2. 495. 1.
Zoſimus Biſhop of Rome. 374. 1.
Zoticus Otrenus a Presbyter. 81. 1.
Zoticus Biſhop of Comana. 82. 1. 84. 1.
Zozimas or Zoſimas a Monk in Syria. 480. 1. He foretells the Earthquake at Antioch. 480. 2. His miracles. ibid.
Zozimus an Hiſtorian, was a Heathen, and on that account hated Conſtantine. 472. 1. He brought down his Hiſtory as far as the times of Honorius and Arcadius. 472. 2. when he wrote his Hiſtory. ibid.

THE INDEX

Of the Chief Matters that occur in the Notes on these

HISTORIANS.

The First Number shews the Page; the Second, the Column.

A.

Abares, or Abari, when first known to the Romans. 500. 1.
Acacius Bishop of Constantinople, never held communion with Petrus Fullo. 457. 2. He was condemned in no particular Synod. 459. 1. when the sentence of deposition was pronounc't against him 461. 1, 2.
Ἀκκίζομαι, what it signifies. 469. 1.
Accesius the Novatianist seems not to have been called to the Nicene Synod by Constantine. 225. 1.
Acœmeti had two Monasteries at Constantinople. 459. 2. 467. 1.
Acts what. 12. 1. Acts of Pilate when forged by the Heathens. 12. 1. 173. 2.
Ἀδιάδοχος στρατηλασία, the power of a perpetual Master of the Milice. 462. 2. a passage in Theophanes is mended. ibid.
Adjutor, the Prince of the Office of the Master of the Offices. 440. 1.
Adoration of the Emperour, what it was. 630. 2.
Adra, a City of Arabia. 304. 1.
Adulterer, so he was called who invaded the See of a Bishop that was yet living. 456. 2.
Adultery, how punished amongst the Romans. 341. 1.
Ægiochus, an Epithete given to Jupiter. 410. 1.
Ælia, so Jerusalem was called till Constantine's time, when it recovered its old name Jerusalem again. 52. 1. 118. 1. 167. 2.
Aërial Martyr, so Symeon the Stylite was called. 411. 2.
Æther, the Element of Fire. 684. 2.
Africanus the Chronographer, not the same person that composed the Cesti. 106. 2.
Agathobulus a Philosopher. 137. 1.
Agbarus, called also Abgarus. 13. 2.
Ἀγορά, Forum, a Market, or Court of Judicature. 69. 1.
Αἰών, or Ævum, in Plato signifies eternity. 671. 2.
Agnati and Cognati, who, and wherein they differ. 563. 1.
Agrippa Junior, when he began to Reign. 25. 2.
Ἀγχιστεῖς, who they are. 563. 1.
Ἀκριβὴς λόγος, what it signifies. 219. 2. 583. 2.
Alabarches, the Chief Magistrate of the Jews that lived at Alexandria. 18. 1.
Allegories were by the ancient Græcians termed ὑπόνοιαι. 23. 2.
Alexander Bishop of Constantinople, in what year he dyed. 247. 1.
Alexandria a very unhealthfull City, and why. 127. 2.
Alexandrian Bishops heretofore termed Popes. 404. 1. Nicephorus's Opinion is refuted. ibid. They had a secular principality. 372. 2.
Alexandrian Synod, wherein Origen's books were condemned by Theophilus. 360, 2.
Alexandrian Synod, its Acts. 289. 2, &c.
Alexandrian Bishop, whether he ordained all over Egypt. 263. 1.
Alternative Hymns, by whom first appointed. 359. 1.
Ambon, a place wherein Criminals were set, whilst they were interrogated by the Judge. 111. 2.
Amen was the answer of the Faithfull, when they received the consecrated Bread. 114. 2. also, after the Priest had consecrated. 120. 2.
Ἀμφίθυρα, Curtains hanging before doors. 524. 1, 2. many uses of them in the Church. ibid.
Amphilochius Bishop of Side. 432. 2.
Ἀναβολή, a Preface. 637. 1.
Ἀναβολεύς, a Strator, one that lifts his Master on horseback. 463. 1.
Ἀναμασσόμενοι τὰς ἀλύσεις. 128. 2.
Ἀναπαύειν, to comfort, or refresh. 40. 2.
Anastasia, the wife of Bassianus the Cæsar. 309. 1, 2.
Anastasian Baths, whence so called. ibid.
Anastasis, the Church of the Resurrection at Jerusalem. 427. 1. 588. 2.
Ἀναφορεύς, the Relation of a President to the Emperour. 407. 2.
Ἀνάπλους, a place neer Constantinople. 475. 2.
Anastasius Sinaita Bishop of Antioch, when he was ejected. 503. 1.
Annas or Ananus, held the High-priest-hood many years. 12. 2.
Ἀντιγράφεις, Props. 518. 2.
Ἀντιγραφεῖς, Masters of the Scrinia. 350. 1.
Antioch when made a free City. 433. 2. three Forum's or Tribunals there, and as many Scholes of Advocates. 415. 1. In the same City was also the Prætorium of the Master of the Eastern Milice. 415. 2. when termed Theopolis. 480. 1.
Antiochians, from what moneth their years begin. 434. 1. 467. 2.
Antipater and Aristobulus, sons to Herod the Great, killed by his order. 11. 2.
Antipater, Grandfather to Herod the Great. 10. 1.
Antiphons, See Alternative Hymns.
Ἀντίψυχος, Vicarius, a substitute. 695. 1.
Apamia, the Metropolis of Syria Cœle or Syria Secunda. 469. 1.
Ἀπομνημονεύματα, what it signifies. 77. 2. 105. 1.
Apocryphal Books. 98. 1.
Ἀποκοιμᾶσθαι, what it signifies. 81. 1.
Apocrysarius of a Monastery, that is, one who managed the affairs of a Monastery. 494. 1. Apocrysarii or Responsales of Patriarchs and Bishops in the Emperour's Court. 496. 1.
Apollinarians, Hereticks. 284. 2.
Apollonia, a Virgin that suffered Martyrdom in the Reign of Philippus, not under Decius. 110. 1.
Apollonius, whilst Montanus was living, wrote against his propheſie. 83. 2, &c.
Apollonius a Roman Senator. 85. 2.
Ἀποσβέω, its signification. 94. 1.
Apostates, when they return to the Church, are treated with more severity. 119. 2.
Apostles, the twelve were not onely so called, but several other persons. 14. 2. 29. 1.
Apostles are not reckoned in the number of Bishops. 38. 2.
Ἀποστόλαι, what it signifies. 402. 1, 2.
Ἀποτυμπανισθῆναι, what it imports. 72. 2.
Aquæduct of Valens Augustus at Constantinople. 308. 1. 2.
Archelaus Bishop of Cascharum, his disputation against Manichæus. 224. 2.
Areopagus, what it was. 32. 1.
Ἀεσίνδην. 91. 1.
Arius, two of that name. 240. 2. Arius who with Euzoius presented a Libel of faith to the Emperour Constantine, was not Arius the Arch-Heretick. ibid.
Arius, when and how recalled from banishment. ibid.
Artemius, Commander in chief of Egypt. 288. 2.
Ἀφυέσθαι, to take away, or remove. 87 1.
Arsenius, Bishop of the Hypselitæ. 238. 2. 240. 2.
Ascetæ, who were heretofore called so. 22. 2. Not onely Monks but, but Clergy-men alſo had that name given them. 139. 1. 168. 2.

Ἀσέβεια, the Crime of Treaſon. 695. 1.
Aſa, how many ways 'tis taken. 86. 1.
Aſiarchs, what they were. 58. 2. how choſen. ibid. a very chargeable Office. ibid.
Aſterius Urbanus, Authour of the books againſt the Cataphrygæ. 82. 1.
Athanaſius, in what year recalled from baniſhment. 246. 2. in what year he went to Rome. 256. 2. He went to Rome once onely. 253. 2. when a boy, he baptized his play-fellows. 229. 1.
Ἄτης, or Atin, Bacchus. 302. 2.
Atticus Biſhop of Conſtantinople, his Epitaph. 383. 1.
Auguſtonica, a Province of Egypt. 262. 2.
Αὐλειος θύρα, a door of an houſe. 608. 2.
Αὐλὴ, Atrium, or a Court. 590. 2.
Avitus, how many moneths he Reigned. 428. 2, &c.
Auſe, or Oſee, the firſt name of Jeſus the ſon of Nave. 5. 1.
Αὐσονεκὴ ὐσία. 190. 2.
Αὐτοπαρθένοι, Chriſtian Virgins. 161. 2.
Αὐτοθεὸς, ſo Euſebius calls Chriſt. 186. 2.
Ἀξιωματικοὶ, the Honorati, are joyned with the Decuriones. 431. 2.

B.

Bacaudæ, a ſort of Boors, were up in Arms over the whole Roman world. 690. 2.
Bacurius Prince of the Iberi. 233. 2.
Baptiſm is by the Greeks termed σφραγὶς or a ſeal. 40. 2. 'tis the Symbol of our Lord's Paſſion. 184. 2. 'tis termed τελείωσις. 628. 2.
Baſileus Biſhop of Amaſia. 551. 2. a Martyr under Licinius. ibid.
Baſilius the Great, what year made Biſhop of Cæſarea. 321. 1, 2. He was twice queſtioned by Valens. 322. 1.
Baſilides's Prophets. 52. 2.
Βασιλικὸς λόγος. 681. 2.
Βασιλεύουσα πόλις, the Imperial City, ſo Euſebius always calls Rome, not Conſtantinople. 593. 1.
Baſiliſcus declared his ſon Marcus, Cæſar; afterwards, Auguſtus. 451. 1.
Bataneotes, a Surname of Porphyrius the Philoſopher. 100. 2.
Battle at Cibalæ. 554. 1.
Battle at Hadrianople, what year it hapned. 556. 2.
Beneficiarii. 179. 1.
Beryllus's opinion concerning the Nature and divinity of Chriſt. 107. 1. His Hereſie. 290. 2.
Berytus, what year the Synod was convened there. 409. 1.
Biſhops in Egypt, were an hundred. 212. 2.
Biſhops heretofore preached, ſtanding on the ſteps of the Altar. 355. 2.
Biſhops, their firſt Sermon always much taken notice of. 384. 2.
Biſhops, their ſentences in judicature made valid. 615. 2.
Biſhops of other Cities, were uſually buried at Conſtantinople, in the Church of The Apoſtles. 492. 2.
Biſhops anciently wore a plate of gold on their forehead, in imitation of the Jewiſh High-prieſts. 87. 1.
Birth-day of the Martyrs, was that whereon they ſuffer'd Martyrdom. 59. 2.
Βιῶναι, to lead a ſecular Life. 92. 2. Βιωτικὸς, Laicks. ibid.
Boſci, Monks ſo called. 418. 1.
Botry a City of Phœnice. 494. 1. Theophanes and Antoninus Martyr are mended. ibid.
Britiſh-Church very ancient. 333. 1, 2. it was, and is independent of the Roman Patriarchate. ibid.
Bruchium, what it was. 136. 2. the ſiege of it, when. ibid.
Bryſia. 518. 2.

C.

Cæſarea, or Cæſarium, the Great Church of Alexandria. 376. 2. whence it had that name. 430. 1.
Caius was Authour of the book called The Little Labyrinth. 89. 2. He wrote a book againſt Proclus. 102. 2.
Calendio is ordained Biſhop of Antioch at Conſtantinople by Acacius, contrary to the Canons. 457. 1. how many years he ſate Biſhop. 462. 1.
Καλλίπολις, ſo Conſtantinople was termed. 597. 1.
Καλχηδονεῖς is ſometimes made uſe of in ſtead of καλχηδόνιον. 446. 2. In old Coyns that City is written καλχηδῶν. 460. 1.
Camp-bread given to the City Antioch by Diocletian. 427. 1. a place in Procopius about this Annona, is mended. ibid.
Campus, a place without the City Antioch, where the Souldiers exerciſed. 518. 2. Campus, a place ſeven miles diſtant from Conſtantinople. 507. 2. it was the place where Criminals were puniſhed. 658. 2.
Canon of the Council of Antioch. 366. 1. what muſt be thought concerning that Council. ibid.
Canon, or ſet-allowance of Bread, or Bread-corn, at Conſtantinople. 251. 1.
Canon the ſecond, of the Conſtantinopolitan Council, is explained. 333. 2.
Canon the fifth, of the Nicene Council, whither it treats concerning Patriarchs, and their Juriſdiction. 332. 2.
Caſtalian Fountain neer Antioch. 414. 2.
Caſtrenſis Panis. See Camp-bread.
Καταδεσμοὶ, Ligatures, Inchantments. 688. 2.
Catechiſt taught in a private Auditory, not publickly in the Church. 102. 1.
Catechumens were made by Impoſition of the Biſhop's hand. 627. 1, 2. they covered their heads. 629. 1.
Κατεσταθὴν. 74. 1.
Catholick Epiſtles. 98. 1.
Catholicus, a Rationaliſt. 121. 2. ἐπὶ τῆς καθόλου λόγων, a Rationaliſt. ibid. and 181. 2.
Celſus the Philoſopher, againſt whom Origen wrote, was Lucian's friend. 108. 1.
Cephro, and Coluthio, 122. 2. 123. 1.
Ceratæ, a wind about Byzantium, 276. 2.
Κεφάλαιον, capitulum, a period. 131. 2.
Charemon, a Philoſopher. 101. 2.
Chair or Throne of Saint Mark at Alexandria. 138. 2.
Chalcedon-Synod, the copies of it that Evagrius made uſe of, are different from ours. 439. 1. which are more genuine and authentick, Evagrius's copies, or ours. 444. 1.
Chalcedon had onely the bare name of a Metropolis given it by Marcianus. 446. 2.
Chartæ, or Libels of Cæcilianus's crimes, tranſmitted to the Emperour. 194. 1.
χλάϊς inſtead of χλαῖμυς. 125. 2.
Chorepiſcopi, who they were. 134. 1.
Choſroes King of the Perſians, when he dyed. 509. 1.
Χριστὸς, Chriſt, was written with a dipthong. 653. 1. Chriſt before all things, and after all things. 666. 1.
Chriſt, in what year born. 7. 2. whether he was born on the twenty fifth of December. ibid.
Chriſtian Religion termed ἡ κρατοῦσα. 53. 1.
Chriſtians wont to ſtop their Ears, when they heard any impious expreſſion. 85. 1. they gave their children the names of the Apoſtles. 131. 1. They prayed with expanded hands. 611. 1.
Chriſtians were very deſirous of being baptized in Jordan. 628. 1. who were termed perfect Chriſtians. 628. 2. Their Feaſts at the Sepulchres of the Martyrs. 647. 2. Their way of Burial. 124. 1. 128. 2.
Χρεόχυτος γραφὴ, Encauſtick painting. 530. 2.
Χρυσαργυρικὸς τῶν ἀντοκέων. 433. 2
Chryſargyrum is in the Code termed Luſtralis auri Collatio. 471. 1. The Emperours called it Vectigal. ibid. Libanius calls it Tribute, becauſe 'twas paid every fourth year by Merchants or Traders. ibid. The Aurum pœnoſum is to be diſtinguiſhed from it. ibid.
Chryſoſtome's ſaying concerning penitents. 367. 2.
Chryſotelia, what it was. 474. 2.
Churches, there were fourty of them at Rome in Decius's time. 113. 2.
Circular Letters, or Encyclicæ. 432. 2.
Claudian at firſt wrote Greek Verſes. 416. 1. when he began to write Latine verſes. ibid.
Clavularis Curſus. 287. 2.
Clemens's book of Recognitions. 48. 2. 49. 1.
Clemens's Stromata. 97. 2.
Clemens's books entitled Ὑποτυπώσεις, or Inſtitutions. 79. 1. a fragment of them is now extant, at the cloſe of his Stromata. ibid.
Clergy-men wore a Philoſophick Pallium. 101. 2. Clergy-men termed Competentes. 191. 2.
Κλῆρος the degree or order of Eccleſiaſticks. 114. 1.
Ἐκλήρωσε, he enroll'd amongſt the Clergy. 495. 1.
Cletus Biſhop of Rome, the ſame perſon with Anencletus. 38. 2.
Κλειθρὶδια what it ſignifies. 412. 2. 422. 2.
Κλινάδες, Stibadia, accubita, Beds to lye and eat upon. 581. 2.
Clinicks, their Baptiſm. 113. 2.
Coadjutor or Aſſiſtant can't be made without the Biſhops conſent. 96. 2. Two inſtances of Coadjutors. 137. 2.
Colligere, Collecta. 604. 2.
Clopas or Cleophas, whether Joſeph's brother, and unkle to Chriſt. 38. 1.
Κοιμητήρια, in Latine Areæ. 122. 2.
Comites of the firſt and ſecond order, long before the Reign of Conſtantine. 606. 2, &c.
Common Council of Aſia, or κοινὸν ἀσίας, what it was. 55. 2. 56. 1.
Communicatory-Letters, two ſorts of them. 135. 1.
Communion was twofold; one of prayer, the other of the Sacraments. 112. 1. private Communion. ibid. and 114. 2.
Confectores. 59. 1.
Confeſſion, whether private, or publick, amongſt the Ancient Chriſtians. 341. 2. 342. 1, &c.
Conſecrated Bread was wont to be moyſtned in water. 115. 2.
Conſtantina, a City of Phœnice, the Biſhop whereof was Sophronius. 409. 1.
Conſtantine's Letters to the Biſhops, taken for the Synodick Letter of the Nicene Synod. 582. 1.

Constantine took too much upon himself, in Ecclesiastick matters. 594. 2.
Constantine the Great, how many years he reigned. 624. 1. He was termed ἰσαπόστολος, equal to an Apostle. 626. 2. when he was made a Catechumen. 627. 2.
Constantine's Statue wont to be adored by the common people. 230. 1.
Constantine's Letter against Arius. 224. 2.
Constantinopolitane Bishop ordained in the Hellespont, and in the adjacent Provinces. 276. 1. He is simply and absolutely termed The Patriarch. 439. 1.
Constantinopolitane Synod assembled on account of the cause of Gregorius Bishop of Antioch, what year convened. 518. 1, 2.
Constantius Chlorus, in what year he dyed. 209. 2.
Constantius used to swear by his own eternity. 273. 1.
Corban, what it was. 19. 1.
χωϊκοὶ, Rusticks or Boors. 109. 1. called also χωΐται. 490. 2.
Cornutus a Philosopher. 101. 2. He is erroneously termed Phornutus. ibid.
Council at Jerusalem, in what year assembled. 25. 1.
Council of Chalcedon, in what manner it was preached and published. 482. 2. The three General-Councils preached or published together with it by the Deacon in the Church after the reading of the Gospel, and inserted into the Diptycks. ibid.
Criminals usually executed without the City. 495. 1.
Καστήσιον. 697. 2.
Curator of a City. 146. 1.
Curators of the Imperial Houses, who they were. 510. 1, &c. They had Jurisdiction. 511. 1. Their Title was, Most Glorious, and Most Magnificent. ibid. 510. 2.
Κυριακὰ, Dominica, or Churches. 698. 1.
Curiæ, and Curiales. 558. 1.
Curiales or Decuriones did heretofore gather the Tribute. 474. 2. Anastasius the Emperour freed them from that. 475. 1. The following Emperours null'd that Law. ibid.
Curopalates heretofore a despicable office, afterwards the highest dignity of the palace. 499. 1, 2. He was a different person from the Count of the Guards. ibid.
Cuzica, a Monastery and Laura. 480. 2.
Cynegica a Region near Antioch. 467. 2.
Cyrenius. See Quirinius.
Cyrillus Bishop of Alexandria presided in the Ephesine Synod. 404. 1.
Cyrus Bishoop of Berœa, banished on account of the Homoousian Faith. 235. 2.
Cyrus, a Poet. 416. 1.

D.

Dacianus. 278. 1.
Dæmons of the Air, or Aërial Dæmons. 672. 1.
Dalmatius the Censor, father to Dalmatius the Cæsar. 238. 2, &c.
Damophilus the Bithynian, his Collectanea. 515. 2. He lived after Plutarch's time. ibid.
Darius the Mede, is not Nabonnidus. 652. 1.
Deacons distributed not the Sacrament amongst the people, when the Priest was present. 114. 2.
Decani, δεκάδαρχοί. 521 2.
Decennalia, Vicennalia, Tricennalia, what meant by them. 529. 1.
Decius, how many years he Reigned. 117. 1.
Decuriales, who they were at Rome. 340. 2. The Rector of the Decuriæ. ibid.
Delphicum, an Edifice wherein were the Emperour's Stibadia, or Beds to lye and banquet on. 478. 1.
Δημοσιεύειν, what it signifies. 110. 2.
Δημοσιεύειν, to be read publickly. 38. 1.
Dengisich son to Attala. 435. 2. His name being faulty in the Alexandrian Chronicle, is mended. ibid.
Depositions of Bishops, in what order usually declared. 442. 1.
Dexippus the Historian, his σκυθικὰ. 513. 2.
Διὰ βίου ἱερωμένοι, perpetual Priests. 191. 1.
Διδάσκοι, Masters of the Platonick School at Athens. 136. 1.
Διαλέξεις, Homilies, or Discourses to the people. 89. 1.
Dialogue of Jason and Papiscus, by whom written. 52. 1.
Διαμαρτυρίαι, Protests. 280. 2.
Διασημότατοι, Most Perfect. 177. 2.
Διαθεσις, Charity, Love. 583. 2.
Διατιθέναι, componere, to bury the dead. 128. 2.
Διεξαγωγὴ. 130. 2.
Διπλωλημμένον δόρυ, hasta amentata, a Javelyn fitted with a Leather-loop. 463. 1.
Dignus est, he is worthy, was the usual acclamation in the Election of Bishops. 106. 1.
Διηγήσεις, Enarrations, Expositions. 98. 2.
Dii patrii and Peregrini. 553. 2.
Diocletian's persecution, when it began. 140. 2. 158. 2. 537. 1. when it ended. 151. 1. what year Diocletian triumphed. 148. 1, 2. why he resigned the Empire. 660. 1, 2. in what year he dyed. 210. 2.
Diœcesis, what it signifies. 332. 2. 618. 2.
Dionysius Consularis of Phœnice. 620. 2.
Διόσκοροι, Porticus's. 590. 1.
Dioscorus Bishop of Hermopolis, when he dyed. 365. 1.
Dioscorus Junior when ordained Bishop of Alexandria. 467. 1. Liberatus's mistake in relating his Ordination. ibid.
Dius, the first moneth of the Syro-Macedonians. 157. 1.
Δοκηταὶ, Hereticks. 97. 1.
Dominica Mediana. 346. 1. whence so called. ibid.
Donatists, their Schism. 571. 2. they were the first that appealed from an Ecclesiastick Judicature. 280. 2.
Dorotheus Presbyter of Antioch, a different person from Dorotheus who was of the Bed-chamber to the Emperour. 135. 2, &c.
Dositheus the Samaritane, when he lived. 63. 2.
Doxology of the Arians. 258. 1.
Drachma whence so called, by whom used; Attick Drachms, their value. 11. 2.
Ducenarius, what he was. 134. 1.
Δυνάμεις Powers, so Angels, as well as Dæmons, are termed. 686. 1.

E.

Earth-quakes, two sorts of them. 175. 1.
Earth-quake at Antioch in Justinus's Reign, in what year it hapned. 479. 2.
Easter-Alms. 613. 2.
Ebionites, whence so called. 44. 1.
Ecclesiasticus, an Ecclesiastical person, in how many senses 'tis taken. 29. 2.
Edicts and Letters of the Emperours, written in paper. 142. 1.
Edict of the Præfecti Prætorio. 313. 1.
Edicts and Letters of the Emperours, wherein they differ. 180. 1.
Ἐκδεδημηκὼς βίῳ. 4. 1. 448. 2.
Ἔκδοχαὶ, what it signifies. 97. 2.
Ἐκ μαγγάνου, what it signifies. 113. 1.
Ἔκστασις, madness of mind. 82. 2.
Egypt heretofore reckoned amongst the Provinces of the East. 571. 2.
Ἐγκύκλια μαθήματα what. 92. 1. Philosophy and Rhetorick differ from them. ibid.
Elcesaïtæ, Hereticks. 108. 1, 2. so called from Elcesai or Elxæus. ibid.
Eleusinius Bishop of Sasima. 466. 1. a place in Theophanes about him, is mended. ibid.
Emperours of Constantinople were usually proclaimed in the seventh Miliarium, or Mile. 507. 2.
Emperours of Rome rescinded all that had been done by Tyrants. 661. 2.
Empire of Rome when first divided. 148. 2.
Ἐμποδὼν, what it signifies amongst the Antients. 406. 2.
Ἐνθρονιστικὰ, Letters of the Patriarchs at their instalment. 478. 2. also ἐνθρονιστικοὶ, Homilies. ibid.
Ἐγκαθεύδειν, to sleep in an Heathen-temple. 597. 2.
Encænia of the Jerusalem-Church, on what day celebrated. 621. 2.
Encyclic Letters. See Circular-Letters.
Ἔνδειξις and ἐντυχία, a supplicatory-Libel. 55. 1.
Ἕνωσις signifies Unition, not Unity. 501. 2, &c.
Ἑορτασιμὰ, Pascal Letters. 126. 2.
Ἐπαρχεύειν, what it signifies. 118. 2.
Ἐπαρχικοὶ, the Officials of the Prætorian Præfecture. 223. 2. 566. 2.
Ἐπάρχος and ἐπάρχειος, made use of instead of ἐπαρχεία. 30. 2.
Ephesine Bishop heretofore ordained by the Bishops of his own Province. 452. 1. the Patriarchical Jurisdiction taken from him in the Chalcedon-Council. ibid.
Ἐπιγινώσκειν, to salute. 56. 1. 573. 2.
Ἐπιδημίαι θεῶν, the advent or arrival of the Gods. 174. 2.
Ἐπιδίφιοι, Sedentary Mechanicks. 510. 1.
Epimenides, an Initiator. 297. 1.
Ἐπινέμησις τῆς κύκλου, an Indiction. 468. 1.
Ephesine Council in Basiliscus's Reign. 451. 1.
Epiphanius Bishop of Cyprus, when he dyed. 363. 1. 2. His character. ibid.
Epistolæ Communicatoriæ. See Communicatory-Letters.
Ἐπιστηρίζειν, and ἐπιστήριγμα, what they signifie. 4. 1.
Essenes. 23. 1.
Ἔθνη, the Provinces of the Romans. 539. 1.
Ἔπτικος, what it signifies. 511. 2.
Eruli are by the Grecians termed Ἕλληνες. 486. 2.
Ἐυδιος, what it signifies. 73. 1.
Evagrius a Presbyter of Antioch, was afterwards Bishop of Antioch. 353. 2.
Evagrius Præfect of Egypt. 339. 1, 2. a passage in Eunapius his Life of Ædesius, mended. ibid.
Eucharist, so the Consecrated bread was termed. 88. 2. it was sent to other Bishops under the name of Eulogiæ. ibid. it is given to a boy to carry to a sick man. 115. 1. it was sometimes given to penitents without reconciliation. ibid. it was put into the mouthes of the sick. 115. 2. what remained of it, was given to boys, to be eaten. 494. 2.
Εὐχὴν ποιεῖσθαι, vota facere, to pray, or desire earnestly. 535. 2.
Eudocia Augusta went twice to Jerusalem. 417. 1, 2. when she made her second journey thither. ibid.
Eudoxia the Empress, her silver Statue. 365. 1, 2.
Eugenius a Tyrant in Diocletian's time. 142. 2.

Eunomius when made Biſhop of Cyzicus. 307. 2. His Creed. 335. 2, &c.
Evocati, who they were. 39. 2.
Εὐπατρίδαι ſignifies noble perſons, not Patricians. 39. 1.
Euſebius wrote his Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory, after almoſt all his other works. 5. 1. His book concerning the Eaſter-Cycle. 617. 2. whether he made a ſpeech to the Emperour in the Nicene-Council. 379. 2.
Euſebius and Lucifer, whether they were Legates of the Apoſtolic See. 289. 2.
Euſebius and Theognius, when baniſhed, and when reſtored. 227. 2. when they preſented a Libel of Satisfaction to the Biſhops. 228. 1. They were not condemned in the Nicene Synod, but in ſome other Synod. ibid.
Euſtathius Biſhop of Antioch, when depoſed. 599. 2. when he dyed. 313. 2. His body when removed to Antioch. ibid.
Eutropia Mother-in-law to Conſtantine. 594. 2, &c.
Ἐφεκτικοὶ, Ephecticks. 270. 2.
Ἐξαργυρίζειν, Adærare, to Value by money. 326. 2.
Exarchs, who they were. 483. 1.
Exedra, what it is, and whence ſo called. 594. 1.
Ἐξισωταὶ, peræquatores. 607. 1, 2.
Exorciſts, their office. 158. 2.
Ἐξηγήσαι, Municipal Magiſtrates. 69. 1.
Expeditions, two of them were made againſt the Vandals in Leo Auguſtus's reign. 435. 2. a paſſage in Candidus Iſaurus, concerning that Expedition, mended. ibid.

E.

Faithfull heard the Word, ſtanding in the Church. 617. 2.
Faith onely by ſenſe. 65. 2.
Faſt before Eaſter, very ancient. 88. 1.
Faſt, three ſorts of it amongſt the Ancient Chriſtians. ibid. Faſt of fourty hours before Eaſter, why uſed. ibid. Faſt of the Great week, muſt be diſtinguiſhed from the Lent-Faſt. ibid.
Feaſts at the Sepulchres of the Martyrs. 647. 2.
Felix when ſent Procurator into Judæa. 25. 2.
Feriæ, why the days of the week are ſo termed. 157. 2.
Feriæ of the week, have their name from the following Sunday. 88. 1, 678. 2.
Firſt ſucceſſion of the Apoſtes, how far it reacht. 27. 1.
Flaccilla wife to the Emperour Theodoſius. 325. 2.
Flaccillus Biſhop of Antioch. 248. 1.
Flamen perpetuus. 191. 1.
Folles, two ſorts of them. 195. 1. their value. ibid.
Form, or Draught of the Nicene Creed, was ſubſcribed by all the Biſhops, but two. 217. 2.
Frumentius Biſhop of Auxumis, the ſame perſon with Frumentius Biſhop of the Indians. 232. 1, 2.
Φυλοκεύειν. 191. 1.

G.

Galen's authority, great amongſt the Ancients. 90. 2.
Galerius's Victory over the Perſians. 152. 1.
Gangra, the Synod there when held. 282. 2.
Genealogies of the Hebrews, were regiſtred in their publick Archives. 10. 1.
Γενητὸν and γεννητὸν, how much they differ in ſignification. 258. 2.
Gillo or Gello, a kind of Shee-Devil. 512. 2. the ſame with Empuſa. ibid.
Geöræ, or Geioræ, who they were. 10. 1.
Georgius of Laodicea was made a Presbyter by Alexander Biſhop of the Alexandrians. 603. 1.
Germinius when made Biſhop of Sirmium. 268. 1.
Glicerius the Emperour was not made Biſhop of Portue, but of Salonæ. 436. 1, 2.
Golden-Rod uſually carried before the Roman Emperours. 499. 1, 2.
Goſpel according to the Hebrews. 43. 1.
Goſpel of Baſilides. 52. 2.
Gregorius Biſhop of Alexandria, how many years he ſate Biſhop. 251. 1.
Gregorius Nazianzenus, his three Biſhopricks. 321. 2. 331. 1.
Gynæcea. 558. 1.

H.

Hadrian the Emperour built a Temple to Venus, on mount Calvary. 224. 1.
Hanniballianus. 667. 2.
Heathens, how they conſecrated the Images of their Gods. 173. 1.
Hegeſippus was Irenæus's Cotemporary. 53. 1.
Helena her death, what year it hapned. 593. 1.
Ἡλικία ſignifies that age which is fit for warfare. 168. 1.
Henoticon, or Zeno's Edict about uniting the Churhes, is termed οἰκονομία. 455. 1.
Herais a Catechumen. 94. 1.
Hereticks, whither they may lawfully be perſecuted. 370. 2.
Hermodactylus, what manner of plant it was. 525. 2. the root of it good for thoſe that are troubled with the Gout in the Joynts or fingers. ibid.
Hermogenes an Heretick. 65. 1. what his Hereſie was. ibid.
Herod the Great was no Forreigner but a Jew. 8. 1. after his death, his kingdom was divided into three parts. 12. 1.
Herod, called alſo Agrippa, who he was. 19. 2. what children he had. 20. 2.
Hexapla of Origen, whence ſo called. 99. 1. 99. 2.
Hierocles Præfect of Egypt, againſt whom Euſebius wrote. 161. 2.
Hierophantæ were never called by their own name, by thoſe whom they had initiated. 664. 1.
High-Prieſt, ſo every perſon was called, as long as he lived, who had once born that office. 12. 2. They wore a plate of Gold. 45. 2.
Hilarius and Athanaſius differ in opinion concerning the Draughts of the Creed, drawn up by the Eaſterns. 266. 1, 2.
Hippolytus Biſhop of Portue. 102. 2. His Paſchal-Canon is part of his book concerning Eaſter. 103. 1.
Ὁλόσχερροι ὑπομνηματισμοὶ. 104. 1.
Honoratus was the firſt Præfect of Conſtantinople. 281. 1.
Honorati, οἱ ἐπ' ἀξίας. 630. 2.
Hoſanna, what it ſignifies. 28. 1.
Hoſius ſubſcribed firſt to the Nicene Synod. 227. 1.
Hyacinthides virgins at Athens, who they were. 690. 1.
Ὕπαρχοι and ἔπαρχοι, the Prefecti Prætorio. 606. 2.
Hypatia the Philoſophereſs, probably was Theon's daughter. 376. 1. by whoſe means ſhe was murdered. 376. 2.
Hypatianus when made Biſhop of Heraclea. 266. 1.
Hypodiaconi, or Sub-deacons, kept the doors of the Church. 191. 1.
Hypomnematographer, an office born by Lucian at Alexandria. 122. 2.

I.

Jacobus the Monk, to whom the Emperour Leo wrote, whither Jacobus Niſibenus. 432. 1.
James the brother of our Lord, whether one of the twelve Apoſtles. 13. 2. whether the ſon of Joſeph. 16. 1. what is the meaning of his ſurname Oblias. 27. 2. in what year he ſuffered Martyrdom. 28. 2.
James ordained Biſhop of Jeruſalem by Chriſt. 126. 2.
Ἀστρονομικοὶ, who termed ſo amongſt the Greeks. 375. 2.
Iconium, the Synod there when convened. 119. 2.
Ἱερογραμματεῖς amongſt the Egyptians, who they were. 36. 1.
Jeruſalem-Biſhop's authority. 263. 1.
Jews, how their families came to be ſo confuſed. 9. 1. their Genealogies were not burnt by Herod. 10. 1. they had private copies of their Genealogies. ibid. they pray'd to God with their eyes turned towards the Temple. 33. 2. they were permitted to enter Jeruſalem but once in a year. 52. 1. their ſeaven Hereſies. 63. 2. Their Archiſynagogi, Presbyters, Deacons, Patriarchs. 121. 1 at their Feaſts the Gentiles were preſent alſo. 28. 1. Their diſperſion, and the reaſons of it. 30. 2, &c. a Jew in ſecret, or inwardly. 167. 1. How they divided the night and day. 35. 2.
Image of Chriſt at Edeſſa. 489. 1.
Indians converted to the faith of Chriſt by Frumentius, in Conſtantius's reign. 232. 1, 2.
Interregnum of three months after the death of Conſtantine the Great. 630. 2.
Johannes is ordained Biſhop of Alexandria at Conſtantinople, by Johannes Scholaſticus Patriarch of Conſtantinople. 503. 1.
Johannes Apamenus, Biſhop of Antioch after Petrus Fullo. 453. 2.
Johannes Codonatus Biſhop of Antioch. 457. 1.
Johannes Rhetor the Hiſtorian, not the ſame perſon with Johannes of Epiphania the Hiſtorian. 413. 2, &c.
Johannes Tabenneſiota, Biſhop of Alexandria, whence ſo called. 454. 2. He was Oeconomus of the Alexandrian Church. ibid. a place in Liberatus concerning him, is mended. ibid. He did not appeal to Pope Simplicius. 456. 2.
John the Baptiſt's Church in the City Alexandria, was the Great Church. 454. 2.
Joſephus's Hiſtory of the Jewiſh wars tranſcribed by Titus's own hand. 37. 2.
Joſephus's book concerning his own Life, is part of his twentieth book of Antiquities. 37. 2. His books of Hiſtory, otherwiſe divided than now they are. 11. 1.
Joſepus, ſo the Ancients called Joſephus. 12. 2.
Jovius Maximinus. 178. 1. his third Conſulate. 181. 2.
Irenæus, whether he brought the Letters of the Martyrs to Rome. 75. 2. In what year he was ordained Biſhop. 76. 2. His Synodick Letter. 87. 2.
Irenarch, or Eirenarch. 57. 2.
Irene, two Churches at Conſtantinople, called by that name; the one, the old; the other, the new. 247. 2.
Ἰουδιναμῶσα γραφὴ, a Copy. 584. 1.
Judas of Galile, or Gaulanites, when he made his inſurrection. 8. 1. He was Founder of the Sect of the Galilæans. 63. 2.
Judas whether the brother of our Lord. 39. 2.
Julian the Emperour, called Bull-burner. 297. 2.
Julianus, the Biſhop of Rome's ſubſtitute in the ſecond Epheſine Synod, was Biſhop of Coe, not of Puteoli. 409. 1.
Juſtice, its eye. 699. 1.
Juſtinian's Vandalic Expedition, on what year of Chriſt it was undertaken. 484. 2.
Juſtin the Martyr's firſt Apology, according to Euſebius, is that which is is commonly entitled his ſecond; and on the contrary, his ſecond, his firſt. 21. 2. 60. 1. 61. 1. Juſtin's ſecond Apology, commonly entitled his firſt, was dedicated to Antoninus pius. 61. 1 Juſtin was Martyred in the Reign of Pius. ibid.

Juſtinus Senior, is by ſome termed a Thracian, by others an Illyrian. 477. 1. Before he was Emperour, he was Comes of the Excubita or Guards. ibid.
Juſtinus Junior, how many years he reigned. 513. 1.
Juſtus Tiberienſis, and his books. 37. 2.

K.

Κανὼν the Matricula or Roll of the Church-officers. 342. 1.
Κατηλεύειν. 101. 1.
Καταμαξεύω. 99. 1.
Κατηχέω. 92. 2.
Κοιμητήρια, coemiteries. 122. 2.
Κοινωνῆσαι, What it ſignifies. 59. 2.

L.

Lacunaria. 588. 1.
Laicks, when about to receive the Sacrament, heretofore came up to the Altar. 120. 2. before Biſhops and Monks that were eminent for piety of Life, the Laicks were wont to bow their heads, that they might receive a bleſſing. 493. 2.
Lampadarii, or Light-bearers. 665. 1.
Λαμπάδες, Torches. 613. 2.
Lateare Sacrum at Rome. 690. 1.
Laura what it is, and wherein it differs from a Monaſtery. 417. 2.
Laws of the Emperours Conſtantine and Theodoſius, concerning burning the books of Hereticks. 450. 1.
Legates of Cæſar, ſome were Conſulares, others Prætorii. 46. 1.
Legate or Deputy of the Province of Lyons. 69. 1, 2.
Legion termed The Lightning Legion. 76. 1.
Legions amongſt the Romans had their Chappel, or Oratory, and their Presbyters. 625. 2.
Leo's Letter by Dioſcorus forbid to be read in the Council of Epheſus. 438. 1.
Leus's daughters at Athens. 690. 1.
Libellatici, who they were. 120. 1.
Licinius made the Cities of the Roman Empire to flouriſh. 196. 2.
Light after darkneſs, in the Myſteries of the Pagans. 609. 2.
Litarba a Village in Chalcis. 520. 1. It's name being faulty in Theophanes's Chronicon, is mended. ibid.
Linyphia. 558. 1.
Loaves of benediction. 374. 2.
Λογισεύειν, to bear the office of a Curator. 146. 1.
Λογοθέτης, ſo the Præfectus Prætorio was termed. 475. 1, 2.
Λόγῳ περσφοεικός. 255. 2.
Long-wall, termed the Anaſtaſian-wall, from its Builder. 470. 2.
Longinus a Philoſopher, taught at Athens. 101. 1.
Lotis, or λωτὸς of the Athletæ or Champions. 72. 1.
Lucianus a Martyr ſuffered under Maximinus. 174. 1.
Ludi Lugdunenſes, or Sports at Lyons. 73. 2.
Lunar Month, was thirty days. 674. 1.
Luſius Quietus Deputy of Paleſtine. 51. 1.
Λυχνικὸν. 347. 2.
Lyſanias the Tetrarch was not one of Herod's ſons, nor his ſucceſſour. 12. 1.

M.

Macarius Biſhop of Jeruſalem, when ordained, and when ejected. 495. 1. in what year he was reſtored to his See. 495. 2.
Macedonius's Preſidency over the Conſtantinopolitane Church, whence to be begun. 252. 1.
Macedonians, their Embaſſie to Pope Liberius, in what year ſent. 310. 2.
Macedonius Biſhop of Conſtantinople, when firſt made Biſhop, ſubſcribed to Zeno's Uniting Edict, or Henoticon. 466. 2.
Magi amongſt the Egyptians. 121. 1.
Magiſtrate of the City Jeruſalem, was termed στρατηγὸς. 36. 1.
Magiſtrates and Governours of Provinces can't be preferred to a Biſhoprick, without conſent of the Emperour. 394. 2.
Mancipes, ſo the Bakers were called; and Mancipatus was the office of Bakers. 340. 2.
Mandates or Commands of Princes, ἐντολαὶ. 178. 2.
Mandra, a Monaſtery; and Ἀρχιμανδείτης, an Abbot of a Monaſtery. 412. 1.
Manichæans, who was the firſt broacher of their Hereſie. 135. 2. their Faſts. 234. 1.
Marcion at firſt a Mariner. 79. 2.
Marcotick Region was ſubject to the Biſhop of Alexandria. 238. 1. How many Presbyters and Deacons it had. ibid.
Mark the Evangeliſt, what year he went into Egypt. 22. 2.
Mark the Interpreter of Saint Peter. 49. 2.
Martyrs will be Chriſt's Aſſeſſours when he comes to judgment. 112. 1.
Martyrs were beheaded in The Campus. 658. 2.
Martyrs, four ſorts of them amongſt the Greeks. 107. 1.
Martyrdom, what is ſo termed according to the command of the Goſpel. 60. 1.
Μαρτύριον, the Sepulchre of a Martyr. 680. 1.
Μαρτύριον, the Church of Saint Euphemia the Martyr. 446. 1. The Oratory of a Martyrium, what it was. 446. 1, 2.
Martyrium, ſo the Jeruſalem Church was called. 622. 2.
Masbothei, and Masbotheani. 63. 2.
Μάθημα, ſo the Greeks call The Creed. 218. 2.
Matthew, where and in what year he wrote his Goſpel. 42. 1.
Mauſoleum or Tomb of Helena Queen of the Adiabeni near Jeruſalem. 21. 1.
Maximus, two of that name who were Presbyters of the Roman Church. 113. 1. 114. 2.
Maximus the Cynick is ordained Biſhop of Conſtantinople. 332. 2.
Maximus, two Philoſophers of that name. 286. 1.
Maximus the Tyraut, what Country-man he was. 336. 2.
Μεγαλόπολις Rome. 658. 1.
Melchi put inſtead of Matthat, in Our Saviour's Genealogy. 9. 2.
Meletius Biſhop of Pontus. 138. 2. Surnamed Meletius the Great. ibid.
Melitians after the Nicene Synod joyned with the Arians. 213. 2.
Melitius why kindly uſed by the Nicene Synod. 219. 2. He was no Hæreſiarch. 220. 2.
Μένειν inſtead of ἀναμένειν. 645. 1.
Μεσαύλιον, area, a Court. 590. 2.
Μεσοπεντηκοστὴ, the twenty fifth day from Eaſter. 629. 2.
Μέσῳ τρίπῳ. 578. 2.
Μεταβολεῖς, Dardanarii, petty-merchants. 297. 2.
Μέτωλον or μέσαυλον, what it ſignifies, and in what ſenſes 'tis uſed. 478. 1.
Methodius's book concerning the Reſurrection, againſt Origen. 104. 1. why Euſebius has not mentioned Methodius. ibid.
Metrodorus the Philoſopher. 231. 1.
Metropolitans, their ordination does properly belong to the Patriarchs. 389. 2.
Milice is a ſort of ſervitude. 517. 2. 555. 1.
Militia Palatina. 246. 1.
Millain-Synod, how many Biſhops were at it. 271. 2. the matters tranſacted there. 256. 2. in what year of Chriſt it was held. ibid.
Mitella, or Little Mitre worn by Chriſtian Virgins. 165. 2.
Μοναρχία aſſigned to God the Father, οἰκονομία to the Son and Holy Ghoſt. 683. 2.
Μονομαχία and Θηριομαχία. 73. 2.
Montanus's Faſts. 83. 1. His Hereſie called The new Prophecy. 84. 1.
Montanus and Sabellius, why frequently joyned together. 235. 1, 2.
Moyſes, the Presbyter dyed before Cornelius's Ordination. 115. 1.
Myſia, two of them. 81. 1.
Μυσταγωγία. 482. 2.

N.

Ναὸς or νεὼν is taken for the whole ſacred houſe. 591. 2, &c.
Ναύκληρος, what it ſignifies. 431. 2.
Ναύκληρος, a Biſhop. 636. 2.
Νέα or καινὴ κυριακὴ, the firſt Sunday after Eaſter. 403. 2. the Greeks call it by that name ſtill. 404. 1.
Neapolis a City of Paleſtine. 55. 1.
Nectarius, whether he aboliſhed confeſſion or pennance. 342. 2, &c.
Νέκυες κοπρίων ἐκβλητότεροι, the dead more contemptible than dung. 697. 2.
Neophytes were cloathed in white garments. 629. 1. they put them off, on the eighth day. ibid.
Nepos, how many years he reigned. 436. 1.
Nicene Synod was convened in the palace. 579. 1. How many Biſhops met at that Synod. 578. 2. 216. 1. 227. 1. no Acts were made of this Synod. 581. 1. on what month and day it was held. 581. 1, 2.
Nicocles the Grammarian. 285. 2.
Nicolaites, what their Hereſie was. 44. 2.
Nile, the prieſts thereof were Androgyni. 614. 1, 2.
Nicomas inſtead of Nicomachus. 132. 2.
Νοερὰ καὶ λογικὴ θυσία, the Chriſtian ſacrifice. 697. 1.
Νοερὸν and νοητὸν, wherein they differ. 190. 2.
Nomades, who the Greeks call ſo. 674. 2.
Notaries of the Church, or of Biſhops. 347. 1. what their office was. ibid.
Novatianiſts did not uſe the Chriſme in Baptiſm. 114. 1. they rebaptized the Catholicks that embraced their Hereſie. 120. 1.
Novatus and Novatianus are confounded by the Greeks. 115. 2.
Novatianus's Martyrdom, and the Acts of his paſſion are forged. 323. 2.
Novatianus was a Native of Phrygia. ibid.
Novum Sæculum, or a new age. 576. 1, 2.
Nubæ, they were called Nomades alſo. 407. 1, 2.
Numenius the Philoſopher, 101. 1.
Νῦν, that is Lately. 53. 2. 553. 2.
Nymphæum, the Temple of the Nymphs. 434. 1.

O.

Obodas, a God amongſt the Arabians. 689. 1.
Ocbas and Acbas an Impregnable Fort near the River Nymphius. 522. 1.

Octachora Templa, eight-ſided-Churches. 594. 1.
Octaves of Infants and Neophytes how religiouſly obſerved. 629. 1.
Οἰκεῖοι Domeſtick protectors. 299. 2.
Οἰκονομία is not uſed in reference to the Incarnation onely, but concerning all things which Chriſt did on earth, in order to mans ſalvation. 1. 2. 189. 2. 542. 1. 694. 1. the diſputation concerning Chriſt is divided into the οἰκονομία and θεολογία 2. 1. οἰκονομία, or the adminiſtration, is properly attributed to the Son. 683. 2. 685. 1.
Olympiad, whence ſo called. 19. 2. how many years it conſiſted of. ibid.
Old Teſtament, three ranks or degrees of the books thereof amongſt the Jews. 37. 1. How many in number the books thereof were. ibid. and 104. 1.
Ὁμογέροντες and ἀρχιγέροντες of Alexandria. 127. 2.
Ὀπισθόδομος, a place where the publick treaſure was laid. 83. 1, 2.
Ὄπλον, a dart. 43. 2.
Optar King of the Hunni. 385. 2. His brother Roas. 392. 2.
Oraria or handkerchiefs were wont to be ſhaken by Auditors. 134. 1.
Order of the Seſſion of Biſhops in Councils. 86. 2.
Ὀρθομία, and Ὀρθομεῖν. 51. 1.
Origen is ordained by two Biſhops. 95. 1. went onely once to Rome. 98. 2. diſtinguiſhed the books of the Old Teſtament into Cola, verſes, or ſuch parts of the Text as contained an entire ſenſe. 99. 2. After his Edition of the Hexapla, he made the Tetrapla. ibid. is a different perſon from the other Origen Plotinus's School-fellow. 100. 2, &c. is condemned by Demetrius and depoſed. 103. 2. Demetrius's ſentence was ineffectual. ibid. Origen, before his condemnation, removed from the City Alexandria. 105. 1, 2. His threefold work upon the ſacred Scripture. 108. 1, 2. what year he dyed. 117. 1. He was not condemned in the fifth Synod at Conſtantinople, but long before. 497. 1.
Origen, that name is written with an Aſperate by the Greeks. 92. 1.
Oſanna, what it ſignifies. 28. 1.
Oſtracine, a place or village near Antioch, whence ſo called. 434. 1.
Οὐσία Θεοῦ ſometimes ſignifies the perſon of the Father. 3. 1.

P.

Πάχης, what it ſignifies. 481. 1.
Παλαιὰ, a Church at Antioch, in the old City. 290. 1.
Παλιγκάπηλος, one that buyes proviſions, and ſells them again. 418. 2.
Pallium, the Habit of the Philoſophers. 101. 2.
Pall for a Biſhop, woven with threads of Gold. 622. 1.
Παραβιβλος. 410. 2.
Paphnutius, as Rufinus ſays, was preſent at the Nicene Council. 225. 2.
Παραβόλοι who they were. 380. 2. not the ſame perſons with the confectores. ibid. and 59. 1. 159. 1.
Παραβυσος. 171. 1.
Παραγγέλλειν what it ſignifies. 420. 2. it imports alſo to liſt for a Souldier. ibid.
Παραγγελία, the Muſter-Roll. ibid.
Paradice upon Earth, were it was. 639. 1.
Paradoxi, Champions that had gained many Victories. 143. 1.
Παράσημον, adulterate, or counterfeit. 283. 2.
Παρασυνάξεις aſſemblies of Schiſmaticks. 324. 1.
Paredri, Dæmons ſo called, what they were. 688. 2.
Παρεκδίδος what it ſignifies. 178. 1.
Παρεκτῆναι and παρέκτασις, what they ſignifie. 81. 2.
Parembole, a Village in Egypt. 318. 2.
Παρενδυμεῖδις, what it ſignifies. 180. 1, 2.
Πάρεργον θανάτου. 540. 1. πάρεργον παρουσίας. 568. 1. 659. 1, 2.
Πάρεδρον and περίσσον πυιεῖδις. 616. 1. 625. 1.
Παροικία ſignifies a Church. 1. 1. the reaſon of that name. ibid. ſometimes 'tis taken for a whole Dioceſſe, ſometimes for a particular Church. ibid.
Πάρεχοι ἵππων. 516. 2. 522. 1.
Parricides, how puniſhed. 161. 2.
Particular aſſemblies which were held in diverſe Churches at Alexandria. 123. 2.
Παστὰς, or παστὸς, a wedding-chamber. 316. 2.
Πάτεια what it ſignifies. 37. 1.
Patriarchs, when firſt conſtituted in the Church. 332. 2. &c. 334. 1.
A Patriarch being accuſed by a Laick, appeals to the Emperour and a Synod. 518. 1. He is judged in an auditory made up of Laicks and Eccleſiaſticks. ibid.
Patripaſſians, or Patropaſſians, Hereticks. 255. 2, &c.
Paul the Apoſtle went not to Jeruſalem in Tiberius's reign. 17. 2.
Paulinus Biſhop of Tyre is tranſlated to the Biſhoprick of Antioch. 183. 1. 2.
Paulus Biſhop of Alexandria, was a Heretick. 487. 2. Liberatus makes him a Catholick. ibid.
Peace was not given to the lapſed, without the people's conſent. 115. 1.
Πεῖσμα what it ſignifies. 694. 2.
Penitentiary-Presbyter, why and when inſtituted. 341. 2.
Pentecoſt, and the ſpace of fifty days from Eaſter to Pentecoſt. 629. 2.
Perigenes the Biſhop of Corinth, his Election is confirmed by the Biſhop of Rome. 388. 2.
Περιέσταδις, what it ſignifies 313. 1.
Περισταλαὶ, 124. 1. 128. 2.
Περισταὶ, Hills or heaps of ſtone. 590. 1.
Penitentiary-Presbyter, his office. 341. 2. when abrogated. 342. 2.
Peter the Apoſtle, his ſecond Epiſtle moſt undoubtedly his. 31. 1. He and Saint Paul did not ſuffer Martyrdom on the ſame year. 30. 1. He was not ſuperior to the other Apoſtles. 441. 2.
Petrus Fullo died before Petrus Mongus. 442. 1, 2.
Φαντασία, ſo the opinion of Eutyches was termed. 451. 2.
Phileas, whether he ſuffered at Alexandria, or in Thebais. 144. 2.
Philip the Deacon was by the Ancients confounded with Philip the Apoſtle. 45. 2. the names of Philip's daughters. ibid.
Philippus the Præfectus Prætorio, when he dyed. 252. 1.
Philo's book againſt Flaccus, and that entitled concerning the Embaſſy to Caius. 18. 1. His book againſt Flaccus, Euſebius terms His ſecond book concerning Virtues. 18. 2.
Philoromus Rationaliſt of Egypt. 144. 2.
Philoſophers borrowed their beſt Precepts from Moſes's Law. 4. 2.
Phœnice, two of them, the one termed Maritima, the other Libanenſis. 468. 1. They were ſubject to the Patriarch of Antioch. 468. 2. The Dux of Phœnice. 469. 2. 470. 1.
Phoſphorion, and Boſporium, the Port at Conſtantinople. 435. 1.
Pilate killed himſelf. 19. 1. His character. ibid.
Piſander the Poet, two of that name, the former a Rhodian; the latter a Native of Larinda, who wrote ſix books concerning the Marriages of the Goddeſſes and Heroes. 416. 2.
Placidia Auguſta gave the Weſtern Illyricum to Theodoſius Junior. 393. 1.
Πλακώσεις, cruſts of marble. 589. 1.
Plague in the Groyn which raged fifty years, when it began. 490. 1.
Platonick Philoſophy, a School thereof at Alexandria. 376. 1, 2.
Πλεονεξία, what it ſignifies. 152. 2.
Πολιτεία, abſtinence. 79. 2.
Πολιτεία, what it was amongſt the Alexandrians. 375. 1.
Πολιτῆαι, Decurions, 576. 1.
Polycarp, whether he came to Rome on account of the controverſie concerning Eaſter. 88. 2. In what year he came to Rome. ibid. The day of his Martyrdom. 60. 1.
Porphyrius, why called Malchus, and Bataneotes. 100. when he lived. ibid.
Potamius Biſhop of Lysbone was baniſhed together with Hoſius. 268. 1.
Power, or ἐξουσία, is not uſed but concerning the Greater Judges. 536. 1.
Præfects of the Prætorium, and the other Judges, prefixed the Emperours Letters before their own Edicts. 179. 1.
Præfects of the Prætorium had the title of Clariſſimi in Conſtantine's time. 587. 2. 606. 2.
Præfecture of the Prætorium, was the higheſt of all dignities. 471. 1. it had two Cheſts. 475. 1. alſo Numerarii of Gold. 471. 1.
Prænetum the name of a Town, variouſly written. 364. 2.
Præpoſiti Laborum, or rather Laboru, that is, τῶ λαβάρου, of the Laborum. 554. 2.
Πρεσβεύειν, what it ſignifies. 41. 2.
Presbyters performed the publick prayers together with the Biſhop. 410. 2.
Presbyters were not ordained without the conſent of the Clergy and people. 114. 1.
Presbyters were termed Prieſts of the ſecond Order. 191. 2. 194. 2, &c.
Presbyter, whom Conſtantia at her death recommended to Conſtantine, who he was. 236. 2. 243. 2.
Præſens Numen, preſent deity, ἐπιφανὴς, 18. 2.
Præſentes or Præſentales Milites, preſent Milice; who they were. 477. 2. The Greeks call it τὸ παρεσίσιον. ibid.
Priſcus Rhetor the Hiſtorian, was a Thracian, born at Panium a Town in Thracia. 436. 1. a paſſage in Theophanes is mended. ibid.
Προάγειν, to inſtruct, to cultivate. 623. 2.
Προάστειον, a Village at ſome diſtance from a City. 123. 2.
Proclus, Chief of the Sect of the Cataphrygians. 29. 2.
Proconſul of Thracia. 281. 1.
Procopius, two Martyrs of that name. 157. 1.
Procurators of the familia Gladiatoria, or company of the Gladiatours. 163. 2.
Πρόλογος, προθεωρία. 663.
προχειρίσαδις, to propoſe the name of a perſon to be ordained. 220. 1. 603. 1.
Prophetæ, ſo the High-prieſts amongſt the Egyptians were termed. 53. 1.
Prophets that are true, how to be diſtinguiſhed from the falſe one. 82. 2.
Πρὸς ἄμιλλαν ζῆν, to live according to example. 647. 1.
Προσευχαὶ, Proſeuchæ of the Jews. 18. 2.
Προσομιλεῖν πόνοις, to take pains. 405. 1. ὁμιλεῖν τυχαῖς, to bear the changes of fortune. ibid.
Προσοχὴ, diligence, attention. 457. 2.
Προσφωνήσεδις, what it imports. 41. 1.
Προσδόπω, Let it be publiſhed, it was a word which the Emperours added to their Laws. 604. 1. προσπάσσειν, to publiſh an Edict. 516. 2.
Πρωτοπρεσβύτερος, the chief or firſt of the Presbyters. 359. 2.

Πρωτόπαπᾶς, a Provoſt, or Chief. 287. 1.
Pſalms or Hymns, when firſt in uſe in the Church. 23. 2. 90. 2.
Pſalms called ἰδιωτικοὶ, 129. 2.

Q.

Quadratus Proconſul of Aſia, under whom Polycarp ſuffered Martyrdom, in what year he bore the proconſulate. 57. 2, &c.
Quadratus Biſhop of Athens, a different perſon from Quadratus the diſciple of the Apoſtles. 64. 1.
Quaternions, and Ternions. 618. 2.
Quirinius, or Cyrenius, when preſident of Syria. 8. 1.
Quirus inſtead of Cyrus, and Quinegius for Cynegius. 466. 1.

R.

Recuſatory-Libels, wherein Patriarchs requeſted of the Emperour, that they might have leave to relinquiſh their Biſhopricks. 479. 1.
Regius Morbus, to ſignifie the Leproſie. 95. 2.
Religion of the Chriſtians defined. 658. 1.
Rhetoricians were initiated by a certain rite. 374. 2. the Rhetorician's Pallium. ibid. and 389. 2.
Rhoſſus or Rhoſſe a City of Cilicia. 97. 1.
Roman-Church, their Liberality and Bounty towards the poor. 118. 2.
Romans, when they left off burning their dead. 176. 2.
Ruſinus's Letter to Urſacius. 108. 1.

S.

Sabaiarius, a Nick-name given to Valens by the Citizens of Chalcedon. 308. 1.
Sabbatum magnum, or the Great Sabbath, what it is. 57. 2.
Sabbath not kept as a faſting-day amongſt the Romans, in Lent. 346. 1. nor in the Ember-weeks. 348. 1.
Sabellians, Hereticks, 119. 1.
Sacerdotes Provinciæ, the Chief-prieſts of a Province. 150. 1. 173. 1.
Sacred Scripture, a threefold difference of the books thereof. 43. 1.
Sacrifices of the Heathens were not totally aboliſhed by Conſtantine. 613. 2.
Schiſmaticks returning to the Church, were more kindly received than Hereticks. 604. 2.
Scholaſtici, Advocates. 357. 1.
Scholia, what meant by that word. 62. 1.
Σχολιογεγφεῖν, what it means. 105. 1.
Scribes amongſt the Jews, were the Keepers and Expounders of the Law. 35. 2, &c.
Scythæ, ſo the Greeks call them, whom the Latines term Goths. 578. 1. 607. 2.
Secretum, what it was. 134. 1.
Secular Judges who were preſent at a Council, when criminal matters were under debate, pronounced ſentence; but in a matter of faith, they concerned not themſelves. 424. 1. 439. 2.
Σείειν, to calumniate, or extort. 133. 2.
Σηκὸς, a Chappell wherein was the Tomb of a Martyr. 422. 2.
Seleucia was called Nicator, not Nicanor. 505. 2.
Σημεῖα Excepta, excerptions. 440. 1.
Σημειώσεις what it ſignifies. 84. 2.
Σημειώσεις of Origen, ought in Latine to be termed Excepta, not excerpta. 440. 1.
Senate, for an houſe or court. 366. 2.
Septuagint Tranſlation when made. 78. 1. whether they tranſlated all the books of Scripture. ibid. and whether in ſeparate cells. ibid.
Serapis in what manner worſhipped by the Egyptian Prieſts. 340. 1, 2. why he was called ἐπιτεθνημένος. ibid. His Temple when demoliſhed. ibid.
Serdican-Council, how many Biſhops preſent at it. 257. 1.
Severianus, a paſſage in him mended. 407. 2.
Severus Auguſtus was called alſo Serpentius or Serpentinus. 429. 1.
Shewes amongſt the Romans, were ordinary and extraordinary. 72. 1.
Sibylls, whether they foretold things by divine inſpiration. 652. 2, &c.
Signes of the Zodiack were by the Greeks called στοιχεῖα. 45. 1.
Silentiarii, who they were. 432. 1.
Simon Magus's death, when it hapned. 22. 1.
Sirmium, three Synods there, and their three Draughts of the Creed, 266. 2.
Sirmium-Synods in what years convened. ibid. and 269. 1.
Sitting, the uſual poſture of mourners amongſt the Jews. 20. 2.
Socrates ſeems to have been a Novatianiſt. 367. 2. whether he was a Novatianiſt. 277. 1.
Son of God, was by antient Divines termed ἀπατὸς, 645. 2. He is termed The Middle, between the Father and things created. 683. 2.
Σοφία παράστατος, ſo Solomon's Book of Proverbs was called. 64. 1.
Σφραγίζειν, to lay hands on, or ordain. 114. 1.
Σπήλαι, or Sepulchral Monuments. 21. 1. 28. 2.
Stephen the Deacon, on what year he ſuffered Martyrdom. 15. 2.
Stephen the Pope, whether he excommunicated thoſe of Africa, and of the Eaſt. 118. 2.
Stephanus Junior Biſhop of Antioch, is ordained at Conſtantinople by Acacius. 457. 1.
Strategium, what it is. 229. 2.
Στρατηγοὶ, Magiſtrates, or Duumviri. 124. 1. 146. 1.
Στρατῶται, Officials, Apparitours. 196. 2.
Στρωματεῖς, 97. 2.
Sub-introduced women, who they were. 134. 2.
Succi, ſtreights, or narrow paſſes ſo called. 259. 2.
Symeon the ſon of Cleophas, how a kin to our Saviour. 38. 1.
Symmachians, Hereticks. 100. 1.
Symplegades. 577. 1.
Συμφωνῶ, I make a bargain. 402. 2. σύμφωνον, a bargain. ibid.
Συνάγειν, and συναγωγὴ. 604. 2.
Synaxis, in how many ſenſes it is uſed. 346. 2.
Sunday termed the firſt day, and the eighth. 678. 2. why this day was ſet apart for the meeting of the faithfull. 679. 1.
Syncelli, Officers which the Patriarchs had. 402. 2, &c. The Syncelli were as well of the order of Presbyters, as Deacons. ibid. Not onely Patriarchs, but other Biſhops alſo had their Syncelli. ibid.
Syneſius was not Biſhop of Cyrenæ, but of Ptolemais. 413. 2. what his belief was concerning the Reſurrection. ibid.
Synnada, a City of Phrygia. 102. 1. Synnadenſes, the Citizens of that City, two of their Coyns explained. 370. 2. They worſhipped Jupiter under the name of Pandemos. ibid.
Synod of Antioch againſt Paul of Samoſata, in what year held. 133. 1.
Σύνοδος, to ſignifie an aſſemblie of the faithfull. 572. 2.
Σύνοδος μερικὴ, a particular Synod, is oppoſed to a general one. 408. 1. σύνοδος ἐνδημοῦσα, a Synod of Biſhops that made their reſidence for ſome time onely at the Imperial City. ibid.
Σύνοψις, a modell or delineation of a future work. 588. 1.
Συντάξεώς, taking leave of, or bidding farwell. 538. 1. 584. 1. συντακτικὸς λόγος. ibid. συντακτικὸν λόγος. ibid. and 498. 2.
Συντελεῖς, Tributaries. 474. 2. 504. 2, &c.
Σύνδημα κοινωνίας a ſign of Communion. 573. 1.
Σύνδυος, what it ſignifies. 511. 2.
Superpoſition, a ſort of Faſt. 88. 1. in Greek termed ὑπέρθεσις. ibid.

T.

Tabularii, who they were. 165. 1.
Τάγματα, companies of Souldiers. 623. 2, &c.
Tatianus was not a Profeſſour of Rhetorick. 60. 2. 67. 1. Tatianus's Goſpel διὰ τεσσάρων not the ſame with that termed The Goſpel according to the Hebrews. 67. 2.
Taurobolia, and Criobolia. 303. 1, 2.
Τάξεις, Offices, and τάξις, Office, Body of Apparitours. 548. 2. 566. 2. 281. 1. μεγάλη τάξις. 566. 2.
Taxing, ἀπογραφὴ, what it was; 7. 2. whether one or two Taxings. ibid.
Τελείωσις, Martyrdom. 125. 2.
Τελείωσις Baptiſm. 628. 2.
Terebinthus, or Turpentine-tree, a place in Paleſtine. 595. 1, 2. That Turpentine-tree worſhipped by the Pagans. ibid. At that place there was a Mart or Market yearly. ibid.
Teſtaments of Souldiers in Expedition. 615. 1.
Tetrapla were made by Origen after his Edition of the Hexapla. 99. 2.
Thaddæus the Apoſtle, in what year he came to Edeſſa. 15. 2.
Thecla, inſtead of Theoclia. 453. 1. She was termed the Proto-Martyr. ibid.
Θεῖος λόγος, in what ſenſe uſed by Euſebius. 91. 1.
Theodorus Aſcidas. 497. 1.
Theodoſius, when he publiſhed his Verſion. 77. 2.
Theodotus Biſhop of Laodicea was an Arian. 602. 2.
Theodulus the Presbyter, when he wrote. 403. 1.
Theologia, anciently termed Theologicen. 2. 1.
Θεωρία, the Miſtick ſenſe. 354. 1.
Θεοφόρος, the ſur-name of Saint Ignatius. 358. 2. 414. 1. His reliques were removed to Antioch long before Theodoſius Junior's time. ibid.
Therapeutæ were not Eſſens. 23. 1. nor Chriſtians. 23. 2.
Theſſalonica, whether it was under the government of Theodoſius Senior. 337. 1. the Biſhops of Theſſalonica were Legates of the Roman See. 391. 2.
Thmuis, a City of Auguſtanica. 319. 1.
Tholus, what it is. 422. 1.
Θολοβάθροι. 113. 2.
Tiberius Conſtantinus, how long he reigned. 513. 1.
Time twofold, the one Perticular, the other general. 671. 2.
Timotheus Salofaciolus, called alſo Albus. 433. 1.
Tractates, ſo Homilies or Sermons to the people are termed. 108. 1.
Trajanus the Patricius, an Hiſtorian, when he lived. 506. 2.
Trapezitæ, who they were. 119. 2.
Tribunal of the nineteen Accubita. 507. 1. a place in Theophylactus Simocatta concerning that Edifice, is explained. ibid.
Tricennalia is taken for the Feſtival, and for the thirtieth year. 622. 1. 667. 2.
Tripolis, a City of Phœnice Maritima, wherein was the Sepulchre of the Martyr Leontius. 468. 1. 494. 1.
Triſagium, an Hymn in the Church. 476. 1, 2.

Τειτιανὸς. 177. 1.
Trocundus brother to Hillus. 449. 1. His name is corrupted in Theophanes's Chronicon. ibid.
Troilus the Sophista. 370. 1.
Τυχαῖον, or τυχεῖον, the Temple of the publick Genius. 169. 1. 414. 1.
Τύχη, the publick Genius. 294. 2.

V.

Vacant Bishops. 307. 2.
Valentinianus Placidus, where, and when proclaimed Augustus. 383. 2.
Valentinian Junior was the son of Valens Augustus. 309. 2. He was also called Galates. ibid. In what year he dyed. 322. 1.
Valerian, when he began to reign. 121. 1.
Vettius, a Roman name. 69. 2.
Vicarii or Deputies of the Præfects had the title of Perfectissimi in Constantine's time. 195. 1.
Victor the Pope, whether he excommunicated the Asians, or onely threatned it. 87. 2.
Victor Thunonensis, an eminent passage in him is mended. 402. 2, &c.
Victor was taken by Constantine as His Prænomen, or fore-name. 557. 2. And after his death by his sons. 632. 1.
Vigilius the Pope gave his consent to the Synod of Constantinople, but refused to be present at it. 496. 1.
Vigil of Easter, thereon the Christians kindled Lights, as well publickly, as in private. 613. 1.
Vindices made by Anastasius. 475. 1.
Vine, the Badge of the Centurion's Office. 125. 1.
Virtues are either πολιτικαὶ, or θεολογικαὶ. 646. 1.
Ὕλη, in what sense used by Divines. 93. 1.
Unio for Unition, is a barbarous, not a Latine word. 502. 2. Unio in Latine signifies unitatem, unity. ibid.
Ὑπασπιστὴς, Spatharius, Esquire of the Emperour's Body. 421. 2.
Ὑπασπίσια, what it signifies. 266. 1.
Ὑπερθέσιμοι νηστεῖαι, Fasts of superposition. 417. 2. 418. 1.
Ὑποδολεῖς, who they were. 347. 1.

W.

WEek before Easter, termed by the Greek fathers The Great Week. 24. 1. It began from the second Feria, or Monday. 88. 1. 678. 2, &c.
Widows, or Deaconnesses, their Examination. 698. 2.

X.

Xanthicus, the name of a moneth amongst those of Smyrna, when it began. 60. 1.
Ξενὼν, a Dialogue of Methodius the Bishop. 362. 2.
Ξύλον, a pair of Stocks. 60. 2. 71. 1. sometimes 'tis used to signifie The Eculeus. 108. 2. 145. 1.
Xystus, how long Bishop of Rome. 132. 2.

Y.

YEars of the Edessens, whence they began. 15. 2.
Year of Christ, the first, according to Eusebius. 139. 2.

Z.

ZEla, a City of Cappadocia. 303. 2.
Zeno, whether Bishop of Majuma. 354. 1, 2.
Zozimus the Historian, did not live in the Times of Theodosius Junior. 472. 2, &c.

Καὶ σοι τῷ δόξαν ἀναπέμπομεν τῷ Πατρὶ, καὶ τῷ Υἱῷ, καὶ τῷ ἁγίῳ Πνεύματι, νῦν καὶ ἀεὶ, καὶ εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων, Ἀμήν.

THE END.

Books Printed for, and Sould by Hannah Sawbridge at the Bible on Ludgate Hill.

Folio.

THE Lives of the Noble Græcians and Romans, by that Learned Historiographer, Plutarch, Translated from the Original: with the Addition of the Lives of many Eminent Persons and their Effigies Engraven in Copper Plates.

A Chronicle of the Kings of England containing all the passages of State and Church, by the famous Sir Richard Baker, Knight, with a continuation of all material Affairs of State to this time.

Astronomia Britannica Authore Vincentio Wing, In qua hi Quinque Tractatus traduntur.

I. Logistica Astronomica.
II. Trigonometria.
III. Doctrina Sphærica.
IV. Theoria Planetarum.
V. Tabulæ Novæ Astronomicæ.

Riverus Practice of Physick in 17 severall Books Translated into English by Nicholas Culpeper, Phys. and Astr. Abadiah Cole, Doct. Phys. and William Rowland, Physician.

Riolanus, Bartholinus, Vesslingus, } Anatomy.

All three Translated by Nicholas Culpeper, Gent. Student in Physick and Astrology.

The Compleat Surveyor, containing the whole Art of Surveying Land, by William Leybourne.

Cambridge Concordance, with Additions being the compleatest extant, by S. N.

Folio.

A Large Bible, Cambridge print, fit for Churches.

Doctor Holiokes Large Dictionary, being the best and largest in Print.

Gallileus's Mathematical System of the World, with Cuts, Englished by T. Salsbury Esq; Learned Cooks Comment on Litletons Tenures.

Maynards, Edward the 2d.

Doctor Cowels, Interpreter with T. Manlys Additions Corrected from former Errors: Now in the Press.

Morgans, Heraldry Epitomized: a large sheet.

Dyers Reports with 2 Tables.

Townsends Tables C. L.

Physick Refined being the Works of that famous and profound Philosopher and Chymical Physician John Baptista Van Helmot.

The Year Books Compleat.

J. Rolls Abridgement.

Rastalls Entries.

Cooks Reports, French.

——— Entries.

Doctor Heylins Life of Bishop Laud.

Quarto.

GOuldman's Dictionary.

Thesaurus Græcæ Linguæ, &c. } by W. Robertson. A. M.
Thesaurus Linguæ Sanctæ, &c. }

With many other Quarto Books, and Books of lesser Volumes, which we have not room here to insert.